Konlar looked at Edrao. "What is..., Edrao what is a Praetorian?"

Wayonn looked at Edrao now. "You never told them?" He asked.

Edrao shook his head. "We have thought them long dead." He answered. "I did not see the need to tell them of history that no longer exists."

Wayonn nodded his head. "Understandable." He told him. "However, Praetorians do still exist, and even now Murano travels with Martin's children, four of whom are Praetorians themselves."

Edrao's eyes grew even wider. "Murano!" He gasped. "I have seen his name as well in our history archives! Gods..."

Wayonn smiled at him. “Now you are beginning to see what is taking place here. And also why Lorendo is leading you astray now and probably has been for quite some time. He...”

The Lifter’s COM unit came alive then interrupting his words. The male voice burst out of the COM panel speaking excitedly but still with a calm demeanor.

“CRIMSON WAVE! CRIMSON WAVE! SIX SVORAG ANIMALS HAVE BROKEN THE CONTAINMENT ZONE! I SAY AGAIN, SIX SVORAG ANIMALS HAVE BROKEN CONTAINMENT ZONE! SPARTAN ONE AND TEN ARE IN PURSUIT! SPARTAN ONE AND TWO ARE IN PURSUIT!! ALL UNITS CONVERGE! ALL UNITS CONVERGE! THEY ARE MOVING SOUTHWEST TOWARDS DISCOVERY BASE! CONVERGE! CONVERGE!”

UNCHARTED SPACE EDGE OF ECHO QUADRANT TWENTY-TWO HOURS UNTIL FIRST CONTACT

It was the fastest ship they had, built for speed and stealth as most of their ships were. It was no bigger than a Union AUTUMN MOON-Class Frigate, though somewhat thinner along the center fuselage of the ship. Normally crewed by forty-five personnel, the ship had only fourteen occupants now, including the four person flight team. The Flight Crew was the most experienced of their crews and the oldest. All of them had volunteered for this mission knowing that it could very well be a one way operation. They were entering into uncharted waters here, attempting First Contact in space instead of on a planet. First Contact with a species that all of them knew did not take kindly to surprises or unannounced approaches to their capital ships.

Ishma and Awser looked up from their positions on the couches within the main passenger compartment of their ship when Perlae came down the small flight of stairs from the cockpit.

“We are just about to enter the Echo Quadrant.” She told them as she moved to the couch beside her sister and settled next to her. “Once we do the pilot says it will be another day before we catch up to them.”

“They are still holding position?” Awser asked.

Perlae nodded her head. “Yes, and we don’t know why.”

“Why would they have stopped and remained stationary for so long Perlae?” Ishma asked. “It does not seem like something that Androcles would do based on what we know of him.”

Perlae shook her head. “I don’t know.” She replied. “But I agree, it is not something that he would normally do from what we know.”

“What if they begin moving before we catch up?” Awser asked.

“The pilot tells me we have more than enough speed to catch them unless they conduct a jump.” Perlae said.

“And if they do?” Awser pressed her.

Perlae looked at him intently with a stern face. She was the oldest of the three of them at nearly twenty-nine years old, each of them born exactly fourteen months apart, which is how long it took their eggs to mature. Their Darastrixi father and Lycavorian mother had shared a four century long romance before surrendering to their feelings for each other completely and becoming married. Due to their father’s Darastrixi seed, his DNA caused their mother to carry each of them as eggs within her womb until they were finally born. The moment they left the protection of her womb and touched the air, their shells fell away and they entered this world. Awser was the middle child at twenty-seven and Ishma the youngest at twenty-five and a half years old. Perlae had always been the more reserved of the three, the one who thought things through before acting. Awser was the comedian of the trio, while Ishma was the reckless and adventurous one. They had been inseparable as children, even more so after their mother was mortally injured in a mining accident. Their father had been distraught for several years until finally putting her memory to rest and moving on with his life. He doted over all three of them and worried for them, but he had trained each of them to be the finest warriors he could. When this was combined with their Lycavorian training, each of them was a deadly combination of speed and strength.

They are the only three children to ever be born of such a union.

They were also Yowa.

These skills passed down to them through their Lycavorian blood from their grandmother and her mother before her. No one had ever been able to explain how they could do the things they did, but no one really tried after seeing them in action. Vaes was a new and scary thing to the Darastrixi and it had taken many centuries for them to come to believe and then trust in its use. (Magic) Their Etheric abilities enhanced their Vaes skills and their Etheric bonds to their Darastrixi Bond Mates enhanced their magic pool, enabling them to cast many more magic skills that were much more powerful.

Their Staanina Dynina was widely regarded as the most powerful Yowa to have ever lived and they had studied under her for most of their lives. All of them knew of the vow their grandmother had sworn as she held her dying daughter in her arms, tears streaking her face along with the blood and soot from the mine explosion. They had dedicated their lives to the purpose of their people and what their existence meant in the grand scheme of the universe. While all of them well versed in healing balms and herbs, no Yowa could ever be any good without these skills, the balance of their training had taken place in Destruction and Alteration Vaes. Individually they were the most skilled and powerful vaes users behind only their grandmother simply because it ran deeply within their Lycavorian blood. Others who had this gift were well trained and schooled thanks to her, but the three of them had gotten the most intense parts of her training.

Perlae leaned more to the Alteration skills, and she had tricked even her staania on more than one occasion, while Awser and Ishma were devastatingly powerful Destruction Vaes users and could direct their power expertly. Their Staanina had been training them, preparing them for the day when they would be reunited with the blood they had left behind, and that day was almost here.

Perlae gazed at her brother with that stern expression, which she knew would bounce right off his thick hide.

“Then we will follow them Awser!” She snapped at him.

Awser held up his hands in a defensive manner. “Ok. Ok.” He replied with a grin.

Ishma smiled from where she sat and she picked up the scarf and tossed it at him as Perlae shifted on the couch, smiling herself. She could not remember a time in their lives when they could remain mad at one another for more than a few seconds. Awser had always deferred to Perlae’s benevolent nature, but the few times she had allowed her younger brother to unleash his fury in their defense, it had not been pretty for those who had insulted his beloved sisters.

“They will probably detect our ship on their sensors in a few hours anyway.” Perlae said. “They may have changed the name of this ship, but it is still the most advanced Pralor warship ever built and the most powerful according to Kenroe. It was built to fight back the darkness and it will have no problem detecting our ship I’m quite sure.”

“We will need to make sure we do nothing that they could interpret as hostile Perlae.” Awser told her.

Perlae nodded her head. “I have already made it very clear to our flight crew that they are very strict in their actions with unknown ships and people.” She told him. “Believe me, I made this abundantly clear. I do not wish to be blown out of the stars before our mission even begins.”

Awser smiled as he sat forward in his chair and held out the data pad to Perlae similar to the ones he and Ishma had been reading from. “These are the last intercepts from the Alpha Quadrant that staania was able to gather from our contacts on Icarava before the entire network was locked out.”

Perlae met his amethyst colored eyes as she took the pad. “Locked out?” She asked.

Awser nodded his head and sat back again. “Apparently a Junior Scholar of the Elbakiw Sulevfu by the name of Dalis Sulryn altered the files in such a way that it was not detected until very recently that he had accessed the data cores from the Alpha Quadrant several months ago.”

Perlae looked at the pad as Ishma met her brother’s gaze. “He was helping Laren and Ladur?” She asked softly.

Awser nodded his head. “That is what our Intelligence people say.” He answered. “He gathered this data, hid the fact that he took it, and then gave it to Laren and Ladur. Probably so that they could learn more about their fellow Dahakoan.”

Perlae looked up from the pad. “Then they did receive help from the Darastrixi?” She asked.

Awser nodded once more. “Staan believes so.” He replied. “And from much more powerful individuals than the Livaiji Sulevfu could give to them or that our people believed was possible. Our contacts could not discover much since the lock down took place but they suspect someone very high up in the Urkrisa Mamiss.”

“Members of the Urkrisa Mamiss helped them to escape Icarava.” Perlae spoke softly. “It has to be if they are now together with Androcles, Dorian and the other Dahakoan.”

“Our people on Icarava have always been limited in what they could gathered but that is what they suspect.” Awser said.

Ishma looked at her sister. “Perlae, how is it that we have all of this information about them? All of this, it could not have come from Darastrixi intercepts. There is no way they could gather such detail about them.”

Perlae shook her head slowly. “No.” She said.

Awser looked at his older sister intently. “Staan has a source within their Union doesn’t she?” He gasped. “All of these years she has had a source there. That is how she knows so much about them! Who is it sister?”

Perlae shook her head. “Staan never told me who it was.” She said. “Only that she had someone very close to them, to all of them really, someone who watches over them. Someone that was able to give her vital information when she needed it. It was this source that told her that Sumar’s great grandson had returned to claim his throne. Over the years she has discovered everything about him and his children and Queens. All of it to be able to better protect them when the time came.”

“She has kept this secret all of these years?” Ishma said softly.

Perlae nodded her head slowly. “She only gave me this knowledge a few months ago. She must have sensed that enlightenment had come to them.”

Ishma nodded her head. “Then we must stick to the plan Staan laid out for us. It is even more important now.” She said.

Awser nodded his head. “I agree.”

“As do I.” Perlae said as she looked at them. “Sadi and Androcles’ firstborn children will be twins. A boy and a girl.” She said. “Staan has seen this and they will be the beginning of a new future for all of us. But they will also be the target of our enemies. Now that the Dahakoan have come together, our enemies will rally and try to destroy them for they will see this as well.”

Awser leaned forward once more and held out his hand to his sisters. “We know our tasks Perlae our beloved sister.”

Perlae nodded her head with a shy smile. “I know we do.” She said. “You know me though. I worry about these things far too much.”

Ishma reached out and placed her hand atop Awser’s. “We all do sister.” She said. “You are not alone in that.”

Perlae didn’t hesitate in the least and placed her hand on top of theirs. Their hands twisted until they were grasping their fingertips together tightly and their hands curled into one large fist.

“Will they accept us Perlae?” Awser asked softly.

Perlae met his eyes and then Ishma’s amethyst orbs. “We are their blood.” She spoke confidently.

“When has our blood ever denied one another in our long history since Staan left Lycavore? Never.” Perlae nodded her head. “They will accept us fervon.” She said. “We are family.”

VENTORI SOUTHWEST OF DISCOVERY BASE

There were few things as magnificent as seeing two wolves running together in full stride. If you took into account that Lycavorians in their wolf form were, in some cases, even larger than the Dire Wolves of ancient Earth, then this made it all the more majestic. The raven black wolf and the dark brown wolf beside it were running stride for stride, their powerful legs propelling them at an astonishing speed for something so large. Had anyone on Ventori had the presence of mind to have a speed measuring tool with them, they would have clocked these two wolves at just over fifty miles per hour.

As Wayonn's Lifter skidded to a halt and those inside barreled out, they could see the two wolves easily streaking across the open terrain after the five small and one larger human like figures. Konlar and Lirana stood open mouthed at what they saw. Lirana at least could and did recognize Martin as an Alpha and King while Konlar was seeing him for the first time. Neither was prepared for what they saw and both stood in shock. At no time in their lives had they ever seen a wolf the size of the raven black monster moving towards them now. Konlar estimated this wolf was at least four feet at the shoulder, perhaps a bit smaller and looked to weigh nearly three hundred pounds of muscle and fur. The brown wolf was not that much smaller, perhaps two thirds of the black one's size and probably weighing close to the same. What amazed Konlar was the fluid motion with which both wolves moved across the terrain almost as if they were gliding across the ground. Four inch wide paws dug into the dirt and grass, thickly muscled hind legs drove them forward, their chests low to the ground and their eyes narrowed to slits.

They had done this so many times in the past that neither could remember, though usually Julie had been beside them as well. They were brothers of the blood, which meant more to them than anything else except for the love of the women who occupied their hearts and souls. Today was no different as their hearts and minds worked as one. They knew each other's every nuance and quirk. The moment that the alarm was risen that six Svorag had incapacitated three of their men and escaped out of the underground facility, Martin and Danny were moving. By the time they reached the exit and got above ground, the escaped Svorag were already four miles in front of them and heading back to Discovery Base. Martin and Danny didn't hesitate for an instant and shifted immediately to give chase. Both of them trusted the others who remained behind to handle the rest of what needed to be done. They ran stride for stride, four inch wide paws hitting the ground at exactly the same time, their tails straight out behind them as they used them for pivoting and slight turns to adjust their direction. Their hearts rumbled as one, their muscles driving them forward, their eyes seeing everything. They communicated with sharp yelps and growls, twisting through the overgrown foliage until they broke into the clear and then they became heat seeking missiles as their eyes focused on the Svorag ahead of them with laser like precision.

"Vali'star!" The Lifter driver barked at Wayonn who had moved in front of the vehicle.

"On the gun Kamen! On the gun!" Wayonn barked. The Durcunusaan didn't hesitate and scrambled up into the gun hatch of the Heavy Lifter, charging the 30mm chain gun mounted there. Wayonn whirled to face him. "If Martin and Daniel do not stop them, open fire! They must not reach the base!"

"The King and General...!" The Durcunusaan began to protest.

"They would expect you to do your duty Durcunusaan!" Wayonn barked. "If they fail, you will open fire and keep firing until they are dead!"

The Durcunusaan nodded his head briskly. "Understood!" He replied not liking his answer but knowing it was the correct one to give.

Konlar looked at Wayonn with wide eyes. "You just told him to fire on your King!" He exclaimed.

Wayonn met his eyes. "Martin Leonidas' bloodline carries within it the largest wolves to have existed since his father and grandfathers lived! A bloodline that extends back over forty millennia! You can see that for yourself before you! He and his sons have no equal when in wolf form and Daniel Simpson is nearly as large as you can no doubt see. If they cannot stop those monsters then we have no other options! Martin would expect us to act if they cannot stop these creatures!"

While Konlar, Lirana and many among their small clan of people often enjoyed shifting into their wolf forms and running for the simple enjoyment and freedom it brought them, none had ever learned how to fight in their four legged persona. What they were about to witness was something none of them had ever seen and to say that it frightened them to their core was an understatement.

They could see what was happening three quarters of a mile away easily with their wolf eyes and they heard the sharp bark by the massive raven black wolf carry over the wind. A yelp of acknowledgment from the dark brown wolf and the two huge beasts split apart. The two slow Svorag who were trying to outrun the two beasts from the rear kept turning to see where they were.

They turned one last time and it was far too late.

The two Svorag met gruesome deaths in the form of a four inch wide black furred paw equipped with steel like claws and a three and a half inch brown furred paw with similar claws. Both Martin and Danny didn't even break stride as they leaped into the air and one swipe was all it took and then they hit the ground and continued running. The two Svorag stopped rolling along a few meters later, both of them with half their skulls caved in and leaking blood and brain matter profusely into the ground around them. Martin and Danny accelerated together and caught up to the second two creatures. Once more neither of them paused in their actions and black steel claws flashed out once more, this time sprays of blood erupting into the air as the sides of their thick necks were torn wide open by those nearly unbreakable claws. Again, Martin and Danny accelerated past the bodies as they kicked up clouds of dirt and grass and rolled to halts very much dead. The much larger Svorag in the center roared out its rage as it saw the two wolves flash by him. It also caused the two Svorag in the front to turn their heads and see the massive beasts chasing them down. They did the stupid thing and turned to face the two wolves, who by now had put a hundred meters between themselves and the lumbering monster behind them. Turning to face them was as singularly bad thing to do and it ended up being their undoing. While they thought to fight the four legged beasts chasing them, Martin and Danny each leaped into the air and shifted while they were airborne and attacked.

Two sets of Svorag eyes went wide as one second they were bracing for an attack by wolves and the next instant there were two very large men coming at them. Martin grabbed the Svorag's head as he leaped over him and using his immense wolf strength he heaved the Svorag completely over his shoulder, the creature's neck snapping and popping in four different locations until its body slammed into the unforgiving ground and bounced like limp noodles for several seconds before becoming still. Even as Martin did this Danny simply snatched the foul creature's head in his hands and using his forward motion he dropped to one knee completely snapping every piece of cartilage and bone in the Svorag's upper body with his horrific strength and huge body. As Konlar and the others watched neither Martin nor Danny hesitated in the least, whirling inward and raising their left arms. Wayonn heard gasps of fright as two Shi Viskas erupted from Flatspace and within a split second were launched from their arms. The shields flew with unerring accuracy and precision, both of them extending the razor like blades around the entire curved edge of the shields milliseconds after leaving their arms of their owners. They covered the eighty meter distance to the single beast that remained as it lumbered toward them with a roar of rage. There was little in the known universe that a Shi Viska could not slice through with little effort. Thick steel and concrete could stop them certainly, but not after the shields buried themselves into these two materials so deeply they could often not be pulled out without a machine of some sort. The legs of this Svorag monstrosity bearing down on them was not such a material.

Martin's Shi Viska struck first, just above the right leg joint, and completely passed through the monster's leg. Danny's shield struck within half a second of Martin's and did the same thing with little effort. Even as the pain filtered to the creature's mind and he opened his mouth to roar as his legs flipped and rolled behind him, he began to pitch forward, his balance forever destroyed at the loss of his limbs. His roar lasted only half a second as his oversized head erupted in a ghastly spray of blood, bone and brain matter.

Konlar and the others could only watch in awe as the five hundred pound creature slid to a halt only a few feet from where Martin and Danny were kneeling. They were less than ten meters from where Konlar stood with Edrao in open mouthed wonder. They watched as the Shi Viskas whipped in from the side and settled to their arms as if they were feathers alighting on your arm and then they vanished once more.

"What the hell was that Jules!?" They heard the tall, ebony skinned Alpha bark as he rose to his full height. He seemed to know that the single shot had been coming by the tone of his voice.

Wayonn's head whipped to the side and his eyes searched for the voice as the female answered and his eyes settled on Julie Collins atop the building on the edge of the city some fifteen meters yards away. He had to consciously focus his wolf vision to compensate for the distance, but he saw her lowering the huge sniper rifle, a very competent smile on her beautiful face as she handed the rifle back to the Spartan beside her. Wayonn had learned of her history and past simply because of who she was. Martin and Daniel both considered her their dearest sister though she was no relation to either of them. He knew of how she had died, how she had been resurrected, and how all three of them now felt for each other and the other remaining members of their old team. Daniel was his Mard fervon, and Julie Collins was his true sister and there was no debating that as far as Martin Leonidas was concerned.

“That my dear brothers...” Julie spoke her voice carrying over all of their COM implants. “...Was a deep penetrating, high explosive tipped round. Kind of like what Colin uses on me.”

“Oh, I love it when you talk dirty baby!” Colin’s voice echoed in their COMS now and Martin and Danny looked at each other.

“Sibfla!” Danny muttered shaking his head as Martin laughed.

“Nice shot Jules!” He told her with that crooked smile. “Hell of a nice shot!”

“Someone has to cover your sorry asses with Aricia and the others gone.” Julie answered him with humor.

Martin shook his head as he seemed to notice Wayonn for the first time, though Wayonn knew that was not the case. “Send a team to collect what’s left of the bodies Jules. I don’t want to leave anything to chance. Full gear and make sure they don’t miss any body parts.”

“On it Boss.” Julie answered.

Martin willed away his Shi Viska as he turned to face Wayonn ten meters away. He was instantly impressed with the Beta wolf Konlar. The man appeared to be in excellent shape and his demeanor was one of confidence and curiosity. The turned Pralor Edrao was a little more hesitant, but Martin expected that. Martin turned back to Danny.

“Pass this little stunt on to Kenny and Pablo so they are prepared for it in case the Svorag try it at the second facility.” He told him. “Burn them out if they have to Dan, but none of them make it out alive.”

Danny nodded and reached up to tap his jaw. “I hear that.” He said. “T’lolt and the Master Chief turned their barrels red on the northern tunnel because they were pouring out in groups. There were a lot more than we thought fervon.”

Martin shifted his upper body armor and nodded his head in agreement. “Let Kenny and the others know to expect greater numbers than we first thought. And make sure he knows not to worry about equipment damage. We can fix the gear, and it isn’t worth lives. Use whatever force he deems necessary.”

Dan nodded one more time and then reached up to squeeze his shoulder. “Anuk is calling me to come back. I’ll get this first site secure while you say hello.”

Martin looked over to Konlar and Wayonn. “We’ll be along shortly.” He told him. “And have Nubian contact Captain Drenia so that the Tasmor can have a team available in case any Tasmor remains are found.”

“Got it.” Danny answered before shifting back to wolf form and sprinting back towards the underground research facility.

Martin adjusted his armor once more and then moved over beside Wayonn. Wayonn looked at him. “More exciting than you first thought I take it?” Wayonn asked.

Martin grinned in response. “Depends on your definition of exciting.” He replied. “But yeah, something like that.”

“A definition I’m quite sure Aricia and the others would not approve of.” Wayonn told him. “Nor Helen, which is why you sent her up to the ARC ROYAL in order to organize the refugees when they begin arriving.”

Martin looked at him. “You going to rat me out?” He asked sternly.

Wayonn couldn’t help but laugh. “I won’t need to.” He said after a moment. “They know you too well.” Wayonn motioned to Konlar. “Allow me to introduce Konlar and Edrao.”

Konlar bowed his head deeply out of an almost instinctual deference to the Alpha wolf standing before him. “I am...”

“A leader of men!” Martin snapped causing Konlar to look at him with wide eyes. “And you don’t bow to me or anyone.” Martin held out his hand to him and Konlar glanced quickly at Wayonn with a stunned expression. Wayonn nodded without hesitation and Konlar turned back to Martin and slowly reached out to take the hand.

Martin smiled at the firm grip and he looked at Wayonn. “Got room for my big ass in that vehicle?” He asked. “We got a lot to talk about and we may as well get started.”

Wayonn nodded his head knowing that Martin Leonidas’ casual nature and his never ending humorous one liners could do more to put people at ease than anything Wayonn had ever witnessed. “By all means.”

Martin nodded his head. “Then let’s get started.” He said. “We still have lots of rats to exterminate and I don’t want to miss the party.”

Konlar could not help the slow burn of anger that had been building within him for the last hour at what he had seen. He could sense this from Edrao as well, and from his beloved Lirana he could sense the horror at what had taken place in this facility. It had taken all of his willpower not to lose the breakfast he had eaten before leaving the ship, while Lirana had dry heaved several times at what remained in several of the rooms in the underground research site. Edrao had lost the contents of his stomach very early on, but he was made from strong stock and he continued with them. When they finally exited the facility back above ground, all of them breathed deeply of the fresh, clean air as Martin led them over to a large half tent that had been set up. Inside was a large Communications Array with two female technicians monitoring whatever COM channels they were supposed to be monitoring. Several dozen crates of what could only be ammunition of some sort were scattered about and it was these that they finally settled on. Martin moved to the ever present urn of Aricia’s coffee and drew a mug for each of them, putting the tray of creamer and honey on a crate in front of them while he sat back on one. Whatever doubts or concerns Konlar had held inside him before coming here had vanished within the first thirty minutes. Even Edrao, who had been much more skeptical and concerned on the trip here, even he had become totally different. Given what they had learned so far and the way their own people were being treated, how could they not. Whatever they had known or read about when it came to the Alpha wolves of their species, it had been completely and utterly shredded into tiny pieces.

Wayonn had moved into the tent now and they waited while he drew a mug of coffee and then took a crate beside Martin.

It was Konlar who began speaking first for he wanted it known right away that he had no idea of what was occurring here on his former homeworld.

“King Leonidas...,” Konlar met his dark brown eyes and remembered that this man had practically demanded that Konlar call him by his first name while they were inside the facility. “Martin... I give you my word that we had no idea... I had no idea that this was taking place here. And I certainly would not have been party to it. None of my people would have assisted with this horror!”

Martin nodded his head quickly. “I figured that out in the first few seconds Konlar. No Lycavorian would have been able to tolerate this being done to our people. And any who did are not Lycavorians at all.”

“This is Lorendo’s doing?” Edrao asked.

It was Wayonn who answered with a nod of his head. “He developed the virus initially, yes. Though we don’t know or understand the full scope or intent of what he was trying to do, the virus got away from him. He lost control of it. The Svorag are the result. What you see all around you is the result.”

“Carians!” Lirana gasped in shock.

“When he lost control of it we don’t know.” Martin continued. “We don’t really have a lot of information to go on because he was hiding this even from his own people. That’s why the facility in orbit of your world is so important. It could be a wealth of information that could very well help us to eradicate this virus and the Svorag.”

“If what you say is true, then a cure could be found for it.” Edrao said.

Martin nodded his head. “Something that my wife and mate Anja is very capable of making.”

“And for the millions already infected?” Edrao asked. “There is no hope is there?”

Martin looked at Wayonn quickly and then shook his head slowly as he turned back to them.

“No. I won’t lie to you about it. We can inoculate people, maybe even save those who have been turned less than a year. Anja and her people are brilliant and they were able to save two infected Pralors that we found on Onterom, but it’s a crap shoot really. And far greater a risk than I am willing to take.”

Edrao nodded his head slowly. “My contacts on Artaaya said the same thing many years ago.” He spoke softly.

“These contacts?” Wayonn asked now.

Edrao nodded his head. “Turned, just like me.” He replied. “They returned to Artaaya many years ago. All three of them were captured by Kintaur and then rescued by us after several years of captivity. They maintained their past identities and we developed back stories for how they had escaped the Kintaur. They send me information whenever they feel it is necessary. Lorendo does not know who they are. It is something that Konlar's father established before he was born."

"Exactly how many Pralors are there among your people?" Martin asked.

Konlar shook his head and shrugged his shoulders. "I do not know to be honest." He told him in reply. "Our pack is perhaps eighteen thousand strong. Among them are many Pralors who we have rescued through the years from the Kintaur or Svorag. Several hundred at least."

"I was among the first." Edrao told them now. "Konlar's father led an assault against a Kintaur base. They were not there to save us, Lorendo had sent them there for another purpose, but he ended up saving all of us. Nineteen in total. We returned to their village and remained. My... my bride found me a year later. A year after that she turned me and we became married."

"No Alphas?" Martin asked.

Konlar shook his head quickly. "No. The Alphas that our history says were among us when we settled Ventori had been gone for millennia by the time Lorendo approached my father and they made this deal."

"There have been whispers through the decades..." Lirana spoke up now.

Konlar looked at her. "Lirana my wife, there is no way to confirm them and given who we heard them from, more than likely it is not true."

Martin leaned forward on the crate now. "What whispers?" He asked.

Lirana smiled shyly. "Konlar is right." She said.

"No... I'd like to hear them." Martin told her.

Lirana looked at Konlar and he nodded with another shrug. "You know more about them than I do." He said.

Lirana turned back to Martin. "I have spoken to several of the oldest elders in our pack. I have a love of history and such." She said. "In our conversations, all of them have spoken of different rumors and whispers that they had heard from others in their time. Some of these rumors were said to have come from different Pralors who worked with Lorendo, ones that we interacted with early on. The elders say there were a handful that did not full trust Lorendo even then. None of these rumors were ever confirmed and therefore none were ever really believed."

"What were they?" Wayonn asked.

"The most prominent was that there was a large planet on the far side of Kintaur space. Along the edge of the quadrant. The only ones even able to reach that far with their ships are Pralors." Lirana told them. "Supposedly it was also home to Lycavorians. Some believe that is where the Alphas with us disappeared to. Through the decades these rumors and whispers grew wildly exaggerated and that is why no one puts much faith in them. That and no one has ever been able to confirm it."

"Wildly exaggerated how?" Martin asked.

Lirana shrugged. "The whispers spoke of a large Empire. Powerful weapons and ships." She answered. "As I said, they are just whispers and rumors."

Martin looked at Wayonn. "Delnash did say there were two planets in this Quadrant that had been seeded with our people." He said.

Wayonn nodded his head. "Yes he did, but we sent probes to the second planet Martin. They detected nothing. Signs of an ancient civilization but nothing else."

"And we didn't explore it further because of our current situation." Martin agreed. "But what if that civilization was Lycavorian and they moved on. And you heard about the Svorag that Anja said used to be a Pralor. She was turned by an Alpha. Where did she come from?"

Wayonn met his eyes. "Are you thinking that Lorendo knows about them?"

"He created these monsters!" Martin snapped. "If one of them turned an Alpha female then they have had interaction with them before. It wasn't one of our people and if they had taken her from the Alpha Quadrant we would have known or heard about it. Which means Lorendo is involved somehow, someway. And that sleazy fucking bastard knows about them."

Wayonn nodded his head. "Your logic is sound Martin." He said. "But how do we go about discovering if it is true? We can't simply ask Lorendo."

"I give him to Nubian and he'll be singing like a nubous canary inside an hour." Martin growled.

Wayonn nodded his head. “Yes... and it could possibly destroy whatever trust we have built with Delnash and other Pralors so far. We can’t destroy that now Martin. We need each other and you know it.”

“You can do this?” Konlar asked now drawing their attention back to him. “You can tell just by going to this planet who lived there?”

Martin nodded his head. “We have equipment that can determine it, yes.”

“And you have people who can operate this equipment?” Konlar pressed him.

Martin met his eyes. “Yes.”

“Then give me these people and equipment and I will take them.” Konlar offered.

Martin shook his head. “I need your knowledge of that station.” He told him.

Edrao stood up. “I have been to the station more times than Konlar and I know nothing about commanding our ship. At the very least I can get you into the entrance foyer. No one is allowed past the security checkpoints after that but I can get us into the foyer leading to these checkpoints. After that, they have biometric sensors and security measures that we could not breach.”

“We can.” Martin said confidently.

“We have... we have people who have been taken through the years. They made supply trips to the station and never returned. If they are there we...” Edrao began to speak.

“You never asked what happened to them.” Wayonn asked.

Konlar rose to his feet. “We were always told by Lorendo or those who work for him on the station that they were needed elsewhere for work.” He replied. “We did not to question it at first, but then we began to suspect this was not true. We were never in a position to find out.”

“You realize that any of your people who were taken are probably...” Martin looked at him. “They are probably dead or turned into a Svorag.”

Konlar nodded his head slowly. “Yes.”

“Where are your people Konlar?” Martin asked bluntly.

Konlar looked at Edrao and then back to Martin without speaking. He opened his mouth to speak but then closed it again. “Martin I...”

Martin stepped right up to him. He was taller than Konlar by roughly four inches and easily had fifty to sixty pounds of muscle on him but to his credit Konlar didn’t blink. “No.” He spoke evenly. “That is a trust that I have not earned yet. That we have not earned yet.” Martin nodded his head. “I would do the same thing in your position. I am going to earn that trust. We’ll earn that trust, but right now, tell me about this mission Lorendo wanted you to conduct against Murano and Mari.”

“He wanted... he wanted us to kill Murano and take who he thinks is Delnash’s daughter. This young woman Mari.” Konlar answered.

Martin nodded. “Give me all the details he gave to you.”

“Why?” Konlar asked. “It is not something I will do now knowing who they are.”

Martin grinned. “Yes, you will.”

Konlar looked at him oddly. “We will?” He asked.

Wayonn chuckled softly and shook his head. “Welcome to the universe of out of the box thinking Konlar. You will find it just as exciting and malda as I do.”

ARTAAYA

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ELDER

“...You certain Martin?” Delnash asked the image of Martin from Ventori. He had admitted to himself many weeks ago that he looked forward to these communications with Martin. His blunt talk and complete honesty was utterly refreshing to say the least.

“That’s the problem.” Martin answered him. “We aren’t certain and that is why I felt I should call you.”

Delnash nodded his head and motioned to the man beside him. “Martin this is Captain Dehov... pardon me, Admiral now since I promoted him. He will be in charge of the ships we are sending to Honelze. He will also be your direct liaison to me. I trust him completely and that is why I have him here now. He has been fully briefed about everything.”

Martin nodded his head. “Admiral, a pleasure.”

Dehov smiled and nodded his head. “I assure you Praetorian Martin, it is far more an honor for me.”

Delnash saw Martin roll his eyes slightly and he grinned knowing that Martin was never going to get used to that. “I had Dehov pull whatever records he could without raising suspicion to what he was doing. Two Seven also helped to cover his tracks.”

“What did you find out?” Martin asked.

Dehov reached forward and activated the small holo disc on the table and the star chart came into view. “This is the area of space you are inquiring about.” Dehov spoke swirling his finger in the holo star chart. “And to be embarrassingly honest, we know nothing about it.”

“What?” Martin asked.

“When we first colonized Artaaya the decision was made to keep our imprint as small as possible.” Delnash told him. “Only the space around Honelze and our other colony world of Nepneu were thoroughly searched. The area of the Echo quadrant that you are inquiring about is vast and since we were not looking to...”

Martin nodded his head. “I get it.” He said. “Did you send any probes at least?”

Dehov nodded his head. “That we did do. Four of them to be exact. All of them stopped transmitting within a week of arriving in this area of space. All of them registered sub space anomalies just before they went off line. The Science Convocation determined that this entire area was essentially a sub space minefield. Likely due to a supernova that occurred roughly a million years ago.”

“Another mitigating factor is that in order to get to this area of the quadrant we would have to send a ship through Kintaur space.” Delnash spoke. “After our initial encounters and their continued hostility towards us for not giving them our technology, I did not want to risk sending ships across their space. One of our ships is enough of a match for three or four of theirs, but they patrol in large numbers now. They would have overwhelmed a single science vessel just in numbers.”

“How many Pralors have the Kintaur seized through the years?” Martin asked.

Delnash looked at Dehov quickly and then back to Martin. “One thousand four hundred and nineteen.” He answered. “None of whom have been returned. I bear the responsibility for that entirely. I was not willing to give them our technology for the return of our people. It would have altered the balance of power within the quadrant of space to the extreme. It is also why I have never given our technology to the Tasmor people, though after meeting and speaking with Sovereign Regent Daret, I should have looked at that avenue more thoroughly.”

Martin shook his head. “You did the right thing.” He said. “In your position I would have done the same.”

“Speaking of the Tasmor Martin...?” Delnash asked. “Exactly how much have you shared with them? The way you have adapted our technology with yours makes you just as advanced as my people. Perhaps more so in different ways.”

“Saydia knows what I am willing to give her and what I am not.” Martin told him honestly. “I will not share weapons or shield technology, nor will I share engine designs and schematics. I have authorized medical technology be made available to them based on Anja’s recommendations, as well as the means to take their engines to the next level. It doesn’t give it to them, but it makes them work hard on their own to discover these advances, which they probably will knowing them. Given their level of technology and the skill of the engineers they have now, I estimate that they will be able to make and build their own Interstellar Quantum based engines within two to three decades. Looking at their history as I did, most of my people agree that they would have discovered how to build this tech within fifty years anyways. So now they discover this technology perhaps two decades earlier than they would have and they do it on their own. I determined that was acceptable. The Tasmor are sharp Delnash, and I believe their arrogance only comes from what their conflict with the Kintaur forced them to become. Anja tells me that Perlyea and others are thrilled with the medical knowledge and equipment they are being exposed to and allowed to use. They are already talking about the diseases and afflictions that they can cure. In my book when people are more concerned about making cures than weapons, that’s a good thing.”

Delnash sat back in his chair and shook his head. “That is my mindset as well. And this is something we could have done many decades ago if we ourselves were not so arrogant and introverted. And in doing so we would have earned a powerful ally, for I too find that timetable you just described acceptable as well.”

Martin grinned in the transmission. “There’s an expression among my people for what you are thinking.” He said.

Delnash looked at him. “What is that?”

“Shit happens.” Martin told him.

“And what does this mean?” Delnash asked.

“Basically... get over it and move forward.” Martin said.

Delnash chuckled and nodded his head. “Interesting. Perhaps I will use this expression in the future.” He said.

“So your probes picked up nothing?” Martin asked.

Dehov shook his head. “Oh no. Each of them was able to scan quite a bit during their time there before they struck their sub space anomalies. The data was logged and filed.”

“Wait... no one ever reviewed it?” Martin asked.

Dehov shook his head. “No. Since we had no intention of operating in that area of space it was not given a priority. Eventually it was just filed away into the data archives. I retrieved and copied it before coming here.”

“Delnash... can I have that?” Martin asked.

Delnash nodded. “Certainly.” He answered without hesitation. “I will have Dehov bring it with him to the gathering. Unless you wish it sooner.”

Martin shook his head. “No sense in taking a risk that Lorendo might discover you sent me a secure transmission.”

“I am reasonably sure he already knows I speak with you frequently.” Delnash said.

“Yeah but he doesn’t know what about, which probably burns his smarty pants ass.” Martin said. “The man thinks he is smarter than anyone else. Let him guess. If you send me a secure data packet he will know something is up and I don’t want to tip our hand just yet.”

Delnash leaned forward. “When do you wish to meet?”

Martin met his eyes. “How soon can you plan a routine visit to Honelze?” Martin asked him. “My son and his forces get here in two or three days, the Tasmor have already begun moving the Ventori refugees back here, and with a little luck we can have Ventori stabilized within a week. We’ll clean out the Svorag on the planet and then meet on Honelze.”

Delnash nodded his head. “Then I will plan an election strip to Honelze to cover for our meeting.” He said. “It should be easy enough.”

Martin nodded his head. “Delnash... you had better watch your ass sir.” He told him knowing that Delnash would understand what he was inferring. “Lorendo has to have figured out by now that there is no way to beat you in a stand up election and he is going to become desperate. Hell he is desperate if he wanted Konlar and the others to take out Murano and kidnap Mari. He may be willing to go even further than that if he needs too.”

“And I am fully prepared for that.” He reassured Martin.

“I expect Andro here within three days.” Martin told them. “Once he arrives we can set the date to meet on Honelze and begin putting our final plans together. Yuriko’s estimates still hold and her ship is still shadowing the Svorag Mother ship. We’ll have about three and a half weeks to work out the details and prepare defenses.”

Delnash nodded his head once more. “Then I will insure that Dehov comes prepared.” He told him.

“Good enough.” Martin said. “I look forward to seeing you both.”

“And we look forward to seeing you.” Delnash told him.

Dynina let her eyes gaze upon the majestic mountains on the skyline as she had done so many times in the past. Forty-thousand plus years they had been here, all of them living within the same settlement. Dynina smiled outwardly for they could no longer call it a settlement. It was a complete city with over a million men, women and children who called it home. And each year they grew even more. Their city bore the name of the planet, all of them thinking it fitting when they first arrived here, and they had never attempted to expand and make other settlements across the lush world.

Luarus was situated perfectly in the valley between the two huge mountain ranges that stretched for hundreds of miles in either direction. It was built around and above the quarter mile wide river that flowed through the valley floor, providing protection from the elements as well as fertile growing land. Luarus stretched across the valley floor, the many buildings modest and plain to look at, but all of them completely modern. They had many diverse manufacturing facilities, but their lone shipbuilding plant was located a hundred and ten kilometers from their city, with a direct teleport facility that connected the factory to the actual shipyard in orbit above. The nebula that surrounded this sector of space provided the perfect camouflage and had been part of the reason why they had remained undetected by others for so long. While they did interact with the few other species in this sector of space, none of those species had ever been to their planet or their city and that is just how they liked it.

Ten thousand Lycavorians, ten thousand Pralors and ten thousand Darastrixi had begun this city all those years ago, and this is what they had grown into. They had spent all of that time preparing for a single moment in time, and that moment was almost upon them. Dynina turned from the view as she heard the voices of the others as they filed into the large conference room and began to take their seats. Her amethyst colored eyes took in the men and women as they talked, Lycavorian, Pralor and Darastrixi, all of them conferring back and forth with each other unburdened by the millennia of arrogance that permeated two of those species. They were all equals here, having been united behind one goal for their entire existences. Her eyes found Nicha as she made her way around the large table and moved up next to her.

Dynina pulled her close as she stepped up to her. She had been Dynina's right hand for so many years that she could not even recall. The Pralor woman Nicha had taken the place of her beloved sister, and they had shared everything since the day they boarded that ship together and it brought them here.

Nicha saw the question in Dynina's eyes and she nodded. "They are through safely." She stated. "I just received Perlae's last report. They were about to enter the Echo quadrant. The sensor buoys that we seeded along the border were tracking his ship. It was holding position, but she did not know why. Twenty more hours and they will be together."

Dynina looked at her puzzled. "Holding position?" She asked softly. "Why would he be doing that? I would have thought Androcles would want to rejoin with his father as soon as possible given what we know. It is not a lot of information for she did not have much to give to me, but these Svorag present a problem we did not foresee."

Nicha shook her head. "I do not know. Everything we know of him says this is unusual for him, Perlae even commented on it in her report, but she does not seem concerned Dynina. She also said no other ships appeared to be in the area which is also unusual isn't it?"

Dynina shook her head. "No. Androcles is very much like his father and they are both masterful tacticians. Perhaps the finest to have ever lived anywhere in the galaxy. There is purpose to everything that they do. It must be something that we are unaware of. We know they can hide their ships in some manner and if he has not revealed all of them where he is, then he is not worried." Dynina nodded to herself. "I have felt no sense of urgency from him or the other Dahakoan so I will not concern myself with it. It is very difficult to get an accurate sense of their resonance lately, almost if they have had additional training in masking their Etheric resonances by someone very powerful. It matters not, we will have the answers to many questions when Perlae and the other make contact. The portal?"

Nicha nodded her head now. "We destroyed the sub space power matrix at its location and tainted the remaining crystals with Torxlian." She stated. "It will never be active again."

Dynina nodded her head. "It was a shame to have to destroy it, but it was necessary. Martin and the others will know what to do with such technology, but we cannot allow it to fall into other hands. It can be replaced."

Nicha nodded. “The others are still hidden with your cloaking spells and only Perlae, Awser and Ishma know their locations. You are concerned about the other Lycavorians aren’t you?”

Dynina nodded her head. “They are an unknown.” She said softly. “They are on the far side of the Echo quadrant, far from Martin and the others, but his desire to safeguard our people is too strong within him. They will eventually cross paths.”

“And these are the ones who have maintain their ties to your past?” Nicha asked.

Dynina nodded once more. “And they have Yowa bloodlines among them.”

“Do they pose a threat?” Nicha asked.

“I don’t know.” Dynina answered honestly. “However, if they have maintained their ties to the history of my people then it will bring them into conflict with Martin and the others. We need to avoid that.”

Nicha turned her head when someone coughed and she saw the older Darastrixi motion with his head. Nicha nodded and squeezed Dynina’s hand. “Kenroe is signaling that everyone is here. We should begin.”

Dynina nodded her head and she looked up drawing her mind to the present. She moved to the head of the table beside Kenroe and the spot where Nicha always sat. “Thank you all for coming on such short notice. I know we were not supposed to meet for another two months.” Her hands rested on the ornately carved box in front of her. “However, we have discovered some things that will cause us to advance our plans.”

Dynina used her fingers to lift the cover of the ornate box and open it fully. The eyes of everyone in the room widened suddenly as they all saw the glowing azure colored orb that resided on the velvet covering inside the box. Several of the dozen men and women present came to their feet in shock.

“Dynina!” A Darastrixi male exclaimed, his golden eyes wide in disbelief.

“Can it... can it be true!”

“Now!”

“They are among us!”

Dynina smiled gently at their comments for all of them in this room knew the meaning of the orb and what its now bright glow entailed. She nodded her head. “They are not only among us, they have come together and found one another. The Dahakoan and the Praetorians have returned to us my friends, returned to all of us, and this time they are one.”

The Darastrixi who had first spoken looked at her. “Then it’s true Dynina? The Lorsvek ar Sepas is happening?”

Dynina nodded her head again. “I have suspected for many years now, felt each of them across time and space, but I did not know for sure until they came together. The Dahakoan Orb began to emit its glow only last week. I had to sure and that is why I did not tell anyone.”

“You have felt them Dynina?” The Pralor woman asked. “Why not tell us?”

“I have felt others in the past since they have all been of my bloodline.” Dynina answered her. “You all know this.”

“And we have gotten our hopes up before.” Kenroe spoke now as he came to his feet. The Darastrixi leader was tall for his species and exceedingly well built. His emerald eyes were bright and full of knowledge. “This is different however, the Dahakoan Orb has never become active. Now it is active and we must prepare. There is something else as well.” He said looking at Dynina.

Dynina smiled and nodded her head. “You should tell them Kenroe.” She told him.

Kenroe looked at them, specifically at the Darastrixi members of their leadership board. “There is a Doraanar with them.” He told them.

This news caused three pairs of eyes to grow even wider. “A Doraanar!” The female Darastrixi gasped. “By the gods above!”

Kenroe nodded his head. “If Dynina’s information is correct, she has been with them for many weeks now.”

“Dynina?” The Darastrixi man asked.

Dynina nodded her head. “This information is confirmed.” She told them. “I do not know much about her, there is very little to know right now. The Dahakoan appear to be protecting her viciously and my contact among them has not been successful in gathering this data, Aside from the fact that she does exist and she is among them now, we know very little else. But this does not matter to us.”

“No, it does not.” Kenroe spoke.

“We were brought here for a reason my friends.” Dynina spoke softly but loud enough for all of them to hear her. “All of us have questioned that reason at times through these many millennia, but that reason has driven us forward even in dark times. We have waited for the day when we would be needed once more. As Sumar and Dadrien knew we would. That day is almost upon us now my friends.” Dynina looked at all of them intently. “I have already dispatched the Heralds, my grandchildren. They will make contact within hours and then what was set in motion the day we came to this world will truly begin. There is only one reason why the Dahakoan and Praetorians have returned, and returned just as the Lorsvek ar Sepas said they would. As one entity. What many of us, myself included, may have questioned through the eons can no longer be questioned.”

“Do we tell our people?” Another asked.

“Of course we do.” Dynina answered. “They have just as much right to know what we all now know. Pass the word among the people, allow them to pass it along to others, but we must still remain focused on our duty.”

“We have had the Spartan and Sand Strider Manuals for centuries.” Kenroe spoke. “We should intensive our training efforts, for we still lag behind in many areas. And we should increase our daily patrols along the entire Tram Rail to the Shipyard.” He looked at Dynina. “We have no natural predators on Luarus, but the additional focus will be good. They will want to do it, knowing what we now know.”

Dynina nodded her head. “We all know our jobs and what we need to do. Things will not change until the Dahakoan and The First have arrived and only if they deem it necessary.” She told them. “Perlae and the others will keep us informed of what is going on and give us direct insight that we have not had until now. Perlae will also tell them of us here, and what we have been doing.”

“Darkness is coming isn’t it Dynina?” One of the Pralor members asked.

Dynina met his eyes and nodded slowly. “I fear it is already upon us, we just do not see it yet. The monsters have become very good at hiding their intent.”

“What do we do?”

“We do what Sumar and Dadrien always intended for us to do.” Dynina answered. “We provide to the Dahakoan and The First what was given to us to safeguard for them.” Dynina met their stares. “And then... then we fight!”

WOLVES AND DRAGONS OF THE BLOOD REVELATIONS
PART 2

CHAPTER FIFTY-SEVEN
ULU SPARTA'S WRATH
SEPTEMBER 21ST 2575
SHIFT CHANGE 0615

Armen sat in the Command Chair on his bridge going through the motions of reading the Shift Internal Reports as the members of the First Crew came on duty. He did not need to read the SIRs for he was always connected to the ship and knew everything that was going on and what had taken place on the previous night shift. His action was what a normal Commanding Officer would do and Armen determined that this very simple action provided normalcy to the routine. Soon the First crew would begin to call out their status to the OFD, or Officer of the Deck, while they situated their stations back to their personal likings. Unlike normal Union ships, the working consoles on SPARTA'S WRATH could remember the settings of each of its operators and could revert to them in seconds at the touch of a button. This was technology that was being refined and built into Union ships during new refits but for now, only SPARTA'S WRATH and the SCIMITAR had this technology already built in.

Armen sat patiently as his First Crew went about their routines. He had chosen his First Crew from the many dossiers provided to him by Admiral O'Connor. They were the finest at their positions even though many of them were still very young. Given whom he had chosen to emulate, Armen had taken a page out of Androcles' book and chosen those who were both detailed and thought differently. He did not want those on the bridge, who could not process information and discover new and improved ways to do things, he wanted those who could think and act outside of the box. All of them men and women who served on the three shifts were tops in their respective classes when it came to learning about Quantum Matter and learning Pralor technology. All of them cut from the same mold as Zaala Randall, and now Armen would trade none of them for anything. They had already proven to him that his choices had been correct and that is all that mattered to him. He had begun to distance himself from many of the ship's systems in order to let his crew do their jobs. He found that this freed up processing power for him to work on other projects throughout the ship and it made his people better if they knew he was not looking over their shoulders at everything they did.

His people.

Armen looked up when that statement computed and it made him cant his head to the side as he thought about that. They were his people, each person on this ship was his people, and extraordinarily that gave Armen something he did not think himself capable of expressing.

Purpose.

He was about to have his neural processors begin to analyze that when the voice broke into the normal sounds of the bridge.

"HELIX-Class Corvette Spartan 235 is on approach!" The main sensor operator sang out in a clear voice. "Vector authorization is approved."

"Confirm with IFF codes TO!" The Elven OFD barked out.

"Tactical confirms! Reading IFF codes of Queen Aricia, Queen Anja and Queen For'mya. Plus 28!" The Lycavorian Tactical Officer answered, "The Tasmor Delegation and additional Pax!"

The OFD turned to look at Armen, "Captain?"

Armen nodded without hesitation as he stood up. –Send via secure COM burst, vector authorization approach. Docking Bay 9 is ready to receive them- He answered turning his head. –Current location of Androcles-

"Starboard Training Gym on Deck eighteen." The reply was almost instantaneous. They tracked every member of the Royal Family when they were on the ship now using their built in bioscans. "All Royal Family members with the exception of Lady Gorgo and Lady Dasha are present. I think they have started a morning routine. They have been there every morning this week so far."

Armen nodded his head. –A new training regime Androcles worked up for each of them. All of them will be present in this location every morning that they are not on mission. Make a note in the ship's log if you would Lieutenant Sena and insure we have this location monitored beginning at 0500 every morning from now on-

"Acknowledged." She answered.

-OFD, confirm with personnel that the quarters for the Tasmor delegation are ready and inform the Ready Officer to have escorts available while they are onboard- Armen spoke as he returned to his chair.

"Aye sir." The man answered moving for a console.

"Contact! Contact! Unknown contact!" Those four words brought everyone on the bridge to attention instantly and caused Armen to once more rise to his feet.

"Confirm that!" The OFD barked as he stopped moving for the console and stepped toward her station, his previous ordered superseded by this.

"Main sensors confirm! Unknown contact! Bearing 356.54! Extreme range! Right on the very edge of our current detection grid! Configuration unknown! We're picking it up via the SCIMITAR's feed from the Fleet pickets! Extending Current Detection Grid!"

The Elven Major turned to Armen. "Hold that Lieutenant!" He barked out.

“Holding sir!”

The Major looked at Armen. “Sir?”

-Hold on extending the CDG. Excellent work Major DI'koa- Armen answered. -Is the contact moving towards us TO-

“Negative sir!”

Armen stepped up beside the Elven OFD, towering over his five foot ten height. -TO, who is the closest picket ship?-

“ULU DAKE. She is a refitted AUTUMN MOON Heavy Frigate! According to Fleet TOE she is the outer most picket.”

-DI'koa, your thoughts- Armen asked.

The Elven Major nodded his head. “The Admiral is shrouded on the SCIMITAR Armen. If we have picked it up you can damn well bet Admiral Sa'sur has already seen it.”

-Agreed- Armen answered.

“She'll send the DAKE to investigate so we don't have to extend out the CDG.” The man answered with a wide grin. “No sense in giving away our true capabilities.”

Armen nodded his head with what amounted to a smile for him. Most of the First Crew had begun to understand the sometimes-strange facial expressions his features could and did take on.

-Indeed DI'koa. Admiral Sa'sur has undoubtedly detected the ship as well and is sending someone to investigate- Armen spoke.

“Captain!” The COM officer spoke now turning away from her station. “Admiral Sa'sur on QCR secure!” This only served to reinforce Armen's standing once more as he predicted that she was taking the lead and now she was calling them.

-Activate- Armen answered.

A moment later Sa'sur's slim figure appeared on the holo disc of the bridge. Activity on the bridge of the SCIMITAR appeared to be as active as it was on SPARTA'S WRATH. Sa'sur instantly found Armen's large form. “Armen have you seen it?” She asked.

-Affirmative Admiral- He answered. -We are detecting it via the tap of your feed from our pickets-

“Same for you? Nothing in your computer banks?” She asked.

-Negative-

“Andro's mothers are almost on board correct?” Sa'sur asked.

-Their ship will touch down in Landing Bay 9 in thirteen minutes- Armen answered.

“I'm ordering the DAKE to close in and investigate.” Sa'sur spoke. “We haven't detected any recognizable weapons or shield power readings but let's bring the fleet to Status Three Armen, just in case.”

Armen nodded his head. –Agreed Admiral- He replied. –I will order the Status change from SPARTA'S WRATH so that you can maintain the focus on this new contact from the SCIMITAR-

DI'koa nodded his head. Armen may have been a machine, but DI'koa had learned more than he could have imagined in the short time they had been together. “COM Officer!” He spoke turning to look in his direction. “Let’s get that order issued! Fleet to Status Three, but maintain shrouds and COM silence!”

“COMs aye!”

DI'koa looked at Armen. “Do we inform Androcles?” He asked in a softer voice so that only Armen would hear him but since they were standing next to the image of Sa'sur she heard it as well.

-Lieutenant Sena, still nothing in our databanks on the new contact?- Armen asked.

“Negative sir.”

Armen turned back to Sa'sur. –My databanks were the most up to date when we left the former Pralor Empire Admiral. They may not be anymore. Lieutenant, extrapolate time to our location factoring in known Pralor engine designs-

“CDG is at seventy-three percent Captain.” She answered. “Max speed with a seventh Tier drive system would put them here in two point 6 hours, unless they executed a combat jump of course.” She answered.

Armen looked at Sa'sur in the transmission. –Androcles’ mothers will be board in thirteen minutes Admiral- He shook his head. –Unless we discover more, there is no need to inform him. This reunion has been a long time in coming and it needs to happen now. If the situation changes we will inform him-

Sa'sur nodded her head, understanding Armen’s meaning all too well. “I agree Armen.” She replied.

Almost everyone within the Union knew of what Androcles did on Hadaria in order to save his second Elven mother. Most who were close to him or who had been on this ship since leaving Dreamland knew that he was hesitant about seeing her once more because of what he had done. Nearly all Elves and Lycavorians understood this, for attacking one who was called mother like he had was not something that Lycavorians or Elves would do. While most people did not know why he did what he had done that day, those on this ship did, and they knew the doubt their Prince still held within him no matter the wonderful result of his actions.

“TO!” DI'koa barked out as Armen returned to his chair. “Keep a constant track on that ship and if it so much as farts in the wind prepare to respond to SCIMITAR’s action!”

“TO, acknowledged sir!”

“I’ll leave this COM channel open,” Sa'sur told him. “If the sibfla hits the fan be ready to bring the pain Armen.”

-I always am Admiral- Armen answered.

SPARTA'S WRATH DOCKING BAY NINE

Gorgo and Dasha stood to the side of the massive landing bay as the HELIX-Class Corvette began to lower to the deck. A full Squad of Durcunusaan were positioned around the two women, mothers to the King and Queen, and nothing would be allowed to threaten them in any way.

Gorgo and Dasha had grown very close through the years, Aricia’s mother often joining her and Riall for dinners and weekends at their villa in Gytheio. Dasha was still a very beautiful female wolf, just as Gorgo was, and Gorgo had tried on a number of occasions to introduce Dasha to a man. Dasha had always been pleasant and thankful, but nothing had ever come of it. Gorgo had feared that Dasha might have still been very much in love with her now dead husband. It was not until after the last time Gorgo had tried to set her up with a male friend that Dasha had asked her to stop. Dasha had explained to her that she was not still in love with her traitorous dead husband; she was just not ready for a relationship of any kind after all of that had taken place. She was very content to help to raise the children of Martin and his Queens, and she had done just that for almost three decades now. Gorgo respected her decision and after that, her friendship with Dasha had taken off. They spoke of everything with each other, unafraid to offend one another with their bluntness and honesty, almost like sisters to be honest. They had become somewhat of a popular fixture among Spartan society before leaving Earth, men and women alike coming up to them as they walked the streets of Sparta or Gytheio.

They were icons among the Lycavorian people now, whether either of them wanted to admit it or not.

“It has been far too long since we have seen them.” Dasha commented as she turned to Gorgo beside her.

Gorgo nodded in agreement. “Yes it has, far too long.” Gorgo turned to meet her eyes. “You know of course that Andro is terrified.”

Dasha chuckled softly and nodded her head. “I do.” She said with a smile. “As cunning and unstoppable a warrior as our grandson is Gorgo, the thought of his mother shunning him frightens him half to death.”

“His fear is unfounded, as For'mya blesses his existence nearly every day, and I have tried to tell him this.” Gorgo spoke.

“As have I.” Dasha agreed. “He has his father’s stubbornness you know.”

Gorgo smiled now. “Oh, don’t I know it.”

“What is this inspection nonsense all about Gorgo?” Dasha asked.

“It is a Tasmor ritual from what I understand.” Gorgo answered her. “Anja was not able to tell me a whole lot for she did not have the time, but from her tone I don’t believe she, Aricia or For'mya are happy about it.”

“These Tasmor will be even less happy if they anger our grandson over some ritual.” Dasha said.

“Andro will tolerate it.” Gorgo said. “He knows what is at stake and what it could mean.”

They were quiet as the ship began to power down its engines and several of the deck crew scurried about securing it. They watched the rear ramp come down slowly until it settled to the deck and then they saw them. Gorgo and Dasha could not help but smile in happiness as Aricia, Anja and For'mya started down the ramp of the ship hand in hand with Aricia in the center. The three of them had become such a fixture over the years, just as Dysea and Isabella had, with Cirith now joining their small triad. Gorgo often times wondered how her son had managed to have six exquisitely beautiful women fall in love with him and worship him the way they did. Neither she or Dasha had seen For'mya since before the Kavalians had taken her from Earth and while she had looked drawn and undernourished when they had seen her on the Netnews from Hadaria, now she looked as radiant as they had ever seen her. Gorgo and Dasha knew immediately that Martin had reclaimed her in spectacular fashion and For'mya had felt the full power of the aura he could radiate. As with Aricia and Anja, For'mya now looked utterly at peace and content in her life and when added to her natural elven beauty and allure, the Alpha female wolf in her shown ever so brightly.

Gorgo and Dasha moved forward quickly then and the reunion between them was ever so sweet as the women embraced right there at the end of the ramp uncaring of who saw them. Dasha embraced her daughter first, while Gorgo swept both Anja and For'mya in to her arms and squeezed them both tightly. Tears flowed slightly and then Dasha was wrapping her arms around For'mya and Anja as Gorgo held Aricia tightly.

Dasha ran her hands over Anja and For'mya’s faces as she smiled brilliantly. “Carians, it has been too long.” She gasped aloud.

For'mya nodded as she wiped the tears from her own cheeks her dark brown eyes simply ablaze with happiness. “Yes it has.” She stammered.

“Zarah?” Dasha asked Aricia as she held Anja’s hands. She was concerned for all of her grandchildren no matter whom given birth to them.

For'mya answered with a smile and nod of her head. “She has come so far and healed so much.” She replied. “You will see for yourself in two days but Lucia is her strength. You will not recognize her.”

“Where are... where are our children?” Aricia asked now as she looked around.

Gorgo smiled and shook her head. “Androcles has devised a training regime for each of them and they have been sticking to it every morning this week. They completely take over one of the training facilities on this ship for three hours every day.”

“He actually got them all in the same room together for an extended length of time?” Anja asked with a smile. “That’s impressive.”

Gorgo and Dasha laughed at that. “It is a large room.” Dasha answered with a chuckle. “Everything about this ship is large.”

For'mya nodded her head quickly. “Endith about wet her pants when she saw it. She said she wants to drive it.”

“Hah!” Gorgo laughed aloud. “Please, let us keep her away from the bridge then. She will simply love Armen.”

Anja saw Saydia and the others beginning to exit and she gripped Gorgo’s hand and gently pulled them back towards the ship.

Saydia and the rest of the Tasmor were still in a minor state of shock. None of them had ever imagined a ship as large and imposing as the one they saw when they got close, and then to be practically swallowed up by the superstructure as they made for the landing bay. Many of the Tasmor Quorum members were still at a loss for words, while Emylea and Namiri were bubbling and excited at exploring the ship.

“Sovereign Regent Saydia Daret,” Anja spoke. “I present Martin’s mother Gorgo and Aricia’s mother Dasha.”

Saydia smiled radiantly and bowed her head to them. “It is an honor.” She spoke.

Gorgo moved closer and took her hands. “It is our honor.” She told her as Dasha came up beside her and added her hands to Gorgo’s. “The Lycavorian people owe you a debt that we cannot repay Saydia Daret. What you and your people have done for our people is something that we as a species will never forget.”

Saydia seemed taken aback at this show of emotion and respect but she bowed her head in thanks. “Given the gift that your people have given to mine I would happily do so over and over.”

Gorgo took an immediate liking to this woman, as did Dasha. Her scent told them that she was a good person and her heart was pure.

“Well, if I know Deia she will be letting the Netnews vermin know what the Tasmor have done and you will have friends wherever there are Lycavorians.” Gorgo spoke.

Saydia could not help but yelp in amusement and she looked at Gorgo. “I see distaste for your news organizations runs deep.” She said with a smile.

Dasha grinned. “Not all of them.” She answered. “We trust some, but as a whole they are as useful as a case of Acamarian Flu.”

Anja snickered and took her arm. “Mother!” She exclaimed.

They all laughed gently, putting Saydia even further at ease. Gorgo and Dasha insisted that they all call them mother and for Anja and Isabella it was much easier since their mothers were long dead.

“Your son does not greet you when you land?” The new voice spoke from behind them and they turned to see Vesara Athcer move closer to them. Anja saw Perlyea and Aduna roll their eyes as she stopped beside Anthylea and she smiled discretely.

“Gorgo, Dasha, this is Vesara Athcer.” For'mya spoke. “She is a senior member of the Tasmor Ruling Quorum and will be conducting the inspection.”

Saydia took note that both older women took a different stance and attitude when looking at Vesara and she smiled inwardly. Though they looked like they were in their mid-forties in age, both Gorgo and Dasha she knew were several thousand years old, Dasha slightly more than Gorgo.

Gorgo chose to respond to Vesara’s comment. “While their mothers are the Queens of the Union, we as a family do not stand on pomp and unnecessary displays of gaudy royalty. It is unbecoming and our family hates it. Androcles and his siblings are in the training facility several decks above us. We will meet them there.”

Dasha curled her arms with Saydia and Anthylea for she already knew what the two women were to each other by their scents and the fact that Aricia, Anja and For'mya had briefed them thoroughly on who to trust and who not to.

“Come Sovereign Regent, many of us are still learning this ship, and I need the anse Durcunusaan to take me wherever I go. I swear I drive my detail insane with my questions.” Dasha spoke. “Without them I would be lost. Literally.”

Saydia and Anthylea could not help but smile at her words as they began to walk towards what appeared to be an elevator. Anja smiled and held out her hand for Perlyea and Aduna and they moved forward quickly to take her hand. Aricia reached for Jacina and Recia where they stood in the back with Tobia while Namiri and Emylea gripped For'mya's hands as they began to move for the elevator. Tobia had been a last minute addition, knowing that she had to see her daughter and Murano or she would be no good to anyone. She could not wait two more days knowing what she now knew. Everyone else fell in behind them.

“For'mya this ship is enormous!” Emylea commented in an excited tone.

For'mya nodded her head. “We have never been on it before either.” She stated. “It will be a learning experience for all of us.”

TRAINING FACILITY DECK EIGHTEEN

Armen had prepared well for his crew.

There were three such training facilities spread throughout the ship, each of them utterly massive in scope, and all of them able to be used by anyone. This particular facility Andro had chosen for its central location to all other areas of the ship. It was easily the size of an indoor coliseum, broken into three different sections with every piece of training equipment imaginable spread out across the facility. A huge section of the facility was covered in cushioned mats on the floor where all of the Leonidas children and their respective wives and mates were dressed in tight but comfortable workout clothes and in the cool down phases of their personal training regimens.

Eliani and Jomann focused on improving their Nehtes skills while making sure Brendi honed her more rudimentary hand-to-hand skills. Eliani was already regarded as a Master of the Nehtes and behind only her father and Andro there were very few who could meet her skill. Jomann had proven up to the task from the first moment they had met even before he had claimed her, and now they worked on honing that skill even more while studying techniques that Eliani could use as his Praetorian Mage.

Denali, Lisisa and Arduri concentrated on their individual skills, all of them at a very advanced level already, while Lisisa and Arduri used the Tomes of Sumar to better be able to channel their Etheric power as Deni's Praetorian Mage. While Lisisa was the recognized one who had this skill within her, she used Arduri as a conduit as well, drawing her into the fold.

Fedor, Iama, Eirene and Miseo were practicing their hand-to-hand skills, the hulking Kavalian using his Monitor training as a basis to add to Fedor and Eirene's already impressive skill set because of the knowledge Andro had passed to them in the womb. Iama for her part loved the training for it empowered her and made her budding confidence grow rapidly and she simply adored Fedor's increased attention to her firm and supple body and how it was being sculpted.

Kalis, Ridor, Daio, Cowen and Sherice were off on a different set of mats going through an advanced set of training skills, Serale, Kameka and Cvea taking part as well. Torian was still recovering in the medical bay and Andro would not let him participate until he was given a clean bill of health by Eliani.

Murano was pacing back and forth in front of his charges, which consisted of Androcles, Dorian, Deion, Mari and Laren. They had just completed a very complex set of skills from the Tomes of Sumar and Murano was explaining to them about each portion of the different set of maneuvers. Sarlana for her part simply walked among the small groups of the Leonidas family relishing in the sense of purpose emanating from all of them. They were all so different in their mannerisms and Etheric resonance but there was no doubt in any of them when it came to their training. It was something all of them took very serious. Even the youngest of them, Bryon and the twins Retta and Calyb were deeply involved in their training. While Retta and Calyb were finishing an accelerated Agoge training course, Bryon was taking part in intensive hand-to-hand skills. He had promised his brother to do this since he had chosen to attend this music academy on the planet Elear and not follow the example of his father and brothers and conduct his Agoge. Sarlana had not been surprised really; she sensed a peaceful resonance radiating from the youngest Leonidas child, but also one that was not afraid to defend what he loved.

None of them was paying attention to the comings and goings of who came and went into the training facility and they did not take notice of their mothers entering with the Tasmor entourage. The humidity and the myriad of heavy scents within the training facility kept any new scents from becoming noticeable until they had been in the room for a period of time. That did not work for Etheric resonance and as soon as Aricia, Anja and For'mya dropped their shielding, the heads of all their children whipped around as if on free spinning tops. Eliani was the first to react with a squeal of delight, followed quickly by Retta and then Lisisa, Normya and Eirene. All of them rose to their feet within milliseconds of each other and were then running into the arms of their mothers. With the exception being Eirene, none of them had seen their mothers in almost a year and it was a reunion that was a long time coming.

Aricia, Anja and For'mya were buried under the weight of their children. Within seconds of the female Leonidas children reacting to the appearance of three of their mothers, the sons soon followed and the three Queens of the Union were caught up in the embraces and nuzzles and powerful grasps of their children while the Tasmor simply stood by watching with wide eyes. Tears flowed plenty, as did the hugs and laughter. All of them, Aricia, Anja and For'mya were shown equal love and devotion. It was a testament to their strength as a family for not once in their history had any of their children ever referred to them as anything other than mother. It did not matter who had given birth to them, all of them were their mothers and they all spoke with one voice and had their entire lives as they grew from childhood to adulthood.

Of them all, only Androcles stood apart from the reunion.

He felt great happiness at the sight of those he called mother, he could feel it radiating from them as well as his siblings. While he too felt happiness, there was one other emotion that once more washed over him. It was an emotion he was not used to and did not like, but it filled him nonetheless for what he perceived as something he did wrong.

Blood before all else.

That is what their father had pounded into their heads as they grew. Never cause harm to a member of your family intentionally. There was no greater sin to the Leonidas family than that. Androcles had done this twice now. He had killed his cousin Leruk, no matter his crimes. Killed him in a fit of rage for what he had done and would have continued to do to his beloved Drow wife Lu'ria had he not stopped him. Then he had attacked his mother. His second elven mother and perhaps the one who was second only to his birth mother in his heart of hearts. He had attacked her and drawn blood from her, and two things viler to him did not exist in this universe. The reasons for his actions did not matter to him, only the action itself, and for months Androcles had held this shame buried within him. He had dreaded this day, knowing it would come and not knowing if his mother could forgive him for his actions, no matter the beautiful result.

Murano saw him standing alone and was about to move up beside him when Sarlana grasped his arm. She shook her head when he turned to look at her and she pulled him back.

[No Murano.] She told him.

[Sarlana he...]

[I have told you in great detail of the sense of purpose a Dahakoan feels for his family.] She told him. [The sense of devotion and love and trust. Now imagine that combined with what we know of Androcles' family and how they are with one another. What they have been raised to believe and follow all of their lives.]

Murano nodded his head. [Blood before all else. Yes, I know. Martin has instilled this in all of them.]

[Imagine having to break that vow Murano.] Sarlana told him. [Imagine having to break that vow not once, but twice. The second time against a woman you have loved as mother since the day you entered this world. No matter the reasons, or cause, it was you who had to break this vow willingly. Imagine the shame this would cause within you. Knowing you caused harm to one who you adore.]

[For'mya does not see it that way Sarlana.] Murano said. [You know this.]

Sarlana nodded her head. [Androcles does not Murano. It must be For'mya alone who releases him from the false shame he carries. Words will not help him now Murano. For all his strength and fearlessness in battle, his tactical genius and guile, Androcles Leonidas is still but a child in his heart. He may carry the memories and knowledge of four lifetimes within him, but he is still a child, and he has had to experience far too many horrors for his lifetime. Of them all, this is the one that shames him the most. Just watch Murano, just watch and experience why no power or entity will ever come between this family.]

Murano remained beside her and did indeed watch.

For'mya finally broke away from the tangle of bodies that surrounded her, loving children all of them. Her dark brown eyes, streaming tears now, found Androcles only a few feet away unable to move closer. He had sacrificed so much to save her, to save Fedor and Eirene. He didn't question what he had to do in order to accomplish this, he just did it. For'mya was well aware of the rule they followed as a family for behind Aricia and Anja she was the one who preached it the most. His actions that day had cost Androcles Leonidas, her son, it had cost him a little part of himself. To go against the very upbringing that made you the person you were was no small task, but he had not hesitated in the least. His actions had saved For'mya from taking her own life and the lives of the unborn Fedor and Eirene. It was a debt she could never repay in her lifetime, but it left her son with a shame he did not have the right to bear. A shame she was going to erase from him this very moment.

Androcles was unable to look at her as she moved right up to stand in front of him. He towered over her five foot seven frame, wearing only his customary loose fitting work out pants and his entire upper body was bare. For'mya looked at him and felt such pride and love swell within her. He was the perfect image of his father, so powerful and defined in his muscularity, so imposing to those who didn't know him, but he was also one of the most compassionate men she had ever met. His physical appearance alone could and did cause fear from others, but never from her and never from his family.

"Can you not look at me my son?" For'mya finally asked him.

Andro shook his head slowly, still unable to meet her eyes. "I am... I am not worthy." He spoke in a hushed whisper.

This statement caused more tears to burst from For'mya's eyes, an action that caused Aricia and Anja to begin to move for where she stood. Gorgo and Dasha both gently grabbed their hands and shook their heads as they pulled them back.

For'mya didn't hesitate and she reached up and grabbed his face in her hands. "Worthy?" She gasped aloud. "Oh Andro... my beautiful boy."

Androcles lifted his face to look at her and she saw those beautiful azure colored eyes gaze upon her. She saw them flood with tears and then Androcles dropped to his knees before her.

"I... my actions have shamed me Medwaw." Andro stammered. "No matter the... no matter the reason, I inflicted pain upon you. One who I call mother! That cannot be forgiven! I... I will carry that with me for all of my years and..."

"NO!" For'mya almost yelled. "You saved me my son! You saved your brother and sister! Your actions are what gave me... gave us hope!" For'mya held his face in her hands tightly now. "You will not hold this within you a moment longer! You have no shame to bear Androcles! None! I forbid it!"

"Mother you..."

"You will listen to me now Androcles!" For'mya barked at him through her tears. "You are the reason that I stand here now! Why Fedor and Eirene stand here now!" For'mya felt Fedor and Eirene come up on either side of her then, Eirene's eyes openly flowing with tears and Fedor's dark eyes moist. "Do you think for a moment that I care how you gave back to me the love of your father and mothers? How you allowed your brother and sister to grow and discover the wonders that they have? Without you we would be naught but a memory my beautiful son and I will not allow you to carry a burden that is not yours to carry and never was." For'mya pulled his head to her stomach and bowed her head to his as Fedor and Eirene dropped to their knees beside their brother and buried their faces against her abdomen beside his. "Let it go Androcles." She whispered to the top of his head. "Let it drift from you as if it was never there my son. Let it lift from you as it lifted from me the day your father took me in his arms again. It was never your shame to carry Androcles. It was never yours, just as it was never mine."

For'mya heard the soft whimper and then his arms reached around her waist and Andro pulled her even closer to him as Fedor and Eirene wrapped their arms around his shoulders. She looked up in relief, her dark eyes now changed and her dual fangs fully exposed as Aricia and Anja moved instantly up beside her, their own eyes flooded with tears. Within seconds, their entire family was crowded around them, reaching for each other and with not a dry eye among them. Gorgo and Dasha had tears in their eyes as well, but chose to remain beside Saydia and the other Tasmor. All of them had seen what had taken place and how they were all gathered in the large group, their emotions flowing all around them for all to see. Saydia could see dozens of Lycavorians and other species standing all around the massive training room silently, many having dropped to one knee at what was occurring. Almost as if it was a reverent occurrence.

Saydia Daret felt it then, and it shook her right down to boots. These people shared the same values and morals. They may have been from different families and packs but they were the sons, daughters, mothers, and fathers of so many others, but they were all of the same mind. Moreover, they took their strength from the family that was in front of her now. This is what Saydia Daret wanted for her people. This is what she wanted for the Tasmor. With friends and allies such as these, the Tasmor could grow and prosper beyond any of their imaginations, and Saydia Daret intended to see that come to be no matter what.

Namiri and Emylea Daret gripped each other's hands tightly for very different reasons. Both of them were staring with wide eyes at what was happening in front of them but they were staring at very diverse things. Emylea was stunned upon seeing Mari once more. Her petite body looked even more slim and muscular and even more delicious than she remembered it to be. Mari looked even more exquisitely beautiful than she remembered and as the gods were her witness, the young man that Mari clung to tightly was the most divine specimen of a male as any she had ever seen. She watched as Mari turned her head, saw her mother, and then was almost running to embrace her where she stood beside Jacina and Recia. Emylea also felt her heart breaking as she turned her head back to the tall young man that had claimed Mari and she knew that Mari was lost to her forever.

Namiri Daret could not stop staring at him. His body was sculpted to utter perfection like nothing she had ever seen. He was tall and his upper body was deeply tanned. Each muscle stood out in exquisite definition and Namiri could not help but be excited wondering what it would be like wrapped in those powerful arms. The same thing that was running through her mind as was running through her sister's. He was the most delicious male she had ever seen in her young life and just for a moment before he had joined the rush of bodies to For'mya, those eyes had settled on her and made her shiver in utter want and desire the likes of which she had never felt before.

Sarlana leaned close to Murano now with a smile on her face. She nudged him gently, managing only to hit his waist because of her height. "I believe it is time for you to move forward as well Murano." She told him.

Murano looked at her confused. "Excuse me?"

Sarlana motioned with her head and his eyes followed seeing Tobia and Mari locked in an embrace. His eyes grew wide for a moment for even to this day, Tobia's beauty had always managed to make his heart jump.

"Go to them Murano." Sarlana spoke softly. "This is the day all things from the past must be made right." She told him. "Step into your future Murano my friend."

Whatever self-control Murano had within him he lost and he moved from beside her without hesitation. He crossed the distance between them quickly and then he was looking at Tobia as she hugged their daughter. Their daughter. A few months ago that word was as foreign to him as fear. He saw Mari's eyes grow bright when she saw him and she pulled away from her mother.

Tobia reached up and took her face in her hands seeing the brightness in her daughter's eyes and the love that shown from her face. Her Etheric resonance was so very powerful now, even more so than she remembered and Tobia knew the reasons behind that and she approved so very much.

"Mari you... look so beautiful." Tobia finally gasped.

Mari blinked away her tears, took her mother's hands in hers, and squeezed. "Look behind you mother." She said softly.

Tobia looked confused and she turned her head quickly, only to gasp in shock and bring her hands to her face in surprise. "Murano!" She gasped in blissful delight.

Murano had held it in all of his life. Even when he was with her, he could not bring himself to show her what she meant to him. He could not speak words that expressed his love for her. The shame he thought he bore had buried all other emotions deep within him until the day Martin and the others had shown him the way. Until Sumar's Etheric projection had taken that shame and tossed it into the wind. Murano did not hesitate now. He didn't wait and he lifted Tobia into his arms, her yelp of surprise and delight causing heads to turn to her, but then she was throwing her arms around his broad shoulders and surrendering all she was to him as she had wanted to do for so many years.

Murano spun her around in place several times before staring in to her beautiful eyes and speaking the words he had wanted to speak for decades.

"I love you Tobia!" He spoke without doubt. "I have never loved anyone as I have loved you. Tell me you forgive me for being the fool Tobia. Tell me that you forgive me and love me as I love you."

Tobia burst into more tears and grabbed his face tightly. "Oh Murano!" She stammered. She nodded her head without hesitation. "I do! I love you so very much!"

Murano needed to hear no more and he kissed her. He kissed her as he had never kissed her before. Tobia groaned in blissful happiness, wrapped her arms tightly around his head, and kissed him back as Mari looked on with tears in her eyes.

Saydia Daret turned her head away from watching Tobia and looked at Anthylea. Both of them had smiles on their faces and Saydia squeezed her hand tightly as they looked at one another. Tobia had been a dear friend to both of them and even though they knew she enjoyed their time together, they knew her heart had always belonged to Murano. It was simply wonderful to see their friend so happy now.

Saydia turned back and leaned closer to where Gorgo stood. "Is it appropriate to ask what took place?" She asked softly. "For'mya said he holds no shame for his actions. What does she mean by this?"

Gorgo nodded her head and looked at Dasha quickly. Dasha nodded in response for she and Gorgo already knew what Martin and his Queens thought of the Tasmor. "In many ways Androcles is... he is much more anchored in tradition than even his father. Martin and his Queens have always raised their children with one major rule that must never be broken. Blood before all else. Honor your blood, your family, above everything else. Androcles did something that he thought caused him to break this vow. He has carried that false shame for nearly a year now."

"And it concerns For'mya?" Saydia asked softly.

Dasha nodded her head. "He thought he was harming her when in fact he saved her. And his siblings Fedor and Eirene. This day needed to happen in order for Androcles to let go of this false burden. Only For'mya could give that to him."

Saydia looked at them in the huge group for another moment. "Their emotion... their love for one another... it is a powerful image." She spoke. She saw the young man Androcles rise to his feet and those azure colored eyes, so much like Aricia's, were almost glowing in their intensity. Saydia gasped softly when she saw this and then he was embracing For'mya and lifting her off the deck as she laughed heartily and held his shoulders as he spun her around. Then he was embracing Aricia and Anja as well and doing the same thing. "A powerful image indeed."

Gorgo and Dasha looked at her and smiled together. Saydia had no idea just how much she was going to become part of that image, but they did not doubt that this strong woman was going to embrace it fully. Gorgo opened her mouth to speak but Saydia saw her grimace instead and then Dasha and she were staggering slightly.

"Lady Gorgo!" Saydia gasped. "Lady Dasha! What is it?"

"Andro!" Saydia heard the excited cry and she turned to see Androcles Leonidas also staggering slightly, his hands going to his head as he doubled over to his knees once more looking as if he was in pain. For'mya was holding one of his hands as Anja and Aricia were grabbing his arm, both of them with looks of concern on their faces.

Saydia watched for a few seconds as they moved closer to him, his siblings crowding around as well. It felt as if it lasted several minutes, but it was only a matter of twenty seconds actually.

That is when they heard it.

-ATTENTION! ATTENTION! ALL CREW TO THEIR STATIONS! ALL CREW TO THEIR STATIONS! SPARTA'S WRATH IS NOW AT CONDITION TWO! SPARTA'S WRATH IS NOW AT CONDITION TWO! UNKNOWN CONTACTS INBOUND! UNKNOWN CONTACTS INBOUND!-

UNKNOWN SHIP

Perlae sat just behind the pilot as they studied their instruments intently as they had been doing for the last few minutes. Her youth got the better of her after the extended time and she finally leaned forward.

“Anything yet?” she asked.

The pilot turned his head to look at her and smiled. “Nothing yet Perlae.” He told her. “Not in the three minutes since you asked me last. We would tell you.”

Perlae blushed slightly and looked down embarrassed. “Forgive me.” She told him.

“Don’t be.” He told her. “I think we are just as excited as you and your siblings. We have been training for this for months and years as well.”

Perlae nodded her head. “My patience escapes me.” She said. “It is not like Androcles to do nothing however. They had to have detected us by now Morlar.”

The man nodded his head. “We are within their sensor grid so I would have to agree.”

“A HELIX-Class corvette docked with the big ship twelve minutes ago.” The co-pilot spoke looking up. “Maybe that has something to do with it. I’ve also been running normal scans of the VORTEX-Class Cruiser and it is nothing like what our records indicate it should be.”

“What do you mean?” Perlae asked.

“Well... the configuration is slightly off for one.” The co-pilot spoke. “And the metallic composition of the hull is something I have never seen before. Definitely not standard Pralor ship armor.”

Morlar looked at Perlae. “They designed and built their own interstellar engines correct?”

Perlae nodded her head. “The basic design was based on City Ship 41’s engines from what I understand, but they built them from the frame up all on their own.”

“Impressive.” Morlar turned back to his co-pilot. “What else do you have out of the ordinary Jaroe?” He asked him.

“The altered configuration could be anything really, given the biomechanical nature of Pralor ship materials but she has what appears to be very advanced weaponry, Pralor in origin no doubt, but some of the turrets are in odd spots and I can’t tell what they fire. Not without an active scan anyway.”

“That would be taken as hostile.” Morlar spoke. “We don’t want to do that.”

“Perlae?” The soft female voice spoke from behind all of them and Perlae turned, her face brightening quickly as she saw the Merlot red colored scales of the adolescent dragon move smoothly into the cockpit.

The Darastrixi Vrrarhoimpa within their settlement did not mature anywhere near as fast as their brothers and sisters in the Union or even on the Darastrixi homeworld. It may have been because only three among their number who had actually bonded with dragons and those were Dynina’s grandchildren, but no one really ever bothered to discover why this was “Ieri!” Perlae spoke with love and warmth as the adolescent dragon came up beside her in the chair and Perlae leaned over as her Bonded Sister brought her snout against her cheek and they both closed their eyes in happiness.

Ieri was the oldest of the clutch of three siblings. Gydal was bonded to Ishma while Quevor had bonded with Awser. As with Perlae, Ishma and Awser, they were almost never apart from one another or their Bonded Ones. Ieri sat back on her tail and draped one of her Firespitter talons on Perlae’s thigh.

“Gydal and Quevor have been pestering me ever since we stopped about when we were going to meet them.” Ieri spoke. “Will it be soon?”

Perlae nodded her head quickly. “We are certain they can see us but so far they have not acknowledged we are here.”

“Is this normal?” Ieri asked softly.

“Perhaps we just like to be cautious.” The unknown female voice boomed from their internal speakers causing all of them to look around quickly.

“Sibfla!” Morlar gasped aloud as he studied his screens.

“Indeed.” The female voice spoke again and Perlae noticed the slight lilt to her tone and the almost musical nature of her vocals.

“It’s a COM signal!” Morlar exclaimed. “They penetrated our COM signals and tapped into the frequency!”

“I am Admiral Sa’sur.” The female voice continued ignoring his words as if he had not spoken. “I am transmitting through the COM frequency of the ship we currently have tracking you. You have entered the Operational Control Zone of a Lycavorian Union Task Force and I would very much like to know your intentions since you have been sitting on the edge of our OCZ for almost thirty minutes and have done nothing.”

“You have a ship tracking us?” Morlar gasped. “How? We have detected nothing on our sensors!”

“And you won’t.” The female voice replied. “Please state your intentions.”

Perlae reached out and touched Morlar’s arm causing him to look at her quickly. She motioned with her head and he nodded instantly. “Admir... Admiral... my name is Perlae and my sister and brother and I would very much like to speak with Androcles.”

There was a slight hesitation and then the female voice answered. “I’m sorry I don’t know of who you speak. Who are you and where do you come from? There are no habitable planets in this sector of space.”

“Admiral Sa’sur... we can feel Androcles within the Etheric realm. We can feel all of our blood.” Perlae spoke once more. “We know he is on the very large, former Pralor VORTEX-Class Cruiser that is on the edge of our own sensors, along with nearly all of his siblings and from what we have felt just recently, three of his mothers have joined him.”

“I don’t know who you are!” The female voice spoke once more. “Or what you are speaking of. I will ask you again please state your intentions.”

“Admiral we only wish to speak with Androcles.” Perlae said again. “We are no threat to you in the least, none of us are. If you will let Androcles know that we are here, I know he cannot sense us because his Etheric shields are far too high, but if you tell him we are here, then we can explain everything.”

“Do you have Holographic COMS capability?” The voice asked.

Perlae looked at Morlar and nodded. “Yes. We are activating now.”

Morlar met her eyes. “Perlae is that wise?” He asked.

“We have nothing to fear from Androcles or any who follow him and his father Morlar, you know this.” Perlae spoke.

Morlar hesitated for only a moment before touching the panel beside his right leg and the small holographic COM disc between their seats came alive with the clear image of the very stunning woman with deeply tanned skin, beautiful pale blue eyes and sharply pointed ears.

“She is an elf!” Ieri exclaimed excitedly.

All of them saw the reaction on Sa’sur’s face when she saw them and they watched as she came to her feet from the chair she had been sitting in.

SCIMITAR

Sa’sur stood up from her Command Chair on the bridge the moment she saw the merlot scaled adolescent dragon in the COM link. Her eyes grew even wider when she saw Perlae and the texture of her skin, not to mention the color of her hair. Sa’sur had seen Laren on several occasions since she had arrived and talked with her at length. This young woman had the same texture of skin as Laren, a cross between Darastrixi scales and normal skin. The scaled area was much less defined and appeared even softer in comparison to Laren’s skin but there was no mistaking it. The young woman had incredible amethyst colored eyes and they looked at Sa’sur with relaxed ease and openness.

“Who are you?” Sa’sur demanded almost harshly.

The young woman looked taken aback at her tone for a brief moment, then realization flooded her face, and she reached up to touch her cheek.

“Ah... my skin.” She spoke quickly with a smile. “It is very similar to Laren Ti’shara’s skin I imagine, but we are not the same. Wer Zezhuanth has blessed Laren with his spirit and power, her Lycavorian blood comes from the gods themselves. My siblings and I are the product of our mother and father, and we are not so lucky.”

Sa'sur kept her reply in check and hid her surprise well. How did she know about Laren? “Who are you and what do you want?” Sa'sur demanded.

“Admiral I know this is very strange.” Perlae spoke evenly. “But if I could just speak to Androcles then there would be no questions.”

“Young lady, I don’t know who you are or where you come from.” Sa'sur told her. “You keep asking to speak to someone named Androcles and I have no idea who you are speaking of. You are in an unknown ship loitering on the edge of my Task Force and you refuse to answer my questions. That does not bode well for future relations if you get my meaning.”

Ieri nudged Perlae in the arm. “She is protecting him.” Ieri spoke softly as Perlae looked at her. “She is an elf Perlae; all elves are descended from dragons. She is protecting Talon Guardian Androcles.”

Sa'sur’s eyes grew slightly wider and she appeared to step closer in the transmission. “How do you know that?” She demanded.

Ieri batted her beautiful emerald green eyes and looked at her image. “Are all elves as beautiful as you?” She asked.

Sa'sur looked taken aback by the question and she shook her head slightly. “We... we do not recognize your ship in our databanks.” Sa'sur finally spoke. “I will ask once more... who are you and what do you want?”

Perlae turned as Ishma and Awser moved onto the bridge, the adolescent dragons Gydal and Quevor, both with dark green scales. Gydal had large orange hued eyes while Quevor had bright reddish eyes.

“Ieri! An elf!” Gydal exclaimed moving up beside her sister and staring at the image of Sa'sur who looked even more confused.

Perlae turned back as Ishma grasped her hand and Awser moved up behind her putting his large hand on her shoulder. “Admiral... please let me introduce my sister Ishma and my brother Awser. Ieri, Gydal and Quevor are Bonded to us and we to them. I know that you are aware of the significance of this for there are thousands of your Bonded Pairs in the Union are there not?”

Sa'sur’s eyes narrowed. “How do you know that?” She demanded. “Who are you?”

“Admiral I assure you that we are...” Perlae began to speak but Sa'sur’s Tactical Officer spoke from her station interrupting her.

“Admiral!” The young woman barked. “Long range sensors are detecting four spatial disruptions closing on the unknown ship! Range is two light years and closing fast at light speed! Estimate one point one!” She looked up at where Sa'sur stood. “Admiral, Tactical Profile indicates some sort of stealth ship! We’re tracking the spatial particles and fusion traces from their engines.”

“Quantum engines?” Sa'sur asked surprised.

“Negative!” The young woman answered. “They appear to be some sort of Plasma Matter fusion. Along the lines of our earlier Hyper Matter Test Engines. They were detected by our tertiary sensor array doing a particle scan of the system.”

“What?” Perlae’s young and now excited voice drew Sa'sur’s attention back to the COM holo transmission.

“Admiral I assure you that we are...” Perlae began to speak but Sa'sur’s Tactical Officer spoke from her station interrupting her almost at the same moment that the soft alarm began to sound in the cockpit of their ship.

“Sibfla!” Morlar exclaimed as his hands began to fly across his instruments.

“What?” Perlae asked him in an excited voice.

“Jaroe?” Morlar asked his co-pilot. “Talk to me.”

“Four contacts bearing 2764.9.” Jaroe answered quickly. “They are two light years out and closing fast! Anse! They are Coalition Long Range Frigates!”

Perlae’s eyes grew wide. “Coalition! Out here! How?” She gasped.

“They found us!” Awser hissed. “They must have been waiting for us once they detected the activation of the portal!”

“They could not have known the activation coordinates!” Ishma spoke. She looked at Perlae with wide eyes. “Unless they seeded this area of space with sensor probes and had ships already here!”

“So far from their own space?” Perlae gasped.

“After what grandmother told them the last time they stopped us, what did you expect?” Awser spoke. “She insulted them and made them look the fools. And did a masterful job of it too.”

“You want to fill me in now?” Sa’sur snapped angrily from within the still active Holo transmission. “Who are those ships closing on this location? No one knows we are here! Why are they after you?”

“Admiral Sa’sur we really need to speak with Androcles!” Perlae insisted. “If you would just allow me to speak with him. Just let him know that we...”

“Young lady, I don’t know who you are or what you are trying to find.” Sa’sur told her. “I will not put my people or ships in danger for someone I have never met before. You said those ships are coming after you... why?”

“We really don’t have time for this.” Morlar snapped. “They will be upon us in minutes!”

“I have all the time in the world.” Sa’sur commented.

“Enough of this rensibfla!” Perlae barked out now letting her temper show as she turned to Ishma and Awser. “We must channel our power together and reach for Androcles.” She told them. “It is the only way.”

“Perlae we will never be able to breach the Etheric shields he has.” Awser told her. “He and his father have shields that no one can touch.”

Perlae nodded her head. “I know, but we don’t have to breach them.” She told him. “We only have to let him know we are here. With Ieri, Gydal and Quevor in the link with us we can at least get his attention.”

“And risk him thinking it is an attack from someone and have him shred our minds!” Ishma spoke. “Perlae that is crazy! You know what grandmother has told us. Androcles and his father are the most powerful Etheric users to have lived since Sumar. They could kill us all with hardly any effort!”

Perlae nodded her head. “What choice do we have?” She spoke. “We are no match for four Coalition frigates and if they capture us...”

“What do you want us to do?” Awser asked her.

“We link and find Androcles.” Perlae spoke. “We don’t need to try and breach his Etheric shields, just... just shout loud enough for him to take notice.”

“Shout?” Ishma asked.

“I know what she means.” Awser spoke taking his sister’s hands, as the three adolescent dragons moved closer so that they were touching their Bonded Ones.

“He has to know who we are.” Perlae spoke. “We can hide nothing from him. He must know that we are his blood! It is the only way he will believe.”

“If he does not turn us all into babbling fools for even attempting this.” Awser spoke with a slight grin.

SPARTA'S WRATH

ANDROCLES!!! WE NEED YOU!!!

It was a harmony of voices that echoed so loudly against his Etheric shields that it caused him to lose his equilibrium momentarily, affecting those closest to him in his family as they felt a wave of power within them. He knew instantly that it was no attack for the voices did not try to breach his shields and they echoed powerfully with the sweet resonance of something so very familiar to him. Andro pulled that power back within him taking it away from his family, even now protecting them like it was second nature to him. Andro dropped to one knee, sensing his mother’s concern, reaching for him both physically and within the Etheric realm. He ignored them and it was Eliani who was the first to get her body under his left shoulder and prop him up as best she could.

Elynth sensed this intrusion into his mind almost at the same time and was reaching for him within milliseconds of it happening, both of them almost subconsciously reinforcing each other's Etheric shields. The voices of his family were a hollow din of echoes as Andro took deep breaths and tried to ascertain what had just happened. The voices were still there echoing along his shields, not trying to gain access to his mind but most definitely trying to reach out to him. He had never felt them before, but their resonance was like a cool breeze on a summer's day on Cranae Island. They meshed perfectly and were filled with love and devotion for family. For him. For his siblings.

Family.

And they were all focused utterly on him.

To a Lycavorian there was perhaps nothing more important than family and pack. The wolf within all of them could sense family and pack with hardly any effort. These voices were not fully Lycavorian but they echoed with the resonance of family. His family. He could feel Elynth swimming within his mind, sensing the same things and feeling the same confusion at what she was feeling. What they were feeling.

LOOK WITHIN US ANDROCLES!! LOOK WITHIN OUR MINDS AND YOU WILL SEE!!

Androcles did just that, reaching out with fingers of Etheric power, touching all of the minds that were joined. Six of them. All of them acting as one, all of them committed and filled with purpose and love for one another. There was no malice, no evil intent, and no nefarious meanings. With Elynth sending him pulses of love and preparing to act to defend him if she detected anything Androcles Leonidas lowered his Etheric shields just enough to reach out to the six minds.

As his body stiffened and Andro heard the faint cries of his family Andro felt his world open up into something wonderful. Images flashed through his mind of faraway places, the faces of those he recognized, laughter, love and pain. The one thing that coursed through him with powerful intensity was the resonance of family. He found so many Etheric tendrils that were drifting and all of them radiated the same thing. Family. Blood. As he delved deeper he saw each of them enter this world; saw their parents and grandparents; and then finally he saw her and his azure eyes grew so very wide.

Eliani and his mothers and siblings thought he was in pain and they gripped him tighter. Anja and Eliani tried to use their power to discover what the problem was. Andro could feel their healing power sweeping through him, trying to discover what was wrong. He felt Sadi's hands upon him then, all of his wives and mates as they crowded around him on the deck. It filled him with resolve and Andro went deeper.

And he saw her one more time and felt the burning of family within him grow even more profound. The black hair and dark eyes so prominent in his father and his grandfathers. She was the cause. She was the beginning. In that fleeting moment Androcles saw everything and pieces of the puzzle he had been trying to put together with his father for years fell perfectly into place.

[Where are you?] Andro reached out to the six minds without hesitation.

Andro felt the wave of happiness and relief fill the six minds and he opened his mind further, lowering his Etheric shields more and encompassing those six minds as well within the scope of his abilities. He felt liberation and untold happiness when he did this and then six voices spoke as one.

[Androcles!] The six voices spoke as one. [Bless the gods!]

[You are so close!] Andro said. [Where are you?] He asked again still confused.

[Androcles...] A single female voice spoke now with their other five minds swirling around her in unison. [We are just on the edge of your ship's sensors. Your Admiral is speaking with us but she would not let us talk to you.]

[Who are you? What is wrong? Where did you come from?] Andro asked the questions quickly.

[You have seen some of it.] The female voice replied. [We can tell you everything but the ships closing on our position now would prevent that if they were to capture us.]

[Ships?] Andro asked. [What ships?]

[She sent us Androcles. She sent us to be with you.] The voice spoke again. [My name is Perlae.]

[She is... she is my... grandmother. Our grandmother.] Andro said.

Andro felt the happiness in the connection once more and almost saw the young woman nod her head. [Yes. Her name is Dynina.]

[She is... she is grandmother Sateia's mother!] Andro gasped his eyes going wide as the realization hit him. [She is the... she is the beginning!]

[Yes!] Perlae answered again and Andro could feel the happiness within them grow even more pronounced. [Androcles these Lycavorians that are coming... that are after us... they are not...]

[They are our people!] Andro spoke.

[No!] The female answered with almost a shout. [They are not like us! They are not like you and your father and mothers. Androcles you must believe me!]

The decision was easy enough for Androcles to make given that he was a Lycavorian, a Spartan and a Dahakoan. He made it with no hesitation.

[Come to me now!] Andro snapped. [Do not hesitate! I will inform the others! Follow this course now Perlae!] He ordered her, flashing her the course he wanted her to take through the connection they had established.

PERLAE'S TRANSPORT

[She is... she is grandmother Sateia's mother!] Andro gasped his eyes going wide as the realization hit him. [She is the... she is the beginning!]

[Yes.] Perlae answered again. [Androcles these Lycavorians that are coming... that are after us... they are not...]

[They are our people!] Andro spoke.

[No!] Perlae answered with almost a shout. [They are not like us! They are not like you and your father and mothers. Androcles you must believe me!]

[Come to me now!] Andro snapped. [Do not hesitate! I will inform the others! Follow this course now Perlae!]

Perlae felt relief wash over her, Ishma and Awser at his words and she saw the course in her mind. Tears flowed openly from her and Ishma's eyes and Awser was having trouble holding them back as well because of what they felt within Androcles for them.

Perlae turned quickly to Morlar, ignoring the image of Sa'sur within the COM signal. She reached out and touched his shoulder. "Morlar... go!" She spoke. "Androcles said straight to his ship! Go!"

Morlar didn't hesitate for an instant and pushed his engines to full power, the transport taking off like a bullet from a dead stop.

"Wait a minute!" Sa'sur barked out from with the COM channel. "I will..."

"I'm sorry Admiral!" Perlae spoke just before she ended the transmission on their end.

"Perlae, they could destroy us in a heartbeat!" Morlar spoke even as he shifted their course.

"They will not." Perlae answered confidently. She punched numbers into the computer between him and Jaroe. "Follow this course! Do not deviate from it Morlar!"

Morlar glanced at the computer and nodded his head. "Here we go!"

SCIMITAR

In all the years they had worked and commanded together Androcles had communicated with her via Mindvoice only three times. All of them in an emergency. She felt the tingles in her mind and then Andro's voice was filling her thoughts.

[Sa'sur! The transport! Do not hinder it!] Androcles ordered her.

[Andro... we don't know anything about it.] Sa'sur spoke.

[We would have if you and Armen had allowed them to talk to me Sa'sur my friend.] He answered quickly.

Sa'sur felt the slight tinge of anger and frustration in his voice but it was quickly gone. He knew they were only trying to do their jobs and not intrude on the reunion with his family and more importantly his mother.

[We wanted to...]

[I know Sa'sur and... thank you. Other ships are approaching as well?] Andro asked her.

[Four unknown contacts, yes. Our... guests... appear to know who they are but were not very forthcoming with the details.] Sa'sur answered. [They said they did not want to be taken by them. They have some sort of Stealth technology Andro, we picked them up easily enough but we had to retune our main sensors. Heavy Frigate Class to us. Four of them bearing on the transport now. They shifted course and are definitely after whoever is on that ship. Whoever they are, they must be important.]

[Sibfla!] Andro spat. [I believe the time to remain hidden is now past us Sa'sur. We knew it would not last forever.]

[Agreed.]

[De-shroud the Task Force and begin hailing these vessels.] Andro told her.

[Who is on them Androcles?] Sa'sur asked.

[Lycavorians.] Andro replied causing Sa'sur's eyes to grow wider. [Moreover, according to Perlae, not very friendly ones.]

SPARTA'S WRATH

With a huge intake of breath, Androcles shook his head clear and rose to his feet with a purpose.

“Andro!” Sadi exclaimed grabbing his face.

Andro looked at her, his azure eyes bright and so beautiful to her. Andro leaned over and kissed her passionately right there in front of everyone, surprising even Sadi and not caring that there were Tasmor gazing upon him with wide eyes. He pulled away quickly and looked at his three mothers and Eliani.

“Andro what happened?” Aricia asked as she grabbed his arm. “You... it was as if you went into shock!”

Andro nodded his head. “I know. I'm sorry.” He answered quickly. He reached up and tapped his jaw. “Armen?”

Armen's voice filled the internal speakers of the training room then. -Androcles-

“The transport that you and Sa'sur were tracking... it is moving towards us now yes?” Andro said.

-It is on an intercept course, affirmative- Armen answered. -You gave them a course through the Task Force I assume- “Direct them to Landing Bay Six and have a security detail meet the ship. I will be moving there with my family.” Andro spoke squeezing Aricia's hand and pulling Sadi closer to him.

-And the other contacts- Armen questioned.

“Other contacts?” Denali asked now. “Andro what is going on?”

“Sa'sur is bringing the Task Force to Status Two.” He answered. “She will order them to de-shroud in seconds and...” Andro tilted his head for a moment. “Belay that order Armen. Maintain Status Two and keep the Task Force Shrouded for now. Inform Sa'sur and those ships are not to approach under any circumstances.”

-Affirmative-

“Andro?” For'mya asked him. “What is going on?”

Andro met her eyes with a brilliant smile on his face. “Our past is catching up to our future mother.” He told her. “Everyone change and meet me in Landing Bay Six. Hurry.”

They could only watch as Andro released Aricia’s hand, snatched Carisia’s hand to replace it and then he was leading his wives and mates out of the training room. Aricia turned and looked at Anja and For'mya.

“What is happening?” She gasped.

Anja shook her head and took her hand as well as For'mya’s. “Whatever it is, you can damn well bet it is going to be big.” She replied. “We must get Saydia and the Tasmor settled and then join him in Landing Bay Six. Where is Landing Bay Six anyway?”

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES (COLS)

COLS-CLASS LONG RANGE HEAVY FRIGATE

“Report!” The stern faced Lycavorian spoke as he sat in the Command Chair on the bridge of the ship.

His chair rested on a platform offset to the right of the bridge with stations behind him and to his left in the center of the bridge. Along the opposite side were also stations that were occupied by both men and women.

“Tri-Alliance transport is on an intercept course for the unknown ship! Range is sixteen million meters!” A voice echoed out.

“I can see that!” The man barked. “Tell me about this ship! Where did it come from? What flag does it fly?”

“It is just coming into range of our main scanning array sir! Sibfla! Captain it is over twenty-one thousand meters long!” Another voice chimed in.

The Lycavorian came to his feet, his instincts screaming for him to be cautious now. “Order the squadron to full stop! Conn, full stop! Do it now!”

“Full stop Captain!”

“Sensors!” He snapped. “Tell me something!”

“Some sort of localized jamming field is active Captain. Our sensors are unable to lock onto the ship or scan it!”

“Burn through the jamming field!” He ordered. “Tactical... are we still cloaked?”

“Affirmative Captain! Cloak is fully operational. The squadron is hidden.”

“Are there any other ships in the area?” He asked.

“No sir.” Another voice answered. “Sensors are clear. Just the lone ship. The Tri-Alliance transport executed some sort of evasive pattern and they have just now entered what appears to be a landing bay of some sort.”

“Range?”

“Range is down to eleven million, four hundred thousand meters sir.”

“Captain Nasso, Commander Balal is requesting instructions.”

“Tell him to stand by!” Nasso snapped as he moved to the sensor station to his left. It was being operated by his senior Sensor Officer and he trusted the man. “Gomar?” He asked less forcefully.

The man looked at him. They appeared to be the same age given their appearances. “I have never seen anything like it Nasso.” He spoke silently. “It is ten times our size and twenty times our mass. The configuration does not match anything in our databanks.”

“The jamming?” Nasso asked.

“It distorts sensors but it doesn’t jam them completely.” Gomar answered as he adjusted his controls. “Hull composition is unknown. It... it almost appears bio-mechanical in nature with traces of different metals that I have never seen before. That we have never seen before.”

“Power source?” Nasso asked.

Gomar shook his head. “Unable to determine at this distance given the distortion of our sensors by whatever that ship is radiating. It is some sort of polaron field that I can tell you.”

“A ship that size can’t possibly be a warship.” Nasso spoke. “Lifesigns?”

Gomar shook his head. “Our sensors are too distorted to be that accurate from this distance.” He replied.

“Keep trying to burn through this jamming Gomar.” Nasso spoke. He turned his head. “Weapons Officer, load torpedo bays with Class Four warheads. Full yield and lock them on that ship. And ready the Plasma turrets! If that ship attempts to leave I want it crippled! Order the other ships to do the same!”

“Weapons aye!”

“COMM Officer, prepare a probe to send back to Coalition space!” Nasso spoke. “Full security protocols and encryption. Launch when ready.” He moved to another station behind his chair and looked over the shoulder of the man there. “Anything yet on the portal opening?”

“They covered their tracks well Captain.” The man answered him. “Our relay sensor probes detected it just as they were designed too, but by the time the information was then transmitted to us, they had already collapsed it. We know they can move through these portals with ease but we simply were not prepared for this event and we were too far away to react quickly enough. I have shifted four probes into the sector where it was detected and I’m trying to determine its exact position.”

Nasso nodded his head and put his hand on the man’s shoulder. “Take your time and be thorough Lanar. This is why we brought you along. And if we can catch these Tri-Alliance people we can get you the answers to your questions and secure this technology for ourselves.”

“Yes sir.”

SPARTA'S WRATH LANDING BAY SIX

Perlae, Ishma and Awser stood at the bottom of the ramp of their transport, their hands clasped tightly together in both fear and excitement. Ieri, Gydal and Quevor bounced slightly back and forth on their talons as they stood behind their Bonded Ones, staring at the massive forms of Jeth, Elynth and the other fully grown dragons now watching them with wide eyes. A full Durcunusaan Security Team was spread out in a half moon line in front of the ramp, their chopped down P190A5s ready to deal out death if need be.

They saw him step through the rank of heavily armed men and all of their hearts jumped several notches. Though they didn’t know it, Andro had changed into standard Union Drow Light armor. Though it looked very similar to Mark V ArmorPly, the materials used were very different. All of the Leonidas children had taken to wearing the lighter Drow armor once Lu'ria had become Andro's wife and mate. It was much better for everyday use, and while it did not provide equal protection as the Mark VI ArmorPly that they wore into combat, it was better suited for day to day activities. It also served to accent the figures of all the Leonidas daughters and wives and this is something that all of them preferred. Aricia, Anja and For'mya wore the armor for the first time, but they would soon begin to do the same thing as the armor grew on them. Anja had already commented as they were changing how much more firm it made her ass look. Aricia and For'mya were laughing as they too dressed.

Perlae, Ishma and Awser could only stare at him with wide eyes. There were times when they had believed this day would never come. Only their grandmother’s faith had given them the will to hold on to that feeling. Now it was actually happening and they did not know what to do. He was taller than the images they had seen on pirated channels, and far more muscular. He was so imposing, both physically and within the Etheric realm. Their dragon blood could feel the echo of the Dahakoan inside him and the young man and woman that stood behind the row of guards. It was so powerful and unmistakable.

They could also feel the Etheric resonance that marked him as a Talon Guardian.

Vrelvel Sargti.

Beings that had not existed within Darastrixi society for well over a million years and now two among the four that existed were not even Darastrixi, which was unheard of in all of their history. And they were of their blood.

Androcles stared at them with wide eyes as he moved closer. Their scents were without question and for one with the sense of smell that Andro and his father had; it was the largest deciding factor. Andro did not hesitate and moved right up in front of them, his azure eyes bright. He reached up slowly and touched Perlae’s cheek causing her to flinch slightly but not draw back. He let his fingers slide across her skin and saw her smile as the tears rolled down her cheeks. She reached up and covered his hand with her own, even as Andro looked at Ishma and did the same thing with her. The fingers of his hand caressing the skin of her cheek and her tears of happiness rolling across his skin. He turned and looked at Awser now, taking his hand and brushing it across his short black hair before coming to rest on the back of his neck. Awser moved closer, reaching up to rest his hand on Andro's arm, his dark amethyst eyes moist.

Andro turned his head back to Perlae and met her identical colored eyes. [Staanian?] He asked them.

Perlae nodded through her tears. [She is well. It was she who sent us here Androcles. She has always known you and your father would come. She has never lost faith. She made sure none of us did. She has waited for the day when she could see all of you together. In person. Jezima and Meral too.]

[How?] Andro gasped. [You are...? How is this possible?]

Awser smiled now. [Our father is... he is Darastrixi.]

Andro looked at him with wide eyes. [Darastrixi?] He gasped in surprise.

Elynth was the only one who would dare intrude on what was taking place and she moved up right behind Andro, lowering her head close to his shoulder. Ieri and her sister and brother had to crane their necks up to gaze at her, but look at her they did with huge eyes. That she was Vrelvel Sargti and Dahakoan was easy enough to tell for them, but she was also a hybrid dragon. This was something that none of them had ever seen before let alone believed was possible.

[How is that possible?] Elynth asked them.

Perlae smiled as she reached up and put her palm on Elynth's snout. This drew gasps from many who were watching. All of her siblings and the entire Leonidas family knew Elynth to be the most introverted of Isheeni and Torma's children and she would never allow anyone but Andro to touch her in such a way.

[Elynth.] Perlae said softly seeing her golden eyes go wide. [You are just as beautiful as our staania said you were.]

[You... you know my name.] Elynth rasped out.

[We all know your name.] Ishma spoke now as she too reached up and touched her snout. [You are part of Androcles. There is not one without the other. We know the names of all our family.]

Elynth looked at Andro. [Andro?]

[You can feel what I feel sister.] Andro told her. [They bear the blood of my family within their veins. I can smell it as easily as I smell it within my siblings. Staania Sateia's blood.]

Perlae looked at Elynth. [Sateia... Sumar's wife and mate... she was the sister to our mother.] She explained. [Both are daughters to our staania.]

[How?] Andro asked. [How did she survive the Black Day? How did you come to be among Darastrixi?]

[Pralors too.] Awser spoke causing Andro to look at him.

[It is a long and rather involved history Androcles.] Perlae told him. [We can tell you everything but...]

"Andro?" Eliani's voice interrupted them and Andro turned his head and saw his sister just behind him. As with all his siblings, they trusted Androcles implicitly; Eliani was just a little braver than the rest when concerning Andro. "Hum mm... we are standing here kind of stupid like."

Andro could not help but smile and he turned back to Perlae. He surprised her by his actions, but his arms closing around her filled her with blissful joy and then he was hugging her tightly. She felt his arms reach out for Awser and Ishma and then he was embracing all of them, his resonance and scent filling their senses and their minds and filling the one void that all of them had felt in their hearts since they were children.

The void of family.

Andro looked up and turned, none of them wanting to release him from their arms, and he looked at his three mothers and siblings looking at him strangely. He saw the looks on the faces of Aricia, Anja, Denali, Deion and Nara and knew that they were beginning to put together what was happening here. They would have the keenest senses of smell after him and his mother Anja could no doubt sense with her healing powers that they were related.

"Well!" Andro blurted aloud. "Don't just stand there! Come and greet your family." He declared. "Come and greet our chrora!" (cousins)

That was all the encouragement they needed and the rush of bodies forward was like a wave of emotion as Perlae, Ishma and Awser were swallowed up but the one thing they had lacked for nearly all of their lives outside the love of their grandmother and father.

The love of family.

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES (COLS) COLS-CLASS LONG RANGE HEAVY FRIGATE

“Gomar?” Nasso asked impatiently from his command chair.

“I have been able to retune our sensors somewhat, but the polaron field around this ship is very powerful.” Gomar answered. “Whatever is powering that ship is unlike anything I have seen.”

Nasso rose to his feet and moved up beside him once more. “It has been over thirty minutes Gomar.” He said. “Surely you have discovered something?”

“It is unlike the Tri-Alliance technology Nasso.” He told him. “I’ve never seen it before. The ship is just under twenty-two thousand meters long. It has a beam of nearly five thousand meters! If our instruments are accurate it displaces over 22 billion metric tons Nasso!”

“Then it must be a transport of some kind.” Nasso spoke. “No one builds a warship that large. What would be the purpose? It would not be able to fight.”

Gomar looked at him. “It would be helpful if we were closer.” He told him. “I could focus our sensors tighter on different portions of the ship and cut through the interference from the polaron field.”

“Are you sure?” Nasso asked.

Gomar was silent for a moment then shrugged his broad shoulders. “I don’t know.” He finally answered. “To manipulate a polaron field in such a way takes a massive amount of power generation, easily the output of all four of our ships combined, but a polaron field is not meant to make it impossible to scan through it. Just harder.”

Nasso thought about it for a few seconds and then turned his head. “Conn! Ahead two thirds on the sub-light engines! Take us to a distance of one million meters from that ship!”

“Conn aye!”

Nasso looked back to Gomar. “You are certain it was the Yowa’s staaniachanvor?” He asked.

Gomar nodded his head. “Without question.” He answered. “Their bio-scans matched perfectly to what was in our databanks. I also detected three of the Sinuova onboard before they sprinted for this ship.”

“Truly?” Nasso asked. “That is new for them. We have not seen them outside their territory on anything but their warships. Why risk them on a simple transport, even if it is their fastest?”

“It does make you wonder.” Gomar spoke. “Perhaps they are getting sloppy?”

Nasso shook his head quickly. “The Yowa is many things but she is not sloppy. She has been out thinking King Osrod for ten thousand years.” He squeezed Gomar’s shoulder. “If we can bring him her grandchildren he will reward us with whatever we desire Gomar.”

“I would settle for a better ship.” Gomar replied with a grin.

“If we can pull this off I will make sure we are given a cruiser!” Nasso said. He moved back to his Command chair with a delighted look in his eyes at what he could gain from this mission. “COM Officer, when we reach one million meters begin hailing the ship. Standard hail and have them prepare to be boarded!”

“COM aye.”

SPARTA’S WRATH

They moved into the starboard pilot’s briefing room, the Durcunusaan keeping all others outside, while the reunion continued. Perlae, Ishma and Awser were very nearly overwhelmed at the outpouring of family and love they received. As their staania had told them many times through the years, it would be much easier for those of pure blood to know the truth of it, and Aricia had proven this theory quite correct. She sat with Perlae and Ishma on either side of her, gripping their hands tightly, while Awser sat beside Ishma with Denali, Deion and Nara crowded around him. The others packed around them, Anja and For'mya touching Aricia in some fashion, all of the Leonidas family touching one another in some way, while a barrage of simple questions beset the three of them. They were questions easily answered and did not require much thought given the emotion of the moment. Ieri, Gydal and Quevor were all resting on Jeth's massive back just outside the briefing room, all of the family dragons crowded around him and Tharua.

Androcles stood just inside the door of the briefing room, his back to the wall. Sadi and Ne'Veha pressed tightly against either side of him, Lu'ria to his front and Sehri, Caliria, and Carisia pressed up against them. All of them basked in the happiness that filled Androcles and they radiated it outward as well.

"You must contact your father Saradasaar." Sadi spoke looking up into his face. "This revelation is; it is beyond wondrous."

Andro nodded his head. "I will." He said softly.

"You did not sense them at all Andro?" Carisia asked him.

Andro met her Maya blue eyes. "Not even an inkling." He answered. "Not until they reached out to me."

"A power like Tobia and Mari have then?" Ne'Veha spoke. "Mari was able to shield her resonance even from Murano and he is her father."

Andro nodded his head. "Possibly." He said. "Their Etheric resonance is different though. It is not as pronounced as it is within us."

"Is that bad?" Sehri asked.

"No." Andro told her quickly. "They are blood. They are family and that is unquestioned. How it all came to be we will discover as time passes."

"This is nearly as wonderful as discovering that Jezima and Meral still live." Lu'ria spoke happily. "We are discovering so much about our history and our family." That was the Drow within her speaking for it was well known that the Drow were sometimes even more fanatical about their family and clans than Lycavorians.

Andro turned his head when the door to the briefing room opened and the Bridge Officer entered. He recognized Major DI'koa instantly. "Major?" He asked.

DI'koa turned and saw Prince Androcles beside the door. "Milord." He spoke bowing his head slightly.

Andro grimaced at DI'koa's formality and thought he saw him grin slightly in response. He would have a talk with Armen at a later time. "What is it Major?"

DI'koa moved closer. "Our other guests are becoming bolder Milord." He told him. "One of the ships has closed to one million meters and has begun hailing us in the clear."

"They lowered these stealth shields that they have?" Andro asked surprised.

"The one ship that moved closer yes. The others are still hidden, or so they think." DI'koa added with a smile.

"What do they want?" Andro asked.

DI'koa shook his head. "Standard hail in universal language translators." DI'koa gave him a lopsided grin now. "They want us to heave to and prepare to be boarded for inspection of what they call criminals."

Andro's eyes grew wide at this and he almost choked on his intake of breath. "You must be joking?" He gasped. His head turned quickly then and he looked at where Perlae and the others sat. "She said they were not like us." He spoke softly.

Sadi looked at his face. "Andro?"

"Perlae told me they were not like us." Andro repeated himself looking at her. "The crews of these ships are Lycavorian Kerta Gai."

Sadi's jungle green eyes grew wider now as well. "Lycavorian? Out here?"

Andro nodded his head as he turned back to DI'koa. "Have they tried to scan us?"

DI'koa nodded his head. "Ever since they got within range. Their sensors do not appear to be anywhere near as advanced as ours, nor their ships for that matter. The polaron field is distorting most of their scans but now that they have moved closer, they will be able to get some readings. Nothing major since our Dragon Armor shell resists most passive scans. If they get stupid and actually try to actively scan us, then they will get more information."

Andro nodded his head as his mind went over half a dozen scenarios. "Keep ignoring them for now." He replied. "And do what you can to keep them from being able to detect anything even if they do go active."

“The Task Force?” Dl'koa asked.

“Sa'sur will keep them under Shroud for now.” Andro answered him. “Only secure COMs between ships Dl'koa. I will join you on the bridge shortly.”

Dl'koa nodded his head and turned quickly to move out the door. Andro leaned over and quickly nuzzled Sadi and the others affectionately, each of them smiling and basking in the attention. He looked at Perlae once more and nodded. “Time to get some answers.” He spoke as he gently moved Lu'ria aside and walked over to the table in front of where Perlae, Ishma and Awser sat in the front row of seats.

Perlae and Ishma still had moist eyes from all the tears they had shed in the last hour and it showed even on their skin. Awser's face was very animated and happy, that much anyone could see. All of them were actually. They all turned to him as he sat on the edge of the table across from them. Aricia, Anja and the rest of their family knew right away that something was going on and they focused their attention on him.

“Andro?” Aricia asked him. “What is it?” Perlae, Ishma and Awser all looked at him when she spoke and they could feel the anxiousness within him.

“Chrora... I need to know who is on those ships.” Andro asked her. “You said they were Lycavorian.”

“Lycavorian?” Aricia gasped aloud.

Perlae nodded her head. “Yes.”

Anja looked at Andro. “The ones from Ventori?” She asked.

Andro dropped his eyes from his Hadarian mother and looked at Perlae once more. “Perlae?”

“They call themselves the Coalition of Lycavorian States.” Perlae began. “We simply refer to them as COLS. They control roughly forty habitable planets on the far side of Kintaur space. Along the outer edge of the Echo Quadrant.”

“Wait...” Anja spoke again. “You know of the Kintaur?”

Ishma nodded now. “The Pralor and Tasmor planets as well. *Staan*ia Dynina has been monitoring them ever since we discovered they existed. About a thousand years after we arrived on Lorenu.”

“Lorenu is where you are from?” Aricia asked. “Your planet? Where is it?”

Perlae looked at Androcles. “It is a hidden system.” She spoke again. “It is not within the Echo Quadrant. It is... it is within the old Pralor Empire.”

“The old Pralor Empire?” Mari perked up when she heard this and leaned forward in her chair beside Deion. “How is that possible? The Scourge control our old empire.”

“Not all of it Lady Mari.” Awser replied.

Andro moved off the table and knelt down in front of Perlae. He took her hand in his and looked at them. “You are with family now Perlae.” He told her warmly sensing her hesitation. “You know this, yes?”

Perlae nodded her head quickly with a brilliant smile. “Oh yes!” She answered.

“It is a day we have waited for ever since we were born Androcles.” Awser spoke now. “*Staan*ia has known all of you existed ever since Tenne Martin took City Ship 41 from the surface of Lycavore. She has told us of each of you when you were born. When she first... when she discovered Tenne Martin lived it was a joyous day without equal according to her.”

“Son vada carians!” Aricia muttered.

Androcles nodded his head slowly trying to wrap his mind around what they were saying. “That is... you have known we existed?” He said. “How? We...” Andro met her eyes with an expression of disbelief. “You have someone within the Union! Someone close to our family if you know all this!”

Ishma nodded her head slowly. “Only staania knows who it is.” She said quickly. “We have asked her through the years but she has never revealed this information to anyone. Nicha may know, she is staania's closest friend and like a sister to her. We do not though.”

“Why not... why not come forward?” For'mya asked now. “Why not reveal this to us so that...”

Perlae shook her head. “We do not know what resides in staania's thoughts.” She said. “Only she can answer these questions.”

Andro squeezed her hand and nodded. “Then that is knowledge that we will get to very soon I assure you.” He spoke evenly. “Right now however, these ships are still out there and they are after you. Who are they and why are they after you?”

Perlae took a deep breath. “The nearest that we can tell, according to the members of the Pralor Science Convocation that are among us, is that they are from one of the earliest Seed Missions that the Pralors conducted with our people from Lycavore. Even before those on Ventori, so at least a hundred and fifty thousand years but probably more.” Perlae answered. “Staania first encountered them after our probes discovered the Pralor survivors of the war in this Quadrant of space on Artaaya. We did not approach the Pralor survivors as they were too busy trying to rebuild. We sent one of our ships to make contact with these Lycavorians, hoping to gain more allies; it did not work out as we had hoped.”

“What do you mean?” Aricia pressed her.

Perlae looked at her. “They are not like us.” She repeated the phrase. “In many cases they still follow the old ways of our people on Lycavore. Before the time of Sumar. They are quick to violence and they rule with absolute power. We know that they control forty odd planets as I said, more than half of them they conquered.” She looked back to Andro. “The different species in that region of space that they have not conquered avoid them at all costs. They are militant and they provoke easily.”

“It is they who probably took the Alphas from Ventori.” Awser spoke now. “We have never been able to prove that, but it is what staania feels.” He told them. “They still follow the old caste ways of our people Androcles. Alphas, Betas, Omegas. Each are broken into their own sub castes and that is how they live. Those who did not bend to their will were enslaved over time. Slavery and beholden debts are a major part of their society.”

“Debts?” Anja hissed softly.

Ishma nodded now. “Adults and children are sold into servitude in order to pay for debts that are owed. Sometimes from thousands of years in the past.”

“The people allow this?” Denali asked from behind them.

Awser nodded and turned to look at his cousin. “It is an accepted way of life to them.” He answered. “Many know nothing else. Trust nothing else. It is a way to advance their status among their people.”

“Do they have a government?” For'mya asked. “Elected leaders?”

Perlae shook her head. “Pack rule.” She answered. “And the senior pack leaders select a King.”

“King?” Andro said.

Perlae returned her gaze to him. “King Osrod commands them now. He has been King for the last seven centuries since he succeeded his father. He is not a nice man and neither was his father. His father tried to force staania to give him our technology. As you no doubt noticed they are nowhere near as advanced as you or our people in terms of technology.” She told them. “When we first encountered them they tried to act friendly and open, but staania saw through this quickly enough. It turned ugly when she refused to become the mate to King Osrod’s father and he tried to force himself on her. That is when their true intent came out. Staania soon discovered that they wanted our advanced technology, our people and whatever we could offer to them, and not for peaceful purposes. They wanted it for themselves. For power.”

“Thugs!” Eliani spat from the side.

Perlae shook her head quickly and looked at her. “No, that is part of the problem. They are not simple thugs Eliani. Osrod commands them as King, his word is law, but he listens to the leaders of the packs. They do things for the benefit of their people insofar as it benefits the Coalition as a whole.”

“They practice slavery!” For'mya hissed.

“Yes, but unlike other species in history they do not abuse slaves and their slaves are afforded at least some basic rights.” Ishma spoke.

“You sound like you admire them Ishma.” Anja said gently.

Ishma shook her head quickly. “No, never! Slavery is vile to me no matter the form! I’m just saying that, unlike how slavery is viewed in the Union, how the Tri-Alliance views it, this is acceptable to COLS and part of their society. It has been for millennia.”

“Why are they after you?” Andro asked her. “And I need to know everything Perlae. Keep nothing from me.”

Perlae nodded her head. “When the Svorag attacked Ventori, staania dispatched one of our cruisers to provide help to them. Before we even got a third of the way there seven COLS ships intercepted us.” She told them. “We do not have many warships but they are far superior to anything COLS has. Staania tried to reason with them, she even told them we were going to Ventori to assist them. They did not seem concerned about what was happening there and that is why staania believed they had something to do with taking the Alphas from the planet. She says they knew of Ventori by the way they reacted to her words. She believes they have been there before. They may have even been there watching them when the Svorag struck.”

“For what purpose?” Aricia asked.

Perlae shook her head. “We do not know.” She answered. “These ships demanded that we surrender to them. Staanian refused and they began to fire upon us.” Perlae took a deep breath and stopped for a moment. Ishma reached out to her and placed her hand on her sister’s arm.

“Staanian refused to fire back on them.” Ishma continued now. “When they realized they could not penetrate our shields, they sacrificed one of their ships to damage our ship. It rammed our cruiser and was destroyed, but it did sufficient damage to our ship that our shields dropped.”

“Staanian had no choice but to order the Captain to attack with everything we had.” Awser picked it up now. “We destroyed the remaining six ships in minutes but not before the surviving Captain got a message off to COLS Command. He told them that we had attacked unprovoked and killed all seven ships without any warning.”

Perlae looked at Andro. “Ever since that day COLS has considered all of us criminals.” She finished. “This is not the first time we have encountered them since that day. We usually escape easily, they cannot match our speed, but this time they knew where we were almost as soon as we arrived. We believe they have seeded this area of space with sensor drones that can detect our Subspace Portal Generator and have left ships to try and capture whatever they can.”

“Subspace Portal Generator?” For'mya asked now.

Perlae nodded her head. “The Darastrixi and Pralor scientists with us were some of the finest minds among their people. Working together they developed them over a hundred years. They are installed on all of our ships.”

“You have this technology?” Mari asked in shocked. “We were never able to determine how to fix the power instability it caused within the core matrix of our Quantum drives. You have these engines? Truly?”

Perlae nodded her head. “Oh yes.”

Aricia looked at Mari puzzled and then back to For'mya. “Kinosaurgai?” She asked.

“Benjamin and others at Dreamland have been working on it for a decade. They have shelved it for the most part.” She replied. “It was still in the theoretical stage. We could never solve the power consumption ratio just as Mari said. A Subspace Portal Generator would allow you to open your own directed wormhole to... well to anywhere. Theoretically the range would be unlimited by normal standards. Jump Gates would become a thing of the past.” For'mya looked at Perlae. “And you... this is amazing! You actually have working engines?”

Perlae nodded her head. “It is our most guarded secret.” She replied. “Only a handful of our people even know how they work. COLS must have devised some rudimentary way to detect the activation of a portal within a certain range.”

“And that is how they came upon you so quickly?” Andro asked.

Perlae nodded her head. “We believe so, yes.” She told him. “As I said... we don’t know anything for sure.”

“Well, it’s pretty obvious they want you.” Anja spoke now looking at Andro. “And we aren’t going to allow that to happen are we?”

Andro was quiet for a long moment as different options raced through his mind. His silence made Anja’s eyes narrow and she moved closer to him.

“Androcles?” She pressed more firmly.

Andro glanced up at her. “A moment mother.” He spoke as he stood up to his full height and tapped his jaw. “Armen?”

-Standing by Androcles-

“Androcles you...” Aricia started now also rising to her feet.

Andro held up his hand to her. “In a moment mother!” He told her with a firm voice. Aricia was about to retort angrily at this seemingly casual dismissal when she felt For'mya’s hand touch her arm and then For'mya she reached for both Aricia and Anja in their private connection.

[No, my loves.] She said quickly. [We have seen this before with our beloved. You know how Martin's mind works. Andro is no different. He is his father's son. Let him continue.]

For'mya was right they both knew. Martin could and did drive all of them insane with the way his mind was so methodical and cunning. They could never predict what he was going to do even after almost three decades together.

"Armen, I want a full spectrum sensor sweep of this sector and the adjoining sectors. Concentrate on any abnormal lower range power readings you detect that could be part of an extended sensor grid. A sensor grid that could be using the same stealth technology that our friends are using to hide themselves." Andro told him.

For'mya smiled knowingly as Aricia and Anja looked at her. Perlae looked up at them. "He can do that?" She asked surprised.

-What would this sensor grid be searching for Androcles- Armen asked.

Andro looked at Perlae. "Chrora?" He asked.

It was Awser who answered as he rose to his feet. "Given their level of technology the only thing they might possibly be able to detect is the residual chronometric particles of a portal opening." He answered. "We use unique crystals to focus the portal strength and make it stable, but they do leave a miniscule trace for several hours after activation."

"Armen you catch all that?" Andro asked.

-I will begin the sweep- His voice answered.

Perlae, Ishma and Awser looked around at everyone confused and it was Lisisa who smiled from where she stood beside Denali and Arduri. "All of us have COM implants." She explained. "We can hear pretty much any official communication anywhere on the ship and we all have private channels."

"And Armen is the ship so that helps as well." Deni echoed.

"This Armen... he is the Avatar of this ship?" Ishma asked.

Deni nodded his head. "Though I wouldn't exactly call him an Avatar anymore. He seems to not like that term now." He said with a smile.

Andro looked at Perlae once more. "Chrora... how radical are these Lycavorians?" He asked.

"Radical?" Perlae asked. "I would not call them radical Androcles."

"Would they try to forcibly board my ship?" Andro explained further.

Perlae blinked several times as his meaning hit her and she came to her feet. "If they... if they thought it would allow them to capture us or any part of our technology, yes, I believe they would."

"Deni... low level alert. Have the Durcunusaan deploy teams to all of the landing bays. It is the only way they could get aboard." Andro said. "You take command of one of the two main landing bays with Lisi and Arduri, Dorian take the second with Sheva and Onera. Split our team among you but I want Kalis with you."

Denali looked at him puzzled. "Why?" He asked.

"He will learn more of leadership from you." Andro replied seeing his brother's eyes widen slightly. "Now go!"

"Deion, grab Murano on your way out and take him with you, Nara and Mari. Take Landing Bay Six where their ship came in. Divide the rest between our siblings but leave the PREMONITION's Landing Bay for Carisia, Lu'ria and Sehri."

"ROE?" Deion asked him.

"If they try to board our ship fervon, subdue them." Andro answered. "If they resist... if they resist, kill them."

Denali nodded his head. "Aden." He said. (Done)

Perlae, Ishma and Awser could only stand there stunned as the Leonidas children turned into Spartan Warriors in the blink of an eye. They watched as Denali grabbed Deion and Dorian and they headed for the door, the rest of their cousins following without hesitation. Only Eliani, Brendi and Jomann remained once everyone else had exited.

Andro looked at his three mothers. Three of the six that he loved as if each of them had given birth to him. He looked directly at Anja. “Mother... Laren needs you now.” He said. “Her episodes are becoming harder for her to tolerate. Only you can fix that.”

Anja didn't pause and nodded her head. “Eli, you and Caliria are with me. And have Serale meet us in the Med Bay as well. This is going to take a few hours and we'll need her additional power. Retta and Calyb too.” She looked at Andro with those stern jade green eyes. “And you... no bumps or explosions or any other little things that your father so enjoys! You hear me!”

Andro grinned at her. “I will do my best medwaw.”

Anja shook her head. “Yeah... my mida you will.” She said taking Eliani and Caliria's hands and heading out of the briefing room.

Andro looked at Jomann. “Go with them Jomann. If these fools do happen to get aboard, I want you protecting my family. No one gets close to them Jomann. No one.”

Jomann nodded his head. “General Dytin has a security force with him. I could use them to augment the Durcunusaan.”

Andro nodded his head. “Do it.”

Jomann was moving before the words had finished leaving Andro's lips.

Andro waited for him to exit and then turned to look at Aricia and For'mya as he took Perlae's hand in one of his and then Ishma's in the other. “Shall the rest of us go to the bridge and see what we can see?” He asked with a smile.

For'mya stepped up to him and lightly slapped him in the face. “You are too much like your father you know.” She commented. “You are having way too much fun!”

Sadi and Ne'Veha laughed from where they still stood by the door as For'mya moved up to them and took their hands.

“Follow me.” Andro said with a large grin.

SPARTA'S WRATH BRIDGE

Armen turned when Andro entered the bridge with Aricia and the three individuals he had never seen. The way he held the hands of the two females he registered right away and he filed this information into his neural network for future reference. These must be their guests. His orange hued eyes grew slightly wider when he saw the four Tasmor females following Aricia with Lady Gorgo and Lady Dasha, and the two Pralor females he did not know. He recognized them as the Tasmor Regent Saydia Daret, her mate and her two daughters while the Pralor females could only have come with the Queens since he did not have their biometric scan in his databanks. He may have been an Avatar, but he was capable of learning and this action did not sit well with him, as it would not sit well with any ship commander having unauthorized personnel on his bridge. He looked directly at Androcles when he stopped in front of him.

-Androcles- He spoke before his eyes rested on Saydia and the others.

Aricia noticed this right away but did not take offence in the least. She stepped away from Saydia and Anythylea and right up to him and placed her hand on his broad chest. Aside from her Beloved and her son, Aricia had interacted with Avi far more than the other Queens, especially when she had been carrying each of her children.

“It was my decision Armen. Upgrade their status, as well as that of Jacina and Recia.” Aricia spoke softly looking at the hulking Avatar for the first time but being reminded so much of Avi. “They will be family one day.”

Avi had played such a role in their lives for the last three decades that Aricia and the others were perfectly comfortable with him in the same room. This comfort level now extended to Armen almost naturally.

He did not look like Avi except for the massive seven-foot-tall body and bald head, but there was no mistaking he was the Avatar of this ship.

Armen nodded his head then without hesitation. He knew the meaning of family to the Leonidas clan. —I will make a note in my neural database- He told her just as softly. —The other Tasmor-

Aricia shook her head slowly. “If you would, keep an eye on the rest of them with the exception of Perlyea and Aduna.”

-As you wish Lady Aricia- Armen answered.

“Thank you Armen.” Aricia told him. She nodded to Andro before moving back to where a wide eyed Saydia and Anthylea stood. Namiri and Emylea were equally enthralled at what they saw and this showed on their faces easily.

Andro looked at Armen. “Armen, allow me to introduce Perlae, Ishma and Awser.” He said. “Our Chroray.”

Ishma was very excited upon seeing him and she reached up without thought to touch his cheek. “We read about Avatars in our studies.” She gasped aloud.

“Ishma!” Perlae admonished her sister.

“Oh! Forgive me!” Ishma spoke embarrassed pulling her hand back quickly.

—There is nothing to forgive Lady Ishma- Armen stated with what could almost be described as humor.

“What do we have Armen?” Androcles asked now as he turned to the massive plot board in the center of the bridge.

Armen turned to the star chart table as well and touched several keys on the clear panel. The image changed to one of the entire larger sector as well as the two adjoining ones. —You were correct Androcles- He spoke as dozens of small dots began to appear on the large chart. Perlae, Ishma and Awser crowded around the huge table now looking on with awe. —The sweep detected seventy-nine stationary probes that are tuned to detect residual chronometric particles as your chrora Awser described. They are spread out over three different sectors but all of them are linked together-

Perlae’s eyes were wide as she gazed at the chart. “COLS ships do not have interstellar capability. These ships must have been out here for months laying this sensor pattern.” She spoke.

“When was the last time you came to this Quadrant?” Andro asked.

“It has been almost two years.” Ishma answered. “Staania became wary of continued incursions here because of COLS and the way they viewed us.”

Andro looked at Armen. “Are they still hailing us?”

Armen nodded his head. —Indeed. Every three minutes- He answered.

“Bring it up on speakers Armen. Let’s hear what they have to say.” Andro told him.

Armen turned his head and looked across the bridge. —COM Officer, put the hail on bridge speakers please-

“Com Officer, aye. On speakers.”

Within two seconds, they heard the deep male voice speaking.

“...Nasso of the Coalition of Lycavorian States Frigate. You are hereby ordered to identify yourselves and surrender the criminals that recently boarded your ship. In addition you will power down all shields and prepare to be boarded for inspection of further criminals that you are harboring. You will respond immediately.”

Andro shook his head with a small smile. “Everyone always wants to board our ships.” He spoke to no one in particular.

-Speaking from a purely aesthetic point of view, most Union ships are more pleasing to the visual receptors of humanoid species- Armen chimed in. -Perhaps this would account for these requests-

Andro looked at him oddly even as Ishma and Perlae couldn't contain their snickers of laughter. “Open a channel.” He spoke with a shake of his head.

Armen turned once more to his COM officer. -Tightly focused cone on our end Denaria. No reason to let them see more than they need to-

The Elven female nodded her head. “Opening channel, narrow beam aye.”

Andro turned and looked at the image of the ship on the massive view screen that took up nearly one third of the forward facing bulkhead. “This is Androcles Leonidas responding to your hail. Do you require assistance of some sort?”

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES (COLS) COLS-CLASS LONG RANGE HEAVY FRIGATE

“This is Androcles Leonidas responding to your hail. Do you require assistance of some sort?”

Nasso came to his feet when he heard the voice. “COM Officer?” He barked out.

“Confirmed sir! They are answering on both audio and video channels.”

“Audio only!” Nasso spoke.

“Channel open, sir.”

“I am Captain Nasso of the Coalition of Lycavorian States.” Nasso began. “We have tracked a transport vessel carrying known fugitives being taken aboard your ship! You will prepare your ship to be boarded for inspection and to hand over these criminals. Confirm my orders to you immediately.”

There was a momentary pause and then the male voice answered. “You initiated this transmission sir; you may contact me back on this channel when you have the courtesy to allow me to see you as well. I will wait five minutes and then we will depart this area of space. Good day.”

The COM officer looked up with wide eyes. “Captain... they have severed the link!”

A few of the bridge crew glanced over at their Captain. Nasso was well known all over the Coalition as one of the toughest men alive. He had thoroughly beaten down several officers through the years for questioning his orders or not following them to the letter. No one dared talk back to him or question his authority. It was also spoken about among his subordinates and peers that he was close to King Osrod, who often took his council. Nasso stood there now with a stunned expression on his face, something none of his crew normally saw. Nasso recovered quickly enough and turned, “Gomar?” He hissed, “Anything?”

Gomar turned to look at him with a surprised expression. “I am still unable to burn through the polaron field completely Nasso but...”

Nasso nodded his head. “What? Speak to me.”

“I am detecting lifesigns Nasso.” He told him, “Over half a million lifesigns!”

Nasso looked at him as if he was insane, “That... that cannot be possible.” He stammered aloud.

“The polaron field is still active and causing our sensors to reflect back our scans but I can be relatively sure given our distance, that ship has over half a million people on board, and over half of them are Lycavorian Nasso.” Gomar answered him.

“Lycavorian? Gomar that is...” Nasso blinked rapidly, “From the Tri-Alliance?” He asked.

Gomar shrugged his shoulders. “There is no way to tell that Nasso. But you were correct; it must be a transport of some kind with that many passengers.”

Captain Nasso of the Coalition of Lycavorian States could see much praise being heaped upon him by King Osrod if he was able to bring this ship and all of its passengers to him. Over half a million prisoners from the Tri-Alliance could net them a priceless amount of intelligence and technology. The Tri-Alliance and the yowa upaee who led them had been a thorn in their side for centuries now.

He turned quickly to his COM officer. “Get them back!” He barked out the order. “Audio and imaging as well!”

“Channel open, sir!”

SPARTA’S WRATH

“You initiated this transmission sir; you may contact me back on this channel when you have the courtesy to allow me to see you as well. I will wait five minutes and then we will depart this area of space. Good day.” Andro looked at Denaria and motioned with his hand.

“Channel closed!” She spoke quickly.

Perlae, Ishma and Awser stared at Androcles as if he had lost his mind while Aricia stood beside For'mya, both of them smiling from ear to ear.

[Yes indeed.] Aricia spoke as she looked at For'mya with loving eyes. [He is his father’s son.]

For'mya laughed within their private connection and they heard Anja’s sweet laughter from the Med Bay. [I told you he would be big trouble when I pulled him out of your womb and he was wailing like a wolf with an attitude.] She told them.

Aricia nodded her head. [Yes, you did Melyanna] She spoke. [And I would not have it any other way.]

[Hell no!] Anja exclaimed. [We would not have had half as much fun all of these years if we had children who were not stubborn and pig headed.]

[How true.] For'mya spoke. [How true.]

[Work calls.] Anja spoke. [Try to keep him from killing anyone you two, and pray to the gods that these fools do not call him boy. He is so much like his father and he hates being called boy.]

[We will try.] Aricia said with a smile. [No promises though.]

Perlae moved right up beside Andro as Aricia and For'mya turned to watch. She grasped his forearm. “Androcles, what are you doing?” She asked softly. “We know of this man Nasso. We have heard staania speak of him before. He is supposedly one of King Isrod’s most senior officers and is trusted. She says he is cruel and unhinged.”

“He’s an igord to act in this way with an unknown ship, especially one of our size.” Andro told her.

“Why do you antagonize him?” Perlae asked.

Andro looked at her. “Do you trust me chrora?” He asked.

Perlae blinked quickly and nodded her head. “Of course,” She answered without a doubt. “We all do. You know this Androcles. We... we have trusted you since we came into this world. It is in our blood.”

“Then trust me now.” Andro spoke with a smile. “You have...”

“They are hailing us again!” Denaria called out now cutting off their conversation, “Full access this time.”

Andro looked at her. “Put it through.” He told her turning to the huge monitor once more.

The bridge became silent as the image of Nasso appeared. Since his COM equipment was several generations behind what SPARTA’S WRATH was fielding, Andro and the others got to see most of his bridge. It was stark and barren, unlike most Union ships since they had long ago gotten rid of the Spartan like nature of their ships. All of the men and the three females that they saw were dressed in very plain, drab jumpsuits unlike the standard fatigue like uniforms in the Union Fleet.

Andro took a breath and began to speak. “Good day sir. On behalf of...”

“You... you are Lycavorian!” The COLS officer spoke as he gazed at the screen on his ship.

Andro nodded his head. “I am.” He replied. “And so are you.”

“I am Captain Nasso; we have tracked known criminals to your ship.” The tall man continued. “You are members of the Tri-Alliance and you will surrender yourselves to us and prepare to be boarded.”

Andro smiled and shook his head. “You are mistaken Captain.” He spoke calmly. “I am not harboring any criminals, and this ship does not belong to the... what did you call them... the Tri-Alliance.”

“The Coalition of Lycavorian States is the only recognized government of our species.” Nasso spoke. “If you are not part of the Tri-Alliance then who are you?”

“That would take a bit more explaining but suffice to say and using a phrase my father says often, this is not our neck of the woods.” Andro told him. “Not even close actually.”

“Do you take me for a fool?” Nasso snarled. “We tracked the transport all the way into your ship’s landing bay! Do you deny this?”

“I don’t deny anything.” Andro told him. “That transport was carrying three of my family members Captain, not criminals. Why do want them, if I may ask?”

“It is no concern of yours but they are responsible for the deaths of many Coalition soldiers and acts of treason!” Nasso answered. “I will take custody of them and they will be returned to Coalition space to answer for their crimes and be disciplined. You and your ship and passengers will also be detained for inspection and investigation.”

“They are my cousins, and if they are not part of this Coalition, which they aren’t, how can they be committing treason as you say?” Andro asked the man and seeing his eyes blink in confusion, “In order for a specific act to be treasonous in nature, they would need to be part of your government; which they are not as I said.”

“Do not think to verbally spar with me!” Nasso barked. “I have given you my demands and I expect them to be followed.”

Andro shook his head and clucked his tongue. “Then we have a problem Captain.” He spoke. “I’m not really into fulfilling demands from those who are not my beloved wives and mates. Thankfully, you are not one of them, so I will happily disregard your demands.”

Nasso looked bewildered once more, as if he was shocked that Andro would refuse his demands. “I have full authority of Osrod, the King of the Coalition of Lycavorian States, to order you to stand to, prepare to be boarded and to turn over those fugitives to me! You will do as I say!”

“And I have the full authority of my father, who happens to be King of the Lycavorian Union, to tell you where to stick your demands.” Andro quipped causing others on the bridge to chuckle softly.

Nasso looked stunned. “There is... there is no other Lycavorian King. What is this Union you speak of?”

“Captain Nasso, I will not turn over members of my family to anyone. You have shown me no cause for this other than your word of their so-called crimes. You’ll forgive me if that is woefully inadequate.” Andro spoke.

“You will surrender those on that ship to me!” Nasso snapped. “You will then prepare to be boarded and your passengers detained until we return to Coalition space! That is what you will do!”

Andro smiled and shook his head once more surprising his mothers with his calm and almost benevolent nature in dealing with this brute of a man. “I’m afraid that is not something I can or will do.” He told Nasso. “I would consider entertaining you and a few of your officers here on my ship and we can discuss matters.”

“There is nothing to discuss!” Nasso shouted. “I am a Captain in the Coalition Military forces! You will do as I say!”

“And I hold the rank of Crown Prince as well as Admiral in our military Captain.” Andro spoke seeing Nasso’s eyes go wide. “So I outranked you. This is free space Captain Nasso, so you have neither jurisdiction over us nor influence out here, and most definitely not over me.”

“The Coalition of Lycavorian States has claimed this area of space!” Nasso snapped. “It is under our control! You will do as I instruct you!”

Andro shook his head. “I’m sorry but we do not recognize your alleged claim to this territory. Our star charts and information tell us quite another story. Now, is there something else I can do for you Captain?”

“Do you know who I am boy?” Nasso roared viciously.

Saydia was standing beside Aricia and she saw Aricia snicker gently and shake her head from side to side. She saw movement behind her and she turned and witnessed both Dasha and Gorgo rolling their eyes and whispering to themselves. Saydia turned back and leaned close to Aricia wanting to know what was going on.

“What is happening?” She asked with wide eyes. This entire trip was so far beyond her wildest imagination of what it could be. The moment she saw this ship out of the view windows on their corvette she knew that she had made the right choice for her people.

Aricia turned to look at her and she smiled warmly. Her reply to her was a whisper so as not to give away that they were here on the bridge. “If there is one thing that will positively infuriate both Androcles and his father, it is arrogant and pompous people such as this Captain Nasso and being called boy. They both hate being called boy. It sets their blood to boiling.”

For'mya chuckled softly in agreement. “Whatever this Captain Nasso may have thought to gain, he has now lost.” She echoed Aricia’s words.

Everyone turned to look at Androcles when he spoke once more.

“I don’t particularly care who you are Captain.” Andro told Nasso in the transmission, his voice no longer with a tenor of friendliness to it. “And I don’t care for pompous fools who think they can intimidate me with bluster and empty threats.”

“Empty threats!” Nasso roared. “I have you outnumbered boy! You command a single transport with over half a million civilians on it! I have other ships, many ships that are still hidden and you cannot see them. You will do as I say or I will board your ship and subdue you!”

“A transport?” Andro said with a smile. He looked up and met Armen’s eyes. “Are we still in cruising mode Armen?”

-Affirmative- Armen replied. -I did not see the need to alter our mode-

Andro chuckled softly. “The fool Captain Nasso here thinks we are a transport Armen.” Andro said. “Please show him the error of his thinking please.”

-Happily- Armen answered and they watched as he turned to look at his bridge crew and motioned with his hand. -Secure from Cruising Mode and resume combat configuration-

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES (COLS) COLS-CLASS LONG RANGE HEAVY FRIGATE

“Talk to me!” Nasso screamed.

Gomar turned from his station with wide eyes. “Son vada carians Nasso!” He spat in disbelief. “Sensors are detecting multiple turrets appearing from the body of the ship! They were folded in to the superstructure! Completely undetectable!”

“How many damn it!” Nasso snarled.

“Over a hundred just on the port side that we can detect!” Gomar exclaimed.

Nasso’s head snapped around to glare at Androcles in the transmission. He saw the azure blue eyes of this young man, now brighter than they were before. He was without question a Lycavorian, but he acted and spoke like someone hundreds of years older than he appeared to be. Nasso’s eyes narrowed somewhat in surprise. This boy was acting like an Alpha wolf. How could that be? There were no more Alpha wolves except those within the Coalition. If he was not part of the Tri-Alliance as he claimed then who was he.

“This means nothing!” Nasso started to speak. “I will...”

“You have three ships hidden Captain Nasso!” Andro snarled angrily at him in the transmission. “Three! I have three hundred and forty-nine ships hidden! You are not the only military that has developed stealth technology Captain Nasso! Ours is much better than yours I assure you and since your ship is, at this very moment, parked just above one of our heavy cruisers and you have not detected them I know all I need to know.”

“You are bluffing!” Nasso barked out.

“And you are a fool!” Andro snarled right back. “If you wish to test wills with me Captain then by all means make a move! I will blow you and your ships so far back into the dark ages it will take you a millennium just to collect all of the pieces of your fat ass!”

SPARTA’S WRATH

“And you are a fool!” Andro snarled right back at him. “If you wish to test wills with me Captain Nasso then by all means make a move! I will blow you and your ships so far back into the dark ages it will take you a fucking millennium just to collect all of the pieces of your fat ass!”

Only three individuals looked at Andro normally after his comment to Captain Nasso. All other eyes on the bridge were staring at him in utter disbelief at what he had just said. Aricia, For'mya and Armen just stood there watching, Armen’s face completely impassive and Aricia and For'mya beaming with pride and love for their son. Andro looked at the chart table once more and stabbed his finger down on the small panel.

“Sa'sur have you been monitoring?” He barked out.

Nasso’s eyes grew wide from his ship when he heard the female voice that he could not see respond.

“Monitoring and getting a very large dose of humor in the process.” Sa'sur answered him from the SCIMITAR.

“Sa'sur...” Andro began again. “I believe it is time to depart this area of space and join with my father, King Martin Leonidas.” Andro finished the sentence putting emphasis on his father’s title and name. “De-Shroud the Task Force and prepare to jump. Ghost Protocols if you would.”

“Acknowledged,” Sa'sur replied.

Andro turned back to Nasso and stared at him in the transmission. “In the future Captain Nasso of the Coalition of Lycavorian States, may I suggest that you are more diplomatic with people you are meeting for the first time. And most especially with those who could turn you into a distant memory without so much as breaking a sweat.”

Andro stabbed down on the control panel once more cutting off the transmission just as they heard alarms beginning to sound on Nasso’s bridge.

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES (COLS) COLS-CLASS LONG RANGE HEAVY FRIGATE

The alarms were hurting his head for they had never gone off all at once in his entire career.

“Shut off those nubous alarms!” Nasso screamed out the order as he moved to where Gomar stood at his station. “Gomar, speak to me!”

“Unknown ships appearing all around us Captain!” Gomar replied with real fear in his voice, “Unknown configuration! Sibfla Nasso, some of them are huge!”

“Where?” Nasso barked as he moved back to his chair. “Where?”

“All bearings! All bearings!” Gomar shouted. “Son vada carians, sensors are detecting over three hundred warships Captain! We are showing one that is directly beneath us! Range five thousand metes! Gods, it is over two thousand five hundred meters in length! Unknown power readings but they are off the charts! Unable to penetrate their hull!” Gomar turned to look at Nasso. “Captain... ventral cameras are detecting what appear to be over twenty weapons turrets tracking us!”

“Captain, navigational sensors are detecting massive surges of Quantum particles in the area!” Another voice chimed in from the opposite of the bridge.

Nasso came to his feet once more. “Gomar?”

“Confirmed Captain! Quantum particles just spiked by four hundred percent!” Gomar looked at him with disbelief in his eyes. “These ships are using some sort of Quantum drives Nasso!”

“Impossible! Quantum Drives are only theoretical Gomar.” Nasso exclaimed.

“I’m telling you what my sensors are telling me!” Gomar barked.

“Only the Tri-Alliance has engines or technology such as this.” Nasso snapped.

Gomar shook his head. “We can track their ships. They leave a unique power trace. These ships we have never seen before! They are not Tri-Alliance ships!”

“Losing them!” The second voice called out once more. “They are disappearing off sensors!”

Gomar turned back to his equipment. “I confirm that! They are jumping away!”

“Track them!” Nasso growled.

Gomar shook his head. “We can’t! They are leaving no residual trace once they jump away! At least not something that we can trace with our equipment!”

“Nubou!” Nasso screamed aloud.

“Down to two hundred and fifteen contacts!” Gomar spoke. “One hundred sixty-three! Ninety-two! Sibfla they are jumping faster than any ships I have ever seen.” He hissed. “Fifty-one! That’s...” Gomar turned to look at Nasso. “They are gone!” He gasped. “All of them are gone Captain!”

“Nubou!” Nasso hissed again as anger welled within him.

SPARTA’S WRATH

Androcles turned back to the chart table and saw Perlae, Ishma and Awser looking at him with beaming faces. Andro looked around and realized for the first time just who was on the bridge and that they had heard and seen all of it. He turned back to Perlae.

“What?” He asked her sheepishly. “The fool rubbed me the wrong way.”

“That was...” Perlae began.

“That was masterful!” Ishma almost shouted as she beamed up at him happily.

Andro smiled somewhat shyly as his mother came up beside him. “We will have to talk about this disposition of yours duan keto.” Aricia told him with a beautiful smile as she nuzzled his cheek. (Our son)

Andro met her eyes with a smile as he touched the control panel on the chart table one more time. “Sa’sur?”

“I’m here Andro.” Sa’sur’s voice replied.

“Who is the Ghost Protocol ship?” He asked.

“HAMMER OF THOR,” Sa’sur answered. “She is a TAUR’OHTAR-Class Mk VIII Destroyer Escort.”

“Sa’sur... burst her secure.” Andro spoke. “Have them find the central sensor probe of this net they established and then destroy the whole network with a reverse proton pulse. That should be sufficient to overload the power matrix in each successive sensor probe.”

“Understood.” Sa’sur answered. “I’ll let you know.”

Andro nodded his head as Perlae and Ishma both wrapped their arms around his midsection and hugged him happily. Andro grinned and looked at his mother. “Has mother started yet?” He asked.

For’mya came up beside Aricia and shook her head, “A few moments ago.” She replied knowing what he was asking about.

Andro nodded his head. “I must go to her.” He said softly while holding the hands of Perlae and Ishma.

“We all will.” Aricia told him. “Go. I will call for Dorian to meet you there.”

Andro nodded his head, leaned over to nuzzle her cheek, and then he was leading his three cousins off the bridge.

Aricia turned to Armen. “How long before we reached Ventori Armen?” She asked.

-Twenty-one hours, nineteen minutes- Armen answered instantly.

For’mya took Aricia’s hand. “Let’s enjoy our family while we can Aricia. We won’t have time once we get back to Martin.”

Aricia nodded her head in agreement. “I think that is a wonderful idea.” She said in reply. “One that I will relish.”

CHAPTER FIFTY-EIGHT

SPARTA'S WRATH NINETEEN HOURS FROM VENTORI MED BAY

It was an amazing sight to see really, something that none of the Darastrixi present in the next room had ever witnessed before. The Medical Bay on SPARTA'S WRATH was very large to say the least. It was a full, forty bed hospital really, with two surgical rooms and a separate recovery room. It was much larger than the Medical Bay on the SCIMITAR, which Eliani had called home for so many years, but Andro knew she was more than up to the task. With Caliria, Serale and Cvea now part of her senior staff, Eliani had jumped in with both feet. In the short time that they had been aboard, things had begun to take shape very well.

Cvea Lethon, as she wanted to be called now in order to show her love for her husband and mate, was an astounding learner Eliani had discovered. She simply soaked up information and retained it like a trap. Cvea had learned in several weeks what most Union Field Medics took at least three years to master. Eliani had already advanced her schooling twice since she had been on the ship and each time Cvea was thorough and mastered each and every skill. She was thoughtful and precise, but also accurate and swift. Kavalian she may have been, but like Iama and Cowen, she had become a vital part of the crew. Each new day saw her confidence grow by leaps and bounds. The Medical Field had been an excellent choice for her and like some of the greatest doctors and medics within the Union, she had taken to it like a fish to water. As with Iama, the Biogenic Process had removed her fine coat of hair from her body except for the long tresses on her head, but it had also unwittingly increased the capacity and function of her brain. This was something that Eliani had discovered in her exam of Cvea when she had first come aboard. She had told Andro but both of them agreed there was no need for anyone to know this about her. She was dedicated and loyal and she simply adored her husband and mate Ridor.

Serale Leonidas, for her part, had blended right in immediately because she was now wolf and Hadarian. Never in her young life had she imagined she would be working with the Royal family in any way but now she was the only other Hadarian medical officer on the ship and she knew that she was needed and relied upon. She had Cvea had grown quite close these last weeks and they worked extremely well as a pair, which is what Eliani had been hoping for since she and Caliria seemed to mesh together instantly. Caliria Leonidas was primarily a Research Specialist and she knew it and embraced that fact, but she was also picking up on things very quickly working beside Eliani. While she could easily treat people with her medical skills and care, her main field was Research and Development and she was not afraid to let someone know she did not know how to do something. In her free time when she was not training with Carisia or Lu'ria, Caliria was reviewing all she could about known diseases that Anja had either found cures for or was working on in her spare time.

All four of them worked effortlessly together and the Medical Bay ran without like a well tuned machine. Eliani had requested more senior medics be assigned to the ship with the understanding that the four of them called the shots. Cvea had been granted a temporary Union Military assignment and given the rank of Ensign to better facilitate her acceptance into the military lifestyle. She joked now that she could order her beloved Ridor around and he had to obey her.

The four of them were currently all standing near or around the single bed in the surgical room, Anja at the head of the bed where Laren rested. Caliria sat at the desk station with the four monitors in front of her monitoring every portion of Laren's vital signs. Cvea stood beside Anja waiting for an order to get her something, while Eliani and Serale stood on either side of Laren at the two portable computer stations, each of them touching her with one hand while monitoring her on the portable screens in front of them. Anja had both of her hands alongside Laren's head, the soft white glow of her healing power filtering outward and encasing Laren's upper body. Androcles knelt on one side of the bed, Dorian the other, each of them with one of her hands in theirs. Just outside the entrance to the surgical room in the main medical bay, Ladur rested on the deck between Elynth and Ryner. He had refused to wait outside until the procedure was done, and no one was going to argue with a fully grown Firespitter dragon, especially not one who had Elynth standing beside him in support. They settled for just outside the surgical room because he could not fit through the doorway, but he was in the center of the doorway so he could watch everything.

Robati stood beside Yokra, his hands on her shoulders, Aviel and Nahko stood to their left while Sarlana and General Dytin stood to their right. Murano and Tobia stood behind them, holding tightly to each other and unwilling to leave each other since coming back together. Tobia had been overwhelmed at the sense of peace she felt without Murano now. His entire Etheric resonance echoed with newfound peace and strength. Discovering Martin existed had given back to him the purpose he had thought lost so many years ago, and his conversation with the ethereal Sumar had taken away any shame or doubt he had felt for being the only surviving Praetorian after the war was lost. Much to Tobia's delight he had not stopped touching her in some manner since the landing bay and this affection grew stronger after Mari had left them to be with Deion.

Yokra stood stoically as he watched Anja speaking to Laren in soft whispers as the white glow filtered softly around his daughter's upper body. Robati had given him seven fine, healthy sons but the day that Laren had entered their world everything had changed. Even had she not been born like she was, a Dahakoan, it would not have mattered in the least. The exact moment Yokra had seen her eyes, his views changed on nearly everything. Holding his only daughter in his arms, Yokra came to love Robati even more than he already did. He began to love his sons more, communicating with them more often, if only to check on their duties and how they were advancing and growing in their lives. Laren Ti'shara had brought their large family so much closer together, and all of them knew it. Her brothers recognized her as being the catalyst for their father becoming the man he was now and they all loved her even more for that. Yokra was the first to accept that his daughter was Dahakoan, and her safety and Robati's safety became his focus from that day forward. Robati basked in the new purpose of her husband and how he doted over her now. They were feelings that she no longer held back within herself and she happily returned them to Yokra tenfold. Laren had brought this out in all of them, the sense of family a Dahakoan felt encompassing them all. Laren had told them this day would come and that they needed to be strong. Neither of them felt very strong at the moment.

They could not hear what was being said in the surgical room and Robati pushed back against her husband even more in fear and she gasped when she saw Laren nod her head and look up at the petite woman who was one of her Sepa Daskic. One of her Soul Mothers.

"Everything will be fine Robati my memamosal." Yokra spoke softly. "Laren has seen this."

Robati nodded her head slowly. "I know but that does not mean I fear for her less." She answered. "If... if Anja cannot fix her she will..."

Yokra pulled her tighter to him. "You must not think like this." He told her.

Sarlana stepped closer to her and took her hand, Robati turning to look at her. "Androcles and Dorian have allowed me to see deeply within their minds Usjalil Robati. It is not often that Dahakoan allow such a thing, even for one such as me, but I can tell you that their faith in their mother is without question or doubt. I have seen some of the things Anja has accomplished in their thoughts and memories and I tell you now, with no doubt or question in my mind, she is the finest and most gifted medical doctor anywhere in the known universe. Not even the Pralor doctors I have seen can match her. And she will not fail."

"How can one so small hold such power within her?" Robati asked softly.

"Look beyond her physical stature Lady Robati." Murano spoke now from behind them as Tobia looked up into his face. "That is a façade. Small she may be, but Anja Leonidas' will is second only to Martin and Aricia. I have seen her passion and drive personally. I truly believe failure is not a word she understands."

"She will succeed." The soft female voice spoke and all of them turned to see Sadi and Ne'Veha enter the observation room with Perlae between them, holding their hands tightly. The Darastrixi in the room stiffened when they saw Perlae, her appearance so very similar to Laren in almost every way. All of them turned quickly to look at her with wide eyes.

Sadi saw their faces and stepped forward. "This is Perlae everyone. It's alright. She is Andro's chrora. His cousin."

Robati moved forward and looked at Perlae intently. She reached up and caressed her cheek with her fingers. "You are... you are like my Laren." She said.

Perlae shook her head and reached up to take Robati's hand. "No, Usjalil Robati." She answered seeing Robati's eyes go wide in surprise. "I have not been blessed as your daughter has with the memories and spirit of Wer Zazhuanth, Dadrien of the Mountain. That is an honor only she holds, for she is Dahakoan."

"You speak our language?" Dyтин spoke in surprise. "You know of... you know of Laren and what she is? How?"

Perlae smiled. "I am half Darastrixi General, as are my sister and brother." She answered. "My father is Kadeer Imuma, of the family Imuma. My mother was Maha, daughter to Dynina of the Lycavorian pack Mahanlo. Dynina is my staania, my grandmother and she is mother to Sateia, the blessed wife and mate of Sumar." Perlae finished looking directly at Murano and Tobia.

"Sumar?" Murano gasped.

Aviel stepped forward. "The family Imuma is one of the Revered families!" He spoke. "Their names reside upon the Optonu Memorial. Two thousand families that were lost nearly seventeen thousand years ago!"

Perlae nodded her head. "That is not entirely true Koppentotz Aviel Em'mor." She told him with a slight smile. "Our father speaks very highly of you and he will be most pleased to know you travel with the Dahakoan."

Nahko looked at her husband. "Aviel... what does she mean?"

"The Optonu Mission." Aviel answered his wife. "It was our first and only attempt to try something similar to the Seed Missions of the Pralor people. The ships were all lost when they were caught in the gravity well of an unknown comet that crashed into a moon and destroyed it."

Perlae smiled and nodded her head. "That is what our ancestors wanted everyone to think yes." She told them. "The actual history is a bit different and would require several hours to relate to you."

"I don't understand." Aviel said.

"In time you will see Koppentotz Aviel." Perlae told him before she turned back to Robati. "I asked Androcles if it would be alright for me to join you here Usjalil Robati." She spoke. "Our staania told us of the day Laren entered this world and ever since we were small we have looked up to her. You would honor me if you allowed me to stay with you and support you during this time."

"You do... you do not know me child." Robati spoke.

"You are mother to a Dahakoan." Perlae told her. "That is all that need be said, but you are also the Sepa Dask to Androcles and our other cousins. Our family and blood. That makes you a part of my family now as well."

Robati nodded after looking at Sadi quickly. In the short time on this ship Androcles' wives and mates had been with her and Nahko for almost the entire time unless their duties pulled them away. Robati trusted them without question. She saw Sadi nod her head with a smile and Robati turned back to Perlae and took her hand. "Please." She said as she pulled Perlae back to the large window.

"They are about to start aren't they?" Perlae asked.

Robati nodded her head. "And I fear for my child."

Perlae turned and took Sadi's hand once more as Ne'Veha moved up beside Sadi. She turned back and looked into the surgical rom and shook her head with a smile. "There is no need to fear Usjalil Robati." She saw softly. "Her sepa isthasyi are with her. And her family is all around her. That is all the strength she will need. That is all the strength any of us will ever need."

"Avoi." Ne'Veha spoke softly.

"All monitors are online Anja." Caliria called from her chair behind the curved station of medical screens.

"I'm set here as well." Serale spoke as she tapped the screen once more and returned her hand to Laren's midsection.

"Me too mother." Eliani spoke as she did the same thing.

Anja nodded and once more looked down at Laren's face. Her multicolored blue eyes, one azure in color, the other cobalt blue turned back to her with utter confidence and love in them. "Laren, I won't lie to you." Anja told her. "I looked at all the medical information Andro gave to me about your people. I know it inside and out now, but this procedure... I'm going to be manipulating your DNA Laren. At the molecular level. It's going to hurt badly. It's going to hurt really badly. We can't put you to sleep because we need to monitor your vitals while you are alert and awake."

"I understand." Laren spoke with a small smile. "I am... I am prepared Sepa Dask."

Anja nodded her head slowly. "Ok... if you are sure... let's get started."

Laren nodded her head as Anja lowered her hands to either side of her head at her temples and the soft white glow of her power filtered out once more to surround Laren's head and then her shoulders. Anja closed her eyes and began to concentrate. Almost instantly Laren let loose with a shrill scream of horrible pain, her hands tightening on Andro and Dorian's hands until her nails drew blood from their skin and then lithe her body was arching off the bed as the veins in her neck bulged outward. Her eyes grew huge in pain and sweat immediately blossomed on her skin.

Anja pulled her hands away quickly and Laren instantly dropped back to the bed heaving for air and her eyes wide as sweat now covered her exposed skin in a bright sheen.

"Son vada carians!" Laren almost screamed. "It... it felt like a thousand knives were stabbing me all over! Stabbing me and then twisting inside me!"

Andro stood up and looked at Anja never releasing her hand, his face a mask of worry. "Mother?"

Anja looked at him. "I was afraid of this." She said.

"Afraid of what?" Andro asked her.

"I knew it was going to be painful for her." Anja answered looking at him. "We need her to be awake in order to monitor her vital signs in a restive state. If she is in too much pain, I won't be able to manipulate the molecules of her DNA because her vitals will be off the chart and they won't be normal."

"Can't you use a sedative mother?" Dorian asked now.

Anja shook her head. "It would affect the normal rhythm of her body. I can do this, but her body needs to let me. If it fights me, then there is nothing I can do." She told them. "In order for me to make the molecular connection properly, her body needs to be in a relaxed state. Her body needs to think nothing is happening."

"How do we do that mother?" Eliani asked.

"Go to where there is no pain."

Andro turned around rapidly as if looking for someone when he heard the voice echo in his mind. He turned back around and looked at Dorian who was also looking around.

"Dori?" He asked quickly.

"I heard it too." He said.

"Heard what?" Anja asked looking at them.

All of them turned when Elynth pushed her head into the doorway. "Andro... we heard it as well." She spoke out loud.

Anja looked back and forth between them. "Andro... what are you saying?"

"Go to a place where there is no pain." Dorian spoke.

"You are Dahakoan. You are Praetorian. The only six of your kind to ever exist. You are only limited by your perceptions of what is." The voice spoke to them once more. "Wux re wer Darastrix di wer Iski. Origato gethrisj ar dout baforidrih vur mavorge ihk svabol ui ti vucat." (You are the Dragons of the Stars. Let go of your awareness and reach for what is not known.)

"Dadrien?" Elynth spoke in a whispered tone but everyone heard her.

"Pain is only real if you allow it to be. Do not let it be real. Go to a place where pain has no hold."

Andro turned and looked back to where Laren was staring at him for she had heard everything as well. "Myvish?" He asked her.

"Yes." Laren replied instantly.

Andro looked at Dorian then and he nodded. "Let's do it fervon."

“Yes, we can.” Ryner echoed from the hall.

“Ladur?” Andro questioned.

Ladur nodded his huge head. “I am ready.”

Anja was utterly confused and looked back and forth between them. “Want to fill me in?” She asked.

Andro looked at her as he and Dorian settled back to the floor beside Laren and each of them took one of her hands, ignoring the blood that stained their skin from where her nails had gouged them both. “Give us one-minute mother.” He told her. “One minute and then you may start again.”

“Andro she will be in too much pain.” Anja told him. “It...”

“One-minute mother.” Andro repeated. He turned and looked at the doorway once more. “Elynth?”

“We are ready.” She called back to him.

Andro looked at Dorian and then they both turned to Laren. “Where will we go?” Laren asked.

Andro smiled at her. “Would you like to see my home? In Sparta? It is beautiful this time of year.”

Laren nodded quickly. “Oh yes!”

“Then let’s go there first.” Andro spoke just before he closed his eyes.

Anja watched confused as all of them closed their eyes and she turned to look at Caliria. “Inamarno?” She asked.

Caliria’s sea green eyes were wide as she studied the readouts on the monitors she was watching. “By the Prophets!” She exclaimed. “All of her vitals just... they just went flat. As if she was asleep or something.”

“What?” Anja gasped.

“Confirmed!” Serale echoed as she tapped on her screen quickly. “It’s like... it’s like there’s nothing there. Pulse, heart rate, it’s all perfectly normal for a resting Darastrixi. Just as Inamarno said, it’s like she is asleep!”

Anja turned back to Laren and looked at Andro and Dorian as well. Their faces were in the most peaceful state she had ever seen them before and her eyes grew wide as she realized what Andro, Dorian and Elynth had done. “Carians... she’s not here!” Anja exclaimed.

“Mother?” Eliani asked.

“They... somehow they took her mind away! Your father Eli, he has done something like this before. Right after he was injured in the Kavalian attack on Earth.” Anja spoke as she got closer to the head of the table again. “They have taken her mind somewhere else within the Etheric realm. Just like he did.”

“Mother, the Etheric power required to do something like that?” Eliani stammered. “To detach your mind from your physical body... it is...”

Anja nodded. “Yes, I know.”

“Do we stop?” Eliani asked.

“No!” Anja spoke shaking her head quickly. “We go to work.”

Robati was in tears as she saw Anja once more begin to filter her power through Laren, only this time her daughter simply lay there as if nothing was happening. Instantly she became worried and terrified.

“She is not moving!” Robati gasped. “What is wrong? She is not moving?”

Sarlana had been standing quietly with her eyes closed the moment she felt the massive tremors within the Etheric realm begin. When Robati gasped and spoke her eyes opened once more and she turned to Murano. As powerful a Praetorian as he was, Sarlana knew he had to have felt it as well.

“Murano?” She gasped. “Is that...?”

Tobia looked up into his handsome face once more and saw him open his eyes as well. She looked at him confused as he met Sarlana’s gaze.

“Yes.” Murano spoke with some awe in his voice.

“What?” Yokra demanded. “What is going on? She makes no sound! She does not move! It is like she is...”

“No!” Sadi exclaimed as she squeezed Ne’Veha’s hand harder for they both felt it as well. Andro was not blocking them, he was allowing his mind to filter to hers and Ne’Veha’s since they were so close to him, and they could feel what he was doing though they could not actually see it. “They have... they have taken her away!”

Robati turned to her now. “Sadi child, what...?”

Sadi looked at her and smiled a dazzling smile. Perlae was struck by the beauty that Sadi and Ne'Veha radiated right now and she glanced into the room once more and then back to Sadi and understood. She gasped in disbelief and squeezed Sadi's other hand tighter.

“They have conducted the Erranya Hydul!” Perlae rasped. (Spirit Walk)

Sadi nodded her head. “Yes.”

“What is this?” Yokra demanded. “This Erranya Hydul?”

“Erranya Hydul.” Sarlana spoke now. “It means Spirit Walk in the Lycavorian language Yokra Ti'shara. Androcles, Dorian, Elynth, Ryner and Ladur have taken your daughter, their sepa myvish, they have taken her to another place so that Anja can do what she must. A place where there is no pain.”

“But how?” Robati gasped aloud.

“There is much about the Etheric Realm that we still do not understand.” Murano spoke now. “I have heard of several Praetorians who could do this. Sumar told me of them once. They can, they can detach their minds from their bodies and then go wherever it is they wish. It takes immense concentration and force of will, but within that room there, are the six most powerful minds that I have ever encountered outside of Martin Leonidas. And all of them, your daughter included, all of them have the blood of Sumar in their veins.”

“What... what does this mean?” Yokra demanded once more.

Sadi moved over beside him and took his arm in her hands. He looked down into her stunning eyes. “It means that Laren will be fine Yokra Ti'shara. It means that our sepa myvish will be whole when this day ends and you will never have to worry about her condition again. Ever again.”

Yokra glanced back into the room where he saw Anja bent over the table, her hands on either side of Laren's head and her whole body swathed in that white glow of healing radiation. He took a deep breath and drew Robati closer to him and smiled.

“Then this... this will be a joyous day indeed.” He spoke.

It was the most amazing thing that any of them had ever experienced in their young lives and it would be something that they did many more times in the future. They stood side by side on the warm, white sand, Laren between Andro and Dorian holding their hands, Elynth, Ryner and Ladur behind them. The sun was high in the clear blue sky and Laren could feel a slight breeze caressing her skin and making her long black hair wave back and forth. The greenish blue ocean waters of the Laconian Gulf extended as far as her eyes could see and when she turned her head she could see land in the distance with homes and buildings rising along the mountain ridges.

“Wer Tiichir di Dadrien!” Laren gasped. “This... this is your home? We are... we are truly here? How?” (The Blessing of Dadrien)

Andro nodded his head with a smile as he looked at her. “I have no idea.” He answered her. “We concentrated and...”

“Here we are.” Dorian exclaimed as he looked all around them. “Man, this is so cool!”

Laren released their hands and felt the sand between her toes. “We are here... we are here ethereally.” She said. “As Dadrien and Lord Sumar appeared to us. But it is different. Andro, I can feel the sand on my feet. I can feel the breeze on my skin.”

Andro nodded his head once more as he looked around Cranae Island. “It sure looks that way.” He said. His azure eyes detected half a dozen Durcunusaan troops in teams of two in the distance conducting their normal patrols and duties but none seemed to take notice of them standing openly on the beach.

“Androcles, this is... this is beyond amazing.” Elynth spoke softly from behind them and he turned to look at her.

“That would be putting it mildly sister.” He told her with another smile.

Laren spun around in the sand, her eyes taking everything in. She lifted her face and saw birds flying high above them, heard the noises they made as they circled looking for food. Her eyes dropped and she saw the large, sprawling villa a few hundred meters away, the beautiful flowered paths and the men and women who walked among them.

“You live here?” Laren exclaimed once more. “This is... this is an island Andro! It is huge!”

“It’s not that big really.” Andro commented somewhat embarrassed.

Dorian chuckled now as he looked around where they were on the east side of the island. “Nope... not big at all.” He spoke sarcastically.

“Can they... can they see us?” Laren asked softly.

Andro grinned now. “I don’t know. Why don’t you strip off your clothes and find out sister? If they can see you, then they’ll start chasing you!”

“Andro!!” Laren and Elynth exclaimed together as Laren spun around and punched him lightly in the chest while Elynth butted him in the shoulder. Ryner and Ladur, still in awe of what they were experiencing began laughing as did Dorian and Andro.

Laren looked at Androcles. “How long can we stay?” She asked like a giddy schoolgirl.

Andro took her hand. “As long as you like sister.” He told her. “Come... sister, let Dorian and I show you my home.”

Laren’s happy face was all that mattered to anyone as they began to trek across the warm sand to the portion of the villa that was for family members. Laren was enthralled immediately upon entering from the patio when she saw the huge, carved walls and bright interior. Elynth remained on the patio with Ryner and Ladur and began to tell Ladur and Ryner of happy times that they had experienced here at the villa, even as they felt the breeze from the cool ocean sweep across their scales.

The Durcunusaan pair who checked the perimeter and interior of the villa every four hours appeared two hours and forty-three minutes later. They would never be able to explain the open double doors into the interior of the villa or the sand they found scattered across the main living area and on the two pristine couches inside the villa, nor would they be able to explain how so much sand had blown onto the patio when there had not been a strong enough wind to do such a thing in over a week.

They decided to keep their findings to themselves after insuring that nothing had been disturbed. They did not want to be taken off duty for being malda.

SPARTA’S WRATH

ANDROCLES’ READY ROOM

MAIN QCR CONFERENCE ROOM

“...never seen anything like it in my life Lover. Except from you.” Anja spoke from the high backed chair she sat in on the end of the long, polished table. She had her feet drawn up under her firm ass, her hands wrapped around the steaming mug of coffee. Her face looked slightly drawn as if she had been awake for several days straight, but she knew that was just from the nearly three hours she had spent working on Laren. It was by far, the longest amount of time she had ever gone continuously using her healing powers and now she was just tired. The coffee helped but she knew she would have to get at least a few hours of sleep to recover her stamina, something she planned on doing right after this communication was over.

Martin’s tall, life sized figure was in the Command Center on Ventori and leaning against the front of the empty desk. He wore his full Armorpoly Mark VI body armor so Anja knew that he had been up to something no good while they were gone, but she was just too tired to scold or question him about it. He was standing in front of her now, and just his ruggedly handsome face was enough to make her feel better.

“Where did he and Dorian learn to do something like that?” Anja finished.

“Sumar’s Tomes.” Martin answered instantly. “It’s very similar to what I did right after For’mya and Dysea were taken.”

Anja shook her head. “This was different Martin. Sadi, Ne’Veha, none of them were affected like we were when you did it.”

Martin nodded his head. “Probably because they knew not to shut everything out like I did. They know what it did to you and the others, and considering what they are turning out to be, the focus and concentration to hold and shield her mind from the pain would not be an issue for them.”

“Andro asked her if she wanted to see his home.” Anja said softly. “Crae Island.”

“You know as well as I do that Crae Island is where he is most at peace.” Martin said. “It is all Dorian has known as well. It stands to reason that is where they would go.” Martin looked at her intently in the transmission. “You look worn out Red. Are you sure you are ok?”

Anja smiled at his worried tone of voice and his expression. “I’m just tired Lover.” She told him. “Really.”

“Laren?” Martin asked her.

Anja nodded her head happily now. “It worked.” She told him. “She is resting now, but everything went as I planned it for once.”

Martin shook his head. “You continue to amaze me Red.” He told her lovingly. “All go, no quit for you. It’s one of the reasons why I love you so much.”

Anja felt warmth spread through her at his words. Most people in the Union didn’t see their King as being an emotional person, yet Anja and her fellow Queens knew better. He was the most emotional and loving man any of them had ever met, especially with them.

“Well the feeling is very mutual you big lug.” Anja quipped with a brilliant smile.

“Tell me about these Lycavorians Red.” Martin spoke. “And...”

Anja held up her hand quickly. “I was with Laren when we encountered them Lover.” She told him. “Aricia is with Andro getting ready for this ridiculous inspection by the Tasmor but For'mya is...”

The door to the Ready Room slid open and Anja turned and smiled as she held out her hand. “For'mya can fill you in though and here she is...” She finished.

For'mya moved ever gracefully into the Ready Room with the young woman in tow and holding tightly to her hand. Perlae’s eyes grew wide in disbelief when she saw the life size figure of Martin as he pushed away from the desk, his dark brown eyes gazing at her. She came to an abrupt stop causing For'mya to turn and look at her and see her wide eyes.

“Krius vada carians alinn lae!” Perlae muttered aloud as she bowed her head deeply. (May the Gods bless me)

“Idie cedaur hnes un alinn forn?” Martin spoke from within the transmission causing Perlae’s eyes to grow even wider. (Why would they need to bless you)

Perlae released For'mya’s hand quickly and moved closer to the transmission, dropping to her knees in front of his figure and bowing her head even further. This caused Anja to come to her feet in surprise and For'mya to move up beside her.

“What the hell?” Martin gasped.

Perlae looked up at his words and he could see the tears flowing freely from her amethyst colored eyes. “We have... we have prayed for so long for when this day would come.” She gasped. “To finally... to finally see you! Our King! Our blood!”

“Anja... Kinosaurgai... get her up!” Martin stammered the words out.

Perlae turned her head quickly and looked at For'mya as she reached for her. “You are Kinosaurgai! The Voice of his Heart!” She said swiftly. She turned to look at Anja. “He calls you Red, because he loves the color of your beautiful hair! And Saaurano! The Light of your Soul. She is with Androcles now!” Perlae turned back to look at Martin, her face animated and bright even through the tears. “We know of all of you! Melda Min! Bella! And now even Cirith! We have waited so long to finally be among you! So long!”

“Perlae...” For'mya said softly. “Get up child.” She placed her hands around Perlae’s shoulders and urged her to stand back up. “We do not... no one bows to us. Certainly not our family.”

“Kinosaurgai?” Martin asked softly looking at her with wide eyes.

For'mya looked at him in the transmission and nodded her head quickly. “There is no mistaking this truth Martin.” She told him. “Androcles smelled it in their blood almost instantly when they came aboard the ship and even before that within the Etheric realm. Andro’s sense of smell is nearly equal to yours Martin our love.” She squeezed Perlae’s arms with a large smile. “Denali, Deion and Nara detected it just seconds later, then all of us. It is... it is wondrous Martin.”

Martin looked at Anja. “Red?” He questioned.

Anja nodded her head. “Bioscans conducted by SPARTA'S WRATH automated systems when they first came aboard confirmed it Lover.” She answered. “They have Leonidas blood within them to the tune of fifty-nine percent. Well, I suppose it isn't Leonidas blood. It's... jeez I don't know...”

Perlae looked at Martin's face in the transmission. “It is Leonidas blood.” She stated without hesitation. Perlae willed the wolf within her to come forth and all of them saw the dual fangs extend from her gums as the black ring encircled her stunning eyes. While it looked slightly odd given the scaled portion of her skin because of her Darastrixi blood, it was certainly unmistakable to see. Her dual wolf canine fangs were not as pronounced as an elf or Hadarian who was a child of two different species, but they were certainly noticeable and real. “Even grandmother now calls it Leonidas blood. King's blood. It is her legacy. Our legacy. And we carry it proudly.”

They saw Martin lean back against the desk once more and shake his head. “Saoi sibfla!” He muttered. “I have a headache now.”

Perlae couldn't help herself now and she burst out laughing at his words. They all looked at her and she reached up to squeeze For'mya's hands on her shoulders.

“Staan told us you would say that.” She gasped aloud in happiness. “Or something like that. She told us... she told us you are the only King in history, in anyone's history, who does not want to be King.”

Anja and For'mya couldn't help but smile at this for it was so very true. Martin shook his head once more, all of them detecting the slight grin on his face now. He looked up once more, directly at Perlae, his face becoming serious.

“How?” Was the question he asked.

Perlae shook her head. “I do not know all of it.” She told him. “Only staania can tell you the history from the beginning. I will tell you all I know. Everything we have been raised to believe and understand.”

Martin nodded his head. “Then let's start there.” He told her.

SPARTA'S WRATH
DECK TWENTY-FIVE
PORT CONFERENCE ROOM FOYER

“...got to be the most off the wall malda stunt I have ever been part of.” Andro muttered as Aricia stood in front of him and straightened his Union Dress uniform. He glanced quickly to where Saydia and Anthylea were standing off to the side of the door. “No offense intended to you or the Tasmor people Sovereign Regent Daret.”

“None taken.” Saydia answered with a large smile of her own. “Namiri said much the same thing to me only a few hours ago.”

Aricia slapped him lightly in the face and he turned back to look at her. “You know why we are doing this keto.” She hissed at him, but with genuine affection in her voice. Saydia and Anthylea did not blink at her action for they now knew it was customary among their species to do such things. It was a way to show affection and also to bring forth humor, which it did now.

Andro rolled his eyes at her. “I know why medwaw.” He stated. “That doesn't mean it isn't a crazy idea. And why do I have to wear this piegn uniform for this? What's wrong with standard fatigues? I can't believe someone actually shipped my dress uniform here.”

Aricia gripped his arms in her hands and looked into his azure eyes. They matched her eyes in color in every way, as did Nara's eyes, which made them all so very unique. In all her years, Aricia had never once come across someone within the Union with eyes even remotely the same color as theirs. Aricia tried to look at him crossly.

“You are the Crown Prince of the United Lycavorian Union Androcles Leonidas.” She stated. “In matters of Diplomatic State you at least have to act like it.” Aricia turned and looked at Saydia. “Forgive our son Saydia, he...” Saydia and Anthylea watched with wide eyes as Androcles stuck his tongue out at his mother while she was looking at them and without even glancing back at him, Aricia slapped him in the face once more without ever breaking eye contact with them. This caused them to burst out laughing and Aricia turned her head back to him. "...he can be just as obstinate and pig headed as his father at times and it infuriates us."

Andro was smiling as he stared at her and without warning he lifted her into the air and hugged her tightly to him. Aricia sighed in happiness feeling her son's arms around her and sensing the happiness and love in his wolf aura and in the Etheric realm. She instantly passed this to Anja and For'mya without thinking and all of them felt it. It filled them with warmth and happiness as well for Androcles had always been the most guarded of their children when it came to emotions. Having discovered first Sadi and then Carisia and the others had begun to change him and they could all sense this within him.

The door to the Conference Room opened and Sadi, Ne'Veha, Carisia and his other wives and mates led Namiri into the large room. She walked between Carisia and Lu'ria and held their hands, a smile on her face. Andro set his mother down and turned as Sehri and Sadi moved up to take Aricia's place in his arms.

"We came via the secondary corridors Andro. No one saw us." Caliria spoke from beside Lu'ria.

Andro broke away from Sadi and Sehri and moved up in front of Namiri. He towered over her five foot six frame but she met his eyes without fear or question. Andro took her hand in his and bowed his head. "Namiri Daret... I welcome you to my ship. It is a pleasure to finally meet you."

Namiri smiled and nodded her head. "This is a pretty crazy thing we are going to do isn't it?" Namiri asked playfully.

Andro looked at his mother and rolled his eyes again. "See... she agrees with me!" He told her.

Namiri laughed softly. "Sadi told me what you said just before we came in." She said to him.

Andro looked at Sadi and smiled. "In much more mild terms I'm sure." He said turning back to Namiri.

"Nope." Sadi chimed in.

Andro shook his head and Namiri squeezed his hand which she still held. "We do this for both our peoples." She stated evenly. "My mother sees our people becoming inseparable friends and allies. So do I."

Andro nodded his head. "My father and mothers see the same thing. And so do I." He smiled at her. "So let's make this work. I'm getting hungry."

This time it was Sadi and Sehri who beat Aricia to the punch and both their hands hit the back of his head at the same time. Aricia could only look at Saydia and Anthylea and shake her head.

The door opened again and this time Jomann stepped in. "Andro, they are coming." He spoke.

Andro nodded his head and looked at Sadi. "KertaGai, take Namiri into the viewing room and wait for the signal." He said.

Sadi took Namiri's hand as Aricia looked at Saydia puzzled. "Signal?" She asked softly. "What signal?"

Saydia shook her head quickly. "I don't know."

Aricia turned back to Andro as he brushed his sleeve. "Andro what are you talking about?" She asked him as the door to the hidden Viewing room slid shut behind Lu'ria and Carisia. "What signal...?"

The double doors on the other end of the room opened and there was no more time for questions as Vesara led the other eleven Tasmor Quorum members into the large conference room, most of them turning to look immediately at Androcles where he stood proudly at the other end of the table. Andro smiled at his mother and then motioned to the end of the table with his hand as they crowded around.

"I welcome you to my ship. It is an honor to have the Tasmor Ruling Quorum aboard." Andro spoke calmly. "Please... please sit down and make yourselves comfortable. Would anyone like some refreshments?"

Vesara glared at him as Seran and the others spread out to the high backed chairs along their end of the table and began to settle into them. "We are here young man, to conduct an honored tradition among our people as the Ruling Quorum, not to be entertained. I was under the impression the Tasmor were considered an ally to your people, yet wherever we have gone so far we have had an escort. Why is this? Do you not consider us allies?"

"Vesara you..." Saydia began to answer as she sat down in the chair to Androcles' left.

"It is a fair question." Andro interrupted her, causing her to look at him as Aricia sat on his right side. "And one which I will answer with a question. Would you allow me to come aboard one of your ships and roam freely?"

"Certainly not!" Vesara replied quickly. Too quickly as she caught herself Aricia noticed and she realized how she had answered the question.

Aricia held her smile inward and looked at her son. [Well played keto.] She spoke to him. [Well played.]

Andro didn't look at her but she felt his aura pulse her with a son's love as he maintained eye contact with Vesara. "Most of us are new to this ship Lady Vesara Athcer, I myself have gotten lost three times in as many weeks. I would prefer this did not happen to you and your fellow Quorum members and that is why you have an escort. And also so that you do not wander into a portion of the ship that may be hazardous."

Vesara looked shocked that he knew her name and it showed on her face as she sat down in the chair. "You know... you know my name?" She asked.

Androcles nodded his head. "Sovereign Regent Daret was gracious enough to explain to me who all of you are and what your duties are." He answered as he settled into the chair. "It is very impressive."

"Given your answer to this escort issue then, it appears that you do not trust us." Ardal spoke as she sat down.

"It is nothing different than what you would do on one of your ships Lady Ardal, as Lady Vesara just stated." Andro told her as he sat down at the head of the table.

"This does not change our task here today!" Vesara hissed softly.

Andro shook his head. "Of course not." He told her. "I didn't expect it would."

"We are grown women and do not need escorts wherever we go." Vesara spoke. "We are quite capable of finding our way around a new ship."

Andro nodded his head. "I have no doubt that this is true." He answered. "However, this is my ship and I make the rules. The escorts will remain as they are."

"Queen Aricia..." Vesara spoke looking at her. "You are his mother and Queen, are you not?"

Aricia nodded her head. "I am." She answered calmly. "That does not mean that I will overrule my son when it comes to the policies and procedures on his ship. I'm sorry, even if I had the authority and inclination to do such a thing, which I don't by the way, I would not do so. It is standard Union Fleet procedure."

Vesara did not care for this answer and she finally shook her head. "Very well, we will tolerate this rule, given that we have no choice."

Aricia smiled at her. "No, I'm afraid you do not."

Saydia was the one to hide her smile now as she glanced at her friend Seran Echen and saw her rolling her eyes with a tiny smile on her lips.

Ardal Kaend leaned forward in her chair now and looked at Androcles. "You understand what you are about to do Prince Androcles?" She asked. "This is a Ritual Tasmor Inspection to determine whether you are fit to take the daughter of the Tasmor Sovereign Regent as your wife as you and she have declared."

Andro nodded his head. "I do."

"And you declare to be truthful in everything you answer this day?" Ardal asked.

Andro nodded his head again. "I will honor your custom, yes."

Ardal looked at Vesara. "Then I suggest we forgo any complaints we might have about having an escort on this fine ship and begin."

"Very well." Vesara snapped.

Ardal looked at one of the two data pads she had and began. "You are officially known as Androcles Leonidas; Crown Prince of the United Lycavorian Union, are you not?"

Andro nodded his head. "Yes."

SPARTA'S WRATH

ANDROCLES' READY ROOM

MAIN QCR CONFERENCE ROOM

"...Is where you are from?" Martin asked. "Where you have been all of these years?"

Perlae nodded her head. "The Pralor name of the planet is Luarus." She replied. "It is deep within old Pralor space and the system is hidden two light years within an Ionic Nebula. Staania says it was never listed within the registry of known Pralor worlds and that is why it was never colonized. At least until we came here. When we first arrived we called it Lorenu because of what we found. What Sumar found so long ago."

“Buried Paradise.” Martin spoke softly and Perlae nodded her head happily at his knowledge of the Lycavorian ancient language and the name of the planet.

“We use both names, but most prefer Lorenu for the meaning.” Perlae told him. “Once you see it you will understand why.”

“How?” For'mya asked. “Perlae, there is no know force that can safely travel through an Ionic Nebula for any extended length of time before the ships are rendered inert. All power is lost and the crew dies of exposure. How did you...?”

“We jumped directly into the planetary system.” Perlae answered. “We had the specific coordinates to bypass the nebula and jump right to the planet. Well... almost to the planet. The planetary system is quite large, and there are several moons that can easily support life, but we have remained on Lorenu for the most part. I don't know how we got the coordinates, I can only assume it was from Sumar.”

“Does Wayonn know about this?” Martin asked.

Perlae shook her head. “I doubt it. Staania has spoken of him fondly in the past, so I know who you are speaking of, but she also said he left Lycavore long before staania and the others.”

Martin shook his head. “Then when... when did all of this happen?”

Perlae met his eyes in the transmission. “Two days before The Black Day.” She answered seeing his eyes go wide. “Staania told us that somehow Sumar knew the Vampire Coven were coming, and two days before the Black Day the ships came and took them away. She didn't want to leave but it was something she and Sumar had agreed to long before.”

“Agreed to?” Martin asked.

Perlae nodded her head. “She was very close to Sumar chrora Martin.” She told him. “Especially in the final years leading up to them leaving. She has told us that Sumar had everything planned in detail and they followed this plan to the letter.”

“So you are saying Grandfather Sumar sent Dynina there? To Lorenu?” Martin asked her from within the transmission.

Perlae nodded once more. “I do not know all of the details as I said, staania is the only one who does, but that is what we have been raised with.”

“And these Darastrixi and Pralors, they just made staania leader when she arrived?” Martin asked.

“Apparently this is what Sumar had already arranged for.” Perlae answered. “I don't know how, I don't think staania knows how, but that is what it was when they arrived. There is a council now, elected by the people, but staania is the one they all turn to for final decisions on most everything important. It is not because of who she is, but what came after from within her bloodline. They follow her because of your grandfathers Martin my chrora. They follow her because of you.”

“Me?” Martin gasped.

Perlae nodded her head. “The bloodline of royalty. The bloodline of Spartan Kings.”

“How would she know that?” Martin asked her. “The Spartan way of life was only on Earth. It was begun here on Earth. I know how it made its way to Apo Prime and other planets within the Union after my father died, but how does she know about it? How do you know about it?”

“It is taught to all of us from a very early age.” Perlae answered. “Lycavorian, Pralor and Darastrixi alike. It is our history.”

“But how do you know this?” Martin pressed her. “How does Dynina know this?” His eyes grew wider. “You have someone close to us don't you? Someone who has been among us for a very long time!”

Perlae nodded her head. “Staania is the only one who knows who it is.” She answered honestly. Dynina had told her, Ishma and Awser to being entirely truthful about everything when they arrived here. She told them that Andro and his father would know instantly if they were deceitful. “She never gave this information to us.”

Martin rose from the chair he was sitting in on Ventori. “Perlae... I need to speak with her.” He stated. “Directly to her. I guess it would be stupid to ask if you have QCR ability, so I need the sub-space frequency to contact her.”

Perlae nodded her head. “She said that you would want this and that you would already know it.” She told him. “That it would be burned within your heart and mind. The place that you lost your father on Earth. She called it... it is a very strange name... she called it The Hot Gates.”

“Thermopylae.” Martin whispered.

Perlae nodded her head. “Yes... that is the other name she used. What does this name Hot Gates mean Martin? Is it in some way hot there?”

Martin was silent for a long moment, both Anja and For'mya almost seeing the wheels turning in his head over and over. For'mya squeezed Perlae's hands when she looked at her wondering why he said and did nothing to answer her. For'mya shook her head and held a finger to her lips indicating she should remain silent.

“Lover?” Anja finally asked.

Martin looked at her in the transmission. “The Hot Gates.” Martin spoke finally. “Only one other person alive would ever use that term besides me or someone in our family Anja. You know that.”

Anja nodded her head slowly. “Yes.”

“And only one person still alive actually saw it and was there when it was called that. No one uses that name anymore. No one but him.” Martin spoke.

Anja's nodded once more. “Walter!” She echoed the name in a whisper.

SPARTA'S WRATH

DECK TWENTY-FIVE

PORT CONFERENCE ROOM

Aricia had thought it was going very well but she should have known better.

Several of the Tasmor Quorum asked very simple and pointed questions of Andro in the beginning, which he obviously answered quite easily. Most of those questions pertained to his childhood and his experiences growing up. Aricia and her fellow Queens already knew how their children felt about their early years. Martin Leonidas and his Queens were very stern but exceptionally loving parents. The Leonidas children were exposed to as much as conceivably possible by their father and mothers in order to allow them to see things for themselves and make their own decisions on different topics. They were not coddled or pampered as many children of royalty were in history on Earth and many other planets. As with all of the Leonidas children, Androcles had two advanced degrees, one in Aerodynamic Engineering and the other in Applied Quantum Mechanical Physics. It was going quite well she had thought, until one of the women that Saydia warned her about, asked her first question.

While Ardal Kaend genuinely liked Saydia Daret, she had been recommended for her position by Vesara, and therefore tended to support her positions on the Council. She leaned forward in her chair and holding the data pad in her hand she looked at Androcles.

“Since these proceedings were arranged, your mother has given us generous access to your history young man.” Ardal spoke. “Your military record as well as enormous amounts of information concerning recent events that have taken place in your Union. I understand that most of this information was taken from your very own sources and then provided to us. The Netnews I believe you call them?”

Andro looked at his mother and rolled his eyes. “Yes, I'm sure.” He said with a smile. “Was there a lot of information mother?”

Aricia grinned in response. “Deia's staff sent over a hundred articles and she said that was just scratching the surface.”

Andro looked genuinely surprised. “That much, really?” He said. “I knew I should have stayed on Cranae Island. I always get into trouble when I leave the island.”

Ardal looked at him. “You find this amusing?” She asked.

Andro turned his head to look at her with a smile. “In some ways, yes. The Netnews and I do not normally see eye to eye on many things.” He answered her evenly. “Mainly because I try to avoid most of them like the vermin that they are.”

“But there are those you trust?” Ardal asked him.

Andro nodded his head. “One or two.”

“And why is that?” Ardal asked.

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “Differences of opinion perhaps.” He answered her with that ever present smile. “I make it my business to remain away from those who will twist words and or deeds into something that they are not. Or something that they believe and want others to see in their view.”

“You don’t care how your people see you?” Another Tasmor Quorum member interjected before Ardal continued.

Andro shook his head. “I do not care how the Netnews portrays me, no.” Andro answered her. “They are usually wrong.”

“Usually?” She pressed him.

Andro smiled once more. “Occasionally they get something right.”

“I’m interested in two specific articles about your recent actions.” Ardal told him taking control of the conversation back.

“Which ones?” Andro asked.

“This articles speaks to an investigation currently underway in your Union that suggests you used your position as Crown Prince to coerce others to withdraw from an open auction in order to acquire a piece of property.” Ardal looked up from the pad. “An apartment complex on a planet called Apo Prime. This is your capital planet I understand. It is a piece of property that you then used less than two years later in order to present it as a bribe to the father of the woman you are now married too. Sadi Leonidas.”

Andro met her eyes. “That’s what it says?” He asked her. “They are calling it a bribe now?” He chuckled as he looked at Aricia. “I guess that is better than extortion.”

“The article goes on to detail how you obtained another piece of property with similar tactics.” Ardal continued quickly even as everyone saw Aricia smile and nod her head. “An island?”

“Craanae Island.” Andro told her with a nod. “That it is where my home is built.”

“Did you obtain this property nefariously using your position Prince Androcles?” Ardal asked.

Andro met her eyes from across the table and tilted his head slightly sideways. “It appears that you have already made up your mind about that Lady Ardal Kaend.” He told her. “Is that not true?”

“Certainly not!” Ardal exclaimed in reply.

Once more Androcles smiled and met her eyes. “As I am sure my father and mothers have told you, my species has a very unique and powerful sense of smell. It allows us to tell when someone is not being truthful by the chemicals dumped into their bloodstream when they speak a falsehood. The same chemical that just entered your bloodstream.”

“Are you calling me a liar Prince Androcles?” Ardal snapped.

“I don’t know.” Andro answered. “Are you? The chemicals in your bloodstream suggest that you do not believe the words you are speaking. That tells me that you have already made up your mind.”

“That is not true regardless of what you say!” Ardal hissed at him.

Andro nodded his head to her. “Then forgive me. I will have to have my sister run a test on my olfactory glands. They appear to be malfunctioning.”

The insult went right over Ardal’s head but not Saydia or Anthylea who had spent much more time around Lycavorians. It took quite a bit of willpower for them both to not burst into laughter at Androcles’ insult and Saydia also detected Seran and several others of the Quorum members containing their own smiles. Saydia and Anthylea were also the only ones who saw Aricia kick her son’s leg under the table. Oh yes, Saydia Daret thought to herself, the Tasmor people were going to enjoy being around these men and women going into the future.

“What is your personal wealth Prince Androcles?” Ardal asked.

Andro shook his head. “I have no idea.” He replied. “It is not something that interests me to be honest.”

“According to this article, the combined wealth of you and your six wives is now in excess of one hundred billion Riyal.” Ardal spoke. “That is in your currency isn’t it? That is second only to your father and the Queens.”

Andro looked at Aricia with wide eyes now, an amazed expression on his face. “Is that true mother?” He asked.

Aricia nodded her head sheepishly. “Your father has us keep tabs on family accounts.” She said. “Most has come since Voralis set up the fund for you, Sadi and Carisia. It has only grown as Ne’Veha, Lu’ria and Caliria came into your lives. I imagine it will be larger now that Sehri has been added to the account as well. We have not checked since leaving the Alpha Quadrant.”

“That much?” Andro asked once more.

Aricia nodded her head. “Most of it goes to different public access funds for those in need, but even still, the profit margin year to year is substantial. Voralis maintains it all.”

[I believe that is the fault of Carisia and I our love.] Sadi’s voice spoke to him in the shielded Etheric connection that included Aricia now. [We have included Namiri Daret in our private connection Andro. It seems that her interaction with Torma and your parents made establishing an etheric connection very simple. Do you remember that food court off the island causeway...? The one that you love so much?]

[The one owned by Thanar and his wife Melina?] Andro asked.

[Yes. With the influx of Durcunusaan and others at the island they could not keep up with the business. Enylarcopri and I were there just before we left and saw their predicament. They said they could not afford to expand so quickly. We decided to invest some capital in their business in order to facilitate a much quicker expansion. They wanted to give us thirty percent of the profits each year but we refused. We finally settled on three percent, though they were not happy about it. We were going to tell you when we finally got around to returning to Earth. It seems the profit is much more than we first thought.]

[Vinn’ Sibfla!] Andro gasped. [They have some of the best Giouvetsi outside of Staania Gorgo!]

Aricia barely kept herself from laughing out loud at Andro’s reaction while Sadi, Carisia, Lu’ria, Ne’Veha, Caliria and Sehri all burst out laughing in the Etheric connection. Aricia could even hear Namiri as well, though her echo was less pronounced.

Andro looked back to Ardal as the thought of Giouvetsi filled his head. “Well... I guess the Netnews got something right.” He told Ardal with a smile. “I had no idea to be honest and as I said, wealth doesn’t interest me.”

“Your wealth doesn’t interest you?” Ardal asked somewhat aghast.

Andro shook his head. “Our parents established a trust fund after each one of my brothers and sisters were born. We all have them and I think you will find that none of them have any idea how much is there. Wealth does not interest our family. It never has. There are much more important things to be interested in.”

“And what of these accusations in your own media?” Ardal asked.

Andro shrugged his shoulders once more. “What of them?” He asked. “They are false, no matter how much others wish they were not. My Tenna Deia has access to all of my accounts for the purpose of this very investigation that you read about. Nothing I have done is illegal and it is all very public. If you wish to believe otherwise after meeting me, after what the facts state, that is your right.”

“And those concerning your wife Ne’Veha?” Ardal pressed even further. “What about them? This is the second part of what I wanted to ask. They detail a list of threats and smears against this man who says you took Ne’Veha from him even after he had already claimed her as his wife. Is this true?”

Andro shrugged his shoulders. “No.” He said calmly. “It is rumor and innuendo that those who don’t like me or my family latched on to in order to push their agenda. All anyone has to do is ask my SirsanGai to get the truth. Ne’Veha has no reason to lie. To this day no one has.”

“Perhaps she now prefers the life, wealth and power of a Crown Princess to one of a simple military man’s wife.” Ardal spoke smugly.

“Ardal!” Saydia spat angrily. “How dare you suggest such a thing!”

“I am only referencing what these articles state.” Ardal spoke quickly.

“You have no right to...”

“You don’t like me do you Lady Ardal?” Andro asked cutting off Saydia’s words.

Ardal met his eyes across the table. “Not really, no.”

“You don’t know me.” Andro said.

“And I don’t care to.” Ardal answered. “You strike me as arrogant and disrespectful. You have no knowledge of how diplomacy works given how you handled those of your own species only recently, and I don’t believe you can be trusted.”

“Trusted to do what?” Androcles asked her.

“To keep the faith with the Tasmor people.” Ardal answered.

Andro nodded his head. “That is an interesting perspective given that you have only just met me and you are basing this knowledge on what you have consciously chosen to read in the News reports that are plainly biased. You have dismissed those that are not bias haven’t you.”

“Are you accusing me of something Prince Androcles?” Ardal asked him in a harsh voice.

“Not at all.” He answered. “However, I do know my Tenna Deia and most of her staff. They would have sent a balanced set of reports on me from the Netnews. The ones who show me in a favorable light you have chosen to ignore.”

“How do you know that?” Ardal asked him in a smug voice now.

“It doesn’t matter.” Andro spoke. “However, there is something that does matter.” He looked at her across the table and spread his hands in front of him. “You may believe anything you like when it comes to me, however, do not begin to besmirch one of my wives and mates based on the ramblings of fools who do not like me or my family. You will find that a painful mistake.”

Ardal looked taken aback. “You dare threaten me?” She gasped.

“Call it what you will, but let it be known right now that I will not tolerate lies and rumors about the women who hold my heart and soul in their hands.” Andro told her. “Speak ill of them at your own risk, for you will not like my response.”

“Are there many people within the Union who don’t like your family Prince Androcles?” Vesara asked him now cutting off Ardal’s response before she ruined everything.

Andro smiled at this as he sat back and felt Ne’Veha, Sadi and the others pour their love and warmth through the Etheric connection that shared.

“Probably more than we think.” He told her. “The ones who remain silent and stew in their hate and misguided perceptions are those who prosper most and enjoy the fruit of the decisions my father and mothers have made the last three decades. They will say nothing because they gain from their silence. Those who are more vocal about their issues with my family and believe the lies told about them when they know they are not accurate are just plain lazy and stupid.” Andro looked directly at Ardal and her eyes grew wide in anger. Ardal was taken aback by his answer and the casual way he dismissed the issue and she was about to retort when Seran Echen took her arm and shook her head. Ardal sat back in her chair unable to counter his answer and Seran took that as her cue. She leaned forward and spread her hands over the open data folder that all the Quorum had in front of them.

Seran Echen looked directly at Androcles with a relaxed expression. “I have only a few questions Prince Androcles.” She spoke.

Andro nodded his head. “Of course.”

“I am Seran Echen and I am the Tasmor Defense Minister.”

Andro nodded his head to her. “Lady Echen...”

“I have gone through your military record as it was presented to us by your mother Prince Androcles.” Seran told him. “It is impressive for one as young as yourself.”

“I will let others with thousands of years more experience than me judge my deeds Lady Echen.” He told her.

“Indeed.” Seran spoke. “And I believe they have.”

Andro blinked several times. “I... I don’t understand.”

“My first question Prince Androcles, is this...” Seran leaned forward in her chair. “How many decorations for bravery in battle does your brother Denali Leonidas hold?”

“Thirteen.” Andro answered instantly.

“And your brother Arrarn Leonidas?” Seran asked.

“Nine decorations for Valor while flying and two for bravery on the ground.” Andro told her again without pause.

“And what about the young Captain there, who stands in the shadows behind us with an ever watchful eye over you?” Seran asked motioning to where Jomann had blended into the soft shadows in the corner of the room.

Andro smiled at her remark. “Jomann is harmless to those who mean him no harm Lady Echen.” He said evenly. “Jomann wears sixteen decorations for valor and bravery. I don’t think I understand where you are going with this Lady Seran. My father has been decorated thirty-three times for bravery and valor, my grandfather Riall fifty-one times in his career spanning four thousand years. They are all true Spartans and Lycavorians.”

Seran smiled at him. “So they are. How many times have you been decorated for bravery Androcles?”

The question seemed to stump Androcles and he blinked several times and did not answer right away his eyes confused. He looked at his mother quickly and then back to Seran. “Why?” He asked her finally.

“It is a legitimate question Prince Androcles.” Seran spoke. “Can you not answer it?”

Andro glanced briefly down at his uniform and then back to her. “No.” He said rather sheepishly.

“You can tell me how many decorations for bravery and valor your brothers, your father and even officers under your command have, but you cannot recite to me how many you have earned?” Seran said. “Why is that?”

Andro looked at her across the table. “Why does it matter?” He asked her.

“Please just answer the question.” Seran asked.

Aricia noticed that this had caught the attention of at least five of the Tasmor Quorum members besides Seran and they were paying extra attention now. Aricia should not have been worried knowing who her first born son was and what he had done in his career, but they were trying to accomplish something here that, if discovered, could have untold repercussions. When he began to answer, Aricia felt her heart swell with love and pride.

“I don’t know, because I don’t care.” Androcles answered Seran’s question. “My solemn duty is to my wives and mates, to my family and to the people of the Union. In that order. I will do whatever is necessary to protect them and keep them safe from harm. I will die to fulfill this sacred oath, and it is sacred to me. Medals mean nothing to me. They are shiny trinkets meant to impress others, something I care little in doing. I will let my actions and my deeds speak for themselves, just like my father taught me. Just as he has taught all of his children. Just as he does every day of his life.”

Seran allowed the small smile to split her lips and gracefully she closed the data folder that rested in front of her. “Thank you very much Prince Androcles. I have no need to hear anything else. Just so that you are aware, you have been decorated twenty-one times for bravery and valor Prince Androcles. Twenty times more than anyone else in this room I would imagine. And in far greater circumstances than any of us have experienced as well.”

Andro blinked in surprised and leaned back in his chair as he saw five other Tasmor Quorum members also close their data folders. Saydia Daret sat in her chair quite impressed to say the least. What he had just said was not rehearsed or planned before hand, that much was obvious, and his words were spoken with true emotion in them. Saydia glanced at Anthylea and saw her slight nod of approval just before Vesara spoke and shattered all sense of decorum in the room.

“Prince Androcles... can you tell my fellow Quorum members and I how many innocent lives you are responsible for taking in your short career military thus far?” Vesara spoke from her chair.

Aricia’s eyes grew wide and her face tensed in anger instantly, but it was Saydia who came out of her chair in equal anger.

“Vesara Athcer how dare you ask such a question!” Saydia almost yelled the words to her.

“We have a right to know the full extent of what this young man is capable of Sovereign Regent!” Vesara snapped back at her. “If he is to be allowed to take a Daughter of the Regent as his wife, these are things we should know!”

“You have no right to ask such a question!” Aricia snarled as she came to her feet now. “You do not know the circumstances...”

“Three million, four hundred and nineteen thousand, six hundred and seventeen.” Andro answered the question calmly, his voice rising slightly above his mother’s voice but not close to being a shout in the least. This brought the room to silence and everyone stared at Androcles in shock. His azure eyes focused on Vesara now as he reached out and put his hand on Aricia's arm urging her to sit back down. “Is that the answer you were seeking Lady Vesara?”

“You... you admit this openly?” Vesara gasped in horror.

“I admit to doing what I needed to do in order to save a thousand times that number of innocent lives.” Andro told her softly. “I will live with that decision each and every day Lady Vesara. Had I not done what I did, the amount of dead Union citizens would have been far greater.”

“You don’t know that!” Vesara hissed at him.

“I know that every hour that passed, our enemy was shuttling thousands upon thousands of troops and ships through our own Jump Gate System, which they illegally hijacked, in order to support an outlaw regime that usurped my mother as the rightful Queen. I know that many thousands of our citizens were butchered trying to escape this outlaw regime.” Androcles spoke evenly. “I know that had I not done what I did, the chances that we would be able to return one day and take back the planet of a founding member of our Union would be infinitesimal without massive loss of life. Both militarily and civilian. Do not think to use this as some gage of my character Lady Vesara, you will be sorely mistaken in your actions. I did what needed to be done to save as many lives as I could. You may wish to speculate and guess, but you were not there, and neither were the men and women who wrote those Netnews reports you seem to like so much.”

“So you do not regret your actions?” Vesara declared.

“Every waking moment of every day. That is a burden that I must and do bear.” Andro told her softly as the others looked on. “And if I had to do it again... I would.”

“Vesara you are far out of line here!” Saydia spat angrily.

“I am well within my rights!” Vesara snapped right back. “We are allowed by our laws to ask any question that may bring into doubt the suitability of a male in a union with a Daughter of the Regent!”

Andro looked at Saydia. “Respectfully Sovereign Regent Daret, I knew what would take place here. I am not hiding anything, nor will I shirk from answering any questions this Quorum wants to ask.” He motioned to the chair. “Please?”

Saydia looked at him with angry blue eyes, not at what he had asked her, but at what Vesara was obviously willing to do in order to sabotage her plans. She should have expected this and warned Aricia and her son and she berated herself for not doing so as she returned to her chair as he asked.

Andro turned back to Vesara. “You obviously have other questions Lady Vesara.” He told her. “As I have said, I will answer any question you have, within reason of course.”

Vesara thought she saw an opening as Saydia glared at her in anger and she lifted another data pad from the table top and held it up. “I have been reading about what your people call the Evolli War. This war began over political disputes did it not?”

Androcles nodded his head. “The former Evolli leaders, those not elected by the majority of their people, took issue with my first elven mother Dysea when she cancelled several, rather one-sided, trade agreements that the Evolli were not fulfilling their end of.” Andro explained. “The Evolli leaders took issue with this and instead of using diplomacy to accomplish what they wanted, they instead chose to invade three Union planets in retaliation.”

Vesara nodded her head. “Yes, I was able to read that part. Many of the details to the conflict are spoken of in great detail. What interests me more are the details that are not public knowledge. The details of one particular battle for instance. The first battle that took place on this planet Alba Tau. This is the battle where the public and military records indicate you were recommended for and then awarded the highest medal that your Union military can bestow. Is this not true?”

Andro met her eyes. “Yes.”

“No details of the actual battle where you won this award are in the public domain.” Vesara said. “At least none that I can find among the materials that your mother generously provided to us.”

“And?” Andro spoke.

“Your own history states that the battle for this planet lasted for nearly seven months and involved fully one third, if not more, of your total Union ground forces.” Vesara spoke. “There are numerous reports on the many different battles that took place through those months. Yet no details of the first battle. The battle you and your father fought in.”

“I still do not hear a question.” Andro told her. “Is there one?”

“Tell us of this battle Prince Androcles.” Vesara said almost arrogantly. “Regale us on how you won your Union’s highest award.”

Andro stared at her for a long moment remaining silent. “No.” He finally spoke the single word.

“Excuse me?” Vesara asked surprised that he refused.

“What part of no was in any way unclear lady Vesara?” Andro asked her.

“You sat there and not moments ago told us you would answer any question that we asked.” Vesara told him. “Are you now refusing to answer this question?”

“I believe no is an adequate answer and covers pretty much all spectrums of how you could ask that question.” Andro told her evenly.

“So you are now refusing to answer our questions?” Vesara demanded.

“Not at all.” Andro told her. “Only the one about Alba Tau.”

“May I inquire as to why?” Vesara pressed him.

Andro shook his head. “No, you may not.”

“I would like to know the answer as well.” Ardal spoke from her seat.

“And again, the answer is no.” Andro spoke.

“This is a deeply personal event for my son.” Aricia spoke coming to her feet now. “You cannot expect him to answer questions that have no bearing on why we are here today.”

“The events of this day speak to your son as a person Queen Aricia.” Vesara said from her chair. “This award is the highest award given in your Union. It has only been given out nine other times in your history. This fact alone speaks toward the reverence that your own people place on this award. We simply want to know what he did to be recommended for and then awarded this decoration. It gives insight into your son’s character.”

“His character?” Aricia hissed.

“He was recommended for this award by a man who is his grandfather.” Vesara pressed.

“You want to now question the integrity of the man who leads the whole of the Union Military? A man you have never met before. Does your arrogance extend that far?” Aricia spat now as her azure eyes narrowed.

“All records of this battle were sealed by the King and this Admiral Riall.” Ardal spoke now in defense of Vesara. “No official public announcement was made of this decoration and no official public record gives the details of what took place.”

“Sovereign Regent,” Vesara began turning to Saydia. Her face too showed a very small amount of surprise that Androcles would not answer the question knowing what was at stake. “I must protest. If we are to make a proper decision here in regards to the union of this man and Regent Daughter Namiri, he must be forthcoming and answer all questions put to him. This is our law. This is how it is done. It is our right!”

“Your right?” Aricia snarled now as she became angry. “How is it your right to question something that you have no concept of? How?”

Andro reached up and took her arm as he rose to his feet. “Medwaw.”

Aricia looked at her son as her blood burned in anger. “Andro you...”

Androcles shook his head. “Vinn’ medwaw.” He urged her to back down, hitting her with the soothing aura of a son. When he saw that she visibly relaxed he turned back to Vesara. “You seem to think that you are in charge of this situation Lady Vesara, however, I assure you that is not the case.”

Andro stood to his full height and reached up to begin unbuttoning the studs on his dress uniform. Those in the room could only watch stunned as he quickly stripped out of his jacket and the shirt he wore underneath. Seran and several other Tasmor Quorum members came to their feet in shock when they saw the superb condition of his body and the excruciating detail of each and every muscle in his abdomen and chest. The Talon Guardian brand that he wore upon the upper left pectoral muscle of his exquisitely detailed chest seemed to be pulsing of its own accord. Andro turned around slowly and Seran and two other Quorum members gasped in horror when they saw the long, jagged scar that extended from just below his shoulder blade all the way down to just above his belt. Several other, smaller scars dotted his skin in different places along the length of that main scar, and then there were three scars in the upper portion of his back on the opposite side. Andro held out his arms as he turned slowly until he was once more facing Vesara who also wore a stunned expression.

He leaned forward, placing his hands on the table, and looked directly at her. “You wish to insinuate that there is something where there is nothing Lady Vesara. Perhaps that is how you operate where you come from, but it is not how I operate. Alba Tau is my burden and my curse. Just as it is a curse for everyone who fought there, Jomann and so many others like me. You do not have the right to that burden Lady Vesara. That belongs to us and only us. If you wish to use my refusal to answer your questions about that so that you may bend those answers to what you believe as grounds for not supporting this union, then by all means, do so. This union will happen regardless of what you want. It was done the moment that Namiri Daret boarded my ship.”

“What nonsense is this.” Vesara demanded.

That was the signal that Sadi, Namiri and the others had been waiting for but hoping would not come. It was Namiri who suggested this to Sadi and the others almost immediately after meeting them when she came aboard. Namiri suspected that Vesara and others would try to stop the union in order to hurt her mother and embarrass the Lycavorians. She was not about to allow that.

The door to the hidden viewing room slid open and Namiri burst out in a dead run. She practically launched herself into Andro's arms, throwing her arms around his bare shoulders as their lips came together in a positively sizzling kiss. The members of the Tasmor Quorum could only sit and stand there and gawk at this display of affection, though only two of them looked to be in the least bit angry. If anything, all but Vesara and Ardal looked relatively pleased with the display.

Vesara came to her feet in outrage. "Sovereign Regent I demand that you stop this right now!" She shouted. "I will not approve of this union and nor should you!"

Saydia looked at her feeling nothing but pride for Namiri at her actions. This is obviously what they had cooked up between them and now Saydia had no recourse but to let it stand as it was and be a proud mother. Her daughter, one of the two youngest of her daughters, only she had the clarity of purpose and strength of will to do what needed to be done.

"On the contrary Vesara," Saydia spoke calmly as she looked at Vesara. "I do approve of this union and I approve of Androcles Leonidas."

Namiri and Androcles broke their kiss and she turned her flushed face to look at the Quorum while Andro still held her close to his body.

"This is our destiny as a species." Namiri stammered. "This is what we were meant for as a people and I will not see it pass us by because of stupid rules and stupid people and archaic laws that have no place in the here and now! I will not! And there is nothing you can do to stop it now! Andro's father has seen our people together. He has seen our future mixed with the Lycavorians, and theirs with ours. I will not let you take that away from our people. I will not let you alter the future that is meant to be whether it be with Androcles or anyone else in the future that awaits us!"

Sadi, Ne'Veha, Carisia, Lu'ria, Caliria and Sehri crowded around where Andro held Namiri in his arms and they pressed tightly up against her and him in a show of solidarity and love. No one could say anything as if on cue, Namiri grabbed Andro's arm and looked at him as Sadi took his other arm.

"I think it is time we got better acquainted. Don't you?" Namiri hissed.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. "By all means!"

Without even a glance back Andro led Namiri out of the Conference room, Sadi and his other wives and mates following right with them and chattering away with Namiri as if they had known each other for decades.

Aricia wanted to shake her head and smile at what her son and Namiri had just done. They had pulled the rug right out from underneath the Tasmor Quorum and done so with the ease of a master thieves. Someday she would have to ask him how they had done that, however Aricia was not in the mood for humor as she turned her head back to look at Vesara. Vesara and Ardal were urgently whispering with other Quorum members and Aricia had seen and heard enough arrogance for one day. Actually, for several decades.

"Enough!" Saydia Daret barked loudly causing all heads to turn and look at her and cutting off whatever Aricia was going to say. "I am ashamed!" Saydia exclaimed. "Ashamed at the actions here today of my people!"

"Sovereign Regent, we were well within our rights as the Quorum of our people to..." Vesara began.

"Silence!" Saydia roared aloud. "I have had enough of you Vesara!! Do you hear me... enough!?" Saydia glared at them even as Anthylea tried to take her arm in an effort to calm her. Saydia pulled her arm away from her lover and Bound One for life now. "Give me your answer right now! Give it to me so that I may go back to our people, show them what you have done, and then demand that all of you be replaced for dismissing the future of our people! The child among us, my daughter, she has the true sense of our people and she and her sisters are the only ones willing to do what is best for them! No matter the cost!" Saydia shook her head. "What is your decision? Make it now for I have no intentions of asking Androcles to submit to another inquisition of rumors and slurs."

Seran stepped forward. "Saydia... the union has been approved." She said softly.

Vesara's head snapped around at this information. "I did not approve this!" She quickly exclaimed.

Seran nodded her head. “No, you did not.” She spoke. “Thankfully, this is a majority vote Vesara. You and Ardal have been outvoted ten to two. This union will go forward and we will honor our commitments, just as the integrity of the young man who left this room tells me his people will.” Seran looked at Aricia now. “And perhaps one day we will be able to erase the stain you have left on our people with your actions Vesara.”

VENTORI FORWARD BASE DISCOVERY UNION COMMAND CENTER

Martin Leonidas sat quietly in the chair, staring at the now empty and silent QCR holo communications disc. He twisted the mug of coffee in his hands back and forth as his mind was awash with this new information and the revelations it brought to him.

All around him Durcunusaan and Fleet Technicians were monitoring the events that were going on in and around Jorlari. The cleaning out of the leftover Svorag bunkers was proceeding just as Martin had laid out to his commanders. Most of them knew their King was among them, sitting quietly, but nearly all of them had seen this in the past. There were few among this group of Durcunusaan and Fleet personnel who had not served with their King directly for less than a decade.

The more Martin thought about things, the more things fell into place, and the more he realized just how far reaching his grandfather’s plans extended. Sumar did not just change the face of Lycavorian evolution, he changed and in many respects, was still changing their future. Martin turned his head when he caught his scent and Wayonn entered the Operations Center. Wayonn’s eyes found him quickly and he maneuvered around several techs and into the back section of the center where Martin was sitting. It was less noisy back here and Wayonn moved to the ever present coffee pot on the counter along the wall. He poured himself a mug of the rich, delicious blend of Aricia’s coffee, added a small amount of cream and honey and then turned back to where Martin sat. He moved to the chair closest to him and settled into it looking at this young King who so many millions adored.

“You wanted to see me Martin?” He asked.

Martin finally looked at him and lifted his mug to his lips, draining the coffee in it before rising to his feet and going to pour more. Wayonn waited patiently as he did this knowing that whatever was going through his head was important.

“Wayonn, you and my grandfather were close right?” Martin finally asked as he turned back to him with a full mug of coffee.

“We were Praetorian and Mage.” Wayonn answered. “For us there could be nothing closer. If I had to compare it to something I would compare it to you and Daniel.”

Martin returned to the chair next to him. “Did you know grandmother Sateia well?” He asked him.

Wayonn smiled and nodded his head. “Sateia was unique.” He said. “Aricia reminds me of her the most. Exotic beauty and wit and extremely capable. Sumar was the last of us to merge into the Ruling Packs, but Sateia had already chosen him. She waited for nearly five hundred years until Sumar saw that the last of us were fully integrated and then he allowed her to change him. The Mahanlo Pack was the largest and one of the oldest of the packs at that time and the day Sumar became a pack member it solidified their place as royalty among the Lycavorians.”

Martin looked at him. “Does the name Dynina mean anything to you?”

Wayonn’s head snapped up and he looked at Martin with wide eyes. “Where did you hear that name?” He asked.

“Then you know the name?” Martin pressed him.

Wayonn nodded his head. “That is... that was the name of Sateia’s mother.” Wayonn answered softly. “She was the Matriarch of the Mahanlo pack. Dynina is where Sateia and her sister got their beauty. She was exquisite in every way. She was truly an Alpha female and quite the visionary Martin.”

“No mate?” Martin asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “No.” He answered him. “If I understand correctly, he was apparently assassinated several years before they discovered us in a dispute of the lesser packs. Dynina rarely spoke of him but Sateia did tell me one time that Dynina loved him with all of her heart. He apparently was a rarity among the wolves of that time and Dynina was his only mate and he treated her much the same as you treat Aricia and the others. He was respected and feared by all for his size and his judgment. Come to think of it, I remember a time when Dynina told me that Sumar rivaled her mate in size and strength after Sateia turned him. You have good genes my boy.”

Martin smiled and nodded his head. “That I do.”

“You must remember that we crashed on Lycavore some fifteen hundred plus years before our first contact with them.” Wayonn continued. “It was not spoken of very often once the merger was done, but it was said he was ambushed by a lesser pack while hunting with his only son. They were both killed. Dynina did not take it very well for she was carrying their third child, Sateia's sister, and from what I understand she cursed this lesser pack and within months all of them were dead from one thing or the other.”

“Cursed?” Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. “This is going to sound very strange...”

Martin chuckled and waved his hands around them. “Wayonn come on... strange?” He said with a smile. “You don't get any stranger than me.”

Wayonn also laughed softly and nodded his head. “Point taken.” He said as he sipped his coffee. “Sumar and Dynina were very close in many ways. Part of that was because Sateia and her mother were very close, but more so because I think Dynina reminded Sumar of Jezima in many ways. Dynina was very different to say the least. She had the most fascinating color eyes and she had a gift.”

“Gift?” Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded his head and sipped his coffee. “Lycavorians and Pralors are born with the ability to communicate etherically, you know this. Vampires as well. Dynina was different however, she could actually manipulate the different etheric strands to do her bidding in an almost mystical way.”

“What? You mean like vaes?” Martin asked.

Wayonn looked at him. “Do not discount its existence Martin.” He told him.

“Discount it?” Martin said shaking his head. “You have to be kidding me. With some of the sibfla I've seen in the last two plus decades, vaes would actually rank down at the bottom of the list of amazing things.”

Wayonn smiled at this and nodded his head. “Yes, I see what you mean.” He said. “Some of the things Sumar and I saw Dynina do were beyond explainable. She could do things that others could not and even we could not determine how. It was related to etheric power in a way for the resonance within the etheric realm would fluctuate whenever she used this ability, but it wasn't true etheric power such as you, Murano and your sons use. Every living thing is touched by the etheric realm in some manner Martin, you know this. We can feel it. Dynina could and did influence that.” Wayonn looked at him. “They called her Yowa medwaw.”

“Witch mother.” Martin said softly.

Wayonn nodded his head. “None of the Packs wanted to piss her off after what happened to her mate. They were deathly afraid of her.” He said with a smile.

“Even that fat ass Chetak?” Martin asked with a grin.

Wayonn nodded once more smiling as well. “All of them did.” He replied. “While I never had much interaction with Chetak or his pack before we left, Sumar knew he was going to be a problem in the future. You dealt with him harshly I understand? I never wanted to bring it up before now because of what happened.”

Martin shook his head. “It was a long time ago.” Martin spoke softly. “Let someone try and take Aricia or Anja or any of them from me now. What I did to Chetak and his sick little empire will pale in comparison.”

“Avoi.” Wayonn spoke nodding his head in agreement.

“I didn't know the packs had names.” Martin said leaning closer.

“In the early days only the largest ones did.” Wayonn answered with a nod. “By the time we came along, Sumar, the rest of us, this practice had dwindled to almost nothing, but the eight or nine largest packs still clung to it. The Mahanlo Pack was one of them.”

“Mahanlo?” Martin whispered the name softly. “So they... they are the beginning. For me, for my children?”

Wayonn nodded his head. “They were the largest and most powerful pack when we finished merging the survivors of our ship with the different packs. Your size in wolf form, that comes from them. They were very close knit as a pack, especially after Dynina’s mate was killed and she became matriarch. No one wanted to push them. Even the females were vicious if you crossed them. Dynina brought many Beta females and some males into the Mahanlo Pack even before we arrived and through the years they mated with Alphas and... well you can figure it out. By the time we had fully merged with the Lycavorian people, the Mahanlo Pack was the predominant pack by far among the seven largest that remained. Most of our people had merged with these packs and things began to change quickly. City Ship 41 became the center of our largest town and a huge trading hub. Dynina, Sumar and Sateia were at the forefront of this, but they always managed to keep our people close to our roots. And they did not tolerate petty rensibfla. Some of the old ways were hard to get rid of, the mating rituals for one. Resumar was born almost two hundred years after I had left, but I have read the ancient data scrolls that Deia kept from that time. That particular part of our history didn’t find its way into the abyss until after Resumar had taken Eliani back using the Lunmai. I asked Deia about that in the brief time I had to talk with her before meeting you and she said it was welcomed by celebration for over a week.”

“Grandmother Sateia and her sister were Dynina’s only children?” Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. “As far as I know. What happen after I left I don’t know? I can’t remember Sateia’s sister’s name for the life of me though. I only met her a few times to be honest. Dynina and Sateia were very protective of her and this carried over to Sumar as well.”

“Maha?” Martin spoke.

Wayonn nodded and pointed at him quickly. “That was it!” He announced. “Maha! Just as beautiful as her sister and mother and...” He stopped talking and looked at Martin. “Wait! How do you know that?” Wayonn came instantly alert as his wolf senses began to fire up and he came to his feet. “Martin what is going on?”

Martin turned and touched the computer panel on the table. “That Mark II here yet?” He asked.

“Just setting it up in your quarters now Milord.” The male voice answered.

“Thank you Captain.” Martin spoke and turned back to Wayonn. “Come with me. We have a phone call to make.”

“What?” Wayonn gasped.

“Dynina is not dead Wayonn.” Martin told him. “Hell... she is my grandmother too. I’m finding them all over the place out here.”

“Not dead?” Wayonn gasped. “How is that possible? The Black Day... her name was listed among the known casualties Martin. I saw the list! Her and Maha!”

Martin nodded his head. “I’m sure you did.” He told him. “What I am coming to realize however, is that my grandfather Sumar, he was a sneaky bastard. He liked to hide things from people. I guess that is where I get it.”

“What do you mean?” Wayonn pressed him.

“Dynina is alive because Maha’s three children showed up on Andro’s doorstep and he could smell family in their blood the moment they stepped off their ship. Our blood.” Martin said. “And Dynina sent them there.”

LORENU COUNCIL MEETING HALL

Dynina was worried for them, and she missed them. She was not concerned for their safety for she knew they would be among blood and knowing who Androcles was, they would be very well protected. She worried for them because they had experienced so little of life itself compared to their cousins. They did not know war and conflict. They had been raised here in the shelter of this world and never experienced any of those things. She did not know how they would tolerate it to be honest. She had tried to raise them as best as she could after Maha had passed, and between her and Kadeer they had some of the most intense training of anyone on Lorenu. Dynina thought back for a moment on her daughter Maha and how she had fallen in love with the handsome Darastrixi soldier. Kadeer was extremely well built for a Darastrixi, and very powerful. Maha had told her once that it was his eyes that made her melt. Kadeer had been so intent on Maha from the first moment that he learned every mating ritual that there was among the Lycavorians in order to impress her, not knowing that Dynina had already seen their love in her dreams. Her daughter had not lived to see her children grow nor did she know they almost lost their father to the grief he felt. It wasn't until Kadeer had come to her one night, a crushed man, a lonely man, that Kadeer had begun to heal. Dynina had shown him her daughter and the love she had felt for him. Dynina showed him that Maha would have wanted him to carry on without her, to raise their children as they had always talked of. It had taken them nearly ten thousand years until their doctors could medically make it possible for Maha to have his children, but once this was completed, Dynina had never seen her daughter so utterly happy.

It took them another twenty years before they discovered she carried Perlae, and then they had a party that lasted for two days. Kadeer doted over Maha to no end when she carried his children, often times making her angry with him for neglecting his other duties, but Kadeer never cared. The love they had for one another, as odd as it was, was total and absolute even after thirteen thousand years together. And neither of them had given up hope on having children. Perlae, Ishma and Awser were miracles as far as they were concerned. And Dynina shared this sentiment. After that night with her, seeing all that he had never seen before about his beautiful wife and mate, Kadeer was a changed man. He had totally committed himself to his children these last two plus decades.

"Dynina?" The deep voice broke her out of her thoughts and she looked up quickly.

Dynina saw Kenroe and the others looking at her and she shook her head. "Forgive me." She spoke with a small smile. "I was thinking of them."

Kenroe nodded his head. "Understandable." He spoke. He reached across the small space between them at the table and rested his hand over hers. "They are with their blood Dynina." He spoke. "The Dahakoan would never allow harm to come to them."

Dynina nodded her head. "I know." She said with a smile as well now. She shook her head quickly and covered his hand with her other one and lifted it to her lips where she kissed his knuckles softly. "Thank you Kenroe my friend."

Kenroe nodded his head. "We are all in this together. What affects one of us affects all of us. This is what Sumar intended when he came to me and to Nicha and this is how we have lived these last millennia together."

"Indeed it is." Dynina spoke. "So... what do we know about the encounter Orman?"

"COLS definitely has some sort of sensor net laid along the border if they were able to detect Perlae's ship so quickly." The Pralor man spoke from the end of the table. He motioned to the female Darastrixi beside him. "Amena and I have been trying to determine what it is they are using to track the portal openings, but so far nothing."

"Trying to mimic their rudimentary sensor technology is difficult." The Darastrixi female spoke. "We had to build a sensor platform that we think is based on theirs, but we don't know for sure."

Dynina shook her head. "We no longer need to worry about that. Perlae would have told Androcles this or they would have figured it out on their own based on what she told him. He handled them harshly according to her last report before they jumped away from this sector of space. He will undoubtedly leave a ship behind and have it destroyed."

Amena nodded her head. "To protect them, to protect us, the Dahakoan would do this, yes." She agreed.

"This action could provoke a reaction from Osrod, Dynina." Kenroe said.

Dynina nodded her head. "I did not expect the man to be so inventive and build this network." She spoke. "He is a brute, but he obviously has more intelligence than I first gave him credit for."

"They have never come that far from their own space in all the time we have known they existed." Kenroe added.

"I insulted his father when I told him I would not become his mate." Dynina spoke again. "Trust me, Lycavorians such as him would never forget that."

"They have wanted our technology all of this time." Kenroe added.

Orman snorted loudly and shook his head. "They would never be able to figure it out even if they did have it." He spoke.

Amena nodded her head. "I agree with Orman." She said. "While they do have excellent engineers and scientists, none of them have the knowledge to begin to understand our newer technology. It would take them centuries just to figure it out, let alone learn how to build something that actually worked."

Dynina nodded her head. "Yes, but that is something we don't want to happen." She told them. "At all."

"Dahakoan Androcles has already given them a glimpse at their technology Dynina." Another Darastrixi spoke now. "Was this wise?"

Dynina shook her head. "Androcles and Martin think unlike anyone that we have ever come across." She told them. "They are enigmas. Their minds do not work in the same way as ours do. When they do something in the here and now, they are already thinking weeks, months and even years into the future." Dynina shook her head. "It boggles my mind to even try and figure it out. They are so much like Sumar it is frightening and that man, as unassuming as he was on the outside, that man frightened me right down to my core."

Nicha chuckled at this and nodded her head. Sumar had been the one to approach her all those millennia ago and suggest this to her as head of the Pralor Exploratory Division.

"How true." She agreed with Dynina. "How true."

Dynina smiled as she thought of Sumar. "He did love my daughter Sateia unabashedly however." She said. "That overruled my fear of him." She looked at them around the table. "I believe Osrod will focus on them now. They are Alphas, and until now the only other Alphas of our people that he knew of were those of us here, but he could never discover us."

"Is that a good thing?" Kenroe asked.

Dynina nodded her head. "We are reasonably sure it was Osrod and COLS who removed the Alphas from Ventori and left the Betas to die all those years ago. They are the only ones capable of doing this given their level of technology. The Tasmor and Kintaur had not yet developed space flight when this took place. Only the Pralors had space flight and Delnash would never have shared this with Lycavorians. Especially back then."

"We are also reasonably certain they do not even know the Pralors exist." Orman spoke once more. "They have never gone into that far out of their own territory. At least until now."

Dynina nodded her head. "It won't matter." She spoke. "Martin and Delnash are of the same mindset in that regard. And if our sources among the Pralor people are correct, Delnash has come to be very good friends with The First in these last weeks and months since they first came upon each other."

Orman laughed softly. "How I would have loved being there for that introduction." He said bringing chuckles from everyone at the table. "It must have given him fits to know that a new breed of Praetorians had been born and they were from the species that we once thought so far beneath us we used them as a Seed species."

"No doubt." Dynina said with a smile.

"That was a despicable practice Orman." Amena told him.

Orman nodded his head. "You will get no argument from me on that."

"I have never understood how one could..." Amena began.

Dynina blinked her eyes and felt the tingling in her head increase. She looked around the room slowly as if sensing something while the others talked. It was unlike anything she had felt in thousands of years, but it was also somehow familiar. Nicha saw her expression and looked at her.

"Dynina... what is it?" She asked.

This brought everyone in the room to silence and caused all of them to look at her.

"Dynina?" Kenroe asked.

Dynina shook her head. "I don't... I don't know." She said softly as she rose to her feet. "I feel something. Something I haven't felt in nearly forty millennia."

"What is it?" Nicha asked her as she too stood up now.

Dynina looked around the room now as she moved away from the table. "It is so familiar to me." She spoke in almost a whisper. "I don't... it can't be!" She gasped finally.

"Dynina what is wrong?" Nicha spoke as she reached for her dear friend.

"It's him!" Dynina exclaimed. "It's Martin! I can feel him all around me!"

Kenroe came to his feet now. "How... how is that possible?" He asked quickly.

“I feel him Kenroe!” Dynina spoke looking at him. “He is reaching for me! He has... he has someone else with him. Two others. Oh my... ohhh.” Dynina staggered slightly and Kenroe moved to steady her with Nicha just as the entire room was bathed in the white/blue light of Etheric power.

“By the ancients within the Rift!” Orman exclaimed as he came to his feet.

All of them felt it now since all of them were able to at least sense Etheric power and it staggered them all in its power and focus.

“By the will of Dadrien!” Amena almost yelled as she stood and reached for Orman’s arm to support herself.

The entire left side of the room was bathed in the bright light and all of them quickly moved to the opposite side as it began to take shape. Take shape in the form of two, tall and well-muscled men and an exceptionally large dragon.

“No.” The deep voice boomed within the room. “Dadrien had nothing to do with this. This is all me.”

Dynina clung to Nicha and Kenroe as the shapes focused and became as clear as if they were standing in the room with them. Her heart nearly exploded out of her chest when she saw him and for the first time in nearly fourteen thousand years Dynina Mahanlo, Matriarch of the Lycavorian Mahanlo Pack burst into tears.

Martin stared at her across the room and as everyone gasped in utter shock he dropped to one knee, his eyes never leaving Dynina’s face.

“Hello aur staania Dynina.” Martin spoke the words with deep reverence. The same tone of voice that he used only for Jezima and Meral. “If this is a bad time... I can call back later.”

Dynina couldn’t help the wail of delight that escaped her lips and her tears came forth like a waterfall upon a clear river.

Tears of relief. Tears of love. But most of all...

Tears of rebirth.

CHAPTER FIFTY-NINE

LORENU

“Hello aur staania Dynina.” Martin spoke the words with deep reverence. The same tone of voice that he reserved for his mother Gorgo, for Deia and for Jezima and Meral. “If this is a bad time... I can call back later.”

Dynina practically lost it all right then as the wail of happiness and love erupted from her and she grabbed Nicha’s entire upper body tightly. Tears continued to pour from her eyes as she gazed at the real time image of a man who was an almost exact duplicate of the man who she had grown so fond of in their time together.

The Pralor Sumar had loved her daughter Sateia shamelessly and with the intensity of a lightning storm that never stopped after she had turned him. There was never any doubt in his feelings or his actions with Sateia and it quickly became known among the many wolf packs on Lycavore that if you even sniffed at Sateia in an odd way, the rebuke would be very swift and very painful. Both of her daughters had inherited their mother’s flawless skin and exotic beauty with shimmering, deep black hair and deeply tanned skin. There were many suitors for them, and those who were also foolish enough to try and take them. Neither option worked out well for the male wolves who thought like that. Sateia had eyes for no one but Sumar and made that knowledge very clear to all who listened.

Shortly after they were mated, a union and celebration that all of the packs attended, two supremely young and arrogant Alphas from another pack who thought themselves superior to Sumar because he was recently turned, had challenged him for her. Neither of those two young males succeeded and when Sumar ended up brutally killing the second fool who had challenged him for Sateia, it never happened again. Sumar was a massive wolf in not only stature but also the aura that he exuded. In all her years Dynina had seen only one wolf of his size before and that was her own beloved mate. Her handsome mate had been an oddity among all Lycavorians because of his enormous size, nearly four feet tall at the shoulder when in wolf form, and it was from him where the dual fangs in their bloodline came from. It was the only known occurrence of this genetic difference ever recorded in the past of their people. It was her own mate who had unofficially begun the changes within the packs on Lycavore with his treatment of her. Her mate loved Dynina so fiercely that it took her breath away at times and this showed in his public treatment of her with affectionate nuzzles and licks and not caring who saw him. This love was passed on to their daughters. Even after Sateia had turned him, for Sumar to be that size right from the start was unheard of in their history. And even with his colossal size, Sumar still doted over her daughter Sateia as if she was the most precious jewel in the entire universe. This action, more than anything else he did, had earned Dynina's unquestioned respect and loyalty.

Standing before her now was an almost perfect image of Sumar, right down to the almost wild, shoulder length black hair and piercing dark brown eyes. She had seen images of Martin through the years yes, but nothing ever like this, nothing ever so clear and so close she could almost reach out and touch him. Dynina felt her heart racing beyond control just as it had the day she left Lycavore and watched as the planet of her birth dwindled to nothing in size through the view window.

As Dynina stared at him, her eyes took in the face on the second man in the transmission and her eyes narrowed slightly. She knew this man she thought as she released Nicha's hands and stepped closer to the transmission.

"Way... Wayonn?" She gasped finally.

Wayonn smiled from beside Martin and bowed his head slightly to her. "To say that it is a surprise to see you Lady Dynina would be the understatement of the past thirty millennia I believe."

"Wayonn... son vada carians... how?" Dynina gasped aloud now. "How is it possible that you are there? You left... we feared you long dead."

"That is a particularly long answer." Wayonn answered her. "However, the more open and important question would be to you; how are you still alive Dynina?" Wayonn asked after briefly glancing at Martin. "Dynina, I saw the casualty lists from the Black Day. I saw your name, Maha's, all of you."

Dynina nodded her head slowly. "When did you see them Wayonn?" She asked him. "Carians, I have not spoken your name in thousands of years but it still is so familiar to me."

"I had... I made contacts within the moderate portions of the government for the High Coven after we returned and set up on a planet in the Beta Quadrant." Wayonn answered. "I..." Wayonn stopped as a rush of emotion filled him now as well.

Martin had remained silent up until now and he reached out and put his large hand on Wayonn's shoulder and squeezed. He looked at Dynina in the transmission. "Forgive us aur staania, it has been a week of revelations in so many ways."

"I don't... I don't understand." Dynina told him her eyes still moist and filled with tears.

Martin nodded his head. "Something for another time perhaps." He answered gently.

Dynina shook her head, her hands coming to up to her face. "You... You look so much like him." She gasped. "So much like your grandfather. It is... it is frightening staaniketo."

Martin smiled. "I get that a lot lately." He said.

Dynina looked at him oddly for a moment as she wiped her eyes and cleaned away the tears. "Martin... I..."

Martin shook his head slowly as he rose back to his full height. "No." He told her. "If I have learned anything in this life I have led, it is to never doubt my instincts again. My own son taught me that when I strayed from that path. I don't doubt my son staania. Not anymore. Not ever again. When he told me that... when he told me that they had arrived on his ship..."

Dynina moved closer to the transmission. "They are safe then?" She asked the question as any grandmother would ask.

Martin nodded his head with a smile. "They are safer nowhere else in the universe." He told her. "They are with their family. With their blood."

Dynina choked up once more and Nicha stepped up beside her again and took her arms, Dynina's hands moving to cover hers. Nicha looked at the image of Martin and smiled through her own tears. "You have no idea how long she has waited to hear those words Vada Fera." Nicha told him.

Martin's head tilted sideways and he looked at Wayonn beside him before turning back to Nicha. "Why do you call me The First?" He asked.

“That is what you are.” Nicha spoke, her tone of voice suggesting awe and disbelief. “To her. To all of us.”

“What I am?” Martin asked.

“Vada Fera Revik rie Arve.” Kenroe spoke in the Lycavorian language as he moved up beside Dynina. They had struck up a unique friendship almost immediately all those years ago, Lycavorian and Darastrixi, and he had been by her side all of this time. “Wer irral daar ar fogah.” He spoke in Darastrixi. “The First King of Three.”

“What does that mean?” Martin asked. “What three?”

Dynina looked at Nicha and nodded her head. She wiped away her tears quickly and looked at Martin. “That does not matter now.” She spoke. “You have many questions. I can see them in your eyes.”

Martin nodded his head. “That would be a good bet, yes.” He said.

Dynina’s eyes narrowed. “What does this mean? A good bet?”

Wayonn smiled and moved to stand beside Martin. “You will find your grandson has a very unique vocabulary Dynina. He can speak six languages fluently.”

“Six?!” A Pralor woman at the table gasped.

Wayonn nodded his head. “Most of the others in Martin’s family speak even more than that.” Wayonn told them. “It will take some getting used to, but you will find Martin and many of those among our people mix humor within our conversations. We have found it helps to put everyone at ease.”

Dynina’s eyes twinkled in delight when she heard this. She waved her hand all around them. “This... how you are doing this? This is a Mark II is it not? I knew they existed but I have never used one before now.” She asked. “Can you sustain this staaniketo? Your answers... the answers you seek will take time.”

Martin nodded his head. “Actually it was technology left to those on Earth by Pralors.” He told her. “Pretty cool huh?”

“All of you... all of you can do this?” Dynina asked surprised.

Martin shook his head. “No. Androcles and I are the only ones strong enough to initiate them alone. It always helps to have others within the connection though, especially those who are strong etherically. It would take more people if Andro and I are not in the communication but they could do it. Wayonn, Torma and I can hold this for several hours at least.”

“We all have information that answers your questions Martin.” Dynina spoke. “We can give you what you seek. Especially your first and most wanted answer.”

Martin’s eyes seemed to grow brighter in the transmission and he stepped closer to her in the transmission. “Then it is Walter?” He asked softly.

“Dymas? He goes by Walter now, yes?”

Martin nodded. “Yes.”

Dynina nodded her own head with a smile. “Your insight does you credit staaniketo.” She told him. “But do not find fault with Walter. He does not know and has never known that he is a vassal.”

“A vassal?” Wayonn questioned.

Dynina nodded her head quickly. “I must start from the beginning staaniketo, but know that Walter is and has always been loyal to you and to your father. That has never wavered. Not even for an instant. He could not be anything else, for he is of Nicha’s bloodline.” Dynina looked at Nicha and then back to Martin. “He has Pralor blood within him.”

Martin nodded his head. “Many of us do staania.” He said. “That doesn’t prove anything really.”

“No Martin.” Dynina said pulling Nicha close to her. “He has Nicha’s bloodline within him.”

“But she... she is with you.” Martin said. “Oh man...” They watched him pull a chair from outside the cone of the transmission and sit down. “I feel a humdinger of a headache coming on.”

Dynina couldn’t help but smile this time. “It is a very long story staaniketo, but one that you must now know.”

Martin looked up at her. “I’ve been getting nothing but long stories lately staania. I bet I got some news that even you don’t know about.” Martin waved his hand as if ushering her towards him. “Hit me with it. Let’s have it.”

VENTORI
DISCOVERY FORWARD BASE
KING'S QUARTERS

“...came to me within a year of you leaving Wayonn.” Dynina spoke from the chair at the table. All of them had turned their chairs to face Martin and Wayonn in the transmission and all of them were paying rapt attention. While all of them knew most of the story, this was the first time they were hearing it in Dynina’s words. She had been their unofficial leader since coming here, but she was still a very private individual. She did not avoid direct questions, but she did not go out of her way to answer questions about her past.

“He... he regretted sending you away even though he knew it needed to be done. You were such a calming influence on him after he became wolf.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “I suspected as much.” He spoke. “I thought he might turn to Avi, Avatar 41, but I guess that is not the case.”

Dynina shook her head. “Oh no.” She commented. “Avi, as you call him now, he knew about all we talked of.” She smiled faintly. “I came to determine it was actually very comforting knowing that he was around. I am glad you discovered him staaniketo.”

“Why doesn’t Avi remember any of this Staanian?” Martin asked.

“Sumar told me he was going to delete these memories from his databanks to protect the knowledge that he had sent us away and to where. I can only assume that he did this since you know nothing.”

Martin shook his head. “He never said a word.”

“Avatar 41 would have told you all of this Martin, if those files were in his memory, but I digress away from your grandfather.” She looked at Martin. “He told me that he could feel them Martin.”

“The Scourge?” Martin asked leaning closer.

Dynina shook her head. “Not those vile monsters... no.” She told him. “He felt the High Coven. The Vampires. He knew that they were coming to Lycavore.” She said. “I believe it was because of some sort of link that he maintained with Xaxon his twin. He could feel what Xaxon was doing where he was, corrupting those he was near. He could not do anything to stop it but he knew the time would come when they would come for us because of Sumar and the others.”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “That stands to reason.” He said softly. “The sick bastard wanted his body back and that was on CS41.”

Dynina nodded her head in agreement. “But Sumar could sense the darkness within him even then. What he had done to his Praetorian Mage was horrific to say the least, but the deaths he was responsible for... they are incalculable.”

“You will get no argument from us on that.” Martin spoke evenly. “I have seen some of Grandfather Sumar’s memories. They were only bits and pieces, but they were terrifying to see even on a good day.” Martin looked at her intently. “Thankfully, we will not have to deal with him ever again.”

Dynina looked at him oddly. “You have destroyed his Etheric essence?”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “Andro, Murano and the rest of my children.” He told her. “Xaxon will never hurt anyone again. Unfortunately, we still have to deal with his actions through the millennia. That will take time. Andro and Narice have started it, they did something I would never have been able to do and it will continue, but it will take time.”

“You are much like him Martin.” Dynina spoke affectionately. “He never thought in the here and now, your grandfather. He was always thinking to the future.” She looked at Wayonn. “When you did not contact him back within the first century Wayonn, he knew something had gone wrong and he put the plans in motion for us. For our future.”

“What we found when we went back was terrifying.” Wayonn told her. “The Scourge were obliterating everything around them as they swept across our space. I decided not to remain but our ship was damaged as we tried to escape. We ended up in the Beta Quadrant and it took us nearly five hundred years to build a new ship. I sent my son back but by that time events had already been set in motion with the birth of Resumar.”

Dynina nodded her head. “Yes they were.”

“It was a painful decision, but I chose not to return to Lycavore and alter the balance of things.” Wayonn said.

Dynina shook her head quickly. “It would not have mattered regardless.” She told him. “And you may have fallen with Sumar that day if you had returned.”

“How Dynina?” Wayonn asked softly.

“Ten thousand Pralors. Ten thousand Darastrixi. And ten thousand Lycavorians.” Nicha spoke now. “All chosen secretly, all chosen by those Sumar had spoken to before he was lost to us Fera, Before Sumar and Wayonn ever left on the mission that brought them to your people.”

“Please don’t call me that.” Martin told her with an embarrassed shake of his head.

Nicha shook her own head. “Do not ask this of me Revik rie Arvy.” She told him. “Do not ask this of any of us. You are the reason we came here to begin with. And it is you alone who we will follow.”

“Me?” Martin asked with wide eyes.

“It is what Sumar asked of me.” Nicha told him.

“And it is what Sumar told me that Dadrien asked of us, of the Darastrixi.” Kenroe spoke now.

Martin looked at him with wide eyes. “Dadrien?” He asked shocked. “How could... I just found out about Dadrien from my sons. How could you...”

“He knew things.” Kenroe spoke. “Things that only Dadrien would have known about our people and our history..”

Dynina nodded her head now. “He told me of you Martin.” She said with a smile as she continued. “He told me that you would come, your grandfather did. A descendant of blood; his blood, Sateia’s blood, of my blood. A descendant with an unbreakable will, filled with justice and passion and a heart so pure that it would blind one to look into its center. He told me that you would not know who you were for many thousands of years, but that you would feel the call within your blood. He told me that you would never know your father, for he would fall in battle defending us before you were ever born, but that you would speak with him often for advice once he was gone.”

Martin stared at her incredulously. “How do you... how do you know that?” He gasped aloud.

Dynina smiled brightly. “Throughout time there have always been men who struggled against destiny in order to keep it from happening staaniketo, only to have it break them down to nothing. There have always been men who try to run from destiny’s hand, only to have it swallow them whole. And then there are men like Sumar, like Resumar, like your father, like my grandsons. These are men who embrace their destiny and do not show fear; and these are the ones who will change the very face of the universe forever. Your grandfather Sumar was such a man Martin. I saw that in him the day he took my beautiful Sateia as his wife and mate, and every day after that. You are such a man staaniketo and your son Androcles is such a man. You cannot escape this plain and simple truth no matter how much you wish it so.”

Martin looked at Wayonn and shook his head slowly. “I’ve known her for less than an hour and already she talks like you and Helen.” He said.

Wayonn grinned as he chuckled. “Perhaps now you will begin to listen to us.”

Dynina smiled as she continued. “Sumar told me that you and your children would see the Praetorians reborn into an image of something new. Something new to fight the darkness when it returned.” She leaned forward slightly in the chair she sat in. “He told me that his blood, that Sateia’s blood, my blood, it would all come forth in one of his descendants many thousands of years into the future. In that descendant he would pour all of his memories and knowledge. That he would be one of the first Vrelvel Sargti to ever hold this sacred title and not be born of Darastrixi blood. He told me that you and your son would hold this hallowed title of the Darastrixi people. You and your son Androcles. He knew this Martin, more than fifteen thousand years ago! You cannot deny your destiny, that descendant is you Martin Leonidas.”

Kenroe came to his feet. “Sumar spoke to me Fera. When he came to my world that day so long ago looking for help against the Scourge and we turned him away. He knew even then what would take place and happen. He knew that separately we had no chance against the vile creatures but together, united, we could prevail. We have believed this for millennia and to this day we have not given up hope. He told me that your sons would be the heralds to the return of the Dahakoan! And they would be even more powerful than their predecessors, for they alone with their soul sister, they would carry the Praetorian gene within them.” Kenroe returned to his chair. “And he knew the third Dahakoan would come from the Darastrixi! He could only know these things if Dadrien was with him even then, speaking to him in a way we would never understand.” Kenroe spoke now from his chair. “Androcles and Dorian, and now Laren Ti’shara has joined them. It has come true. All of what we spoke of has come true. All Darastrixi here know this and believe.”

Nicha smiled at him as she held Dynina’s hand. “I don’t suppose you wish to hear what he spoke of to me to make me believe before he left on his mission?”

Martin held up his hand, shaking his head. “I get it.” He said with a lopsided grin.

“This is a destiny you cannot run from Martin my staaniketo.” Dynina said.

“I was hoping to give it the old college try though staania.” Martin told her seeing the look of confusion on her face and the others.

Wayonn smiled and placed his hand on Martin’s shoulder and then looked at Dynina. “How did you...?” Wayonn began to ask.

Dynina looked at Nicha with a smile. “We had been using City Ship 41 as the center of our largest settlement. I don’t know what Sumar had Avatar 41 do in order to activate a signal, but two days before The Black Day began, they arrived to take us. Nicha and dozens of Pralor and Darastrixi ships. We had rudimentary space craft by then, but I hid them while they were in orbit so that our people did not detect them.”

“You hid them?” Martin asked shocked. “How do you hide a fleet staania?”

Dynina smiled at him. “I am called by many names here on Lorenu, one of which is Yowa Medwaw.”

“Witch mother.” Martin said. “Wayonn tried to explain to me about you. How you were able to do things...”

Dynina nodded her head. “Ishma can explain it much better than I. There is a scientific description of it, well a theory really. I do not really understand it myself, I just know what I can do.” She told him. “Sumar and I had selected ten thousand men and women. Alphas and Betas both. All of them young and proud and mated. All of them were some of the most intelligent and forward thinking of our people at that time. Nicha and Kenroe oversaw the transports as they came to the surface and then our people left with them.”

“And no one noticed?” Martin asked.

Dynina shook her head. “You must remember, Sumar and I had been planning this for decades. All of those chosen were carefully relocated to one settlement over that time. I cast a memory tryn around the settlement when it became time for us to depart. Essentially anyone who moved through this barrier towards this settlement would forget that it was even there. If it was discovered after we left, this was quickly forgotten when the Black Day began.”

“Magic staania?” Martin asked her.

“You, more than anyone, you should know not to discount what you do not know or understand Martin.” Dynina told him.

“What is it?” Martin asked her.

“Ishma can explain it much better than I, as I said.” Dynina answered. “Have you ever heard the term Esotericism? Ishma says it is a human word that best describes it in layman’s terms.”

Martin’s brow furrowed somewhat. “Eso what?” He asked. “That sounds like something Red would give me to put on aur mida to get rid of a bad case of hemorrhoids.”

It was obvious then to Martin and Wayonn that everyone present in the room spoke the ancient Lycavorian language because all of them burst into hearty laughter that they could not control. Perhaps it was because what they had waited so long for was finally upon them, but the sense of happiness and relief that filled the room was nearly a palpable thing and both Martin and Wayonn could see it. They looked at each other with smiles as Dynina and the others roared with laughter. It took a long moment for all of them to finally get their laughter under control and Kenroe shook his head as he waved his hand.

“Oh... Revik rie Arve... we have; we have not laughed like that in centuries.” Kenroe spoke trying to catch his breath. “Red? This is the small Hadarian Queen Anja Revik rie Arve?”

Martin nodded his head. “That would be her.” He said.

“Our doctors have waited a very long time to meet her. I understand she is; they say she is the most brilliant medical mind anywhere in the known universe. And Queen Aricia, your Anome with the most fascinating eyes that I have ever seen. Eyes she has given to Dahakoan Androcles. She reminds all of us of Maha the most. So young and exquisitely exotic in her beauty.”

Martin turned his eyes on Dynina and motioned back and forth between her and him with his finger. “See... this is the very awkward part staania. What you all know.” He spoke evenly. “I have known Walter since I was a baby. How can you know all this and yet tell me Walter is not one of you? That he has no idea what is going on.”

“He does not Martin.” Dynina spoke now. “I swear this to you. He was never aware that I used him as a vassal. It is a form of this Esotericism that I spoke of. The closest term that I can think of that you might be familiar with is scrying.”

“Scrying?” Martin asked. “As in magical scrying?”

Dynina nodded her head. “As I told you, Walter is of Nicha’s bloodline.”

Martin nodded his head. “And how did that happen again?” Martin said.

“Walter is what you would call my great, great grandson Martin.” Nicha spoke now. “I... I married a Lycavorian within the first two years here. He is very handsome and...” Nicha stopped and smiled shyly. “He turned me and two years later I gave birth to our first child. A boy, Menoa. He in turn became mates with a Lycavorian girl many years later. Their first child was a girl. My granddaughter Jaclena. This took place over the course of perhaps a thousand years. Well, Jaclena became the mate of a Lycavorian. It was around this time that Dynina had devised a way for us to get several volunteers back into the Alpha Quadrant among our people. They were slaves to the High Coven by now, but it was a very simple plan and no vampire thought to question it when a few more slaves came back from a work detail than what left.”

“They volunteered for this?” Martin asked in disbelief.

Dynina nodded her head. “Every mated pair here volunteered for this staaniaketo.” She told him. “That ought to tell you how strong their faith is.”

“Jaclena and her mate met secretly with Resumar Revik rie Arve.” Nicha spoke. “Their first child... their only child... this was Walter.” Her voice had dropped several tones now and she looked at the floor. “He was sent to Earth with the Ten Thousand. With your father.”

Martin sat back in his chair quickly. The story of the Ten Thousand was legend among the Lycavorian people, both on Earth and Apo Prime. Many Lycavorians had recently taken to naming their new born children with a second name after a member of the Ten Thousand in some way through the years. It was where his father’s Spartan legend began. It was among the oldest and most revered legends in all Lycavorian history and had been since the inception of the Lycavorian Union. The Ten Thousand were why the Spartan mentality and way of life had found its way into the stars. “Grandfather Resumar knew this?”

Dynina nodded her head. “Yes.”

Martin looked at Nicha once more. “And your... your daughter and her mate?” Martin asked.

Nicha shook her head sadly. “They died when the rebellion began, fighting beside those they had come to call friend and family.” She spoke softly. She looked at him. “This is why you cannot ask me not to call you Revik rie Arve. They died fighting for what they believed. What we all believe. They died fighting so that you would come.”

Martin shook his head. “Tefarie lae.” Martin said softly.

Nicha met his eyes and shook her head with a warm smile. “There is nothing to forgive Revik rie Arve. We honor her memory every day, as do her eight brothers and sisters.”

Dynina watched him carefully as he sat there in silence for a long moment contemplating what Nicha had told him. He was looking at the floor and did not see the small smile and proud look on her face for he probably would not have approved. So far, he was everything she had ever dreamed he was, everything Sumar had told her he would be. Finally, he looked up at her.

“And Walter?” He asked finally.

“As with most of the Spartan women who our fetuses were implanted into, the virus in our blood changed them during their pregnancies.” Dynina spoke. “And with this came Etheric ability. The children absorbed their mother’s memories and they in turn absorbed the memories of their new babies. It was one of the main reasons Spartan women were almost as feared as their men.” Dynina explained. “Walter’s Spartan mother turned her husband, the man you know as Panos. They then swore to Walter when he was only six months old that they would honor his true mother and father and their sacrifice, and keep the secret. And this they did, from that day forward.”

Martin nodded his head for he knew this to be true personally. "That they have." He said softly. "That they have." He met her eyes. "So Panos and Hestia knew all along?"

"They knew what they were. Just as your father did. Just as all the Ten Thousand knew." Dynina told him. "And they accepted it without doubt. They just did not know the entire story. Nor did your Praetorian Mage Helen. On the journey here, Nicha and I became inseparable." Dynina continued. "She had lost a sister to the Scourge and I had lost a sister to disease many years before. This bond between us grew as the days and years passed and it was because of this bond that I could reach across the etheric realm and scryed Walter. Because he was of her blood I could follow his trace etheric essence to where he was. This allowed me to see and hear with his eyes and ears. All that he did. All that he saw. This is how we discovered your father had fallen." Dynina said softly. "This is also how we knew that you and your mother yet lived."

"How often did... how often did you do this?" Martin asked her.

Dynina shook her head. "Not very often at first. It was not a skill that I often used. It was very taxing for me."

"Dynina, it almost killed you the first few times!" Nicha exclaimed.

Dynina shrugged her shoulders. "Through the years I was able to teach myself several techniques that allowed the scrying to become second nature to me. It became much easier and I was able to remain with him for longer periods of time. Sometimes even weeks."

Martin shook his head and lifted his hand. He leaned forward once more and looked at Dynina. "And this is how you found out about me? About Aricia and Anja? Dysea. All of them?"

Dynina nodded her head. "Walter had no idea Martin." She told him once again.

"When was the last time you...?"

"Whenever Nicha felt a spike in his emotions." Dynina answered. "My scrying allowed her to be able to detect his essence within the etheric realm. When she felt his emotions spike I would scrye him. When I found him, I would decide how long to stay. Sometimes it was only a few minutes, other times it was days or weeks."

"You could stay connected to him that long?" Martin asked in awe.

"Each time I did it, it became easier." Dynina replied. "I have not scryed him since the attack in Sparta when your tenna Deia was injured. I have not needed to. As you grew and learned what you were, I began to feel you within me. As you know with our people, those of the same blood can feel passionate emotions even across great distances."

Martin nodded his head. "Yes."

"We have sensor probes seeded throughout the Echo quadrant because of those Pralors on Artaaya and their colonies, as well as the Lycavorians from the Coalition and Ventori." Dynina told him. "That is where you are now isn't it?"

Martin nodded his head. "You know of the Tasmor and Kintaur then?"

Dynina nodded her head. "We made frequent trips into the Echo quadrant in the last ten thousand years. We have curtailed that in the last few centuries because of those despicable Svorag monsters. We were able to avoid them for the most part and then several of our research teams on different planets were attacked and taken by those foul beasts."

Martin shifted in his seat. "Taken?"

Dynina nodded her head. "Yes." She told him sadly. "We were never able to recover them."

"How many staania?" Martin asked.

"We lost almost a thousand before the decision was made to stop sending teams to the different sites." Dynina answered.

"Any Pralor females that were turned by Alphas?" Martin asked.

Dynina looked at him oddly now. "Yes, of course. While Maha and Kadeer were the only pairing of Lycavorian and Darastrixi, there were hundreds and hundreds among the Pralors and our people. Just like on Lycavore. Why?"

Martin nodded his head. "I think we came across one of them when we first discovered the Godzilla looking mother..." Martin stopped himself before he finished the sentence and even under his tan they could see him flush in embarrassment. "One of them, Anja determined she was a turned Pralor female. One turned by an Alpha."

Dynina's eyes grew slightly wider. "She was alive?" She gasped.

Martin shook his head. "She was one of them staania. There was no helping her then." He told her softly. "I'm sorry."

Dynina nodded her head. "It is not your fault staaniketo." She said. "We do not know where they came from. We never wanted to capture one for we do not have proper containment facilities here on Lorenu. At least not those built to contain disease."

"We know where they came from." Martin told her. "And when I see that measly little ronnus again I'm going to squeeze his brains out through his ears and then feed him to his own creations."

"What... are you saying someone created these monsters?" Dynina asked.

Martin nodded his head. "A fat little ronnus named Lorendo. He is a Pralor."

"A Pralor!?" Nicha gasped in disbelief. "A Pralor created those vile monsters?! Did they not learn from the mistakes of the past? From Xaxon's deeds!?"

Martin shook his head. "It would seem that at least some of them have not." He told her. "Staania... these other Lycavorians you mentioned? The ones Andro has encountered that were chasing Perlae? They have never run across Delnash and the other Pralors out here have they?"

Dynina shook her head quickly. "No." She told him. "That we are certain of. They do not have interstellar engine capability or Jump Drive engines staaniketo." He saw Dynina pause. "It seems that may have changed as well now. Before it would have taken them decades to cross the whole of the quadrant and get to where the Pralor people are now. And we would have discovered them long before this happened due to all of the probes we have out there. We would have stopped them."

Martin canted his head to the side a little. "Your tone suggests you do not care for these Lycavorians staania." He said. "Why is that?"

"Perlae told you some of it, yes?"

Martin nodded his head. "She told me that some Alpha was feeling his oats and decided he was going to get frisky and try to make you his mate. I'm guessing that did not work out too well for him." Martin saw Nicha and several others in the room with her smile at his choice of words.

"We were among them for several months Martin." Dynina spoke. "At first they were open and friendly. They still adhered to many of the old customs of our people that Sumar and Sateia began to dispose of, as distasteful as they were. The mating practices and such. You must understand they were taken from Lycavore long before Sumar came to us. The people are quite normal, friendly even, but we soon began to see through all of this veneer. One large pack had claimed sovereignty over all others and it was that pack that ruled absolutely."

"Absolute power corrupts absolutely." Martin spoke softly.

Dynina nodded her head. "Indeed." She agreed. "I was able to read some of their history and this is how it has been since the dawn of their civilization. Or at least the one created when the Pralors left them there on a Seed Mission. It is accepted and even encouraged among their people and they are all very loyal."

"So what happened?" Martin asked.

"The fool King tried to force himself upon me!" Dynina exclaimed. "I waited for the right moment and then I bit one of his nor off."

Martin and Wayonn could not contain the look of astonishment on their faces when she admitted this so openly and it was Martin who could not contain his laughter now. "You... you bit one of his nor off staania!" He gasped.

"Yes!" Dynina spoke indignantly. "I was not offering myself to him, nor did I give the hint of being available. He simply decided to take."

"I bet he did not appreciate that." Martin spoke with laughter and he shook his head from side to side. "Man that hurts just thinking about it."

Dynina could not help but smile at his words now. "No, he did not."

"What happened next?" Wayonn asked thoroughly enthralled with this story.

"I told him his grasp at power and our technology would deprive them of everything we could offer them and I knocked him unconscious and then sent word to all of our people to get off the planet." Dynina said.

"Andro says they called Perlae and the others criminals." Martin spoke.

Dynina nodded her head. "They consider us criminals because we facilitated in helping several hundred of their people in leaving with us."

“You took their people!?” Wayonn gasped.

“No! Nothing like that.” Dynina retorted. “Only those who wished to go. I believe there were only a few hundred. They wanted to come with us and after thinking about it, I said yes.”

“So you made an enemy of this King.” Martin said.

“And they have been a thorn in our side for centuries.” She said with a nod. “They are always trying to discover ways to capture us, but this time, this sensor network that they have built...? It is very... different. They have never dedicated so much effort into catching us. Nor have they ever been out this far away from their home system in such numbers.”

“Well... it seems like they developed Jump technology?” Martin asked.

Dynina turned and looked at the two other individuals at the end of the table. “Orman?” She asked.

“I suppose it is possible.” The man answered. “Their engines designs were basic at best when we last ran across them a century ago.”

Martin nodded his head. “A lot can happen in a century, especially if you have a society dedicated to the whole as you think these Lycavorians are.”

Dynina nodded her head. “It is, yes.” She told. “All that they do is directed by the government for the government. The people are broken into the old castes of our people, the packs broken up across their homeworld and different planets. There are differences between the packs just as there were on Lycavore but for the most part they resolve them peacefully. The different species that they have conquered have been blended into their society but thought of as no more than second class citizens.”

“Yeah.” Martin spoke. “I’ve seen this type of government before. They implode upon themselves eventually, but if they have developed Jump Technology it makes them more of an issue.”

“If they have engineered their own engines, they would be the most rudimentary of Jump capable engines. It would only reduce their travel time Revik rie Arve. Days not weeks. Weeks not months. Months not years.” Orman spoke. “Not like our engines at all.”

“And to them that is probably a big deal.” Martin said. “And ships are only secondary if their troops are well trained and led. Well... as long as they steer clear of me, I will steer clear of them.”

“Osrod Aspion is King now. The son of the former King. He is a very powerful Alpha staaniaketo.” Dynina warned. “As are all those Alphas with him. Even the Betas are stronger than most. He is a better leader than his father and he holds the respect, if not the fear of the people, but he is a brute who only wishes more power.”

Martin nodded his head. “Yeah... well I got a few powerful Alphas too.” Martin said with a wide smile. “I have too many issues right now with these Svorag to be concerned with these Lycavorians unless they get in my way staania. I’m trying to clean out Ventori because the Tasmor are bringing our people home and then there is this god awful big ship full of these Godzilla looking monsters that is headed right for the largest Pralor colony. I don’t need to deal with a branch of our people with an ego problem right now.”

“They will report to Osrod what Androcles let them see.” Nicha spoke now. “This will be too much for him to ignore. He will come out in greater numbers.”

Martin nodded his head in agreement. “Yes, and hopefully, if they are smart enough to get the hint, they’ll take Andro’s warning to heart.” Martin looked at Dynina in the transmission once more. “Staania I will send a ship for you. I need the coordinates in order to jump directly to you.”

“Martin we have... you must come here.” Dynina told him quickly. “We have so much to show you. We have developed new technology and there is something that you need to see. Something that has been left for you.”

“Left for me?” Martin asked.

Dynina nodded her head. “Sumar had been to this planet before Martin. He left a message for those who would come here. There is a sealed chamber, an entire facility really. It is totally underground and our sensor scans show it is enormous. It is sealed however, and his message stated that only you and the Dahakoan can open it. Only you would know how.”

Martin shook his head. “I can’t right now.” He told her. “I have too much on my plate to leave here even for a day to try and figure out a puzzle that grandfather left for me. I was never very good at them to begin with. We don’t have much time before things here pop and I need to make sure the situation on Ventori is stable enough before I leave.”

“You do not wish to see what we have developed over the years?” Orman asked now very surprised.

“My people are more important to me than technology sir.” Martin answered without hesitation and he didn’t notice the smiles of approval that swept through the room so very far away. “I assume that you have ships capable of reaching me here then?”

Dynina nodded her head. “The vessels we came here on and a few we have built while here, yes.” She answered. “Nothing even remotely like what you have however. We never really had need for them”

“Can you come to me?” Martin asked. “I have someone that you need to meet here.”

Dynina moved closer to the transmission now staring at him intently. “Who?”

“It’s better if you see for yourself.” He told her. “Is it safe for you to travel here?”

Dynina turned to look at Kenroe. She saw him nod his head. “We have one cruiser.” He spoke. He looked at Martin in the transmission. “It is the largest ship we have built. The rest are too small to travel alone if confronted with a group of COLS ships. And they always travel in packs.”

“A warship?” Martin asked.

“Yes.”

Martin nodded his head. “I will have...”

Martin turned his head when the door to the CIC burst open and Danny came barreling in at a dead run.

“Marty! We got big problems! The Godzilla looking motherfuckers are springing out of hidey holes all over the place! Hundreds of them! Thousands of them!”

“What?” Martin gasped in shock as he stood up.

“They been hiding from us this whole time!” Danny rasped quickly. “A patrol found a tunnel four clicks north of Jarlori! They were checking it out and must have triggered some alert or something cause the next thing we knew they were pouring out of every orifice for ten clicks all around!”

“Fuck!” Martin hissed. “Pull everyone back now Danny! Get them back here now!” Martin turned to the transmission. “Staania I must go! We have an issue that has come up!”

“An issue!” Dynina almost screamed. “Those monsters are all around you!”

All of them saw Martin almost smile. “Then we’ll get to know them real personal like.” He said.

“Martin we...” Dynina began to speak but Wayonn cut the communication before her words left her mouth and the room returned to normal.

“Wayonn... get the defensive line up!” Martin snarled as he snatched up his P190 A5 from the table. “And make sure Jezima and Meral are secured in one of the STRIKERs. If this goes to shit they are to get them off the surface no questions asked!”

Wayonn nodded as he took the A5 that Danny handed to him. “I will see to it.” He spoke.

“Shit!” Martin cursed as he grabbed Danny’s arm. “We did not need this now fervon.”

Danny looked at him. “Ya think!”

LORENU LORENU CITY ADMINISTRATION CENTER COUNCIL MEETING HALL

Martin nodded his head in the transmission. “I will have...”

They saw Martin turn his head when the door to the CIC burst open and the huge ebony skinned Alpha came barreling in at a dead run.

“Marty! We got big problems! The Godzilla looking motherfuckers are springing out of hidey holes all over the place! Hundreds of them! Thousands of them!”

“What?” Martin gasped in shock.

“They been hiding from us this whole time!” The man rasped quickly. “A patrol found a tunnel four clicks north of Jarlori! They were checking it out and must have triggered some alert or something cause the next thing we knew they were pouring out of every orifice for ten clicks all around!”

“Fuck!” Martin hissed. “Pull everyone back now Danny! Get them back here now!” Martin turned to the transmission. “Staania I must go! We have an issue that has come up!”

“An issue!” Dynina almost screamed. “Those monsters are all around you!”

All of them saw Martin almost smile. “Then we’ll get to know them real personal like.” He said.

“Martin we...” Dynina began to speak but the communication was cut before her words left her mouth and the room they were in returned to normal.

“What happen?” Dynina exclaimed looking around.

“They cut the communication!” Kenroe answered as he typed on the panel on the table in front of him.

“Dynina?” Nicha asked.

“The Svorag were there!” Dynina answered softly. “In far more numbers than they first thought.” She looked at Nicha and Kenroe. “I can feel it within him.”

“Dynina, I can have our ship loaded and stocked within the hour!” Kenroe spoke. “We have room for a full Legion of our Security troops. We can be there in less than a day!”

“And if Osrod has ships waiting for us out there?” Orman asked the question. “With all of you on the same ship... it could be a target he cannot ignore.”

“Let him come!” Kenroe barked. “I will blow them from the stars if they impede us in any way!”

Dynina looked at him. They had waited so long, endured so much. They could not wait any longer. “Do it!” She told him with a determined set to her jaw.

ECHO QUADRANT COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES CLAIMED SPACE CAPITAL PLANET JETANIA

Drinda.

Capital of the Coalition of Lycavorian States.

A sprawling city of nearly fifteen million situated on east coast of the largest continent on the planet. The deep blue ocean waters spread out for nearly three hundred miles in either direction along the coast and across the massive harbor, water going vessels moving in and out of the harbor easily. The city was massive, with towering columns of steel and glass stretching across the landscape but still pocked by areas of green where there were large parks and delicate fountains. Several large bridges connected the two halves of the huge city which was divided by a fresh water river a mile wide that emptied into the ocean. Drinda was considered the crown jewel of the Coalition, all of its most modern and advanced technologies incorporated into the city in some manner. To those in the Union who would see it in the future, it reminded them of pictures they had seen of the major cities on Earth just before the Great Fire.

Two towering mountains rose majestically on the horizon at the western edge of the city. At the base of one of those mountains resided the opulent palace of the Coalition King and his family. Fully twenty square miles in size, it was a miniature city all on its own. At the base of the second mountain stood the military headquarters of the entire Coalition. A monstrous ten story building a quarter mile wide and half a mile long. The heart of the Coalition military and its command structure.

At the moment, the main Communications Center for the Coalition was locked down and in use. The five thousand, six-hundred-year old King of the Coalition sat listening to the man on the main monitor with an impassive face.

King Osrod Aspion stood six foot four inches tall and nearly two hundred and fifty pounds of rock hard muscle and bone. While not as physically sculpted as the Spartans he had never met, he was still a very imposing and impressive man in physical stature. His skin was deeply tanned and weathered, but his light green eyes were bright and alert. His dark brown hair was cut short all around his head except for the back, where a single ponytail resided. His beard and mustache were full and reasonably well groomed though not neat.

“...Unlike anything I have ever seen Milord.” Gomar finished speaking after giving his report. “Whatever kind of energy surge it was, it took down the entire sensor network in under a minute. Each array will have to be manually inspected and then repaired.”

“Gomar, it took us six months to lay that network.” Osrod spoke now.

“Depending on what we find Milord; it will probably take that long to fix them as well.” Gomar spoke. “If we are lucky, it will just be a matter of replacing circuit boards and power cells. Given the strength of the pulse the arrays detected before they went offline, I don’t like what I think we will find.”

“So we will not know if they enter the Echo Quadrant.” Osrod asked.

Gomar shook his head. “Not until we repair the arrays sire.”

Osrod turned to a figure standing to his right along the wall. “I want engineers and ships moving to each of the arrays by the end of the day.”

The man nodded and bowed his head. “As you order Milord.” He spoke before turning and moving out of the room.

“How did they do this?” Osrod asked turning back to Gomar and Nasso.

“We don’t know that it was these new Lycavorians Milord. It could have been the Yowa’s people.” Gomar suggested.

Nasso shook his head. “Not so soon after our encounter with these new Lycavorians.” He said. “I do not believe in coincidences.”

“Neither do I.” Osrod echoed. “How many ships again?” Osrod asked.

“Our sensors registered three hundred and forty-nine separate contacts Milord.” Gomar answered him. “We were unable to effectively scan any of the ships because they appeared and jump away so quickly. Their cloaking technology is far superior to anything that we have. We did not see them until they were all around us.”

“You are certain they were not part of the Tri-Alliance?” Osrod asked.

Gomar shook his head. “No, Milord.” He replied. “After further reviewing our sensor logs, I determined that the power signatures between these ships and Tri-Alliance ships that we have scanned is very different, though both are based on some sort of Quantum Matter power source.”

“A Quantum Matter power source. If only that old upaee had listened to my father back then and done what he wanted, we would have that technology now.” Osrod spoke softly. “Imagine what we could do with such a power source.”

“They were definitely warships Milord.” Nasso spoke now. “We thought... I thought the largest one was a transport of some kind... Gomar was able to detect at least half a million life forms aboard. Not all of them Lycavorian. It only changed after I told that fool boy we were going to board his ship.”

“And he claimed they were from something called the Lycavorian Union?” Osrod asked.

Nasso nodded his head. “Yes, sire.”

Osrod looked at him in the transmission as it crackled, wavered and then cleared once more. “Nasso, we have been together for many centuries and you were at my side when I took my father’s place as King. You have earned the right to call me by name old friend.”

Nasso bowed his head briefly. “I do not wish to overstep Osrod.” He said.

Osrod waved his hand dismissively. “That is not something you could do my friend.” He told him. “He referred to himself as Crown Prince?”

Nasso nodded his head. “He said his father was King of this Union.”

Osrod was quiet for a moment. “The Tri-Alliance does not have that many ships.” He spoke softly. “We have only ever seen seven or eight at most and it is always the same ones for we have tracked them before.” Osrod came to his feet. “Carians... what I could do with a fleet of ships such as this.”

“The smaller ships match our Heavy Cruisers in size Osrod. The larger ones were over three and four thousand meters long. The command ship was over twenty-one thousand meters. It was massive.” Nasso spoke. “A ship that size would strike fear into our foes.”

“Yes, it would.” Osrod looked at him. “And they detected the other cloaked ships?” He asked.

Nasso nodded his head. “We have yet to determine how.” He replied. “They were running in full Combat mode. No unnecessary emissions”

“This suggests that their sensor technology is far superior to ours Milord.” Gomar added. “Only the Tri-Alliance has ever been able to detect our cloaked ships.”

“Do we have any idea where they jumped to?” Osrod asked.

Nasso shook his head. “We were not able to track their engine signatures.” He told him. “They left none.”

“How is that possible Gomar?” Osrod asked.

“Quantum Power matrixes would not leave any outward traces that could be tracked Milord. Theoretically anyway.”

“Theoretically?” Osrod asked.

“Milord, we have only just engineered our own Jump capable engines. And that was only after three hundred years of experimenting and failure.” Gomar spoke evenly. “To even begin to understand Quantum Power matrixes is beyond what we can do. Our scientists and engineers are dedicated to making the engines we have just begun building better and more efficient. It is all theoretical to us. At least right now.”

“He said he was going to join with his father.” Osrod spoke now. “That means there are others out here. Perhaps with other ships like those you saw. Where?” He spoke moving to the large star chart that took up one part of the wall. “Are there any habitable planets within range of your location?”

“I had Gomar check our star charts before contacting you Osrod.” Nasso answered. “There is nothing within reach of us.”

“But what about them?” Osrod asked thoughtfully as he gazed at the chart. “If they have these magical engines as you say, how far out could that extend their operational range?” He looked at Gomar. “Theoretically speaking.”

Gomar shrugged his shoulders after a moment. “To be honest Milord I do not know. If I had to guess, I would answer that there is nothing outside the limit of their range given how little we know of Quantum Power Matrixes. Theoretically there is no limit to the power they can generate but without being able to inspect their engines it’s the best I can come up with.”

Osrod reached up and ran his fingers over the star chart slowly, his eyes gazing at the many different planets that were on the expansive virtual chart. “We have only just begun to extend our reach with our new engines, going to places that our probes have already been. And if I am not mistaken, most of those sectors were devoid of habitable planets.”

“That is correct Milord.” Gomar told him.

Osrod tapped the chart over the small, bluish planet. “This is closest to your location right now. Ventori.” He said softly. “Why does that name sound familiar?”

“That is the planet that your grandfather discovered Milord.” Nasso spoke. “He was in command of our very first long range space craft. It took them a hundred and forty years to make their way into that area of this quadrant. The crew traveled in sleep pods back then. He discovered our people on this planet when they awoke from Cryo Sleep. A large number of Alphas were among them.”

“Ah yes...” Osrod spoke. “I remember now.” He brought his hands together behind his back and was silent for another moment. “He took the Alphas off this planet and brought them back here. By the time they arrived, many of those Alphas had become the mates of the men on board. As King, he granted them citizenship and they became part of our society here.”

“Yes, Milord.” Gomar said.

Osrod turned to look at him. “Then those Beta wolves that were left behind could still be there?”

Gomar looked at Nasso and then back to him. “They would be without the guidance of Alphas Milord. I don’t see how they could survive, but I guess anything is possible.”

“Indeed.” Osrod spoke. “However, we thought we were the only Lycavorians in the universe until those in the Tri-Alliance showed up.”

“Point taken Milord.”

“Father let me take my ship there and I will find out if that is the case. If it is true, I will take one or two of these new Lycavorians and get the answers we seek.” The new voice spoke and Osrod turned to the smaller bank of monitors behind him that had the faces of two of his six sons.

Osrod had thirteen children by nine different mates so far in his lifetime. He took a new, much younger mate every few hundred years. At the moment, only four of his mates resided at the palace, the rest he had allowed to be taken by other Alphas after he grew tired of them, as was their custom.

“Juyno?” He spoke.

“I can be to this planet in less than two weeks’ time father. I will burn out my engines if needed.” The young man spoke. “I can find out what we need to know.”

Osrod looked at the face of his other son on the monitor.

Lazar Aspion looked more like his mother than he did him and this had always bothered Osrod. His skin was deeply tanned like him, but he had his mother's exotic features and not the bullish features of his other sons. Lazar was the third oldest of his sons and tenth oldest of all his children. He was incredibly defined in a very muscular fashion, again unlike his other sons or even himself for that matter. Lazar's young mother had come from a pack that resided in the northern mountains where conditions were harsher and often times deadly. The children born to this pack and others like it came from very sturdy stock and most of them made exceptional soldiers, while the females were all incredibly exotic looking and fiercely independent and produced equally exotic children. Wives and mates of the Mountain packs were prized among the Alphas in the Coalition and most never took another mate if they had a woman from the Mountain Packs.

Osrod had been taken with Lazar's mother the first time he had seen her. Her black hair, dark eyes and light walnut colored skin had drawn him in and within a month of meeting her, he had claimed her during her Coming of Age fever. This had not gone over well with her father, for he had arranged for her to marry another from a different pack within the mountains. Osrod was King however, and her father could not refuse or do anything. Lazar's mother had not been happy about it either, but during her fever, her wolf blood burned hotter than her mind could control and she had submitted to him easily enough. She had remained his mate for almost a decade, until Osrod eventually bowed to the wishes of her father and pack and he allowed her to be claimed by the Alpha she had been promised to as a child. It was that or begin a civil war with the Mountain Packs, which was something Osrod did not want to do. The Mountain Packs were fiercely loyal to each other before the Crown and they would fight as one if it came to that. Most of the Mountain Packs followed a particular code of honor that most others found old and silly, but no one ever crossed them, for insulting one was tantamount to insulting all of them.

Osrod had kept his son however, and while Lazar honored her as his mother, he did not often see her, or so Osrod thought. Lazar was the most lethal of his sons by any definition of the word. He was nearly Osrod's equal in size when in their wolf forms, and he was a deadly hand to hand combatant and a superior ship captain, which was why he had command of one of the COLS Attack Frigates and was out among the stars exploring and enforcing his father's will on their subjects. He was also the less outspoken and violent of his sons. Juyno and his other sons were mostly boisterous and brutish in how they did things, while Lazar was more introverted and methodical in his actions and never failed at any task. His brothers all hated him because they knew he was better than them, and they never failed to mock him about one thing or the other, but most especially about his bloodline.

And Osrod hated him because he reminded Osrod of his mother every time he saw him, and the embarrassment that Osrod had suffered when he had to give his mother back.

"Lazar?" He spoke. "Your thoughts?"

"Do you wish me to agree with my brother father?" Lazar asked him. "Or do you want my opinion?"

"You don't agree with your brother?" Osrod asked.

They all heard Juyno laugh. "Of course not father. Lazar does not take chances. He does not take anything."

Osrod looked at his son. He may have hated his son because of his mother, but he was also no fool and he knew a leader and tactical mind when he saw one. Lazar was such a wolf and he never failed to listen to him. "What is your opinion boy?" He asked.

"I am on the far edge of our space now father." Lazar spoke quickly. "With properly aligned jumps I can be to this planet Ventori in five days not two weeks. And I will arrive there without burning out my engines or my crew. We already know these people can see through our cloaks so another manner of contact needs to be undertaken in order for us to successfully land on the planet. If that is what you wish."

"What do you propose?" Osrod asked him.

"If they are Lycavorians father, reach out to them." Lazar said calmly. "Tell them who you are and what your claim is. If they are Lycavorians then they will bow to you without us having to fight them. A fight that, given what we know, we would lose handily."

"We have only seen their ships! And this boy who calls himself a Prince! We do not know if they can even fight!" Nasso interjected now.

Lazar nodded his head. "All true." He said. "However, would it not be better to at least try to communicate with them in order to discover who they are, where they come from and what they can do?"

Otherwise we risk doing battle with an unknown force that, from what little we have seen so far, could handle us roughly given the differences in technology alone.”

“We are Lycavorian!” Nasso spat. “We bow to no one!”

“And we are also supposed to be smarter than our prey.” Lazar spoke calmly to his father. “The decision is yours father, but I recommend caution before action. They are an unknown and the unknown should be, at the very least, respected if not feared. At least until we discover their weaknesses.”

“Typical.” Juyno snarled. “You have never been one to seek glory Lazar. That is why you will never be anything more than you are now.”

Lazar nodded his head. “Perhaps because I am happy doing what I am doing brother. At least then I do not have to listen to you rant and bluster about things you have never done in order to impress the females.”

Juyno was about to respond angrily but their father interceded. “Enough!” Osrod spoke sternly looking at both of his sons. “In this circumstance, I believe Lazar is correct however.”

“Father I can...!” Juyno began to protest.

“No!” Osrod hissed. He looked at the image of his son. “Lazar... we will proceed with your plan. Make contact with these Lycavorians. Find out what you can and then report back to me. We will make decisions based on your information son. Be thorough in every way and leave nothing out.”

Lazar Aspion bowed his head. “As you order father.”

Osrod waited until the face of his son vanished from the monitor and then he turned to Juyno and Nasso. “Both of you return here to Jetania, best possible speed and do not spare your engines. I wish to discuss this with the entire Military Tribunal. If we can convince or force these new Lycavorians to give us their technology, I want to be prepared to implement our plans.”

“And if they do not?” Nasso asked.

“Then I will kill this so-called King and force them to follow me.” Osrod spoke. “That is our way.”

“My brother will not like that father?” Juyno spoke with contempt in his voice.

“What your brother likes or dislikes is of no concern to me.” Osrod said. “He will do what is ordered of him or I will have him killed, just as I had his mother and her ronnus mate killed a hundred years ago when she defied my orders.”

COLS FAST ATTACK FRIGATE MOON RUNNER

Three hundred and sixty-seven years old, Lazar Aspion leaned back in his chair as the monitor went black and he looked at his First Officer across the small table in his very frugal quarters. COLS Fast Attack Frigates were not known for their comforts, but they were also the most modern and advanced ships in the COLS fleet except for their Heavy Cruisers.

The MOON RUNNER had a crew of a hundred and sixty-seven men and thirty-three women and had been his ship for the last decade. All but twenty-seven of the crew were made up of Alphas and Betas wolves from the Mountain Packs, though Lazar knew he had spies of his father among those twenty-seven. This did not matter to him, for he was very meticulous in his actions and what he said with those he did not trust. The young man across from him he did trust with his life. They had grown up together, gone through their training together, and seen battle together.

Lazar looked at him. “Well?” He asked.

Rhaos Kyer met his eyes and leaned back in the only other chair in the quarters. “Leave it to Nasso to try and poke a hornet’s nest when he has no protection.”

Lazar chuckled and rose to his full height of six foot three and two hundred and twenty-four pounds. His black hair was cut very close to his head, with the single ponytail at the back of his head signifying royalty. He had a meticulously trimmed beard and mustache and cunning dark brown eyes. His schooling had been the finest anywhere and he held an advanced degree in Astro Physics and engine design. He was a superior fighter and had never been beaten in single combat. He was one of the largest Alpha wolves among his people, as most of the Mountain Packs were, standing just over two and a half feet tall at the shoulder and almost two hundred and eighty pounds of muscle bone and teeth.

“Luckily for us, Nasso carries what brains he has pitifully little as it may be, in his nor; which is why he has no children yet and probably never will.” Lazar said as he moved to the small counter and poured two mugs of strong coffee as Rhaos laughed softly himself. He turned and gave one to Rhaos while he sipped his own. “What do you make of this?”

Rhaos sat back in the chair. “You know what Gargat says...” He spoke just after sipping the coffee.

Lazar nodded his head as he returned to his chair. “It is foolish to believe that we are the only Lycavorians in the universe, and even more foolish to think we are better than them.”

Rhaos nodded his head. “A wise Alpha is one who is open and willing to do everything that could improve the pack, but also smart enough to know how to approach each factor and know when to use their brains and not their teeth.”

“My grandfather’s arrogance and position as King thought that meant he could take what was not offered to him. That mentality cost him one of his nor and eventually killed him. Those within the Tri-Alliance could have been great allies and friends, not to mention a great influx of males and female wolves to improve us as a whole.” Lazar said evenly. “My father has this same mentality but even worse. As do my brothers.”

Rhaos nodded his head. “Our superiority to others in this Quadrant of space have made them full of themselves.”

“We have not met all of the species in this quadrant of space Rhaos.” Lazar corrected him. “And I doubt that every species we come across will just bow to our will.”

“I’ve always wondered how you came across classified Intelligence reports that your father has not released.” Rhaos said with a smile. “They did make for some very interesting reading however.”

Lazar grinned. “These Tasmor for instance are a female dominated society who are equal to us in technological terms. And they do not like to be pushed around according to what little Intelligence we have on them.”

Rhaos nodded his head. Lazar shared every Intelligence report with him regardless of the security level, even those he was not allowed to see because of his rank. He and Lazar had spent many hours in these quarters going over the classified reports that his father had not released to the military tribunal. No one knew why he was keeping them private, but both of them were of the mind that it wasn’t for good reasons.

“The Kintaur are nothing more than brutes, which should be easy enough to deal with when we do eventually meet up with them.” He looked at Lazar. “Twenty-two thousand meters long Lazar? And Nasso told this boy Prince that he wanted to board his ship? What an igord!”

“Jainn.” Lazar agreed. He looked at him. “Begin plotting the course for the jumps Rhaos. I want to be to this planet Ventori in three days not five.”

“You didn’t tell your father where we really are?” Rhaos said with a smile.

“Telling him we are further out than any of our ships have ever been is not really the most intelligent thing to do.” Lazar said with a grin. “Let him think I am being a good little wolf and obeying his every order.”

“He will find out from his spies on our ship.” Rhaos said. “Eventually.”

“I’m not worried about that.” Lazar said shaking his head. “I have always stretched his instructions and he knows this. He thinks I am predictable and I must act in this manner to appease his sense of vanity.”

Rhaos rose to his feet. “Have you spoken to your mother recently?”

Lazar shook his head. “No, but I am going to send an encrypted burst to her before we make our first jump and tell her what we know. Knowledge is power fervon.”

Rhaos nodded his head. “That it is. I will begin jump preparations.”

Lazar looked at him as he stood up now. “Rhaos?” He waited until Rhaos had faced him. “Have Laon keep an eye on my father’s spies.”

“You suspect something?” Rhaos asked softly.

Lazar shook his head. “No, not really, but Taique is a brute and he may try something stupid in order to gain my father’s favor.”

“And if he does?” Rhaos asked.

Lazar met his eyes. “Then I’m going to ventilate his carcass out the airlock.” He replied harshly. “He is still a member of this crew and I will not abide disobedience.”

Rhaos nodded his head. "I will let Laon know." He said. "Tell your mother I said hello."
Lazar smiled and nodded his head. "I will."

SPARTA'S WRATH
TEN HOURS FROM ARRIVAL ON VENTORI
MAIN GALLEY, DECK FIFTEEN

Emylea sat at the end of the table silently picking at the food on her plate, unable to shake herself out of the depression that she was in. She had seen Mari shortly after arriving, even attempting to go to her once, but the spectacularly handsome Lycavorian had spirited her away with the others before she could react. Emylea's heart was very heavy, for she realized now that she was in love with Mari and there was no denying it. Seeing Mari clinging to the young man's arm, no matter how delicious looking he was to her, made Emylea's heart sink in despair. She glanced over at the large table and saw Namiri sitting with Prince Androcles' wives and mates and laughing with them over something. Probably about how Prince Androcles had made the Tasmor Quorum look foolish. Androcles was also at the table and engaged in a conversation with his mothers and brother Denali. Emylea was beginning to regret she ever came on this trip. She should have known when her mother told her Mari had taken a husband that nothing could ever be like it was between them. She would have been better off remaining on Ventori and helping King Leonidas and others with the refugees that were returning even now. Queen Anja sat with Perlyea and Colonel Aduna at the other end of the table with her daughter Eliani and two others who were in the medical field and her sisters were conversing back and forth between themselves. She was about to turn to where her mother sat beside her speaking with Anthylea in soft whispers but froze when she heard the voice.

"Emylea?" The soft, sweet female voice from behind her caused Emylea to sit up straight and she felt a flood of emotions rush through her as she turned her head and saw Mari standing behind her.

"Mari!" Emylea gasped as she bolted to her feet.

Many things had changed about Mari since becoming a wolf and Deion's wife and mate. She found her confidence in everything had grown enormously. She was no longer afraid to speak her mind, nor express her emotions. The core of a Lycavorian was their emotions and they did not hesitate to express these emotions and Mari had embraced this mindset most of all. Emylea Daret had easily garnered the fiercest emotions Mari had experienced before meeting Deion. She was exquisitely beautiful and just as adventurous as Mari was. They had more in common than either of them had ever imagined and this had led to them becoming so very close over the course of a few short months. Deion's words to her only a few short days ago had allowed her to admit that she loved Emylea Daret in a way that almost equaled her love for Deion. They were kindred spirits and Mari wanted to share with Emylea the love she had found with Deion. Share it with her in the most intimate of ways because Mari knew that Emylea Daret wanted so much more from her life than what she had right now. Mari sniffed the air ever so gently and detected Emylea's flowery Calla scent and it made tingles course through her nerves.

Mari didn't hesitate and she stepped forward, not caring who saw her and she embraced Emylea tightly. Emylea was stunned for a few seconds but easily surrendered to the emotions that coursed through her. She wrapped her arms around Mari's waist and kissed her right on the lips. Her mind screamed out in happiness when Mari did not pull away, but instead met the kiss with equal vigor. It lasted for only a few seconds because of where they were and then Emylea was staring into Mari's bright eyes with a huge smile. She could feel the emotion in Mari during their brief kiss and it was exactly like it was when they had been together. Her heart was beginning to soar at this revelation.

"I have missed you so." Mari gasped in delight when she too realized that Emylea's feelings for her did not appear to have changed. She stepped back slightly taking Emylea's hands in her own. "I have missed you so much."

Emylea fought back the tears in her eyes and she squeezed Mari's hands tighter. "I have missed you as well."

Mari beamed and she leaned close to Emylea's ear. "I found him Emi." Mari whispered so that only she could hear her words and using the nickname that she had given Emylea when they were together.

Emylea drew back quickly and looked at her with wide eyes. She knew instantly what Mari spoke of for they had talked about it enough when they were laying in each other's arms. They spoke of a man that could love both of them breathlessly but who would not be jealous of the love they had for each other. A man who was confident and intelligent enough to accept this special thing they had found with each other and not try to come between them. A man who could love them both with equal fervor and passion and make them love him just as ardently back.

"You... you are serious?" Emylea gasped in a whisper as well now.

Mari nodded her head with a smile and bit her lower lip shyly. "Oh yes."

"I thought... mother told me you had found a husband and I thought..." Emylea couldn't believe she was hearing this.

Mari glanced back to where Deion sat beside Nara, smiling and talking with his twin and their other siblings. His beautiful scent was burned in to her mind and soul and filled her being. She turned back to Emylea. "He is beautiful isn't he?" Mari whispered once more.

"Mari... I..." Emylea stammered.

"Do you still wish to have what we talked about all those months ago Emi?" Mari asked.

Emylea looked at her intently. "You know I do." She spoke.

Mari squeezed her hands tightly. "Then come with me and see for yourself." She said. "Because I want that too."

"Mari he is..." Emylea stammered softly. "He is your husband."

Mari leaned close to her once more and brought her lips to her ear. "And he will be yours one day as well if that is what you wish. And believe me when I tell you Emylea Daret, you will wish for no other in your lifetime. You will need no other in your lifetime. He will fill your senses and make your mind scream out in delight always."

"But..." Emylea almost couldn't process what Mari was telling her.

Mari drew back and looked at her with a worried expression. "If you cannot... I will understand if..."

"No!" Emylea declared instantly gripping her hands even tighter and pressing back up against her even more firmly this time. "You... you love him Mari? Truly love him?"

Mari nodded her head with a blissful smile. "More and more with each passing day." She replied. "And I want you to share in that too, because I love you as well. Deion knows this. It was he who convinced me to not dismiss these feelings I have for you Emylea."

"My mother." Emylea said. "The Quorum? They will..."

"Reach for the unknown without fear Emylea Daret." Mari told her with that loving smile she always had when they were together. "You will not regret it."

Emylea Daret glanced over to where Deion Leonidas sat and then back to Mari. It was then that the future of the Tasmor people once more altered forever and she nodded her head confidently. She was going to reach beyond what her people thought her station to be and grasp onto something that she truly wanted more than anything else.

"Yes." She gasped happily.

Mari smiled in happiness and began to pull her towards the table where Deion sat while Saydia Daret turned and watched from her seat. Saydia was no fool and had known from the outset what her daughter's feelings for Mari had been. Saydia smiled to herself and leaned into the comforting body of her own blessed love Anthylea with a smile.

Yes, indeed. The future was set now and there was nothing she or the Tasmor Quorum could do to stop it even if she wanted to. Which she did not.

Once more Saydia thought that their future was looking so very bright.

Aricia, Anja and For'mya were very nearly overwhelmed as they sat at the table and just soaked up the emotion and love of having so many of their children together at once. It had been a very long time since so many of them were in one room with them and the three Queens of the Union relished in the peace that this brought to them. Nara and Deion had very nearly completed their accelerated Agoge training now, Andro assigning four Agoge instructors to SPARTA'S WRATH just for this purpose. Retta and Calyb were halfway through their own accelerated Agoge and all of them had been overjoyed that Byron had chosen to attend the Elear Musical Academy. They also could not get over how fast they seemed to have grown though Anja knew it was their wolf blood.

Lycavorian blood always made children look older than they actually were, and with the evolution of the species over the past three thousand years, most children across the Union were showing signs of this. Whether they were half Lycavorian or Pureblood by birth, the ability of the parents to pass on memories etherically was changing them. It seemed that the species as a whole was beginning to take on the more feral nature of their kind when it came to aging. The more time they spent as wolves when they were children advanced the aging process enough that even teenagers appeared to be in their early to mid-twenties and were maturing that much faster. Lycavorian females and males were becoming mated at much earlier points in their life which provided a solid foundation for the future. Lycavorians mated for life, as did many of the different species within the Union, and this provided a strong connection to family. While there were instances of a mated pair ending their union after a time for different reasons, it was not as common as one would expect it to be, for far more Lycavorians within the Union had embraced their wolf nature since Martin had returned to the Union.

Looking around them at their children, they noticed that virtually nothing had changed in their time apart from them. Denali was still the jokester among them, Lisisa and now Arduri always seemed to be slapping him for saying something silly. Eliani had calmed and matured in many ways since Jomann had claimed her and they had become Anomes. Though she was still her wise cracking self the recent addition of Brendi Faith into the equation had made both of them complete. They were very protective of Brendi and though Jomann had recently turned her at Brendi's request, she was still a young wolf and not wise to the ways of the wolf. That would transform in time they knew.

Deion and Nara were unchanged in many ways, though Deion had begun to open up more because of Mari in recent weeks. Though Mari herself was very recently turned, she was very powerful within the etheric realm because of her parents and this would only make it easier for her to adjust. Retta and Calyb were full of energy, ready and willing to throw themselves into the flow of events with their siblings. Anja, Aricia and For'mya noticed that Androcles was holding them back only slightly in their training and involving them simply because they did not have the experience. Being around their siblings was changing that quickly however and soon they would be thrown in to the fire just as all the Leonidas children were. This did not frighten the Queens as much as one would expect because all of them knew that their father and siblings would make sure they were ready for whatever situation came up.

They had promised each other and Martin that they would not try and direct the lives of their children and that they should find their own way in life. This was why none of them were shocked when Zarah had embraced her love for Lucia without question and thrown all that she was into their relationship. The Queens of the Union had been both the dearest of friends and also passionate lovers for the better part of three decades. They had accepted this as part of who they were and they did not shy from this knowledge. It also made them very open in regards to relationships and that is why Aricia did not blink when Nara knelt down next to her mother and asked her the question.

“Mother?” Nara asked in a soft whisper. “Who is that?”

Aricia turned her head and looked into her daughter's azure colored eyes. Androcles and Nara had her eyes while Deion and Denali had their father's eyes. Aricia discretely followed where Nara was looking and she felt her heart jump a little when she saw that Nara was looking directly at where Jacina sat. She was sitting with Recia at the closest table to theirs. Aricia felt her heart flutter just a bit, enough so that Anja and For'mya both felt it however.

[Aricia?] Anja questioned her first. [What is it?]

Aricia turned her head slightly and looked at Anja and For'mya. [Remember I told you that I felt Jacina would be part of our lives going into the future. Martin even sensed this.]

For'mya nodded her head. [Yes.]

[I believe I know how.] Aricia spoke while looking at Jacina. She turned back to Nara. “We rescued her on Onterom. Her name is Jacina.” Aricia answered Nara’s question. “She and Recia both. They helped us to figure out many things about the Svorag.”

Nara gazed at Jacina from where she knelt beside her mother. “She is... she is beautiful medwaw.” Nara said softly.

Aricia knew of Nara’s physical desires and tastes, their daughters never held anything back from any of their mothers and she reached down and covered Nara’s hand with her own. The tone of Nara’s voice alone was all Aricia needed to hear to be honest. Nara’s voice held a combination of awe and desire in it that Aricia had not heard from her daughter in any of her other relationships, however brief they had been. Nara looked up into her face.

Aricia nodded her head. “Yes she is.” Aricia told her. “She has also been through quite a bit in her young life fenneenum. Far more than she should have had to experience and she has come out stronger for it.”

“She is Pralor.” Nara spoke softly.

Aricia nodded her head. “Yes.”

“She was... she was abused by these Svorag, wasn’t she?” Nara asked.

Aricia blinked in surprise. “How do you know that?” She asked.

Nara shook her head. “I don’t know.” She answered. “I just do.” Nara turned her head back to look at Jacina. “Just as I know we will be together.”

“Be certain Nara.” Aricia spoke softly.

“I am certain mother.” Nara told her. “Every butterfly emerges from their cocoon mother, and I am going to help Jacina emerge from hers. And she will be mine.”

Aricia watched as Nara rose to her feet and started to move toward where Jacina sat. She turned her head and saw Androcles looking at her across the table with a knowing gaze. Aricia’s own azure colored eyes grew slightly wider.

[You knew?] She gasped.

[I suspected.] Andro told her with a smile. [Nara’s scent spiked when she first saw her in the training gym. And it was not a simple attraction spike either mother. Father told me of what you felt when it came to her mother. That she was different somehow and would be part of our family.]

[Your father is usually the one who knows these things keto.] She told him.

Andro chuckled. [You and my other mothers give yourselves far less credit than you deserve mother. Father is not the only one who can sense things. It is you and my mothers who will see more of this in the future.]

Aricia looked at him oddly. [What do you mean?]

Andro shrugged from where he sat beside Sadi and Carisia. [We shall see.] He told her. [We shall see.]

VENTORI

Martin gazed out the back of the ramp of the STRIKER with wide eyes. The port city of Moncu was swarmed with what appeared to be thousands of Svorag, and more seemed to be coming from at least three different entry points beneath the city.

Martin lowered the macrobinos he was using. “Nubou lae.” He gasped.

Danny nodded his head. “That’s about what I said.” He echoed rising his voice to be heard above the whipping wind from the lowered ramp.

“Where else Dan?” Martin asked him.

Danny motioned him back into the interior of the ship as it began to lift away and they went to the command platform table on board every STRIKER Mark II. Danny began to stab down on the immediate map of the area around Jarlori. “So far, Manda has a positive ID on nine different locations so far! All within a hundred clicks of Jarlori!”

“Nine!” Martin almost yelled. “I thought we did a thorough sensor scan of the planet looking for subterranean tunnels!”

Danny nodded his head. “A large part of the coastal regions are comprised of the same material that we found near Moncu. It fucks with our scans and gives back false readings. All nine of these locations are in the coastal regions Marty. We just don’t have the people to scout out that far! We left most of our ground forces on Manne.”

“How many fervon?” Martin asked him.

Danny pointed to three different locations on the chart. “Manda has identified three major ones along the eastern coast. Roughly a hundred and sixty kilometers from Moncu. She is already spooling up airstrikes to hit them. They are appearing almost as fast as we find them!”

Martin looked at him from across the chart table. “They knew Dan.” He spoke softly. “Somehow they found out we were thin here.”

Danny nodded his head. “That is what I figured as well. Our buddy Lorendo?”

Martin shook his head. “I don’t know how.” He spoke. “Even if he figured out we were here, how did he know we were short people?”

“You’re also suggesting that he has direct control over at least some of these fuckers.” Danny spoke.

“Red always said that was a possibility.” Martin spoke dropping his eyes to the chart once more. “They aren’t moving for Discovery.” Martin spoke looking at the table and the real time feed from his ships in orbit. “Why?”

“That’s the worrisome part.” Danny said in agreement.

“It’s a distraction.” Martin whispered. “They are trying to get us to react. Popping up in all these locations.”

“And keeping us from finding where their main force is gathering.” Danny said. He looked at Martin. “That means there are a hell of a lot more of them than there are of us. And we haven’t found them yet.”

Martin shook his head. “They’re getting ready.” He said softly. “They’re getting ready to attack and these outlying locations are just to keep our attention focused away from Discovery. They want us to send what troops we have after all of them and leave Discovery unprotected. Then they would attack.”

Danny looked at him. “They can’t think we are that stupid.” He said. “Can they?”

Martin looked up at him. “Whoever is controlling them thinks we are.”

“Gee... that narrows it down.” Danny quipped.

“Pull all of our scout teams back to Discovery fervon. Use the ARC ROYAL’s teleporter if you have to on the teams that are further out.” Martin told him.

“We do that and we won’t have any real eyes on the ground Marty.” Danny said. “We’ll be blind if they stay in the areas where our sensors are iffy. We won’t know they are coming until they are right on top of us.”

Martin looked at him. “We won’t need them.”

“What? Why?” Danny asked with wide eyes.

Martin met his eyes. “I’m going to phone home.”

Daniel Simpson looked at him for a moment and then he grinned from ear to ear. “Oh... I like that.” He stated. “We...”

“King Leonidas!” The voice of the female STRIKER pilot burst into their COM implants. “Admiral Lorian Milord! She says it’s urgent!”

Martin tapped his jaw and activated his implant. “Manda go!”

“We got more problems Martin!” Miranda told him. “Long range sensors just detected a fleet of Kintaur Ships entering the sector!”

“You got to be fucking kidding me!” Danny exclaimed.

“How many Manda?” Martin asked as he looked at Dan.

“Three hundred of the fucking god awful ugly things!” Miranda answered him. “I get the scratchy, itchy feeling that we have been set up Martin.”

“Yes, I do believe we have been.” Martin agreed as he continued to look at Danny. “How soon before they get here Manda?”

“At their present speed, which is pitiful by the way, two hours nineteen minutes, tops.” Miranda answered, her voice calm and cool.

“Manda, hold all airstrikes.” Martin spoke. “Get all your birds loaded and ready to launch for ground support but hold them.”

“Why?” Miranda protested. “Martin we can take out at least some of the fugly ronnus! Less of them going after Discovery Base!”

Martin grinned at her words. Miranda Lorian was a spit fire that was for sure. She had no back down in her whatsoever. “They haven’t revealed their main force Manda.” Martin spoke. “All these little groups popping up now at the same time; whoever is directing them wants us to split our forces. It’s not a particularly bright scenario but it could have been effective. I’m not going do that though. I want the main body. When they show themselves, then I’ll cut your flyboys loose.”

Miranda was silent for a moment as what he said sank in. “Understood.” She spoke.

“Manda... is Steven listening?” Martin asked.

“I’m here Martin.” Steven Randall answered instantly.

“Steven... you take command of a MENKLA and a security team.” Martin told him with an even voice. “Contact Archer and Asa and on the surface and let them know you are coming down for Jezima and Meral. I want them off the surface of Ventori most ricki tick Steven. No doubt if this is Lorendo, then he has them listed as VIP targets.”

“I’ll be airborne in three minutes.” Steven answered.

“Steven... Archer and Asa will know this... but nothing stops you from getting them off the surface. Nothing.” Martin said.

There was a slight pause and then Steven answered. “Consider it done.”

“What about the Kintaur Martin?” Miranda asked him.

“Fuck them!” Martin barked angrily. “They want to stick their noses where they don’t belong... fine! If they are too stupid to mind their own fucking business then I’ll give their ships back to them in nubous pieces.”

“What are you going to do?” Miranda asked the same question Danny had asked just seconds ago. She too knew the proclivity of the King to get into dangerous situations. “Please don’t tell me you are going to go hunting.”

Martin smiled. “Nope!” He answered. “I’m going to make a call.”

There was a moment of silence until, like Danny, Miranda understood what he meant and she approved.

“Oh... that will be pretty.” She spoke. “ARIZONA out!”

Danny looked at him. “Can he get here in time fervon?”

“Well... if he doesn’t, then we are well and truly fucked.” Martin said.

Danny laughed and shook his head. “Man, there’s one thing that I have always loved about you.” Danny said. “And that is the incredibly annoying and positively innate ability you have to state the motherfucking obvious.”

Martin grinned. “That’s me.”

SPARTA'S WRATH EIGHT HOURS FROM VENTORI ANDROCLES' QUARTERS

It was times like these that Andro lived for.

As with his father and mothers, there was always talk of the Crown Prince and Crown Princess and what they did when they were alone in their quarters. The vast majority of men and women would be surprised to learn that more often than not, it was just as it was now.

All of them were on the huge, oval shaped bed in their quarters, none of them with much on in the way of clothing. Andro was naked, as he usually was since Sehri and Caliria had finally joined them. He was sitting in the center of the bed with his back to the headboard, Carisia’s tightly muscled, five foot two body resting between his legs with her back to his chest. She was naked as well except for the white panties she wore. Caliria sat between Carisia’s legs holding two mugs of coffee in a simple bra and panty set, while Carisia used a brush to run through Caliria’s lustrous black hair.

Lu'ria sat on Andro’s left, Sehri nestled between her legs, both of them wearing only panty and bra sets. Sehri’s lush, young form was definitely showing the results of her training with Carisia and Lu'ria for her figure was much more muscular in nature and nearly matched Ne'Veha's exquisitely proportioned physique. She had a long way to go to reach the proportions that Sadi, Carisia and Lu'ria sported, but she was working hard and enjoying every bit of it. She especially enjoyed the extra attention Andro paid to exploring her body every time they were together.

Ne'Veha sat on Andro's right with Sadi stretched out beside Andro, her upper body covering Ne'Veha's lower body. Both Ne'Veha and Sadi were without clothes for they felt the most comfortable with each other when there was nothing preventing their skin from touching in every place.

Lu'ria was putting the finishing touches on the long, braided strands of Sehri's white blond hair. Each of them now sported four identical strands of braided hair that pulled back along either side of their heads and merged in a single long braid down their backs that mingled with the rest of their flowing locks. This was a tradition that they had started to not only honor Lu'ria's Drow heritage but to set themselves apart and have it be known that they were of one mind and love. They all knew Androcles loved long hair and this was another way for them to show their love for him.

"...think he noticed?" Sadi asked as she dragged her fingers down Ne'Veha's long, tanned thigh.

Andro chuckled as he took one of the mugs from Caliria's hands and took a long pull from his mother's rich coffee. "Byron?" He finally said. "I think he was too happy to see our mother to notice."

"Yes, he was." Carisia spoke. "Remember, he has not seen or talked to her for longer than any of us."

Andro nodded his head and leaned forward to nuzzle the back of her neck before pulling aside her own satin like black hair and planting a kiss on her bare shoulder. "That is also very true." He said.

"I think it is more a question of if Namiri noticed." Sehri spoke now and they all looked at her. She smiled at the attention. "What? I know my scent spiked when I first saw Andro, and it does every time I walk into a room and see him. I'm not afraid to admit that."

"None of us are DuanGai." Sadi said with a smile.

Andro smiled once more. "I'm flattered." He said.

Ne'Veha was the one who reached up and lightly slapped him in the back of the head. "Do not let it go to your head Saradasaar." She spoke with humor in her voice and all of them laughed.

Andro leaned over quickly and nuzzled Ne'Veha's four-inch-high elven ear causing her to gasp in delight before pushing him away with her hands. "No fair! Stop that!" She exclaimed as Sadi and the others laughed once more.

Andro leaned back and took another sip of coffee. "I think it is a matter of whether Namiri Daret admits to herself what she is feeling." He spoke more thoughtfully. "We don't know her well enough to make that determination."

"It won't be hard to figure out." Lu'ria spoke. "If she begins asking us of him then we will know."

"True enough." Carisia said.

Sadi looked up at Andro. "Do you think she will Andro?" She asked.

Andro shook his head. "I don't know." He answered. "My mothers and father told me she is independent and head strong. That she rebels against traditional Tasmor rules."

Caliria turned slightly. "Andro, if she does show interest in Bryon, we must help her."

"Inamarno?" Andro asked.

"Inamarno is right." Sadi said. "We all know that what we are doing is only for show." She told them. "If it does turn out that she is interested in Bryon as her scent tells us, and that attraction is mutual, we must make it so that they can pursue it."

"I know what it is like to be the rebellious one and not be able to express who I really am because of silly rules and laws." Caliria said. "We must insure that does not happen to Namiri."

Lu'ria, Sehri and Ne'Veha were the first ones to notice it as Andro began to speak. "If there is anything..."

"Andro!" Ne'Veha gasped aloud. "The... your tattoos!"

"What?" Andro asked as he turned his head trying to see.

"They are... Saradasaar they are... glowing!" Lu'ria exclaimed as Sehri reached out to touch his back.

"What?" Andro asked as he chuckled thinking they were playing a joke on him. "You guys are..."

Andro's eyes went wide when he felt the Etheric pulse reach for him. It wasn't something from a Mark II booster and it was focused directly and solely on him. His whole body stiffened when his father's voice erupted into his mind.

[Andro aur Keto!] His father's voice was clear and loud in his head and it caused his body to stiffen more and Sadi and the others to rise up off the bed.

"Andro!" Sadi almost yelled.

[Pen tiab forn ineen niob aur keto!] His father's voice thundered in his head and Andro could feel and almost see what his father was seeing. (I need you here now my son!)

Andro sprang off the bed as if shot from a gun, the mug of coffee falling from his hands as Carisia and Caliria rolled to the sides of his body. He tapped his jaw COM implant and began to bark orders as Sadi and the others scrambled for their clothes.

"Armen! Go to Condition One! Condition One! Inform Sa'sur and plot an immediate LSD combat jump directly into Ventori planetary space for the entire Task Force! Advise all ground forces to prep for immediate deployment and sustained action!" He was almost shouting as he reached for his pants.

-What is happening Androcles- Armen asked.

"The Svorag Keto monsters are forming for an attack on my father right now!" Androcles hissed. "He won't be able to hold them!"

Armen's answer was instantaneous. -Understood. Calculating Precision Combat Quantum Jump into the Ventori planetary system- He answered without hesitation. -I will inform Admiral Sa'sur. We will jump in eleven minutes seventeen seconds-

SPARTA'S WRATH PORT LAUNCH BAY ONE

Aricia, For'mya and Anja burst into the Launch Bay at a dead run, Perlyea, Saydia and several members of the Tasmor Quorum directly on their heels. Intermittent Amber colored lights were blinking in all of the corridors of the ship and the steady, buzzing alarm sounded every twenty seconds. The initial alarms had frightened the three Queens so much it had woken them from a sound sleep wrapped in each other's embraces and caused them to practically leap from the bed. They quickly dressed and exited their quarters, For'mya leading them with her P1 as they navigated the corridors heading for where they knew Androcles would be. They met up with Perlyea, Saydia and the other Tasmor just after arriving on the deck and found them wandering about trying to discover what was happening. The crew of SPARTA'S WRATH was moving around them without stopping to answer the questions that they were asking. Anja and Aricia quickly pulled the women along with them.

Upon entering Landing Bay One they began to realize what was happening as Saydia and the others stood there in shock and watched what was taking place with awe in their eyes. Ships were being loaded as far back as their eyes could see, and Landing Bay One was utterly massive in scope. Not one person that they could see was standing still. Crates of munitions and supplies were being hurriedly carried onto what could only be transport ships of some sort while groups of heavily armed troops could be seen boarding these same ships. All of them looked up when the mechanical female voice came over the internal ship intercom.

"ATTENTION! ATTENTION! SPARTA'S WRATH IS AT CONDITION ONE! SPARTA'S WRATH IS AT CONDITION ONE! COMBAT JUMP IN SIX MINUTES AND THIRTY-THREE SECONDS! ALL CREW TEAMS MAN COMBAT STATIONS! ALL CREW TEAMS MAN COMBAT STATIONS! THIS IS NOT A DRILL! THIS IS NOT A DRILL!"

Aricia found Andro standing at the base of the ramp leading up into the odd looking ship and she pulled them along towards him. He was speaking with Jomann, Deion, Murano and Denali, all of them in various stages of pulling on their Mark IV ArmorPly as they were looking at the P9 that Andro was holding. Aricia led them directly over to where they stood and caught the last portion of Andro's order.

"...Massing along the coastal plain here." Andro drew his finger down the map on the P9. "Father says they are swarming out of their holes by the thousands. They were hiding in areas that their sensors could not detect them. He has pulled everyone back to Forward Base Discovery and is digging in with what troops he and Uncle Daniel have."

"How many men does he have Andro?" Murano asked as he pulled on his chest piece.

Andro shook his head. "Not anywhere near enough. He left most of his detachment and General Juturi's Kavalian troops on Manne."

"Andro?" Aricia hissed as she grabbed his arm. "What is going on?"

Androcles turned to meet her eyes having smelled her and his other mothers entering the Landing Bay almost immediately. "Apparently the number of Svorag on Ventori was far greater than you first thought mother." He told her seeing her eyes go wide at this statement. "They appear to be massing for an attack."

"Your father?" Anja gasped in fear as she pressed up against Aricia.

"He pulsed me etherically." Andro told them. "We are jumping to him now."

"Keto... Androcles, you are going to jump right into the planetary system aren't you?" For'mya asked with wide eyes.

Andro nodded his head. "Yes mother." He answered.

"Can you... a ship this size?" For'mya asked.

"Armen assures me we have more than enough engine power to conduct such a jump mother." He told her.

"Andro you need to..." Aricia began to speak to tell him what he needed to do but he held up his hand cutting off her words. Aricia's, like Anja's and For'mya's first thoughts, were for their beloved husband and mate.

"This is my command mother and I know what I am doing." He told her almost sternly. "I'm not leaving you out either." He pointed toward a STRIKER Mark II a slight distance away. "That is Eli's Medical Command STRIKER. She is taking her FMT directly into Discovery Base with a reinforced detachment from the Durcunusaan Division. It seems that stania Jezima and Tenna Meral have taken a page from stania Gorgo's Field Manual. They told him where to put his idea of getting them off the surface, and in very colorful terms too." (Field Medical Team)

"How many Svorag Androcles?" For'mya asked now.

Andro shook his head. "I don't know medwaw, but if father has pushed the panic button then it cannot be good."

"Discovery Base is full of Tasmor and Ventori civilians." Anja said. "Not to mention our non-combat personnel. Andro if the Svorag are able to..."

Andro shook his head once more. "They will not mother." He told her. "Now go."

"Andro?" Aricia protested.

"Go medwaw! Let me do my job." He told her. "And take the Tasmor with you."

"It isn't safe for them there keto!" For'mya protested.

Androcles smiled then and all of them had seen that particular smile before. It was a sign that Andro was about to unleash "a whole lot of hurt on someone" as Eliani had once described it to them.

"These Svorag monsters will not breach Discovery Base mother." Andro told them once more. "Now go meet with Eliani. Her ship will be first off after the PREMONITION. The others will follow."

"Others?" Anja asked him.

"Trust me." Andro said before turning back to Murano and Jomann. "We must insure..."

Anja and For'mya pulled on Aricia's arms and began leading her and the Tasmor over to the STRIKER.

"Have faith in our son Aricia." For'mya spoke. "He will not allow harm to come to his father, or innocents."

Aricia nodded as she grabbed Saydia's hand and kept moving. "I know." She answered. "It just frightens me at the lengths he will go in order to insure this." She looked at Saydia and Anthylea as they kept up with her. "Saydia, we can leave you here or take you with us. We..."

"This is now our fight as well." Saydia spoke without hesitation. "Give us weapons Aricia. We will fight with you."

Andro turned once more and watched for a brief time as his three mothers made their way across the landing bay and then he turned back to Murano and the others. He knew his mothers would fight their way through the gates of hell in order to reach his father and protect what innocents there were in Discovery Base. He did not fear for them in the least.

"Father has not committed to any action. He believes that they were set up by someone among the Tasmor however." Andro finished.

Murano looked at him. "Not Lorendo?" He asked.

Andro shook his head. "You know he believes that Lorendo has lost control over at least a large portion of these creatures?"

Murano nodded his head. "Yes. I read the brief from your mother Anja."

"Why would he think that fervon? That these Tasmor are to blame?" Deion asked.

"Only the Tasmor knew how thin he is on Ventori in the way of troops." Andro told them. "And he knows none of our people or those survivors from Ventori sent the Kintaur a welcoming message. He believes it is one of the Tasmor from Perlyea's group that somehow got a message off from one of their ships in orbit. A three hundred ship Kintaur Fleet has now entered the system. You can rest assured their intent is not to establish friendly relations after what father did to them. Convenient don't you think?"

"Convenient aur mida!" Deion spat angrily. The penchant for hating traitors ran deep within their family. Betrayal had cost them the life of their grandfather.

Andro tapped the P9. "Sa'sur?"

"We are ready Andro." Sa'sur's voice echoed immediately. "I've already touched base with Manda on secure COMS. She has cleared the immediate area around Ventori. Once we jump in, I will split off with my force while Armen takes SPARTA'S WRATH, KINDRED SOUL and his full Wing right in. Miranda and the ARIZONA will close ranks behind us and provide support while we deal with these Kintaur."

"Sa'sur, handle these Kintaur roughly my friend." Andro told her. "We do not need them coming back at a later time."

"How roughly Andro?" Sa'sur asked.

"By my order Sa'sur, if they retreat, let them go. If they choose to fight, then bury them." Andro told her. "They threaten my family and our people. I will not be as patient as my father."

"Understood. See you on the other side. SCIMITAR is clear."

Andro looked again at Murano, Jomann and his brothers. "Father isn't reacting to these outlying groups because he believes the main force of Svorag has not revealed themselves yet. He fears their main force is hidden closer to Discovery Base than they thought. If that is the case, then it will be up to us to clear an area for Josie to drop her Brigade." Andro looked at Murano. "Are you up for this Murano?"

Murano fastened his Mark IV ArmorPly tightly and grinned. "You just try and keep me away."

Andro nodded with a smile. "Sadi will be dropping us at fifty meters."

Murano nodded his head. "I followed your grandfather out of a transport at a hundred and twenty-five meters Androcles." Murano said proudly. "I limped for a month, but I lived. Fifty meters will be a walk in the park as your father says."

Andro and the others laughed at this. Andro folded the P9 down and set it on the ramp and began to pull up and fasten the rest of his armor. "Lisisa and Jeth will come in right after we execute with Dutkne, Nara and Mayla. Dorian and Laren will break to the flanks with Ladur and Ryner while we go straight up the middle with Elynth, Ardace and Jeru. The area should be clear enough after the dust settles for Josie to drop right behind us. There is no holding back with these creatures. Everything is full out now." Andro watched them all nod their heads in agreement. "Cowen and Sherice will take position on the wall with Tenna Julie for overwatch with long eyes. Their targets will be any of the big ronnus that father and Tenne Daniel fought in the underground bunker. Kalis, Ridor and Daio will roll up one flank with Durcunusaan Heavy Weapons Company Talon while father's team rolls up the other with the bulk of their remaining force not on the wall. Father says there is only one way they can come at him because the terrain is too rough even for these monsters. They are fast and strong, but they lack ingenuity.”

“Once we engage, do not let these monsters get close to you.” Murano spoke now. “They are limber and will look to shove their tongues down your throat to subdue you.”

“Not in this lifetime.” Deion hissed.

“Damn straight.” Denali echoed his younger brother.

Andro looked at Murano. “Tobia will be going in with Eliani and my mothers. Mari will be with them.”

Murano nodded in thanks. “Good.”

“She wasn’t really happy about that.” Deion said with a small smile.

Murano nodded his head. “I have no doubt, but she is not even remotely trained as we are. I know... I accept that she is a Praetorian, but until she is capable of defending herself properly, Tobia and I are not willing to risk her safety.”

Andro looked at his brother. “Deo?” He asked.

Deion nodded his head. “I agree.” He said. “She didn’t like that but...”

Jomann pat him on the shoulder. “Body worship works very well to get you out of trouble Deo.” He said with a smile.

Deion grinned. “I’m already planning on that.” He said looking at Murano.

Murano held up his hands. “Don’t look at me Deion Leonidas. I find myself having to do the same thing, and I have many more years to make up for.”

“Sheva, Onera, Carisia and Lu'ria will link up with Zarah and Lucia on the ground.” Andro told them as he was smiling with the rest of them. “Radem will be with them and they will be hitting targets of opportunity all up and down the line with their vampire speed. Keep your eyes open for them just in case.”

“And your father?” Jomann asked.

Andro met the eyes of his Durcunusaan Captain and now perhaps his closest friend. Moneus and he had been inseparable as they were growing, but now Moneus had another calling that he was following. He would go where Carina went no matter where that may be.

“Well... I imagine he and Tenne Daniel will join us on the field once we clear it. You know how they hate to be left out of the party.” He answered.

“ATTENTION SPARTA’S WRATH! ATTENTION SPARTA’S WRATH! WE ARE AT CONDITION ONE! COMBAT JUMP IN THREE MINUTES AND COUNTING! ALL CREW TEAMS MAN COMBAT STATIONS AND PREPARE TO JUMP! ALL CREW TEAMS MAN COMBAT STATIONS AND PREPARE TO JUMP! THIS IS NOT A DRILL! THIS IS NOT A DRILL!”

VENTORI FORWARD BASE DISCOVERY

It may have appeared to be utter chaos to the uninitiated, but it was far from it.

Lycavorian Spartans, truly any member of the Union military, were renowned and feared for their ability to instantly adapt to almost any situation. There was no panic, no shouting or screaming, just hundreds of men and women from all species going about their duties with a single minded purpose. This mindset had carried over to the Union Military from the Spartan way of life that existed in the time of Martin’s father. It had been taken and refined to a virtual art by the military in nearly all aspects of life. Cooks, engineers, medics, it didn’t matter, all of them were locking items down and preparing for battle. Discovery Base had become huge in the few weeks that they had been here, and there were defensive positions set up all over the base. These men and women picked up their weapons and gear, set aside their cooking utensils and electronics gear and they prepared to do battle. All of them knew what kind of enemy they faced and no one was about to succumb to the monsters getting ready to attack.

The few dozen Tasmor troops that had been in the base were quickly outfitted with Union uniforms and weapons and willingly took up positions with Union personnel. All of them were experienced combat veterans of battles with the Kintaur and they all knew kindred souls when they saw them. The Union troops cared not that they were female warriors for they had many of them in their own ranks, and quite a few that commanded other troops. The interaction between the Tasmor and Union troops had been growing by the day and both sides welcomed it with eagerness. The trust had begun to set in and neither side was about to let that go to waste.

While it may have seemed like a random act, Discovery Base was situated in on a plateau in a shallow valley on the end of the large lake. To the west side was a ridge that rose gradually several hundred feet into the air and was covered with sharp rock outcroppings that limited fast paced movement to a crawl. To increase the defensive nature of this natural terrain even more, Union troops had been mining the entire ridge with anti-personnel mines as well as natural traps that would kill or maim any who stumbled into it. Martin Leonidas was not afraid to use every trick he had ever learned in order to safeguard his people and the entire ridgeline was a death trap. To enhance this, nine heavy weapons positions were now manned and ready along the entire wall facing the ridge. Any who were not killed by explosive mines or the razor like rock outcroppings would be mowed down by the turrets set up. The east side of the base where the landing platforms had been set up was protected in part by the natural lake and the volcanic like field that extended out to where the opposite ridgeline began to rise into the sky. The ground was spaced with huge gaps and ridges of volcanic crevices that were impassable by any sort of ground troops even if they managed to breach the defensive wall that encircled the entire base. Only three heavy weapons covered this area of the perimeter because there was no natural ground cover and if you fell into one of the crevices, ranging in depth from a few feet to over two hundred feet, you were most certainly dead.

The main entrance into Discovery Base was fortified by two sections of thick, portable wall now sunk into the ground, effectively creating a double barrier with steel grating across the top allowing for gun positions and personnel to move along. Spread out before the entrance was nearly a quarter mile of open terrain spotted with massive trees that had long been torn asunder by the elements. The catwalk along the top of the wall allowed for an unimpeded view into the city of Jorlari some mile and a half away in the distance. A shorter, reinforced wall stood twenty meters out from the actual gates into Discovery Base, and behind this wall now waited all of the troops that Martin commanded. Six hundred Spartan and Tasmor troops were stacked along this defensive wall, all of them scouring the area in front of them and waiting.

Martin stood beside Danny right at the reinforced Dragon Armor gates and lowered the macrobinos from his eyes. His COM implant was alive with reports coming in from the three scout teams that he had allowed to remain outside of the base defensive perimeter in order to get proper human intelligence. Two STRIKER ATs were slowly circling the city at five thousand feet waiting for something to happen, while three more hovered out of sight on the other side of the lake waiting to conduct ground strikes.

Danny touched his ear implant and nodded his head. "Affirmative. Maintain altitude and continue sweep." He spoke. He turned his head and looked at Martin who met his gaze. "That was the STRIKER over Moncu. They report that all of the godzilla looking little fuckers have ducked back underground. Not a single one stayed on the surface. The STRIKERS further north are saying the same thing."

Martin nodded his head. "They figured out we aren't going to take the bait." He said softly. "And they know the entire lower portion of this continent is saturated with this fucking ore that kills our sensors and makes it so we can't track them underground."

"Someone has got eyes on us fervon." Danny commented.

Martin nodded his head. "Oh yeah they do." Martin looked at him. "Question is... who? And where?"

"Lorendo?" Danny asked.

Martin shook his head. "That shit bird wouldn't know the first thing about tactics. I told Andro that too." He said. "This is someone else. Someone with instincts."

Danny looked at him with wide eyes. "Are you thinking what I think you're thinking?"

Martin met his gaze. "Dynina did say that they had almost a thousand of their people taken. You tell me, if these things are retaining the memories of who they used to be, who is more likely to break Lorendo's control and start acting on their own? A Pralor, or one of us. A wolf with wolf instincts."

"Damn!" Danny cursed softly. "I was hoping you wouldn't say that."

"It's the only thing that makes sense." Martin told him. "And the more I toss the idea around the more it takes shape. It's jives why Lorendo hates us so much." Martin looked at him. "Sumar blows him off to take out a larger threat and unfortunately Lorendo's son dies as a result. He doesn't care that more lives were saved in the process. He thinks he gets payback when he causes my grandfather's ship to crash on Lycavore. He gets even more pissed when he finally realizes what actually did happen and that he failed again. Now he is really riled up when a Lycavorian Alpha breaks his supposed control and begins to assert his own command over these creatures after he becomes one. And then I show up. Grandson to the man he believes let his son die on that planet. And to top it all off, I'm carrying the active Praetorian gene. What does that sound like to you fervon?"

"Sounds like a nubous personal problem to me." Danny quipped trying and succeeding in breaking the gloom of the situation that they were in.

Martin chuckled with him. "Yes, it does." He said. "But it also would account for why Lorendo is such a dickhead, and why he wants Jezima and Meral dead. And little old me right along with them."

"People been trying to take you out for years because of your charming personality and wit fervon." Danny told him. "They ain't been real successful."

Martin grinned at him. "There's always a first time."

Martin and Danny turned when Nalmos and Konlar approached them from the main gate, both of them armed and their faces set in determined expressions.

"Nalmos, I told you to get yourself and the other Justices up to my ship in orbit." Martin told the man.

Nalmos nodded his head. "Yes, you did Milord, however we will not run this time." He spoke firmly. "This time we will fight to the death in defense of our home from these monsters."

"You did that the first time Nalmos." Danny told him respectfully. "You have nothing to prove now."

"Then this time, this time it will be for vengeance for those they took from us." Nalmos stated.

Martin looked at Konlar then. "You siding with this character?" He asked.

Konlar nodded his head. "Lirana is safe on your ship sire." He answered. "The rest of us have decided that we have stood to the side for too long. We will stand and fight for our people now, as we should have done years ago."

"Edrao make it out ok?" Martin asked Konlar.

Konlar nodded once more. "He was not happy about it. These creatures have taken much from him through the years."

Martin nodded his head. "I don't doubt that." He replied. "However, he is much better suited to getting us on that station above Hador."

"Agreed." Konlar said. "He departed on your ship thirty minutes ago."

Martin nodded his head in approval as he turned back to look out over the terrain. "Good. Thoti will get him in and then we can get some answers to some questions." He said. "And maybe find out exactly where he has his main facility stashed. The Spider Drones we sent out haven't detected anything yet."

"Not all of them have run their courses." Danny ventured. "Maybe..." He snapped out with his hand and grasped Martin's arm as he became silent. "You feel that?" He asked as he looked at the ground beneath them.

Martin nodded his head. "Yes."

"It feels like... like an earthquake." Nalmos stammered.

Konlar shook his head. "That is no earthquake." He spoke as the vibration in the ground became more pronounced.

"No, it isn't." Martin agreed as he lifted his head and looked at Jorlari. "Nubou lae!" He gasped as he saw a huge plume of black smoke rise above the city and then the distance and unmistakable rumbling of a massive amount of explosives.

"Saoi sibfla!" The female voice barked out on their Com implants, obviously from the pilot of the STRIKER circling the city. "The entire center of the city just caved in! Five city blocks just fell into a huge crater! Massive detonations all over! King Leonidas do you read me!" The voice screamed out. "The entire center of the city just disappeared into the ground! Wait... son vada carians! The fucking lizard people are pouring out of the crater like insects! There must be thousands of them! King Leonidas do you read me! They are coming right at you! King Leonidas?"

Martin looked at Danny. "Time to get this party started fervon." He spoke.

Danny propped the butt of his A5 on his hip. "Good. Things were starting to get boring here."

Martin lifted his hand and tapped his jaw. "STRIKERS clear the airspace! Raptor Flight, you are cleared to engaged! Kill me some godzilla looking motherfuckers!"

“Raptor Flight acknowledges! We are inbound!”

“This is insane!” The voice echoed over their COM units. “They are coming here to kill us! Martin we need to leave! We cannot hold them! They... they outnumber us a gazillion to one!”

Martin grinned and looked at Danny as Kasdan’s voice filled their COMs and he tapped his jaw changing the frequency. “Kasdan, that is not a scientific accounting of their numbers.” Martin told him.

“A scientific...” Kasdan answered. “This is madness! We will all die.”

“No, we won’t.” Martin told him.

“How can you be so sure?” Kasdan yelled.

“I got a good feeling.” Martin spoke with a smile.

SPARTA'S WRATH

“...Should be remaining here.” Androcles told them sternly.

Perlae, Ishma and Awser looked at him and each of them smiled. “Laren is coming with you.” Perlae told him.

“Laren has already fought with Dorian and I.” Andro told them. “And she has received a clean bill of health from sister.”

“We do not need to be protected chorray.” Ishma spoke with a smile. “We are very much able to take care of ourselves.”

Andro nodded his head. “Of that I have no doubt.” He stated evenly. “And you mistake my intent for wanting to leave you here. It is not because I don’t think you can take care of yourselves, it is because I don’t know what you can or cannot do. You are an unknown at the moment.”

“Then we will show you what we can do.” Awser spoke.

Andro grinned and shook his head. “Just stick close to Sehri and Inamarno. They will be moving to link up with my Tenna Anuk at the main medical facility on the base. My mother and sister will meet you there.”

“And what are we supposed to do there?” Perlae asked him. “We can fight Androcles.”

Andro nodded his head once more. “Then take charge of the detachment there and insure my mothers and any wounded there are safe.”

Perlae looked surprised and this showed on her face as she gazed at him. “Truly?” She gasped.

“Until we can better understand what you and the others can do, it is best I believe, to allow you to work alone.” Andro told them.

“We won’t let you down Andro.” Perlae stated confidently.

Andro nodded his head. “I know you won’t.”

“ATTENTION SPARTA’S WRATH! ATTENTION SPARTA’S WRATH! WE ARE AT CONDITION ONE! COMBAT JUMP IN TEN SECONDS AND COUNTING! ALL CREW TEAMS MAN COMBAT STATIONS AND PREPARE TO JUMP! ALL CREW TEAMS MAN COMBAT STATIONS AND PREPARE TO JUMP! THIS IS NOT A DRILL! THIS IS NOT A DRILL!”

VENTORI PLANETARY OPERATIONAL ZONE ULU ARIZONA

“...Talk to me!” Miranda barked from her command chair.

“All ships are clear of the POZ!” E’dira called out. She looked across the bridge at her lover and now Drow wife. “Miranda... can they do such a thing? Stop so suddenly?”

Miranda met her amber colored eyes and grinned at her. “Well... if they can’t, all of us will be eating an awful lot of space soup and playing bumper balls with a ship five times our size.”

E’dira shook her head with a smile of her own. “Perfect.” She muttered.

“Admiral... I am detecting a... Jesus... I’m detecting and unholy massive quantum surge field!” The main sensor operator called out.

“Confirmed!” E'dira echoed almost instantly.

“How large is massive?” Miranda asked.

The man turned to look at her. “Permission to speak freely?” He asked.

Miranda rolled her eyes. “On my bridge? Always.”

“Does, “I don’t think we pulled back far enough” about cover it?” He asked her.

Miranda came to her feet. “Are you serious?” She gasped. “How large is Andro’s Task Force? The brief said only about a hundred ships!”

The sensor operator shook his head. “No way Admiral!” He announced. “If what I am seeing is accurate, we’re about to have over three hundred ships drop in our lap and say hello!”

“Nubou Lae!” Miranda gasped. “Warn the others! Z-minus fifteen thousand meters! Full reverse on all engines! Pull back further!”

It would not have mattered in the least for Armen was too precise in his calculations. He knew exactly where Miranda’s ships were and he had adjusted for them in every way. It was a sight that not many would soon forget.

SPARTA’S WRATH

In a display of engine power that most of those witnessing had never seen before in their lifetimes, SPARTA’S WRATH appeared within the cone of Quantum Drive Reversion and came to an immediate and abrupt halt. The sheer size of the warship instantly dwarfed any ship in the direct area and many ship captains sitting on their bridges felt suddenly very inferior. The reaction of her shields on the atmosphere so close to the planet sent a ripple through the upper atmosphere that travelled into the lower atmosphere and shattered the day time sky with half a dozen bone vibrating claps of thunder across the landscape. Appearing directly beside her in an equally amazing feat of starship driving was the huge WASP-Class Assault Carrier, which appeared miniscule in comparison to the former Pralor warship. Three other ships appeared in that same instant, all of them brand new LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers, and all of them fielding the most advanced Union weapons systems based on Pralor technology. They were the hammer to SPARTA’S WRATH’s anvil, and between the four ships alone they carried enough firepower to decimate an entire planet in a matter of hours.

Armen was standing on the bridge the moment they reverted back to normal space and he instantly began barking orders.

-Secure from Combat Jump- He spoke, everyone detecting how his voice had changed a pitch or two. He had altered his programming in order to sound human and now that was playing out. -SPARTA’S WRATH Actual to all landing bays. Execute! Execute! Execute!- Armen turned smoothly to the side. -Weapons Officer! All main batteries to cover the KINDRED SOUL on her descent! Once she has assumed overwatch position, reorient all main batteries in support of the ARIZONA and her Wing-

“Weapons Aye!” The man announced.

-Tactical Officer begin launching APOC Drone Fighters from all portside launch bays- Armen ordered. -Stand by to receive targeting information from the ground forces command-

“Spooling up APOC Squadrons One through fifteen. Launching cycles in rotation in sixteen seconds.”

-Operations Officer pull up a full model of Ventori on the main holo chart and overlay all known positions of Union forces- Armen spoke. -Add in marked enemy positions and lets start tracking-

“Armen!” The voice yelled out across the bridge and he turned to face the female elven Com officer. “PREMONITION and COMMED One are away!”

Armen nodded his head quickly. –The valley pass where King Leonidas has established Discovery Base is too small for an all out orbital bombardment. Tell all STRIKER AT craft to prepare for full scale Ground Support missions once Colonel Miller’s Brigade is on the ground-

“The SCIMTAR and remaining Task Force ships are turning to port and outward towards the advancing Kintaur Fleet and they have gone dark!” The sensor operator announced.

–Admiral Sa'sur will not toy with these Kintaur fools- Armen spoke before realizing what he had said. He blinked several times before continuing on as if nothing had happened. Most of the bridge crew of SPARTA'S WRATH were grinning as they went about their duties and said nothing. –Sensor arrays nine through sixteen to continue monitoring the system. Arrays one through eight bring to bear on the planet. If it moves I want to know about it-

“Armen!” The voice barked and Armen turned to his Tactical Officer. “KINDRED SOUL is entering the atmosphere and boring in!”

Armen nodded. –Very well- He spoke. –The fun is about to begin-

KINDRED SOUL

The KINDRED SOUL was indeed boring in, and burning up the atmosphere in the process. Captain Patton clung to the arms of his command chair allowing his crew to do their jobs. All of them could just barely feel the sensation of explosive decompression bolts as the ODPs were shot from their launchers ten decks blow them and nineteen sections aft of their location.

The Tactical Officer looked up from his console. “That’s it Captain!” He shouted. “Third Brigade is away clean!”

“Malfunctions?” Patton asked.

“Negative sir! All pods burning in clean!”

Patton nodded his head. “Our turn.” He muttered to himself. “Now Kelly!” He barked out. “Turn and burn girl!”

“Aye sir!” Kelly turned back to her helm controls. “Prepare to extend ADUs! Full power to all drive units! Here we go!”

And once more the brainchild of Admiral Ben O’Connor and several other innovative Union engineers began a dedicated descent into the atmosphere of yet another planet. This time they were geared up for whatever came at them and their experiences at Solmar made them ready.

“Three! Two! One!” The Operations officer barked out. “And we are in! Extending the ADUs! Do your magic Kelly!”

Kelly did just that as she quickly maxed her engine power to the ADUs and yanked the KINDRED SOUL into a gut wrenching turn to starboard that a ship its size should not have been able to make, especially in the atmosphere of a planet.

“Do we have Discovery Base?” Patton shouted as his ship turned radically.

“Locked on sir!”

“Time?” Patton barked.

“One minute thirteen seconds!”

“Kelly! Drop us to one thousand meters!” Patton called out.

“Descending!” Kelly replied as her hands flew across her consoles almost faster than the eye could follow. “Everyone hold onto your lunch!”

All of them felt the KINDRED SOUL dip heavily towards the ground even as its engines screamed in power. The ship responded instantly to her commands as if she was the brain and her hands the instruments. Patton had never seen a more natural pilot than his helmsmen, and he silently thanked the gods out there that he had ignored the recommendations of senior officers to ignore her and pick a more experienced pilot.

“Fifty seconds!”

“Tactical?” Patton snapped. “Report!”

“Fuck me Skipper, it looks like someone dropped a smoke bomb into the middle of a nest of cockroaches!” The man answered. “The entire center of the city is gone! Five blocks have just vanished and the lizard looking bastards are pouring out!” The man reported. “Three STRIKER ATs from the King’s Wing just finished a second pass and they didn’t even put a dent in their numbers!”

Patton turned to look at him. “How many?”

The man shook his head. “Unable to get an accurate count! They are crawling all over themselves!”

“Then give me a guess!” Patton snapped once more.

The man looked at him. “Upwards of two hundred thousand sir! And all of them are heading right for Discovery Base!”

“Two hundred thousand!?” Patton hissed in disbelief. Patton turned his head to look at his Executive Officer. “Power all main batteries and get ready to kick the rest of them out Phillip! I don’t care how they get to the surface. Hell... blow all of the emergency hatches if they have to!” Patton came to his feet then. “Kelly! You park us right over the top of Discovery Base at a thousand meters! XO, I want a full GSB on target five seconds after Androcles and the others hit the ground!”

“Captain! That will be danger close!” The XO spoke.

Patton nodded his head. “Prince Androcles told me we would have a clear field to engage. He is going to knock them back.”

“Knock them back?” The XO gasped. “How?”

Patton shook his head. “I have no idea, but you can damn well bet if he says he is going to do something, he will!” Patton told him. “Full GSB XO! Ten second burst all batteries and then let Josie and her people take it from there. Then we go to EOT and direct Ground Support craft from the ARIZONA and SPARTA’S WRATH!”

The XO nodded his head. “Understood sir!”

“Kelly! Talk to me girl!” Patton barked out.

“Thirty-three seconds!”

“Alright people! Let’s prepare to enter this party!” Patton shouted. “Set Condition Red across the ship! We’re going in hotter than a fire brand stoker!”

VENTORI DISCOVERY BASE

“No joy! No joy!” The pilot of the GA STRIKER snarled into his mic, Martin holding his finger to his ear in order to hear him clearly. “We just blew our wad and didn’t slow them down sire! Spotters are seeing hundreds of bodies but they are just crawling over them to get out of the hole!”

“You’ve done all you can!” Martin snapped. “Get out of there! Things are going to get real busy, real quick!”

“Milord have the Admiral teleport you out!” The pilot screamed. “You can’t fight them!”

“Negative!” Martin answered him. “Now pull your people out Major! We have help inbound!”

“Sire you...!”

“That’s an order Major!” Martin spoke. “Exfil now!” Martin looked up at the sound of engines and saw the STRIKER Mark II sweep in low over the landing zone but pass over the top of it into the base. He smiled when he felt the auras of Aricia, Anja and For’mya reaching for him, and then he felt Normya’s aura as well. His daughter with Dysea flared the STRIKER over the emergency pad by the Medical Building expertly and Martin could feel her confidence as she set it down like a feather. He could feel Tobia’s commanding etheric resonance as well as Mari, now his son's wife and mate shining just as brilliantly as her mother and father. He also sensed the less pronounced etheric resonance of her half Immortal husband Tir'ut who was sitting beside her in the co-pilot's seat. He could feel his sons and daughters radiating within him, they were close by, but he just could not see them.

Martin turned back just as Danny and Kasdan moved up to his location.

"Martin this is insane!" Kasdan complained. "We must retreat to the ships in orbit! They are... they will overwhelm us!"

Martin grinned at him. "Persistent fuckers aren't they?" He quipped with his trademark smile.

"They will come here and they will... they will attack us and they will turn us into one of the them!"

Kasdan barked.

Martin put his hand on Kasdan's shoulder. "Kasdan take a breath my friend." He said with a smile.

"Things are going to get real interesting."

Kasdan looked at him as if he had gone mad. "You are insane!" He barked.

Danny rolled his eyes. "Kasdan, you don't know the half of it." He stated calmly.

Martin smiled and put his hand on the back of Kasdan's neck. He tilted his head upward and watched as Kasdan's eyes grew even wider. Dropping through the clear blue sky above them Kasdan could see the streaks. Hundreds of them falling through the atmosphere and leaving a blazing trail as they careened downward.

"What?"

Danny looked upwards now. "That's the cavalry."

Martin smiled and turned to the Spartans who were crouched behind the wall. "Shields!" He bellowed the order and Kasdan turned to see each and every one of them call their Shi Viska's from Flatspace. Martin looked skyward once more. "Come on son, where the hell are you?" He muttered to himself.

DISCOVERY BASE

Aricia, Anja and For'mya moved immediately inside the Medical Building to where Archer and Asa were standing outside the door into the small office. Jezima and Meral were inside and Archer looked at them sheepishly as they approached.

"They refused to leave." He told his Queens. "I wanted to force them but Meral threatened to shoot me and Jezima called for Martin. The danger is great with these monsters approaching my Queens. You should not be here either."

Aricia nodded her head and reached up to squeeze his shoulder. "We figured as much." She said. "And don't worry Archer. Our situation just got much better."

Archer glanced at Asa as Aricia moved past him and opened the door. Jezima and Meral saw who it was and nearly burst into tears.

"Aricia! Anja!" Jezima cried out as she rushed forward and embraced both of them as Meral hugged For'mya. "I told Archer I would not leave! I have only just found all of you and I will not lose my family again!"

Aricia smiled and nodded her head. "We know." She stated as she looked up and saw Tinra exit the room now as well. "Lady Tinra? This is a surprise."

Tinra looked at them. "I requested to come out here after leaving Artaaya. I did not... Aricia no one knows what is going on here!" She exclaimed. "The Svorag are coming here! Thousands of them!"

"They won't make it." For'mya spoke confidently.

"How can you say that?" Tinra gasped.

Aricia looked at Jezima and took her hand as Anja pulled Meral close to her. "Would you care to meet your grandchildren Jezima?" Anja asked her.

"What?" Jezima exclaimed. "They are... they are here?"

Anja smiled as they began to draw them towards the door, Archer and Asa following without hesitation. "Some of them will be arriving very soon. They figured it was time to come and get their father out of trouble." She told her.

For'mya chuckled as she grasped Tinra's arm and urged her to follow. "That is one way of looking at it." She said.

Thirty seconds father.

The deep, calm voice erupted in Jezima's and Meral's minds now as they were suddenly included in an etheric conversation that very few individuals would have been able to detect. Jezima squeezed Aricia's hands as they made their way towards the portable wall that had been erected around the camp.

"Aricia is that?" Jezima stammered.

Aricia nodded her head as they made their way up the short ramp which put them above the front entrance to Discovery Base. Below them they could see Martin standing with Danny and Kasdan only a hundred meters away by the shorter defensive wall. "Yes." Aricia told her as she pulled her close on the wall and Anja and For'mya squeezed Meral between them tightly.

They could see the wall of Svorag in the distance approaching quickly, the flat terrain between them and the advancing hoard providing no defense whatsoever.

"Jezima... allow us to introduce your grandchildren." Aricia spoke with a smile as yet unmatched by any Jezima had seen so far.

Martin saw it first, low on the horizon and approaching from the east over the mountains. He had never seen a ship like it before and knew instantly that it was the ship that Sadi and Ne'Veha had Ben and his miracle workers at Dreamland build for them. Martin narrowed his wolf vision and saw that the ship had a rear ramp, which was now down. His dark brown eyes grew wide then, for he felt his son reach for him and project to him what it was they were going to do. The ship came closer now, and dropped to perhaps a hundred meters off the ground.

Danny stepped up next to him, his own eyes focused on the ship now. "Fervon?" Martin looked at him. "Is he going to do what I think he is going to do?"

Martin glanced at the lines of advancing Svorag and then looked back to the ship as it was now upon them. He saw first one figure leap from the back of the ship as it moved across the terrain, followed quickly by six more figures.

"Holy fuck! Torma 21!" Martin hissed. He turned to the line of defenders without thinking as he grabbed Kasdan. "Brace! Brace! Brace!" He screamed out the words as loud as his vocal cords could project them, his voice carrying to all of them and then some.

He and Danny dropped to one knee right where they were, anchoring Kasdan between them and their Shi Viskas pointing towards the oncoming Svorag hoard, covering their bodies and that of Kasdan as well.

And then the world blew up.

Torma 21.

A simple name for a devastating maneuver that he and Torma had invented and perfected during their time together. It was similar in many ways to the maneuver that his grandfather had explained in the Praetorian Tomes he had left for his descendants. The difference here was that it was usually done from the back of a dragon and not from the back of a ship. Martin could feel each of his sons, Jomann, Murano and Laren. They were radiating within the etheric realm as brightly as he had ever seen any of them, pulsing with power and determination and purpose.

It started from his left, an Etheric explosion of power that blew outwards with unmatched force. It was followed in quick succession by six more identical explosions of etheric power before the first one had even begun. It was devastating power and force that smashed into the oncoming ranks of Svorag and literally pulverized anything in its way.

It was then that Panos' words to him so long ago rang clearly in his head now. The same words he had spoken to his son the day he had claimed Sadi as his wife and mate. They were not just Lycavorians and Spartans...

...They were forces of nature.

CHAPTER SIXTY

COLS FAST ATTACK FRIGATE MOON RUNNER

“Are you certain keto?” The image of the exquisitely exotic looking female gazed at Lazar from the monitor on his desk.

Lazar smiled at his mother’s question. If anything, since the attempt by his father Osrod on her life and the life of her Alpha mate all those years ago, she had become even more careful and security conscious than him in many respects. Lazar knew that his father had always hated the fact that after only ten years, he had to release his mother as his mate and give her back to her pack in order to keep the peace. Loras Athltin had been promised to another Alpha in the Ranev Mountain Pack when she came of age, a pact of honor that was held with the highest regard among the many Mountain Packs. The Athltin and Ranev packs were among the five largest of the introverted Mountain Packs and the only way for Osrod to keep a civil war against him from breaking out was to release her as his mate after only a decade. He may have been King, but even he had to follow long held traditions and culture or risk losing everything.

His mother Loras Athltin had returned to her pack and quickly became the mate of the Alpha who she had originally been promised to as a small girl. The Ranev Pack was one of the largest Mountain Packs and second in influence only to her father’s Athltin Pack. His mother had been overjoyed when the change came and Warim Ranev had taken her as his mate without doubt even though his father had taken her first. This did not matter to Warim Ranev, only that Loras was now his and would remain his for eternity. This arranged pairing had suited Loras just fine, for Warim had courted her in the time before her Coming of Age and they had gotten to know each other well. She had not been happy when Osrod had stepped in and claimed her for his own, but to save face and keep her pack safe, she had endured the decade of Osrod pawing and slobbering over her body. She had even given Osrod a son in Lazar, but Osrod had no idea where his son’s true loyalties lie.

Warim had continued the Mountain Pack’s tradition of allowing far more freedoms to female wolves than most packs in COLS after Loras had become his mate. The Mountain Pack females were treated much better as a whole and some had even risen to levels of importance that other Lycavorian females in the Coalition could only dream about. His mother Loras was such a female. He knew being the only mate to the Alpha of a Pack was what initially gave her this influence, but his mother quickly began to assert herself and make a following all her own. Warim had only encouraged her to do what she was doing and this made Loras love him even more. She had given him four strong children in the ensuing two plus centuries, three boys and a girl, and Lazar adored all of his half brothers and sisters and all of them looked up to him. Osrod was not aware of how often he talked to or even saw his mother, thinking that Lazar did not care for her in the least. He could not have been any more wrong. It was Warim who had secretly adopted Lazar more than a century ago, and it was Warim who had been more a father to him than his own, earning Lazar’s trust and loyalty to him and to the Ranev pack.

The assassination attempt on Warim and his mother a century ago had been well planned and thought out, made to look like an accident as it was, but it succeeded only in killing Warim. His mother had been seriously wounded but she survived and now the Ranev Pack leadership resided solely with his mother. Unknown to his mother, Warim had left instructions that Loras was to assume leadership should anything happen to him, and every Alpha within the pack agreed and pledged their loyalty to her when she had recovered. Since it was made to look like an accident, no retaliation could be taken against the King, and without hard evidence, no one could openly accuse him of ordering the assassination. Against the wishes of many senior pack members Loras had watched from a distance with six elder Alphas from the pack protecting her, as Osrod had gone to Warim’s Celebration Pyre acting as King of the Coalition. The Mountain Packs had to tolerate this blatant disrespect for they could not prove that Osrod had ordered the assassination, but in typical stoic Mountain Pack manner, no one spoke a word of discontent. It served his mother’s interests that Osrod thought her dead and he dealt mainly with the man who Osrod thought had assumed the role of Alpha after Warim had been killed. If only he knew how things really were and that Alpha answered only to his mother and was utterly devoted to her and the Ranev pack.

His mother had been the Alpha and Matriarch to the Ranev Pack for over eighty years now, and behind the scenes it was she who was the driving force behind the Mountain Packs continued rise and defiance of his father's rule. With her own father and the Athltin Pack solidly behind her, not to mention the eight largest Mountain Packs, his mother had held them together and seen them grow and prosper over the last eighty-seven years. Now, some thirty-four Packs from across the planet's many mountain ranges followed his mother without question. She was not someone you wanted to anger or trifle with, as she had taken out more than one Mountain Alpha who thought to usurp her role in those eighty plus years. His mother was not a very large woman, but she was definitely not one who you wanted to piss off, and when in wolf form she was nearly twice the size of most female wolves and could be devastating.

Lazar received his exotic and handsome good looks from his mother's genes and this was obvious to any who saw him. Loras had long, shiny raven blue/black hair and intelligent dark brown eyes. Like him, her skin was deeply tanned to almost a burnt umber color which only enhanced her exotic appearance. He knew that many Alphas had approached her in the years following Warim's death but she had rebuked them all. He did not know if it was because she still mourned for him or if she was waiting for something else to happen. Perhaps she just did not want to open her heart to another as she did Warim.

Lazar nodded his head in answer to her question. They had not spoken for several weeks, but this was information that he could not let slide by and advise her of when he returned to COLS space.

"I am certain medwaw." He replied. "Nasso may be a brute but he is no fool. And Gomar is one of the finest sensor operators and engineers that we have within the Fleet."

Loras nodded her head. "I have heard both their names in the past. Both are completely loyal to your father keto."

Lazar lifted his hand and waved it back and forth. "More Nasso than Gomar mother." He told her. "Gomar is dedicated to COLS as a whole, more so than directly to my father."

"And they were certain it was not the Tri-Alliance?" Loras asked him.

Lazar nodded once more. "Gomar was certain medwaw. We have not had any contact with the Tri-Alliance in over a decade and the sensor net we built to detect their ships has only been online for six months. We detected one of their smaller transports a few days ago and Nasso decided to pursue it. That ship led us to these new Lycavorians. All Gomar had on their sensors at first was the one massive ship they thought was a transport. It turns out that the ship was in fact a colossal warship and it was powered by what Gomar described as some form of Quantum Power Matrix." Lazar picked up the mug of strong coffee and sipped, holding back his grimace, and then he continued. "Nasso was his usual brutish self and he tried to intimidate the commander of this ship. The Commander of this ship, he referred to himself as a Crown Prince Medwaw. Apparently there is another Lycavorian King out there somewhere and Nasso tried to pick a fight with his son."

"More unknown Lycavorians." Loras said thoughtfully. "You have read our history keto. For millennia we have grown and prospered thinking we were the only Lycavorians in the universe. Now, in the space of roughly ten thousand years, twice we have come across others of our kind whose technology is far superior to our own."

"I would not give father too much credit mother." Lazar spoke.

Loras looked at him. "His methods are vile, and he only does what he does to gain more power, but you cannot deny that our people have grown and prospered under his rule. As we did under his father's rule."

"You sound like you admire him medwaw?" Lazar told her. "Tell me this is not true." Lazar spoke.

Loras snorted loudly in an unladylike fashion. "In order to remove his nor from his body when given the opportunity." She stated harshly. "But I am also not so foolish as to dismiss what he has done as King. And neither should you."

Lazar nodded his head. "You are right mother."

"What else keto?" She asked.

Lazar nodded. "After Nasso's threats, that is when this Crown Prince revealed their other ships. Over three hundred of them, and all of them with Stealth technology that far exceeds our own. This Crown Prince threatened to blow Nasso and his other ships into the dark ages, and told him it would take a millennium to find the pieces of his nio mida." He watched his mother laugh softly at this.

"I like them already." Loras said with a smile.

“The Tri-Alliance transport boarded the large ship.” Lazar told her. “This Crown Prince called the grandchildren of the Yowa Medwaw his family.”

Loras met his eyes. “Family?” She questioned. “Are you sure?”

Lazar nodded his head. “Yes. Why?”

“More Lycavorians?” Loras spoke softly. “With technology similar to the Tri-Alliance? They were Alphas keto?”

Lazar nodded his head. “Nasso was certain at least this boy Prince was an Alpha. This stands to reason because the Yowa Medwaw is an Alpha mother. If they are related as Nasso said. He said his name is Androcles Leonidas. An odd name for a Lycavorian mother, don’t you think?”

Loras leaned forward now her eyes growing a little wider. “Androcles you say?” Loras asked him looking at him intently.

Lazar nodded. “That is what Nasso and Gomar say he called himself, yes. Do you know this name somehow?”

Loras shook her head. “No.” She answered quickly making sure that her son did not detect her tone of voice or heightened tension. “What did your father do?” Loras asked.

“Naturally, his first thought was for what power he could acquire and expand if he gained control of these ships and other Lycavorians.” Lazar answered.

Loras shook her head. “And that will be his downfall one day.” She stated confidently.

“Well... he ordered a ship to proceed to Ventori, where he believes these Lycavorians are. I convinced my father to send me instead of Juyno.” Lazar told her.

“Ventori?” Loras spoke softly. “That is the planet that the first King Aspion went to and brought the Ranev pack from. Most of the Mountain Packs to be honest.”

Lazar leaned forward in his chair. “What are you thinking mother?”

Loras shook her head. “It doesn’t matter now.” She said. “What did your father tell you to do?”

“Make contact and report back to him.” Lazar spoke looking at her keenly. “Something else is on your mind medwaw. What is it?”

“Nothing that I can put a finger on right now keto.” She told him. “It is a feeling I have, nothing more. Like an echo that I have seen somewhere in the past. It is not relevant to what is happening now however.”

“Are you so sure?” Lazar asked looking at her on the monitor.

Loras smiled at her son. “Nothing is ever certain keto.” She told him. “What will you do when you arrive there?”

“Exactly what I told him I would do. We should arrive in the Ventori system in another thirty-six hours.” He told her. “We are actually much further out than my father knows. He will not expect me to report for some time and it gives me more options to consider what to do when we arrive there.”

“Why do you push him Lazar?” Loras asked her son. “His tolerance is not infinite my son.”

“He would expect it of me.” Lazar answered. “This is how I have always been and he expects me to be like this mother. If I were to act in another way, he would become suspicious of my goals.”

“It also puts you at great risk more often than not.” Loras told him. “I am your mother and I do worry for you.”

Lazar smiled at her. “Medwaw I am more than capable of taking care of myself.” He told her. “Though I do appreciate the sentiment mother.”

“What if these new Lycavorians are not friendly to us Lazar?” Loras asked.

Lazar shook his head. “I do not think that is the case mother. If it was, they would have insured Nasso and Gomar died when they first encountered them.”

“Be careful Lazar.” Loras told him. “Something... I feel something is happening and it will... it will sweep us aside if we are not cautious.”

Lazar nodded his head as he looked at his mother intently. She had never been so affected by her intuition before, not that he had seen anyway, and it was telling to say the least. Loras Ranev had always been very good at reading how events would take shape through the years. Whether it was by some form of instinct or special gift, it was one of the main reasons that the Alphas in the Ranev Pack and others followed her so devoutly. No one questioned her word or direction for she had the best interests of their pack as her main goal.

Lazar was not one to dismiss this from his mother when she so openly expressed herself to him in such a way. That would be very stupid..

“I will be cautious mother.” He told her.

Loras met his eyes in the transmission. “If those fool spies your father has on your ship do anything to jeopardize you my son, remove them from the equation. Quickly.” Lazar nodded his head. This was not advice his mother often gave out, but when she did advocate violence in any form, it was wise to take her at her word.

“Understood.” Lazar said. “I will try to reach you after I have made contact with these new Lycavorians mother.”

“The gods guide you my son.” Loras told him. “And return home safe, your brothers and sisters wish to see you.”

Lazar smiled at that. “Then I will make it a mission to do just that.” He told her.

“Pen enyla forn.” Loras told him warmly.

“And I love you mother.” He answered just as he reached out and deactivated the monitor and cut the transmission.

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES CLAIMED SPACE
CAPITAL PLANET JETANIA
NORTHERN CONTINENT
WESTERN TANTIA MOUNTAIN RANGE
RANEV PACK; MAIN SETTLEMENT OF WARIM

Loras sat back in the comfortable chair in her home as she contemplated her conversation with her son. She reached down and picked up the mug of harsh tea and sipped from it, hoping that it helped her to wake more fully than she was. She never knew when Lazar was going to contact her and it was better for his security if she did not know. This made it difficult for her and his half brothers and sister, but it was something they were now used too and accepted. For Loras this meant being ready to take a transmission from him anytime of the day or night just like right now. Thankfully their main settlement, named in honor of her late Alpha husband and mate, was still for the most part just beginning to wake up.

The Warim Settlement was perhaps the largest and most modern of all the Mountain Pack settlements spread across three continents. Warim Settlement was a strange mix of very modern amenities and cultural history that would never be lost to time. The Mountain Packs were the only Packs within the Coalition that had not fully lost touch with their past history and cultural. This was attributed to the fact that the Mountain Packs descended from those Lycavorians taken from Ventori. They were also the only Lycavorians that had actually removed many of the ancient and often times distasteful practices of the past and opened their eyes to change. The treatment of their females being first and foremost among the differences. While it was true Alpha females who were mated already could often be courted by other Alphas during their Phase, only those where both male and female chose to allow this were courted. The unions among the Mountain Pack couples most often resulted in a union for life since neither the male nor female chose to look for another mate. Even those unions that were arranged by their parents most often lasted permanently for the parents on both sides were always careful to select the best match for their daughters and sons in the way of compatibility. The same could not be said for the rest of the Coalition, for most females were taken during the high point of their Phase and they really had no choice in who took them because of the burning of their blood.

Loras had had her share of Alpha suitors since Warim had passed into the next life, but she had denied them all. Loras had been ashamed when Warim had first claimed her because she had surrendered to Osrod because of the burning of her blood. Warim had quickly shown her that while he may have been King, Osrod did not compare to him in any way. Loras had cried out for hours in delight when Warim had claimed her and she never doubted that emotion again. She had loved Warim, enough to give him four beautiful children, but Loras did not believe she had loved him as completely as she was capable. She had held back even with him. She did not know what type of Alpha male she was seeking, but she had no doubt when she discovered that male, if she ever did, she would know instantly.

Loras looked up when the door to her private office slid open and the older, but still very beautiful woman came in dressed in only a thin robe around her full figure. Loras knew her to be nearing sixty thousand years old, but she looked barely a day past fifty years of age and her figure told everyone that very thing. Rylin may have been the Elder Priestess of their Pack, but she was not without her means. The day Warim had been assassinated she had shown up to care for Loras and she had remained to this day. Loras watched as Rylin took the couch opposite her spot in her chair.

“You look as if you have questions Matriarch.” The older woman asked.

“Knowledge is power as Garget says.” Loras spoke.

Rylin nodded her head. “It certainly is...” She said. “And that old fool has been saying that very thing for millennia.”

Loras laughed softly. “Yes, he has.”

“So what troubles you Matriarch?” Rylin asked her.

“You heard what Lazar told me?” Loras asked her.

Rylin nodded her head. “Your son with Osrod Aspion thankfully does not share his father’s quest for more power or his stupidity. He has too much of you in him and that is why Osrod does not trust him. He fears him Loras.”

“I know.” Loras spoke softly.

“Only a igord believes that we are the only Lycavorians out among the stars.” Rylin spoke. “Osrod’s *amlia*n father discovered that painfully with the Tri-Alliance and ruined any chance that we may have had to improve our own people.” (Idiot)

Loras nodded her head. “I know.” She said. “But now he is putting my son into the same position. He undoubtedly has ulterior motives that he is not sharing with Lazar. I know him too well to not realize this.”

“Lazar is far smarter than his father Matriarch.” Rylin told her. “He will not do what his grandfather did.”

Loras looked at her. “But have I put him into a position where he must think and act like a person he is not Rylin?” She asked her. “In order to protect myself?”

Rylin gazed at her intently for a long moment. “You know that you have not, but that is not what concerns you is it? You have seen or heard this name he spoke before haven’t you. The name he told you. This Androcles?”

Loras met her eyes and nodded slowly. “In the Vomir’s Tomes.” She answered.

Rylin leaned forward. “Truly. And what did the Tomes say?” She asked.

“It was the Ninth Tome of Knowledge. Vin gente vinn’ tryn arduis mornar mero shyron un vada darsam.” Loras answered ever so softly, as if speaking a sacred oath. “Mornar jen sha tor Androcles.” (He came upon fiery wings and he brought death to the unjust. And his name was Androcles)

Rylin looked at her with suddenly very wide eyes. “You are certain of this Matriarch?” She asked.

Loras nodded her head. “I remember reading the passage several times in this particular Tome.” She spoke. “I thought it was odd because the Tome said he was an Alpha of the Highest Order and that his name came from a long dead race that had been reborn among the stars.”

“The Highest Order?” Rylin gasped. “That would... that would mean that he descends from the Six original packs of Lycavore.”

Loras nodded her head slowly. “Our mythical homeworld, yes. We do not know that this Lycavore even exists.”

“Even I... Even I believed this to only be legend.” Rylin stammered softly. “Son vada carians... if this is true?”

Loras nodded her head. “Yes.”

“What else did the Tome say?” Rylin asked her.

Loras met her eyes. “It also said that he would be the first born son, the heir and one of three Heralds of Vada Fera Mard Revik.”

“The First True King.” Rylin whispered the words, her face bright with energy and new wisdom. “The Prophecy of our people from before the time of Conformity, a hundred thousand years ago.”

Loras nodded her head once more. “You see what vexes me Rylin? What if this... what if this Androcles is... what if the prophecy is true Rylin? I have... part of me has never really believed it to be true.”

Rylin rose to her feet, setting her mug aside. “We must consult with Vada Vomir herself.” She spoke quickly.

Loras stood up as well at her words. “Rylin that is impossible.” She stated. “No one knows where the Vomir is. She went into hiding after Conformity because Osrod’s father put a price on her head.”

Rylin shook her head slowly. “I know where she is.” She stated.

Loras stepped closer to her. “How is that possible Rylin?”

The older woman smiled as she met Loras’s gaze. “Who do you think instructed me to remain close to you Loras Ranev? Vada Vomir is no fool. She knows who holds the values and prosperity of our people close to their hearts.” She squeezed Loras’s hand. “Change your clothes and meet me by the southern Tram. The trip to her will be quicker if we leave right away.”

PREMONITION

ENTERING ATMOSPHERE OF VENTORI

THIRTY SECONDS POST JUMP

The wind was whipping through the rear portion of the PREMONITION’s small cargo bay, the ramp fully locked into an open position and extending straight out into the warm, thin air of Ventori. They knelt just in front of the extended ramp, their arms extended around the shoulders of the those next to them. All of them wore the new Mark IV ArmorPly Body Armor, the black and crimson giving each of them a menacing like appearance in the glare of the sunlight pouring in the rear of the ship. Their helmets rested on the deck in front of each of them, the long multicolored plumes that signaled royalty of Androcles, Denali, Dorian and Deion rustling in the wind. Laren Ti’shara knelt between Andro and Dorian, Denali and Deion side by side with Jomann and Murano completing the small circle.

For Murano it was a glorious experience no matter that they were leaping out into battle in only seconds. He had not been among so many fellow Praetorians in more millennia than he cared to recall and to feel the Etheric power swirling within and around them filled him with a resolve he had not experienced since he had first stood beside Sumar in battle. This time it was different he knew, for he could feel the emotions coursing through each of them unchecked. This was what the Praetorians of his time had tried to avoid and what Sumar had discovered on Lycavore and then passed down to his descendants. Emotions were not a hindrance, emotions were a gift that provided power and purpose. Powerful emotions allowed Androcles and the others to do things that the Praetorians of his time would never have been able to accomplish and once he had seen the truth of this, Murano had embraced it completely and without doubt.

He had embraced these emotions where it concerned his love for Tobia and last night he had shown her just where she had stood in the center of his universe. Her cries of ecstasy had filled his quarters for four straight hours as he embraced his feelings and love for her and held nothing back. Murano did not doubt if not for this operation right now, he would still be loving the feel of her body beside his and hearing her words of devotion and love. Murano was a changed man forever now, and nothing would stand in the way of his love for Tobia or the love he held for Mari, the beautiful daughter they had created together. One day soon he would stand before his brother Delnash and embrace him and thank him for teaching and caring for Mari as his own for all of those years. Murano shook his head slightly and filtered everything else out as Androcles’ words once more filled his ears above the din of the wind whipping through the cargo bay.

“...Hold nothing back. This is our time now. This is where we see the rebirth of the legacy our grandfather left for us to embrace. The legacy of the power that flows within us.” Andro looked at Jomann across from him and then let his eyes move to Murano. “The legacy that will embrace and flow through others as well. Near and far.”

Jomann nodded his head with a knowing smile. “Avoi.” He spoke.

“Indeed.” Murano echoed Jomann’s word.

“Andro! Thirty seconds our love!” Sadi’s calm voice echoed through the internal Com system of the ship over the roar of the wind and they all felt Andro reach out to his father and tell him the same thing.

Andro grasped his helmet and lowered it over his head and face and watched the others do the same. “Jomann and Denali out first! Dorian, myself and Laren in the center, Deion and Murano right after.” He glanced out the rear of the ship and saw the terrain below them. “If we fail, father and Uncle Daniel fall. If we fail, our mothers fall. Our siblings already on the surface fall.” He turned and looked at them with blazing azure colored eyes. “Let’s not fail. Father will never let us live it down!”

“No he won’t!” Denali chimed in.

Andro turned back to where Elynth stood with Ryner, Ladur, Jeth, Aradace, Majeir and Marux. Caydren and Cinol book ended the line of dragons and family standing proudly. Lisisa, Arduri, Sehri, Lu'ria, Carisia, Sheva and Onera and Caliria all stood there as well watching them with adoration in their eyes. Dutkne looked stern faced and ready, falling easily into his role as Praetorian Mage and eager to get on the surface so that he could go about the business of claiming Zarah and Lucia.

“Do not be late sister.” Andro spoke.

Elynth snorted loudly as if offended by his statement. “I am never late.” She stated openly. “And I will not tarnish that record now my beautiful brother.”

“Andro! NOW!” Sadi’s voice erupted from the internal speakers once more.

“Into the hands of our grandfather’s spirits do we commend our souls.” Andro spoke loudly.

“May they guide our actions and thoughts and pick us up if we fall!” The bevy of voices echoed his.

“Deni! Now!” Andro shouted.

The was no hesitation in the least and Denali stepped off into nothing, followed quickly into the abyss by Jomann, Dorian, Androcles, Laren, Deion and Murano.

VENTORI

Martin saw it first, low on the horizon and approaching from the east over the mountains. He had never seen a ship like it before and knew instantly that it was the ship that Sadi and Ne'Veha had Ben and his miracle workers at Dreamland build for them. Martin narrowed his wolf vision and saw that the ship had a rear ramp, which was now down. His dark brown eyes grew wide then, for he felt his son reach for him and project to him what it was they were going to do. The ship came closer now, and dropped to perhaps a hundred meters off the ground.

Danny stepped up next to him, his own eyes focused on the ship now. “Fervon?” Martin looked at him. “Is he going to do what I think he is going to do?”

Martin glanced at the lines of advancing Svorag and then looked back to the ship as it was now upon them. He saw first one figure leap from the back of the ship as it moved across the terrain, followed quickly by six more figures.

“Holy fuck! Torma 21!” Martin hissed loudly. He turned to the line of defenders without thinking as he grabbed Kasdan. “Shields and brace! Shields and brace!” He screamed out the words as loud as his vocal cords could project them, his voice carrying to all of them and then some. He and Danny dropped to one knee right where they were, anchoring Kasdan between them and their Shi Viskas pointing towards the oncoming Svorag hoard, covering their bodies and that of Kasdan as well.

And then the world blew up.

Torma 21.

A simple name for a devastating maneuver that he and Torma had invented and perfected during their time together. It was similar in many ways to the maneuver that his grandfather had explained in the Praetorian Tomes he had left for his descendants. The difference here was that it was usually done from the back of a dragon and not from the back of a ship. Martin could feel each of his sons, Jomann, Murano and Laren. They were radiating within the Etheric realm as brightly as he had ever seen any of them, pulsing with power and determination and purpose. It started from his left, an Etheric explosion of power that blew outwards with unmatched force as his son Denali was the first to impact the ground.

It was followed in quick succession by six more identical explosions of Etheric power before the first one had even begun to ripple outward. It was complete and absolute devastating power and force. Two thousand five hundred Newtons of force, or five hundred and sixty-two foot pounds of force moving at nearly two thousand feet a second. This is what smashed into the oncoming ranks of Svorag and literally pulverized anything in its way.

It was then that Panos' words to him so long ago rang clearly in his head now. The same words Panos had spoken to his son Androcles the day that he had claimed Sadi as his wife and mate. They were not just Lycavorians and Spartans...

...They were forces of nature.

Martin didn't need to look over the top of his Shi Viska and its shielding protection to feel the incredible force buffeting his body and he grit his teeth and gripped Kasdan's shoulder in order to keep him below the lip of the shield. He glanced across and saw the same look of determination on Danny's face as they braced against the massive force of the Etheric kinetic waves with all of their strength. Martin Leonidas could feel the power within them, he could feel it coursing through him and it felt glorious. He looked up quickly, just his eyes lifting over the top of his shield and they grew wide at what they saw. Seven figures standing in a single line perhaps a hundred meters apart, and the wave of Etheric power sweeping away from them like a tidal surge of overwhelming and utterly lethal power. It was literally lifting Svorag into the air and crushing their bodies in its wake. He saw the plumes on the helmets of his sons and Jomann being tossed about wildly in the wake of the that Etheric surge and he turned his head quickly to see the others in the defensive line beginning to look up over their shields, many of them with furrows in the ground behind them as they dug their boots in to withstand the power.

"Fervon!" Martin screamed out.

Danny gripped Kasdan's shoulder and nodded his head. "Go!" He barked.

Martin Leonidas stood up and with a war whoop he leaped into an Etheric assisted jump that carried him forward.

"...introduce your grandchildren." Aricia spoke with a smile as yet unmatched by any Jezima had seen so far.

The first Etheric explosion erupted just as Jezima turned her eyes and those dark brown orbs grew wider as each successive Etheric impact went off and they could only watch as the first ranks of Svorag were practically turned to crushed noodles in the wake of that power. Jezima's hands went to her face in shock, her eyes once more filling with tears as she bore firsthand witness to the ultimate legacy of her oldest son. Meral was shaking her head in awe while gripping For'mya tightly, tears also running down her cheeks.

It was Tinra's words that broke the moment. "By all the Ancients within the Rift of Time!" She gasped aloud. "They are... they are Praetorians!" She looked at the man who controlled the video drones that followed them everywhere. "Tell me that went out Mitra! Tell me that went out!"

The man was staring at his P9 and the two feeds from his drones. "I got it! I got it all! It's a live feed! I'm beaming it back to Honelze! Gods this is incredible!"

All of them heard the almost inhuman scream and they looked below them to see Martin rise to his feet and throw himself into an Etheric jump that took him out to the line that their sons, Jomann and Murano occupied.

"What is that noise!?" Anja barked as the almost deafening roar was nearly upon them.

All of them turned to the rear and if it was possible, their eyes grew even larger.

"Saoi nubous sibfla!" Anja muttered.

The port side of the KINDRED SOUL broke through the thin, low hanging clouds and appeared over Discovery Base barely a thousand meters above them like some angry god descending from the heavens above.

Martin Leonidas landed between his sons with a unique glint in his eyes. His chest swelled with enormous pride and love as he looked at Andro, Dorian, Deion and Denali. That look extended to Jomann and Laren as he touched gazes with all of them and he saw Murano with what could only be called a shit eating grin on his face.

“Murano!” Martin barked.

“Nice to see you again Martin!” Murano barked back.

Martin looked at Andro. “Bout time you got here boy!” He snapped loudly. “What the hell took you so long?”

Andro met his eyes with a smile. “That is your fault father! You are the one who gave me command of a ship as large as a small moon.” He commented. “We could not find a parking spot!”

Martin turned his head down the valley floor and saw the Svorag beginning to recover. The massive Etheric combo had stopped their initial advance in its tracks and the Etheric wave had probably killed thousands of the Svorag monsters as it tossed thousands more of them back nearly a quarter of a mile. “Now what?” Martin barked out. “That ain’t going to hold them back son! They are pesky little fuckers.”

Andro held the KM14 out to his father as he spoke. “You will need this father. A new toy for you.” He spoke as Martin took the weapon. “And don’t worry, I have a few more surprises up my sleeve.” He turned back toward Discovery Base and smiled at what he saw as the KINDRED SOUL filled the entire sky behind them. Martin was looking over the new weapon when he heard Andro’s next words and turned.

“Captain Patton... would you bring the rain please!” Andro spoke aloud.

Martin turned and his eyes nearly bugged out of his head. “Holy fuck!” He screamed out once more.

“It would be a pleasure Androcles!” The man’s voice replied over their COM units. “Bringing the rain!”

KINDRED SOUL

“...Bring the rain please!” Androcles voice thundered through the bridge.

“It would be a pleasure Androcles!” Patton answered as he rose to his feet. “Bringing the rain!” Patton turned to face his Weapons Officer. “Full GSB WEPS! Ten second burst on all batteries!”

“All batteries primed and ready sir!” The man answered.

“Prepare to go to EOT and to direct Ground Support Craft from the ARIZONA and SPARTA’S WRATH XO!” Patton barked.

“Standing by sir!”

Patton smiled. “You heard the man! Let’s bring the rain! Fire!”

VENTORI

“You may wish to cover your ears father.” Andro told him a split second before the horrible buzzing noise began, broken only by the deep thud like sound of the heavy Ground Support Rail Cannons.

Martin’s hands went to his ears instantly as the entire port side of the KINDRED SOUL lit up like a Christmas tree and was bathed in thick, white smoke as every Ground Support Battery on the port side of the ship opened up at the same time.

The KINDRED SOUL had been built specifically for this type of action from the moment of her inception in Ben’s often times warped and genius mind. To deliver the 82nd from orbit and then enter the atmosphere and act as a massive mobile ground support platform with a reach that no known enemy could touch. Since this was to be a very precise barrage, only the port side ship mounted MLRS units fired.

Six launchers with twenty missile tubes per launcher, each filled with anti-personnel cluster bomb like munitions, ripple fired off their missiles inside of three seconds. Four of the 45mm Paladin MK XII Plasma artillery batteries each fired five rounds apiece and twenty-two of the fifty-four port side 30mm Enhanced Rail Chain Cannons let loose with nearly twenty thousand rounds of Dragon Armor tipped Rail shells. As one Durcunusaan troop who witnessed it would later describe to his fellow Spartans when they landed, it was as if the heavens opened up and yorbe came through.

The valley before Discovery Base was nearly a mile across at its widest point leading up to the edge of the city of Jorlari. It had once been a serene valley with parks, trees and flowers dotting the landscape. The initial Svorag invasion had shattered that valley as skilled and proud Ventori soldiers and their weapons tried to hold them off from reaching the city limits. Now it would be remembered by those Lycavorians from Ventori as the valley that began the rebirth of their people and their world. It would one day become what it once was, but today would not be that day.

Martin turned his head quickly to see the results of the ghastly ten second barrage as it was over just as quickly as it had begun. His dark brown eyes grew wide at the picture before him. Their crushing Etheric maneuver had thrown the Svorag back nearly a quarter of a mile from where he stood and the KINDRED SOUL's weapons did the rest. With unerring accuracy, the barrage had begun at where they were once more massing to charge across the valley and in that ten seconds anything within an additional quarter mile was turned to, for lack of a better word in his vocabulary, hamburger. He could see Svorag bodies being tossed through the smoke and debris as the anti-personnel missiles struck and showered out even smaller bomblets that exploded on contact. The wildly powerful Paladin artillery shells landed with even more force, showering the surrounding Svorag with white hot, blue flamed plasma. The Dragon Armor tipped Rail shells punched through three and four Svorag bodies leaving gaping wounds that nothing could survive. Martin could see at least a dozen of the huge Svorag that he and Danny had fought in the bunker in the ranks of Svorag and he could only watch with happiness as the Rail Shells blew apart their oversized bodies like melons.

"Close ranks!" Andro barked the order and Martin's head turned quickly to see Denali, Deion, Dorian, Laren, Jomann and Murano step to within a few feet of him and Andro looked to the distance.

Now sister! He shouted out into the Etheric realm.

On our way!

Martin turned his head back to the valley and he saw them rise above the ridge in the distance and bore straight in. Elynth rocketed across the ground leading them, but Martin could see that Torma, Isheeni, Aurith, Miath and Seyra had joined them. He didn't recognize the two sleek and not yet fully grown dragons among them, but he knew Jeth, Aradace, Jeru, Maruth, Sorin and Tharua. Their Dragon Armor was fully extended across their bodies now and with trumpets of anger and retribution filling the air, fourteen dragons descended upon the battlefield with super-heated blasts of their breath and scorching hot lances of flame. In mere seconds they were among the Svorag and the ugly scaled bodies began to fly then as Heavyhorn tails and savagely curved talons began to shred the beasts. There was really no contest as Martin witnessed Torma's mace like Heavyhorn tail spin around and connect fully with one of the larger Svorag monsters like he had fought with Danny. He could almost see as that one blow pulverized the creature's entire upper body and turned it to jelly.

"Andro what..." Martin began to speak to his son as he turned but Andro held up his hand as he tapped the COM implant on his jaw.

"Josie... the LZ is clear." Andro spoke looking at his father with a crooked grin. "Would you and your Devil Dogs care to join the party?"

"Roger that Andro! Twenty seconds!"

Andro looked at his father. "You may want to stay close to us father." He said pointing up.

Martin's eyes grew wide and he looked directly up. "Holy jumping shit!" He exclaimed as he saw the pods descending through the sky directly over the top of them.

"You will enjoy this father." Andro told him.

82nd CATAPHRACT DIVISION
1st BRIGADE DEVIL DOGS
COLONEL JOSIE MILLER COMMANDING
MUSIC PLAYING IN BACKGROUND
MAGIC CARPET RIDE/STAPPENWOLF

"Josie... the LZ is clear." Andro's calm voice filled her helmet. "Would you and your Devil Dogs care to join the party?"

“Roger that Andro! Twenty seconds!” Josie Miller replied instantly. Josie quickly checked her monitor where she had been observing the battle on the ground since they had exited the KINDRED SOUL’s and descended through the atmosphere. “That’s it Devil Dogs! In we go! Freddie... spin it up!”

“Oh yeah! Magic Carpet Ride baby! Yeehah!!” The male voice echoed over their COMS and suddenly, through every COM unit in orbit and on the ground, the music erupted almost louder than most of them could tolerate, overriding every other signal on the planet. Only Josie Miller’s voice broke into the music.

“Close ranks by squad! Thruster burn now! Drop to deploy! And for fuck’s sake, no one land on Andro or the King!” Josie shouted out the order.

Even over the music and across the COM, the laughter from many different sources from within the 1st Brigade echoed, but it caused nearly every head on Ventori to turn and watch as those bright lights falling from the sky began to take shape into cylindrical like tubes. All of them seemed to be tightening into small groups of four and five as they fell and they did not appear to be slowing down in the least. Then as the woman’s words echoed over the COM everyone saw small thrusters ignite on the bottom of each pod just seconds before it impacted the ground. There was a momentary pause before hatches began to blow and the armored men and women of the 1st Brigade, 82nd Cataphract Division set foot on Ventori ready to do harm.

Martin could only watch in awe as the pods began to land all around them, some only ten meters away, all of them in groups of four or five and none of them even remotely close enough to harm them. The thud and vibration of their impacts rattled through the surface for a few seconds before the explosive bolts on the hatches began to blow and the rush of compressed air filled the area around them. Martin had seen many simulations with Ben about how the 82nd would enter combat, but he would never forget this day and experiencing it firsthand. There was no pause and no chaos as pods continued to strike the ground all around them, hatches blew and the armored soldiers of the 82nd appeared ready to do battle.

Their matte black Cataphract Armor was new in color, splashed in different areas with crimson red, no doubt to honor their Spartan training. Each member of the 82nd had to complete a Spartan training course similar to the Agoge in order to be accepted into the ranks. While nowhere near as long or harsh as the Agoge that most other members of the Union took part in, it was without a doubt, the harshest and most dangerous training that any human being had gone through in their history. If one could imagine the training regimes of every Special Operations Unit from old Earth meshed together in one program, this would be it. In order to operate the Cataphract Armor suits they had to be in perfect physical condition and able to do things humans would not normally do of their own free will. The men and women of the 82nd were a breed all their own.

They sprinted forward to obviously pre-determined distances and took up defensive stances without any orders being relayed over the COMs as the sounds of the song Magic Carpet Ride began to recede into nothing. Now arrayed in front of where he stood, in three separate lines, were three thousand men and women ready to do battle.

Martin turned as the armored figure approached at a trot. She was obviously female and she clearly knew his son.

“All down and accounted for Andro!” Josie spoke without removing her helmet. “Saw a line of fuglies off to the west and bearing in! Nothing from the east!”

“How many west?” Martin barked.

“Hard to tell King Leonidas.” Josie answered. “Several thousand at least! Turrets and minefields won’t stop these things it looks like. They don’t mind crawling over their dead!”

Martin turned back quickly and his eyes found Danny. He reached up and tapped his jaw. “Fervon! Colonel Miller says they are coming from the west as well! By the bucket load! The turrets and minefield won’t be enough!”

Danny answered immediately. “I got it!” He barked. “Give me a couple squads of those new armored freaks and we’ll deal with it!”

Martin turned to Josie to issue the order but she was way ahead of him. He saw her turn her head and her voice filled the COM once more. “Alpha Company stand to! Double time back to General Simpson! Hold the west side of Discovery Base Devil Dogs!”

“Hooah!” Martin heard dozens of voices rip out the word at the same time and then he saw over two hundred of the armored figures break ranks and begin sprinting back towards Danny, and they were moving far faster than any human normally could because of their advanced armor.

Martin heard the screeching of the Svorag and turned once more seeing Torma and the others still engaged with the hoard. “Now what boy?” Martin snapped. “These fucking lizard assholes have done pissed me off but we can’t take them with just this number of troops Andro! I taught you better than that!”

Andro looked at his father and rolled his eyes. “Have faith father!” Andro spoke with a grin under his helmet. “We only need to push them back to their hole!”

“What? Why?” Martin exclaimed. “I want them dead! Every stinking one of them! I want this planet clear!”

“Just stick with us!” Andro snapped as he turned to Josie. “Now is as good a time as any Josie!”

“Roger that!” She barked and moved off at a trot.

“Andro we need to...” Martin began to speak but Josie Miller’s next words caused his head to snap forward.

“Devil Dogs! Let’s cook us some fuglies! Charge!” Josie screamed out.

Martin watched as his son turned to the south and he felt him reach out easily within the Etheric realm and speak only two words. This was not something that Martin had expected nor even given any thought to up until this very moment.

Daurgo now!

Martin smiled to himself as he broke into a run beside his sons. Oh yes, things were going to get very interesting.

VENTORI TEN MILES NORTH OF JORLARI

It was their fastest deployment since they had been formed, but they were ready and had been for some time. They could only do so much on their ship because of its size, but the moment Androcles had come to them with the plan, hasty though it may have been, they were prepared to execute it. In reality, most of them just wanted to get off their ship and stretch their wings.

The Dragon Brigade was now fully in the sky, orbiting the forest and mountains below at a thousand feet waiting for the word. They circled the terrain in formation, Daurgo coasting on the thermal at five thousand feet keeping his eyes on his dragons. He longed to see Arzoal once more and feel her scales beside his but his duty and hers came first. He had accepted that long ago and in typical male dragon fashion he had never strayed from the goal of making Arzoal his. They were mates now, Arzoal seemingly even giddier about that fact than he was, and perhaps in the future they could have hatchlings of their own. Arzoal had mentioned this when they were alone before she left, but both of them knew it was not time. Knowing what they did now, even as old as she was, Arzoal would still be considered a very young dragon by her own kind, and Daurgo had every intention of insuring their future held children.

His head snapped around when he felt the tingle from Androcles and then his words burst forth.

Daurgo now!

There was no hesitation on his part. The day he and Elynth became Vrelvel Sargti was the day every dragon within the Union took a different view of Androcles Leonidas. It was well known even before this that he had an affinity for dragons that others did not. He could almost sense what other dragons were thinking as could Elynth. Discovering what they had these last weeks all made sense now. Androcles was dragon. He had dragon blood flowing within him, as did Dorian Leonidas. This made them dragons. This made them so very unique.

This made them Dahakoan.

Following them was never in question.

Dragon Brigade! Androcles has called! We go now! By formation!

The three thousand trumpets of approval echoed across the clear sky and the Dragon Brigade folded their wings and surged north into battle.

DISCOVERY BASE

“...Defensive positions by the MED building!” Anja snapped as she moved toward the door into the medical facility. It was the most reinforced and heavily fortified building within Discovery Base. “All non-combatants set up positions in the rear of the building! Give me three teams of four on all four corners! We need...”

Aricia was pulling Jezima and Meral along with For'mya and Tinra, her VID Drone operator scrambling to keep up while Archer and Asa were moving in front of them on high alert.

Jezima gripped Aricia's hand tightly. “Anja is...”

“Anja will direct operations here. She is far more knowledgeable in this way than either For'mya or I.” Aricia spoke as they walked briskly and Jezima saw that she was leading them toward the waiting STRIKER Mark II. “You and Meral must get airborne and out of danger now.”

“Aricia no!” Meral exclaimed.

Aricia stopped and looked at them, drawing For'mya close to her as well as Jezima and Meral. Tinra's drone operator focused one of his two drones on the small group of women without them noticing.

“We will not leave!” Jezima spoke firmly.

“Yes, you will.” Aricia spoke to her just as firmly and squeezing her hands tightly. “You are our Beloved's only connection to his past Jezima. The only link to the staanio that set him and our children on this path. You are his staania and he will allow no harm to come to you no matter what.”

“What about you?” Jezima protested. “Anja and For'mya? You will remain here and fight! And so shall we!”

For'mya shook her head as she pulled Meral close. “No. Aricia, Anja and I have been fighting beside him for decades. We know what he will do and he knows what we will do. What we are capable of. We cannot be at our best if we worry for you and Meral. Martin would be... he would be distracted if you remained. Torn between fighting these monsters and keeping you safe. It must be like this.”

“There is more to it than just that!” Meral complained. “We can see it in your faces!”

For'mya nodded her head slowly. “He does not wish you to see what he may have to do. What our children and our friends and our soldiers may have to do.” She answered her. “And neither do we.”

“I know what war is For'mya.” Jezima said.

Aricia shook her head now. “No staania.” She said softly. “You have not seen how we wage war. We are not Pralors, we are Lycavorian Spartans and we do not hold back or offer mercy. And we do not take prisoners.”

Tinra was standing quietly and she thought for a moment that Aricia's statement should have offended her or made her view them in a different light. Aricia's statement sounded so correct though, and she felt nothing but admiration for all of them. She stepped forward quickly.

“Queen Aricia... what if we were on your ship there and off the ground.” She offered. “We could just circle the area and not be in harm's way. If things... if events do not turn out, we will move to your ship in orbit.”

Aricia met her eyes for a long moment and then glanced at For'mya before slowly nodding her head. “Very well.” She spoke. “Archer, you and Asa see to it they get aboard the STRIKER. When the battle is over and we are confident we have prevailed then you may allow the ship to return.”

Archer nodded his head as he came up to them. “As you order my Queen.”

Aricia looked at Jezima and Meral once more. “Do this for us. For Martin. Please.”

Jezima nodded her head after a moment. “Very well.”

Aricia kissed her cheek quickly as did For'mya and she motioned to Archer. “Take them and get airborne. When this is over you may return.”

Archer took Jezima's arm gently and she gripped his hand willingly now as Meral took Asa's hand. "May the gods watch over you." Jezima spoke softly.

Aricia smiled and nodded her head. "And you."

Archer urged them to come with him and For'mya stepped up close to Aricia as they headed for the STRIKER in the distance. They slipped their arms around each other's waist.

"Now what?" For'mya asked her. "With them off the surface and safe, our Beloved will not hold back."

Aricia nodded her head. "And neither will we." She spoke. "We..."

"Aricia! For'mya!" The female voice spoke from behind them.

Aricia and For'mya turned and saw Perlae, Ishma and Awser move up to them at a jog, the three adolescent dragons scampering along behind them.

"Perlae!" Aricia exclaimed. "What are you doing here? You should have remained in orbit!"

Perlae shook her head as they stopped in front of them. "You are our family and if you fight, we fight!" She spoke. "All of us have been well trained by our father and others and we will stand with you!"

Aricia glanced at For'mya quickly and then nodded her head. "Perlae, remain at the Medical facility with Anja. It will be the last defensive position if these monsters breach the perimeter in any area. Awser, move to the west wall and report to Daniel Simpson. Ishma, you come with For'mya and I."

"Where are we going?" Ishma asked quickly.

Aricia took her hand. "You will see." She replied as she headed for where Normya's STRIKER was resting a short distance from the MED building.

"I have seen that look before Aricia!" For'mya commented as she moved along beside them.

Aricia glanced at her and smiled. "I know."

PRALOR SPACE

ARTAAYA

CAPITAL CITY ERENDA

Delnash walked back into his office from the balcony overlooking the city and saw Avatar 27 standing beside the huge wall monitor.

"27, what is going on?" Delnash asked. "Even from my balcony I can see the activity in the City Center. Much more than usual for this time of morning."

The massive seven-foot-tall Avatar turned to face him. -A live transmission from Lady Tinra Chief Elder- 27 answered. -It is being re-directed from Honelze and beamed all over the planet. She left for Ventori several days ago as you know-

Delnash nodded his head as he moved to his desk. "Yes, she wanted to conduct more of her interviews with Martin and his wives."

-Chief Elder Delnash you had better witness this. It is a live feed from Ventori- 27 told him gaining his attention. -It appears as if the Svorag have attacked them in force-

"What?!" Delnash gasped aloud as he moved over to the monitor.

"...Lifted off into the skies above what remains of this once great Lycavorian city! It was destroyed only a few years ago when the Svorag invaded this world. " Tinra's face appeared both drawn yet animated. "Only moment ago I witnessed something that I never in my life believed I would see. Mitra play it for them..."

The picture shifted to a view of charging Svorag and then, startling everyone who was receiving and watching the transmission, from above came seven armored figures who dropped to the ground from out of the picture and sent devastating Etheric shockwaves ripping outward to smash into the ranks of the Svorag with the force of a major hurricane.

“I knew what Martin Leonidas was when I first interviewed him on Manne.” Tinra’s voice began speaking once more. “A Lycavorian yes, but also a Praetorian. There was never any question of that just being around him. He is a Lycavorian. A member of a species that most of our own great scientific community considers inferior in every way to us.”

Delnash detected the scorn in Tinra’s voice when she spoke those words and he had to smile to himself.

“Today, Martin Leonidas’ son Androcles, himself a Praetorian and descendant of our own Chief Elder Sumar, he returned with Praetorian Murano and five other Praetorians among them. Three of them Martin Leonidas’ sons as well. You have just witnessed their entrance into this battle here on Ventori. Praetorians! Bless the Ancients within the Rift of Time! Never did I imagine this could be. The Praetorians have returned to us!”

Tinra paused for a long moment as the recording showed them Martin leaping forward to land beside his sons and standing in the face of thousands upon thousands of charging Svorag. Tinra’s voice picked up once more.

“Martin Leonidas and his people were here on Ventori hoping to assist those survivors of the Lycavorians that once called this planet home. Lycavorians that one of our Seed Missions left here! Lycavorians that were prospering and growing peacefully until the Svorag came and destroyed their world killing millions in the process. Monsters that we created!”

Delnash shook his head. “Tinra no.” He gasped.

“I say that we created them because this is the truth. The Svorag are not some naturally occurring species within the universe.” Tinra spoke evenly. “They were created by one of our own scientists and now he has lost control of them. Elder Lorendo created these monsters for a purpose none of us could fathom. The Elder in charge of our own Science Convocation is responsible for their creation and the deaths of so many of our people and, as I have discovered, millions of others as well. And now a species we thought beneath us is out here fighting these monsters in order to protect innocents. We...”

“Damn!” Delnash snapped as Tinra continued to speak. “27... we need to get ahead of this!” He barked. “Call for an Emergency Meeting of all Elders in one hour! Have Garen lock down all spaceports! Lorendo and his cronies will undoubtedly try to leave the planet if they are even here! Issue an immediate arrest warrant for Elder Lorendo and send security troops to seize all of his assets!”

-As you instruct Chief Elder- 27 spoke as Delnash continued to look at the screen.

“And 27?” Delnash spoke. “I want a chronological timeline of Lorendo’s activities dating back to before the fall of our people. It is out in the open now and I am going to make him the most wanted face in the universe. Make sure you include his actions and suspected involvement in Sumar’s crash and the deaths of millions of our people on those City Ships with him.”

-Understood Chief Elder-

“Once you have done those things... contact Dysea and Isabella on Honelze.” Delnash spoke. “We will need to coordinate out in the open fully now.”

-Do you wish to have Lady Tinra’s transmission interrupted- 27 asked.

Delnash shook his head. “No.” He replied. “I may have waited too long before but I will not hide any longer. Allow her to report everything and give any other agencies our full support if they begin asking questions. Her subordinates will undoubtedly come to us to confirm what she is reporting and I’ll be damned if I will throw her to the wolves for telling the truth.” He told him. “We will not hide any longer!”

“Wait... we are getting an image from the battle below us and...” Tinra’s eyes went wide at what she saw and the picture changed to one of utter mayhem. “By all that we hold holy!”

SCIMITAR
TASK FORCE SPARTAN HAMMER
ADMIRAL SA'SUR COMMANDING

“Report!” Sa'sur barked from her command chair on the bridge.

“All Task Force ships have made the turn Admiral!” The TO replied instantly. “All Fleet Groups in Defensive Pattern X-ray one four and maintaining Shroud. The only one they see is us Admiral.”

Sa'sur nodded her head. “The Kintaur ships?”

“Still closing, course 2675.9.” The TO answered. “Looks like a standard attack formation Admiral. Man, they are some seriously ugly ships too.”

Sa'sur smiled as she rose to her feet. “Let's not discount them. Status of their weapons and shields?”

“All of them running with shields active.” The TO replied. “Rudimentary laser cannon point defense systems on most of them, some with what appears to be first generation plasma based beam arrays and light projectile turrets.” He looked up at her as she met his eyes. “None of it will even scratch our shields Admiral, not to mention our hull.”

Sa'sur nodded her head. “Very well, but let's be safe. Raise our shields and power all weapons. Andro said not to jerk around with these fools because they have been kidnapping our people from this planet and I don't intend to.” Sa'sur moved to the center of her command platform. “COM officer, open a channel to these Kintaur. Let's see if they are awake.”

“Channel open Admiral.”

Sa'sur took a deep breath. “This is Admiral Sa'sur of the United Lycavorian Union Command Ship SCIMITAR to the approaching Kintaur Hegemony ships. You have entered a recognized Lycavorian Union Planetary System and I request that you state your intentions. Please respond to this transmission or you will be considered hostile and we will fire on you. I will not be repeating this message. SCIMITAR out.”

KINTAUR COMMAND SHIP
SECTOR GENERAL SULOS
SUN ARROW

Sulos was watching his main monitor as the massive ship approached slowly.

“This is Admiral Sa'sur of the United Lycavorian Union Command Ship SCIMITAR to the approaching Kintaur Hegemony ships. You have entered a recognized Lycavorian Union Planetary System and I request that you state your intentions. Please respond to this transmission or you will be considered hostile and we will fire on you. I will not be repeating this message. SCIMITAR out.”

Sulos turned to the side of his bridge. “You can detect nothing?” He asked his main sensor operator.

“Negative General.” The man answered. “The same type of distortion field surrounds this ship as it did the others and the composition of the hull is very similar to the others as well.” The man lifted his eyes. “It is a metal that we have never seen before sir.”

Dynv stepped closer to Sulos from where he had been standing against the bulkhead. “It is only one ship General. The others have remained around Ventori. We should destroy it and move on to the planet.”

“General! New contacts!” His sensor operator barked. “Just coming into range sir! One massive contact is currently parked directly over the planet sir! General it is over twenty thousand meters long!”

Sulos looked at him. “How... how is that even possible!” He exclaimed.

“Three other ships matching the configuration of the warship approaching our location sir! All of them are maintaining positions over the planet in what appear to be low orbits!” The man barked.

Sulos looked at his sensor operator once more. “And you can detect nothing that would tell us how many other ships they have out there?”

The man shook his head once more. "I'm sorry General."

Sulos looked at Dynv. "Dynv?" He asked.

"Attack now General." The man answered. "It is only one ship and we may not get another chance like this."

"And how many ships can we not see?" Sulos demanded.

"This false King ordered the destruction of one of our ships!" Dynv spat. "We must respond in kind."

Sulos met his eyes for a long moment and then turned to the side. "Inform all ships to prepare to fire!" He ordered quickly. "Full weapons!" Dynv looked pleased with himself as Sulos moved to his command chair. "Open the channel to this female! I will speak with her first."

Dynv looked surprised and he moved forward. "General what are you doing?" He gasped. "You should attack now!"

Sulos looked at him. "I will not risk my men and ships against an unknown force!" Sulos snapped. "I..."

Dynv calmly withdrew the sidearm he wore on his belt, leveled it at Sulos's head and fired from point blank range. Sulos's head exploded like an overripe melon, showering the deck and parts of his chair with bits of skull and brain matter. The sound was deafening in the confines of the bridge and no one did anything because they stood there in shock. Dynv looked around the bridge slowly as he lowered the weapon, daring anyone to challenge him with his demeanor.

"General Sulos was required by our law to act!" Dynv barked. "He refused to defend Kintaur laws and has paid the price. I will be assuming command of this ship." He looked around the bridge. "Does anyone care to challenge me? You will meet the same fate as General Sulos here."

No one on the bridge moved and Dynv waited for a few seconds longer before pushing Sulos's now cooling body out of the chair to thump onto the deck unceremoniously. He settled into the chair, ignoring the blood stains and looked at the monitor. "Order the fleet to fire on that ship, destroy it and then prepare to move to the planet!" He barked.

There was a pause before the Tactical officer looked up from his station. "The... the fleet signals ready sir!"

Dynv had a smug look on his face as he spoke the order he had always wanted to give even as a small child.

"Fire!"

SCIMITAR

"Nothing?" Sa'sur asked looking at her Com officer.

"All channels silent Admiral."

Sa'sur looked at the Kintaur fleet in her holographic tactical plot. "I don't like this." She stated. "Are they still closing?"

"No change in course or speed Admiral." The OPS officer replied.

"Inform the Task Force to be prepared to attack." Sa'sur spoke now. "I am not..."

"Admiral! They are locking weapons! They are locking weapons!" Her TO screamed out.

"Evasive port! Evasive port!" Sa'sur shouted the order loudly. "Weapons free! Weapons free! Point defenses engage!"

Sa'sur gripped the sides of her chair as the SCIMITAR heeled over to the left side in a powerful turn to port.

"They are firing Admiral!" Her TO screamed out. "Point defenses engaging! Task Force requesting permission to engage!"

Sa'sur could feel the hammering of the SCIMITAR's Point defense batteries as they began to fire at an unbelievable rate. The SCIMITAR shuddered violently as the Kintaur weapons from nearly three hundred ships began to impact all across her shields as she turned. The Point Defense Batteries were engaging faster than the eye could follow, the Nodon Engineering JCN Type 71 Tactical Network and NorthAm Mk X Aegis FCS providing the brains behind the system. The SCIMITAR was among the first of the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike

Cruisers to undergo the refit to the ARIZONA-Class computer and fire control systems and now it would pay off in huge dividends. Developed by Nodon Engineers under the guidance of the Avatar Avi, they had built a computer system that could regulate and control the advanced weapons that the new Union ships would have. And control them it would.

“Tell me they did not just shoot their pip squeak guns at my ship!” Sa'sur snarled and she gripped the sides of her chair tighter as the SCIMITAR's regenerative shields absorbed what hits the PDS batteries did not take out. “Report!”

“Shields at ninety-seven percent!” Her OPS officer barked out. “Minor buckling to port nose outer shell! Sections forty-two and forty-three! They took the brunt of the force! Worker Drones nine through twelve already moving to repair!”

Sa'sur looked at him with wide eyes. “They scratched my ship!” She barked aloud as she turned back toward the main bridge view window. “TO! Main Batteries two through fourteen on that big, ugly ass ship in the center! 1st Echelon of Task Force de-shroud and engage! 2nd Echelon to remain shrouded and support as needed! Scratch my ship will you? Sibfla!”

SUN ARROW

“Well?” Dynv snapped as he turned to the Tactical officer.

The man looked up from his station with wide eyes. “Sir! Sensors are... sir we did no damage to the ship!”

“Impossible !” Dynv hissed. “We hit them with a full attack from three hundred ships! That is not possible! That ship should be crippled at the very least and...”

“Sir! Lycavorian Command ship is coming about! I'm detecting other Lycavorian ships appearing to port! Gods, over a hundred and thirty ships have just materialized to port! I'm detecting power surges of some kind in all of the ships! Sir they are... they are firing!”

Dynv turned to the monitor at the front of the bridge and saw the enormous flare of strange light from the side of the Lycavorian ship. He was unable to process the source of the strange light because his brain was already dead by the time the information that the ship was firing finished processing in his mind.

SCIMITAR

Sa'sur watched with much satisfaction as her gun crews and computers brought her weapons to bear and unleashed a volley from the main batteries of the newer Type One MK9C Alpha Series Quantum guns. Thirteen Quantum powered Plasma Particle guns all fired at the same time, all targeting the SUN ARROW. The main batteries of the SCIMITAR tore into the starboard side of the SUN ARROW and effectively eviscerated the entire ship in one stroke. The Kintaur ships were in no way, shape or form a match for even an AUTUMN MOON-Class Heavy frigate's weapons load out.

The main batteries from the SCIMITAR went clean through the minimal shields on the Kintaur ship and blew great swaths of the ship's superstructure into tiny particles of space dust, venting the entire ship to space in the amount of time it took for a person to take two breaths. The SUN ARROW imploded upon itself then, it's engines going critical with the massive loss of power and coolant and the ship blossomed into a huge fireball, engulfing the two closest ships to it in the same fireball.

As soon as that fireball dissipated, the remaining Kintaur ships were just in time to see the First Echelon of Task Force Spartan Hammer de-shroud and tear into the Kintaur fleet with the ferocity of a pack of wolves on the hunt and smelling blood. Most of the ships of the First Echelon were made up of the SCIMITAR's normal Fleet Group, all of them under the direct command of Sa'sur. Most of those men and women had served with Sa'sur and Androcles for nearly eight years, some even turning down promotions to remain with the Prince's Combined Forces Fleet Group. They had the same amount of respect and love for Sa'sur as they did for Androcles, and they tore into the Kintaur fleet with savage anger for attacking their Admiral unprovoked.

Quantum powered MK9C Alpha Series Plasma Particle guns began to pound the larger Kintaur ships before most of them had time to react and reload their own weapons. The smaller, but no less deadly VANGUARD-Class Interdiction Cruisers, NOVA-Class Mark III Medium Cruisers, TAUR'OHTAR-Class Destroyer Escorts and the venerable but still lethal LEONIDAS I-Class Heavy Cruisers ripped into the Kintaur Fleet without hesitation. All of these ships had extensive upgrades and refits in order to bring them in line with the new Union Fleet guidelines, all of them now fielding advanced Matter/Hypermatter Fusion Drives based on the ARIZONA's own Quantum Hypermatter Drive.

The Kintaur fleet tried to fight back, over a dozen of their ships getting off second volleys that careened hopelessly off the advanced shields and armor that all Union ships now used as standard equipment. Those brave but misguided Kintaur ships died first as the VANGUARD-Class Interdiction Cruisers sprinted right up to within spitting distance of the Kintaur fleet and began to unleash their own brand of retribution. This was not a fair fight by any stretch of the imagination and the Kintaur ship captains began to sense it right away. The TAUR'OHTAR-Class Destroyer escorts were executing their Wolf Pack tactics to utter perfection as they would suddenly appear from under Shroud and four or five ships would rip into a Kintaur cruiser and then just as suddenly disappear from view. This was what one Union Captain would much later describe as a turkey shoot. It wasn't really fair in the least, the Union ships centuries ahead of the Kintaur in technology, tactics, and training.

This was not lost on the Kintaur Task Force Deputy Commander from his Heavy Cruiser. The moment their sensors detected that the barrage of fire from all of their ships had done no damage to the Union ship he began issuing orders for the Task Force to retreat. As his ship turned and began to run away at its top speed, over sixty other ships sprinted with him, leaving the rest of their fleet to be immolated and slaughtered by vastly superior forces.

SCIMITAR

“Admiral! Sixty odd ships are running! Bearing three, three, two nine five!” The TO barked. “I have lock on nineteen of them with Mark 22 missiles! I can...”

Sa'sur came to her feet. “Negative! Let them go TO.” She spoke quickly. She turned to face the man. “Clean up the ones in range! Any escape pods are to be immediately picked up and their occupants treated but detained. Have Security Teams stand by to execute this.”

“Yes sir!”

“Deploy the 2nd Echelon into Planetary Defensive Grid nine.” Sa'sur spoke. “They are to remain under Shroud but nothing enters the system unless they can prove they are part of the Royal Family. Nothing.”

“Understood sir!”

“Get Manda Lorian on the horn and route it to my Ready Room. We have some things to cover.” Sa'sur spoke.

The TO looked at her oddly. “Trouble Admiral?”

Sa'sur smiled and shook her head. “Manda has been out here a lot longer than we have and I want to tap her brain. We need to get up to speed real quick.”

“Understood.” The TO answered. “Kintaur wounded sir?”

“Bring them to us.” Sa'sur spoke. “Rig up one portion of the Dragon Den as a holding cell if you have too and put two companies on duty.” She turned and headed for her Ready Room. “Put Manda through as soon as she calls back.”

“Aye sir!” The TO answered.

The results of this first space battle in the Echo Quadrant would be really nothing more than a footnote in Union history in the larger scheme of things, but it would be marked as an historic day by one species in the Echo Quadrant. And there would be nothing anyone could do to stop it.

VENTORI

“Wait... we are getting an image from the battle below us and...” Tinra’s eyes went wide at what she saw below them as they circled the outskirts of the city. “By all that we hold holy!”

They appeared from underneath their STRIKER and drew gasps of disbelief from Jezima and Meral both as well. Dragons. Hundreds of dragons. Thousands of dragons, all flying in perfect formations at breathtaking speed. All of them with glittering light blue and white armor adorning their bodies. Dragons were not new to Pralors, but seeing three thousand of them flying together and wearing obvious combat armor of some sort was something none of them had ever envisioned.

“Are you getting this?” Tinra almost yelled. “I don’t know if anyone is seeing this but thousands of dragons just appeared from beneath the ship we are on orbiting the city! Gods... there must be thousands of them and they are... oh my! Mitra!”

“I got it!” The man answered as he typed away furiously on his P9 while trying to remain standing with the motion from the STRIKER. “I got their Com channel!” He exclaimed. “I’m tapping into it as well!”

“...left side Josie!” The voice Tinra did not recognized barked out the order. “Roll them back with your people! We will take the right side! Push them back into the city proper! Daurgo and the Dragon Brigade will meet them there! No prisoners Josie! We do not have the means to treat them and none must remain alive behind us to go after my mothers at Discovery Base!”

“Understood!” The female voice barked back. “You heard the order Devil Dogs! Now let’s do this!”

Tinra looked at Mitra with wide eyes of disbelief. “They are charging them when they are outnumbered so!” She gasped aloud. Another voice that she recognized instantly sounded over the COM now.

“Fervon... what is your status?!” Martin’s deep and clear voice echoed.

“Fuglies coming out of the woodwork!” Danny’s voice sounded back over the COM, the sounds of heavy gun turrets obvious in the background. “Mines and turrets chopped them down to size and we are engaging! Looks like some snuck through and got past the wall Marty! Suicide bombers from what I could tell! Now stop bothering me and let me work my magic!”

Tinra could only gape out the rear of the STRIKER as she heard them on the COM speaking as if they were out for a simple stroll in the afternoon. She could see thousands of the Svorag on the ground swarming around a large group of armored individuals with dragons all around them. Her eyes grew even wider when she realized who exactly she was looking at from a thousand meters above them.

“Jezima!” She exclaimed. “Is that...”

Jezima and Meral turned to look at her, both of them with unabashed pride in their eyes and on their faces.

“Yes!” She answered with tears rolling down her cheeks.

It was a sight that none of them would ever forget for however many years they had left in their lives. It was also a sight that was being transmitted live and in color to Honelze and then on to Artaaya and Nepneu.

A sight that would change the future of the Pralor people from this day forward.

VENTORI

Whoever Martin Leonidas may have thought was leading these Svorag, he was correct in one aspect. Svorag were not used to running away.

Whether it was because of the usual massive numbers that they had or the sight of their horrifying physical presence, these Svorag had never faced an enemy that refused to give any ground. They had never met an enemy that was unwilling to surrender territory that belonged to them. Most of the enemies they had faced up until now in their rampage across several systems had fought briefly and then turned to run in the face of overwhelming odds.

They had never face Lycavorian Spartans in battle. They had never faced Union troops of any species or culture in battle. Being outnumbered was nothing new to them. In all actuality, Union forces always went in to battle thinking they were outnumbered, for most of the time they were. The difference was that Union soldiers and especially Spartan trained Lycavorians and elves never surrendered and never gave up. They went in to every battle thinking they could win or they would die in service to their King. This was certainly the case right now.

No matter what drove each individual soldier to enter into this way of life, it always came down to the camaraderie and sense of family that all of them absorbed and became part of upon entering into service. For Josie Miller and her men and women it was a fact that, along with Admiral Miranda Lorian and those humans on the ARIZONA, they were once more blazing a path among the stars and representing mankind in the process. A better mankind. A mankind that had finally learned from the many mistakes of the past and moved from its infancy into adulthood. Miranda Lorian, because of all she had lost through the years, now considered the crew of the ARIZONA her family. Josie and her Troopers considered each other family since they had been together, at the bare minimum two years, while most had been together since the inception of the program and that was seven years ago. Whatever the motivations of the men and women on the ground today, there was no back up in any of them, and retreat was not even in their vocabulary.

The valley had narrowed to half a mile across in their location now, the shore of the huge lake now on their left side and providing some measure of defensive bonus. However, no one was worried about defensive bonus at the moment. With the newly built Pralor UPPR1s now in the hands of every member of the 82nd, this one single human Division and the Durcunusaan Ready Division were the most well-armed force in the entire Quadrant. And they were certainly not above sending their enemies right straight to jorbhe.

Combined with their innovative training regime, and their Cataphract Armor enhancing their physical abilities, Josie Miller's 1st Brigade was advancing steadily on either side of where their King and Crown Prince fought side by side. Bodies of dead and mortally wounded Svorag littered the ground behind them as they relentlessly pushed forward toward the city. The deep throated boom of the close range M4X Particle Magnum sidearm was heard often and very nearly drowned out by the throated roar of the UPPR1s. The name was actually one that Armen had instituted as the Armory Master Chief and Worker Drones began to roll them out of the Weapons Fabrication Lab three hours after SPARTA'S WRATH had destroyed the Pralor Science station and begun its trip here. Fashioned to look almost identical to the Union P190A5, the WFL personnel and Worker Drones had incorporated the more powerful aspects of the Pralor Particle weapons into the more streamlined Union design. The result was the UPPR1s, or as the members of the 82nd and the DRD had begun to call them, PPRs.

"Advance!" Josie screamed out within her COM.

It was happening quickly, they would lay down blistering amounts of firepower for twenty seconds and then Josie would move them forward. The member of the 82nd would advance several dozen meters and then do it again. They were burning through ammunition as if it was endless. Shoulder to shoulder they advanced over the dead and dying bodies of the many Svorag, not caring who or what they may have been at one point in their lives. Most of them were covered in Svorag blood but they did not break ranks even in the face of the enemy that they faced. They may not have had Shi Viska's as their Lycavorian comrades did, but for every Svorag that broke through and reached their line, and there were hundreds, they were quickly chopped to bits by savage blades or M4X PMs. The order had gone out and there would be no mercy shown this day. Josie Miller kept close watch on the entire line with her helmet HUD, monitoring their movement to stay even with Androcles and his father. She did not look over at where the roars of dragons filled the air for Josie had seen Bonded Pairs fight before and it was a devastating thing to witness. The inhuman screech snapped her attention around and Josie saw three of the Svorag leaping from where they were, intent on breaching the line. It did not matter how they had made it through the barrage line of fire, only that they had.

"Breach! Breach!" Josie screamed out as she brought up her PPR on the Svorag coming right at her and held the trigger back.

Nineteen particle rounds, each tipped with a drop of explosive tore into the Svorag's deformed body, blowing ghastly wounds into its flesh. Josie dismissed the first one as her burst had taken its head off and blown apart its upper chest. She was shifting her PPR and saw the second Svorag almost upon her. She dropped the PPR on its quick release straps and snatched the ancient Khukuri from its sheath on her shoulder. The ancient Earth weapon of the long dead Gurkhas had survived well into this time and many of the 82nd carried these signature weapons of perhaps the fiercest group of fighters next to the Spartans of ancient Earth. The blades had all been forged from Dragon Armor and were razor sharp. Those members of the 82nd that carried them had gone through extensive training with the Khukuri, given by the only known surviving members of the Gurkha culture. They occupied a small town in western Utah where they trained the 82nd in different tactics including the use of this weapon. Those who carried the Khukuri were some of the most lethal close in fighters the 82nd had within its ranks, Josie Miller being one of them.

Josie didn't hesitate for an instant and she fell upon the Svorag who landed closest to her. With a scream of effort, she took off the Svorag's right arm before it had even regained its balance. As the Svorag screamed in agony and opened its armored jaw to extend its thick tongue to attack, Josie drew back the Khukuri.

"Fuck you!" She screamed and drove the Khukuri deeply into the Svorag's brain right through its open jaw and wrenched it the side with all her natural and enhanced strength provided by the Cataphract armor. The Khukuri tore free sideways taking most of the Svorag's lower jaw with it. As the creature began to twitch its way to death Josie turned her head to find the last one only to see Freddie lowering his own Khukuri, the Svorag's head dropping to the ground beside the now dead monster.

"Not much for conversation are they Colonel!" Freddie barked out.

Though he could not see it, Josie's face broke into a huge smile under her helmet as she replaced her Khukuri on her shoulder and snatched up her PPR.

"Devil Dog actual from Wolverine actual!" The male voice broke into her COM.

"Go!" Josie snapped out.

"Where you want us Josie! The General didn't want you hogging all the fun! We're coming in hot girl!"

Josie spun around and saw the two dozen heavily armed MENKLA transports spread out in tight formation and roaring in from behind them only a hundred feet off the ground. It was easy enough to see the KINDRED SOUL holding above Discovery Base since it took up nearly everything in her view.

"Hell! You may as well join us right here!" Josie snapped out. "There is always room for Wolverines in this fight!"

"Ten seconds Josie!"

Josie touched her wrist and opened a command channel to Androcles several hundred meters away as she saw the MENKLAs dip even lower and begin to spin around in midair to offload the additional forces.

"Andro... follow on Brigade is here!" She barked out not expecting an answer since she could see the fighting was heavy where he and his father were. "We are executing Plan Alpha as soon as they are down!"

"We are executing Plan Alpha as soon as they are down!"

Androcles didn't answer her as he completed the spin move, his Shi Viska clearing out half a dozen Svorag who had gotten too close to him. The razor like blades on the edge of the shield were fully extended and doing massive damage to any Svorag stupid enough to get close to him. Without even blinking Andro ducked his upper body down just as Elynth's armored wing whipped over the top of him and slammed into two additional Svorag, crushing their upper bodies with the single blow and sending their bodies hurtling over the bodies of their fellow Svorag. Andro leaped up and across the saddle on her back, his right hand closing around the pommel of the Cana and wrenching it from his harness. The blade flashed into existence from Flatspace with a hiss and he brought it down upon another Svorag who was intent upon jumping upon Elynth's back.

None of them were holding anything back now, each of them using all of their skills learned from years of combat and more recently, instruction from Murano and the Tomes of their grandfather Sumar. Even Murano was not holding back, not drifting into the rear as he had on the Science station, now he was with them as Androcles and the others took the fight to the Svorag monsters. He had embraced his emotions just as his time with Martin and Andro had shown him, and now he fed off the very thing that he had repressed for so long. It gave him the added clarity and power that he was displaying now. He fought on the opposite side of Martin with Torma's massive bulk between them and providing both of them support with his huge wingspan and Heavyhorn tail. Dorian and Laren were nearly side by side, Ryner and Ladur on either side of them, their Nehtes sending Svorag to meet their maker with every swing. Denali, Jomann and Deion on the opposite side of Androcles with Aradace, Jeru and Soran stomping and burning Svorag all around them. The bodies that surrounded the eight of them could not be counted nor measured. The Svorag were throwing everything that had at the line of Praetorians and 82nd soldiers and so far, unlike at any time since the Svorag had begun to terrorize so many across this Quadrant of space, their foe was not turning and running. There was no hesitation or confusion in their purpose or how they supported one another and they were standing their ground and advancing.

For those who had never seen such a thing, it was ghastly and brutally violent but also beyond beautiful. Mirta's Video Drone was hovering just above them at a hundred meters in the air, its many cameras taking everything in. These were the images being broadcast to Honelze and then onto the other Pralor worlds. This is what the eyes of men and women from hundreds of generations were seeing with their own eyes. The combat movements of all of them were as exquisitely graceful as any ballet dancer, the power with which they struck unquestioned. Even Lisisa and Nara had now entered the fray with Jeth and Mayla at their sides as they cleaned up those that their father and brothers had injured or tossed aside. Seven plumed helmets were moving among the mass of bodies and blood with seemingly no end in sight. Still this did not deter them in the least as they continued to push forward, blasts of superheated breath or pure flame lighting up the area all around them and skipping across the Etheric shields that protected them. Even some of the 82nd troopers were caught in the area that those blasts of death were directed but since their armor was rated at nearly four thousand degrees, it did not cause them to pause in any way.

The moment Josie's words echoed within Andro's helmet he looked skyward as he thrust his Nehtes into the chest of a Svorag, baring his savage dual looking fangs under his helmet.

"Sadi now!" He screamed out within Mindvoice.

DISCOVERY BASE

"Fuck you!" Anja Leonidas screamed as she fired point blank into the Svorag's deformed skull, blowing his upper body back out of the frame of the small window. She spun around, expertly ejecting the two now empty magazines from the chopped down versions of the KM12 that she had carried for decades. She jammed the butts of the weapons against her hips, the mag holders automatically dropping two new magazines into position from the holders on either of her hips. With a practiced effort that she had done on more occasions in her lifetime than she could recall, Anja reloaded her custom built KM12 Magnums and looked around the room. They had held the first Svorag charge easily, only a few having made it past the line Danny had thrown up outside the perimeter. The Svorag had charged and crawled over the bodies of their dead companions, most slaughtered by the minefield and even more taken out by the turrets, but their numbers did not seem to end and nearly a hundred had finally made it over the defensive wall and were now inside the perimeter of Discovery Base, and Danny could not pull anyone to help them.

All non-combatants had been pulled into the medical building for it was the most heavily fortified and built. Though it was truly a portable building, Union engineers from the 1st Elven Engineering Brigade had devised its unique and hearty construction. There really was no way to physically take the building down once it had been erected and anchored without a concerted effort of explosives and force. Anja knew this and had spent nearly two years with Martin, Danny and a few other of the most skilled Spartans in the Union devising ways to defend the building. Though there were really no non-combatants within the Union, nearly everyone had some training in the use of weapons and such, there were half a dozen wounded and several Tasmor doctors and Pralor Researchers that had arrived to help Radra. These were the ones they were protecting, but looking at them Anja could tell all of them would rather die than be taken by the Svorag beasts. They had taken up positions within the huge portable Medical Facility at the points that had been determined to be the most defensible and they were ready for what came through that main entrance.

"Anja!" The voice barked out above the distant echo of weapons fire outside.

Anja turned her head to where Atropos's huge form knelt by the main entrance with five other Durcunusaan soldiers. Atropos had been her Captain almost from the very beginning and there was nothing that would take him from her side no matter the odds.

"I'm hunky dory!" Anja called out to him with her trademark smile. She reached up and tapped her jaw. "Danny!"

“Red! We’re kind of busy here! What’s your status?” Danny’s voice echoed over the din of weapons fire.

“About two dozen tried to breach but we killed them all!” Anja answered quickly. “But I think they know where we are now!”

“About a hundred made it over the wall before we could seal the hole Red!” Danny barked. “They swarmed a turret position and broke through there. It’s back online now but we couldn’t chase them!”

“We’ll handle it!” Anja snapped. “Danny, what about Martin?”

“You do what you were trained to do Anja!” Danny barked. “Martin is taking care of business just like he always does!”

“Cowen Shan and I have eyes on them Anja!” Julie’s voice broke into the COM link. “You should see this! They are carving a path through the thick of the monsters!”

Anja let out a brief sigh of relief but then took hold of her emotions. “We’ll deal with the ones inside the perimeter!” She barked. “Just make sure no more get over the wall!”

“Working on it Red! Don’t get all bossy now!” Danny barked back but with a playful tone to his voice that caused Anja to shake her head. Between Martin and Danny, she had never met two men who could be in the absolute thickest of fighting and still crack jokes.

“Anja, Cowen is shifting his field to inside the perimeter.” Julie spoke once more. “He will try to give you advanced notice if he sees any of them.”

Anja’s head whipped around as the firing renewed at the fortified entrance to the Medical Building. “Too late!” She called out. “They are already here!”

Even over the rapport of a dozen P190s letting loose Anja still heard the growling sounds of the Svorag as they swarmed the Medical Building. She heard Atropos screaming out orders and then the ghastly sound of savage pounding on the side of the building. She turned just as two sets of massive hand like appendages grasped the frame of the shattered window and the entire wall began to peel away. Anja was frozen in her spot, her jade green eyes wide in disbelief and unable to move as two of the huge monstrosities that Martin and Daniel had fought in the underground bunker began to tear away the entire wall of the Medical building as if it was a can of sardines. Within seconds the whole of the ten-foot section was exposed to the open air and Anja could see dozens of Svorag waiting just behind. They had opened the facility to the outside air and Anja could smell the aroma of gunfire and explosives in the air. Her jade green eyes grew wider as the Svorag surged forward and she lifted her pair of KM12s.

“JOA!” The female voice screamed out above the din of combat and Anja whirled around and she saw Perlae move forward with her hands raised in front of her. “Forn gur ter serik aur nathos!” Anja watched with wide eyes as the area around Perlae’s hands flared with Etheric power. “Tureme un vada jorbhe arbet shaos forn gente llokels!”

Perlae, Ishma and Awser had been waiting for this moment their entire lives. The day when they would be among those Lycavorians they called blood. Those they called family. When Androcles had embraced them on his ship with no hesitation, all of their dreams and hopes had become reality. There was no way Perlae was going to allow these hideous monsters to take from her what they had only just discovered.

Dynina was the most powerful Yowa to have ever existed among their people and while no one had ever been able to determine how she could do what she did, there was no mistaking what she was capable of. And she had passed much of this skill and control to her grandchildren for the road and the battles ahead of them. It was that skill and training that Perlae embraced completely now and she unleashed it all in one devastating attack. With Ieri standing beside her bonded sister and looking just as ferocious as the fully grown of her kind, Perlae acted in a single blink of the eye.

Perlae could see it within her mind, the multitude of Etheric strands of power within the very air itself, the way it filtered through nearly all kinds of life, from water to plants to the very atmosphere they breathed. While Martin and Androcles and the others like them could absorb these strands from all around them and within themselves and form physical manifestations of weapons, vaes was much subtler but no less lethal when applied correctly. It was these strands that Perlae manipulated and bent to her will. While she had concentrated more on a defensive form of vaes as she grew and trained, Perlae was by no means defenseless. She manipulated those thousands upon thousands of Etheric strands as easily as the conductor of a symphony and just as her dual fangs burst from her gums in savage anger and she released a snarl of wolf fury, she brought her hands down forcefully as if she was striking something only she could see.

Anja's head whipped back around when she heard it, the ghastly sound of tearing and ripping flesh. Her eyes grew wide when she saw every Svorag in sight, including the two huge monstrosities that had torn open the wall begin to stagger about and roar in horrible pain as invisible objects began to shred their bodies to hamburger right before her eyes. Their blood erupted in every direction and they seemed to be unable to move from the immediate area outside the wall. Death by a thousand cuts was all Anja was able to think of as they began to fall and remain still, their bodies bleeding profusely from wounds that were ripping open almost of their own accord. She turned back to Perlae and saw her standing there, her hands out to her sides with her palms facing downward staring off into something that Anja obviously could not see.

"Anja!" Atropos's voice thundered in the building since all firing had stopped and she turned to look at him and saw the exact same thing happening to those Svorag at the entrance to the Medical Building. She could see six of them on the ground thrashing in agony, their blood spilling from their bodies in copious amounts onto the floor and those dead ones that Atropos and his men had already killed.

"I don't know!" Anja barked. She turned back to Perlae then and moved closer to her unafraid. That they were family was just as easy for her to smell as it was Aricia and Martin and Androcles, not to mention the dual fangs that only the bloodline of Leonidas carried. Anja did not doubt what they were or who they were. "Perlae!" She snapped as she moved in front of her.

The sound of Anja's voice broke Perlae from her frozen position and her amethyst colored eyes blinked rapidly, her dual fangs clearly visible. She glanced at Anja quickly, her hands slowly drawing back towards her body and then the strength left her and she collapsed. Anja reached for her at the same time as Anuk and Kesyla and they caught her between the three of them.

"Perlae!" Ieri exclaimed as she bounced closer to her bonded sister.

"Perlae!" Anja echoed Ieri's shout as she held her in her arms.

Perlae's eyes fluttered and she looked at Anja. "So tired." She rasped out the words. "So tired Chrorra."

Anja looked at Anuk and Kesyla as she pulled Perlae closer to her. "It's ok." She spoke softly. Her head turned to take it all in, the Svorag dead numbering close to a hundred and she had done it all without lifting a finger or a weapon. "It's ok." She spoke once more as Atropos moved up beside her.

"I have Durcunusaan beginning to sweep the area." Atropos told her. "It appears they are all dead. How?"

Anja shook her head. "I don't know." She spoke looking at him. "Atropos take her. Get her in a bed."

Atropos didn't hesitate and lifted Perlae as if she was a feather while Anja rose to her feet beside him. She looked around once more and then back to the unconscious Perlae. "Something tells me our lives are about to get a whole lot more interesting and unbelievable." She spoke softly.

"You mean more than they already are?" Anuk popped as she looked at her.

Anja took hers and Kesyla's hands. "Oh yeah." She spoke. "Oh yeah."

PREMONITION

"Sadi now!" Andro's voice filled her mind as clear as if he was standing beside her.

Sadi had been waiting for that call and instantly she activated her COM unit. They had been circling Jarlori since Andro and the others had exited out the ramp, Kameka using the Quad Pulse Cannons to shred large groups of Svorag wherever she could target them. Sadi and Ne'Veha let her do her thing for neither of them had ever seen a more natural gunner. The Quad cannons were like an extension of her body and at times she looked silly in her large chair with three banks of consoles surrounding her body. However, there was no mistaking her aim. Andro had ordered the skies above Jarlori cleared immediately upon exiting SPARTA'S WRATH in orbit and they were the only ship airborne above the desolate city now.

They alone knew why right now, but everyone would soon know.

"Sehri! Now DuanGai!" Sadi hissed into the air. "And tell them they had better all come back!"

Sadi didn't have to personally see what was going on in the rear of the PREMONITION, for like the Queens, Andro's wives and mates all had a private connection that they used just for themselves to share with each other. This was now open entirely so that Carisia, Lu'ria and Caliria, all on the surface of Ventori, could know what was going on.

Sehri knelt by the open ramp of the PREMONITION looking down on the deck at where Worker Drone Alpha Nine was bouncing on its spidery legs in front of her. Namiri squatted next to her, eyes wide and still trying to grasp everything that had happened so quickly.

Shortly after Androcles had made the Tasmor Quorum look foolish, he had led her to the private deck that held the personal quarters of his family. It was here where she discovered what they had done when it became known of this "political marriage". Their quarters were massive to say the least, and one portion had been built to be used as an office of sorts. That room, even larger than Namiri had imagined, that room was not a small apartment that was all hers. She would have to enter it through their quarters, but they had gone out of their way to show her that her honor and integrity would be safe. She could still come into the main quarters and sit with them, or eat with them, but the office area was now hers. She could tell right away that women had decorated the room's interior for the colors were soft and pleasant, the bed was large and very comfortable, and the small bathroom area held items that only a female would know to have. Namiri quickly learned with a smile that no matter the species, females were usually all the same. They had gone out of their way to make Namiri feel at home and welcome and this only endeared them to her as nothing else could. In the few short hours they had before deploying here, Namiri felt like she had found true friends.

"Stick to the plan and do nothing foolish!" Sehri spoke to Alpha Nine. Like all of Andro's wives and mates, all of them knew he had developed a fondness for Alpha Nine since the excursion to the Pralor Space station. Twice since then they had caught him returning to their quarters with Alpha Nine perched on his shoulder and chirping away madly.

Namiri watched as the Worker Drone bounced up and down several times and then turned to follow the six other Drones out the rear of the ramp without hesitation. Sehri and Namiri stood up and went to the rear of the ship, both of them harnessed in and unafraid to lean close to the ramp as they watched the Drones drop quickly out of sight before engaging the small thrusters each of them had.

"You understood that noise it made Sehri?" Namiri asked loudly over the din of the wind whipping through the rear of the ship.

Sehri met her gaze. "Not until Andro bit me." She answered equally as loud. "I don't know how, but Andro, Eliani and a few other of his siblings understand it as well. Sadi and I and the others understand it because Andro does."

"It sounds like gibberish to me." Namiri spoke.

Sehri nodded her head with a smile. "It did to me at first." She replied. "Now my brain automatically translates the sounds to words. I don't know how and neither does Andro but it is part of who we are now."

Namiri shook her head. "I am so far out of my element here." She stated.

Sehri laughed and took her hand in hers. "No more so than we are." She answered her. "No more so than we are." She reached up and with the other hand touched the COM panel beside the ramp controls. "Sadi, all Drones away!" She spoke. "All Drones away!"

Sadi turned her head to Ne'Veha at Sehri's words on the COM. "Sirsangai, let Carisia and Lu'ria know. They are standing by with Zarah, Lucia, Sheva and Onera at the designated coordinates."

Ne'Veha nodded her head. "They won't be happy about being left out if this works." Ne'Veha commented.

Sadi smiled and nodded her head. "A lot of people will be left out if this works." She told her. "If this works, it could possibly save many lives. I doubt they will complain."

"No bet here!" Ne'Veha echoed with a smile.

Sadi looked up and out the window of the PREMONITION's cockpit over the city. Her jungle green eyes stared off into the distance for a long moment and she sent a combined pulse of love and devotion from all of them to the man they all so adored. She was the strongest of them since Ne'Veha, Lu'ria, Sehri and Caliria were still adjusting to being new wolves and Carisia did not have a wolf's aura. To compensate for that, they had learned to use their Etheric connection to Andro just as the Queens had with his father. It was efficient, though it could not compare the being able to bath him in your female aura or wrap your body around his and lavish him with kisses. Sadi did not expect him to respond given what was going on, but she knew he would draw strength from that combined pulse.

“Hold the line!” Danny screamed out the words as he bent down to reload his 190 A5. “Hold the line!”

Danny knew it was not something he had to yell, but given the situation he wanted to yell something. He looked up over the edge of the naturally formed ditch they were in and saw nothing but bodies of dead and injured Svorag. It seemed their numbers were endless, but he knew that was not the case. The two companies of 82nd and his and Martin’s team were putting a serious hurt on the Svorag and not giving an inch of ground, yet the creatures kept throwing their lives away. Of course, Danny had no problem sending them all straight to hell for the things he had seen they were capable of.

Danny looked to his left and saw Awser beside him, his eyes wide, but in control. Danny had been impressed for the young man had stood beside him in the thickest of the fighting and not faltered. It had also allowed Danny to witness something he had never imagined he would see in his life. Awser had actually frozen several dozen Svorag in place as they had tried to flank their group and this allowed the man commanding the 82nd companies to redirect some blistering fire onto their position and shatter their bodies to nothing. Whoever had trained him and done a superb job of it and he...

“Coming in!” The female voice called out causing Danny to turn at the familiar tone.

He watched sternly as Aricia, For'mya and Ishma sprinted the last few meters to him and then dropped into the ditch with them. All three of them were splashed with what appeared to be Svorag blood and it didn’t seem to faze them.

“What the hell!” Danny exclaimed. “You are supposed to be with Red!”

Aricia looked at him and canted her head to the side as if in a scolding manner. “You should know more than anyone that Anja can look after herself Daniel!” She hissed at him.

“What happened to you three?” He asked.

“We came in from the tree line south of here.” For'mya commented. “A Svorag patrol it seems. I think they wanted to flank your position here and were trying to slip through the timber to do it.”

Danny grinned. “I take it that didn’t go well for them!” He commented.

For'mya smiled back, revealing her dual wolf fangs. “You could say that.” She replied.

Ishma squatted across from her brother, using her hands to inspect him. “Awser?”

“I am fine sister.” Awser assured her with a smile.

“Danny?” Aricia asked him.

Dan shook his head. “I don’t know... I think they are massing for another push beyond that far depression. Awser here froze a bunch of them solid as they tried to flank us and I think it threw them for a loop.”

“Froze them solid?” For'mya asked as she looked at Awser. “Interesting. Your sister here actually burned one alive back there.”

“We can explain later chrora.” Awser answered sheepishly.

Aricia shook her head. “No need. We already know everything we need to know. You are family to us.”

“Can we talk about this another time?” Danny spoke up.

“Daniel we must...” Aricia looked at him and he met her eyes. He had been around Aricia enough through the years to know when she had something she couldn’t explain on her mind. Though young, she was far more intuitive than anyone gave her credit for, and Danny knew that is why Anja and the others loved and trusted her without doubt.

“Spit it out Rika!” Danny prompted her, using the name he had given to her many years ago. It seemed he had given names to all of Martin’s Queens on one deployment with him and they had stuck, though no one but Danny would ever dare call them by these names. As their beloved Martin’s Mard Fervon, he had earned that right.

“We must pull everyone back inside the perimeter of Discovery Base.” Aricia told him.

“We must do it now.”

“What?!” Danny asked with wide eyes. “Why?!”

Aricia looked at him intently. “I can feel my son within me Daniel. He is confident and he fights without fear or doubt. He knows he will prevail. There is absolutely no uncertainty in his surface thoughts or his emotions. Almost to the point of...”

“Overconfidence?” Daniel asked.

Aricia nodded quickly. “Yes.”

“Sibfla!” Danny spat.

“Atle?” Aricia asked him.

Danny looked at them. “It’s exactly how Martin acts when he knows he’s got you by the nor and right before he sticks it up your caboose real hard.”

Ishma looked at Daniel with horror in her eyes at what he had said about his King while Aricia and For'mya could only grin, for they knew how true Danny was. Their darling Martin was perhaps, the most deviously cunning and vile man when it came to fighting his enemies. He gave no quarter or mercy to those who were his true enemies and he asked for none. And he would use whatever means he could to bring about your demise. Androcles had learned from his father well, and even took it to another whole level.

Danny looked at Aricia. “When?” He asked her.

Aricia shook her head. “I do not know for certain but his emotions are building as if to a crescendo. And they are building rapidly Daniel.”

Danny nodded his head and looked over his shoulder. “That means he is about to open a can of serious whoop ass and he did learn from the best. Anja?” Danny asked her.

Aricia nodded her head. “She can feel it as well.”

Danny reached up and touched his jaw. “Captain Owens!”

The officer in command of the two companies of 82nd troopers turned from where he stood several hundred meters away. “Here General!”

“Prepare to exfil back to Discovery Base Captain! Two minutes!”

“General?” The young officer asked confused.

“The answer to your question is coming Captain.” Danny told him. “Wait for it. Just get ready!”

“Understood sir.”

Danny watched as Kenny and Cody settled to the ground beside them now. “What’s up boss?” Kenny asked.

“Time to go.” Danny said. “The Skipper’s boy is going to pull something and we don’t want to be here.”

“Oh, hell no we don’t!” Kenny hissed. “I’ll tell the others. Two minutes?”

Danny nodded his head and looked at Aricia. “Rika, you are sure?”

Aricia nodded her head without hesitation. “Oh yes Daniel. Very sure. And it is going to happen very soon.”

SPARTA'S WRATH

“Armen, we’re getting the feed!” The sensor operator called over her shoulder drawing Armen’s attention from the reports he was looking at.

Armen wasted no time and moved quickly to stand behind her.

-Bring it up on your main monitor- Armen told her lifting his orange hued eyes to the monitor above her head.

Armen looked up at the massive monitor as the elven female worked the controls. “Done!” The screen came alive with an expanded view of the city of Jarlori, almost as if they were viewing it from roughly a thousand feet up. “Signal is clean! Anse... they are moving fast!”

-Their top speed is approximately one hundred and fifty kilometers per hour- Armen told her as his eyes remained focused on the monitor.

The elven female looked up at his seven foot height. “Sibfla!” She exclaimed. Her console beeped softly and several blue lines began to appear on the monitor above her head. “It’s working!” She exclaimed. “Their Duridium chassis is cutting through the interference of the ore in the surface and we are picking up their Neutrino signals.”

-Map it Na’ria- Armen ordered. -And find me the most focal and active points which would serve our purposes-

Armen turned his head when Fedor and Eirene came onto the bridge with Miseo and Iama at their sides. They immediately moved over to where he was and looked at the monitors all around them.

“Armen... what is happening?” Fedor asked.

Both he and Eirene were not happy about being left out of the operation even though they understood the reasons. What had taken place on the Vanari homeworld aside, neither of them had the experience to conduct such a quick strike operation and not be a liability. They knew it as well, so even though they acted angry with Androcles they were not. They would be the advance group that departed as soon as the planet was secure.

-Admiral Lorian and your father determined that even the ARIZONA’s sensors could not penetrate the surface of the planet along the coasts due to a particular ore not found in the Alpha Quadrant. It saturates this portion of the continent- Armen told them.

Eirene looked at him. “So they could not get an accurate number of how many Svorag there really were?”

Armen nodded his head. -Androcles asked that I devise a way to rectify that issue-

“You did I take it.” Fedor spoke.

-Using the information gathered by your father I determined that a more direct sensor scan was needed. A site to site scan- Armen answered. -Given the information we had it was discovered that the ARIZONA’s Worker Drones do not possess a Duridium exoskeleton as the ones on SPARTA’S WRATH do. They were all constructed at Dreamland while our Drones are original to this ship. Duridium can be detected through the surface ore using a neutrino based sensor scan-

“What are they doing?” Eirene asked as she reached up and touch the monitor watching as the blue colored lines grew longer and longer and twisted and turned on the screen.

“They’re mapping the tunnels.” Fedor answered his sister’s question. “The ones the Svorag are using to move without being detected. Why?”

-There is only one way to insure that the Svorag threat on Ventori is eliminated fully- Armen answered.

Eirene looked at him. “Remove the threat at its source.” She stated softly.

Armen nodded his head. -Yes-

“Armen do we have weapons that can do that onboard?” Fedor asked him. “Everything I have studied about this ship indicates that is not something we can do. Surgical strikes yes, but the firepower we have or could bring to bear, even at its minimum, it would render whatever area we hit unlivable for centuries.”

-You are correct Fedor- Armen spoke. -Even at the lowest spectrum of power we can generate our weapons are not as precise as Androcles desires-

“Then how do we do it?” Fedor asked him.

Eirene thought she saw Armen almost crack a smile before he answered. -We are not the only weapon your brother possesses Fedor Leonidas. I have also discovered that when it comes to saving lives, your brother and father will use whatever means they have at their disposal to save the maximum number of lives that they can-

Eirene met his eyes. “Armen... why does that sound suspiciously like an admission of some sort of guilt.”

Armen’s orange hued eyes simply stared back at her. -I have no idea what you mean- He finally told her. -You should make your way to Landing Bay Six. This will be over shortly and you will want to move down as quickly as possible. Your brother will not waste time- Armen turned to the elven officer as Fedor and Eirene watched him. -Na’ria... begin transmitting the data to the *KINDRED SOUL-

KINDRED SOUL

Captain George Patton was monitoring everything and staying out of the way of his crew. Hovering a nearly three thousand meter long ship only a thousand meters from the surface of the planet beneath them was no small feat to be sure. Most everyone on the bridge and the ship were glued to whatever view window they could find and using high powered macro binoculars in order to watch the battle that was taking place nearly a mile to their south. To say that it was a riveting sight would be the understatement of the millennia as far as George was concerned. Svorag bodies were being tossed about, beaten, smashed, burned and crushed at almost every turn and the dragons and Spartans below were not letting up in the least.

“Captain?” His COM officer barked out. “Incoming secure COM from Armen on SPARTA'S WRATH. Priority Channel Alpha Two One!”

George had been waiting for this and he nodded his head. “Put it up! And Overlay what they are sending to us onto our charts.”

The holodisc just to his left came alive with Armen’s hulking form and George Patton nodded his head. “Armen.”

-Captain Patton- Armen stated. -The Worker Drones have completed their sensor sweeps. You should be receiving the results now-

George looked over and saw his Sensor Chief nod and he moved over beside him. “We got it.” He spoke. “Holy shit!” He spoke as his eyes focused on the enormous area where the blue lines connected and extended.

-That was our assessment as well- Armen answered him. -We have identified what appear to be three breeding caves four hundred and nineteen meters beneath the surface as well as an additional nine entry and exit points aside from the one they have opened up in the center of Jarlori. The furthest away is one point four kilometers from the eastern edge of the city-

“Christ they are spread out over nearly four square kilometers!” Patton exclaimed.

-We can detect no other energy signatures on the planet like the equipment coming from the three breeding centers and we believe that is all there are- Armen continued.

“So they limited their little horror shops to this coastal region because of the ore?” Patton asked.

Armen nodded his head. -It would appear so. Which lends even more credibility to the King’s assessment that whoever is leading these Svorag is some sort of former soldier and quite possibly even a Lycavorian-

Patton nodded his head. “Not going to argue with that based on what we have seen so far.” He stated. “Armen you know what we have to use in order to do this?”

-Our directed sensors over the battle indicate that Androcles and his father and siblings and the 82nd troopers have eliminated over twenty-five thousand Svorag in just eighteen minutes of battle Captain Patton. They have lost no one as of yet but the fighting still rages- Armen stated. -The Dragon Brigade has secured all of the perimeters of the city and none of them will be escaping. I have also dispatched our findings to Daurgo and he is sending his warriors to each of the nine access points. They will not be able to keep up this pace with nearly two hundred thousand Svorag all moving towards this one exit Captain. Androcles understood and the members of the 82nd have prepared for it-

George Patton nodded his head. "Then lets do this."

-I am highlighting the points I believe will inflict the most harm and then vent into the atmosphere- Armen spoke. -The strikes on the breeding centers will vent upwards and join the others-

"Stand by Armen." George spoke and turned his head. "TO?"

"Sir?!"

"Spool up starboard launchers six through fifteen!" Patton spoke looking at the man. "Titan Mark IVs TO. Max yield."

The Tactical officer glanced at him with wide eyes for only a second and then nodded. "Ten Titan Mark IVs sir. Max yield. Loading now."

George turned and looked at Armen in the transmission. "Better put your UV filters on maximum for this Armen."

-Understood-

George turned from the transmission as it vanished. "Individual Target Reference Points TO!" He barked. "Each Mark Four on its own optimum course. Call off impact designators. I want them hitting within three meters of target TO!"

The young man nodded his head without responding as his hands worked the two consoles in front of him. He didn't appear strained or anxious, but was in fact all business. George smiled to himself and once more patted himself on his back for the time and effort he put into finding the right bridge crew for the KINDRED SOUL. All of them were far younger than his forty-five years, but damned if they did not meshed like the fingers of a well oiled machine.

The TO looked up just as George turned back to face him. "Captain! All coordinates plotted and confirmed! Launchers six through fifteen are primed!"

"Very well!" George moved to his command chair and settled into it. "Officer of the Deck, prepare to extend shields around Discovery Base! TO, lock all missiles into fire mode and stand by!"

"Weapons standing by sir!" The TO answered.

"Spool up UV filters and shields!" George spoke. "How far out will the blast extend!?"

"Four kilometers from each access point sir!" The TO answered. "Anything in that radius will burn!"

"Get that STRIKER on the edge of the city with the Pralor reporter on it down on the ground!" George snapped. "The PREMONITION is the only ship that should be airborne and she should be picking up her passengers!" George turned in his chair. "XO. Get me Androcles on secure COM."

At the moment, Sadi and Ne'Veha were settling the PREMONITION to the surface of Ventori three kilometers from the northern tip of the city. It was the only place they could find an open area large enough to accommodate the ship's corvette like size. Sehri was lowering the ramp before they were even down and she could see Carisia and Anthar leading the sprint to the ship. Majeir was beside him as they sprinted for the ship, Alpha Nine and the other six Worker Drones atop hers and Anthar's saddles chirping madly and bouncing all around in circles. Caliria was situated between Carisia and Lu'ria as they ran, still getting used to the abilities that being Lycanari granted to her but learning quickly. Sheva and Onera were right behind them while Lucia, Zarah and Seyra were trailing along slightly behind them with Radem situated between the two younger women.

Move everyone! Sadi's voice erupted in their minds. Captain Patton will be firing any moment! Move!

Her words seemed to energized everyone even more and they doubled their speed if that was possible. Sehri and Namiri were waving at them frantically to keep coming and soon Carisia was dashing up the ramp and turning to motion the others past her. Anthar and then Majeir burst past them to be met by Caydren, Cinol and Marux, the two slightly smaller dragons helping Marux to blunt the force of Anthar and Majeir's sprint onto the ship. It was then that the reunions began as Lucia and Carisia embraced tightly while Sehri was pulling Zarah into her arms. Sheva and Onera watched as Radem was the last one up the ramp and he turned to look in the direction they had come while tapping his jaw.

"Sadi Leonidas, Anome and Blessed Wife of my friend Androcles, perhaps we should haul ass now, as Zarah is so fond of saying." Radem spoke calmly.

Radem didn't see the smile that split Sadi's face but he heard her snicker in humor. Sadi looked at Ne'Veha instantly after Radem had spoken.

Ne'Veha punch it!" She snapped.

Ne'Veha didn't hesitate, drew her fingers down the long panel to her right, and engaged all her engines to full power. The PREMONITION exploded off the ground as if shot by a gun and Sadi yanked them into a stomach rolling climb that took them to ten thousand feet in just four seconds.

Sadi sent a very clear and direct pulse to Androcles that was heard by everyone over a Tier Five Etheric user, which was just about everyone on the planet at the moment.

Andro our love! We are clear!

Martin brought his sword down across his body defensively and turned to look at his son when Sadi's pronouncement thundered within Mindvoice. She hadn't just spoken the words, she had screamed them out as loud as she could.

"Keto?!" Martin yelled at Androcles a mere ten meters away.

Andro waited until he had caught his returning Shi Viska and then looked at his father across the short distance. His azure colored eyes were nearly glowing under his helmet. Martin watched as Andro touched his jaw.

"Josie! Execute! Execute! Execute!" Andro spoke almost calmly.

Too calmly Martin decided as he watched his son turn slowly and he followed his gaze. Martin's eyes grew wide as he saw ground based shields began to erupt skyward from the line that they were holding against the Svorag. As his eyes traveled up the line he saw every third 82nd trooper jamming the ground based generator onto the surface and activating it up and down the line. In less than twenty seconds a ground based shield array nearly a hundred meters in height was erected across the entire valley floor and Svorag were beginning to slam into it to no avail as they attacked. Martin's eyes grew wider when he realized that there was no way they were going to penetrate that shield and they would soon begin to climb over their own kind to reach the top of the shield.

"Andro they will..." Martin began to shout as he moved towards his son.

"Captain Patton!" Andro spoke into his COM. "You may fire when ready!"

Martin froze in his spot when he heard the deep, rolling rumble and he turned his head to look back towards Discovery Base. His brown eyes grew wide as he saw that the KINDRED SOUL had extended its shield grid around the base and he saw seven, no eight, and nine and then ten smoke trails screaming away from the ship's superstructure right toward Jarlori. He watched three of them veer off in another direction slightly but then they remained straight and true. As Martin watched they screamed in right over the top of his position at nearly four thousand miles an hour right above the top of the ground shield, drawing the attention of thousands of Svorag as they too took notice.

Then the missiles were gone into the city.

By this time Martin had moved up beside his son and he turned his head to meet his eyes.

"Andro what..."

"Exactly as you taught me." Andro answered. "I'm applying the maximum amount of firepower to bring about the success of the mission father."

Martin felt the first explosion deep in the ground and he turned towards the city as he staggered slightly. He could feel the massive concussive force of the blast underground as it rolled beneath them and he saw a massive flash of light from the area where he knew the Svorag had broken through. His eyes grew wide when he realized what it was and he turned to look at his son once more. The fleeting moment of disappointment drifted into nothing and it was then that Martin knew his son would never intentionally destroy when he did not have to.

“FAEs.” Martin asked him.

Andro nodded his head. “It was the only way to be sure.” He replied.

Martin felt several more detonations and turned once more to the city as the ground beneath their feet trembled horribly. His dark eyes grew wide when he saw it and he now knew the reason behind the ground shield. “Sibfla!” He barked out.

Andro turned to where he was looking and nodded his head. “Yes, that was the only thing I could not predict.”

“Predict!” Martin snapped. “It’s coming right for us!”

The enormous wall of fire was indeed moving right for them. Rolling outward at nearly a thousand feet a second.

“Brace!” Martin screamed. “Brace! Brace!”

The first Titan Mark IV struck exactly where it had been programmed to strike, followed in almost perfect unison by the other nine missiles.

FAE.

Fuel Air Explosive.

An ancient weapon by definition, but still a considerably effective one. Each warhead a MAC warhead, or Metal Augmented Charge filled with aluminum powdered coated with PTFE and the Union’s MX254 explosive charge mixture. When mixed together the three compounds create the explosive force of a two hundred kiloton nuclear warhead that traveled outward at tornado like velocity and carrying with it death on an unimaginable scale. When detonated above ground FAEs can easily wipe out entire sections of a battlefield depending on how large the weapons are. When detonated underground the effect is magnified five fold. Every Svorag within forty meters of the detonation point of each missile was instantly incinerated. When the chemical mixtures mixed with the oxygen in the tunnels it caused an enormous and unyielding fireball to expand outward and ripple through every portion of the tunnels beneath Jarlori. No tunnel was spared, no portion of the intricate design left untouched. Five thousand degree flame and heat moving at nearly a thousand feet per second did not discriminate in the least. Svorag were instantly fried before a conscious thought could enter their minds.

Each Titan Mark IV FAE acted exactly as it was supposed too, and with ten of them going off underground in the space of five square miles, the devastation was complete. The air was sucked from the tunnels and the Svorag burned to ash by the thousands within seconds as the fireballs proceeded to sweep along the tunnels looking for a way to expend their energies. Those not in the vicinity of the point of detonation had the oxygen ripped from their lungs, suffocating within seconds. Other had their internal organs crushed by the concussive force of the fireball storm as it raced throughout the tunnels or simply a combination of all three events took place. The tunnels under Jarlori, previously unable to be tracked or mapped due to the high concentrations of Rubidium Ore, extended for several kilometers in all directions, usually ending at one of the underground bunkers that Martin and the others had found. These bunkers died as well as the collective force of the explosions blew them wide open, as well as the building or sewer systems they may have been hidden in.

Soon, nine columns of fire and smoke blew skywards across the horizon of Jarlori as the tempest created by the FAE weapons finally found their exits from underground. Nine columns of fire and smoke, each roughly a mile high reached into the sky above and announced to anyone within eyesight that the Svorag threat on Ventori had come to a very abrupt and inglorious end.

Since they were still about three kilometers outside of the city proper, when the wall of flame and crushing force slammed into the ground shield it had abated quite a bit to some extent. For the Svorag on the other side of the shield however, it was lethal. Hundreds upon hundreds of Svorag were thrown into the ground shield without mercy, the force of the impacts killing them instantly. Others were simply obliterated by the concussive forces and the intense rolling wave of flame and debris. Nothing in the wake of that storm was spared.

Martin Leonidas stood behind that ground shield next to his son and watched with an impassive face. He felt no remorse for what the Svorag had once been or what they had become. He knew it was not their fault in any way, and Martin blamed only one man for that. He could hear constant chatter in the background on his COM unit as men and women from Discovery Base began chattering away as the storm of fire and heat began to subside quickly. His eyes wandered over where Laren stood beside Dorian and Murano. Deion on his opposite side with Denali and Jomann. All of them staring at the one hundred meter high ground shield and then turning to look behind them at the path of destruction that they had carved. He saw many of the 82nd troopers doing the same as they began to realize that the battle was very nearly over. Lisisa and Jeth and Nara and Mayla had closed the distance now and were moving up to where their line was. Martin could see Dutkne moving calmly with Lisisa and Nara and upon seeing him Martin realized that they were all here. With the exception of two of his sons, Resumar and Arrarn, and his Aunt Deia, his entire family was now here. This filled Martin with a sense of peace that he had not felt since the last time he was in Sparta and that seemed like a lifetime ago. Martin turned and looked at Andro, saw him reaching for his face and then he tapped his jaw. The COM channel came alive over the open frequency.

“Armen?” Andro called out looking up in to sky above him as if he could see SPARTA'S WRATH in orbit. “Report!”

-Your assessment was accurate Androcles- Armen answered. -The tunnels were full and all of them were focusing on reaching that single breach point near you. Initial reports are still coming in, however it appears as if the FAE weapons did as you determined they would. The sensor readings we are now getting from within the tunnels indicate that no Svorag remain alive inside the tunnels. Daurgo already has parts of his units prepared to enter the tunnels to confirm but we have succeeded-

“Casualties?” Andro asked next.

The was a slight pause. -Androcles we suffered no casualties. Admiral Sa'sur reports all of her units active and in order and I have detected no fallen members of the 82nd. All of their beacons are active-

Martin Leonidas watched as his son nodded his head to no one in particular, saw him look round at everyone, and then Martin watched as his oldest son broke into a dance right there on the field of battle and did not care who saw him.

“Keto?” Martin asked him.

Andro looked at his father and shrugged. “I did not think this would work.” He answered him. “I promised Elynth I would dance a jig if it did.”

Martin Leonidas threw back his head and roared in laughter as Elynth immediately joined her Bonded Brother in the dance and it was instantly contagious as first Dorian and then Laren began to dance with him. Within seconds even nearby members of the 82nd, dressed in their Cataphract armor were dancing a jig on that open field.

Martin turned his head and looked at Torma beside him.

“Ah... fuck it!” Martin spoke.

And then Martin Leonidas broke into a dance right there beside his children and fellow warriors.

CHAPTER SIXTY-ONE

VENTORI DISCOVERY BASE

It was a testament really, to the way both Martin and his Queens had raised their children. Once the battle was declared over, security had been set, and their men and women taken care of, the only thing that Androcles and his siblings wanted was to meet Jezima and Meral.

The moment their STRIKER had landed, Aricia and Anja had spirited her and Meral to the Command Center expecting just that, and they were not disappointed. For Jezima and Meral it was as if they had been reborn for the second time in as many weeks, the first meeting Martin and now his children. Their blood descendants, the family they never knew they had up until now. This was compounded further when Dynina's ship arrived in the system and was quickly ushered to the planet. To say that the reunion was so sweet would have been an understatement.

To physically meet the mother of the woman who had claimed the heart and soul of her son Sumar meant more to Jezima than she could ever put into words, and from the moment they were introduced, it was as if Jezima and Dynina both had discovered long lost friends that had been apart for centuries. For Dynina it was a welcome she had not expected, and it had brought her to raging tears once more. Even after Martin had put her down from the bear hug he had held her in for many minutes, Dynina had then been swarmed by his children doing the same; her beautiful Sateia's grandchildren, and her grandchildren. It was a moment in time that would remain with her forever, seeing Perlae, Ishma and Awser mixing with their cousins as if they had grown up together, recanting the battle that had just taken place. The utter sense of total commitment to family that permeated all of them was more than she had ever imagined she would feel again. She could sense it all stemmed from their father Martin, just as it had once radiated from Sumar and Sateia. Nothing mattered to them more than family, just as it appeared nothing mattered more to Martin and his Queens and their children. When you added Gorgo and Dasha to the mix, the four women could just not stop talking or wanting to be around one another. Together they had combined more generations than any other in their long history and from this day forward into the future each of the four women would be recognized as the mothers of them all.

Meral had developed a connection with Zarah and Lucia right away after meeting them and she gravitated to her niece, Lucia and the siblings she chose to stay close to. Meral already knew of Zarah's unique relationship with Androcles and was completely fascinated by it, but she knew Zarah and Andro would come together to talk when things were calmer and less hectic. It was how both of them were Meral knew and now it would be no different. With the three Queens present as well as their children, it was a joyous reunion all around, even given what had taken place only a short time ago. What struck Dynina the most, the reunion and the joy it brought was not limited to just their family. Everyone partook in the happiness and the mood of every Lycavorian and dragon on Ventori was upbeat and their confidence unmatched. Dynina realized that they drew strength from the source of the happiness. From their King and their Queens.

From the Leonidas family.

No one was left out of the happiness. Even those who had to remain at their posts and do their patrols were not forgotten. Food and drink were conveyed to them without question so that they too could take part in the happiness at least on a small scale. This is what Sumar had brought to the Mahanlo Pack when Sateia had turned him Dynina knew. He exuded confidence and warmth when he wanted to and it was this that drew others to him like flies. It was this that made so many others follow his example and begin to change the way Lycavorians related to each other. It was this trait that made others do whatever he asked of them, not because he asked them, but because they wanted too. It was this that made millions believe that they could be better than what they were and want more. And it was this mentality that made Sumar and her daughter so beloved among their people. And now Dynina knew it was the reason so many followed and adored Martin Leonidas and his family. They were the same, shaped from the very same mold and clay and forged within the very same fire.

Tinra and Mitra were there to record it all, beaming the aftermath of the battle for Ventori to every Pralor channel that was out there. Unbeknownst to them, they had begun a movement on Artaaya pushing for the outright election and then the confirmation of Delnash as Chief Elder immediately. His actions and his knowledge regarding those all of them now known to be Praetorians was beginning to hit the news fully. The fact that he did recognize the error of his ways when they first encountered Martin and the others and had come to accept what was happening, this had pushed Delnash over the top in popularity. The Pralor people had needed something to rally them past just getting by, they had needed something to push them to try and achieve their full potential once more. Delnash had given that to them by dismissing the fact that the Praetorians they now knew existed were supposedly from a species many Pralors had long thought beneath them. The times had changed and most of those same men and women began to realize that not everything was as it seemed and they needed to look beyond what they knew and reach for the truth.

Delnash had shown them this and in doing so he had solidified his role as the leader to take them into that future.

The reunion had gone on long into the early morning hours until the days' events took their toll on everyone and sleep came to them all. Most Lycavorians and Tasmor had chosen to remain outside under the clean air and stars knowing that Ventori was finally and forever free of the Svorag disease and would remain so in the future. As was usually the case however, sleep did not hold Martin Leonidas long and after only four hours in the arms of his Queens he was extracting himself from their limbs and up and moving for the Mess Shed to grab a mug of coffee. Once in hand he found his sons, Danny and several others already awake as well, and after some bantering back and forth, they got down to the work all of them knew needed to be done before they left.

So along the edge of the calm lake, Androcles set up a portable star chart table and they got down to business.

"...Something you said about the tunnels father, and the ore that permeates this area of the continent." Andro was speaking as he held the mug of his mother's coffee in his hand. No one was wearing their armor, most in fatigue pants and t-shirts to be honest. Andro wore his standard fatigue pants and combat boots but no t-shirt, his brothers choosing to mirror this style of dress as they all sat around on the ground, most of them drinking their mother's coffee. Martin, Danny, Wayonn, Murano and the others wore t-shirts and fatigue pants with their boots, though all of them were still very much armed. Josie Miller wore a standard tank top, her firm breasts pushing against the fabric of the shirt, but Josie knowing that no remarks about her sexually would ever be made in this company. She was a fully recognized warrior in this group she knew and she held their respect. No one among this group of men would ever make such comments towards any woman anyway Josie knew. The chart table had four holodisks on it and Miranda Lorian, Sa'sur, Captain Patton and Armen occupied these four transmissions. Elynth, Torma, Daurgo and the other dragons within the Leonidas family and beyond all rested around this group of men and women.

"You said they were moving around in tunnels that appeared to be part of the old city's infrastructure and those they had dug after." Andro continued. "I put it to Armen and we came to the conclusion that if this was indeed the case, there would need to be other entrances and exits for they still needed air to breathe and circulate as well as vent the heat from their breeding centers. All of those tunnels leading here to Jorlari from the surrounding area."

Martin nodded his head as he sipped his own coffee. "It's the only way they got around without us picking them up on ground sensors. The damn ore." He said.

"Armen came up with the idea of using Alpha Nine and the others to get in and map the tunnels." Andro continued. "We could track their Duridium exoskeletons with a Neutrino based scan. The Drones you and Manda have with you were made at Dreamland. They aren't made out of Duridium."

"Very nice catch Armen." Miranda commented from within her transmission. "Very nice indeed."

-Thank you, Admiral Lorian- Armen answered.

"Then it was just a matter of using Alpha Nine and the others to fully map the tunnels as quickly as they could and then hitting them at critical points." Andro finished speaking as he sipped his coffee. "Mainly wherever they were keeping these breeding hives that you thought were here."

"And that's why the FAEs?" Martin asked.

Andro nodded his head. "I did not want to use them knowing what they could do if one hit wrong, but it was really the only weapon we have that would not have contaminated this entire area for centuries and still guaranteed we got them all."

"We are very thankful to you for that young Androcles." Nalmos spoke from where he sat on the ground beside the Junior Justice from Microu, Denrak.

Andro looked at the man. "My apologies for the damage the weapons did cause sir." He spoke respectfully. An Alpha wolf speaking respectfully to a Beta wolf, no matter his years, did not go unnoticed by Denrak. "It could not be avoided and we needed to be sure all of them were caught in the kill zone."

Nalmos almost found himself laughing for he had not been this happy in years. "My boy, the damage your weapons caused is miniscule compared to what we can now do. Infrastructure can be replaced, however hard it is, lives cannot."

Andro saw Denrak nod his head in agreement. "Avoi." He spoke softly.

"We did get them all right?" Wayonn asked the question.

-I believe I can answer that Martin- Avi's voice echoed in the transmission where Miranda sat.

"Go Avi." Martin spoke.

-Admiral Lorian and Captain Akemi approved a linking of our sensor grid on the ARC ROYAL with SPARTA'S WRATH late last night- Avi explained. -With her expanded spectrum and more powerful arrays we were able to scan the entire planet, even though there are parts where the ore is prominent. We have been able to determine, with a ninety-four percent ratio, that no Svorag remain-

Martin nodded his head. "Now that is what I like to hear." He said. "Now, I want to make it a hundred percent."

"I have Ordin sending out his Spiketail detachments to those areas with tunnels King Leonidas." Daurgo spoke in a deep and gravelly voice. Most agreed that it suited him though everyone was still trying to get used to the fact that their dragon brothers and sisters could now actually speak. "Their size is the key here because they can enter all but the smallest tunnels. They will search the tunnels to be sure, and if any do remain they will finish them."

Martin nodded his head again. "Manda, Sa'sur, what about the Kintaur?"

All of them saw Miranda chuckle. "I'll let Sa'sur handle that. She is just as protective of her ship as I am it seems."

"They scratched my ship!" Sa'sur complained. "I had to send out two DCTs to bang out the dent and repaint it!"

"Was that during or after you laid down that whoop ass on them?" Captain Patton asked with a grin.

Sa'sur couldn't help herself now and she shook her head. She would take a ribbing from her fellow fleet officers for a while she knew. She looked at Martin. "Two hundred and twenty-nine Kintaur ships were destroyed King Leonidas. The rest ran like the nubous cowards they are. Per Andro's orders, I let them go.

"Survivors?" Martin asked her, smiling slightly for he had already heard about how Sa'sur had reacted when they Kintaur opened fire on her.

"Four hundred and sixty-seven pulled from escape pods." Sa'sur answered. "I have them under guard in the Dragon Den on the SCIMITAR at the moment. They are a pretty motley bunch and the dozen dragons we had on board from the adolescent training brigade on Elear has all of them about to sibfla in their pants. They're docile enough now."

"That won't last." Martin spoke softly. "Jesus, I didn't expect that many. Ideas?"

"Admiral Lorian and I were talking about that this morning." Sa'sur continued. "There is what appears to be a large Kintaur wreck floating around up here. It was hit by two HAVOC missiles that amazingly ripped through the ship and exploded after they had passed through the hull. Most of the crew were sucked into space through the hull breaches, but the ship is pretty much still intact. If we repair the damage to the hull, we can repurpose it as a prison ship. At least temporarily."

"How long?" Martin asked.

"I can put a portion of my worker drones and a dozen engineers on it. Say four to five days." Sa'sur answered.

Martin nodded his head. "Do it. I don't want them on one of our ships any longer than necessary. And double the guard on them Sa'sur. Don't take any chances."

Sa'sur nodded her head. "Milord."

“And enough of this Milord sibfla!” Martin exclaimed in a disgusted voice. “You guys are giving me a freaking head ache!”

“How does pain in the ass sound then?” Danny quipped and then everyone was roaring with hearty laughter.

Denrak looked at Nalmos with wide eyes and Nalmos could only smile and laugh as well. It was a first in anyone’s history as far as he was concerned. A King who did not want to be King. A King who regarded all around him as equals.

“We’ll have to keep SPARTA’S WRATH and her escorts in close to the planet Martin.” Miranda spoke now as the laughter subsided. “Captain Patton kind of bumped into a few of the old satellites in orbit as he was playing Calvary. You were right about them being used by someone else to track our movements, but unfortunately when Captain Patton ran them over, it caused them to explode against his hull. Whoever was using them against us had added an additional Tachyon power matrix source to their fusion cores. Probably to keep anyone from detecting the added sensor equipment. The explosions caused a Reflecting Tachyon Wave to emanate outward from Ventori nearly half a light year. The entire planetary system is now saturated. It overloaded most of our Tachyon Induction Coils to the point where it will be a couple of days before they can purge the excess particles. Only SPARTA’S WRATH and her escorts are inside that ring and were unaffected.”

“They were in low orbit and powered down.” Patton spoke now. “We didn’t see them until it was too late. My apologies King Leonidas.”

Martin waved his hand dismissively. “Christ I ain’t perfect. I don’t expect anyone else to be. You saved our bacon when you dropped in over Discovery Base. Hell, you scared the piss out of me George!”

“How does that affect you and the others Manda?” Andro asked now.

Miranda shook her head. “We have four CAPS up round the clock. Our sensor abilities are cut by roughly half, but I have four RAPTORS on the outer edges of the system as extended eyes and ears. They can cover the system well enough for early warning. Armen has realigned SPARTA’S WRATH and her escorts in mid to high orbits in order to cover the system, but with the residual particles floating around, it will be hard to get clear scans. They don’t have to purge their Induction Coils but even their sensors will be limited by the excessive remnant of Tachyon sources.”

“What about ships coming in?” The new voice asked and they all turned to see Anthylea move up to the command group holding the data pad in her hand. “Refugee ships will be arriving shortly.”

Miranda shook her head. “They were not in the system when the burst happened so they are safe. Armen can act as their beacon and direct them when they enter the system. As long as they maintain normal speed they’ll be fine.” She answered quickly. “And even at this reduced output, we could still pick up any Kintaur ships the moment they entered the system. Those fugly things radiate so brightly, even a blind mute could see them.” This brought chuckles from all around as most everyone knew how Miranda viewed the Kintaur and their large, blocky looking ships.

“No... tell us how you really feel Admiral.” George Patton spoke with a smirk, causing everyone else to once more chuckle softly.

Anthylea held out the data pad to Martin. Unlike her beloved Saydia, Anthylea found herself completely comfortable being around Martin Leonidas and other males among the Lycavorians and other species here. As many of the Tasmor had discovered since being here, they didn’t care that the Tasmor were primarily a female species and culture. If you followed the same ideals and values and you fought, you were a friend to them. “The first six Tasmor transports will be arriving in three hours with the first load of refugees who decided to return.” She spoke. “Eight thousand all told.”

“That many?” Martin asked surprised.

Anthylea nodded her head. “Your presence seems to have inspired your people.”

“You let Saydia and your Quorum know this?” He asked.

Anthylea nodded her head. “With the exception of a few, they know this is the future for our people and they are embracing it as each day passes. Vesara and the others will come around eventually.”

Martin held the pad for a moment. “Ok... this changes things.” He spoke. He looked around at the gathered men and women until he found the person he was looking for. “Lirana?”

“The coordinates you wanted the emergency buildings set up in is large enough Milord.” She answered. “If we bring them down in shifts we should be able to erect the buildings as we go. Do we have enough of these portable buildings?”

Danny chuckled as he sipped his coffee, Martin not being the only one who detected that Lirana had said we. It was infectious as Martin knew it would be. The need to help others of their kind no matter what. The desire to be part of that overall, the pull of such a commitment for a Lycavorian no matter their caste, it was just too great. “Hell... we got enough of those to set up a small city.” He stated. “You tell me how many you need initially and I throw together a detail and get them down.”

“Queen Anja says the first one to be erected is to be the medical facility. In the center. We work outwards from there.” Lirana spoke.

Danny nodded his head. “Done deal.” He spoke. “I’ll handle it fervon.” He said looking at Martin.

“King Leonidas... your communications people have also told me they are beginning to receive calls from all over the planet from survivors.” Lirana spoke. “Queen Anja told me I needed to ask you for permission to go after them.”

Martin looked at her surprised. “Really? When it comes to matters like that she usually tells me to shut up and let her handle it.”

“I had a moment of weakness. It will pass soon enough.” Anja’s voice came from behind Martin, though he had said what he did because he had smelled her sweet honey scent the moment she exited their personal quarters. He knew Aricia and For’mya were up now as well, but Anja had always been an early riser and she could be up and moving within minutes.

Martin turned as Anja’s comment brought soft laughter from their children and the others gathered. With a mug of coffee in one hand, Anja wrapped her other arm around his waist and they shared a soft kiss of love right there in front of everyone, the powerful emotion between them automatically being felt by Aricia and For’mya as they dressed. It was something the six Queens of the Union did now without even thinking about it and it made them so much closer because of it.

“I checked with COMS before coming over here.” Anja told him as she sipped her coffee and looked at him. “At least seven calls from within three hundred kilometers. Anywhere from twenty to a hundred and fifty in size.”

“What do you need?” Martin asked her.

“Several of our KADEN transports and four teams of people to assist. Endy has already agreed that she and Tina will fly us around on our STRIKER.” Anja answered. “Those that came with Lirana and those that stayed behind when Konlar and Thoti left have already volunteered to help as well. Dee will run things here. I have also drafted Tobia, Mari, Calyb and Retta. It will be good field experience for them. Retta told me that they have passed their accelerated Agoge.” Anja looked at Androcles now for confirmation and he nodded his head.

“Calyb got superior ratings in hand-to-hand as well as the Nehtes. Yannis said he hasn’t seen anyone better since Eli went through her Agoge.” Androcles told his mother.

Anja tilted her head to the side knowingly. “And Retta?”

“She did well enough to pass with an above average rating in combat skills and a good rating in everything else medwaw. Yannis said she excelled at Theoretical Tactics.” Androcles replied. “Which is better than I did to be honest.”

“That’s only because you spent more time helping your father and Uncle Danny write the damn course then actually going through it!” Anja hissed at him.

Androcles looked at her with a grin. “Her skills are solid enough mother. She needs field experience so that she can hone them.”

Anja nodded her head then, trusting in her son’s assessment of his sibling’s skills. She knew Androcles would never put them in harms ways if they were not at least as well prepared as they could be.

“Ok...” Anja said turning to look at Murano with a smile. “Tobia wanted to help because she said she needed to get away from you for a few hours. You are wearing her out.” Anja jerked her thumb at Martin. “You’ve been hanging around Andro, who pesters Sadi and the others endlessly, and this big, oversexed lug too much.”

Martin looked at Murano as well as he turned his head and everyone laughed heartily as both Murano and Andro looked at the ground totally embarrassed.

“Thank you mother.” Andro muttered which brought even more laughter to the group and caused Denali to elbow his brother in the gut.

Martin couldn't help but smile for he was not embarrassed in the least and he nodded his head as he leaned over to kiss the top of Anja's head while pulling her closer to him. “You'll have them.” He stated. “We will need to...”

Dynina stood quietly outside the building she had slept in last night, not that sleep came to her at all. Dynina could not recall when she had felt such complete happiness flowing through her. The smell and feel of family filled her senses once more, just as it had when she was among Sumar and Sateia. It was very nearly overwhelming, and the few hours she had spent in the small building she was weeping in joy. So much of what Sumar had told her in their time together had come true, was still coming true, and Dynina welcomed it completely. She could feel the emotions of glee within Perlae, Ishma and Awser inside the camp as they mingled with their family and others. It was a day that Dynina had waited nearly fifteen thousand years for, at times wondering if it would ever happen at all. Now that it was here, her feelings were beyond what she thought herself still capable of.

Though she smelled Jezima, Gorgo and Dasha easily, she waited until Sumar's mother announced herself for she could sense that Jezima was not yet completely comfortable around those who knew she was approaching before she could see them.

“Dynina?” Jezima spoke as she came up behind her with Gorgo and Dasha on either side of her.

Dynina couldn't help herself and she turned quickly and embraced Jezima tightly, her eyes becoming moist once more. Jezima seemed surprised at first, but then the same emotions that were coursing through Dynina were filtering through her as well. Jezima pulled back slightly and looked at the women, both of them rather close in age, and she squeezed her arms tightly.

“Thank you Jezima.” Dynina spoke softly.

“For... for what?” Jezima asked confused.

“For bringing Sumar into this life.” Dynina spoke. “For raising him as you and your husband did. For making him the man he was.”

Jezima held back the tears as well and she smiled. “Then I should thank you as well. Sateia did something that no one else was ever able to do. She captured the heart of my son, and she made him complete. She loved him and I know he loved her. Wayonn showed me some of his memories of them and it was beautiful.”

Dynina looked back to where she had been watching Martin and the others. “And look what that love has given us. What we thought lost so long ago was never really lost Jezima, it simply needed time to evolve.”

Jezima nodded her head. “Yes it did.”

“Dynina?” Gorgo spoke now holding out the mug of coffee with a smile. Gorgo knew exactly how Dynina and Jezima felt, for she had experienced the very same thing all those years ago when she discovered Martin still lived. “Aricia made this blend of coffee when she carried Androcles in her womb. It has become quite popular across the Union and most of our nathos is addicted to it now.”

Dynina took the mug gratefully and sipped it slowly. Her eyes grew a little wider when she tasted it and she looked at Gorgo. “This is delicious!” She gasped in delight. She glanced at Dasha. “I see that your daughter is just as gifted as she is beautiful.”

Dasha chuckled. “She has her moments.” She stated with a smile.

Dynina looked back as she heard the laughter behind them and she saw the red haired Queen Anja now clinging to Martin's side and everyone laughing at something she had said. “Tell me... how did... how did he...?”

Gorgo laughed softly herself. “How did he get six such strong willed and beautiful women to love him?”

Dynina smiled at Gorgo's expression. “Yes.”

Dasha laughed softly now. “We have been asking ourselves that for many years Dynina.” She answered. “We still have not come up with an answer that makes any sense.”

Dynina couldn't help but laugh and she turned back to where they were all gathered. “How does he do it?” She asked another question. “He was... just hours ago he was a hardened soldier in a life or death struggle, all of them were. Now they, I sense only peace among them.”

Gorgo turned her head and looked at her son. “He has always been like that.” She answered. “It is like he flips a switch inside. His father Leonidas was able to do the same thing. From what I understand Resumar had this gift as well. He draws people to him like moths to a flame. All of them do. Androcles is more like his father, but they all have that gift.”

“This is... Sumar had this gift.” Jezima spoke calmly.

Dynina nodded her head. “He did. I saw it many times through the years. He united so many packs on Lycavore. They flocked to him, put his trust in him. And then his son Resumar.” She turned back to Jezima. “He was just like his father you know.”

“You mean stubborn as a rock?” Jezima asked with a smile.

Dynina laughed aloud once again feeling happy and welcome. “Oh Jezima! You never met Sateia!” She said with joyfulness. “There did not exist two more stubborn and pig headed individuals than your son and my daughter. Talking to one of them was like talking to both of them so identical were they. It is no wonder that they loved each other so intensely. They were so much alike.” Dynina turned back to watch them and she saw Martin lean over to kiss Anja's head. “Tell me... tell me of this tiny Queen. This Anja Leonidas. She is so small yet there is... there is something powerful about her.”

“What do you mean?” Gorgo asked now.

Dynina canted her head slightly. “She is... she is different somehow.”

“You mean because she is only half Lycavorian?” Dasha asked.

Dynina shook her head quickly. “Oh no. That she was turned is obvious to any pureblood wolf, though to be honest, I have never seen a more powerful turned Alpha female in all of my years. No one can disguise that. This one though... she has a powerful pull over him that his other wives and mates do not.”

Dasha glanced at her now intrigued. “In what way? Aricia is his Anome.” She said.

Dynina nodded her head. “There is no question of that Dasha. The connection and love between them is pure and unbreakable. It is exactly what I saw between Resumar and Eliani. Nothing living or dead could ever sunder their love for one another. That is what I see between Martin and Aricia as well, but this Anja. It is different with her.”

“Anja is the first woman that Martin ever truly loved.” Aricia's voice carried to them and they all turned to see her and For'mya walk up holding hands and each of them with their own coffee.

Dynina watched as Aricia and For'mya greeted everyone, including her, and then Aricia stood between her mother and Jezima while For'mya stood beside Gorgo. Dynina looked at Aricia once more. “I don't understand. He did not discover you first?” She asked.

Aricia shook her head. “Oh no.” She replied. “Martin found Anja many years before he claimed me, Dysea and all of us. He found her before he ever knew who and what he was. He loved her before he had this knowledge.”

“I don't understand.” Dynina said.

“It is a long and complicated story, how our Beloved discovered who and what he truly is. Someday, when we have several weeks, we will share it with you. How he discovered all of us. Claimed and loved all of us.” For'mya answered her with a smile. “It is quite the story.”

“Anja is... there are many among our people who have tried for years to determine who Martin will reach for most after me as his Anome. Who he favors most after me they say. They agree it is Anja.” Aricia continued now. “We always tease him about it and it is quite funny to be honest, but our people are very smart and they are very correct. He would never admit it, I don't think he even realizes it for the most part, but we all know the answer to that.”

“First love is always a very powerful thing.” Dynina said with a nod.

“Yes.” Aricia said.

“This does not bother any of you?” Dynina asked.

“Anja is so much more than that to all of us.” Aricia said shaking her head. “She always has been. She is our first love as well in many ways. She is our confidence and our compassion. She gives without question and asks for nothing in return. She will deny it, dismiss it, and make jokes about it, all because she doesn’t believe it or does not want to believe it.”

“Why?” Dynina asked.

Aricia shrugged her shoulders. “It does not matter now.” She replied. “Not after we have been together for so long. I may be Martin’s Anome yes, and For'mya his Kinsoaurgai, but Anja is... she is our apria. Our core. We all know this, and we all love her more for it.”

Dynina turned her head and looked at Anja in the distance. “Does she know how all of you feel about her?” She asked softly.

“She may.” Aricia said. “But like I said, she will never admit it because she does not wish it to be this way. In many ways she can be just as silent and unmoving as our Beloved. Martin Leonidas would sacrifice all he is for any one of us, take any risk, remove any obstacle and kill any who stood in his way. We all know this. But for Anja, for Anja I believe the toll taken from those who would attempt or succeed in harming her would be so much more, for it is she who opened his heart to love for the very first time.”

“Avoi.” Dasha spoke softly.

“Then embrace that.” Dynina said softly. “Embrace it and hold it tight just as you have.”

For'mya nodded her head. “Our love for each other, the six of us, it knows only one thing Dynina.” She motioned to where Martin stood. “That beautiful specimen of a man right there, he is why we can do what we do. Why we feel what we feel for each other. That is all that matters to us.”

Aricia and For'mya smiled at Dynina and then moved away from the four women. She watched as they moved quickly down to the large clearing by the lake and joined Martin and Anja. Dynina watched them share deep, emotional kisses with Anja and then Martin and then she saw them pull Anja between them as they got down to the business at hand.

Dynina watched them for a long moment and then turned to Jezima, Gorgo and Dasha. “I have never felt such a connection between women. And Martin is the focus. It... his son... Androcles, he is the same with his wives and mates?” She said softly.

Gorgo nodded her head. “Sadi, Ne'Veha and the others are the same way with Andro, yes.” She told her. “It is almost identical to what his mothers share with each other to be honest. Talking to one of them is like talking to all of them. Many have tried to explain it, none have succeeded. It’s almost as if they have blended into one distinct individual.”

Dynina looked back when she heard more laughter. “If what Aricia says is true, then I fear for anyone who wishes to do harm to her, or any of those he calls mate.” She turned back to Gorgo and Dasha. “I get the feeling that recent events of which I am unaware of have made my grandson Martin quite unforgiving when it comes to the welfare of those he calls wives and mates.”

Gorgo looked at Dasha quickly and then back to her. “Unforgiving would be a mild term to describe what my son would do to any who brought or intended to do them harm.”

“A truer statement than that has never been uttered.” Dasha spoke softly.

COLS FAST ATTACK FRIGATE MOON RUNNER

Lazar moved onto his bridge and directly to where his Operations Officer stood at his station. Laon Kavar looked up as Lazar stopped beside him. Like Rhaos Kyer, Laon had grown up with Lazar, a member of one of the only two Mountain Packs that were allowed to reside in the capital city. Also like Rhaos, Laon was completely loyal to his pack and their people, and not in the least bit loyal to Lazar's father the King. Lazar waited until Rhaos moved over beside them before he began speaking.

“How soon?” Lazar asked.

“Nine minutes twenty seconds.” Laon answered without hesitation. When Lazar didn’t answer right away Laon looked at him intently. “Lazar?” Laon asked looking at him.

“I have been studying the intelligence we have on the Tri-Alliance from their time among us all those years ago.” Lazar told him in a soft voice so that it did not carry even to wolf ears.

Laon nodded his head. “There isn’t much.” He spoke.

“I thought your father had sealed all of that information?” Rhaos asked.

“He did.” Lazar said softly. “Most of it none of our people could understand anyway, but it is where we got the ideas for advancing our engine designs and studies.”

“We should have been studying it more.” Rhaos said. “Not locking it away.”

“Makes you wonder what was in it.” Laon said.

“Tell me about it.” Lazar agreed. “Laon, how fast would it take you to completely power down the ship once we revert from our jump. Nothing but minimal life support and enough power to use our thrusters and keep the Stealth Screen in place?”

“Why would we want to do that?” Laon asked him.

Rhaos met his eyes. “Lazar, you have that look in your eye.” He said.

Lazar looked at him intently before answering. “Humor me Laon.” He spoke finally.

Laon looked back at his instruments and then returned his gaze to Lazar. “If I prep the shutdown, perhaps seven seconds.” He answered.

“And how detectable would we be?” Lazar asked.

Laon shrugged his broad shoulders. “If we were talking about our people, I would say none. Given out Intelligence on these Tasmor and the Kintaur that we know exist in this sector, I would say we would be a hole in space.” He answered. “If our intelligence is accurate they are only a few hundred years ahead of us in engine technology, our instruments and our shields are a match for theirs and our weapons slightly better. At least from what our Intelligence says.”

“If our Intelligence is accurate.” Rhaos said.

Lazar nodded in agreement. “Yes, if.”

“If we are talking about these new Lycavorians like that look on your face tells us you are; I can’t answer that.” Laon continued evenly. “Nasso says his other ships were running full EMCOM Lazar. No unnecessary emissions at all and they saw right through them. I don’t know.”

“Could we do a low band sensor burst into the system before we revert?” Lazar asked. “Get an idea of what is there?”

Laon nodded his head now. “I can use a low frequency EM burst. It would look like a normal spatial anomaly.”

“So no one would detect it?” Rhaos asked.

Laon shook his head. “Not unless they were of the mind to trace its origin.”

Lazar was silent for a moment then nodded his head. “Do it.”

Laon turned quickly. “Deflector Officer! Re-tune Deflector harmonics to low band 234.971. Prepare to initiate a sensory EM pulse.”

Lazar turned slightly when he saw the movement to his right and the large Lycavorian at the Secondary Operations Console rose to his feet. This was Sibot It’om, one of the three spies his father had on his ship. Osrod trusted no one, and nearly every ship had spies such as Sibot on them. Those who reported directly to his father on all activities. Sibot, like all of the others, was nothing more than a brute who thought his position gave him status and control. Lazar, like many other officers in their fleet had made things very clear when they discovered who these men were. They commanded the ships they were on and they would not be challenged.

“Commander.” Sibot spoke. “May I inquire as to what you are doing?”

Lazar looked at him fully now. “If I wanted you to know I would have told you Senior Lieutenant.” He replied. “However, since you seem so inquisitive, I am having Commander Laon initiate a low band EM pulse into the system in order to get a better idea of what we may be facing.”

“Sir! That could reveal our position.” Sibot spoke.

Laon looked up from his station and shook his head. “Sibot, shut up you fool!” Laon snapped. “You have no idea what you are talking about!” Laon pressed several touch buttons on his console. “Pulse away!” He announced. “Seven minutes until reversion.”

“How soon?” Lazar asked him.

“We should start getting data back instantly.” Laon answered as he watched his screens. Lazar noted that Laon’s brow furrowed and he stepped closer to him.

“What?” He asked.

Laon shook his head. “The planetary system. It is saturated with tachyon particles. The only clear part is the planet itself out to several hundred kilometers.”

“Tachyon particles?” Rhaos asked moving slightly closer to his friend. He looked at the instruments and his own eyes grew slightly wider. “How is that possible Laon?” He traced the screen slowly. “This gradient indicates an outward pivot from the planet.”

Laon shook his head. “I don’t know. An explosion of some sort in the atmosphere maybe. That would push it away from the planet.” He replied. “I’m picking up a lot of debris as well. Metallic in nature. If I had to guess, I’d say it was ship debris of some kind. Some of it right near our reversion point.”

“How soon?” Lazar asked.

“Four minutes ten seconds!” Laon spoke.

“Make your modifications Laon.” Lazar spoke as he moved to his Command Station and settled into the chair. “Rhaos, adjust our reversion point to just behind the third moon here.” He pointed to the chart. “This should provide us natural interference.”

“A tachyon surge this large would surely knock out any ship board sensors Lazar.” Rhaos told him.

“Why take the chance?” Lazar told him. “If they are as advanced as Gomar’s report suggested, how do we know a tachyon surge would knock out their sensors? Perhaps it only degraded their abilities. I would rather take every advantage I can use.”

Rhaos nodded his head. “Point taken.” He said. “I’ll bring us in as close to the moon as I can.”

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES CLAIMED SPACE

CAPITAL PLANET JETANIA

NORTHERN CONTINENT

WESTERN TANTIA MOUNTAIN RANGE

RANEV PACK; MAIN SETTLEMENT OF WARIM

Loras Ranev was very well known and respected within Warim. In truth, most everyone in Warim would die for her in an instant. She was the recognized Matriarch of their people, at least those Mountain Packs who adhered to her word. There were some Mountain Packs in the far reaches of the third continent who had yet to recognize her status, but they were not hostile and they all hated Osrod and his rule. Loras had no intention of forcing them to follow her, that was not her way. If they did not trust her enough yet to lead them or follow her word, then she would earn that trust with her actions. Loras had no worries about walking the streets of Warim and having it discovered that she lived. Since Warim’s death, Osrod had tried to get agents into the city four different times. All of them were discovered within hours of moving into the city and either shown very quickly to the city gates, or they disappeared quietly and forever.

Osrod had stopped sending agents after the fourth attempt for he did not want to push the Mountain Packs to open rebellion against him. He had numbers and ships and weapons, but the Mountain Packs knew their land and everything on it. Their young warriors were in far superior physical condition than most of the packs who resided within the lower cities, and they adhered to a code of honor that did not allow much leeway. Any civil conflict between the Mountain Packs and the Plains and City Packs would result in casualties that no one was willing to suffer. In truth, Loras knew that even if he discovered that she still lived, her position as Matriarch to the Mountain Packs would stop him from attempting anything. The Mountain Packs were steeped in honor and tradition, and any attempt against the one they considered their Matriarch would incite open warfare and unite all the Mountain Packs across the planet.

That did not mean that precautions were not taken and the men and women of Warim did not take her security seriously.

There were many times when young warriors from the City and Plains Packs would venture into the mountain lands in order to test their mettle against the sturdy beasts that lived there, and for the most part they were left alone to succeed or fail. More often than not, these warriors were hoping to catch a Mountain Pack female who was in Phase and had strayed too far from their settlements. Mountain Pack females were prized for their exquisite beauty and resilience, and their devotion to their mates and Packs. On the rare occasion when a male Alpha stumbled across a female in Phase and was able to claim her, the young male had to present himself to the young woman's family. Mountain Packs were very different from the City and Plains Packs. They cared nothing for material possessions and their families and packs were the most important thing to them aside from their honor. A young City or Plains male who thought he could claim a Mountain Pack female and simply offer a dowry of credits or gifts was quickly shown the error of his ways and unless the young female wished otherwise, he was escorted from the Mountains with a thorough beating and told never to return. Most of the Mountain Pack's young females did not think otherwise for they had been raised in the honor bound and sometimes harsh life and they wanted an Alpha who was devoted to them and them alone. This had occurred a few dozen times in their history and only four of these times had the Alpha male succeeded in impressing the fathers of the young females. All four of them were now honored members of the Mountain Packs, being quickly indoctrinated and accepted into their unique way of life and committing themselves to the young females. Of those four instances, Loras knew of at least sixteen children between them, and the young males worshiped their wives and mates completely.

Loras made her way down the wide street, allowing the scent of the mountain flowers to filter through her senses as she moved through the crowd towards the Southern Tram building. Warim had an extensive Tram system built over the last decade because of its size and now that Tram connected fourteen other Packs throughout the Mountain Ranges to the South and East, all the way up to the Southern Coast. It was a marvel of Lycavorian engineering and something that Warim's father and then Warim had dedicated their lives to. Loras had seen to it that it had been completed and it had served the Mountain Packs for over a century now and provided many of the jobs that kept Warim and most of the settlements prosperous and healthy. Four new Tram lines had been built that connected directly to the capital city Drinda, one linking here in Warim, though it was closely monitored by Warim's Security Forces. Loras saw Rylin by the west entrance easily enough and she moved up to her with graceful strides.

Rylin looked around Loras, her eyes searching for the security that usually followed the Matriarch wherever she went. "You left them behind?" She asked.

Loras nodded her head. "I told them I was going to be with you."

Rylin chuckled softly at this. "Ah... that explains it."

Loras smiled and nodded her head. All Lycavorians knew who Rylin was and the role she played as Priestess to their people. There were rumors that went back millennia about the strange powers that the Priestess had and while they respected and honored her position, most chose to avoid contact with her because she was feared.

"I assumed, given what you said to me, that security would not be an option." Loras spoke.

Rylin smiles and took her arm. "You would be correct." She said as she began to pull her along. "But you will be quite safe with me."

"Are we going somewhere?" Loras asked. "The Tram entrance is above us."

Rylin shook her head. "We are not using that Tram." She spoke as they came around a corner into a secluded area of the outer building and Loras saw two cloaked figures by what appeared to be a maintenance doorway. Loras was not a fool and she was always cautious knowing that Osrod would want her dead if he knew she lived, but she detected no danger in the air and she trusted Rylin completely. They moved right up to where the two cloaked figures stood and Loras knew immediately that they were female.

"Omrad is waiting Lady Rylin." One figure spoke and Loras was stunned at the voice for she recognized it instantly.

"Taris?" She gasped aloud.

The slim figure reached up and drew back the cowl of the cloak and Loras was then looking at the utterly captivating ice blue eyes and luscious blue black hair of Garget Ranev's youngest daughter. Loras gasped aloud and pulled her quickly into a warm embrace that Taris returned with equal emotion.

Taris Ranev was only twenty-three years old and just a few weeks' shy of her very first Coming of Age fever. Loras had been present at her birth, was her Guardian Alpha and had last seen her on the day of her joining Rylin's secretive Black Watch. A group of young men and women whose only duty was the protection of the Oracle's sacred Scrolls. As Loras stood there looking at her, it all made sense. The Black Watch did not safeguard Scrolls, it safeguarded the Oracle herself if what Rylin told her was true.

Taris Ranev was five foot four inches of muscular femininity. Her luxuriant hair fell to the top of her incredibly firm ass and had three braids on either side that were drawn back into the lush thickness. The simple tan outfit did not hide her womanly figure in the least, her breasts firm and high, her waist slim and her overall musculature incredibly defined. Her cheekbones were prominent as were her full lips, but it was her eyes that could capture and hold you. Ice blue and able to hold you in place with their beauty. She was Garget's youngest child and his only daughter after eleven boys. He had doted over her from the day she was born, and while he did not fully believe in the Prophecy, he would do anything for his only daughter, as would all of her brothers. Garget knew that the Black Watch underwent intense schooling and training with the Priestess and he wanted to insure his daughter was capable of defending herself against any male because he knew her beauty would draw the fools like flies. He had agreed to her joining the Black Watch for it made Taris happy and he and his wife and mate saw her quite often.

"It is very good to see you Lady Loras." Taris spoke with a dazzling smile and a unique glint to those ice blue eyes.

Rylin motioned to the door with her hand. "Before you enter Loras you must understand that the protection of the Vomir is our foremost duty." She told her. "If you step through this door it will become yours as well."

Loras looked at her. "Of course Rylin. I know the importance of the Oracle and what she means to our people even if most do not. I believe in the Prophecy. How... how have you kept her existence secret for so long?"

Rylin nodded her head. "Keeping that secret is second nature to us. If you step through this door Loras, you will believe in far more than just the Prophecy of our people. It is far larger than you can imagine."

Loras looked at her confused. "What do you mean?"

Taris reached out and took her hand. "Lady Loras, do you trust me? Do you trust my father?"

"Without question." Loras answered instantly.

"Then trust in me now." Taris spoke as she motioned to the door.

Loras nodded her head once more and Taris turned to the door, touching something on her wrist. Loras heard the door unlock and slide open and still holding her hand, Taris led her into the interior. Loras's wolf eyes adjusted quickly to the light change and she found herself in what appeared to be a section of the Tram's piping and controls. She was silent as Taris led her forward and the door slid shut behind them. It was a true maze inside yet Taris maneuvered them through the mass of pipes and steel beams with elegance and grace. They came to a second door after walking for several minutes and it opened before they reached it. Taris led her inside and Loras saw the tall Alpha male waiting by the plain, seamless wall in front of them. Loras turned as the door shut behind them again and she looked at Rylin. The light in the room grew as the door shut and Loras squeezed Taris's hand tightly.

"All is ready Rylin." The male spoke and Loras looked at him as he bowed his head deeply to her. "It is a true honor Lady Loras."

"Thank you Omrad." Rylin said as she looked at Loras. "Omrad has served the Oracle the longest of any Black Watch member. He commands all of the Black Watch."

Loras looked surprised. "I thought... I thought the Black Watch Commander was a female Alpha?"

Omrad nodded his head with a smile. "My wife and mate Lady Loras. She is the public face of the Watch and the Co-Commander. I am the shadow face."

"Loras... you will need to contact Tingren and inform him you will be with us for the next several days." Rylin told her. "So that he does not begin a search for you that will draw attention."

Loras looked at her. "Several days!" Loras gasped. "Where... where are we going?"

"This is how it must be Loras." Rylin said. "You must trust me. The Vomir did not send me to watch over you all those years ago just so that we could remove you at our whim. Your role in what is to come is vital Loras, as is Taris's role. That is why she is here with you."

"I don't understand." Loras spoke.

"A new world and future is about to descend on our people here Loras." Rylin spoke. "And it will bring about sweeping change in how we think and act. You and Taris are part of that future. Please."

Loras could sense nothing but truthfulness in Rylin's words just as she always had. She could sense nothing but peace radiating from Taris as well and Taris she had known since she was born. Loras reached to her belt and drew up the small personal communicator and activated it. The response was instantaneous.

"Loras." The voice of the male echoed in the small room and then his face appeared on the small screen.

"Tingren... I am going to be occupied with Rylin for the next few days." Loras spoke. "I am safe my friend and have ample security. I wanted to inform you so that you do not worry."

The man's face crinkled in dislike. "Loras this is highly out of place." He spoke.

"I know... but it is something I must do." Loras said. "I will be fine."

"What do I tell others who come seeking your counsel?" Tingren asked.

"Tell them I have gone to a retreat to consult with the Priestess." Loras answered. "They will not question this."

"And Garget?" Tingren asked.

Loras looked briefly at Taris, saw her nod and then back to the communicator. "He will know where I have gone. Go and be with your wife and mate and your new son for a few days Tingren my loyal friend."

The man seemed to hesitate for a moment but finally nodded his head. "As you wish Loras but if I don't hear from you every day at this hour I will come looking for you!"

Loras looked at Rylin who also nodded her head. She turned back to the communicator. "Very well Tingren. Each day at this hour. I give you my word. Now go and be with your family."

Loras ended the communication before he could answer and she looked at Rylin. "He will do as he says." She spoke.

Rylin nodded her head again. "Indeed he will." She spoke. "He is loyal to you and our people." She looked at Omrad. "You may open the door Omrad."

Loras watched as Omrad touched something on his arm and her eyes grew wide when she saw the large section of wall behind him simply disappear from view and reveal an entirely new chamber. Omrad stepped to the side and Taris led her into the large circular chamber with odd looking floor and ceiling.

"What is this?" Loras asked as Rylin moved up beside her and Omrad stepped into the chamber and touched his wrist again. The wall appeared in front of her once more, just as solid as it was when they had first entered the outer room.

"This is the future." Rylin spoke just before Omrad touched his wrist once more and the room was filled with a bright orange like light and the four of them vanished as the Teleporter activated.

COLS FAST ATTACK FRIGATE

MOON RUNNER

THREE HOURS NINETEEN MINUTES AFTER ENTERING VENTORI PLANETARY SYSTEM

Lazar sat quietly in his command chair as his crew did their jobs and he was content to watch. He had chosen his crew carefully, making sure to put more Mountain Pack members on his crew than City or Plains Packs. Warim had taught him not to trust easily, and after his father had Warim killed that sense of security had grown four fold. He could do nothing about the spies his father had planted on his ship, but he knew who all of them were thankfully. Sibot was just the most vocal and foolish. They had exited their last jump just where he had planned, behind the medium sized moon orbiting Ventori. The entire system was saturated with tachyon particles indicating something had indeed exploded in the upper atmosphere of Ventori and sent the particles out into the system in a circular pattern. Lazar had waited for ninety minutes with his engines and weapons on standby to make a quick exit while they floated in the upper gravity of the moon and made like a hole in space. When no ship made to come close to them, Lazar ordered their systems online at their lowest output so they could scan the surrounding area. The upper gravity of the moon provided some natural stealth and he kept their power output at extremely low levels in order to remain hidden as long as possible while he allowed his crew to do what they were trained to do. Lazar was thinking about his mother in Warim when Rhaos motioned him over to Laon's station. He rose from his chair and moved there in eight strides.

"What do you have?" Lazar asked.

Laon looked at him. "Way more than I ever thought we would or could get." He replied.

"What do you mean?" Lazar asked him.

"Now that we are in system I can tell you that it was a tachyon pulse that emanated from the planet." Laon spoke. "Probably high up in the atmosphere. If I had to guess, I'd say some kind of older satellites that someone added tachyon power matrixes to in order to hide them. It spiraled outward and affected all the ships in the inner system. It's why they haven't found us yet."

"Come again?" Lazar asked. "And speak normally Laon... Rhaos and I don't understand you when you get excited."

Laon chuckled and nodded his head. "It has to be affecting their sensors as well or they would have been all over us the moment we entered the system even with our Stealth Screen in place. I looked over Gomar's report again, saw what their ships were doing and if they found our ships while under full EMCON then their sensors are far superior to ours in every way. This is why I know for a fact that they have been affected by this tachyon burst. They would have found us by now if they weren't."

Rhaos nodded his head. "It makes sense Lazar." He told him. "If a big guess."

Laon gave Rhaos a light punch in the arm. "The more advanced a system is, the more it is affected by things beyond your control." Laon stated.

Lazar nodded his head. "I agree it's a big assumption to make but I'm with you. How long will this last?"

"The tachyon particles per meter is slowly going down, so I estimate we have about eighteen hours before they can detect us." Laon replied. "If their sensors are as good as I think."

"Eighteen hours, I can work with that." Lazar spoke quickly. "Can we scan the planet and surrounding area with our passive arrays?"

"I already have. The wreckage dotting the system is definitely Kintaur." He replied. "It matches up with what our Intelligence told us. From the amount of wreckage, I would estimate the remains of at least two hundred Kintaur ships, probably more. I can detect one hundred and sixty-nine of these Union warships in the system, not including the fighters and smaller ships. Probably transports."

"Fighters?" Lazar gasped.

Laon nodded his head. "I'm guessing the big ones that we can detect, nineteen of them right now, ranging in size from thirty-five hundred meters to forty-four hundred meters. Those have to be carriers of some sort Lazar. Capital Class and larger than our biggest ships by fifteen hundred meters easy, probably more. The big ronnus that Nasso and Gomar encountered is in a low orbit of the planet with four other ships."

"Gomar said there were over three hundred ships that he was able to scan." Lazar said.

Rhaos nodded his head. "Which means the others are still hidden or not in system." He said. "I am leaning towards still hidden."

"So over two hundred Kintaur ships came here and they attacked?" Lazar asked.

"Doesn't look like it worked out too well for them." Rhaos spoke flippantly. "They must be stupider than we thought."

"Maybe..." Laon said. "But they left a treasure trove for us."

"What do you mean?" Lazar asked.

"I was able to scan the nearest wrecks to our location." Laon told him evenly. "Lazar, their engine technology is at least two or three hundred centuries ahead of our own. The general design is similar from what I could scan, but they are far more efficient and provide far more power."

"Seriously?" Lazar asked.

Laon nodded his head quickly, and with an equal amount of excitement. "If I could get aboard one of those wrecks I could download their engine schematics and within months we could improve our own engines five fold."

"Can you do that?" Rhaos asked.

Laon nodded his head. "The one closest to us is still relatively intact. The entire aft section is vented to space but it looks intact. There is a computer port just inside this hole in the hull here that I have pinpointed. I can power it up manually and then download what I need. This has to be the engineering section and the computer network would be connected to every system on the ship."

"Won't they detect it?" Lazar asked.

Laon shook his head. "Not a portable power source." He spoke. "We may even be able to get weapons data."

Lazar looked up and out of the view window at the front of their bridge. "Their weapons didn't seem to help them a whole lot." He spoke. He turned back to Laon. "What about on the planet?"

Laon shook his head. "Harder to tell." He answered. "There seems to be some sort of large, localized jamming field radiating from this continent. A lot of the transports that I've tracked in the system are going back and forth into this field."

"A base?" Rhaos said.

Laon nodded his head. "Pretty good bet."

"Can we get to the surface undetected?" Lazar asked.

Rhaos looked at him with wide eyes. "What?"

"We came here to get intelligence." Lazar said. "If we can get that information without them ever knowing we were here?"

"That's a big if Lazar." Rhaos said. "If we are caught we don't know what they will do. They could just kill us and be done with it."

Lazar shook his head. "If they were of that mindset, wouldn't they have just taken out Nasso and his ships in order to keep it secret?"

"He's got a point Rhaos." Laon stated. "They had our ships dead to rights. They could have blown Nasso's nio mida out of the stars and been done with it. We'd have never known they existed."

Rhaos thought about that for a moment and then nodded his head. "Ok... I'll concede that point. But going to the planet? We know nothing about these Lycavorians Lazar."

"Can you think of a better way to get that information?" Lazar asked him. "Can we scan their ships from here?"

Laon shook his head quickly. "An active scan would be detected instantly even through the tachyon particles in the system. I tried passive scans but whatever their hulls are comprised of, it's not something I have ever seen before and our passive scans won't penetrate it. It's a mixture of metals that don't exist in our data banks. Hell, I don't know if an active scan would penetrate it, but that would certainly lead them right to us."

"Is it possible to get the surface undetected then?" Lazar asked once more.

Laon adjusted his two monitors and pointed at one. "One of our two shuttles could plot a precise course through the thickest parts of the tachyon particles still in the system to the upper atmosphere and then down through the atmospheric layers. This area here, exactly sixty-seven kilometers from this dampening field, it is unusually hot and it is reaching four hundred and twelve kilometers into the upper atmosphere. We could hide in that and make our way down to the surface. We'd have to cover a lot of ground once we got there though, just to get close to this base we think is there, but it is doable."

"Where is the heat coming from?" Lazar asked.

Laon adjusted his monitors once more. "Looks like some sort of seismic event. Residual heat from an explosion maybe? Can't get a lot of details from here."

"That far up into the atmosphere?" Rhaos asked.

"It's possible." Laon said. "No telling how long it will last though. We don't have any information or charts on this planet to base seismic estimates on."

Lazar was silent for a long moment until Rhaos met his gaze. "What are you thinking Lazar?" He asked his friend.

"Two things actually." Lazar answered. "That the intelligence we could gain would go a long way to giving the Mountain Packs more leverage against my father and his many cronies. Including the City and Plains Packs that support him out of nothing more than fear."

Rhaos nodded his head. "I'll give you that one, but we don't want to incite a civil war Lazar." He stated.

Lazar nodded. "I know."

"What else?" Rhaos asked him.

"That we could be sticking our noses into something that is so far beyond us and our ability to understand or cope with it, that we'll get our asses handed to us in a very large way." Lazar finished.

"Exactly my thoughts." Rhaos said.

"There is no gain without risk." Lazar said.

“You are going to quote Garget?” Rhaos gasped. “Now? That isn’t fair Lazar! Not by a longshot.” Laon nodded his head. “I agree, that’s not fair.” He stated with a smile. “Now, when do we go?” Lazar grinned at him and Rhaos shook his head with a smile. “How many do you need to get this data from the Kintaur wreck?”

“Three.” Laon answered.

“Take one of the shuttles.” Lazar told him. “Rhaos put together a ground team and make sure Sibot is on it.”

Rhaos looked at him with wide eyes. “Why?”

“I intend to leave his sorry carcass on that planet and be done with him just as my mother told me to do.” Lazar answered.

Rhaos looked at Laon and nodded. “Works for me.”

Laon nodded as well. “Me too.”

Lazar grunted and turned. “Let’s get started then. We got a lot to do and not a lot of time to do it. We need to be gone before this tachyon field clears completely or we will be sitting ducks.”

VENTORI

“...Still have not answered my question.” Duewa leaned against the portable computer console, her arms crossed over her ample chest and she watched as Anja was putting different things into the Field Medical Bag. “Anja!” She declared forcefully.

Anja turned to face her. “Yes!” She answered trying to keep the smile from her beautiful face. “Ok? Yes... they have already Ascended.”

“I knew it!” Duewa declared. “How did you...?”

Anja turned to face her fully and leaned back against the table. “Eliani was able to sneak them in last year when she went for her Ascension. Before everything happened on Hadaria.” Anja told her. “Vana’s oldest as well. They were... they were advancing at such a complex level that we had to do it.”

“How did you get them into the Ascension Temple?” Duewa asked. “My mother always had guards posted at the entrances to...” Duewa rolled her eyes. “Never mind... that is a stupid question. My mother only ever went there for her own Ascension. She never cared about the Temple when she wasn’t there.”

“The Hadarian Militia, at least that part of it, was loyal to me.” Anja told her. “They only played along with your mother when she was there.”

Duewa shook her head slowly. “The more I discover, the more I realize just how ignorant my mother was. And how close I came to becoming just like her.”

Anja shook her head. “You were never like her Dee.” Anja said. “That is why you were able to break the hold she had on you.”

“Well... Thoti helped with that as well.” Duewa said with a smile.

Anja nodded her head. “Strange how a big cock and a man who knows how to use it can help you see things you would never have seen before isn’t it? Especially if they love you until you can’t stand it.” She spoke.

Duewa burst out laughing and waved her hand dismissively at Anja. “Carians, you are so bad!” She stated.

Anja winked at her. “That’s why Marty loves me.” She told her with a wide smile. “I’m his bad girl!”

They laughed together for several moments and then Duewa moved across the small distance and added something to the bag Anja was packing. She looked at her as they stood there together.

“Are you worried about them?” She asked more seriously.

Anja nodded her head slowly. “A little.” She replied honestly. “I trust the Agoge process though and I trust my son more. If Androcles says they are ready and just need field experience, then I accept that. Yannis is one of the finest instructors we have, and he does not give out free passes to anyone. Especially not anyone with the last name Leonidas.”

“Anja, not to change the subject, but have you given thought to those who will need to Ascend soon?” Duewa asked. “Without being able to access the Temple on Hadaria many will begin to lose their effectiveness. Myself among them.”

Anja looked at her and nodded. “That is why I always advocated for all of our Healers to teach themselves the skills that Yuriko’s husband Filrain taught himself over the years. He was able to go almost three decades and he only Ascended four times Dee.”

“I have begun his lessons myself but that will not...” Duewa spoke.

Anja cut her off with a nod. “I know.” She said. “That is where Sivana comes in.”

Duewa looked confused. “Your sister? How?”

“Ever since Buonau usurped us, Vana has been working on a plan to take away the one thing that your mother can hold over us.” Anja said.

“The Nebula.” Duewa commented.

Anja nodded her head now. “If your mother does not control it then she loses whatever leverage she may have over the Kavalians controlling Hadaria. She loses that leverage, she loses her power and influence.”

Duewa nodded now. “Yes, this is true.” She echoed.

“Vana may have come up with something.” Anja spoke. “I did not bring it to you because I wanted Marty to run it through that beautiful military mind of his and see what he said. It’s reckless and could potentially be a disaster, but if it succeeds it could wrench control of the nebula from your mother and there wouldn’t be a damn thing she could do about it.”

“How do you control a naturally occurring nebula from doing what it has done for thousands of years?” Duewa asked.

“Not control.” Anja said. “Direct.”

“I don’t follow.” Duewa said.

Anja smiled and reached for Duewa’s belt and took her P1. She lifted hers from her own belt and Duewa watched as she snapped the ends of both together making one pad. Anja typed quickly on hers and then Duewa heard several chirping sounds and finally a single beep. At that point Anja disconnected them and held Duewa’s back out to her.

“This will need your approval as well Dee.” Anja said holding her pad out to her.

“Mine?” Duewa gasped.

“I signed the order and sent it back with the last group of dispatches.” Anja told her with a nod. “You are now second in command of all Union Medical Forces and Projects Dee. Anuk did not want it, she loves the field too much and she said a Hadarian needs to hold that position. It’s been vacant since Eurin stepped down a decade ago.” Anja met her wide eyes. “It’s yours if you want it.”

“But you... you already put me in charge of Research Anja.” Duewa stammered aloud. “Why... why this? Why now? What about Eliani? She should be the one to...”

“Anuk is right.” Anja said with a shake of her head. “And Eliani already told me a long time ago that she does not want it even if I asked her to take it. The likelihood of her accepting now that she had found Jomann and Brendi is even less. A Hadarian needs to hold this position Duewa. And I need someone who can tell me like it is. Someone who will back me if she thinks I am right, or tell me I am a nut job if I am wrong. Someone who wants to see our people back within the Union as much as I do.”

Duewa needed no urging after that for she desperately wanted to see that, not only to prove that her mother was wrong all along, but because after experiencing everything she had since Thoti had turned her, Duewa knew it was the best for all Hadarians. Duewa took the P1 Anja held.

“I accept.” Duewa spoke confidently and she saw Anja’s face light up in happiness.

“Really?” She asked.

Duewa nodded her head. “You are right; I do want to see us back within the Union. I truly believe now that it is the only place for our people. Has been the only place for our people. And I relish the closeness that this will bring to you and I.”

Anja took Duewa’s hands within her own and squeezed them. “I feel the same way.” She said warmly.

“Did Thoti know?” Duewa asked.

Anja shook her head. “Just Marty, Aricia and the others and Atropos.” She answered. “It will mean you have to switch back and forth between Earth and Hadaria like we do. Well... at least like we used too.”

Duewa nodded her head. “A prospect that entices me more and more.” She said. “I saw very little of Sparta while I was there and I regret that. Thoti began to show me more, but there is much I have not seen. And he promised me a villa by the sea.”

Anja smiled and shook her head. “You hooked him good girl!” She spoke with a knowing smile. “A villa by the sea! Wow! Thoti hates the ocean.”

Duewa nodded with a grin. “I know.”

They both turned when Retta and Calyb came into the Med Center with Atropos, Tobia, Mari and Emylea in tow. Anja nodded her head. “Look over the plan.” She told Duewa. “Martin said to come to him if you have any questions about the military aspects of it you don’t understand. Take your time Dee. If we are going to do this, then we have to get it right the first time. We won’t have a second chance.”

Duewa nodded her head. “I understand.”

Anja looked at Atropos as he finished securing her bag and then tossed it over his shoulder. “We’ll be gone tonight but back by the end of the day tomorrow.” Anja said. “You need anything you just call.”

Duewa smiled. “We’ll be fine.” She told her. “Just don’t get too cozy out there.”

“Cozy?” Anja gasped. Anja leaned close to her ear. “The only place I have ever been cozy is snuggled between Martin and Aricia, with both their tongues doing wondrous little things to me.”

Duewa couldn’t help it and she laughed again and hugged Anja tightly. “Call if you need any more supplies.” She said. “I’ll have them sent out right away.”

Anja nodded as she tucked her P1 away and reached down to grab her personal Hip Pack. “We’ll see you tomorrow night.” She stated as she began to follow Atropos out of the Med Center.

Duewa looked at the P1 in her hand and came to realize that the future of her people, hers and Anja’s people, it now rested with the decisions they made. Her mother may have been in charge right now, but knowing Anja as she had come to know her, those days were numbered. She would do whatever she needed to do in order to see the day come where the Hadarian people were once more part of the Union and free.

VENTORI DISCOVERY BASE ADHOC COMMAND CENTER

“...Can do it then?” Martin asked the image of Thoti and Edrao in the image.

Thoti nodded his head. “Edrao has obtained detailed plans of the station Martin.” He answered. “His contacts on Artaaya must be very high placed.”

Martin looked at Edrao and saw him nod. “We have known for some time that Lorendo could not be trusted King Leonidas. We have been gathering data on his activities for years. The plans to this station were a risk worth taking. We have had them for over a decade now, but no means to use them. Until now.”

“Casualties Thoti?” Martin asked.

Thoti shook his head. “Minimal. The station is serviced by three primary ventilation systems. We’re going to approach as a standard supply delivery ship, a team will space jump to each system and flood the station with Anestine Gas. Once we have confirmation that everyone is out, we will move in and secure the station.”

“Is there any way to confirm whether or not there are Svorag on board?” Danny asked from his chair at the table where he sat with Androcles, Wayonn and Murano.

Thoti shook his head. “Not until we get aboard.” He answered. “We will wait until the STRIKER arrives with the new particle weapons you are sending and then hit the station in roughly twenty-three hours.”

“Konlar?” Martin asked.

“He is coordinating the movement of our settlement to Ventori.” Edrao spoke now.

Martin blinked quickly. “What?”

Edrao nodded his head. “We discussed this on the trip here King Leonidas. Our place is with our people. There on Ventori. We no longer have to hide ourselves because of Lorendo and we want our people to be free once more.”

“Can you get them here unseen?” Martin asked.

Edrao nodded again. “We have transports to move them all, but what we don’t have is someone to protect them. The transports are not very fast. We built them from scratch, but securing engine components was not easy or cheap.”

“Sibfla!” Martin exclaimed. He turned to the large table and stabbed down on the control panel. “Manda?”

Miranda Lorian’s face appeared in the small communications holodisc on the table. “Go for ARIZONA actual.” She spoke.

“Manda... I want a Full Strike Wing of ships prepared to depart in one hour.” Martin told her. “Coordinate with Sa’sur, but pick from those ships that are still Shrouded. No sense in giving away positions to unwelcome eyes.” Martin looked at Edrao. “Have Konlar send the coordinates directly to Admiral Lorian Edrao. You will have your escort.”

Edrao nodded his head with a smile. “Good.”

“Thoti, contact me when you have the weapons and you are prepared to strike.” Martin told him. “Let me be clear though, if for any reason you feel that things are going south Thoti, you blow that damn station and everything on it clean out of the stars. You hear me?”

Thoti nodded his head. “Yes Milord.” He spoke.

“Good luck my friend.” Martin spoke. “And don’t get your ass shot or anything cause then Duewa will blame me.”

Thoti chuckled. “No worries.” He said before reaching out on his end and terminating the transmission.

Martin turned back to those in the room and moved to the chair and sat down. He was about to begin speaking when the door opened and the Durcunusaan Officer entered and moved directly to where he sat. He whispered into his ear and Martin nodded quickly.

“Of course. Always.” He said as he rose back to his feet and watched as Dynina came into the Command Center with Nicha, Kenroe, Orman and Amena close behind her. Martin didn’t hesitate and neither did Androcles. Both of them rose to their feet to greet her and Dynina was quickly pressed between the two of them as they nuzzled her affectionately. Dynina basked in the attention while Nicha stood to the side and smiled. Nicha knew that Dynina would be greeted as family when they finally got here, she just didn’t realize how much that meant to the Leonidas family. Nor did Dynina for that matter. They did not care who saw these displays of affection which was very out of character for an Alpha wolf, but Nicha suspected that Dynina did not realize just how far the Lycavorian people had come from her days on Lycavore.

Dynina reached up finally, tears rolling down her cheeks, and she put her hand to Martin’s cheek while drawing her other hand up alongside Andro’s head. “I know there is so much going on but we need to talk of things.” She spoke calmly.

Martin nodded his head. “I know.” He replied. “Now is as good a time as any I suppose.” Dynina looked briefly at where Danny, Murano and Wayonn sat and then back to Martin. He nodded his head once more. “They are among those I trust most of all.” He told her. “Whatever you need to say can be spoken of in front of them.”

Dynina nodded and Martin ushered her to the chair. She watched as Kenroe, Orman, Amena and Nicha settled into chairs around the table before she sat down. Martin and Andro joined her on either side, Dynina reaching out to them almost instinctively and taking their hands. “I... I have dreamed of this day.” Dynina spoke softly. “For so very long. You have your grandfather’s features and your grandmother’s eyes.” She told Martin. “Yellow gold in wolf form. The most beautiful eyes.” Dynina turned and looked at Androcles. “And you... it is not easy understanding how your father managed to secure the love and devotion of such beautiful females, but you, that is easy with you. Your cahs are utterly breathtaking. Your mother’s eyes entirely.” Dynina squeezed their hands tightly and shook her head quickly. “Vada carians alinn lae.”

“Vada carians alinn lae staania.” Martin told her. “I came out here hoping to find out the history of my family, my blood. I have found far more than I ever imagined.”

Dynina looked at him and smiled through her tears. “And so many questions as well.” She said.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes.”

“You do realize that even Jezima and I will not be able to answer all the questions that you have staaniaketo.” Dynina told him.

Martin nodded again. "You will be able to answer most of them." He stated. "The rest I can live without. For now, anyway."

"And give the rest of us some peace of mind." Danny spoke from his chair.

Dynina looked at his handsome ebony face, the extremely powerful body and then the perfectly white teeth. A tall and powerful Alpha that deserved the title he carried. Dynina had noticed in her short time here that all of the males, whether they be Alpha or Beta, all of them were in superb physical condition. Beyond superb. Just as it had been when his grandfather led their people.

"Martin's Mard Fervon, Daniel Simpson." Dynina spoke with warmth in her voice and a smile on her face. "You have saved each other more times than either of you can recall and this has formed a bond that marks you as brothers and one that shall never be broken." She said causing Danny to look at her oddly. "It is in your auras."

Danny looked at her for a long moment. "He told you to say that didn't he? To freak me out right?" Danny quipped quickly. This caused Andro and the others to chuckle softly for they knew Danny was not very much into fate and destiny, though he did believe in both.

Dynina smiled and shook her head. She looked at Martin. "I can see now why this bond exists between you. He is very much like you."

"I'm better looking though." Martin said quickly.

"Better looking?" Danny gasped in mock disbelief. "Sibfla son... you really need to get your eyes checked! Better looking than a two headed, shit house Acamarian rat maybe!" Danny chimed in just as quickly. "No... I take that back. They are better looking than you! Pointy ass noses and them beady little eyes! What Aricia, Red and the others see in you I have no idea! You are just plain, honest to the gods fugly!"

Dynina couldn't help herself and neither could Nicha and both of them burst into hearty laughter as Kenroe, Amena and Orman looked on confused. Even the gravity of the situation all around them did not dull their spirits or the Etheric resonance Dynina took note. They were true brothers in every sense but blood, however, blood stopped being a factor a long time ago in the love these two men felt for each other she suspected.

Kenroe leaned closer to where Wayonn sat. "Do they... do they always act like this?" He whispered the question.

Wayonn nodded his head with a smile. "This is actually very mild in comparison to most times." He answered him, seeing all their eyes go wide.

Martin leaned back in his chair with a smile on his face and shaking his head knowing that Danny had bested him again. He squeezed Dynina's hand and saw her turn to look at him. "So tell me staania... what do you want to talk about?"

Dynina nodded and shifted in her chair. "There is so much." She spoke softly.

"Why don't you start with these COLS individuals staania." Andro suggested. "They seem to be very interested in you and our family. They have to know we are here by now."

Dynina glanced at him and nodded. "Yes, but first, I must tell you of the chamber on Lorenu."

"The chamber?" Martin asked leaning forward now.

Dynina nodded her head. "It was already there when we arrived on Lorenu, the center portion of our city as well. We have built around it through the years, but the main part of our city was already there, and it was a very advanced city. At first we thought perhaps Sumar had been the one to have built the chamber given the outer shell surrounding it, but our sensor scans of the surrounding terrain and minerals indicated that the interior predates Sumar by several hundred thousand years at least. Perhaps more. Just as the main portion of our city does. He only put in place the security measures."

"Someone else built it?" Martin asked. "Who? And why abandon it?"

Dynina shook her head. "We have never been able to determine that staaniaketo." She answered. "And we have tried."

"A temple of some sort then?" Andro asked. "From early in Pralor history?"

"It is not of any Pralor manufacturing capability that we know of." Amena spoke from her chair causing Andro to look at Wayonn and Murano.

Wayonn and Murano shook their heads as well when Andro looked at them. "The Pralor people do not have a known recognized deity or religion that they followed. At least none ever listed in our entire history. We have always given thanks and blessings to the Ancients within The Rift of Time. This has never changed.” Murano answered.

“There is also a holo message from Sumar within the outer chamber, one he must have recorded before ever coming to Lycavore. He is younger in the message and he speaks of strange things.” Dynina spoke once more. “I have listened to it hundreds of times, especially after we first arrived. I missed him and Sateia so much. He speaks vaguely of what is held inside and that only someone of his blood would be able to deactivate the security measures he put in place and then enter the actual chamber. There is a single window that looks into the main chamber but all we can see are three distinct symbols of some sort placed on the wall directly across from the door in a vertical fashion.”

Martin was very interested now and he leaned forward. “Symbols?” Martin watched her nod. “What else did the message say staania?”

Dynina looked at him intently. “Only that the chamber holds items which will be of supreme importance in facing what will come. What the future to come will be like, he said. He speaks directly to me at the end, telling me that you would come to us one day and that I must insure you enter the chamber with the keys. It was if he already knew me when he made this message staaniaketo. As I said, it was very vague and it references these keys that would unlock what has been hidden away for us.”

Martin stiffened slightly and looked at Andro. He turned back to Dynina. “Keys?” He asked her. “He said keys?”

Dynina nodded her head. “We were not able to copy the message because of security measures he put in place but he mentions the keys several times. Three keys that will unlock the fourth, and then all four would be needed to begin the journey.”

“What journey?” Martin asked.

Dynina shook her head. “We don’t know.” She replied. “That is why you must come to Lorenu. Nearly fifteen thousand years this has been twisting our minds and only you can unlock it. You and the three keys. Do you know what he means?”

Martin sat back in his chair and looked at Androcles once more. Dynina took notice of this look between father and son now and she turned her head to see Daniel, Wayonn and Murano had become silent as well. She turned back to Martin.

“You know something!” She gasped. “Tell me staaniaketo!”

“Staania, Sumar appeared to father and I both just recently. He and Dadrien.” Androcles spoke now seeing her eyes go wide in disbelief. “Somehow they were projecting Etheric images of themselves. He spoke to us. To me on a station within Pralor space, and to father right here on this very planet.”

Dynina’s hands rose to cover her mouth in shock. “Son vada carians.” She stammered.

“Dadrien appeared to you?” Amena asked in equal disbelief. “Truly?”

Andro looked at her across the table. “Yes.”

Kenroe nodded his head slowly. “To speak with the reborn Dahakoan.” He said softly. “His sacred warriors.”

“Andro... show her.” Martin told his son.

“Show me what?” Dynina asked and then watched as Androcles stood up and began to remove the fatigue top he was wearing. Her eyes grew wider still when she saw the exquisite definition of his thick, powerful body and the scars dotting his skin. Dynina gasped when he turned and she saw the intricate design of the tattoos that covered his back and shoulders.

“Oh my!” She gasped as she came to her feet. She reached out to touch the tattoos and traced the beautiful lines on his skin. “This is... it is beautiful!”

“Do you recognize any of these symbols staania?” Martin asked.

Dynina nodded her head quickly and moved her fingers over the back of Andro’s left shoulder. “This one.” She stammered tracing the triangular symbol with three separate circles entwined within it. “This one is on the wall within the chamber. It is one of three.”

Andro turned back around and began to put his top back on as he looked at his father. “I’m willing to bet that Dorian and Laren have the other two distinct symbols father.” He spoke.

“No bet here.” Martin echoed his son.

Kenroe and Amena were looking at Andro from where they sat and it was Kenroe who spoke next. “The words on your skin. That is... that is a Darastrixi language dialect. I have never seen it before but the writing and script is unmistakable.”

“That is what Sarlana said as well.” Andro spoke as he buttoned his fatigue top.

Dynina looked at Andro and then Martin. “Who is this Sarlana?” She asked.

“She is a Doraanar.” Andro answered.

Kenroe came to his feet now. “You have... you have a Doraanar among you?” He almost shouted. “How... how is that possible? How...”

Martin held up his hand, cutting Kenroe off before he could continue. He reached across the table and touched the small control panel on the surface.

“Milord?” The female voice answered instantly.

“Caleia... patch me through directly to SPARTA'S WRATH.” Martin spoke. “You have a channel for Sarlana?”

“Yes, sire. She is working in the Archive Library with several of the Darastrixi that arrived with Prince Androcles.” The female answered.

“Connect the Archive Library to this frequency if you would.” Martin said.

“Stand by.” There were a few seconds of silence and then she continued. “Connection made sire.”

Andro appeared to lift his head skyward. “Doraanar?” He spoke.

“Dahakoan Androcles, I have consistently asked you, Dorian and Laren to refer to me by my given name.” Sarlana’s voice answered instantly. “Do you make it a habit of disregarding what your elders ask of you?”

Andro couldn’t help but grin in embarrassment as his father and Uncle grinned even wider. “He has been doing that for years Sarlana.” Martin spoke now. “I could never break him of the habit.”

Everyone in the room heard Sarlana laugh softly. “Given who his father is, I am not surprised.” She answered which caused everyone but those who had arrived with Dynina to laugh now.

“Sarlana are you near a holo terminal?” Martin asked.

“Yes.”

“Would you mind activating it.” Martin said. “We have some information.”

Several seconds passed by and then the small holo imager on the table activated and they were looking at Sarlana’s petite figure. She was holding a Pralor P9 computer in her hands and they could see the second Darastrixi in the background who Andro recognized as Dalis. Kenroe and Amena grabbed for each other instantly with gasps of disbelief when they saw her.

“By Dadrien’s spirit.” Kenroe gasped loudly.

Sarlana turned in the imager and looked at them when she heard this phrase. “Ah... the Darastrixi that arrived with your staania.” Sarlana said quickly.

“A Doraanar!” Amena stammered. “We... we believed all of you had been killed by...”

Sarlana nodded her head. “That is not the case as you can see.” She spoke pleasantly.

Kenroe bowed his head deeply to her. “It is... it is a blessed honor Doraanar.” He spoke reverently.

“Oh please!” Sarlana gasped. “I have just gotten Aviel and the others to stop speaking to me as if I am some sort of religious icon! I do not wish to have to do this again!”

Martin smiled and looked at Androcles. The tiny Darastrixi Doraanar reminded them both of Helen in not only her diminutive size but her demeanor. “Sarlana... I know I said I wasn’t going to pressure you but...”

“But you are now going to pressure me.” Sarlana said with a smile as she turned back to him in the transmission.

“Kinda sorta.” Martin said with a sheepish grin.

“Well, it is insightful that you contacted me now because I was going to come to the surface today and show you what we have discovered.” Sarlana said.

“Then you have made progress?” Andro asked.

“Yes indeed.” Sarlana spoke with a smile. “I had Conlar and Nekins transfer the contents of my personal library to SPARTA'S WRATH. I was certain I had seen the dialect before and I was correct.”

“Sarlana hold on for one moment.” Martin spoke as he tapped the control panel once more. “Armen... teleport Sarlana and Dalis to my location please.”

-Understood- The reply was instant.

“Now wait one...!” Sarlana began to protest but even as they watched her figure was engulfed in the orange/white flare and she disappeared from the holo transmission along with Dalis Sulryn.

In the blink of an eye she reappeared standing beside Androcles in the Command Center and Martin got to his feet as the last vestiges of the teleportation matrix vanished leaving her and Dalis in the large center.

Sarlana glared at Martin. “I swear by Dadrien’s will if you do that again I will have a long talk with your wives and mates Martin Leonidas! I positively hate doing that! It is not natural!”

Martin looked at her sheepishly as Wayonn and Murano shook their heads. “Sorry.” Martin muttered softly.

Kenroe and Amena rushed around the side of the table and dropped to one knee in front of her, bowing their heads deeply.

“Doraanar!” Kenroe gasped in what could only be described as awe.

Sarlana turned and looked at them. “Stand up! Both of you!” She announced almost sternly, seeing their eyes go wide as they got quickly to their feet. “I am not some sacred figure to be worshiped and adored. All of us are equal here, and all of us have a role to play. After speaking with Aviel and Dalis I now know why the Darastrixi have fallen so low as to kowtow to those monsters.” Sarlana bowed her head to them. “It is a pleasure to meet you and to learn of what you have done.”

“Kenroe and Amena have been anchors for all of us on Lorenu.” Dynina spoke now.

Sarlana nodded and smiled at her. “As you have from what I understand Dynina of the Mahanlo Pack.”

Dynina looked surprised. “You know me?” She asked.

Sarlana smiled and looked at Androcles. “Only what the Dahakoan have allowed me to see.” She answered. “I know that it is from your blood that these two characters descend.” She said jerking her thumb and Androcles and his father. “Perhaps more time spent with you will teach them humility.”

Dynina couldn’t help herself and she laughed softly as Sarlana turned to look at Martin who still wore an embarrassed expression. She took a deep breath.

“Now that I am here, where can we sit?” She asked. “I need to get off my feet while my molecules reform from that hideous form of travel.”

Andro quickly motioned her to where he had been sitting and Sarlana smiled at him with warmth. She grazed her fingers across his arm as she settled into the chair, feeling his Etheric resonance within her, swarming around her affectionately. As Doraanar, this was a gift that he, Dorian and Laren had granted her. The ability to feel them within the Etheric realm, and also the ability to experience how they felt about her. She was their mentor and teacher. To Sarlana however, to be thought of in the same manner as their grandmothers Gorgo and Dasha was the ultimate honor. Martin motioned Dynina into his chair so that she could sit beside Sarlana.

“Very well...” Sarlana spoke evenly. “Shall we begin? Dalis, Aviel and Nahko have been invaluable in their assistance and once the contents of my library archives was transferred to that wondrous ship above, we went right to work.” Sarlana looked at Martin now without the stern glare. “We have discovered quite a bit to be honest Martin. This may take some time. Arzoal and Helen need to be here as well.”

Martin nodded his head. “I’ll have food and drinks brought here.” He said to her. “We have time.” He blinked and lifted his head as he called for Helen and Arzoal within the Etheric realm.

Sarlana looked at Andro now. “Androcles, you should call for Dorian and Laren. They need to hear this too.”

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES CLAIMED SPACE CAPITAL PLANET JETANIA

Loras was clinging to Taris tightly as they reappeared in another circular room. She had reached for the young woman in surprise and fright when the orange/white light had engulfed them under the Tram. As the light dissipated from around them, the room became clear and Loras looked around quickly, defensively, seeing Omrad and Rylin and then allowing her eyes to move outward. She gasped in shock as she saw the massive school of fish move by the clear window all around them and she spun around quickly seeing that they were indeed underwater.

“Carians!” She exclaimed.

“There is nothing to fear Matriarch.” Taris spoke as she took her hand. “We are quite safe here.”

“Where... where are we?” Loras hissed softly, partly in fear and partly in a defensive manner again.

“Two thousand four hundred and nineteen meters beneath the Northern Ocean.” Omrad answered her calmly.

Loras looked at him. “What?” She gasped.

“Do you trust us Loras Ranev?” Rylin spoke now causing Loras to turn and look at her. “Do you truly trust us?”

Loras looked first at Taris and then back to her. She realized that what she felt was not fear of what could happen to her, but fear of the unknown. Rylin she trusted completely and without doubt, and she was Sehise to Taris Ranev, Guardian of Garget Ranev’s only daughter. A position held sacrosanct among their people.

Loras took a deep breath to calm her racing heart. “Forgive me.” She managed to stammer.

“There is nothing to forgive.” Rylin told her. “Believe me, my reaction was much the same as yours the first time I came here.”

Loras looked at her. “Where is here?” She asked once more.

“Just as Omrad told you.” Rylin answered. “We are twenty-five hundred meters beneath the Northern ocean. This is the Oracle’s ship. Her home.”

“Ship?” Loras spoke. “We are on a ship?”

Rylin nodded. “Yes.”

“Rylin, this is no Coalition ship.” Loras stated. “Even I can tell that.”

Rylin shook her head. “No, it is not.” She replied with a smile. “Come.”

Loras watched her move forward and the section of wall in front of them simply slid aside to reveal a long corridor. Loras gripped Taris’s hand as she stepped into the corridor. The ceiling above them was clear and gave her an incredible view of the ocean waters above them, as well as the numerous species of aquatic life that lived in the oceans of Jetania. The corridor was well illuminated and Loras could see the doorway at the end of the hundred-meter-long corridor. Through that clear tubular corridor ceiling, Loras could also see the superstructure of a massive ship unlike any she had ever seen in her lifetime. It stretched nearly ten stories above them and several hundred meters in either direction from what she could tell.

“The teleport pad is out here for security reasons.” Taris spoke to her now as they began to walk. “It can be disconnected from the main ship and strand anyone who uses the pad without permission. There are three others like it all around the exterior of the ship.”

“You have been... you have been here before Taris?” Loras asked her.

Taris nodded her head. “Twice... but never to see the Oracle.” She answered.

“What was... what was that?” Loras asked looking back at the teleport pad as the door slid shut behind them.

“It is a Teleporter.” Taris answered her. “It can move people and material over great distances in the blink of an eye. It is amazing isn’t it?”

“Taris that... that is not... the Coalition does not have technology like that.” Loras spoke.

Taris nodded her head. “No, they do not.”

“How... how many know of this place?” Loras asked.

“Six of us.” Omrad answered from behind her where he walked casually. “My mate, me, Rylin, Taris and the other young Black Watch female you saw at the Tram. She is Anoria. The youngest daughter to Lasun, leader of the Mountain Pack Vesrak.”

“The Vesrak Pack?” Loras spoke. “They are the most introverted of the Mountain Packs. And the most anchored in our old traditions. Lasun told my envoy that he will not recognize me as Matriarch but he would stand with the Mountain Packs if the need arose.”

Omrad nodded his head. “He did Matriarch.”

“That is only five Omrad.” Loras spoke looking at him.

Omrad nodded his head. “We do not know the identity of the sixth Matriarch. Only the Oracle knows this.”

“Please tell me it is not Osrod.” Loras exclaimed.

Omrad chuckled softly as he shook his head. “Osrod?” He asked. “The Oracle would not give to King Osrod even a single stick to keep from drowning. She does not like to be hunted as his father did to her. It was he who forced her to return here to hide. That is when she formed the Black Watch.”

“The Oracle formed the Black Watch?” Loras asked with wide eyes. “I thought our own people did this. To keep the memory of the Oracle alive and to protect her sacred sites.”

“They did... with the Oracle’s guidance.” Omrad answered her. “But as I said, the Black Watch that you know and see among our people, they are only the public face. The public face that Osrod and others like him see and dismiss. Loyal though they may be, they are not the Mard Brutu Stros. My mate, myself, Taris, Anoria and a few others that you know, and many that you do not, they are the True Black Watch. We await the coming of the three Tarivous, those that will signal the arrival of Vada Fera Mard Revik.”

Loras stopped walking and looked at him. “The Heralds. You know the Prophecy of the First True King?” She gasped.

Omrad smiled and it softened his usually stern features considerably. “All of the Black Watch knows of the prophecy Matriarch.” He spoke. “And the role each of us play in his return. You as well Loras Ranev.”

“Me?” Loras gasped. “What do you mean?”

“Anoria and I...” Taris spoke now. “We have seen the faces of those who will claim us as their wives and mates in visions Matriarch. I have seen the Alpha who will love and cherish me as no other ever could. He had eyes of the deepest brown and sparkling with green gems. So tall and handsome and powerful. He will save me and he will be fervon to Tarivu Androcles.”

Loras looked at her with wide eyes. “You... you know his name?”

Taris nodded her head. “Anoria as well. She has seen her love and life in a vision as well. She shared her vision with her father and now she is here.”

Loras looked at Taris. “But Lasun is... he is among the strictest of the Mountain Pack leaders. He has never openly supported the Oracle or the Prophecy. He is closer to the old ways than any of us. It is one of the reasons that Osrod trusts him. Are you telling me he allows his youngest child and daughter to be here willingly because of a vision she had?”

Omrad nodded his head. “This is all true.” He answered her. “When was the last time you visited Naweci Matriarch?”

Loras shook her head quickly. “Never.” She replied calmly. “They do not allow strangers into their main settlement and it is further into the deep timber than any Mountain Pack city. Even the military patrols avoid the area because of the unpredictable nature of the winds and the weather that far up into the mountains.”

Omrad nodded his head. “Indeed they do.”

“There is much you do not understand yet Loras Ranev.” Rylin’s voice spoke from the end of the corridor and Loras turned to see her standing by the door. “Yet you have believed in the Prophecy your entire life and your faith has never wavered. Why is that?”

“Rylin, I have believed because...” Loras started to speak as she moved up to where Rylin stood.

“You have believed for one reason and one reason only.” Rylin told her cutting off her reply. “You want more. For yourself and our people. More than what this life offers. You want to see things that you have never seen; you want to experience things that you have never experienced. You want to love and be loved so fiercely that it takes your breath away.” Loras looked quickly at Omrad, her skin turning slightly red in embarrassment even under her dark tanned skin. “There is nothing to be ashamed of Loras Ranev. You want to feel the wonders of what is out there. Just as we all do. And there is far more out there than even we can know. The Oracle has seen some of them, and that is why Osrod’s father banned her worship and ordered her death. It is why he drove her into hiding a hundred and thirty thousand years ago. To keep us docile and under his control. Just as his son continues the same control.” Rylin pressed the small panel beside the door and smiled.

“But they are not really in control.” She spoke softly. “You can deny Fate, you can fight Fate, you can delay Fate...” Rylin motioned with her hand through the doorway. “But you will never hold Fate at bay for very long.”

Loras Ranev stared at her for along moment and then did what she had always done throughout her two hundred and sixty-seven years.

Loras Ranev took a leap of faith once more.

Loras Ranev was speechless to say the least.

The interior of the ship was mainly wide open, with green hedgerows along the lower promenade that they were walking on. A small stream ran the entire length of the ship from what she could see, trees and stunning floral arrangements scattered between the many crystal fountains. Soft lighting filtered brightly from high above like the sky of Jetania on a day when the sun was partially obscured by high clouds. As they walked Loras could see dozens of Lycavorians moving among the promenade, most of them in small groups of twos and threes, and many of them carrying computers of some sort. They bowed their heads to her when they passed, gazing upon her with respect and in some cases awe. All of them referred to her as Matriarch as they passed.

Loras saw many rooms on either side of the promenade as well. Inside these rooms she saw Lycavorians, young and old alike, sitting and being instructed in things she did not know. The classrooms were not large, only a dozen or so in each, but all of them were full. She saw what appeared to be physical gyms that were also occupied by her people, all of them involved in intensive physical training that they appeared to excel at. They were using staffs of some sort, with blunted ends that looked like spears. Loras gripped Rylin's hand tightly as they walked and she saw all this. Far above she could see at least three additional levels, all with the lush green hedgerows along the edges of the railings. At different intervals there were elevator lifts that were open and she could see male and female wolves moving up and down with them. The one thing that struck her was that there were nearly as many male Alphas as there were females, but the young males studied and trained beside the females as equals. This was not something that took place openly outside of Mountain Pack territory, yet quite a few of the wolves she could smell were not from Mountain Packs.

"Rylin I smell Plains and City Packs." Loras spoke. "The majority are from Mountain Packs but they are mixed in as well."

Rylin nodded her head. "The Oracle's reach and influence is not limited to just the many Mountain Packs Loras."

"How many... how many are here?" Loras asked.

"Just under a thousand." Rylin answered her. "Most are in the final term of their training. Taris, Anoria and twelve others that are scattered throughout the Mountain Packs were the first to complete the Black Watch training. Fifty were chosen to go through the initial training. Only fourteen succeeded."

"What happened to the others?" Loras asked.

"It is my understanding that they chose to remain here and go through the training again after additional schooling." Rylin answered her. "All of them are preparing to join Taris and the others as full members." Rylin turned to Taris. "Next month is it Taris?"

Taris nodded her head. "Yes, Lady Rylin."

"What schooling?" Loras asked her.

Rylin looked at her. "Far greater schooling than is allowed by Osrod and those who make the decisions." She answered. "He keeps the knowledge we have as a people limited to those he can control, and it is far more than he leads everyone to believe."

Loras looked out over the promenade once more. "Lazar has said something to that effect before. He thinks Osrod is hiding knowledge that his father gained from the Tri-Alliance. That he is not using it for the good of our people."

"Osrod is no different than his father and his father before him, albeit he is far more cunning and intelligent than they were." Rylin said. "The Oracle believes as your son believes, that is why she began the Black Watch and why she has them go through the schooling that they do."

Rylin motioned for her to step onto the elevator and Loras did without question. She was enraptured with what she saw, and excited beyond belief. She watched as Taris and Omrad stopped and did not join them on the lift.

“Rylin I must check on the status of the new recruits.” Omrad spoke. “I will join you when it is time to depart. Lady Loras, my mate returns this evening, perhaps you would join us for dinner in our temporary quarters here?”

Loras smiled and nodded her head. “Of course Omrad. I would be honored.”

Omrad bowed his head to her. “It is we who would be honored.” He spoke before turning and heading off down the promenade.

Taris bowed her head to Loras as well. “I will see you when it is...”

Rylin shook her head. “No Taris.” She spoke stopping the young woman’s words. “What is happening now, what will happen in the near future, you will be just as much a part of it as Loras. It is time you met the Oracle.”

“Lady Rylin!” Taris gasped in disbelief.

Rylin nodded her head. “A storm is coming.” She spoke softly. “And for those of us who will be within the eye of this storm, knowledge is our power. The Oracle requested that I bring you as well Taris. Nathos coi sivos un vada Fera Mard Revik Taris Ranev. Forn gur tur shahle rie lon nathos.” (Family is strength to the First True King. You will be part of that family.)

Taris looked hesitant at first but she quickly took a deep breath and stepped onto the lift with them.

Loras looked at Rylin now as she took Taris’s hand in her own. “Are you the only one to have ever seen her Rylin?”

Rylin nodded her head. “And the three High Priestesses before me. There are rumors that she has met with one other, an Alpha male, but this is not confirmed and his identity is not known. It is not my place to question her.” She answered. “It is safer this way.”

“The sixth one who knows of the that machine?” Loras asked.

Rylin nodded her head and met Loras’s eyes. “I see now, more than ever, what Warim Ranev so loved about you. You have an incredibly sharp mind and you are always seeking knowledge.”

Loras chuckled. “Warim told me one day it would get me in trouble.” She said.

“What... what is she like?” Loras asked.

Rylin smiled and looked at her once more as the lift finally stopped and she stepped off. “Why don’t you find out for yourself?” She spoke motioning with her hand.

Loras looked around and her eyes grew wider as she realized they had ascended to the very top of the center of the ship, almost to the massive bubble like windows above. The circular platform was wide and firmly anchored by the massive beams that extended from the sides of the ship. As with down below, this area was also full of stunning floral decorations and three fountains. Trees dotted the entire outer ring of the platform, making it nearly impossible to see who was on the platform from below. The air up here was fresh and clean and smelled of fragrant Jetania Tulips. In the center of the circular platform Loras saw the cloaked figure sitting on one of the many benches and reading from a data pad. She could not tell the size of the figure but her wolf nose detected something different about her.

Something very different.

Loras looked at Taris who held her back when she tried to step off the lift. “Taris?”

“I am... I am frightened Matriarch.” Taris stammered. “This is the Oracle’s realm. It is... it is forbidden to all but the High Priestess.”

Loras was about to speak when the musical female voice echoed from the center of the platform as if it was right beside them.

“You have no cause to fear me Taris Ranev.” The female voice echoed. “Nor you Loras Ranev. You are the future, and the future will always prevail. I welcome you to my small piece of comfort. And to a new world.”

Loras had spun around wide eyed when the voice first spoke and she gazed once more at the figure which had not moved from the bench. She looked at Rylin once more and she only smiled and motioned once more.

“You have always waited for the day when you would know your path Loras Ranev.” Rylin spoke. “You have always known what that path is, deep inside you, but it has remained hidden. Now allow it to come forth.”

Loras looked once more at Taris and she nodded and gripped her hand tightly. Together they began to walk towards the center of the platform while they heard Rylin step onto the lift once more and begin her descent. Loras watched until she was gone from view and then she turned back to the cloaked figure, who had now risen to their feet. She was of medium height, and while sitting down the cloak hid her physical build, now that she was standing Loras could tell she was of a partially muscular build.

“I have waited many centuries for you to arrive Loras Ranev.” The voice spoke, turning to face them but the cowl still hiding her facial features. “Your beauty was spoken of by many, even when you were a small child and now you have taken your place as leader of the faithful.”

“I do not lead them.” Loras spoke as she moved closer. “We speak together.”

“Really?” The figure spoke once more with a touch of humor to it if Loras was not mistaken. “That is not what I am told or what I have seen.” Her head tilted slightly to look at Taris. “And Taris Ranev, only daughter to Garget and Ashon Ranev, the jewel of the eyes of her family.”

Taris bowed her head deeply. “Oracle.” She spoke in barely a whisper.

“Ah child... you do not need to be timid around me.” The figure spoke. “Not the Taris Ranev who defeated her instructor with the staff in her first attempt.”

“You... you know of that?” Taris gasped.

The figure laughed softly. “I know of everything that happens here.” She answered with a slight lilt to her voice. “Most especially to those who will one day soon be part of the family of the First True King.”

Loras looked at her intently, sniffing the air once more and feeling the hairs on the back of her neck stand up. Not in fear for some kind of danger, but for the unknown.

“Your wolf nose tells you to be cautious in the face of the unknown.” The figure spoke as it turned and moved to the railing and looked out between the trees to the undertakings going on below her. “An excellent trait. I have heard from Rylin and others that your sense of smell is much keener and sensitive than a normal Alpha female. Does it tell you to fear me?”

“It tells me that you... you are not... that you are not Lycavorian!” Loras blurted out causing Taris to look at her with wide eyes.

“Pinnos allon gweifalleni forn?” The figure asked. (Does this frighten you)

Loras blinked several times. “Joa.” She answered honestly.

“Then you are ready.” The figure spoke. “And my name is simply Nilantha.”

“Ready? Ready for what?” Loras asked her.

“As Rylin has told you... there is a storm coming Loras Ranev.” The figure spoke. “A storm that will sweep us aside like pebbles of sand if we are not ready.”

“You speak of... you speak of the Prophecy.” Loras said as she moved a little closer to the figure.

“There has only ever been one true royal bloodline among your people Loras.” Nilantha spoke. “It is not Osrod as you no doubt know. It began on your homeworld, far away from here. And no, your homeworld is not a myth or a legend. It is very real, for I was there.”

Loras’s eyes grew wide. “You... you have been there?” She gasped. “How?”

“Do you think this ship has always resided at the bottom of the ocean child?” She asked. “I have seen many things. Experienced many things before coming here with you and your people as what you call Vada Vomir. Though you are also my people as well now.”

“What do you mean coming here?” Taris asked now. “We have always been here.”

Nilantha shook her cowl covered head. “No Taris. That is what you have been raised to believe since the dawn of Lycavorian culture on this planet. However, it is not the truth. Osrod knows it is not the truth and that is why he hides whatever it is his father took from those of the Tri-Alliance. Your ancestors were brought here by another species. A benevolent species who believed in repopulating worlds to continue the chain of life. We knew them well. Once the knowledge of this makes it to the people, things will change.” She told them. “The course of events has already been set in motion and it cannot be stopped now.”

Loras looked at her with wide eyes now. “The Tarivu Androcles.” She gasped. “Vin gente vinn’ tryn ardu mornar mero shylon un vada darsam. Mornar jen sha tor Androcles.”

The figure nodded slowly. “One of three Tarivu that will announce the arrival of Vada Fera Mard Revik. And he is, perhaps the one Tarivu that it would be wisest not to anger. He is fera keto to the Revik and his wrath would be unspeakable because of what he is.”

“What he is?” Loras asked.

Nilantha nodded once more. “You said it yourself did you not? You told Rylin. He is a Lycavorian of the Highest Order. Of the purest blood. He and the others of the Royal family are Alphas that make Osrod and his ilk look like children. Even those who are turned.”

“Turned?” Loras asked.

“The Revik has six Gelleenats.” Nilantha told them. “Only one is pureblood. She is his Anome. Three others are turned females, one is a half breed and one is from the species known as Unysi, though that name no longer is used in the Lycavorian language. It was stricken from the ancient tongue after the Brutujur. Now they are simply called vampire.”

“The Black Day?” Taris spoke now.

Nilantha looked directly at Loras now. “Are you ready to understand Loras Ranev? You and Taris will have important roles to play in the future. Your roles in the Prophecy.”

“The Prophecy?” Loras gasped. “I have no role in the Prophecy.”

Nilantha chuckled. “Oh my child... you think so little of yourself.” She moved closer to Loras now, her hands going up to the edges of the cowl she wore. “Taris will find love in the arms of a man who will steal her breath away Loras... but you my child...?” She tossed back the cowl and Loras and Taris both gasped in undisguised shock.

Her features were unlike anything they had ever seen. Soft skin around her cheeks, but what looked to be soft, pliable scales extending outward from her hairless head and covering the rest of her skull and down her neck.

“I am Darastrixi... and you Loras Ranev... you will one day be Queen to a King who will make you shudder in his embrace and make you desire nothing more in life but his touch and his love. Which you will have.” Nilantha spoke with a smile and bright, deep emerald green eyes. “Of course... in order for that to take place... the darkness must be defeated. And that will not be as easy as I had first hoped.”

Nilantha smiled at Loras and tilted her head to the side. “Welcome. Welcome to my world child. It is wonderful to have you both.”

CHAPTER SIXTY-TWO

OMEN THREE

SHADOWING THE SVORAG MOTHER SHIP

Yuriko Leonidas stared at Filrian’s face as they laid on the bed in their quarters. Given the nature of OMEN THREE’s mission, their quarters on the ship were the size of one room of their villa on Earth. And a small room at that. Yuriko was naked, her lush body firmly pressed up against her Hadarian husband’s side, her chin resting on his shoulder as she gazed at his handsome face. He was still asleep she could tell because of the even rise and fall of his chest, and it was these moments Yuriko and grown to cherish more than anything else in their years together.

Nearly five centuries this man had been at her side protecting her, following her, and healing her with never a harsh word at what she had done. During their search for Lisisa he had seen her act in many ways. He had seen her take life, spare life, and he had witnessed her bed far too many men in order to gain information that she needed. Her goal had been singular and she did what she needed to do in order to find where her adoptive sister was being held. Seeing these things had not dimmed Filrian’s love or devotion to her in all that time. Yuriko could barely remember how they first met or how he became part of her crew, to Yuriko he had always just been there. Once Lisisa had been found by their father, her life had become much easier, but it had taken a Lycavorian and Hadarian woman to show Yuriko that the love she sought then had been right in front of her all of that time. So dedicated to the cause of finding her sister that she was, Yuriko had never seen it. She probably would never have seen it without the help of two who she called mother now.

Their first night together Yuriko had surrendered all she was to this man, and he had loved her with such intensity it still took her breath away. Every relationship she had been in prior to Filrian had been washed away that first night in his arms and they became memories that drifted into oblivion over time. They had been married within a year of first being together, her father insisting that they wait that long, discover each other all over again and plan the perfect ceremony. And they had done just that.

She had turned Filrian their second year together at his request, his explanation that as a pureblood vampire she would live far longer than him and he did not want her to see him grow old. Hadarian lifespans, while greatly extended now, could still not match those of a vampire or Lycavorian. Her mother Anja's grandfather was one of the few exceptions and he was now one of the oldest living Hadarians and still going strong with new technology and fitness programs that her mother had devised through the years. Filrian looked now as he would look for many centuries to come and Yuriko simply could not get enough of drinking him in at moments like these. She belonged completely to him and he to her. He knew her almost as well as she knew herself, and while that had frightened Yuriko in the beginning, now she relished in that fact. Once she had turned him, an Etheric connection had also been established and while she had never been a very powerful Etheric user before, constant classes with her father and the two women she was closest too in Aricia and Anja had quickly pushed her and Filrian both to well above Tier Six. Yuriko could not remember her real mother and father; Martin Leonidas had been all she had ever known as a father. Surprisingly, she was closest to Aricia and Anja more than she was Isabella, who was a pureblood like herself. This never bothered her or them, each of her adoptive mothers loved her as they loved all of their children. As the Leonidas family grew, Yuriko found that her siblings looked to her and Lisisa quite often. She was closest to Andro and Eliani she knew, but they were all family and this made them stronger.

Family.

It was something that Yuriko had never experienced until she had found Lisisa and then family became the focus of her life. Once Androcles joined this world, family became all there was. Filrian, her father and mothers and finally her siblings. Very few people knew Yuriko well outside of her family and that is just the way she liked it. As the years passed, her time spent with Andro and Eliani caused her to think and act like them in many ways, but it was the man who hadn't hesitated for a second in calling her daughter that she idolized and adored. He had never turned his back on her, never doubted her and never once thought of her as anything but his daughter.

Filrian stirred and smacked his lips as he began to wake up and Yuriko smiled at this. He may have been vampire now, but he hadn't changed a bit. She lifted her hand and laid it flat on his warm chest and drew her finger down his pectoral muscle. His build was lean and muscular and he was exquisitely defined in physical dimensions, right down to his deliciously above average sized manhood, which Yuriko unashamedly worshiped as often as she could. His dark brown eyes opened and Yuriko reached up to push aside some of his brown dreadlock style like hair.

"Good morning." She spoke warmly.

Filrian lifted one hand and rubbed his face and the three-day old growth of hair on his cheeks. "We really need to find a replacement for this horrible thing they call a bed." He spoke looking at her. "It has a higher probability of killing us than any enemy we may face."

"I'll make sure I pass that recommendation onto Admiral O'Connor the next time we are at Dreamland." She answered with a smile.

Filrian chuckled. "Yeah, that will go over well." He said looking at the ceiling.

Yuriko shifted her body under the thin sheet. They never wore clothes to bed and his warm skin against her own was heaven to her as she slid seductively onto his chest and settled on top of him. His hands dropped to her perfect ass cheeks and he stared at her with a devious glint in his eyes.

"Are you trying to excite me for a morning frolic Yuriko Leonidas?" He asked her with a smile

Yuriko grinned again. "Maybe I am Filrian Leonidas." She answered. It hadn't taken much convincing for Filrian to add Leonidas as his last name. Until recently the vast majority of Hadarians only had one name. With the return of her father to the throne of the Union and so many Lycavorians adopting second names as was the custom of old Earth, this practice had begun to spread to many different species, Hadarians included.

"It's working you know."

Yuriko settled onto his chest and brought her hands up to his face to stare into his eyes. "I have something I want to tell you." She spoke even as her heart raced in excitement.

"I'm all ears." Filrian answered. "Hit me with it."

“I am pregnant.” Yuriko blurted the words she had wanted to speak for many years since they had married. They both wanted children, but given what they had done for so long, neither of them were ready. Five years ago they had decided to let nature take its course and now it had. Yuriko saw him blink several times as her words sank in and then his dark brown eyes lit up and turned to the cobalt blue of his vampiric nature. Yuriko yelped as he used his vampire speed to flip her over on the bed until he was resting on top of her, his arms encircling her waist.

“I... you will have to repeat that.” Filrian spoke softly. “I’m not quite sure I heard you correctly.”

Yuriko chuckled and spoke the words once more. “I’m pregnant.”

With a yelp of happiness that Yuriko had never heard from her husband she watched him spring off the bed and right there in their quarters he began to dance naked on the cold floor. His dreadlock hair was whipping back and forth and she sat up laughing as she held the sheet over her breasts.

“What are you doing fool?!” She exclaimed as warmth and happiness at his reaction washed over her.

Filrian looked at her even as he was shaking his hips in a disgusting imitation of a dance. “I told your father and Androcles I would dance a jig the day you told me you were pregnant! I’m keeping my promise!”

“Well stop it!” Yuriko laughed. “It’s a terrible jig!”

Filrian blurred in motion, wrapped her in his arms and suddenly she found herself sitting in his lap on the edge of the bed. He kissed her passionately, Yuriko wrapping her arms around his shoulders tightly and returning his kiss with equal passion. His hands came up and brushed through her long black hair and finally took her face in their grasp as he looked at her, his fangs now openly showing and his eyes still changed. This caused Yuriko’s eyes to change and her own vampire fangs to extend.

“You... you are certain?” Filrian asked her. “How long have you known? I need to do an exam. You need to...”

Yuriko laughed and kissed him once more, silencing his confusing sentences. She drew back from him and smiled, her eyes moist with tears because of the happiness she felt and his reaction to the news.

“You don’t need to do an exam my beautiful husband.” She told him. “Stop being ship’s doctor right now. I am certain and I had Moranna conduct an exam two days ago. I am perfectly healthy and ten weeks along.” Moranna was OMEN THREE’s assistant Medical Officer and she was also Hadarian. She had been part of their crew since Yuriko had taken command and was almost as reckless and brash as her beloved husband.

Filrian looked at her. “That is why your blood tasted sweeter.” He spoke.

Yuriko nodded her head. “Apparently it is a side effect of being pregnant that my mother Isabella never told me about.” Yuriko said with a smile. “Probably in the hopes of insuring that we would get pregnant.”

Filrian looked at her intently and gripped the sides of her face. “Yuriko...”

Yuriko shook her head. “No. We made a vow to each other all those years ago. A vow not to change who we were at our core, even when children came to be part of our lives. I do not want to change that husband. That is not who I am.”

Filrian shook his head. “No, it is not. And I have always kept that vow. But we also said when the day came that this... that children became a reality for us that we would be conscious of our actions going forward.”

Yuriko nodded her head. “And I intend to.” She told him confidently. “I want this child Filrian.” She told him while holding his face in her own hands. “I want our child and so many more. Moranna has already put me on my mother’s dietary regime and I intend to stick to it faithfully.”

Filrian dropped his hands to her hips and pulled her closer to him. “And you want me to act like a husband instead of a doctor.”

“I don’t want this to change who we are my love.” Yuriko said.

Filrian was silent for a moment and then nodded his head. “You are right.” He said finally. “We have spoken of this often enough and now that... now that the time is here, I will be who I said I would be.”

“Filrian my love, you know that...” Yuriko began.

“Does this mean no more sex until the baby is born?” Filrian asked suddenly and Yuriko looked at him with wide eyes and then burst out laughing. She wrapped her arms around his head and pulled his dreadlocks tightly to her chest as tears came forth fully now. They had sworn to each other that the day children became a part of their lives that they would remain true to the people they had both become and his question told Yuriko that he had every intention of sticking to that pledge.

Yuriko lowered her cheek to his head and sighed happily. “Gods I love you so much.” She whispered the words, feeling his strong arms pull her tighter. “And no... this does not mean no sex.” She continued. “That would be unbearable.”

Filrian began to laugh as he lifted her into his arms and stood up to spin her around in their small quarters. Both of them heard the chipping of the COM panel and he stopped spinning her around and they both looked at the panel.

“Sibfla... always at the most important moments.” Filrian swore and Yuriko laughed again as she leaned over still within his arms and touched the panel.

“Captain.” She stated. “Go.”

“Yuriko...” The voice of her First Officer Kyne filled their small quarters. He was a member of the Durcunusaan and because of his dual training as ship’s officer he had been Yuriko’s Durcunusaan Captain for more than a decade. Kyne and his elven mate were hers and Filrian’s closest friends since Kyne’s elven wife was the Chief Engineer of their ship. Kyne also never called her by her first name unless there was a problem. Yuriko and Filrian both came to instant alertness.

“Kyne... what is wrong?” Yuriko asked as Filrian lowered her to the deck but still held her close to him.

“You and Filrian had better get up her to the bridge.” Kyne spoke. “We have an issue.”

“What issue?”

“The Svorag Mother Ship has slowed down Yuriko.” Kyne answered. “Almost to a complete stop.”

Yuriko looked at Filrian quickly. “We’ll be there in three minutes.” She stated.

VENTORI DISCOVERY BASE ADHOC COMMAND CENTER

“...derives from the Naami dialect of the Darastrixi language.” Sarlana spoke to them as they all looked at the large monitor behind her. “Just as I originally suspected.”

The number of them in the Command Center had grown now, all of them focused entirely on Sarlana and Dalis. The Command Center had become overcrowded so Danny and Martin to say the least given how many of the Leonidas family were on the surface so Martin and Danny had lowered one entire side of the Command Center. Only Dynina and Jezima watched this with delight in their eyes for it was only another sign to them that Sumar and Sateia were truly alive in their grandson. They clutched each other’s hands in Jezima’s lap and only beamed in happiness. Both Dynina and Jezima had seen Sumar and then Sumar and Sateia do this very thing to include family and close friends in whatever they were doing, however neither woman realized at the time that this sense of family would also extend to the dragons that now gathered around the Command Center building. Arzoal, Torma, Isheeni, Elynth, Ryner, Ladur and Aurith were resting on the ground close to one another and even Miath had joined them since Anja was with Atropos and the only one who Miath trusted enough outside of himself to protect his Bonded Sister was Atropos.

“The Naami dialect?” Kenroe was the first to speak. “Doraanar are you certain?” He asked the question causing Martin and a few others to look at him.

“You do not sound sure.” Aricia commented from her seat beside For'mya. Martin stood behind them both his hands resting on their shoulders.

Kenroe looked quickly at Aricia and then back to Sarlana. “Forgive me Doraanar.” He said humbly.

“We are all equal here Kenroe.” Sarlana spoke with a small smile. “Martin and his family demand this very thing.”

“Damn Skippy.” Martin quipped causing For'mya to reach up and slap his hand on her shoulder playfully. “Oops. Sorry.” He quickly added causing Gorgo and Dasha to shake their heads and Dynina and Jezima to chuckle openly.

“Forgive us.” Amena spoke now resting her hand on Kenroe’s arm where he sat at the table. “We have been among your kind for many thousands of years and many of us have become inseparable friends. Dynina has told us how Sumar and Sateia were, it is just hard to imagine that and yet we are seeing it right now. We just are not use to how... you are a King... so many follow you and would give their lives for you just as Dynina has told us it was with your grandparents. And yet you trust and give so easily and you do not act... you do not act like a King.”

Martin stood up straighter and grinned. “What can I say, I’m charming.” He spoke with a large smile.

“Do not complement him too much Amena of the Darastrixi.” Gorgo spoke up now. “It will go to his head and he will become unbearable.”

“Ain’t that the truth!” Danny muttered under his breath from where he stood beside Martin.

“Hey!” Martin snapped looking at him.

“What?” Danny snapped back. “I didn’t say nothing!”

This exchange brought laughter from everyone gathered, even the dragons among them and finally Helen stood up from between Wayonn and Murano. “Let’s get back to why we are all here.” She said almost sternly. “Before this descends into another insulting match between Martin and Daniel.”

“I didn’t start it!” Martin protested.

Danny was about to reply when Helen’s voice stopped him. “Daniel Simpson if you utter another word I will have Anuk, Nayeca and Kesyla punish you.”

Danny looked at her from across the table knowing exactly what she meant. It was well known now that since General Simpson had taken Kesyla as his third wife and mate, the desire for each other had become overpowering between the four of them and they had been together nearly every night making each other scream to the stars before the Svorag attack. Helen’s eyes narrowed as Danny stared at her and he finally raised his hand in defeat.

“Ok. Ok.” He spoke with a grin.

“Burech.” Martin hissed at him. (Wimp)

“Midaeu!” Danny hissed right back. (Asshole)

Laren sat between Andro and Dorian on the opposite side of their mothers and she looked at Andro now. “Wen hnes innyne brey allon?” She asked in fluent Lycavorian loud enough for everyone to hear her. (Are they always like this)

Andro and Dorian were trying very hard not to break into hysterical laughter and Andro nodded his head slowly. “Jainn.” He answered.

“Enough!” Helen barked forcefully and everyone in the room sat up straighter and was silent. Sarlana was the one smiling now, for she knew there were very few in this room or on the planet for that matter that would not listen the First Oracle of their people. Helen waited for several moments and then looked at Sarlana. “My apologies for the children Sarlana.”

Sarlana kept herself from laughing and shook her head calmly. “As I was saying...” She continued. “To address Kenroe’s concern, I am certain of the dialect.”

“Why does he doubt this Sarlana?” Dynina asked now.

Sarlana looked at her. “The Naami dialect of the Darastrixi language died out nearly four million years ago.” She answered the question. “It was exclusive to one breed of the Darastrixi species. The Onkmet. The Winter Dragons they were called. They are the only ones who spoke using this dialect. They were a very reclusive breed of our species, avoiding contact with other breeds unless absolutely necessary. Very little is known about them for they never allowed any scholars to reside in their settlements to learn about them. They were not overtly unsociable but they were not very open either. The continent they occupied on our homeworld was destroyed in the eruption of a large volcano. When the volcano struck they did not call for assistance and by the time help did arrive, nearly half the continent had been wiped out, including their four settlements and all of their egg centers.” Sarlana looked at Androcles, Dorian and Laren now. “It was also Dadrien’s breed. He was the only survivor of the disaster... and after that day it became the private language of the Dahakoan.”

“Private language?” Martin asked.

Sarlana nodded her head and met his eyes. “The last of the original Dahakoan died just over a million years ago. The Naami dialect was one they used to communicate with each other on the battlefield and in private when they wanted no one to understand what they were saying. When the last of the original Dahakoan passed on into the afterlife, all of the Darastrixi scholars thought the dialect had perished with them. It did not.”

“I don’t follow.” Martin said.

“One morning a Doraanar like myself awoke to a pounding on his door.” Sarlana said. “When he answered it, no one was there. However, at his feet were twelve scrolls. On these scrolls was the entire Naami dialect.”

“So the last of the original Dahakoan was able to transcribe the scrolls and give them to the Doraanar?” Dorian asked.

Sarlana shook her head. “No Dorian... the Twelve Scrolls did not appear until nearly five hundred thousand years ago.” She told him. “More than half a million years after the last of the Dahakoan had passed on. They were enshrined in the Doraanar Temple after that, at least until the time the Elder Doraanar came to me on the day before I left with the Seed Mission to Elear. He placed them in my possession, with my solemn oath, my inglata in the Darastrixi tongue... my promise to keep them safe.”

“You’ve had them all of this time?” Martin asked her.

“Yes.” Sarlana answered. “With the hope and dream that one day the Lorsvek ar Sepas would come true. And it did.”

“That is a good thing then correct?” Aricia asked. “You can translate the markings that Andro, Dorian and Laren wear then?”

Sarlana nodded her head. “I can.”

“I sense a but coming.” Martin spoke now.

Jezima looked at Dynina. “What does this mean? A but coming? Is this not how some of your people refer to their backsides? I have heard Martin use word this to describe Aricia, Anja and For'mya in some way.”

Dynina shook her head. “I have no idea.” She answered.

Martin lowered his head in embarrassment as others in the room once more did their best to not break out in laughter as Aricia and For'mya looked up at their beloved mate and shook their heads sternly. “That does not matter now staania.” Martin finally spoke. “Sarlana... please...”

Sarlana smiled at him. “I do know the correct meaning of this phrase Martin, do not worry. And yes... there is a but coming.”

Sarlana turned to the large monitor behind her and tapped on it several times. An image of the tattoos from Andro, Dorian and Laren appeared on the screen for everyone to see. Danny shook his head and slapped his hand against Martin’s shoulder.

“I’ll say it again fervon... that’s some seriously superb artwork.” He told him.

Martin nodded his head as he looked back to the monitor. “Damn sure is. Better than Pablo for sure and he’s the best I’ve ever seen.”

“Agreed.” Danny echoed.

“So what is the issue Sarlana?” Martin asked her.

“I tried to begin to interpret the markings.” Sarlana told them once more. “Only to find out that they made no sense at all. There were added lines and symbols to the dialect that I had never seen before and these inscriptions... they were not in the Scrolls that I had. Though all seven dialects of our language were merged into one several million years ago, our main language now, no single dialect of the Darastrixi language has ever had symbols in it.”

“That’s a bad thing I take it?” Martin asked.

“Well... it kept me from translating the writings at first.” Sarlana said.

“At first?” Andro asked.

Sarlana nodded her head and motioned to Dalis now. “Dalis is actually the one who discovered what we have found.”

Dalis moved over to stand beside her and looked at Martin. “The tattoos as you call them are actually three different languages superimposed perfectly over each other.” He turned to the screen and typed several times and everyone watched as the monitor split into different sections and then divided. It took several moments and then the monitor was divided into three sections and filled with the writings that formed the complete tattoos on the backs of Androcles, Dorian and Laren. “Three very distinct languages.” He motioned to the monitor. “As you can see one is the Dahakoan language, one is...”

“Lycavorian.” Martin spoke softly moving forward and staring at the monitor.

Sarlana nodded her head. “Yes.”

Martin reached up and ran his fingers along the Lycavorian words slowly. "This is written in the old style." He said finally. "Mother? Grandmother?" Martin spoke looking at Dynina and Gorgo.

Gorgo and Dynina both looked at him oddly and then moved up beside him. They looked at the monitor as well and both sets of their eyes grew slightly wider since they had been sitting on the side and did not fully see the entire monitor. "He's right." Gorgo said.

"I have not seen this in many thousands of years." Dynina commented reaching up to do the same as Martin and run her fingers over the screen.

"What does this mean?" Sarlana asked. "Old style?"

"The writings..." Dynina answered her. "Our language was originally written in a very distinct style. Large, graceful lines and waves just like this."

"This is significant?" Sarlana asked.

Gorgo nodded her head now. "It has not been used since the Black Day." She answered. "The High Coven wanted to destroy every aspect of our society and the scholars and historians who used this style of writing were all gathered and killed through the thousands of years of our enslavement. Every one of them, until none survived. Much like the Oracles of our people."

"Yet you know of it now? What it is?" Dalis asked her. "How?"

"We have Resumar and Eliani to thank for that." Gorgo answered him. "It was said that they were able to safeguard several volumes from the library in our main city during the attack on Lycavore. He hid them when he and Eliani were captured, first on the ship they traveled on and finally on the planet where the High Coven had them detained. They were thought lost when Resumar and Eliani were killed during the exodus of the Ten Thousand and when he and Eliani were killed, it was said no one ever knew where."

"Why would they do such a thing in the middle of fighting for their lives?" Dalis asked.

Gorgo shook her head. "I do not know." She answered honestly. "The volumes appeared on the steps of the Apo Prime University one day and were brought to me by several students who had arrived early for class. I immediately took them to the Overseer of the University and they were locked away in the archive vaults for study. By this time our written language, while unaltered in meaning, had become simpler in style."

"And these volumes just appeared at your University? And they were brought to you by these students?" Sarlana asked softly.

Gorgo nodded her head. "At that time I had become the Lead Professor of History. An investigation was conducted of course, but we were never able to determine how they just appeared on the steps that morning or who had safeguarded them for so long."

"When was this?" Sarlana asked.

Gorgo thought for a moment and then she lifted her face to Sarlana and looked at her with wide eyes. "It was June; the second week of June to be exact. I remember now because it was in the middle of Tuya's Festival of Orchids. The year was... the year was 2036 as we relate time in Earth years now."

Helen stood up from where she sat at the table now. "Gorgo... are you certain of the year?" She asked softly.

Gorgo turned to face her. "Oh yes. I remember vividly for Riall and I attended a State Dinner that evening and we walked among the orchid fields after." She replied.

Sarlana looked at Helen. "Feravomir?" She spoke. "What is it?"

Helen looked at her for a long moment. "The second week of June in 2036 is when the earthquake on Earth damaged Martin's cryo chamber. It could not sustain him any longer and I had to remove him from the chamber. The second week of June in 2036 is the time that Martin truly joined this world."

"Do you remember the day?" Sarlana asked excitedly now.

"I remember it brilliantly. The twelfth of June." Helen answered.

Martin turned quickly to look at Aricia and For'mya at the table, both of them with wide eyes. Sarlana and Jezima took note of this first and Jezima came to her feet.

"The twelfth of June as you say, that is the day that we were informed Sumar had been lost on the Seed Mission." Jezima stated.

"It is the day that we left Lycavore!" Dynina almost shouted.

"Beloved?" Aricia gasped.

Sarlana glanced between the two of them. "Martin, please share with us." She asked him.

Martin turned back to look at her. “The twelfth of June is...”

“My birth day.” Androcles spoke in a whisper.

“Mine too.” Dorian echoed with wide eyes.

Laren looked at Sarlana with wide eyes as well. “That is... that is the day I was born as well Doraanar.”

Sarlana looked at Martin as she took all of this information in. “Something tells me that if I checked Martin, the twelfth of June as you call it, this is also the day that the Scrolls of the Naami dialect were delivered to the Elder Doraanar.”

“Nubou lae.” Martin muttered.

“Martin?” Arzoal’s voice reached out to them and he turned to look at her. “Martin... this day... this twelfth of June. It is also the day that my Pralor body died and I became a dragon.”

Martin stepped back and pulled the chair out from the wall and sat down as everyone watched in silence. He lowered his head into his hands and did not speak as he began to rub his temples. No one moved. No one spoke. Murano made to move towards him but Wayonn took his arm and shook his head. The inside of the Command Center was like a tomb until the only man who could, stepped toward Martin.

Danny reached out and placed his hand on Martin’s shoulder. “Evell wen ineed fervon.” Danny spoke softly.

Martin’s hand came up instantly and grasped Danny’s forearm in an iron like grip and he rose to his feet. The room watched as the two men embraced in what could only be described as a bear hug that would have crushed normal men.

Martin put his hand behind Danny’s head. “To those of us who have gone before...” Martin whispered in his ear.

“They are forgiven their worldly sins!” Danny answered against the side of Martin’s head.

“To those of us that remain...” Martin echoed in that same whisper.

“We shall be known as the Unforgiven! Until we join with them!”

Danny finished the words of the oath they had all sworn to each other many years ago in time when everything had seemed so simple as he squeezed Martin’s back tightly. Martin nodded his head and then pushed him back, holding his arms and looking at him. He nodded once more without speaking and then turned back to Sarlana. He saw that Andro, Dorian and Laren had now risen to their feet and moved in front of the monitor behind Sarlana.

“What do we do next?” Martin asked.

“I will need several hours to translate the Naami dialect and then we need to determine what the third language is.” Sarlana answered. “We need...”

“Doraanar?” Laren’s soft voice echoed in the room and everyone turned to look at her. There were gasps as everyone in the room either sat back in their chairs or came to their feet in stunned shock.

“Carians!” Dynina gasped as she gripped Gorgo’s hands and Jezima moved between them.

Laren’s eyes were nearly glowing, as were Andro’s and Dorian’s, but what caught everyone by surprise was that their eyes had altered shape and now the black ring that usually surrounded wolf eyes, now it surrounded dragon eyes. Thick, black slit dragon eyes that were surrounded by cobalt and azure blue coloring and completely blocking the whites of her pupils. Andro’s eyes were no different, except completely azure in color, while Dorian’s eyes were pure cobalt blue, his usually brown eye now gone to be replaced with cobalt blue.

“Sibfla!” Martin muttered as he looked at his sons and Laren.

Laren turned back to the monitor and lifted her hand to run it slowly across the screen where the Lycavorian words were written.

“Rynvor vada daanth coi regovar hnes gur chevsh.” Laren spoke the words reverently as she ran her fingers over the words on the screen slowly. “Arve Tarivuos, Vada Ardorm Sinuovas echum. Arve essos un cikor vada rebeth.” (When the time is right they will come.) (Three Heralds, the Winter Dragons reborn, three keys to unlock the fourth.)

Dorian moved around Androcles to stand beside Laren and he lifted his hands to the monitor where the Naami dialect was written. Sarlana moved to intercede when Martin reached out and took her arm.

Sarlana looked at him. “Martin I have not translated the words.” She spoke.

Martin shook his head. “Something tells me you won’t have too.” he told her.

Sarlana turned back to where Dorian was and saw Laren now standing between Andro and Dorian, gripping the hands of both of them tightly as they stared at the screen. “No one has spoken this dialect in nearly three million years Martin. They could not...”

“Three keys to unlock the fourth...” The three of them spoke in unison, Laren gripping their hands with hers while Dorian and Andro traced the words with the fingers of their free hands. “So that the journey may begin. Hear these words and have faith... have faith...”

“Joa!” Gorgo almost shouted as her hands went to her face and tears burst from her eyes. Jezima and Dynina grabbed for her as everyone stared at her in open shock at her outburst.

“Gorgo!” Jezima gasped. “Gorgo what is it?”

“There is no mountain too great! He lives in you! He lives in me! He watches over everything we see! Into the future, into the truth. In your reflection... the path you will see. The Mountain of Stone and Light. Three keys to unlock the fourth... reveal the First King of Three and begin the journey. Atop the Mountain of Stone and Light. Only here will the journey be revealed. Only here can the journey begin.”

“Martin the words!” Gorgo gasped loudly. “The words!”

Sarlana looked from Gorgo to Martin quickly her face a mask of confusion, not really knowing what was happening.

“Whoa!” Danny exclaimed and he moved for where he saw Andro teetering to the side, Dorian and Laren also appearing as if they would fall over. He reached Andro just as he toppled over and Martin moved within milliseconds as well, catching first Laren and then Dorian in his arms as they collapsed.

“Androcles!” Martin shouted looking at his oldest son while holding his youngest son and his soul daughter in his arms. “Dorian! Laren!” Aricia and For'mya were beside him an instant later, both of them reaching for Dorian and Laren.

Androcles screamed out and suddenly sprang to his feet as if ready to do battle his azure eyes once more ablaze and nearly glowing and Danny quickly lifted his hands in front of him. “Easy Mandri!” Danny spoke. “It’s me Andro. It’s Uncle Danny.”

Andro blinked several times, his head moving from side to side and everyone saw his eyes return to normal right in front of them. “Tenne.” He gasped aloud. His azure eyes blinked several more times and then he saw his father holding Dorian and Laren. “Dori!” He screamed aloud and moved to drop to the floor beside Aricia. “Laren!”

Andro fell to the floor beside his mother and scooped Laren into his arms just as she was shaking her head and rapidly blinking her own eyes as they ceased glowing and returned to normal. “Andro?” She called out. “Dori!”

“Saoi sibfla!” Dorian groaned next. “What hit us?”

“Dori?” Andro hissed reaching across and taking his brother’s hand.

Dorian’s eyes focused now and he looked at him. “Andro?” He looked around quickly and saw his father holding him. “Medwan? What... what is going on?”

“By the word of Dadrien!” Laren exclaimed as she clung to Andro and he rose to his feet his hands moving over her body to insure she was uninjured while Laren did the same to him. She looked at him once she was fully up, her hands stopping on his arms. “Andro... what... what just happened?”

Andro looked at his father. “How long have we been gone?” He asked as Laren turned quickly to Dorian and was checking him as he began to check her for injuries.

“What?” Martin asked him as he rose to his own feet, allowing his hand to drop from Dorian as he and Laren checked each other. “What do you mean?”

“Father, how long have we been gone?!” Andro asked once more even more urgently.

“Keto... you haven’t gone anywhere.” Martin told him as Aricia and For'mya moved in now. “You have been here all of this time!”

Andro turned and looked around several times. “That is not... it’s not possible!” He said. “We saw... we were there! We were there! We saw them... we saw them in the distance!”

“Andro what are you talking about?” Aricia pressed him as she reached for his face. “Saw who aur keto? Who did you see?”

Andro looked at his father now. “We saw Dadrien! We saw grandfather Sumar! We saw grandfather Resumar! We saw... we saw grandfather Leonidas!”

Sarlana stood between Wayonn and Murano while Kenroe, Nicha, Amena and Orman were gathered around them in a small group. Her eyes were on the table where Androcles, Laren and Dorian now sat, their family gathered around them tightly to include Dynina, and Laren's mother and father Robati and Yokra. They were speaking in soft whispers, Gorgo pressed close to her son on one side, while Dynina and Jezima stood close to him on the opposite side.

Sarlana finally turned to Wayonn. "Wayonn... what is the significance of these words that they spoke. It has obviously affected them all deeply. This is not something the Dahakoan shared with me."

"It has affected Dynina as well." Nicha spoke.

Wayonn nodded his head. "It is very personal for all of them." Wayonn spoke softly. "The words they spoke; these are the same words that are engraved upon the memorial of Martin's father on Earth. Almost exactly." He looked at her. "Leonidas is revered among the Lycavorians on Earth, and throughout the entire Union. The Elves, humans and other species as well. It was his death, his sacrifice for those he had never met and did not even understand, that was the catalyst for the formation of the Lycavorian Union over four thousand years ago. That is what bound them all together. That is what still binds them together."

"Walter..." Nicha said softly. "He... he loved him as he loved his own brothers."

Wayonn nodded his head once more. "Leonidas was the one who forged most of the true Spartan lore and history in battle. They were feared by all. He was the Spartan King that drove them to the heights they reached in ancient Earth history, even with the yoke of the High Coven around their necks. When Martin freed Earth, when he discovered who and what he is, when the people of Earth discovered this, Leonidas was elevated to perhaps the most sacred individual in their history short of the Gods they worship. You have heard what Androcles speaks before he goes into battle?" Wayonn looked at Sarlana.

Sarlana shook her head. "Not heard no... but I have seen it within his resonance."

Wayonn nodded again. "Leonidas' memory and spirit is sacrosanct to their family. Every one of them. To all those close to them. None of them would do anything that they believe would dishonor his name or spirit in any manner. No matter the reason. It is why Martin's brother was dealt with in the manner he was."

"What do you mean?" Kenroe asked. "How was he dealt with?"

Wayonn shook his head. "Let's just say that his end was anything but quick and painless. His punishment was... to our people it was a just end."

"These words Wayonn?" Sarlana spoke now. "Who engraved them upon this memorial for his father?"

"No one knows." Danny's voice spoke from behind them and they turned to watch him step up to their small group.

"Daniel?" Sarlana asked. "What do you mean?"

Danny lifted the mug of coffee he was drinking and took a sip. "The inscription for the memorial was being voted on by the people of Earth at the time. There were like nine choices being debated. The night before the final vote was to be taken, the inscription appeared on the monument. No one knows how. No one claimed responsibility and no one was seen doing it. The next morning it was just there. When Martin saw it, when he saw it the only thing he said was "It stays"."

"Ithquenti." Sarlana gasped softly. "No wonder they did not share this with me."

Danny nodded his head. "Yeah. Very spooky stuff." He said. "And now to have the same words, almost exactly as they are on the monument, tattooed on their skin? Wow."

Sarlana looked at him. "You do not believe do you?" She asked with no malice.

Danny met her eyes. "I believe in my mard fervon." Danny said in reply. "Too much has happened to us; we have too much history together for it to be anything other than what destiny meant for it to be. Believe Doraanar?" Danny smiled warmly. "I believe in that family right there, I believe that destiny and fate has already written their path. And no matter where that path may lead, or what that path entails, I will be where I am supposed to be. Right next to him."

"Avoi." Wayonn whispered the word.

"It is no coincidence that these same words are on that memorial Daniel." Sarlana said. "These... these events have occurred hundreds of thousands of years apart but they are all tied together. It is being driven."

Daniel shook his head. "After seeing what I saw today, I would have to agree with you wholeheartedly. What do you think Andro meant when he said they had been there? Where did they go?"

Sarlana shook her head slowly. "The abilities of the Dahakoan were a mystery to all Darastrixi Daniel. Even the Doraanar did not know the full extent of what they were capable of. My discussions with Murano also lead me to believe that the Praetorian gene within them is also a mystery, as it is with your brother. Murano says he has never seen or felt the kind of Etheric power he feels from the four of them. Even Sumar did not have such a resonance he says."

"So it's... it's possible we have not seen what they are truly capable of?" Daniel asked.

"If I had to guess...?" Sarlana replied. "No we have not."

Orman turned back to the monitor which still held the inscriptions on it in the three different languages. "We still do not know the third language." He said. "This is the key. It has to be."

"Perhaps the temple on Lorenu can answer this puzzle." Amena said now. "The symbols in the tattoos from the third language are somewhat similar to those on the wall in the chamber that we can see through the door."

Kenroe nodded his head in agreement. "It is worth the attempt." He spoke.

Sarlana nodded her head. "Perhaps, but there is too much going on here right now." She told them. "I doubt Martin would agree to just leave for even a day in order to discover this. I know Androcles, Dorian and Laren would not."

"Doraanar we can't just dismiss this." Amena spoke again. "We have been preparing for him to come for thousands of years! We have so many things to show him! So many things that he will need going into the future!"

"Are you talking about this new type of Engine drive?" Danny asked seeing Amena's eyes go wide.

"How do you...?"

Sarlana chuckled softly. "There is very little in the way of information that Martin does not share with his brother Amena." She spoke. "There are no secrets between Mard Fervons."

Amena looked at her quickly and then back to Daniel. "Well... yes. The Subspace Portal Generators are part of it."

Daniel nodded his head. "Our people on Ventori come first." He spoke evenly. "And then there is the problem with this big assed Svorag ship that is headed for Honelze."

"More creatures like the ones you fought here?" Kenroe asked.

"Abominations!" Orman hissed.

"No argument here." Danny said.

"Nor here." Amena chimed in.

Danny's eyes moved to the open wall when he spotted Kasdan rushing forward with Avi in tow. He knew instantly that something was up for Avi would never have left the ship if it was not important. He stepped away from Sarlana and the group just as Wayonn saw him and then Kasdan and he followed. Danny moved to the open wall and motioned Kasdan to him. Kasdan's eyes lit up when he saw Danny and made a direct line for him. He didn't hesitate or pause when he passed Torma and Isheeni or the other dragons gathered around the Command Center.

Daniel looked at Kasdan as he came up pseudo out of breath. Like Martin, and the others of their team, Danny had come to like Kasdan quite a bit. He was a certified straight shooter and somewhat naïve, but he had more courage than most gave him credit for, and he was the most intelligent person that Danny or Martin had ever come across.

"Kasdan... what's up?" Danny asked as Wayonn stopped beside him.

"Daniel I..." He was out of breath.

Danny smiled. "Take a breath big guy." He told him. "What did you do, run from the landing pad?"

-He did- Avi answered.

"Why?" Daniel asked. "Avi?"

-I will let Kasdan relate to you what we have discovered- Avi spoke.

Danny looked at Wayonn quickly and then back to Kasdan as Sarlana moved up next to him on his other side. "Please don't tell me you have found more of the fuglies on the planet." Danny said.

Kasdan shook his head quickly. “What? No!” He declared. He held out the data pad. “I have discovered what the last language is.” He said looking at Sarlana.

Sarlana’s eyes grew wide. “Ithquenti!” She gasped moving closer to him. “How?”

“This first symbol...” Kasdan spoke reaching out to touch the pad he had given Danny and activating it. The small screen showed the separated languages. “It struck me as odd once we had separated the different languages.”

“Odd how?” Sarlana asked as Danny handed her the pad.

“Hold that thought Kasdan.” Danny spoke grabbing his arm and pulling him fully inside the Command Center. He moved right over to the table and watched as Martin and the others looked up at him. “Fervon, you and Andro need to hear this.” He said.

Martin and Androcles rose slowly to their feet. “Kasdan?” Martin asked.

“I have discovered what the third language is Martin.” Kasdan told him.

“Joa sibfla!” Martin barked.

“Jainn sibfla!” Kasdan blurted. He had been studying the Lycavorian language for several weeks under the tutelage of Pablo and Kenny and he was becoming very fluent in its use. He shook his head quickly when he realized what he had just said and the others standing around couldn’t help but smile. This also served to break the mood of reverence that had been hovering over the table with the Leonidas family and everyone could tell that it was a welcome respite. “Joa! No... I didn’t mean that!” Kasdan barked.

Martin smiled broadly and nodded his head. “I know my friend.” He told him. “You are getting good though.”

Kasdan looked at him and smiled as he turned and took the pad back from Sarlana, who held it out to him. “This symbol.” He told Martin handing him the pad and them moving to the large monitor pointing at the symbol in the upper right corner of the last section. “This oval with the triangular points inside the oval. I have seen it before.”

Martin looked up. “Seen it?” Martin asked. “Where?”

Kasdan waved his hand over the monitor and moved the three images of the language into a smaller portion of the screen and then typed several times on the lower portion of the monitor bringing up the image of what appeared to be a plain, brownish book with a different symbol on the cover. At first it appeared as if it was just black lines across the face of the cover but if one stared at it long enough you could tell it was purposefully done in order to form a flame like symbol. He turned back to Martin. “In this?” He replied.

“What’s this?” Martin asked.

“This is a book Martin.” Kasdan answered with a tone that came out as if he was saying ‘how could you not know this?’ “This is a very old, hand written book.”

Martin grinned and looked at him. “Yeah, I can see that. They’re good for reading. I like books.” He said.

Kasdan blinked quickly. “What? Of course they are good for reading.”

For’mya reached out and touched Kasdan’s arm now. “I believe Martin is trying to say he does not understand what you mean. None of us do.”

Androcles looked at his father and his brow furrowed in puzzlement. That the man was obviously nervous and excitable was obvious, Androcles had just never seen his father rely on someone with his personality. “I believe that would be an understatement.” He said. “He is part of your team father?”

“Hey! Don’t you mess with Kas!” Martin announced as his mood became lighter. “This man saved our bacon on Onterom.”

“Well... not really.” Kasdan said.

Martin smiled again. “You ignore him Kasdan. What have you got?”

“This book was in the main museum on our homeworld.” Kasdan spoke once more. “It was one of thirty-three books in a collection and was the main attraction for all of our Science Convocation students for over twenty-two thousand years. Even during the years of war with the Scourge. This particular book and several of its pages were on display in an indestructible clear case just as it was found among the ruins. Each week a new Book of the group was laid out for presentation.”

“Ruins?” Martin asked. “What ruins?”

“That does not matter now.” Kasdan told him with a dismissive wave of his hand. “What does matter is the date this book and the others like it were ultimately discovered by a Science Convocation Archeology Team.”

“June 12th.” Laren spoke now.

Kasdan nodded his head. “Yes. Exactly! June 12th, precisely forty-three years after Chief Elder Sumar was declared lost to us. Between the first and second Scourge Wars.”

“Ok...” Martin said. “And...?”

“Martin, this book was found on the planet Enol Three.” Kasdan told him cutting off his response. “It was the third largest colony world of the species that created the Avatars!”

Murano stepped forward now. “The Onab?” He almost shouted. “Kasdan are you sure?”

Kasdan nodded his head and pointed to the monitor. “If what our known history of them says is accurate, then yes. This is one of thirty-three language texts of the Onab species! If this symbol on the cover is correct, it is the ninth book of the thirty-three. This symbol...” He then pointed to the oval symbol on the monitor. “It is in this book. Page ninety-four. It is said that the thirty-three books contained the entire written history and language of the Onab. There were over a thousand of our history and language scholars studying these very books right up until the day the Scourge came to our homeworld.”

Martin was standing straight up now, staring at Kasdan. “Kasdan are you absolutely sure about this?” He asked after a long moment repeating Murano’s question.

Avi moved forward now. -I can confirm Elder Kasdan’s findings Martin- Avi told him. -I was not created by the Founding Creators, but there are still bits of code that are embedded in each Avatar that refer to our origins-

“You never told me that.” Martin spoke.

Avi blinked several times and then shrugged his broad shoulders. -You never asked- He answered. - And the code is inactive-

Sarlana came forward now. “Avi... the Darastrixi knew of the Onab as well. They were an extremely reclusive species. They avoided contact with everyone right up until their end.” Sarlana’s eyes grew a little wider. “They were just like...”

Kenroe came up beside her. “Just as the Onkmet Breed was.” He stated.

Sarlana looked at Kenroe for a long moment. “You are correct Kenroe.” She spoke and then turned back to Martin. “Our account of them states that the Darastrixi only had contact with them three times in our entire recorded history. The supernova that destroyed their system and their species took place over forty thousand years ago and it is said to have destroyed their entire system in a matter of hours. Nothing could be done to save any of them.”

Avi nodded his head. -You are correct Doraanar Sarlana, but their technology and knowledge surpassed that of even the Pralor people. Technology that they shared with the Pralor people on a very limited basis. This sharing of technology however, it became the basis for most of our own advancements. It did not allow them to save themselves from their own destruction however-

“Avi are you saying they could have prevented the supernova but chose not to save themselves?” Murano asked.

Avi nodded his head. -It is a theory that Chief Elder Sumar held, yes-

“Why would they to that?” Orman asked now.

Martin shook his head and waved his hand. “That is all well and good.” He stated almost dismissively but everyone knew that was not true. Martin Leonidas did not dismiss anything out of hand. “How does that help us? Where are these books?”

Kasdan looked at him and his eyes dropped. “They were... I assume they were destroyed in the Scourge evisceration of our homeworld. The Scourge glassed our homeworld for days. They left nothing untouched.”

Murano nodded his head. “He is right Martin. When the last ship departed the home system, all that was left of our homeworld was a poisoned wasteland. The Scourge obliterated every city. They left nothing untouched.”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “I’m sorry Murano. Truly I am, but if we don’t have these books then no one can translate the tattoos and I do not see the relevance of trying to discover the language. At least not now.”

Murano nodded his head. “I agree.” He spoke.

“So do I.” Danny added his feelings. “We have too much on our plate now.”

Kasdan looked at Martin. “I did not say that it could not be translated.” Kasdan spoke quickly. “There is someone who can translate the tattoos. Someone who made a complete copy of all the volumes and knows the Onab language.”

Martin looked at him oddly as the hairs on the back of his neck began to rise. “Kasdan... why do I get the distinct feeling you are about to drop a hundred-ton thermonuclear bomb right on my head my friend?”

Kasdan took a deep breath. “That would be an understatement.” Kasdan said softly in reply. He met Martin’s eyes. “It is Lorendo.”

SPARTA'S WRATH LOW ORBIT OF VENTORI

It was Miranda’s and Sa’sur’s first visit to SPARTA'S WRATH and both of them were extremely impressed. They had been around Avi enough times through the years to be very comfortable in Armen’s presence as they took the short tour he gave to them before they made their way to the bridge. Though they said nothing to him or each other, both of them took note of his nearly human mannerisms and interaction with the crew. In some ways he had surpassed even Avi when it came to his actions and how natural they were. Now they stood on the bridge on three different sides of the massive Star Chart table that occupied one corner of the massive bridge. The large image of Ventori occupied the center of the holographic overlay, with all of the un-Shrouded ships mapped out in the system, as well as Miranda’s four RAPTORS that were on the edges of the system providing early warning. Byron Leonidas occupied the fourth side of that table with Namiri Daret beside him. He had remained on board SPARTA'S WRATH at his brother’s request on the off chance that none of their family survived the battle on Ventori. Bryon had been incensed at this perceived slight until Androcles had explained to him that if the unthinkable happened, he would be acting as King until such time as Resumar could assume that role. That would require returning to the Alpha Quadrant, which Androcles knew Bryon would not do until those who had taken his family from him were dealt with viciously. Now Bryon was acting as the Operations Officer for the entire Task Force, a role that he found he was excelling at to be honest.

Namiri Daret had elected to remain on the ship for her own reasons, unaware that Andro and everyone who was Lycavorian already knew what this was. He stood beside her now, a place she had rarely left in nearly three days. Most of the crew of SPARTA'S WRATH had already figured out what the relationship between Namiri Daret and Andro was; a political match that made much sense. The Tasmor had become close allies in only a few short weeks and the rumors that King Leonidas truly enjoyed their company and their values only made it that much easier for the crew of SPARTA'S WRATH to accept Namiri in the role she was playing. What Namiri did not know, what even Byron did not know, the crew of the ship they were on, his brother’s ship, they were like Androcles in almost every way and they despised politicians in almost every form. The attraction between Byron and Namiri was growing, all of them could see that, and the crew had already made it their intent to protect whatever might occur between the two of them as they would protect their Prince’s privacy.

It was Namiri who was speaking now as she drew her hand along the edge of the chart table.

“...entered the system here and are proceeding on course as Flight Operations instructed them.” Namiri said. “They should be arriving in orbit in just under twenty-three minutes and will begin preparations to receive transports for disembarking to the surface.”

“The report said eight thousand?” Sa’sur asked looking at her.

Namiri nodded. “Yes Admiral. Seven thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven exactly.”

“We’ll need to know when the last of the refugees clear the ships.” Sa’sur told her. “We have ships and engineer crews standing by to refit your transports and transfer the supplies.”

Namiri blinked several times. “Excuse me... I... what do you mean refit and transfer supplies?” She asked. “We... we were told nothing about this.”

Sa’sur looked at Miranda and they both chuckled softly. It was Miranda who answered her question. “You don’t know Byron’s father very well just yet Princess Daret, but you will come to see a little of how he thinks as time goes by.”

Sa'sur nodded her head. "Indeed."

"I don't understand." Namiri spoke looking at Byron. "Byron, what does she mean?"

Byron Leonidas looked at her and smiled. Every ounce of his wolf blood called out for Namiri Daret in the worse way. He should have known his brother would detect it right away, and give him the space and the means to follow that instinct. Byron could smell Namiri's desire for him wafting from every pore in her body and her scent was so very sweet to him, but he also knew he needed to be discrete for all their sakes. Though he knew the crew of Andro's ship would protect them, most of them probably knew of the arranged marriage anyway, if it was to happen between them, it needed to be done with great care so as not to embarrass his brother and Namiri's mother.

"A dozen Worker Drones will refit your transports with much more advanced engines and navigational equipment. It will allow them to make the trip from your homeworld in half the time. The supplies Admiral Sa'sur speaks of are the first several hundred tons of medical supplies my mother released, and roughly nine thousand tons of spare material in order for our Worker Drones to refit and upgrade a dozen of your front line warships with Refractive Shields, upgraded navigational systems and a very early model of our Phased Fusion Drive Cores. This will increase the range, power and defensive abilities of your ships by a factor of a hundred. It will also give you the means to then reverse engineer them and begin to build and improve upon the design all on your own. My father is sending several engineers who volunteered to teach and advise you."

Namiri's eyes were wide at this knowledge for she simply could not believe it. "But I... I thought your father would not share this technology with us!" She exclaimed.

Byron shrugged his broad shoulders. "My father can be very tricky when he wants to be." He said with a smile. "But he will not ever abandon those he considers friend and ally. Ever."

"Does... does my mother know?" Namiri gasped.

Miranda smiled. "My Tactical Officer E'dira was going to inform her today when she went to the surface." Her dark eyes saw the crew member move briskly from the station across the bridge and she followed him as he went right up to Armen and handed him a data pad. She turned fully to look at Armen. "Armen what is it?"

Armen looked up at them. —Apparently we have lost one of the transports from the Coalition ship that jumped into the system several hours ago—

"Lost?" Sa'sur asked as her eyes narrowed. "How?"

Armen looked at the officer beside him and nodded his head. The man leaned over the table and adjusted the images. "We have been tracking them since they arrived as you and Admiral Lorian are aware Admiral Sa'sur. Their Stealth Shield is at full power and they entered the system under full EMCON control, but we detected them easily enough. They simply sat there for a few hours and then slowly brought their power levels up when we did not respond to their intrusion, likely because they did not believe we had detected them."

Sa'sur nodded her head. "Andro's orders were clear and King Martin agreed. Do nothing unless they make a direct act of communication or violence against us. So far all they have been doing is attempting to scan our ships or the surface."

The officer nodded. "Until now." He spoke touching the table and they all saw two objects light up near the ship and begin moving in opposite directions. "Forty-nine minutes ago two transports disengaged from their ship. One headed for the surface, using the large tachyon particle clouds to try and stay hidden, while the other moved directly for this large piece of Kintaur wreckage."

"Why?"

"We detected a low power surge from the aft portion of this wreckage. It appears to be coming from what is left of a Kintaur Battle Cruiser." The officer answered. "Probably a secondary terminal that is operating on battery power. It's exposed to space so it wouldn't be much trouble to plug into the terminal and download what information they can."

"And the other ship?" Miranda asked.

"It descended into the atmosphere easily enough. Whoever was flying it is an excellent pilot by the way." The man continued. "We lost them here." He punched in the coordinates on the table and the image from the ground came up from high resolution cameras. "This is one of the entrances to the tunnels the Svorag were using. When the FAE weapons detonated, the heat and concussive wave exited at this point. The plume extends to the lower ionosphere and is still very hot."

-Why?- Armen asked. -Sufficient time has passed for dissipation of the aftereffects of the FAE weapons-

“Yes, sir, until we did a thermal scan of the surrounding area.” The officer answered. “The entire seismic plate is made of this sensor distorting ore. It appears that it is also highly volatile when exposed to heat. It ignites at three thousand two hundred degrees. The FAE basically set fire to the entire tectonic plate. The entire plate has heated to over five thousand degrees now. The temperature is dropping, but only by ten degrees every twenty-four hours. The COLS transport flew right into the center of the heat plume and off our sensors. By the time we adjusted for the heat, the ship was gone. Like I said... whoever was flying this ship is an excellent pilot and knew exactly what he wanted to do.”

“The surrounding area?” Sa'sur asked.

The officer shook his head. “We are continuing to scan, but with all of the tachyon particles still in the system and the added problem of this heat from the tectonic plate, it's iffy at best to find them. At least until the particles dissipate further.” He centered the image on the small dot and brought it into focus more. “The ship appears to be some sort of short range transport. I estimate no more than twenty to twenty-five passengers based on its size.”

“Just over sixty clicks north to Discovery Base.” Miranda said shaking her head. “Neither Martin nor Andro are going to like that. Not with the refugees returning. They are wolves, and they could cover sixty clicks in probably fifteen minutes going all out.”

-Send a coded message to Androcles- Armen ordered quickly. -Keep it off the main COM channels-

“Armen I can reach him from here.” Byron spoke up.

Sa'sur shook her head. “No Byron, Armen is right. They are Lycavorians and we don't know how far they have advanced their etheric abilities. Coded and secure Sub Space Armen. Do it now!”

Armen didn't question her order, for while he may have been Commander of SPARTA'S WRATH, Sa'sur was overall Commander of their Task Force. Miranda Lorian was of the same mind and she looked at Sa'sur.

“Sa'sur?” She questioned.

“Based on our first contact with them Miranda I'm not so sure that they are of the friendly type.” Sa'sur spoke looking at her.

“Roll them up?” Miranda asked.

Sa'sur nodded her head. “Yes. Send two STRIKER ATs to where this transport or shuttle is, and have three of your Wolf Pack secure their main ship here. Take it under tractor if you have to.”

Armen turned from the officer he had been talking too. -Sadi and Ne'Veha are returning to the ship as we speak- He told them. -The PREMONITION would be better suited to maneuvering within the wreckage and she is perfectly capable of securing the transport ship on her own-

Sa'sur nodded as she stood up straight and looked around quickly. “I know what Sadi and Ne'Veha can do. Contact them and issue the order Armen. And send the Wolf Pack ships to secure their main ship. I'm going to contact Captain Patton and have him get some of his boys and girls out looking for our guests.”

“Martin and Andro will send out folks too. Dragons will be faster.” Manda said.

Sa'sur nodded her head. “Indeed.” She spoke. “Then I will have him put a standby force on alert. We need to get back to our ships Manda, and hope we find these Coalition fools before they do something utterly stupid.”

Sa'sur could not have known that it was already too late for that.

VENTORI FIVE KLICKS SOUTHWEST OF DISCOVERY BASE PERIMETER

“What do you think they are?” Rhaos asked as he lowered his binoculars and turned his head to look at Lazar beside him. The ridge they were on provided an excellent vantage point from which to view the huge base in the distance and once here, he and Lazar had remained in the thick grass and moved up to the edge. They had been studying the base for the last ten minutes and both of them were stunned beyond what they had ever expected. Mainly due to the massive winged beasts that were moving about the base freely.

Lazar lowered his own binoculars and looked at his oldest friend. “Do you remember the stories your mother told us as boys Rhaos?”

“Sinuovas?” Rhaos gasped.

“Do you have a better explanation?” Lazar asked him. “I certainly do not.”

“They have real, live sinuovas as pets Lazar?” Rhaos exclaimed softly. “That is... that is almost too much to believe.”

Lazar lifted the binos to his eyes once more. “I am not so sure they are pets.” He spoke. “And I have counted at least three different species that we have never seen before as well as the nubous entia endra they have currently hovering over the base.” (Fucking massive ship)

“How many guns do you think?” Rhaos asked.

“Over a hundred at least and that is just on the side of the ship that we can see.” Lazar answered him. “And I would estimate two or three thousand troops within the base perimeter.”

“They are wearing some sort of body armor and many have what would appear to be assault weapons.” Rhaos spoke. “Though there are quite a few who seem to be wearing just normal clothes.”

“At least five towers along the wall.” Lazar said. “All of them, even the civilians, seem to be armed in some manner.” He shifted his binos to the desolate city in the distance. “Blacken ground leading up to the edge of that city in the distance. It appears advanced in its design.”

“Defensive positions along the wall. They fought a battle here.” Rhaos said.

Lazar nodded. “But with whom?” He commented.

“Whoever it was, they do not appear to have succeeded.” Rhaos commented. “Look at the outer perimeter of the wall. A mine field and fully equipped bunkers with heavy weapons. Whoever put this defensive line together is a Master tactician. Anyone who massed against the defenses would break upon the mine fields and then the walls. And that does not include the portable shielding that they have been activating before the transports come and then leave.”

“Which begs the question where are those ships going?” Lazar spoke. “Are you recording this?”

Rhaos looked at him. “Are you kidding? Jorbhe jainn!”

“There!” Lazar hissed. “Four of those beasts just took off and headed for the city! And they carried men on their backs!”

Rhaos shifted his binos. “Sibfla!”

“I count at least nine more beasts over the city on the far side.” Lazar spoke trying to focus his binos to compensate for the distance.

“There are Tasmor among them.” Rhaos spoke. “They match the description that we have in our intelligence files. All of them appear female however. And do you see the number of Alpha females Lazar!? There must be hundreds of them! And the armor they wear does not hide how healthy they are!”

Lazar dropped his eyes and looked at Rhaos with a grin. “Do you always think with your cock?” He asked.

Rhaos grinned broadly. “Not all of the time.” He replied.

“Considering how heavily armed they are, would you like to go down there and introduce yourself?” Lazar asked him.

“Never let it be said that I turned down a good challenge.” Rhaos told him.

Lazar smiled and elbowed Rhaos in the side. He turned back to the binos and focused on the camp. “That building there in the center. The one with only three walls. That appears to be the Command Center.”

“Looks like a gathering of some sort with all of the people there.” Rhaos spoke moving his own binos to that location. “It is too dark from this distance to see inside, but there are at least eight of those beasts outside. Do you think he is there?”

“I would be.” Lazar answered.

“Do we move closer?” Rhaos asked.

Lazar thought about that for a moment and then shook his head. “No.” He answered. “We have no idea of their capabilities. Moving closer puts us further from the ship and we are on a timeline.”

“They seem very casual Lazar.” Rhaos spoke. “Maybe Nasso was wrong about them.”

Lazar looked at him now. “Remember Garget’s lesson when we were fifteen?”

Rhaos rolled his eyes. “Which one? All of them if I recall, involved us getting our asses handed to us.”

“The most dangerous one is the one that looks weakest.” Lazar said.

“Oh, that one.” Rhaos said. “Still, all I really remember is getting my ass kicked.”

Lazar brought his finger to his ear when his COM device chirped in his ear and he recognized his private channel. It was one that only those he trusted on his ship had and they only used it in emergencies. He pushed gently on the earpiece. “Go.”

“Lazar... you had better get back here quickly!” The voice spoke. “We have a problem.” Lazar recognized the voice instantly as Kitas, a trusted Lieutenant of security that he had left in charge of their remaining eighteen-man force at their shuttle.

“Kitas... what is wrong?” Lazar hissed.

“Our ground sensors detected a gathering of Lycavorians six clicks northeast of us a few minutes after you departed. I didn’t contact you because they did not move closer. Lazar, one of the unknown Lycavorian ships just landed there.” Kitas answered. “Sibot disobeyed my orders and took nine of our remaining force, all of them wet behind the ears Alphas looking for glory, saying he was going to do what your father sent us here to do. Capture whoever he could and get information.”

“Nubou!” Lazar cursed loudly under his breath. “Send me the grid Kitas!”

“Lazar I am sorry.” Kitas continued. “He would have forced me to shoot him in order to stop him. That would have given away our position.”

Rhaos saw Lazar shake his head as he was listening as well. “You did the right thing Kitas.” Lazar spoke. “Send me the grid and prepare to depart. We will need to make a quick exit from this world.”

“Understood.” Kitas spoke.

Lazar looked at the small screen on his forearm and saw the coordinates come up and then zoom in on the location. “Nubous Sibot!” Lazar swore. “I should have killed him a long time ago.”

“His Pack is one of the most influential City Packs Lazar.” Rhaos said. “That is why and you know it.”

“That won’t stop me this time if he exposes us Rhaos!” Lazar snarled looking at the small screen.

“Straight east and then cut south along that stream bed. It will take us directly to these coordinates.”

Rhaos said looking at his wrist screen and seeing the same thing.

Lazar nodded his head. “Let’s hope we get there before he does something fucking stupid.”

Two soft, white flashes of light and then the two, large and quite muscular wolves were sprinting off east.

AD HOC COMMAND CENTER

“...Chevsh alee fenneenum?” Martin gasped staring at the image of Yuriko on the monitor.

“The Svorag mother ship has slowed down medwan.” Yuriko told him again. “It took them nearly nineteen minutes to do it, but they are now moving at one quarter of the speed that they were.”

Andro was beside his father and he looked at his vampire sister on the monitor. “Are you safe arande?”

Yuriko smiled warmly when she saw Androcles and they watched as she lifted her hand and ran it across the monitor she was speaking on. “Ol zhah ji ves bwael ulu kyirl dos ussta dalninuk. Dos inbal thus lle’warinil.” (It is so very good to see you brother. You have been missed.)

“Nau mzild taga usstan inbal lle'warinil dos ussta dalniril.” Andro replied to her. (No more than I have missed you my sister)

Dynina was standing with Jezima and Aricia when she heard them exchange their greetings and she looked at Aricia quickly. “Aricia... what is the language they are speaking?” She asked.

“It is the ancient High Coven language.” Aricia replied. “It is also the language that the Drow Elves from Earth have adopted as their own. They are saying that they have missed each other. Brother and sister.”

Jezima looked at her now. “How many languages do all of you speak?” She asked with wide eyes.

Aricia chuckled softly. “You must thank our Melda Min for that when you see her.” She told them. “Dysea is an absolute Task Master when it comes to education. She has guided all of our children in their education. All of them have at least two advanced degrees and can speak numerous languages fluently. Androcles and Martin speak the most of any of us. At last count it was eleven for each of them I believe. There are so many that even we have lost track of the number. Everyone thinks it is a contest between father and son. In the quiet moments that we do have you will see one or both of them with some language file in their hands.”

“This is the Yuriko that Walter thinks so highly of?” Dynina asked now as she gazed at the monitor and Yuriko’s image. “He says that she is part of why Martin has discovered all that he has.”

Aricia nodded her head. “One of the reasons, yes.” She answered. “She is just as much a daughter to all of us as Eliani or Nara or Normya, no matter her blood or species. It has always been this way. We know nothing else.”

Dynina slowly nodded her head, her thoughts to herself. She was thrown back in time to a conversation with Sumar on Lycavore in the weeks leading up to her departure.

“He will have many children Dynina, my descendant.” Sumar had told her. “Not all of them the same as us. But they will be his children no matter their appearance or design. And they will honor their father and mothers as those like us honor those who brought us into this world. Perhaps even more.”

Dynina could once more feel the warmth of family filling her as she remembered those words and she saw how easily they had accepted Perlae, Ishma and Awser. Dynina Mahanlo was no more she realized. Now she was Dynina Leonidas to all those around her. To her family. And while Dynina knew they would always honor their heritage and the history of the Mahanlo Pack, this is what they had now grown into. And Dynina could not have been more proud.

“I am glad that our mothers and I now have additional support in keeping our father under control.” Yuriko continued drawing Dynina’s attention once more. “Oh wait... I must have been thinking of Resumar. You are just as malda as our father!”

Andro chuckled and shook his head. “I see Filrian has not yet tamed your tongue sister.”

“I like her tongue just how it is, thank you!” Filrian’s voice shouted from out of the cone of the transmission and this caused Andro to grin and look at his father.

Martin was smiling too, feeling a little bit better after all of the talk of prophecies and destiny. “You pulled back Yuriko?”

Yuriko nodded her head. “As per your directives father.” She answered. “Their course has not changed but we have an adjusted timeline for them to reach Honelze if they maintain this speed. Do you know what may have caused them to slow down?”

Martin nodded his head. “Oh yeah. If my theory is correct, whoever the head cheese of these Svorag is, he is on that ship. Ventori was a major breeding colony apparently, possibly their largest one. Your brother arrived yesterday and kind of put an end to that in a rather unceremonious way.”

Yuriko looked at Andro. “Did you come in guns blazing brother?” She asked.

Andro grinned at her. “In a manner of speaking.”

“Elg’ga rilbol...” Yuriko said looking at Andro. (Kill everything)

“Lu’ori’gato l’ phraktos s’enar mina doeb.” Andro finished. (And let the gods sort them out.)

It was a phrase that Yuriko had taught to Androcles when he was very young and now they used it only between each other. Yuriko had taught Androcles far more than even their father and mothers knew as he was growing and this had brought them very close to one another during that time.

“Good.” Yuriko spoke nodding her head. “Nempori vithin slanos.” (Ugly fucking creatures)

“You will get no argument on that here sister.” Andro commented with a laugh. “One of them tried to kiss me during the battle. I tried to explain that it wasn’t my type.”

Yuriko looked at Androcles with wide eyes. “Andro my brother... did you just try and make a joke?” She exclaimed.

Andro rolled his eyes. “Ha, ha, very funny.” He snarled affectionately.

“So you think this loss has caused them to slow down and re-evaluate their position medwan?” Yuriko asked her father while still trying to keep from laughing openly.

“If they have slowed, then I would have to say yes.” Martin told her calmly. “I believe the bastard leading these Svorag is an Alpha Lycavorian Yuriko. One that was captured and changed but somehow managed to keep his instinctual predatory nature.”

Yuriko nodded her head once more. “Hence why they have been bolder in their actions than Chief Elder Delnash and others realized.”

Martin nodded. “Yep.”

“It makes sense, but that is a good thing and a bad thing.” Yuriko said. “That means they will be predictable to an extent... but they will also be harder to kill.”

“Exactly.” Martin said. “Especially if this Alpha is the one doing most of the changing. Your mother believes he can change others with a bite instead of the old fashion way.”

“That is problematic.” Yuriko answered.

Martin nodded his head. “Just a bit.” He answered. “I was going to fire off an update to you later today but since we are talking... Ventori is secure now. We are starting to get refugees from the Tasmor and we’ll begin to start the rebuilding very soon. What is the new estimate of time to Honelze?”

“If they maintain the speed they have settled on... another five weeks at least. I can give you a more precise time estimate in a few hours if they remain at this speed.” Yuriko answered. “I’m going to maintain this distance from now on father. Space equals time to react.”

Martin looked at her. “You have concerns?”

Yuriko shook her head. “No... I’m just going to take a page from your book in case I do have to haul my ass out of here.”

Martin nodded his head. “Fair enough.” He told her. “Yuriko let’s start regular check ins beginning today.” Martin told her. “Every six hours fenneenum. No more of this lone wolfing it sibfla, you hear me?”

Yuriko nodded hearing the command tone of his voice. “Understood.”

“So what else have you got?” Martin asked her.

COALITION OF LYCAVORIAN STATES CLAIMED SPACE
CAPITAL PLANET JETANIA
NORTHERN OCEAN
DEPTH 2419 METERS
DARASTRIXI LONG RANGE MEDIUM CRUISER

“... Was chosen by the spirit of Dadrien to accompany your people on this Seed Mission.” Nilantha was speaking, her voice warm and even. “The Pralor people who believed as Dadrien did assisted in this and kept me hidden on their City Ship and then insured that I made it to the surface with your people. They believed an Oracle of their people had accompanied them, but I had taken her place as was Dadrien’s plan. It was customary for an Oracle of your people to remain aloof from others and no one questioned why I was never physically seen. I chose the first High Priestess from among those on that ship. This ship around you was attached to the Pralor ship’s outer hull and when we arrived here it was remotely piloted to where it is now. It was difficult at first, staying hidden and trying to insure that I kept the Prophecy alive. Your people have a strong faith, but once Osrod’s grandfather came to power, this began to waver. He did not have the influence to drive me into hiding until Osrod’s father was born and then took his place. He was much more cunning and cruel than his father. To avoid conflict and the deaths of those who believed, I went into hiding and had the High Priestess leak the story of my death. She was killed by Osrod’s father for her faith in me.” Nilantha spoke softly and looked at the floor for a long moment.

“I retreated here, studied and trained myself and I observed. When Osrod’s father sent out the mission to Ventori and they returned with the Mountain Packs I knew it was time to begin. Garget’s father was a fine Alpha, and Garget followed in his footsteps so I chose the Second High Priestess from among the Ranev pack and had her form the Black Watch. Each High Priestess after the first came from your people within the Mountain Packs. Those who were brought here from Ventori. They were Alphas would not be denied their faith no matter what Osrod’s father demanded and many were not happy that they had been unrooted from Ventori. He had no choice but to allow them this faith in order to avoid civil unrest and the vast majority of them retreated into the Mountain Ranges in order to start again.”

Loras and Taris Ranev had all but forgotten everything around them as they sat and listened to her enraptured. No one had come up the elevator in the last four hours and they were not disturbed in any way. Neither Taris nor Loras saw anyone bring the food that now occupied the short legged stone table that they sat around. The floor was covered with large, colorful soft cushions and this is what they had sat on, politely picking at the food and drink which Nilantha had insisted that they do. She had removed the long cape and cowl and Loras had taken note of her womanly figure and decided this was not someone unfamiliar with exercise. Her body was lean and muscular for her size, her exposed soft green scales soft and slightly shiny in different lights. Her eyes were fascinating however, a deep emerald green like those of the very ocean they now resided at the bottom of, always shifting in the different light.

“We know very little of Ventori.” Loras finally spoke. “Only that it is the planet from which the Mountain packs came from.”

Nilantha nodded her head. “Osrod’s father sealed away everything but the name of the planet from which you were taken. He wanted to insure that in the future none of you would attempt to go back.”

“He left... he left our people there?” Taris asked with surprise.

Nilantha nodded her head again. “He took only the Alphas from Ventori, and he left the Betas and Omegas to fend for themselves. He wrongly assumed that without the guidance and leadership of the Alphas that they would not survive for very long. He was wrong. Men and women stepped forward from among the Betas and they did survive and they prospered. Until the Svorag came that is.”

“Oracle... how do you... how do you know all this?” Loras asked. “About these Pralor people you speak of. About what took place on that planet?”

Nilantha smiled gently. “That planet is Lycavore Loras Ranev, and it is the homeworld of your people. It is where all of you originate from, no matter your age. It is where all of your bloodlines were born and created. Your packs and your families. Lycavore is your history.” She told her. “As for how I know all this, I have already told you, I was there.”

“What you speak of, you say it took place almost three hundred and fifty thousand years ago.” Taris said with awe in her voice. “That would mean that you are...”

Nilantha laughed heartily now and she nodded her head. “Yes Taris, it would.” She spoke as she flipped a piece of red fruit into her mouth. “I was but a child when Dadrien chose me. I was nineteen years old and to my people, still considered very much a baby. I do not know why he chose me, only that he did, and as the years passed and I saw everything that he told me begin to come true, I believed even more. If you wish me to be more specific, I am three hundred and twenty-seven thousand years old, give or take a year I suppose. I never really kept track.”

“So these... these Pralor people took us from our true homeworld and brought us here?” Loras said. “Our ancestors?”

Nilantha nodded her head. “They used your people to seed new life on five different planets before war brought ruin to their Empire. Three that I am aware of, including Jetania and Ventori. The third that I know of was in the Beta Quadrant of space, far from here, but that has already been discovered by the Mard Revik and his Tarivuos, just as the prophecy predicted. Vada Tarivu Androcles also discovered his sixth and final mate from among these Lycavorians. It surprised him, but as he has done throughout his young life, he embraced it and moved on.”

“How did those among the Mard Revik evolve so much more quickly than us Oracle?” Loras asked her. “You say they have advanced ships and can travel great distances? How did they acquire these things?”

Nilantha nodded her head with a smile. “That would take a great deal of time to fully explain but I will give the short version to you. I have already given you some sense of how it all came to be. They came from the Alpha Quadrant searching for answers to these questions, and they have discovered far more than they thought.” She answered. “It would take perhaps a thousand years for a Coalition ship to even reach the outer boundaries of their Empire there with their current technology.”

A thousand years!?” Loras gasped.

Nilantha nodded her head. “I do not know exactly how long it will take, for that particular knowledge is not something I cared to study. Quantum travel and Light Year calculations were never a favorite study of mine.” She said with a smile.

“They have Quantum technology?” Taris gasped aloud as well.

Nilantha nodded once more. “It was acquired recently, in the last thirty years, but their people are so amazingly intelligent. They developed their own engines within a decade and have improved them to the point now where they are standard aboard all of their ships. Their Empire is vast however, and it is an Empire. A great and beautiful and peaceful Empire with many species that live there and call it home.”

“They do not... they do not conquer?” Taris asked.

Nilantha shook her head quickly. “Oh no.” She replied. “They have had wars in their brief history, but none that they started. They did, however, finish them. Their Spartan training is absolutely superb. Any one of them is a match for three of Osrod’s brute soldiers. If Osrod thinks to bully them, he will find himself picking his mida up off the ground from where the Mard Revik plants him.”

Taris thought that hysterically funny and she laughed out loud catching herself after a moment and looking embarrassed. “Forgive me.” She stammered.

Nilantha smiled at her. “For what child?” She asked. “You will discover that humor to the family of the Mard Revik is like a soothing balm and they use it as such. They are unlike any Royal family in anyone’s history.”

“How did they advance so quickly when we did not Oracle?” Loras asked.

“A single, galactic event took place that eventually changed everything on your original homeworld.” Nilantha told her.

“The man you spoke of earlier?” Loras said. “His name was... it was Sumar.”

Nilantha nodded her head once more. “Chief Elder Sumar, of the Pralor people. The same species that used Lycavorians to seed other worlds with life. He was their leader for a time, and he was also known as Praetorian. The very first and greatest of their warriors.” She explained. “I will forgo the details of how he came to Lycavore, these you will learn in time when the Mard Revik and the Tarivuos arrive. His appearance on Lycavore changed everything however, and it altered the path of your people, changed them, until they became the Lycavorians that exist now in the Alpha Quadrant. Sumar and those who traveled with him on that journey were turned and taken into the different packs on Lycavore. The female Alpha that chose Sumar, she was the daughter of the last remaining Alpha of true royal blood in ancient Lycavorian culture and history going back nearly half a million years before the Pralor people ever took notice of them.”

“And he was the Spirit Warrior?” Taris interjected.

Nilantha nodded her head. “A Praetorian. Yes.”

“And he used this... this Etheric power?” Loras asked her.

Nilantha nodded her head again while looking at her. “You do not believe do you Loras?” She asked with an even voice, neither condescending nor surprised.

“It is... it is so much to take in Oracle.” Loras told her. “So unbelievable.”

“Do you believe that there are things out there among the stars that we do not understand, could not understand?” Nilantha asked her.

“Yes, of course.” Loras answered.

“Do you believe simply because we have not seen them or experienced them ourselves that they do not exist?”

Loras looked at her. “That would be arrogance of the highest sort Oracle.” Loras replied.

Nilantha nodded her head. “Yes, it would.” She said softly. “Yet, you question what I am telling you simply because it seems so unbelievable. Because you have not seen it for yourself and you have no personal knowledge of it.”

“I do not!” Loras hissed angrily. “I simply... I...”

Nilantha smiled now. “And now you find yourself in the same trap that still snarls Osrod and those like him. The trap that makes them believe that they are the center of the Universe we live in. That they are the most powerful and therefore should rule.”

Loras was silent as she sat there now and she realized that everything Nilantha had just said was true. All of her life she had prided herself on being open to new things and what she did not understand and know and now she was dismissing that because she was being told these things do exist and she had not seen them.

“You... you are right!” She finally gasped looking at her.

Nilantha smiled gently once more and lean across the short table. “Do you think I have not experienced the same things child?” She asked her. “When Dadrien first appeared to me in Etheric form, I thought it was simply a dream. I believed this until what he told me in these dreams actually began to come true. We all doubt Loras Ranev, it is part of what makes us who we are.” Nilantha leaned back. “The Lycavorian Union does exist.” She said. “They exist in part because of Sumar. They evolved because of what Sumar and others showed them. They have what is called a Prime Minister, the second most powerful figure in their government. She is an Alpha female. They have hundreds, if not thousands of Alpha females, Beta females, females of other species, all of whom hold positions of power within their Union. Just as you do Loras Ranev, but they do not have to deal with the discourse this causes here. They do not judge a person simply by the coloring of their outer skin or where their reproductive organs might reside!”

Taris could not help herself and she burst out in soft laughter again at this comment. This time however, Loras was affected as well.

Nilantha shook her head with a smile of her own. “Forgive me.” She spoke with a small wave of her hand. “I can be passionate about things at times.”

“Please do not be angry with me Oracle.” Loras spoke quickly.

“Angry?” Nilantha gasped aloud. “Gods child, I could never be angry with you! You are the future Loras Ranev! You and Taris and Anoria and so many others! Simply because you do not yet fully understand what I am saying does not make me think or feel less of you.”

“I have always tried to be realistic and fair Oracle, and I do have faith.” Loras said to her.

Nilantha smiled then. “Oh I know you do child. If you did not have faith, then you would never have seen the vision that you did.”

Taris looked at her with wide eyes now. “Matriarch... you have had a vision?” She gasped excitedly.

Loras looked at Nilantha with wide, disbelieving eyes. “How... how do you know this?” She stammered.

“How do I know that in this vision you saw your own future Loras Ranev?” Nilantha spoke. “That you saw the face of the man who would one day be King and who would hold your very essence within his hands? Just as you would hold his? How do I know this?”

“I have... I have never told anyone of this!” Loras stammered again. “How could you... how could you know that?”

Nilantha rose to her feet now and she held out her hands. “Let me show you something. Both of you.”

Loras and Taris rose to their feet and took her hands without hesitation. Nilantha closed her eyes and both Loras and Taris let out small screams of shock as the teleportation light engulfed them instantaneously and they disappeared. It was only a split second and then they reappeared in a long promenade like corridor similar to the ones they had seen before, but this corridor was lined with paintings and drawings by the hundreds. They held Nilantha’s hands tightly as she led them down the low rows of exquisite color paintings and what appeared to be hand drawings of superb workmanship. Many depicted scenes of battle, many reflected scenes of beautiful, towering cities of steel and glass and light. They saw men and women dressed in strange armor and holding what appeared to be glowing swords and spears of light and shields with a strange symbol emblazoned on the front.

“Oracle... what is... what is this place?” Taris gasped in awe. “I have never seen this place on the ship!”

Nilantha smiled. “I call this the Archive of Knowledge and Hope.” She answered. “What you see all around you are images of the past and some of the future. Images of war, of peace, and of prosperity.”

“Where... where did they come from?” Loras asked softly.

“I brought them here from the Sanctuary.” Nilantha answered. “Mainly for their own protection should anyone that followed Osrod and his father and grandfather ever find them. Each image depicts an event in history that has already occurred. And some that have not.”

“The Sanctuary?” Loras asked her.

Nilantha nodded her head. “It is a place that the Tarivuos and the Mard Revik will come to begin the journey.”

“Journey?” Taris asked her. “What journey?”

“That knowledge will come to all of us in time.” Nilantha answered. “I brought you here to show you something. All of these images, these drawings and paintings, not one of them is less than two million years old. Some are much older. I will let you date them yourselves if you like.” She waved her hand all around.

“They are exquisite.” Loras said softly. “So detailed and expressive.”

Nilantha nodded her head. “I know.” She said. “I have spent many days and weeks down here just studying them.”

“Carians!” Taris gasped aloud and she broke away from them, moving directly to a color painting a few meters away. “Oracle... Lady Ranev... this is... this is me!”

Loras moved up beside her and quickly took her hand as she looked upon the painting with wide eyes. It was indeed an exact image of Taris Ranev right down to the twinkle in her ice blue eyes. She was pressed tightly to one side of the tall, powerfully built young man with dark brown and reddish hair and large expressive eyes that were flecked generously with light green. His face was bright and happy and his arm was wrapped possessively around Taris on his side as well as around the waist of the other young woman on his opposite side. Taris and the young woman held their hands together over this young man’s heart and both of them were beaming in what could only be described as blissful happiness.

Taris’s hands went to her face in shock. “Oracle... I am... I am ashamed!”

Loras looked at her. “Taris... what are you talking about?” She exclaimed. “What have you to be ashamed about?”

Nilantha moved up behind Taris and rested her hands on Taris’s shoulders. “Taris had a vision as well Loras. A vision of what her future would hold. In that vision she saw this man. This man who would be her husband and mate. This brother to Tarivu Androcles. She however failed to mention that Anoria would also be her wife and mate.”

Loras looked at her with wide eyes as Taris turned to the Oracle with tears streaming down her face in shame. Nilantha took her into her arms quickly and squeezed her tightly. “Do not be ashamed of who you are Taris Ranev. Or what the future may hold for you. Or who for that matter.”

Taris looked at her. “You... you knew?” She gasped.

Nilantha smiled. “I knew before you were ever born Taris.” She answered her with a smile and then she leaned forward to kiss her forehead. “Just as I have known that Anoria would also hold part of your heart, just as you would hold hers. Just as I knew that this young man would claim both of you and make you sing to the moon. That he would fight to the death for both of you and that he would love both of you with every fiber of his heart and soul. Just as his father taught him to love his wives and mates.” Nilantha took her face in her hands and smiled brightly. “Never hold back Taris Ranev. Anoria has already seen this and she embraced it. Just as you will. The love you have wished for is almost here Taris Ranev, do not be afraid to reach for it.”

Taris nodded quickly as she turned back to look at the painting. Nilantha dropped her hands from her shoulders and looked at Loras. “You know this is frowned upon among our people Oracle.” Loras said.

Nilantha nodded her head. “You do not.” She said.

Loras shook her head. “Affairs of the heart should never be hidden or oppressed.” She said.

“I agree.” Nilantha said. “In the case of Taris and Anoria, they will overcome this stupid ideal and they will have each other. As well as the man they both have dreamed of for years. They are young enough to resist such petty things and the pull of their love will be too great.”

“You knew this?” Loras asked.

Nilantha nodded her head. “As I said, each of these images is at least two million years old, some even older. The last is dated some hundred thousand years ago. I just brought them here from the sanctuary.”

“Nothing more recent Oracle?” Loras asked.

Nilantha shook her head. “That is not possible.” She said.

“But why?”

“All of these images and paintings were created by a single species of scholars and what we would consider holy men and women.” Nilantha answered her. “There are none like them in the entire galaxy.”

“Again... I ask why?” Loras spoke softly. “That painting is of Taris and Anoria. They are only eighteen years of age. They must know of us, been among us without us knowing.”

Nilantha shook her head. “No. None of them ever saw us. They did not know we even existed. They simply drew and painted what the gods showed to them.”

“How?” Loras gasped once more. “And why are there not more recent ones?”

“They were called the Onab... and their species has been dead for over forty thousand years. Their star system was destroyed by a supernova that claimed all life within it. These are their depictions of the future. What they saw coming.” Nilantha motioned with her hand. “This is one of their last images. Beautiful, isn’t it?”

Loras Ranev turned to look at the one she was indicating and her heart nearly burst from her chest when she saw it. It was her.

Loras was in the arms of a young man clearly much taller than her, for her head only reached his shoulders. Her hands were flat against his broad, armored chest, and she stared up into his face with adoration. A face that was adorned with a dark beard and powerful, handsome jaw. A figure with a small scar on his right cheek, and a figure that gazed upon her with eyes that made her knees weak. She wore an elegant red dress in the painting, a long flowing crimson colored cape with gold trim identical to the man’s touched the floor behind her. As her own eyes dropped lower, she saw the images of the children at their feet. Seven children of varying ages, but all with the exact same features as Loras and the man who held her so very lovingly within his powerful arms and gazed upon her as one would gaze upon a precious jewel.

“Son vada carians!” Loras gasped aloud now, unable to hold the emotion in.

Nilantha smiled to herself and leaned close to Loras’s ear. “The fingers of time and fate and destiny move of their own accord Loras Ranev.” She whispered. “They can be delayed or ignored for a time, but never doubt that they will one day have their way.” Nilantha leaned closer and kissed her cheek ever so softly. “You and Taris remain here and discover all you can. I have unlocked the archives for you both. You have but to touch an image or a painting and you will know the history of it. Hold onto that strength within you Loras Ranev, for with the arrival of the Heralds and the True King, comes true change. And this will not be welcomed by many.”

Nilantha then stepped away and Loras barely discerned the flare of the teleporter that engulfed Nilantha. And then she and Taris were alone.

Alone within the halls of knowledge that they never could have imagined existed before this very day. Knowledge that was now theirs to see and experience. Knowledge that would prepare them for the future that was coming.

VENTORI
REFUGEE CALL LOCATION
SPARTAN ONE
FIFTY-THREE KLICKS SOUTH OF DISCOVERY BASE

Anja Leonidas stood on the upper portion of the STRIKER Mark IIs ramp, leaning against the thick interior struts as she watched Tobia, Mari, Retta and two of her medics moving among the twenty-three Lycavorians now resting in the small clearing. SPARTAN ONE was roughly fifteen meters longer than normal Mark IIs, mainly because it could carry five dragons and Anja had it equipped with a small, but powerful medical treatment bed due to Martin’s propensity for finding trouble. It could act as a field trauma unit if needed and SPARTAN ONE carried a larger than normal cache of medical supplies of varying degree. Anja Leonidas was not just the Chief Medical Officer of the entire Lycavorian Union, she was also an experienced and exceptionally lethal fighter as many in the past had discovered painfully. In the beginning many had mistaken her petite size as weakness, claiming that their King needed a pureblood like Aricia. This way of thinking quickly fell by the wayside as they saw the inner strength and skill of their smallest Queen. Of course, watching her thoroughly beat down two Spartan warriors in the first year had given them a glimpse of what Anja was made of. No one questioned or doubted her skills or her resolve after that.

Watching Retta, Anja knew right away that Androcles had been correct in his assessment of his younger sibling's skill and he would never put them at risk unless they could defend themselves. While Retta was quick move among the Ventori Lycavorians she did so with an alert mind, always taking in the area around her and what was happening. Several times she made eye contact with her twin brother Calyb who was helping others and never more than ten meters from his sister, but she never dropped her guard. Retta was like Eliani in that she had inherited her mother's captivating beauty, her dark red hair, shiny and healthy and pulled into a long pony tail. She had high cheekbones like her mother and while Eliani's eyes were more of a forest green in color, Retta's eyes were more like her mother's jade colored eyes, only a slightly darker jade in color. The lightweight Mark V ArmorPly was form fitting and like the rest of her daughters, Retta had decided much earlier that she preferred the more lightweight and less restricting nature of the Mark V ArmorPly as opposed to the Mark IV or the new Mark VI style. This armor conformed to her lithe figure like a second skin, showing off her physical assets which were ample. While her breasts were not as large as her mother or sister, they were high and firm and very proportionate to her five foot five body. Watching her Anja said a small thanks that she did not have to deal with the issues of larger breasts. There were times when Anja hated her larger chest, and she knew Eliani was of the same mind, but neither of them complained much. Eliani had told her once that Jomann paid far too much attention to her breasts, but he could make her sing just by doing that. Anja had to smile at this thought for it was no different for her with Martin and the others.

Anja smelled him easily enough and she turned her head as Atropos moved around the side of the STRIKER and looked at her. His 190A4 dangled from quick release straps and he pushed it around to the side as he stepped up onto the ramp and moved up next to her. Anja knew that there were very few men who would dare speak normally to her and her fellow Queens, but Atropos, his brother Andreus and Danny were in that small group.

"Ok... I worry too much." Anja spoke as he stopped beside her. "I admit it."

Atropos grinned at her knowing what she was referring to without having to ask. It had taken Anja several years to get used to him being her constant shadow, but now after over a quarter of a century, there was very little she kept from him in regards to anything.

"Then I will not say I told you so." He told her as he lifted his hand and placed it on her shoulder and squeezed gently. "There are very few who will be truthful when it comes to the training someone has received. Thankfully, my mandri Androcles is one of those. He is like his father in that way and he will tell you how it is, whether you want to hear it or not, no matter how painful it is. If they were not ready Anja, he would have said so."

Anja reached up and squeezed his hand on her shoulder. "I know." She spoke. "They are just so young Atropos."

"That is the mother in you speaking." Atropos told her. "As it always should and will speak. They will reach their seventeenth birthing day in three weeks. It was you who discovered that our people were maturing much faster since our time on Lycavore because of the Pralor blood within us. They are fully matured wolves now Anja, and Retta will soon come into her first phase yes?"

Anja looked at him and nodded. "It is beginning to assert itself now. Another week to ten days and it will be in full cycle." She answered unafraid to speak of this with Atropos, even though this sort of talk was usually done between women. He was a member of their family as Aricia's older brother and he had been part of the births of all of their children no matter who had carried them.

"Are you concerned for her because she is out here with us?" Atropos asked softly. "That she will be courted and claimed by a Spartan out here so far from home?"

Anja shook her head quickly and with a little snort of humor. "That is something that I'm not afraid of. Anyone who survives the gauntlet of Calyb, Andro and the rest of her brothers will have to face Martin. If he isn't true, he will be running with his tails between his legs real fast."

Atropos chuckled and nodded his head. "It has been very hard to impress Martin when it comes to his daughters. Even when they survive their brothers. Lilika has told me to prepare for such a thing because she is certain our next child will be a daughter. I'm not so certain I am able to prepare for that."

Anja looked at him. “Well don’t ask Martin for advice.” She said with a warm laugh. “He will tell you to clean your weapons, add new locks to your home and insure she does not leave the house until she is a thousand years old.”

Atropos laughed now as well. “Yes... that does sound like Martin.”

“You know... he asked me if I was happy with my life not so long ago.” Anja told him. “It took me by surprise.”

“What did you tell him?”

Anja looked back out the STRIKER and her eyes fell on Retta once more. “I told him the truth.” She said. “I could not imagine myself in any other place Atropos. Belonging to any other man. I would not trade who and what I am for even a single day and all the tea in China.”

Atropos chuckled. “I know this reference.” He said. “But you hate tea anyway.”

Anja looked at him and laughed once more. “I do.” She looked around again. “Being out here with him though... with Aricia and For'mya, with Dysea, Bella and Cirith... it has brought us so much closer together. Our love has grown even more since we have been out here, no matter what has happened along the way. Discovering new things and helping new people. No matter what he says, he is loving this, just as we are.”

Atropos nodded his head. “That has been evident in his mannerisms since beginning this trip.” He said. “Within all of us. What we are doing symbolizes the wolf nature within all of us. To discover and learn and experience things we have never experienced before. That is why I have never accepted a position away from you Anja.” He smiled when Anja met his eyes. “As your Captain I get to experience this... all of it.”

“Well I’m happy you feel that way.” Anja said.

Atropos grinned at her. “Of course... the occasional beat down that you inflict on some unsuspecting fool does always make things much more entertaining.”

Anja burst out laughing at his expression and she grabbed his arm and shook him gently. “I am going to tell Lilika you said that you know!”

“She already knows.” Atropos told her with a laugh as his eyes swept the area outside the ramp and settled on Calyb. He detected something different about Calyb’s stance and he looked at Anja. “How much longer to you think?” He asked her while keeping the smile in place on his face.

“Thirty minutes to finish initial assessments and then we can bring them on board for transport back to Discovery Base.” Anja told him.

Atropos nodded his head. “Then I will conduct one more walk of the perimeter.” He said. “Signal me if you need something.”

Anja nodded as he began to walk down the ramp and her eyes went to Retta. Atropos made his way casually to where Calyb was finishing his assessment on the older Lycavorian man and stopped behind him.

“What do you smell Calyb?” He asked.

Calyb turned his head and looked up at him. “I... I don’t know Uncle Atropos.” He answered.

Atropos dropped into a squat beside him. “Your father and your brother have the keenest noses of any wolf within the entire Union Calyb my boy. It is in your blood as well, just as it is Eliani and Retta. You just need to trust your instincts. You are half Hadarian yes, but you are more wolf than Hadarian Calyb, and you always will be because of who your father is. Embrace that as well as your healing abilities. Combined them both and use them together and you will become stronger for it.”

Calyb looked at him. “I smelled hate Tenne. Adrenaline and distrust. It was... it was there for a millisecond and then it was gone.” He told his uncle.

“Do you sense an Etheric presence?” Atropos asked.

Calyb shook his head. “Just mother and you, and Retta, Mari and Tobia.” He answered. “No one else.”

“Svorag?”

Calyb shook his head more quickly this time. “No. Andro showed Retta and I what to detect etherically from them before we left. It isn’t much but it definitely was not them.”

“What do your instincts tell you?” Atropos asked him.

Calyb met his eyes. “That it was coming from a Lycavorian.” He answered. “And not one of those in this group.”

Atropos turned when he heard Anja call out and he saw Retta, Mari and Tobia begin to motion for everyone to move for the STRIKER. As he turned his head back to Calyb he caught the scent too with his experienced and keen nose. He looked at Calyb.

“It appears you were right Mandri.” He spoke. “I am scenting at least ten Alphas nearby. They were staying downwind of us to keep their scents clear, but are moving closer now and the wind just shifted.”

Calyb nodded his head as his heart began to race. “They are not Spartans Tenne.” He spoke.

Atropos nodded his head while still remaining calm and unassuming. “No they certainly are not. No Spartan would dare move on us in this fashion once they sensed your mother, you and Retta.” Atropos looked at Calyb. “Call for your brother and father Calyb. They will get here before anyone else. We need to...”

Atropos never finished his sentence and Calyb heard the four deep reports of a firing weapon and the sick sounds of those rounds striking flesh as his uncle pitched forward with a loud groan of pain and was still. Calyb’s eyes flew open even as his wolf instincts lit off and he began coming to his feet.

“Uncle!” He screamed as he reached for his own weapon. Calyb turned his head towards the STRIKER, his first instincts firing off, and those were to protect his twin and his mother. “Retta! Mother! We are...”

Calyb never finished the words as he felt a great force strike his chest three times, an immense pain shoot through his upper body unlike anything he had ever felt before and then he was tossed back a meter from his uncle’s inert form and blackness washed over him. The last thing he saw before darkness claimed him were the figures of ten large soldiers bursting from the tree line, their weapons beginning to shoot flame as weapons fire erupted all around them. Calyb Leonidas heard the screams begin and then nothing but silence as he sank into the abyss.

VENTORI SYSTEM KINTAUR WRECK

Laon heard the soft beep indicating that the download was done and he grunted. “It’s about time!” He hissed to himself as he reached for the computer terminal to remove the power coupling and small computer core he had attached.

The Environmental suit he wore was bulky and very uncomfortable and unfortunately he had to sit here and wait for the download to complete fully and not in the semi comfort of the transport a hundred meters away from him. The pilot and co-pilot were not Lazar and Rhaos, who were two of the finest pilots he had ever met, and therefore they did not feel comfortable coming closer. Laon didn’t complain and simply donned the suit and space walked to his current location. As his gloved and bulky fist twisted the computer coupling counterclockwise and he pulled the core out he smiled.

“Got you.” He spoke freely not thinking that anyone had or could hear him except those on the shuttle. “I have the data core and I am returning. Begin power up sequence.”

“Laon... Laon I don’t think that is a good idea.” The pilot’s voice stammered in his helmet.

“What?” Laon snapped. “Why?”

“Laon... turn around!”

Hearing the urgency in the man’s voice Laon spun as fast as the suit would allow. His dark blue eyes went wide when he saw the space in between him and the shuttle shimmer very unnaturally and then the form of a sleek and menacing looking ship appeared.

“Saoi sibfla!” Laon gasped aloud.

Laon’s helmet COM filled with static for a few seconds and then he heard the distinctly female voice speak directly to him.

“Hello. I will give you one opportunity to follow my instructions without bloodshed.” The female voice spoke. “You will use the thrusters on your suit to move to the hatch that you see on the starboard side of our ship. I will give you ten seconds to comply and you will not be harmed.”

Laon looked quickly to where he could still see his transport and then back to the side of the ship. He could see the dark haired female in the forward window of the ship looking out at him. “You aren’t really giving me a chance to get to know you.” Laon spoke the words now as whoever this was had already overridden his COM signals.

“I’m now giving you six seconds to do what I have told you.” The voice answered.

“And if I don’t?” Laon pressed.

“Then your remains will be floating beside the space junk that currently surround you.” The female answered. “And you will no longer matter.”

Laon blinked his eyes several times. “I... I see your point.” He spoke.

“Three seconds.” The female said.

“Ok! Ok! I’m going!” Laon replied urgently. He reached down to his side and pulled up the thruster control panel and engaged the small thrusters on his back, pushing him towards the hatch on the ship.

PREMONITION

“...Going!” The male voice echoed.

Ne’Veha turned her head and looked at Sadi with a nod. “He is moving for the hatch.” She confirmed.

Sadi nodded her own head and touched the panel above her head. “Nara?”

“We’re here Sadi.” Nara’s voice answered.

Sadi smiled and looked at Ne’Veha quickly, both of them catching the “we” reference. Since two nights ago on SPARTA’S WRATH, Nara and Jacina had been inseparable with the exception of the battle yesterday. While Jacina had spent the better part of the last nine hundred years in stasis as a Svorag prisoner, technically she was only barely over three hundred years old. That Nara desired her in the worst possible way was evident to any wolf on SPARTA’S WRATH, for her female aura seek reeked of this craving and only for Jacina. Sehri had laughed as she said that all of the males on the ship were now completely crushed for Nara dismissed them without as much as a second thought now that Jacina was with her. Sadi had caught glimpses of them over the last two days, especially after the battle on Ventori and she could tell instantly that the attraction worked both ways. Jacina clung on Nara’s every word, their heads close together when they were talking and neither of them ever more than a few feet from each other. They had been holding hands tightly when they caught Sadi and Ne’Veha as they were boarding PREMONITION to return to the ship to gather clothing and other items for an extended stay on the surface. Nara told them they wanted to do the same and she was going to take Jacina to the Quartermaster in order to get her some additional uniforms and then some civilians clothes from the ship’s civilian tailor.

“He is proceeding to the airlock hatch now.” Sadi told her. “Would you be so kind as to meet him with Master Chief Rano?”

“On our way.” Nara answered.

Sadi looked at Kameka in her seat behind them. “Have they done anything?” She asked her indicating the COLS transport out the port side of their ship.

Meka flashed that ever present “gnarly” grin as she said Daio called it. The grin that meant she was thoroughly enjoying herself. “They haven’t twitched since I swung my cannons on them.”

“Sirsangai?” Sadi asked turning to look at her fellow Princess, lover and wife.

“Admiral Lorian’s Wolf Pack has taken their main ship under tractor beam.” Ne’Veha answered. “They did not resist.”

Sadi tossed her head from side to side. “Ok... maybe they will go quietly.” She spoke aloud. “Meka... have the transport prepare for us to tractor it. We will return to SPARTA’S WRATH and turn this fool over to the Durcunusaan.” Sadi adjusted her controls. “Sirsangai give me quarter power on all thrusters. Let’s make this quick.”

Laon stared at the face of Master Chief Joe Ranor, who had the P190 A4 leveled at his head from three feet away. The male in front of him was not Lycavorian, Laon could tell that right away, but he was solidly built and he did hold the weapon. Laon probably could have disarmed him easily enough, but he did not envy being shot once or twice in the process. The man also did not seem in the least bit frightened that he was staring at a pureblood Lycavorian, which was unusual for Laon to experience. Most species that he knew of were cowed by the knowledge of what he was. The airlock was small but Laon knew instantly that the technology was far beyond what COLS had. He had never seen a ship such as the one he was now on and his engineering intellect was very peaked to see if he could discover anything.

Joe motioned with the barrel of the A4. "Drop the portable core and slide it over there." He ordered.

Laon looked at him as he held the portable storage unit in his left hand. "I really don't want to do that." He spoke casually.

"It wasn't a request sport." Rano told him sliding his finger forward on the stock of the A4 and charging the weapon. "Do it now!"

Laon lifted his arm slightly and let the strap fall off his forearm to the deck. He leaned over and went to push the data core to the side, knowing this would be his only chance. Laon moved then, thrusting his arm forward and sending the portable data core rocketing across the small space as he exploded off the deck even while still wearing the environmental suit.

Laon's eyes went wide when his body froze in midstride towards the Master Chief and the core went sailing by the man's head by a wide margin. Laon suddenly found himself unable to move, all of his limbs stuck as if he was held in some sort of force field. He saw the flash of movement to his right and cut his eyes just as he saw the two females appeared in the doorway.

The raven haired pureblood was an Alpha female beyond anything Laon had ever felt in his three hundred and twenty-seven years of life. The red haired female, while not Lycavorian, was the most delicious female he had ever seen who was not Lycavorian. The young, black haired female he put in her early twenties and based on her scent had just recently gone through her first Phase and not been claimed by an Alpha. Laon did not know how this was possible because her aura and coca mint scent were filling his head and senses in a wave of vibrations that he had never experienced before. Instinctively Laon Kavar reacted to this stimulation in the only way he knew how. He unleashed his full, Alpha male aura at the raven haired goddess, not realizing who he was pulsing with his substantial male aura, or the consequences that it would bring.

Nara had smelled Laon's intent before he had executed his move and she reached the doorway just as he had made his move. Nara hadn't even blinked, lifting her hand and engulfing him with an Etheric field that was far more powerful than any she had ever generated before. Nara felt power course through her, power and focus, just as she had felt it swirling around her father and her brothers. Only now it was coursing through her unchecked.

Nara Leonidas had perhaps three seconds to contemplate this new power racing through her body before the Lycavorian's full male aura smashed into her female senses and set her body on fire. Her azure eyes went wide and she glared at the man from across the distance and watching as his eyes went wide in shock.

Laon knew something was very wrong when he realized that his aura had not frozen her in her spot and turned her into a babbling female willing to do anything for him. So soon out of her first Phase, she still should have been affected by his aura, but the only thing Laon saw was a pair of blazing azure blue eyes grow wider and angrier. Laon had no idea that he had pulsed a Lycavorian female with Leonidas blood running through her veins. A pureblood daughter of the most powerful pureblood Lycavorian living right now. He had no idea of the evolutionary changes the Lycavorians with the Alpha Quadrant had undergone through the millennia and therefore he was unprepared for Nara's reaction to his actions.

"Forn nubous gostina!" Nara snarled with savage fury, her dual wolf fangs bursting from her gums and her wolf eyes becoming burning points of azure blue.

Nara felt the power coursing through her, felt it flare within her and she lifted her left hand and sent a controlled Etheric pulse wave out from the palm of her hand that crossed the distance between her and Laon in two blinks of an eye. That wave struck him with enough force to lift him off his feet and send him rocketing across the small airlock to impact the far wall with a grunt of pain. As he slumped to the floor in stunned shock, with pain wracking his upper body from the impact, Laon looked up and saw this exquisite looking female fall upon him like the wrath of the gods themselves. He could not stop the first two open palmed blows that rocked his head back with enough force to smash his head into the bulkhead, and he barely got his hands up to partially block the knee she sent whipping up with unerring accuracy. Part of that blow caught on his left shoulder and Laon felt his collarbone almost snap in half from the force. As Nara drew back her hand and prepared to send a ridge hand into his face, the Etheric knife exploded from her knuckles pulsing with power. Laon's pain filled eyes went wide and the only thing that was going through his mind at that time was that he had certainly bitten off way more than he could chew and that this female was going to end his life.

"Nara no!" Jacina screamed from behind her and Laon saw those savage azure blue eyes blinked in recognition of the voice.

"Nara!" The new female voice echoed in the small airlock and Laon blinked once and then saw what he could only describe as a blur before the very petite female appeared beside the wild Lycavorian and grasped her wrist with both her hands. Then on her opposite side Laon saw the dark skin and white hair of another female beside her. A female with long, elegantly curved pointed ears that had to be at least four inches high alongside her head.

"Be at peace Nara." Lu'ria spoke as she gripped Nara's wrist right below where Carisia held her. "We are here."

Laon watched those azure blue eyes blink several more times and then suddenly the near glowing orbs that they had become vanished and all that remained were stunningly beautiful wolf eyes unlike anything Laon had ever seen before. That pointed knife like aberration that had formed above her closed knuckles disappeared and then the red haired female appeared beside her, taking her arm.

"Nara?" Jacina gasped as she held Nara's arm tightly, truly concerned for her. What she had discovered in the last two days with Nara Leonidas surpassed anything that Jacina had felt in her life. The similarities between her and Nara were too many to count and Jacina wanted to explore this thing that they had discovered drew them so tightly together so easily.

"Jacina?" Nara whispered the word and Jacina felt her body shudder at the way her name sounded coming from Nara's lips.

"Jacina take her." Carisia spoke now. "Lu'ria and I will handle this fool."

Jacina looked at the petite vampire female she now knew to be Androcles' wife and mate along with the dark skinned elf beside her. "Carisia... what...?"

Carisia turned her head and looked at Laon who was slumped on the deck barely able to remain conscious and looking up at them. "This fool must have pulsed her with his wolf aura." Carisia stated with some contempt in her voice. She turned back to Jacina. "Nara reacted as any Alpha female would if a male did this to them. She perceived it as an assault and she acted."

Laon was looking up from where he sat listening. He had pulsed her with his male aura and she thought it was an assault? His full aura did not even cause her to blink in a manner that was normal to the Alpha females he had seen in his lifetime. Laon watched as the red haired female wrapped her arms around the other and began to lead her out of the airlock. He glanced up to see the Maya blue and amber colored eyes of the other two females.

Carisia turned her head. "Rano?" She asked.

Joe Ranor looked up from examining the data core that Laon had downloaded. "It's pretty much everything that was left on that Kintaur ship's computer core Carisia. It must have activated safety measures when the ship was gutted and secured all this information in one location. Makes it easier to recover."

"Secure that Joseph." Carisia spoke. "Lu'ria and I will secure this fool. Something has happened on the planet and we are returning."

"I'm on it." Rano answered as Carisia and Lu'ria bent to pick up Laon.

VENTORI

Lazar and Rhaos burst into the clearing where the ship was and skidded to halts in their large wolf forms, their eyes wide in horror and shock. Lazar quickly shifted back to his human form from the two and a half foot tall dark brown and black wolf, Rhaos following a second later. Neither of them could contain their intakes of breath at what they saw all around them. There were at least twenty bodies strewn around the rear of the ship in a wide area, all of them appearing to have been shot several times at least. The bodies of five children were among the remains. Lazar heard the shouting coming from inside the ship, the screaming and then the heavy thuds of someone being struck very hard. It was then he heard the bellow of Sibot's voice.

“Upae!”

Lazar felt the savage anger well up within him and he raced up the ramp of the strange ship to find one of his men lying on the deck, his eyes open in death and the hilt of a blade protruding from under his jaw. Whoever had killed him had rammed the blade of the knife clean through his lower jaw and into his brain. Lazar tore his eyes away from the body and moved further into the ship until he saw Sibot's hulking form. The brutish man was standing over the petite red haired female, holding the front of her uniform with one hand and punching her with his other. Her face was already bloody, her cheek split open and her lips torn in several places. Four of the men Sibot had brought with him were standing around a small group of woman who had tears in their eyes while four more were standing around another two females. Several of his men had blood leaking from different facial wounds and the two lone females appeared to have been mishandled. He saw the last one of his men with his arm around the waist of another female who was slumped over in his grasp wailing almost uncontrollably. Lazar stared at this in horror for only a split second before he moved with utter fury in his stride.

Sibot was about to lift his hand to once more punch Anja in the head when he felt the hand clamped onto his wrist with surprising strength. He whipped his head around in anger only to see the large fist just before it impacted his jaw and sent him sprawling into the side of the bulkhead heavily. He snapped back up to look at Lazar savagely.

“What are you doing you fucking moron!?” Lazar screamed at him.

“I am doing what your father ordered you to do!” Sibot snarled back at him as he brought his hand up and wiped the blood from his now bloody mouth.

“My father did not order me to butcher innocent civilians!” Lazar screamed once more as he stepped into another blow that Sibot saw coming but could not avoid. Lazar hit him once more with a trip hammer like knuckle punch that rocked Sibot's head back, drawing more blood from his mouth. He snatched the front of Sibot's uniform in his hands and slammed him against the bulkhead. “You killed our people!”

“They were Betas and...” Sibot began to reply blood spilling from his mouth.

“They are Lycavorian!” Lazar screamed in rage his wolf fangs bursting forth and his eyes changing to those of his wolf persona in an instant “They are like us! Do you feel powerful beating a woman a third of your size Sibot you fucking animal!?”

“She is a half breed and she killed Kagar!” Sibot roared as he reached up to grab Lazar's wrists.

Lazar snapped his head forward in brutal anger, his forehead impacting Sibot's nose and smashing it into oblivion. Sibot roared in pain and his eyes filled with tears as he grabbed for his face.

“You expect me to believe a half breed female less than half your size killed one of my men!” Lazar roared right back.

“It is true Commander!” One of his men spoke up from where he stood holding his weapon on Endith and Tina, both of them looking as if they had been roughed up. “These two came from up there and the half breed made to run out of the ship! Kagar tried to stop her and she had a knife and she shoved it into his jaw and killed him!”

Lazar whirled on them now. “I should execute all of you for following this fool and disobeying my orders!” He snarled at them. “We were here to gather information! Not kill our own people!”

“Commander we...”

Lazar saw Rhaos come running up the ramp and into the portion of the ship they were in. “Lazar... I have lost communications with our transport! Someone is jamming us! They know we are here and no doubt they know where this ship is!” He hissed as his eyes took in the area around them. “Sibfla!” He moved up closer to Lazar.

The coughing sound drew Lazar's attention and he turned as the female on the deck rolled over to her side and blood spilled from her lips as she coughed heavily onto the deck. This movement caused the second female to react and she began to struggle insanely with his man holding her.

“Mother!” Retta screamed out as she twisted her body back and forth trying to get free. “Let me go! Let me go!”

Lazar could only watch in stunned shock as the young female, no more than twenty years in age, reared up in the soldier's arms and raked her nails across his face with savage fury. Lazar's eyes grew wide when he saw the dual wolf fangs burst from her gums and her sea green eyes change to those of a female wolf. Her scent spike incredibly high and hit Lazar full in the face. Honey and mint washed through his nostrils causing his own wolf blood to flare up in intensity. As his soldier dropped his weapon and reached for his face in pain Retta reared up even more and grabbed his rifle, swinging it like a club somewhat awkwardly. The blow had enough power in it, as awkward as it was, to strike the side of his head and knock him away from her and releasing her from his grasp. She immediately released the weapon and dove for the floor where the second woman was lying.

Lazar Aspion, whether it was because he had used his keen nose more than anyone other than Rhaos, or simply because he was more attuned to different scents, instantly made the connection when he smelled the scent from the woman on the floor. The relation was there, mother and daughter, as was the similarity in their looks. Lazar didn't know what made him do it, but the moment another of his men lifted his rifle to shoot the young woman in the back Lazar drew out his sidearm, aimed and fired in a single blink. The report of the weapon was deafening in the confines of the ship, but the COLS soldier was blow back by the force of the bullet because of the close range. Lazar stood there for a moment, shocked at his own actions even as Rhaos grabbed two of the men closest to him.

"Stand by the ramp and tell us the moment you detect anyone moving this way!" Rhaos ordered one. "You climb up on top of this ship and do the same! Move!"

Rhaos turned back as the two men moved off to follow his orders and he stepped up close to Lazar. "Lazar we need to leave." He hissed softly. "They are bound to find us easily and we cannot be here when they do."

Lazar wasn't listening as he watched the young woman gather the injured woman into her arms. She settled under her upper body, adjusting her head gently. Lazar saw her injuries and felt fresh anger flare within him and he glared at Sibot for a long moment feeling hot rage filling him once more.

"Saoi Sibfla!" Rhaos gasped looking at the two women on the deck now. "Look!"

Lazar cut his eyes back and saw the soft white glow flowing around the young woman's hands as she drew them across the injured woman's head and face. Lazar's eyes grew wide as he watched those harsh wounds begin close and heal instantly. It was unlike anything he had ever seen before.

Rhaos turned when he heard his ear COM unit cackle. "Lieutenant!" The excited voice spoke. "Sir, there are five of those flying creatures heading directly for us! I see many airships lifting off as well!"

"Fuck!" Rhaos hissed as he turned back to Lazar. "Lazar! We need to go! Now!"

"These are the pilot's Commander!" One soldier announced as he nudged Tina in the arm. "They came from the cockpit of this craft!"

Lazar turned to look at Tina and Endith. "You can fly this machine?" He barked.

"We ain't flying you anywhere shithead!" Tina snarled baring her vampire fangs at him.

Lazar's eyes grew wide when he saw them and he stepped closer. "You... you have fangs yet you are not Lycavorian!"

"Wow... you are a bright one!" Endith spat viciously, her blue eyes filled with hate and fury. "You and your little bunch of killers are so dead when the Skipper gets here!"

"I did not... I did not mean for this to happen!" Lazar rasped out the words.

"You killed my brother!" Retta screamed from where she held Anja in her arms. "You killed my brother and my uncle!"

Lazar looked at her, suddenly filled with the resolve he didn't comprehend, a resolve to convince her that he did not do what she said he did. "I did not order that!" He barked at her.

Rhaos was the one who acted and he stepped over to where the other prisoners were and he yanked one to her feet. Unfortunately for him, it happened to be Mari and she screamed out as he grabbed her hair. Tobia bolted to her feet only to be struck by a COLS soldier between her shoulder blades, knocking her to the deck as Rhaos pulled Mari over to where Lazar was still staring at Retta.

"Do not force me to kill her!" Rhaos barked now as he held a fistful of Mari's long reddish brown hair in his fist tightly. The pain was keeping Mari from thinking straight as he yanked harder and tears formed in her eyes. "You will take off now! And you will activate the stealth shield this ship has!"

“I don’t know what you are talking about midaeu.” Endith growled.

Rhaos yanked harder on Mari’s hair. “Do not push me woman!” He shouted. “I will kill her! I saw the ships like this leaving your base and they were activating a stealth shield. You will do the same and take us off this planet!”

“Endith!” Anja rasped out the word holding Retta’s hands on her chest. Endith looked at her with wide eyes. “No... no more deaths Endy.” Anja spoke in a whisper filled with a mixture of pain and anger.

“Anja they...” Endith began to protest but Tina took her arm stopping her words.

“Fine.” Tina snapped softly. “Just don’t hurt anyone else.”

Rhaos released Mari instantly. “Take them to the cockpit and watch them!” He ordered the three men watching her and Tina. “Go now!”

He waited until the three men had pulled Endith and Tina to their feet and were taking them forward before turning to Lazar who had not moved or spoken. His eyes were still focused on the two women, both of them now clutching each other and silently crying their eyes out.

“Calyb.” Anja whispered ever so softly as she pulled Retta tighter to her. “Calyb my beautiful baby boy!”

Rhaos grabbed Lazar as Mari scrambled back along the deck until she was with her mother. “Lazar!” Rhaos barked loudly jerking Lazar out of his trance like state. They heard the engines of the ship come to life and gain power quickly. “Lazar what is wrong with you?”

Lazar ignored Rhaos and settled his eyes on Sibot as they felt the ship begin to rise off the ground. He rose to his full height and his wolf eyes narrowed in anger once again as he stood over Sibot.

“You brought this upon us!” He growled.

“I was doing what your father demanded!” Sibot shouted back. “He wanted one or two of these people to question!”

Lazar bent over and grabbed the front of Sibot’s uniform and yanked him to his feet with vicious strength. “Then I hope your devotion and bootlicking to my father’s orders are enough to sustain your life Sibot!” Lazar snarled as he began to drag him towards the back of the ship. He stopped at the rear of the ramp as it was beginning to rise.

Sibot looked into Lazar’s wild eyes now. “You wouldn’t dare!” He barked at Lazar.

“For the blood you have taken this day... I will allow them to have yours in return!” Lazar spoke harshly just before he gave Sibot a mighty shove and sent him sprawling out the back of the ramp.

Sibot could be heard screaming as the ramp finished closing and the ship began to rise into the air. Lazar turned back to see Rhaos and his men looking at him intently. “Our ship and friends are lost to us.” He stated now. “Your actions with Sibot may well have brought about the deaths of us all! Be certain that I will see to it that all of you die first for your actions this day!”

None of them could meet his eyes as he strode past them and moved forward into the cockpit. Rhaos however was not so limited and he looked at the men around him with disdain. “Move them all together!” Rhaos barked. “Help them to their feet and move them together! You will harm none of them!”

The COLS soldiers sprang to comply with his orders for they had just witnessed what their commanding officer had done and none wanted to press that man’s First Officer. Lazar was in the cockpit of the STRIKER, his eyes and mind marveling at the most technologically advanced equipment he had ever seen in his life. He dismissed his men with a shake of his head and slowly moved between the two seats where Endith and Tina now sat, his sidearm in his hand but not pointed in a threatening manner at either of them. As he looked out of the view window in front of them he saw the atmosphere of the planet beginning to fall away. His eyes grew wide at the speed with which they had cleared the atmosphere.

“We... we climbed so fast!” He finally gasped out. “Can you show me my ship?”

Tina looked at Endith and then adjusted the controls between the two seats. The small monitor came alive and Lazar saw his ship was now surrounded by five others that were much larger.

“You will execute them?” Lazar hissed.

Tina turned her head now. “We are not like you!” She snapped angrily. “We don’t kill innocent men and women.”

Lazar met her eyes. “Sibot acted without my knowledge! I did not give him orders to kill those men and women or to assault your friend.”

“Our friend?” Endith hissed. “You have no idea who your asshole buddy just beat half to death do you?”

“We were here only to gather information.” Lazar answered defensively.

“Well whoever you are, your friend just succeeded in making you and everyone else back there walking around dead men!” Endith snarled. “Anja Leonidas is a Queen of the Lycavorian Union! Your friend killed her youngest son! Retta’s twin brother! The King’s son! Your friend killed a man they considered their Uncle! You’ll be lucky to live out another week for what you have done!”

“I did not give him authorization to do that!” Lazar protested once more.

“You are his Commanding Officer?” Endith asked bluntly.

“Yes, but...”

“No buts buddy, you own it.” Endith said. “Now are we just going to ride around up here? Sooner or later they will find us. Sooner I hope, so you can answer for your crimes and I can watch them hang you by your nor.”

Lazar stared at her for a long moment, taking in the long elegant ears and rust colored red hair. There was something odd about her scent that he could not place but she was fit and obviously very capable. “Set course 4675.87.” He spoke finally.

Tina punched in the coordinates and looked at Endith across from her. “I hope you can make peace with whatever gods you worship out here.” Tina told him turning her head to look at him. “They won’t save you no matter where in this universe you go to hide.”

Anja’s upper body resided in Retta’s lap, while Tobia and Mari were now on either side of her in a protective manner. Retta’s head was lowered beside her mother’s and both of them were weeping softly when they felt it. The powerful surge of Etheric power that could only be coming from one person. Though Tobia and Mari had not known it before this day, Martin had considered both of them as members of his immediate family from the moment Deion had taken her as his wife and mate. This naturally meant that they were included in the surge of power and Tobia gasped softly as she felt the clarity and resonance for the very first time and it felt utterly beautiful. For Mari, she had felt it before and it made her smile in hopefulness and love. Martin was reaching for them from Ventori and he had found Anja’s etheric resonance easily and he was focusing on it intently. Tobia could feel three other minds adding their power to his own, though given what she felt, Martin did not need such additional power.

Martin Leonidas knew his Queens as he knew himself and he began speaking by telling them what would instantly change things.

[They are alive!]

[Papa!] Retta rasped in overwhelming happiness.

[Martin... Martin...] Anja began but the relief she felt overwhelmed her momentarily and she squeezed Tobia’s hand tightly because she could not say anything. Mari grasped Retta’s hand, tears in her eyes and Retta looked at her and nodded, the same overwhelming sense of happiness filling her as she heard her father continue.

[Duewa is with them. Atropos took one in the upper back. Slipped through a seam in his armor, but he is ok. Calyb took three in his chest armor. One bounced off and clipped his jaw and neck but he is fine.] Martin paused for a moment, all of them almost feeling the sigh of great concern in Mindvoice. [Anja? Carians Red, how many times have I got to tell you to stop looking for trouble?]

Anja couldn’t help herself and with tears running down her cheeks she burst into soft laughter that only caused her to cough in mild pain which made her turn her head into Retta’s lap further and Retta caressed her forehead with her fingers and put her mother to sleep.

[Red? Anja?] Martin spoke once more.

[I have put her to sleep Papa.] Retta answered. [They... he beat her badly medwan. She killed one of them when we saw Calyb get shot and he beat her so...]

[I need you to be strong fenneenum.] Martin spoke gently to his daughter. [Can you do that?]

Retta took a deep breath and drew upon her inner reserves. The blood within her veins. [Yes.] She answered firmly.

[That's my girl.] Martin answered her with genuine warmth and fatherly affection.

Retta looked around quickly. [Their leader is in the cockpit with Endith and Tina. I felt us jump father, but I do not know to where. Their leader is... he is not the one who led the attack. This one was furious with the brute who did and who was beating mother. He... he tossed him off the ship just before we took off.]

[The distance is too great to hold this now.] Martin said. [Try and remain together and remember we are coming for you. We...]

Retta looked up at Tobia when her father's presence was pulled from her. "The distance is too great." Tobia spoke softly. "Not even your father could hold something like that forever."

"What do we do?" Mari asked. She was fearful yes, but not anywhere as much as she thought she would be. Once more the Leonidas blood within her was coming forth and giving her more presence of mind and courage to deal with this situation.

"I healed her wounds but she needs rest." Retta spoke now caressing her mother's cheek. "She will wake in a few hours and she will know what to do. For now, we do not resist and we try to stay calm."

"And when she wakes?" Tobia asked. "What then Retta? We do not even know where we are going? How will your father and the others find us?"

Retta met her eyes and smiled through her tears and her own fear. "My father and my brother Androcles will find us Tobia. You do not yet understand what they are do you?" She said almost wistfully.

Tobia looked at her oddly. "What they are? I don't understand what you mean?"

Retta looked at Mari beside her and she saw the glint of knowledge in her eyes. "Deion showed you?" She asked softly.

Mari nodded as she squeezed Retta's hand tightly. "Our first time together." She replied. "It was... it was glorious Retta."

Retta smiled now and pulled her mother closer to her chest. "My father and my brother Androcles are beautiful enigmas Lady Tobia. Paradigm shifts to the next level on the Etheric evolutionary scale." Retta said with a small smile. "They can no longer be considered among the normal Etheric categories or Etheric sciences for they have evolved past that now. They are no longer Praetorian or even Dahakoan Lady Tobia. They are something far more. As are my brother Dorian and my ano arande Laren. It is what destiny meant for them to be. What destiny meant for all of us whether by blood or association. You are a part of that now Lady Tobia. You and Murano as Mari's mother and father." Retta stroked Anja's cheek softly with her fingers.

Tobia's eyes grew slightly wider as she remembered what was spoken in the Command Center. "The Mountain of Stone and Light." She said softly.

Retta nodded her head. "My father and brother will find us, no matter where they take us." She said calmly. "Of that you can be absolutely certain. For what my mother has suffered, my father, my mothers and my siblings will revisit that pain upon these men and their masters a thousand fold. They will not show mercy or pity, and they will not hold back. Now... now they will begin to teach others what it means when someone of our family is harmed in such a way."

Tobia glanced at her daughter and saw her gripping Retta's hand with a similar, almost glowing expression of peace and knowledge. She looked back to Retta. "What does it mean?" She asked finally, not sure if she wanted to hear the answer. Tobia looked at Retta and her daughter for a long moment and then her eyes grew wide when, for a split second, her mind filled with the image of a clear field surrounded by trees. In that field she saw them, father and son standing beside one another, surrounded by sons and daughter, brothers and sisters. All of them were staring off into the sky at something Tobia could not see. All of them with dual wolf fangs openly exposed, all of them with wolf eyes filled with rage and hate. All of them prepared to take up the hunt. Tobia shook her head and the vision cleared and was gone. She glanced at Retta only to see that same look in Retta Leonidas' green wolf orbs and her daughter's own blue green wolf eyes.

Retta met her eyes. "Shylon." Retta told her with an even, cold tone of voice that made Tobia shiver in terror. "Quvor shylon."

"Avoi." Mari whispered.

JETANIA
NORTHERN OCEAN
DEPTH 2419 METERS
DARASTRIXI LONG RANGE MEDIUM CRUISER

“Who is he Oracle?” Loras asked.

Nilantha turned from the large potted plant that she had been trimming, one among the rows along the edge of the empty Promenade of the Archive of Knowledge and Hope. The Teleporter was on the other side of the row of plants sitting idle Loras saw. Nilantha brushed her hands together several times and looked at Loras.

“Who is who child?” Nilantha asked her.

“You know who I speak of Oracle. I...” Loras began to speak.

“Loras Ranev, my name is Nilantha.” She spoke reaching out to take her arm. “I am not The Oracle to you and I would ask that you use my name.”

Loras shook her head quickly. “I could not.” She said softly.

“Why? You wield far more influence among our people than I ever will Loras.” Nilantha told her. “You have ascended to a position that no female, Alpha or otherwise, has ever held among the packs here on Jetania.”

“Among the Mountain Packs perhaps, but not all of our people are like the Mountain Packs.” Loras said.

“Perhaps. Perhaps not.” Nilantha answered. “Those who resist change are the ones most likely to be swallowed up and passed by when that change occurs.”

“You... you say our people.” Loras spoke evenly. “But you are not one of us.”

Nilantha smiled at her, her emerald eyes twinkling in the light. “I became one of you the day that I came to this world with your people Loras.” She spoke almost proudly. “And I would not change that for anything in the universe now. My people, the Darastrixi people, we were overbearing and arrogant at times because of the technology we wielded. We were also very rigid in our ways. We probably still are. Very much like the Pralor people once were. Being here among our people, among all of you, it changed me forever. I may not have Lycavorian blood in my veins Loras, but I am Lycavorian in every other manner one could possibly think.”

Loras stared at her for a long moment. “I suppose that is true.” She finally said. “How could... Nilantha how could all this exist?” Loras asked. “These images? These paintings and drawings?”

“Do you doubt what your eyes tell you?” Nilantha asked.

“I have never... I have never told anyone about my vision Nilantha. No one.” Loras spoke in almost a whisper. “I was... I was only nineteen years old.”

“And how many times did you have this vision?” Nilantha asked her.

Loras looked at her. “Three times.” She said softly. “The night... the night that pig Osrod claimed me. I was nineteen then and that was the first. The night Warim claimed me and...” Loras’ eyes grew slightly wider. “The night I gave myself to Hagoth for companionship. I was lonely and...”

Nilantha nodded her head. “And why do you think you have only had this vision three times?”

Loras shook her head. “I do not know.” She answered. “It was only those three times. Never again.”

“And how many men have shared your bed in that same time Loras Ranev?” Nilantha asked her.

“There have been only... only three!” She gasped her eyes going wide as she looked at Nilantha realizing what she was saying.

“And what do you think this means child?” Nilantha asked her with a gentle smile.

Loras looked at her. “What... what you are suggesting is...”

“What do you think I am suggesting?” Nilantha asked with that twinkle in her emerald eyes. She took Loras’ hand in hers. “Let me ask a different question.” She said. “Lon gostina Aspion aside, for everyone knows you did not care for him, did you love Warim Ranev Loras? Truly love him? The same love that I see from your eyes in that painting for a man you have never met?” Loras looked almost embarrassed and she did not answer for fear of giving away her true feelings. Nilantha smiled for Loras’ silence told her all she needed to know. “You cared deeply for Warim Loras, this was obvious to everyone. Deeply enough to give him strong and healthy children and be a loyal wife and mate to him. But in your heart of hearts, in your spirit and resonance, did you love him completely?”

Loras finally shook her head as she met her eyes. “No.” She answered in a whisper.

“This young man in the painting, he was the reason?” Nilantha asked.

“Each... each time I had the vision was when I was taken by another... and what I felt was beyond anything that I have ever experienced.” Loras told her wistfully. “An aura that made me shudder in uncontrollable desire, but an aura that did not affect my mind. It did not cause me to... it did not cause me to lose control of what I wanted and revert to the base instincts of our people. It... it swarmed around me, protected me, and showered me with love so... so staggeringly powerful that I have always...”

“You have always held out a part of yourself in the hopes of discovering that one day?” Nilantha said.

Loras nodded her head. “Yes.” Loras looked at her. “You know who it is don’t you?” She asked.

Nilantha met her eyes and nodded her head after a few long moments. “I do, yes, and you know exactly who he is as well Loras Ranev. You have always known Loras. Since the day you entered this world child.” She told her softly smiling at her. “I know because of what Dadrien of the Mountain has told me when he has appeared to me, and recently the spirit of Sumar himself. And no, I will not tell you his true name for you already know his name. You have already had it whispering in your mind since you were a child. A powerful and honored name, with a rich and diverse history that goes back millennia.”

Loras looked at the deck of the ship as that name popped into her head once more. The same name she had heard since she was old enough to remember. Loras lifted her head once more and looked at Nilantha. “Achilles.” Loras whispered the name.

Nilantha nodded her head and she took both of Loras’ hands in hers. “And I will tell you why you must never reveal this to anyone or let them hear you speak that name.”

Loras shook her head now. “No. I know why. I know... because if I know, I may do something to facilitate finding that... finding him before it is preordained. Before it was meant to be.”

Nilantha smiled once more. “Simply put... but essentially accurate, yes.” She said. “But there is also another reason, one far more sinister in nature that I will tell you now. You must understand Loras Ranev, the Mard Revik, the Tarivuos, his family, they care nothing for the trappings of power. They resist it at every turn of the clock. They want nothing to do with it. If it was within their power, they would throw it all away without a second thought. The entire family is like this Loras, the Tarivuos and the Mard Revik most of all. Yet this is the very same reason that so many follow them without question. Without doubt. You will see this for yourself in the coming days.”

Loras looked at her intently. “Those who do not wish power or control are most often the ones that can change the face of everything that we know Nilantha.” She said softly.

Nilantha nodded her head. “Yes they are. There are those, even among their own Union, who do not want the Mard Revik and his family in power. They fear them. They fear the osan and ekino that they wield so easily. They wrongly believe that it should be theirs. Just as Osrod and those who follow him believe.”

“War is coming isn’t it Nilantha?” Loras asked softly.

Nilantha shrugged her shoulders. “Again... perhaps and perhaps not. It will depend on what Osrod does I think. Those who follow the Mard Revik have fought injustice since their very inception. They will not tolerate it on any level. Slavery, the archaic abuse of our females in many ways, the ridiculous notion that half breeds are an abomination, all of these ideals they have fought and crushed beneath their boots as they have built their Union. If Osrod thinks to bully or cajole these men and women, he will find them to be very unresponsive and they will push back, violently if necessary. As I have told you before, any one of them is worth three or more of Osrod and his fools. Their training is brutal and sometimes deadly, yet they embrace it as part of who they are. It is part of who they are.”

“This Spartan culture you spoke of?” Loras asked.

Nilantha nodded her head. “Family, honor, love and their people. These are what matters most to the Mard Revik and those who follow him. That is where you come in Loras. You and your son and so many others that follow you.”

“Me?” Loras asked her with wide eyes. “Lazar? What do you mean?”

“The Mountain Packs are the closest to the Mard Revik and what those who follow him believe and how they act.” Nilantha said. “You will see this for yourself soon enough. They are unyielding in their core beliefs Loras. The true reason you must never speak of your vision to anyone besides me or Taris is because, should our enemies discover this, there are those who will do everything within their power to stop it, in their Union as well. Including but not limited to killing you.”

“But why?” Loras pressed her.

“It is simple really, what your son begins, you will seal forever.” Nilantha told her. “The day he enters this world you will feel him, this young man in your visions, and this will seal the unification of every Lycavorian in the universe as one. No matter where they may be.”

“You said he would be King.” Loras spoke softly.

“And one day he will be King. And you will be his Queen.” Nilantha spoke with a nod.

“I do not wish to be a Queen Nilantha.” Loras told her.

Nilantha chuckled softly and squeezed her hands tightly. “And you will have that in common, for he will not wish to be King.”

Loras rolled her dark eyes. “Carians allon coi sy malda.” She commented. (Gods this is so crazy)

Nilantha laughed softly and nodded her head. “It certainly is.” She said. “Do not fear Loras Ranev, the day that he comes for you is nearing. As I said, when he enters this world you will feel it, and he will feel you Loras. Even from across the stars. It is all he will feel, until the day he arrives here and claims you as his.” Nilantha said.

Loras Ranev felt a warm flush cascade through her body when Nilantha said that and it was wonderful to say the least. To know such love and devotion was something she had always dreamed of. She blinked several times as she realized what Nilantha had said and her eyes grew slightly wider now. “Enters this world?” Loras spoke softly. “Are you saying he has not been born yet?”

“Does this knowledge make a difference to you?” Nilantha said.

Loras shook her head without even thinking about it. “No. Why should it? Warim was a thousand years older than me.”

“Just know this Loras Ranev.” Nilantha said. “He will come for you no matter how long it takes, and nothing will stand in his way. Just as his father will be the one to insure that this happens and not even know it. This young man will take you and make you his and you will scream to the moon and heavens in happiness. He will worship you beyond anything that you can understand now. Just as his father worships his mothers. He will...”

“Nilantha how do you know all this?” Loras asked her. “How could you know all of these things?”

“The Etheric Realm is all encompassing Loras Ranev. It surrounds us everywhere.” She spoke evenly waving her hands all around her. “Every living thing is touched by it in some form or manner. However, the gene that allows those who can manipulate it, control it, this is beyond infinitesimal. That is why I was blessed by Dadrien and then Sumar in what they allowed me to see and share with them. They granted me this gift in a fashion. I am nothing when held to the Mard Revik and the Heralds and many of those within their family but I am able to sense flashes of immense power within the realm. The Pralor Sumar was the most powerful Etheric user in the entire universe until he passed on and his direct descendants have surpassed him in many ways because of the passion and emotion within them, that fuels them, and they will teach you and the others to experience this as well.”

“Are you saying all Lycavorians have this ability?” Loras asked stunned.

Nilantha nodded her head. “The Etheric ability yes. The Praetorian gene as they call it and the knowledge to recognize and use it, no?” She answered. “The gene is so rare that it is a wonder it still exists, and given what I know, no one among our people here on Jetania have it. We have had no interaction with anyone who carried this gene for our people left Lycavore long before Sumar ever went there. It is stronger within you, within Taris and Anoria, this Etheric resonance. A few others among our people here. That is why you and they are able to have these visions. I would guess that there are many more who have had such visions but are fearful to talk of them because of the society that Osrod’s bloodline has cultivated. One of fear and deceit and self-empowerment at the expense of others. The Lycavorians of the Union, they have long outgrown such childish tendencies. Their Union is vast Loras, trillions of lifeforms of countless species. Since the return of the Mard Revik to them, even before, they have worked to improve the lives of their people. All of their people. That is why they will not tolerate it.”

“They will force their ways upon us?” Loras asked defensively.

Nilantha shook her head quickly. “Oh no.” She replied squeezing her hands. “They will force nothing on any others, but they will choose not to interact with those like Osrod and any others who willingly think like him or follow him. If Osrod forces a confrontation, if he does something to provoke them, they will respond.

Many of them, they are the foremost warriors in this galaxy Loras. They have fought since their inception and they are so very good at it. They have never started a war Loras, but they have finished them. Osrod Aspion will regret the day he joined this world if he acts in this way.”

The soft beeping alarm began to sound drawing her attention away from Loras and up towards the ceiling of this level.

“Nilantha?” Loras prodded her as she began to look around and see lights beginning to blink all up and down the seemingly endless level. “Nilantha what is going on. What is that noise?”

“Taris Ranev!” Nilantha hissed out just before Taris appeared beside Loras like a ghost with almost no sound, startling Loras to a small extent.

“I am here Oracle.” Taris exclaimed.

“Take my other hand child.” Nilantha spoke and Taris complied instantly. “Hold your breaths.” She said just before they were engulfed by the Teleporter and instantly appeared in another part of the enormous ship.

Loras was looking around in utter wonder at the transition and did not sense Taris break away from her. She took in the many screens and monitors and computer stations and kept turning until she saw Rylin and Omrad sitting at two different stations and Taris moving into a third. Two other stations were also occupied and filled by a young man and woman that Loras did not recognize. It appeared to be some sort of Control Center Loras thought to herself, like the bridge of a ship. Loras watched as Nilantha moved to a massive holographic image of the stars.

“Rylin, is that what I think it is?” She asked.

“We are checking Oracle.” Rylin answered as her hands flew over the controls in front of her. They were controls and computers that looked so foreign to Loras but that Rylin, Omrad and Taris were now using without thought.

“Contact confirmed!” Omrad declared finally. “Small transport craft! Still several hours away but...”

Nilantha turned to face him. “Omrad?”

He looked up at her with wide eyes. “I’m detecting a Phased Quantum Fusion power source Vomir.”

Taris looked up from her position. “I confirm that Oracle. A Phased Quantum Fusion drive.”

Nilantha looked confused. “That doesn’t make any sense.” She said quickly. “Such a small craft?”

“What is happening?!” Loras spat. “Quantum Fusion Drives are not possible! Even I know that! What you speak of is impossible.”

“This is the Oracle’s ship Loras.” Rylin spoke looking at her as her hands continued to work the console in front of her. “Would you have believed that this ship existed without seeing it for yourself? There are sophisticated sensor nodes scattered throughout the planetary sector designed to detect ships or personnel with advanced technology or Etheric abilities when they enter this area of space. These sensor nodes have detected such a ship entering the sector. The Mard Revik and Vada Tarivuos have very advanced ships and star drives Loras. They have come from the Alpha Quadrant.”

Loras’ eyes nearly exploded from her head when she heard this. “The Alpha Quadrant!” She gasped in disbelief.

Omrad shook his head now. “This ship is not showing up on sensors.” He stated quickly. “It triggered the Etheric detectors Oracle. It is hidden from even our sensors.”

Rylin looked at him. “Omrad, in order to trigger the Etheric sensors, the individual or individuals would have to be above Category Seventeen.”

Omrad nodded his head. “I know. I only telling you that it was the Etheric detectors and not the normal sensors that picked up the ship.”

Rylin looked at Nilantha. “Oracle... there are only a handful of Etheric users classified as above Category Seventeen. All of them are among the Mard Revik and his family. That would mean...”

“Omrad can you determine what Category?” Nilantha asked him.

“Based on the strength of the signal, Category Eighteen easily.” Omrad answered. “And there is more than one of them.”

“More than one?” Nilantha gasped.

“The Etheric Sensor Grid does not discriminate Oracle.” Omrad said. “You know this. Based on the strength of the signal there are at least two Category Eighteens on this ship and another two or three Category Seventeens.”

“It is wrong.” Nilantha spoke once more shaking her head.

Loras looked at Nilantha now. “Nilantha? What is wrong?”

“Something isn’t right.” She said. “It is not enough.”

“What do you mean Oracle?” Taris spoke excitedly. “This means they are coming! We have detected one of their ships! Members of the Mard Revik’s family!”

Omrad shook his head. “No Taris. It is too small to be a scout ship. And we have always known they would arrive in great numbers with large ships, with the Mard Revik and the Tarivuos at the head of this fleet. This is something else and it involves members of his family.”

Nilantha turned slowly as she stared at the holographic star chart. “Something is not right.” She said again. Her head moved around looking at each of them and her emerald eyes came to rest on Loras. “And it centers on your son Loras.”

“Lazar!” Loras gasped aloud.

VENTORI

The clearing had filled with the PREMONITION, two STRIKER DTs, one KADEN transport, and at least a dozen highly pissed off dragons. Most of those dragons were, at the moment, attempting to keep two of them calm in the midst of their rage. Miath had been among the first to arrive on the scene, Mara only a few seconds behind him, both of them having detected the horrific emotions from their Bonded Ones. It had taken Torma, Isheeni and Elynth to keep them at bay, added support coming when Ryner and Ladur arrived on scene seconds later, and finally the whole of the Leonidas family on the planet descended upon the clearing.

SPARTAN ONE had taken to the sky only a few minutes before and quickly jumped out of the system, engaging its Shroud Shield while it was climbing into the upper atmosphere. SPARTA’S WRATH was the only ship capable of tracking it for the few seconds it had been in the atmosphere and then it had jumped away, leaving no trail to follow. Aricia now rested on the ground, Atropos’s upper body in her lap while she stroked the head of her older brother, For'mya only a few feet away with Calyb in a similar position. Duewa was slowly moving her hands over Atropos’ upper body, the white glow of her healing power very active.

The KADEN Heavy transport had been carrying the seventy-three Durcunusaan from the Reactionary Division on board the KINDRED SOUL when it diverted here at the first alarm that was sounded, and now those Durcunusaan troops had encircled the clearing on high alert while the medics among their group were moving among the bodies trying to save any of the twenty plus Ventori Lycavorians that had been gunned down.

Those among the first to arrive would later comment that it was an eerie calm they all felt in the small clearing. All of the Leonidas family were standing very close to one another, all of them staring at the sky above where the STRIKER had disappeared from view, with Androcles, Dorian, Deion and Denali touching their father in some fashion as if giving him added strength. No one spoke, for their officers had been very clear in their orders, a Queen and two Princesses of the Union had been taken, and heads were going to roll for this fuck up. Unknown to the men and women now in the clearing, they had nothing to fear in the least, for the two men who they most feared would unleash their anger at this complete and absolute lapse in security, they only blamed themselves and no other.

Daniel Simpson however, he knew exactly what to do. He stepped off the ramp of the STRIKER before it had even touched the ground, Anuk and Nayeca exiting the ship right after him. Danny carried the large, cylindrical tube like item in his right arm as two Durcunusaan officers moved up to his position as his long legs carried him towards his brother.

“General we...” The officer began to speak but Danny waved him silent.

“Captain... you lock this entire area down as tight as a virgin’s prize!” Danny hissed at the man angrily. “I want Durcunusaan on all four corners of a twenty kilometer box with this clearing as the center and I want it done five minutes ago! Once the corners are set, you pour as many troops into this box as you need to in order to sweep the entire grid. Turn over every anse stone! Look in every nubous cave! Under every bush! There are others in this box and I want them found! Including the ship that they came in on.”

“Rules General?” The Captain asked.

Danny stopped walking and looked at him. “Do I have to answer that question Captain?” Danny spoke. “Whoever they were they took one of our Queens and two of our Princesses! You move heaven and motherfucking earth and you make this happen!”

The man nodded his head and his chest swelled with purpose. “Consider it done, sir!” He barked before sprinting off in the other direction.

Danny felt the hand on his arm and he looked to his right to see Anuk beside him. She looked up at him with her cerulean blue wolf eyes, the tips of her fangs exposed just under her upper lip. “You find these men Daniel.” Anuk told him sternly. “You find them and you show them that what they have done was the biggest mistake they could have ever made.”

Danny drew her tight to his side, Nayeca pressing close behind her. Daniel and Nayeca knew how tightly bound Anja and Anuk were. They had been family and close friends for over two decades now and working closely together they had built the Union Medical Corp into the single largest, most advanced and most efficient organization of its kind in anyone’s history. As Daniel Simpson’s wives and mates, Anuk, Nayeca and now Keslya were just like their beloved husband, and they were considered part of the Leonidas family and they were spoken of in the same breath.

“Help Duewa Baby.” Daniel told her as he leaned over and nuzzled her elven ear. “Calyb and Atropos trust you and they will listen to you. Do what you are good at and let me and Nubian do the dirty work.”

Anuk nodded and stretched up on her booted feet to kiss him lovingly. She turned quickly and jogged over to where For'mya sat with Calyb in her arms. Danny turned to Nayeca and her amber eyes lifted to meet his. “Keslya?” He asked.

“Keslya is our wife and mate now and she is no fool Daniel my love.” Nayeca told him with a smile. “She knows what our skills are, she knows what we do, and she loves us more for it.”

Danny nodded his head. “I know.” He said softly. “I just don’t... I don’t want her to see what we do if we can avoid it.”

Nayeca smiled and kissed him now as well. “Do what you must.” She told him. “I will see about helping the Durcunusaan here to search the surrounding area. Reports are that they saw a body fall from the ramp before it lifted off completely. That means there has to be a body somewhere. Maybe we can learn something from it.”

Danny nodded and watched his beautiful Drow wife turn and moved for the nearest group of five Durcunusaan troops. She would take command of that group of men and women and they would go hunting. Nayeca Simpson was a Drow and a wolf, and while she was not a pureblood Drow as Lu'ria was, she had all of their skills and she was lethal. Daniel turned once more and looked back to the small gathering of Leonidas children standing around their father. It had grown by one he saw, as Murano had now arrived and he did not look in the least bit happy. He turned briefly as he heard another transport STRIKER come in low and he watched as it flared above the ground and set down gently and then Gorgo, Dasha, Dynina and Sarlana exited the craft. Once they had moved far enough away, it rose back into the air and sped off in the direction of Discovery Base. He turned back to where Martin stood and then covered the shorty distance to where Duewa was working on Atropos and Anuk was now scanning Calyb. He knelt on the ground at Atropos’ feet and he turned his head to look at him.

“They came from downwind Daniel.” Atropos spoke sitting up a little higher in Aricia’s lap. Lilika would arrive in minutes and take her place Atropos knew. “The opposite direction of where their ship was. Calyb detected them first. A hint on the wind when it shifted.”

Daniel nodded his head. “We didn’t expect this.” He spoke looking out over the clearing and the bodies. “This fucking stunt took a special kind of stupid to attempt.”

“They succeeded Daniel.” Atropos pointed out.

Danny met his eyes. “And now they are going to pay for that.” He spoke.

“How many Uncle?” Calyb asked now, for he was only a few feet from him. “There were twenty-nine in this group.”

Daniel shook his head. “Seventeen dead, five wounded if the reports are accurate Mandri. The rest must have already made it onto the STRIKER when they hit.”

“Their training is good.” Atropos spoke. “With only Calyb and I checking the perimeter at different times they got too close for us to react.”

“They shot you in the back Atropos! In the back with no warning!” Aricia gasped angrily. “They shot Calyb in the chest! If not for your armor you would be dead! They acted like nubous morons to do this!”

“Andro did warn us their arrogance was extensive sister.” Atropos answered her. “We should have left the normal security for Anja in place.”

Danny shook his head. “We will not second guess ourselves now! We all agreed that this was the way to do it.” Danny spoke now causing Duewa to look at him oddly. “We knew the risks. Martin and Anja most of all.”

“Our own arrogance and overconfidence is the reason for this.” For'mya hissed now. “Once the Svorag were defeated and Andro’s forces were here, we shifted our focus too quickly to helping others. This is the result.”

Duewa was no fool by any stretch of the imagination and she realized what they were all talking about. “Wait a minute!” She snapped. “You knew this would happen? You allowed Anja to be taken?!”

Danny glanced at her quickly and then back to Atropos. “Back to Discovery Base for both of you.” He ordered them. He lifted his hand as Calyb began to open his mouth to speak. “No discussions boy!” He growled. “We’ll take it from here and then make a plan! Your father and brother are on it and believe me, they are not taking this well at all.”

“Answer me Daniel!” Duewa barked again. “You knew this would happen?”

Danny met her eyes. “Duewa you are...”

“Go Daniel.” Aricia spoke now. “For'mya and I will answer her questions. Kinosaurgai is correct. We acted impulsively and with our own arrogance. That will not happen again.”

Danny nodded his head and rose to his feet immediately. As nearly everyone across the Union could attest to, the number of individuals who could walk right up to a gathering of the Leonidas family and act as Daniel did could be counted on one hand. Daniel Simpson was the most beloved Uncle of all the Leonidas children for he was their father’s Mard Fervon, and while Daniel would never admit it was so, Atropos and Andreus would say them same thing. He was family to them, and to those who bore the name Leonidas, family was all important.

When Daniel burst through the rank between Andro and Martin all heads turned to look at him as he jammed the end of the Mark Two Neural Booster into the ground and he looked at his brother.

“Do it fervon!” He snapped. “This is not what we expected but now we adapt! You let me handle this! You ain’t the only one that loves that fiery little, potty mouthed red head! There’s a whole lot of us who love her! Now you and Andro do your thing, find out where they are taking her and the others, and then let’s go kick us some ass! How long?”

“We will need at least an hour to focus and center on them Tenne.” Andro answered for his father.

“You got two.” Daniel said in reply with a nod. “Then we need to have Manda and Sa'sur fill everyone in before this gets out of hand.” He said no more and stepped back between father and son and kept walking towards where he saw a small ADHOC portable Command Table being set up. He didn’t need to say anymore he knew and now he would stop being brother to the King and become a General of Spartans.

Which was also something the Coalition of Lycavorian States should not have set in motion.

Dynina was holding tightly to Gorgo and Dasha’s hands moving between them as she was, Sarlana in stride with the taller women on their right. Dynina was watching intently and she saw Martin and Andro kneel down before the strange item Daniel had thrust into the ground in front of them. She saw them lift their hands and place it over the clear, oval shaped crystal and she came to an abrupt halt when the blue/white pulse of Etheric energy erupted out of the tube like cylinder engulfing all of her family.

“Son vada carians!” Dynina gasped as Dasha grasped her other arm in reassurance.

“It is a Mark Two Neural Booster.” Dasha told her. “It focuses their power and allows Etheric communication over much greater distances. It is of Pralor design, something that Sumar built long ago. Surely you have seen one.”

Dynina looked at her and nodded. “We have... we have seen the designs for such a thing in the computers on Lorenu but we never built one because we had no one who could activate it.” She answered.

“The Etheric realm is infinite as you no doubt know given your abilities.” Gorgo spoke.

Dynina nodded her head. “Yes... but my abilities are passive in nature. They always have been. I have never actively been able to manipulate the Etheric realm such as this device would allow.”

“Martin discovered the first one on Earth many years ago.” Gorgo explained. “He used it to contact those within the Union. They were very limited in number until he discovered CS41 on our homeworld of Lycavore. On the ship he found a small warehouse of them. Martin had them placed strategically throughout the Union and in other areas in case of emergency. He and Androcles always travel with one or two however...”

Dynina looked at her. “What?”

Gorgo shook her head. “It... thinking about it right now, it just seems odd that Daniel would arrive here with one so quickly. Almost as if he expected they would need it.”

“All of you can use these devices?” Dynina asked.

Gorgo shook her head quickly. “Oh no.” She replied. “The only two individuals who can even activate one individually are right there. Only Martin and Androcles can activate and use them on their own, for only they possess the necessary Etheric power. However, the more of those in the connection, the stronger it is and the longer they can hold it” She motioned with her head as she saw her grandchildren crowd around their father and older brother, all of them linking their arms in some fashion with each other. Murano joined them as well, he and Deion standing beside one another. Gorgo urged Dynina forward. “Come Dynina... you are part of this family now as well and we always stand united.”

“Avoi.” Dasha spoke as they moved to join the small circle of bodies.

SPARTA'S WRATH

Armen looked up when his XO stopped at the chart table beside him, his face filled with questions. –Something XO?

“May I speak freely Armen?” Taich asked.

Armen blinked several times as he stood to his full height, all of his attention on Taich. –I believe I have made this very clear to you- He answered.

Taich turned slightly and motioned the young officer over to the table now. “You know Lieutenant Commander Fancari of the Durcunusaan Forward Team?”

Armen nodded his head. –Yes-

Taich looked at the elven officer. “Show him what you showed me.” He said.

The Lieutenant Commander moved closer and plugged the data pad he was carrying into the chart table. “Sir, as you know, part of our duties as the DFT is the active monitoring of all family members and their location. It is updated every ninety seconds.”

Armen nodded once more. –Yes-

“When we arrived in system sir, that monitoring was expanded to include all of the family members in theater.” Fancari continued evenly. “Including the King and Queens. We do a Theoretical Threat Assessment every five minutes based on their current location and known possible threats. General Vengal was very specific in our duties and our training sir. They may not have direct Durcunusaan protection, as you know, all of them have refused it, but the TTA is still conducted.”

–Trying to protect those who do not want protection- Armen spoke. –I am aware of this trait among all of the Leonidas family, not just Androcles and his father-

Fancari nodded his head. “And we have learned to work around it for the most part sir.” He spoke. “The King and the Queens especially, but even Prime Minister Deia and Lady Gorgo and Lady Dasha. They may not have direct Durcunusaan protection other than their Captains, but outside of their ships and the Royal Villa on Apo Prime and the Spartan Estate, there is always a Durcunusaan Strike Team within three minutes of their location no matter where they may be.”

-I am fully aware of the Durcunusaan's standing ROE Lieutenant Commander- Armen answered him. -Is the Royal Family aware of this?-

Fancari looked confused for a moment. “No sir. General Vengal was very insistent that they be kept out of the loop so to speak. At least directly. Keeping tabs on the King and Crown Androcles is especially difficult because of their innate ability to discover and dump whoever is assigned to protect them.”

-Have you tried to adjust to compensate for this penchant of escaping their security- Armen said.

Fancari nodded his head. “Yes sir. No matter what we have done they always discover them within minutes and disappear.”

-Interesting- Armen spoke.

Taich looked at the officer. “Just tell him what you told me son.” He spoke.

The Elven officer nodded his head nervously. “Yes sir.” He plugged the data pad in to the chart table. “The Durcunusaan Strike Team uses code words sir. These code words are signals to engage or not in the event of a situation. Any situation.”

-I understand- Armen spoke.

“The DST was on standby in a Shrouded KADEN monitoring Queen Anja’s movements and shadowing SPARTAN ONE.” Fancari explained. He adjusted the information in the Chart Table and looked at Armen. “We were monitoring all COM traffic within the fleet sir, and we detected a single, highly encrypted COM burst to SPARTAN ONE three minutes before the DST received the code word that indicated Queen Anja would be returning to base.” Fancari adjusted the screen once more. “The DST acknowledged the code word and began returning to base as well. Ninety seconds later SPARTAN ONE shifted course without prior clearance or warning and moved to the location of these refugees. The DST called for confirmation, but the code word had not changed so they continued back to Discovery Base.” Fancari adjusted the Chart Table once more. “The DST Commander pushed further and he discovered the COM bust came nine minutes after it was discovered that this COLS transport had been lost while descending to the surface. When he...”

Armen held up his hand stopping Fancari. -The code word was sent from *SPARTA'S WRATH-

Fancari looked at him with wide eyes. “Yes sir! How...?”

Armen reached across the Chart Table and touched the panel twice. Both Taich and Fancari watched as the faces of Admiral Sa'sur and Admiral Lorian appeared in the two small holo projections.

“Armen?” Sa'sur spoke from the SCIMITAR. “Have you been tracking SPARTAN ONE?”

-We are receiving the signal clearly Admiral- Armen answered her calmly. -I believe we have another situation however-

“What’s that?” Sa'sur asked.

-It would appear that the Durcunusaan are more inventive and resourceful than King Martin and Androcles thought- Armen told her. -I have Lieutenant Commander Fancari in front of me now-

“Sibfla!” Sa'sur hissed in the holographic transmission. She was silent for a moment then looked at him. “We knew it wouldn't last.” She spoke finally. “Armen, go ahead and fill the Lieutenant Commander in on our plan and inform him he can forgo any further investigation into the cause.”

“I told Androcles and Martin that Vengal was smarter and a lot more devious than what they thought. He trained the Durcunusaan too well.” Manda spoke from within the secure transmission. “Let them deal with the blowback. We have a job to do.”

“Agreed.” Sa'sur spoke. “Armen, we'll meet you on the surface after Martin and the others have made contact. Given what happened, it's time we start operating with them in the loop.”

-Agreed- Armen answered.

Fancari waited until the transmissions had ended before looking at Armen. “Sir?” He asked. “With all due respect sir, you should probably explain what that was all about.”

Armen nodded his head. -Indeed-

SPARTAN ONE
COLS SPACE
TWO HOURS FROM JETANIA

After leaving two of his men in the cockpit with Endith and Tina, Lazar moved back into the passenger compartment of the STRIKER. The ship was utterly amazing and even though he knew nothing of its systems, he was thoroughly going to enjoy studying the ship to learn those secrets. He was trying to stay busy and he barely looked over to where those Sibot had captured were sitting on the deck. He couldn't look, for the scent of the young, red haired half breed wolf was torture to his senses. No female's wolf scent had ever set his senses into overdrive as they were when the sweet honey and mint aroma filtered to him. In the confines of the ship it was even worse for no matter which way he turned, it seemed to follow him and swirl around him. Lazar Aspion was no fool when it came to female wolves. Many had approached him hoping to win his favor and become his wife and mate. While none had succeeded in doing that, Lazar had no trouble finding a female to share his bed. While he did not know it, he was considered the most attractive of Osrod's sons, and the most well equipped. He was also known as a very attentive lover among those he had bedded.

Yet none had affected him as this half breed female had.

There were cross species relationships on Jetania, though they were very few indeed and looked down upon in the worse possible way. Those few wolves involved in such a relationship were rarely allowed within the city limits of any city on Jetania. Most of those involved in the cross species relationships remained far from any Lycavorian city, barely forging their own existence, and unable to go anywhere else. No spaceport or ship would take them off world, and there was no place to go within COLS space where they would be accepted. All of these cross species relationships involved a Lycavorian and a member of the Krorr species. They were a red skinned bipedal species, very adept in engineering skills, and their females were prized among the male Knorr for their beauty and sensual nature. COLS had conquered their world many decades ago, and a handful of Alpha Lycavorians had taken their females as pets. All of them had eventually taken the Krorr females as their mates and even had children with them. When his great, great grandfather had seen what the children looked like he immediately banned all such interaction and chased those families away, sometimes violently. That he held back and did not kill them all outright surprised Lazar because he was not a man known for accepting the unknown. That they still existed was a testament to the survival nature of their Lycavorian mates and the resilience of the Krorr females. It was said that the Krorr females defended their husbands as viciously as any female Alpha and they did the same in return. Lazar didn't know how many of them still survived, but contact with the Krorr species was kept limited, except to keep control of their world and the resources that they provided to COLS.

This red haired, green eyed female however, she was affecting him in a way that he had never experienced before.

Lazar could tell that the Lycavorian blood in her was purer than any he had ever smelled. Even his father's blood did not match the scent that Lazar detected in the mother and daughter and the other petite female. Whatever other species they were, the Lycavorian blood within all of them was far more dominant. Lazar could tell that the mother had been turned, as had the second younger female, but the young red head had been born the way she was which made the wolf within her even more potent.

Lazar shook his head quickly as he moved out of the passenger area and into the rear of the ship where Rhaos was standing over the body of two of their men in what appeared to be a large pen area of some sort. There were two other, smaller areas like this across from them by the ramp but this is where they have moved the bodies. One of these bodies Lazar himself had killed in reaction to what he was going to do. Lazar had not been able to stop himself at that moment, every sense and nerve in his body screaming for him to protect the young half breed.

And he had. Just not in a way he would ever have predicted.

"Rhaos?" Lazar spoke as he came up beside his oldest and closest friend. "What have you discovered?"

Rhaos nodded to him. "You will want to see this for yourself." Rhaos spoke as he bent over and pulled back the blanket covering the body.

Lazar winced slightly when he saw the young COLS soldier. The hilt of the knife was buried fully into the meat of his lower jaw, his eyes open wide in a frozen expression of horrible death. There was very little blood that Lazar could see and he knelt next to the body with Rhaos beside him. He shook his head slowly. "May Sibot burn in the pits of jorbhe for allowing this." He hissed harshly.

"Avoi." Rhaos spoke in agreement.

His emotions aside, Lazar's keen soldier's eye detected something odd and he reached up to gently push the soldier's head higher. The hilt of the blade was so deeply imbedded in his flesh that it was pulling on the surrounding skin tightly. He glanced at Rhaos quickly. "The tiny one did this?" He asked in surprised.

Rhaos nodded his head. "I questioned each of the others in turn. All of them saw it. They said she whispered something to him just before she rammed that into his jaw. None of them saw her draw it, none of them saw her wearing any weapon."

Lazar turned back to the dead soldier. "No half breed would have the strength to do this to a pureblood Rhaos." He said finally looking at him. "All of our doctors and scientists agree that the Lycavorian blood would be too diluted to gain the strength and other benefits that our species has. We saw this in the Krorr females."

Rhaos nodded his head. "That is what I said as well." He spoke softly. "At first."

Lazar returned his gaze to him. "What do you mean at first?" He asked.

"You know what I mean Lazar." Rhaos told him. "We read the same teachings of the Oracle as we grew, or has your time around your father made you forget?"

Lazar glared at him. "I have forgotten nothing Rhaos!" He growled menacingly.

Rhaos reached up quickly and placed his hand on Lazar's shoulder. "I know you haven't my friend." He spoke. "But ever since we got on this ship you have been acting odd. And it has to do with the younger half breed with the red hair doesn't it?"

Lazar was silent for a long moment as he looked at the deck. He reached up and placed his hand on Rhaos' forearm and nodded. "I can smell the wolf blood within her veins Rhaos. It is more dominant and more potent than any blood I have ever smelled before. Even from my father. It is... it is intoxicating Rhaos."

"Estves reull tia sey terr hiper gur carry vada saan rie vada Allsknesi vorevor hel." Rhaos spoke softly. "For henes gur tur cova osanas awyth camerra jar." (Even those who have been turned will carry the blood of the ancients within them) (And they will be more powerful than any among us)

Lazar looked at him and nodded. "That is the phrase." He spoke. "In much more general terms."

Rhaos nodded his head as well. "I could not remember it exactly." He said. "We both know the meaning however."

"Are you saying these half breeds carry the blood of the Allsknesi in their veins?" Lazar asked him. "The blood of those from a homeworld that most of our people now believe is only a myth?"

"I'm saying that no half breed should be able to do this." Rhaos spoke motioning to the body. He reached down and unceremoniously wrenched the knife from the soldier's jaw. There was a sick sound of the wicked looking five-inch blade being withdrawn from flesh and then Rhaos held it up. "Yet that tiny thing back there had the strength to overpower a pureblood and his attempts to stop her and drive this into his jaw. And he did try to stop her according to what the others say. He failed.” Rhaos looked at him. “Sibot was beating her savagely when we got here Lazar. No half breed could stand a beating from Sibot of all people, nubous igord that he was. They would have died within the first few blows. She did not. And you saw after, what the young one did?”

Lazar nodded his head. “The light from her hands and then her wounds were healed.” He said. “I have never seen something like that before.”

“Your father sent Sibot out here with a different mission Lazar.” Rhaos spoke. “A very different mission than what he told you. Which leads me to believe he knows more than he is telling us. More than he is telling anyone. And now three of our crew are dead and probably Laon and the rest of our crew as well.”

Lazar looked at him. “We don’t know that.” He said quickly.

“Look around you at this ship Lazar. It is obviously set up for long range travel. Small quarters on either side of the cockpit, the main area with eating facilities and couches. These pens back here, perhaps for cargo or those beasts. What appears to be some sort of medical bed across the cabin there. This ship has technology and equipment that we could not begin to even understand yet they operate it at will without thinking. She may be tiny and a half breed, but she is obviously someone of great importance.” Rhaos said. “At least the four of them are. The three half breeds and I don’t know the species of the fourth, but they are all important. The Betas do not matter in the larger scheme of things. I did not know any even survived on that planet. No one did.”

Lazar shook his head. “The pilot said she was a Queen.” Lazar told him.

Rhaos shook his head. “What kind of Alpha would make a half breed his wife and mate?” He asked.

“You can sense her aura just as I can Rhaos.” Lazar spoke.

Rhaos nodded his head. “Yes, I will admit that.”

“My grandfather... he must have left the Betas and Omegas here to die.” Lazar said softly. “There have been rumors that this is what he did, but no one ever confirmed it or spoke of it.”

“You saw how the pilots of this craft reacted when the small one spoke to them. They did not blink or question her orders. Small she may be, but I will admit that this half breed is an Alpha female with an aura that equals or exceeds many of the Alpha females on our world and she wields power and influence Lazar. If someone took your mother, if they beat her senseless, what would you do?” Lazar met his eyes and Rhaos saw the look in those dark eyes. “Yes, I thought so. Exactly what any of us would do.”

“What are you suggesting Rhaos?” Lazar asked.

“If we turn them over to your father as Sibot intended, they will disappear Lazar.” Rhaos spoke. “You know that as well as I do. If they are important as I believe they are, as I think you believe they are...” Lazar turned and looked at him intently but did not deny Rhaos’ words. “We risk retaliation from these Lycavorians and their advanced weapons and ships if we allow your father to have them. Nasso can boast all he likes, but we saw the ships in orbit of that planet Lazar. We saw the troops and the sinuova beasts. Do you wish that unleashed upon our people? The ships alone could lay waste to the whole of Jetania’s Home Fleet with little effort.”

“And again... I asked what are you suggesting?” Lazar asked again. “We cannot just offer an apology for our actions Rhaos. That idiot Sibot killed the woman’s son! He killed her fervon! Her Tenne!”

Rhaos held up the knife. “Then I suggest you get control of what this young half breed makes you feel within your blood and try to find a way out of this for us.” He spoke. “Your mother and Garget will not be happy in the least that we may have brought the doom of our people down upon them and this young half breed is going into Phase, and it is stronger than many of our females’ experience. I can smell it on her. She is suppressing it very well, better than any female I have ever seen, but it will begin to affect our men if we do nothing.”

Lazar took the knife slowly and nodded his head. “On that we agree.” He said. Lazar glanced back towards the main portion of the cabin. “How is it not affecting you Rhaos?”

Rhaos shook his head quickly. “I can smell it my friend and it is affecting me, but for some reason it is affecting you more than us and I don’t know why that is. Somehow she seems to be unconsciously directing it completely at you.”

Lazar took a deep breath. “Let’s get some answer Rhaos.” He spoke as he rose and moved in that direction.

With Tobia and Mari helping, they had gotten Anja onto one of the couches in the main area of the STRIKER and now they sat quietly, Retta stroking her mother's cheek, Anja's head resting on her leg. They had remained silent, watching as the soldiers moved about the interior of the STRIKER's main cabin area, investigating the advanced technology that surrounded them, but none of them with the courage to touch or push any buttons or switches. Two of their number were in the cockpit of the ship, leaving five in the rear of the STRIKER, not including the two Alphas that were further back in the dragon pen that Torma and Isheeni normally occupied. All five of those young Alphas had looked towards Retta and Mari on more than one occasion and it was beginning to make Tobia nervous. Tobia could finally stand it no more and she reached for Mari and Retta in the Etheric connection being very careful to shield their conversation.

[Why do they keep looking over here?] Tobia asked. [It is making me nervous.]

[It is me.] Retta answered quickly. [I am coming into my first Phase and they can smell it on me.]

Tobia looked at Retta. [Your first Phase?] Tobia asked her calmly. [What does this mean Retta?]

[Mother!] Mari exclaimed. [Please!]

Retta hid her smile. [It is alright Mari.] She spoke evenly. [I am not ashamed of what I am. Every female wolf goes through it Lady Tobia. A time of instinctual fertility I guess you could say. When the female hormones to mate are almost too powerful to resist. During this time, females put off increased pheromones in their scent to entice males. This is my first Phase and the first is always the strongest. Lycavorians in the Union have evolved and learn to harness their passions during these times. It is apparent that these wolves have not.]

[They are acting on instinct when they smell Retta and I mother.] Marti told her. [Deion told me since I am newly turned, it is almost like a First Phase for someone born as a wolf like Retta. But they also smell Deion on me, in my blood, and it confuses them.]

[Why?] Tobia asked.

[Because from what I can smell, none of these fools have an aura even remotely close to what my father and brothers project. Or many of the Alphas in the Union for that matter.] Retta answered. [I swear on the gods, if one of them pulses me I will rip his eye balls from his skull and hand them to him!]

[You will do no such thing young lady!] Anja's voice joined the conversation and all of them turned to see Anja open her jade green eyes and slowly sit up on the couch.

[Mother!] Retta exclaimed reaching for her as Anja groaned softly.

[I'll live.] Anja told her as she grimaced slightly. [A little sore for sure, but I am ok.]

[Medwaw, he was hitting you so hard.] Retta protested. [He...]

Anja took Retta's hand in her own and squeezed. [I'm ok, baby girl.] Anja spoke looking at her daughter with a half smile. She was very tender in many spots and she knew that if she still felt this way, then the bruising would be extreme. [Your father has always said I have a hard head. I guess this just proves that.]

Retta's eyes narrowed at this comment from her mother. [That is not what father meant and you know it.] She spoke.

Anja grinned gently. [I know. The bruises Retta? Did you remove them all?]

Retta nodded her head knowing what her mother was asking and why. [I used a slow acting pulse. They will be gone completely in another few hours.]

Anja nodded slowly. [Good. If your father saw them...?] Anja shuddered ever so gently. [I don't want to think of what he would do.]

[He already knows what was done to you mother.] Retta said. [I could sense his rage even in the brief time he touched us.]

Anja nodded once more. [I know... but your mothers and I can control and urge him enough to not lay waste to everyone.] She answered as she let her eyes drift around the interior of the ship. [They have made no attempt to communicate with you?] She asked.

[No.] Retta answered.

[This is not exactly how we expected this to go Anja.] Tobia spoke now. [Them shooting all of those people. Calyb and Aricia's brother.]

[I know.] Anja said sadly looking around the interior slowly. [Where are the others?]

[Two are in the cockpit with Endith and Tina Lady Anja.] Mari answered instantly. [Ever since we lifted off. The last two are in the rear at the dragon pens.]

[Where is that big tukannupae that used me as a punching bag?] Anja asked lifting her hand and rubbing her neck.

[He was not the one in charge.] Tobia added quickly.

[What?] Anja looked at her.

Tobia shook her head. [The male who is apparently in charge threw him out the back of the ship in rage as we were leaving. The ramp was still open and he just tossed him out the back in anger.]

[Anger?] Anja pressed.

[He was not happy about what the man had done mother.] Retta continued. [He... he also...]

[What?] Anja asked looking at Retta.

[When I broke free and injured the one holding me, and then I went to you, he shot the Alpha who attempted to shoot me in the back.] Retta answered. [They moved his body into the back with the one you killed.]

[I do not believe he expected his men to act in such a way.] Tobia commented. [I don't know how high up we were when he tossed him from the ship.]

Anja shook her head. [It won't matter.] Anja replied softly. [As soon as Martin, Andro or one of our family or the Durcunusaan smell my blood on him, he is a dead man. Tobia I am so sorry for getting you and Mari involved in this. We did not expect...]

Tobia shook her head quickly. [Murano, Mari and I agreed to this Anja.] She replied. [I may not be used to how things are done among your people, but there was no reason to believe it would be something like this. This is not your fault. This seemed like a feasible way to gather the Intelligence that we needed.]

[The one who is the leader was very angry Anja.] Mari spoke. [The big man who was hitting you, the leader was beating him just as badly and he was not holding back. That fool was saying something about his father and what he wanted and the leader was screaming back at him.]

Anja looked at her. [Really.]

[Mari is right mother.] Retta spoke. [I do not think he was aware of what this man was doing. They were not together. He showed up after that pig took you by surprise and began beating you. His actions were...]

Anja turned her head to her daughter. [Baby girl?] She spoke affectionately.

Retta met her eyes and Anja could see the struggle going on within her because of the wolf blood in her veins. Every Leonidas daughter had experienced it so far. Their father's blood was so pure that it actually enhanced the sensations from the normal Coming of Age Fever for Lycavorian and turned females to the point of barely being able to control it. For some reason it was more pronounced in Eliani and Retta than Normya or Carina or Zarah, and Anja suspected it had something to do with the Hadarian blood in their veins. Retta's Coming of Age Fever was also arriving sooner than they had expected because the Alphas in this ship were radiating their auras without regard and Retta was feeling it against her Etheric shields.

[Retta?] Anja asked her again.

Retta took a deep breath and nodded her head. [I am holding it back mother.] She spoke. [I will be fine. The one...] She looked at her mother. [The Alpha who is the leader... his aura is so strong medwaw. So pure.] Retta shook her head to clear her thoughts. [His actions were enraged. He had no idea his men were going to attack us as they did.]

Anja sensed there was more to it than just that and she stared at her daughter for a long moment. That was how long it took for her to see through her daughter's brave façade and take note of how much this Alpha was affecting her. Anja knew from experience there were very few Alpha males alive who had enough purity of blood to affect a Leonidas daughter even during their Phase, and those like Anja herself, For'mya, Dysea, Sadi, Ne'Veha or any female mated to a Leonidas were practically immune to all but the most powerful of auras once they had been claimed by a Leonidas. This Alpha obviously was having an effect on her daughter and it was telling, which meant this young Alpha was very powerful and his blood was very pure. Anja could sense that these Lycavorians did not maintain control of their male auras to the extent of males within the Union. This could only mean that they were so used to using them they didn't really take notice, or it was common for them to use their auras as Chetak and his ilk did when it came to the females. Or a combination of both. Whatever the reason, it did not sit well with Anja that Retta was experiencing this.

Retta squeezed her mother's hands tightly as if sensing what was going through her mind. [I will manage mother.] She spoke confidently. [Eli, Nara, Sadi and Eirene gave me pointers to help contain it. I can do this.]

Anja nodded her head. [I have no doubts. Draw from me if you need too.]

Retta nodded her head. [When do you think father will try to...] Retta saw her mother's jade green eyes grow slightly wider and then fill with unabashed love and desire. Seconds later she felt it as well as her father's staggering aura rushed through the Etheric Realm and engulfed them both. The connection was overwhelmingly powerful and Retta realized all of her siblings and Murano were also included causing a bubble of Etheric power that was unmatched in the history of the Lycavorian or Pralor people.

[Lover!] Anja gasped out wistfully.

[Murano!] Tobia gasped as well now as she felt Murano's Etheric resonance reach for her. Tobia felt Deion reaching for her daughter and his wife and mate and for a long moment it felt as if everything was just as it was supposed to be. Retta smiled to herself as she felt first her brother Androcles reach for her and then the rest of her siblings to include her twin Calyb who had joined the Etheric communication from Discovery Base.

[Calyb!] Retta almost cried out in joy.

[I am ok arande.] Calyb spoke to his twin. Retta knew she could never hide anything from her twin and it was no surprise when Calyb instantly detected her increased physical and emotional state. [Retta?] He questioned.

[I am fine fervon. You are the one who they shot!] Retta reassured him.

[Use what we showed you sister.] Eliani now commented for she could feel Retta's anxiousness and the why of it.

[I already am.] Retta replied to her older sister.

[Jonia hara?] Retta heard Andro's deep soothing voice in her mind and even as the Etheric resonances of her siblings surrounded her, she felt Andro reach even further and caress her senses in a way only an older brother could, putting her completely and utterly at ease. [You remember who you are and where you come from sister.] Andro told her. [And the blood that flows in your veins.]

Retta felt her chest swell with love and purpose and she nodded. [I will.]

[Red, what is your status?] Martin asked her.

[They have us in the main portion of the cabin with the female Betas from Ventori.] Anja answered immediately. [I only just woke up Lover, but Tobia, Mari and Retta say they do not appear very well organized, like they are just winging it. Two men with Endy and Tina in the cockpit.]

[Anja... are you ok?] Martin spoke now directly to her and everyone knew it.

Retta saw her mother smile and nod her head as his resonance once more swept through her. [I'm a little sore Lover, but I am good to go. It was my fault Martin. When I saw Calyb get hit I just lost it.]

[Well... we did not think they would do something so utterly stupid mother, so the blame is not yours. It is ours.] Andro spoke now. [Father and I should have seen it coming.]

[And I will tell you what we always tell your father when he wants to take the blame for everything Keto.] Anja replied instantly. [Neither of you is infallible Androcles and we all make mistakes. This is not something that you or your father can claim ownership of, this was something that we all missed.]

[Your mother is correct Androcles.] Tobia spoke now. [We all agreed to this plan and we all knew the risks. The loss of life was unnecessary and brutal and they knew it, and this gives us some insight as to at least a portion of their people. It will need to be addressed at another time for it cannot go unanswered. Right now however, right now we are accomplishing what we wanted to do in the first place.]

Tobia heard Andro chuckle in the connection. [Lady Tobia, you have spent too much time around my mothers. You sound just like them.] He told her.

Tobia beamed at this response. [Thank you Androcles.]

[Anja... can we assume that your additional security is uncompromised?] Martin asked.

Anja nodded her head. [Yes.] She answered now. [They would have brought them out by now if they had found them.]

[Any idea on where you are going?] Martin asked.

[The tracker Endy installed doesn't work?] Anja asked in return.

[It's working fine, I just wondered if you had an idea of where they might be taking you. They left their ship in orbit with over a hundred personnel onboard. That doesn't include the ones still on the surface.] Martin spoke. [It seems like there are two agendas moving here, and they are going in opposite directions if what you told me is true.]

[Alvva... I could smell no hostility towards us from this man who is the leader or the other one with him. They both entered the ship after events had already taken place and were very angered.] Retta spoke.

[I agree with Retta, Martin.] Mari spoke for the first time now. [They were not prepared for what they discovered and were enraged beyond normal. He stopped the man from striking Anja further and was screaming at him about killing their own people. Then he tossed him out of the back of the ship as we were taking off. He also killed one that was going to assault Retta when she injured him.]

This information caused Martin to become silent for a long moment. Almost too long to suit Anja and she fidgeted on the couch. [What are you thinking Lover?] She asked him finally. Retta watched her mother's eyes looked beyond her and she turned her head as the two Alphas they had seen move in to the Pen area of the STRIKER came from the back and began moving directly for them. [Martin... we need to go.] Anja spoke quickly.

[Red wait!!] Martin began to speak but he could not stop the Etheric transmission from collapsing in upon itself as Anja Leonidas severed the connection, Retta, Tobia and Mari quickly following suit as the two Alphas stopped in front of the knee high table across from them.

Lazar stood there and looked at them for a long moment and he suddenly realized that the young woman with the reddish brown hair was the daughter of the woman with the black hair who sat beside her. He had not detected the similarities in their scents until just now. There was no mistaking the connection between the two red haired women on his left, that was just not possible. The scent was there and the physical traits were so close that there could be no other realization.

Lazar settled his eyes on the older female. Her scent told him that she was at least two hundred years older than him, perhaps slightly older. Her honey scent was saturated with the mint scent of the Alpha who had obviously turned her and that mint scent was more powerful than even his father who was the largest and strongest of the Alphas on Jetania. He had never smelled the scent of an Alpha so embedded in the blood of a female as it radiated from this one. The armor she wore conformed to her petite body like a second skin and Lazar took notice of the large breasts, tightly muscled legs and near perfect waist and ass. Her face was flawless; though faint bruising could still be seen from the beating Sibot had given to her. His blows should have fractured the bones in her face and jaw but only succeeded in cutting her skin and lips. Lazar realized this may have had a part in why he was hitting her so hard. It did not appear to him that he was hurting her and stupid fool that he was, Sibot never stopped to consider why her scent was so much more powerful than any other Alpha female they had ever encountered. Her full lips, stunning jade green eyes and Persian red hair were something that he had never seen on a female before and combined with her obviously deeply tanned skin, this made her one of the most incredibly beautiful woman he had ever seen next to his own mother. This Alpha female actually rivaled most of the Mountain Pack females in that regard, including his mother.

Lazar kept his composure as his eyes turned to the younger female and he tried to breathe evenly as close as he was to her. He was barely able to fight down the fire that burned in his blood being so close to her and the urge to take this exquisite young female Alpha and claim her as his mate was very nearly overwhelming. Her hair was nearly the same color as her mother, but her eyes were a darker green. As with her mother, the armor she wore conformed to her lithe body with every contour, and there were many of those. Her breasts were not as large as her mother's by any means, but they appeared high and quite firm under the armor. She had high cheekbones and sensuous lips that quivered slightly at the corners as she gazed at him with those angry dark green eyes. Her lush hair was long, like her mother, and tied into a single pony tail that cascaded over one shoulder. Staring at those eyes almost made Lazar lose himself in their magnetism, as the flecks of yellow gold flickered among the dark green background.

Lazar pulled his eyes away quickly when he felt Rhaos move up beside him and he centered them back on Anja. He held up the bloody R4 Hybrid Fighting knife that Anja had carried for decades and he slowly lowered it to the knee high table in front of them. He also took note that not one of the four women even flinched when he lifted the knife to show them and then set it on the table. These women were not afraid of him or Rhaos, that much was very obvious.

Lazar held his finger on the knife for a moment before standing back up. “You killed one of my men with this knife.” He told Anja meeting her eyes. “I want to know how you did this, how your daughter healed you so quickly, who you people are and where you come from.”

“That is an awful lot of demands from a man who kidnapped me and my friends, killed our people, stole my ship and is now holding us hostage.” Anja responded to him. “You must think pretty highly of yourself for killing helpless men and women.”

Lazar seethed as he looked at her. “I did not give those orders!” He snarled angrily. “He disobeyed my orders and went off on his own!”

Anja shook her head quickly. “If he was your crewman, then you own his actions!” Anja popped right back at him, the pilot’s words from the cockpit ringing in Lazar’s head. She had said almost the exact same thing. “You can’t just dismiss them as if they didn’t happen! He shot my son and his uncle as if they were nothing more than animals! He shot those people, our people as if they were just animals!”

“He was not following our orders woman!” Rhaos jumped in now stepping forward slightly and pointing his finger at Anja. “And you would do well to watch your tone with us. You will answer our questions!”

Anja looked at him as she came to her feet. “You and your partner here don’t frighten us Mister Big Bad Alpha Lycavorian!” Anja quipped at Rhaos. “For pen arne sey un neval forn sibfla forn ronnus! All of you are just walking around dead men for what you have done! You just don’t know it yet!” (And I don’t have to tell you shit you bastard)

Lazar’s eyes opened wide at her obvious fluency in their language. The dialect was one he had heard before, but the meaning of the words was the same no matter the dialect used by the different packs. This female’s dialect was one he had heard used only three times in his entire lifetime of three hundred plus years, all by Mountain Pack Elders who had made the trip from Ventori all those millennia ago and to this day hated his grandfather for removing them. It was said to have come from the homeworld of the Lycavorian people. A homeworld that most now thought was nothing more than a myth as he had told Rhaos. How could this tiny female know that dialect?

Rhaos lifted his finger again to point it at her and Anja brazenly slapped his hand away watching as Rhaos’s eyes grew wide in stunned shock. “You point that finger at me one more time boy and I will give you your hand back minus one digit.” Anja snarled viciously, this time her jade green eyes changing to that of the wolf within her and her dual wolf fangs exploding from her gums to become fully exposed. “And you can stop pulsing me with that pitiful little aura you got. The wolf who claimed me and made me his wife and mate smells way better than you ever will, and he has got far more than you ever will hanging between his legs. Your aura doesn’t even come close little boy.”

Lazar glanced quickly at where Retta stood and he saw those same savage looking dual fangs exposed on her and the other younger female, as well as those large dark green eyes now heavily filled with yellow gold flecks of color.

“Upaee!” Rhaos gasped as he stepped forward quickly, his anger rising to the forefront. Rhaos was an emotional wolf yes, but he was not one that would strike a female for any reason. His Mountain Pack mother and father would see his hide tanned for taking part in something like that. Rhaos had only thought to make the much smaller female Alpha back down in fear and instead did the complete opposite.

Lazar reached out and put his hand on Rhaos keeping him from continuing. “Enough Rhaos!” He spoke. “You will no more strike this female than I would. Our mothers taught us differently.” Lazar turned his eyes on Anja. “He was under my command, you are correct. And I am responsible for his actions, whether I ordered them or not.” He spoke trying a different tact with this female. One that he used when speaking with his mother who was Matriarch of the Mountain Packs and held in the highest regard by all wolves of the Mountain Packs. Even the males. He did not know who this female half breed was, but she was obviously someone of great importance given her mannerisms and the treatment of her by the others, and her female wolf aura surpassed any Alpha females he associated with by a very wide margin. Only his mother and Rylin came close to this female and they were purebloods.

“That man, Sibot, he was an agent for my father.” Lazar spoke. “King Osrod Aspion.” Lazar thought perhaps the mention of his father and title would somehow impress these females but he couldn’t have been more wrong as attested to by Anja’s next comment.

“Eana terit medwan coi a revik nubous amlian.” Anja snarled instantly. (Then your father is a king fucking idiot)

“He is King of the Coalition of Lycavorian States!” Rhaos snapped still smarting from the challenge to his manhood that this female had laid down on him.

Anja looked at him and rolled her wolf eyes. “You can call him whatever you want but he is still a fucking idiot.” Anja barked. “To try and kidnap people from a force that is obviously far more technologically advanced than yourself and then kill men and women under their protection? I don’t know what Academy of Military Tactics you went to, but where we come from that is called just plain nubous piegn.”

Lazar looked at Anja now. “What... what will happen to my ship and crew?” He asked. “What will your people do to them?”

Anja Leonidas met his eyes. She had always considered herself a good judge of character and something in his scent and his Etheric resonance told her that this young man was very honorable and had a good heart. He was trying to reach out to her, communicate with her and try to make her see he did not have anything to do with what Sibot did. Anja had already made that determination; however, she was not going to be tricked or manipulated in a direction she did not want to go. Anja also detected something from this tall, young wolf that made her worry as well. He was very tall, easily matching Androcles in height and he was powerfully built, but his Etheric resonance was active and not used. Anja doubted he even knew what he could do if he applied himself. The problem she saw was that his male aura, nearly on a par with Jomann from what she could sense, was calling out for Retta in a way he had never experienced before and it was confusing him. He was holding his aura back by force of will, but he obviously did not understand why her daughter affected him so.

“If they... if they do not resist they will be taken in to custody and held until such time as contact is made with your government for their release.” Anja finally answered him.

“And if they resist?” Lazar pressed her.

“Then they will die.” Anja stated flatly. “Especially after what you have done. Now if you turn this ship around and take us back I’m sure we could figure something out.”

Lazar shook his head even as Rhaos laughed contemptuously. “Go back?” He gasped.

“We cannot go back.” Lazar spoke. “Not now.”

Anja shrugged her shoulders. “Then whatever happens will happen. They live and die on their own now.”

“That does not seem to bother you very much.” Rhaos spoke almost defensively.

Anja turned to look at him, her jade green wolf eyes flashing in anger. “You midaeus come to Ventori, one of your men shoots my son and one of my dearest friends in the back, your other toy soldiers here kill over a dozen men, women and children and then you kidnap the rest of us! You really expect me to give a fuck about your people?”

Rhaos inhaled sharply, his anger growing even more and Lazar touched his arm in order to calm him. “You try my patience woman!” Rhaos barked.

Anja grinned at him, baring her dual wolf fangs once more. “What are you going to do boy?” She snapped. “You going to grab me and try to hurt me like you grabbed Mari and yanked on her hair until it caused her pain? You caused her pain fool, and when my son Deion finds you, he will make certain you pay for doing that!”

“I did not want to do that!” Rhaos hissed. “We needed your pilots to do what we told them! They forced me to act in such a manner!”

Anja shook her head. “That might be ok in your world pal, but it’s not ok in our world.” She told him harshly. “You inflicted pain on the wife and mate of a Spartan. That does not go unanswered. Ever.”

“I do not fear your son!” Rhaos spat. “No half breed could defeat me!”

Anja laughed. “Deion Leonidas is no half breed fool.” She told him causing Lazar’s eyes to cut sharply to where she stood and go wide. “He is a pureblood Alpha and he will wipe the floor with your ass but you are just too stupid to know it!”

“You try my patience woman!” Rhaos barked.

“And you don’t scare me worth a damn!” Anja retorted.

Rhaos, for all of his upbringing and calm, he could no longer tolerate it and with a growl of anger he lifted his hand to strike Anja. Lazar’s eyes went wide and he reached for his friend’s arm, but was far too slow.

Events may have shattered their initial plan but Anja Leonidas was determined to get the upper hand back. Anja moved far more quickly than Rhaos would have thought she could and she batted his arm aside with her right hand like swatting a fly. Stiffened fingers of her left hand drove forward like the thrust of a knife and struck Rhaos squarely in the throat with enough force to bring him up short and cause his eyes to bug out of his head. While he was staggering back, Anja's right hand snatched the R4 Fighting Knife from the table and then she snapped it forward in her fist. Rhaos' eyes grew even larger and he screamed in pain as Anja buried that knife in his shoulder. Rhaos began to fall and Anja leaped onto him to press her attack, riding his body to the deck.

“Niob!” Anja screamed out the word.

Lazar was too stunned to react quickly when the petite female attacked. He had never seen a female move with such precise military movements and training. He heard Rhaos scream in pain and this is what shocked him out of his surprise. As his own senses began to act, Lazar Aspion became the first to feel the wrath of Retta Leonidas.

This Alpha wolf was so very gorgeous, and he smelled more delicious than Retta had ever found in a wolf. His scent made her blood burn nearly out of control and only the teachings of her sisters and Andro allowed her to suppress her raging hormones and act. The take down was perfect, the movements almost perfectly in sync as Retta swept her leg forward and then back, hooking her ankle around the back of the much taller Lazar's leg even as her mother Anja was dropping onto Rhaos's chest. Retta brought her right hand across her body and hit Lazar square on the edge of his jaw with the heel of her palm in a perfectly timed Heel Strike. Lazar was unprepared for the force or the strength that the blow carried and it snapped his head around painfully even as he began to fall with Retta's body weight dropping on top of him. The air rushed from his lungs as he hit the deck with all one hundred and nine pounds of Retta's firm, lush body dropped on his chest. Retta nearly lost it right there, her beautiful green wolf eyes going wide when she felt the broad, hardness of his chest against her firm, medium sized breasts and then the bulge of his huge manhood pressed against her lower abdomen. With a supreme effort she reigned in her female hormones even though his scent was driving her mad and she lifted her hand, activating her healing power and she grabbed the space between his neck and shoulder.

“Pen bro! sorgur.” Retta spoke to him as Lazar's eyes grew wide in agony and he felt enormous pain lance through his upper body. Lazar's whole body went rigid as the dreadful pain moved outward from where she was touching him. It was so intense that he could not even lift his other hand to push her away. The muscles in his thick neck were bulging outward in misery, straining under the effects of his muscles wanting to rip through his skin. Retta released her grip on him as thin red and blue lines began to stretch outward from where her fingers had first touched him, the blood in his veins feeling like it was boiling inside his body. It was a pain unlike any Lazar had ever experienced and he was no stranger to pain. With the delightful scent of the half breed filling his senses while she perched on his chest and lower abdomen, Lazar Aspion groaned loudly in pain.

Retta Leonidas had turned her healing power into a weapon just as her mother had mastered and then shown her two daughters. Anja had passed this knowledge to Calyb and Duewa as well for right now they were the only ones with the necessary power and skill to reverse the healing properties of the radiation in their bodies and turn it in to a weapon. Retta had essentially turned Lazar's molecules inside out all around the area where she had touched him. While not permanent in any way at this stage, any of them could simply adjust what the radiation would do and they could kill easily. Right now all Retta wanted to do was incapacitate Lazar and she had succeeded brilliantly, though her heart was not really into it. Retta wanted this man, she wanted to feel his aura wrapped around her, wanted to feel him buried inside her lithe body and making her scream out his name. The pain she was causing him made her heart ache, but one thing echoed in her mind.

Blood before all else.

Anja Leonidas, petite and sinfully gorgeous as her beloved Martin had called her through the years, was anything but right now. Anja had taken Rhaos down with the same ease as Retta had taken Lazar down, and she had dropped all of her one hundred and three pounds on his chest. The air had rushed from his chest, unprepared for such an action and now that blade was buried in his shoulder and Anja held a fist full of his dark blond hair in her left hand. She was splayed across his body in what could be described by some as a sexual nature but the only wolf body or aura that affected Anja in any way now was Martin's. Her jade green eyes were fully changed and her dual wolf fangs were extended fully and it was the most frightening thing Rhaos had ever seen in his life and this is what froze him from trying to throw her off him.

That and the blade she had savagely yanked from his shoulder and was now pressed to his throat.

There were six others in the rear with Rhaos and Lazar and none of them were prepared for the attack that came when Anja shouted that one word. Lazar and Rhaos could only watch in the midst of their pain as the air and light in the ship shifted and shimmered in front of them and five figures appeared like vaes from the thin air. Zarah Leonidas, Lucia and Radem struck with brutal efficiency. Zarah and Lucia had been training every spare moment with Radem over the last weeks, absorbing all of the vast knowledge and skill that he was willing to bestow on them. Radem did so enthusiastically and to the very best of his ability for he had found a new niche in this life. Androcles had given him the opportunity to regain his honor and the honor of the Evolli people and Radem had taken it and never looked back. Three times he had been able to communicate with those of his family still alive on the Evolli homeworld and they spoke in hopeful terms for their future. Lycavorians, Elves, even Algolians were now openly working on the planet and helping the Evolli to restore their cities and their culture to what it had once been. This was something Radem could never repay Androcles for and so he had chosen to remain with Soul Slayers' father and train his daughter and one who he loved as a daughter. This was something Radem took great pride in. He afforded them no respite because of who Zarah and Lucia were, his vow to Martin Leonidas always foremost in his mind, but they were advancing far faster than Radem had ever expected and he was impressed with them.

The one thing that had been made clear before ever leaving Ventori, there was to be no killing.

That however, did not mean that Zarah Leonidas could not take out her anger on the fool in front of her for what had happened to her mother. Zarah jammed stiffened fingers into the Lycavorians' throat, just as Anja had done, causing him to gag horribly and drop his weapon as he reached for his throat with both hands unable to breath. Zarah Leonidas didn't pause and simply put all of her considerable combined wolf and vampire strength into the next blow which took him directly over his cheekbone. His cheekbone shattered, his legs buckled, his eyes rolled into the back of his head and he dropped to the deck like a limp noodle.

Lucia had released Radem's arm as the shadows she and Zarah had been holding fell away and she wrapped her arm around the neck of another Lycavorian and basically dropped to the deck right where she was. With her right arm supporting the rear of his neck so that it did not break, Lucia tightened her left arm around his throat and dropped straight down. This gave her the added pressure to effectively cut off the man's air flow and since he had no leverage to try and throw her off, he dropped into unconsciousness within twenty seconds. Radem waited until the shadows had fallen away from him completely and he brought the short pair of thick Evolli fighting sticks down into the Lycavorians' face with vicious power and superior agility. The blows landed before the man knew what was happening and cut both sides of his cheeks open to the bone. As he shifted his body to meet the attack, Radem brought both the sticks across the man's face with brutal power and he watched as his body went limp and he dropped to the deck beside his companions.

The second group of three were just a little further behind the first group and they were unlimbering their weapons when Tir'ut dropped the shadows away from him and Kalis and they both attacked without compassion.

Tir'ut used his superior size and massive strength and simply snatched two of the Lycavorians in his large hands by their throats and lifted them off the deck with his enormous Immortal strength. He blurred forward and then slammed them into the bulkhead with barely harnessed power. They had killed innocents and then stood around and did nothing as another of their kind nearly beat one who his precious Normya called mother to death. Tir'ut was not in the mood to play games with these fools and he would have happily done anything to get out of the cramped space behind the small pilot's quarters where he and Kalis had been hiding with Normya sandwiched between them.

For Kalis personally, it had been a request from Androcles that he had answered without even thinking. He had said yes before Andro had even finished asking him to do this honestly, as had Serale and now she and Normya were in the cockpit helping Tina and Endith to secure the two idiots with them. He was truly a Leonidas now Kalis knew, for they showed this to him and Serale nearly every day. Several couples on SPARTA'S WRATH had begun meeting him and Serale for breakfast in the Mess Lounge and they were beginning to build relationships across the massive ship. It was a sense of peace and purpose that Kalis felt now that he was among his true family and blood. For'mya and Anja most of all had been the ones to help him and Serale first and to know what they had done to his Tenna did not sit well with his wolf blood in the least. Kalis didn't hesitate or pause in his actions, much like Tir'ut. He was angry about what had happened but he knew that killing was not an option. He did however, much like his cousin Zarah, not have a problem inflicting as much pain as he could. As Tir'ut dropped the shadows from around their bodies he dropped to his knees and slid forward on the deck. His first punch was directly to the third man's groin and he howled in agony as Kalis' punch smashed into his testicles with no mercy. He dropped his weapon and reached for his groin leaving his upper body unprotected. Kalis ended his howling with a simple uppercut fueled by his Lycavorian and Kavalian strength. It was a blow that lifted the man completely off the deck in place and then dropped him back to the deck, out for the count.

Anja felt nothing but love for her pulsing from her family as Mari and Tobia moved quickly to secure the weapons the COLS troops had dropped. She snarled once more and stared evilly into Rhaos' eyes.

"Pen enar flana forn regovar niob for forn enar ter narte lae!" Anja growled viciously right into his face, her lips curled back in a savage expression and only a mere three inches from Rhaos' cheek. "Pen caoira tonvar terit nytas el flanalyng duan cafna brey forn ineir!" (I could kill you right now and you could not stop me. I should spill your guts for killing our people like you did.)

"Wait!" Lazar shouted in a herculean effort against the pain ravaging his senses and he held out his hand towards her, ignoring the horrible pain coursing through him from where Retta had touched him. "We...!"

Anja struck with the speed of a Rock Spider and she wrenched the blade from Rhaos' neck and stabbed the blade down into Lazar's palm, the blade striking deep and penetrating entirely through his whole hand before the tip of the blade hit the deck. Anja was pulling it out and placing it to Rhaos' throat before Lazar began to scream.

Retta chuckled from atop his chest even though she almost felt the pain he felt in her own body. "Oops!" She spoke. "Pen osdra un neval forn ter un sheos." (I forgot to tell you not to move.)

"You will be dead before they move." Anja growled into Rhaos' face now. "Your friend will be dead one second after that. And your souls will go to the pits of jorbhe for your actions in killing innocent Lycavorians. There were children among them!" Anja almost screamed.

"We were only there... we were only there to gather information!" Lazar hissed out the words as his blood continued to burn and spill onto the deck. "I am in command and Sibot's actions are my responsibility! I did not order him to do what he did! He was operating under different orders! Orders from my father that he did not tell me! You... you may be half breed but..."

Lazar was unprepared for the slap that Retta smashed across his face and this caused his cheek to hit the deck none to gently. His dark eyes came up and he glared at her through his added pain.

"Call my mother a half breed again and I will melt the skin from your face very painfully igord." Retta snarled at him now as she moved her fingers and the glow in her hand became slightly more powerful.

Anja's eyes never left Rhaos as she began speaking again. "We were tracking your ship the moment you entered the system fool boy." She snarled. "Did you think our son would not tell us about you and your pitiful ships and stealth abilities?" Rhaos looked at her, his eyes growing wider. "We planned for you to find my ship idiot! We wanted you to take us so that we could make our own discoveries about you, initiate contact with your government and then make peaceful overtures. Your actions have all but ruined that now. You killed men, women and children under the protection of the King of the Lycavorian Union. He will not be happy in the least and he will want blood for what your men did." Anja gripped the pommel of the R4 tighter and gave it a slight twist and push against the flesh of his neck causing Rhaos to hiss in pain. "Nothing to say now igord!" Anja growled.

"I would have... I would never had allowed him to do such a thing had I known what he was planning." Lazar rasped out the words. "My father has spies everywhere! He trusts no one! Sibot was one of those spies and he was acting under different orders! I would not order the killing of our own people even if they were Beta wolves! It is against everything my mother taught me as I was growing! Everything Rhaos' mother taught him!"

Anja cut her eyes to where Lazar was on the deck and he could see those jade green orbs almost glowing like those of her daughter's dark green ones. "So what was your plan big boy?" Anja snapped. "Hand us over to your father?"

"What?" Lazar barked. "No! I was going to take you... my mother is Matriarch to the Mountain Packs! She would have protected you!"

“If your father is King, wouldn’t that make your mother Queen?” Anja spat. “Do you think we are fools?”

Lazar shook his head quickly causing pain to lance through his shoulder and neck from where Retta had her hand on his shoulder now. “No!” He gasped. “They... my mother hates him! He tried to have her killed! And she is not... she is not Queen!”

Anja looked up when she saw Zarah touch her finger to her ear and then look at her. Zarah moved towards her and squatted near Rhaos’ head. “The two in the cockpit have been subdued mother.” She spoke. “The ship is ours once more.”

Anja nodded and looked down at Rhaos beneath her. Anja Leonidas was a fire brand and always had been. It was one of the reasons Martin and her fellow Queens loved her so dearly. She was also a superior soldier however, and many put her just below Aricia when it came to fighting skills. Anja Leonidas, though she would never admit it to anyone, was also one of the most compassionate and intelligent individuals alive. She pulled the R4 from Rhaos’ throat and dropped it to the lightweight shirt he was wearing. She sliced open the shirt where she had stabbed him and then brought her left hand forward and covered the very deep, and painful wound. Rhaos’ eyes grew wide as he saw her hand begin to glow white and he then felt the warmth surge through his shoulder and the pain was gone instantly. He glanced down to where her hand was and saw the soft, glowing white light over the wound and he could actually feel the flesh of his body knitting back together. Within seconds the wound was gone as if it had never been inflicted and he lifted his eyes to Anja’s face.

“How did you...?” He gasped. “What are you?”

Anja rose to her feet after wiping the blood from the R4 on his shirt. She looked over at Retta and nodded her head. Retta instantly reversed her power once more and poured forth a healing pulse into Lazar’s shoulder healing whatever damage she may have done and instantly the pain was gone. Lazar exhaled in massive relief and watched her with wide eyes as Retta sat up on his chest and held out her hand.

“Give me your hand.” She spoke.

Lazar hesitated after seeing and feeling what she could do and Retta rolled her eyes. “Atle a jonia.” She commented as she reached out and took his large hand in hers. Fighting to keep her raging hormones in check Retta held his hand on both sides and sent a healing pulse through his flesh, quickly knotting the flesh back together and healing completely any damage done to his hand. “My father and my brothers have experienced pain on a daily basis that is far more than what you just felt. Be lucky they are not here, for you would not be alive to experience anything if they were.” She told him playfully as she tossed his hand down on to his chest and leaned over close to his face seeing his eyes go wide. Retta couldn’t help herself and completely by instinct she inhaled deeply of his wild apples and cinnamon scent right next to his cheek. It was the most devastating scent she had ever smelled and Retta Leonidas nearly became wet at her center as it filtered through her senses and her body. (What a baby)

Thankfully for Retta, even though Lazar was just as confused and consumed with her honey and mint scent and what was raging through him because of it, Zarah and Lucia took note of what was going on and Zarah instantly acted to help her sister. She pulled Retta to her feet and away from him and gripped her hand as Lucia took her other hand and they moved close to her.

[Draw from Lucia and I sister.] Zarah told her in the shielded connection reaching up to caress her sister’s cheek.

[He is so... Zar he is so delicious and he smells so good!] Retta exclaimed. [Why does my blood call for him so? Why?]

[It is our instincts sister.] Zarah told her now. [Our father’s blood is so potent it will always seek the same in return.]

[Pull from Zarah and I Retta.] Lucia told her even as she and Zarah pressed closer to her. [Pull from us what you need. Zarah and I have found each other and only one man can affect us now. Take our peace and use it to help you control the storm of emotions within you.]

Retta didn’t hesitate and she closed her eyes and reached for her sister and Lucia and she found a wall of calm and serenity which she immediately let swallow her up. The effect was very telling and she suddenly became calm and very much in control once more.

Anja looked at Kalis as he stepped up to her while Tir’ut and Radem kept their weapons trained on the conscious COLS soldiers.

“Tenna?” Kalis asked with much concern in his voice for her. Anja smiled and reached out to squeeze his arm as she took several deep breaths and nodded.

“I am fine mandri.” Anja told him.

“What do we do now?” Kalis asked her.

Anja looked at Lazar on the floor. His eyes were focused on Retta and Anja could detect his heightened state of arousal and how his male aura was leaking outward. Whoever he was, his blood was very pure for she had only ever seen this sort of reaction for a female wolf from a pureblood of at least 180 or above in his PCC count. He was controlling it quite admirably Anja thought, but it was most definitely affecting him in a way he had never experienced before and he didn’t seem to understand it. This was not going to sit well with Androcles or Calyb or her other brothers for that matter Anja knew. And after what had taken place, Anja knew for certain that Martin would not be happy in the least.

“That is up to our friend here.” Anja spoke drawing Lazar’s attention to her. He rose to his feet slowly, obviously embarrassed that he had been taken down by a female half his size and strength and concerned for what he now saw arrayed against them. His friend Rhaos was no different and Anja needed to reach across that divide now. “I think it might be time to stop and get to know one another before we move forward.”

“Do we have a choice?” Rhaos asked evenly but Anja could detect the slight anger in his tone.

Anja nodded her head. “Yes.” She answered. “Choice number one, we sit and talk before we go any further. Which is what I think both our sides wanted to begin with until some asshole idiot did something stupid.” This statement was something Lazar was surprised by. This woman acted just as his mother would have acted. There were certain Lycavorians on Jetania who were famous among the different packs for being able to help others put aside differences and come to peaceful resolutions of problems even after decades of fighting. His mother had done this very thing with dozens of Mountain Packs and now this woman was reaching out in the same manner.

Lazar nodded his head. “Yes.”

“And choice number two?” Rhaos asked as he looked at Tir’ut and Kalis nervously. Both of them appeared ready to shoot him dead if he even sneezed inappropriately. The massive one was unlike any species he had ever seen, easily six and a half feet tall and broader than Rhaos’ own father. The smaller one was not fully wolf, but as with the half breed females, the wolf blood in him was far more powerful and he had been born the way he was. Not turned.

“Choice number two is I order my pilots to turn around and take us back to Ventori.” Anja told him as she replaced the R4 back in its hidden sheath at the small of her back. “There you will find my children waiting for you. If you are lucky enough to survive your encounter with them, and you won’t survive given what my son Androcles will do to you, then my mate will definitely kill all of you for what this Sibot did.” Anja looked at Lazar.

“Then... then you are a Queen?” Lazar gasped aloud. “But you are a half...” Lazar’s eyes quickly went to where Retta was staring at him with those incredible dark green orbs. Lazar looked away quickly and then back to Anja. “You are not fully wolf.”

Anja shrugged her shoulders. “I am one of six Queens and Martin Leonidas is King and he is not real forgiving when it comes to those who kill our people. Especially women and children.” Anja looked back to Rhaos. “It’s your choice. Make it now. I’m not the patient type.”

“I like choice one.” Lazar spoke quickly.

Rhaos nodded his head. “Definitely choice one.”

VENTORI

He groaned softly in pain even as he dragged himself another several meters along the tall grass. His legs were broken he was sure and probably several of his ribs since he was spitting up blood. Sibot cursed Lazar under his breath, never suspecting that he would have the courage to throw him from the ship as he did. The fall was nothing, perhaps a hundred meters, but he had landed awkwardly and both his legs broke instantly upon hitting the ground and as he rolled to the side, he came down across a large log which broke his at least two of his ribs. The pain was intense, more than anything he had felt in his life he concluded, but he could not let it affect him. He was on a hostile planet and his own kind was hunting him, no matter who they were. The only way to remain alive was to get as far away from the clearing as he could. With a herculean effort he fought down the pain and began to crawl away as quickly as he was able. He needed to find a place where he could shift and reset his bones so that they could heal.

He thought he had seen a ridge nearby that appeared to drop into a ravine with small caves. If he could reach one of those he might be able to avoid the patrols which would be filling this area quickly. He would get to this cave, shift to heal his wounds, rest for a day or two and then find a way of this planet. He did not care who he needed to kill in order to achieve that, all that drove him now was finding Lazar Aspion and killing him in the most painful way he could imagine.

King Aspion had suspected that Lazar was not fully loyal to him for some time. He spent far too much of his down time on Jetania with the Raney Mountain Pack and almost no time in the capital city seeking out females to mate with or drinks to consume. Juyno, the King's oldest son, hated Lazar. They were complete opposites, Juyno using his position to force others to give him what he wanted, especially the young females coming into Phase. Lazar showed no interest in the many females who frequented the capital city and the many Mating Clubs where many found their mates. The clubs were many, they were loud and boisterous, the young wolves, male and female going to them in order to seek partners. Most were saturated with the mating pheromones from both male and female wolves through the air circulating system, allowing both genders to be more free with their actions. It was not uncommon to see male and female wolves mating right on the many dance floors, their naked flesh slick with sweat and effort. Sibot had gone to enough of these clubs to know that Lazar never set foot in one even though many of the females would have done whatever he asked of them in order to gain his favor. He may have been Prince, but he was so very different than his brothers and sisters. And Sibot knew he had ulterior motives for almost everything he did. Osrod thought him to be another young wolf thinking with his cock and not his head but Sibot knew otherwise. Lazar was always up to something, though after two years on his ship he could not find anything to use against him. Lazar's senior officers were young wolves he had grown with, all of them from the different Mountain Packs, and even those wolves from the City and Plains Packs aboard the ship were completely loyal to Lazar.

These were the thoughts going through his head as he crested the shallow ridge and saw the ten-foot drop into the creek bed below. Sibot groaned in relief and took a deep breath to endure the pain as he pushed himself forward and down. He cried out in pain as he began to roll down the shallow embankment and this did not stop until he came to rest with his upper body in the running waters of the creek. Groaning in agony Sibot reached out and cupped a handful of water into his mouth, wetting his parched lips and enjoying the cool liquid sliding down his throat. He stuck his entire face into the creek and drank heavily, the cold water refreshing him and almost making the ache from his broken ribs disappear.

Sibot looked up quickly when he heard the splashing and found himself staring at the two pairs of armored legs and feet.

"Naltai medwaw nubouur!" The voice from behind him growled. (Hello mother fucker)

Sibot screamed as he felt the piercing pain stab down through his leg and into the ground. His legs may have been broken but he could still feel the pain as the shaft of something metallic in nature sank into the earth four inches, impaling his leg to the ground. Through his pain Sibot saw two more sets of armored legs and he lifted his head further to see four massive figures standing in a semi-circle in front of him. All of them wore a strange type of full body armor and helmets that hid the majority of their faces, leaving only thin slits where their eyes and mouths were. Sibot could see the fangs though and he could now smell the scents of three powerful Alphas and a Beta wolf who had an aura unlike any Beta wolf he had ever seen on Jetania.

"Forn dervi endina forn enar vorshy orlye corlay for nyek ineir forn?" The female voice spoke now and Sibot lifted his head further up and saw the long legs and feminine shape of the dark skinned female as she moved closer. The armor conformed to her very shapely figure, her white hair long and rich as it spilled over her shoulders. Her breasts were high and firm and her waist narrow. Her legs seemed to go on forever and they ended at the shape of her woman's mound. Sibot's eyes grew wider when he smelled her scent and the blood of the Alpha who had claimed this turned female. Then he saw the four-inch-high, pointed elven ears and his eyes grew wider still as Nayeca stopped walking towards him, two of the men parting a little for her to squat in front of his face. (You didn't think you could actually crawl away and hide did you?)

Nayeca tilted her head slightly and looked at the man, his face scratched up from his trek through the tall grass and rough terrain. She watched the man's dark eyes fill with confusion as Nayeca allowed the change to come over her and her wolf fangs extended fully and her amber colored eyes were encircled by a thick black ring.

"I am Star Colonel Nayeca Simpson." Nayeca began to speak once more. "Drow wife and mate to General/Colonel Daniel Simpson. Mard Fervon to the King." Nayeca lifted her hand and motioned to the four men standing around her. "These men you see around you; they are the Durcunusaan, the Wolves of the Blood. Guardians of the Royal Family. Unfortunately for you, they are not in a particularly good mood today. They would know the scent of their Queen's blood anywhere, and they could track it across the face of this very planet if need be. They smell her blood on you igord. You must be the nubous amlian who thought he could lay his hands upon one of our Queens and live to tell of it."

Sibot screamed once more in sheer agony as the Durcunusaan who had impaled his leg grabbed the Nehtes and twisted the shaft viciously.

"We have your ship in orbit." Nayeca continued. "We have captured those who were here on the surface as well."

"I will... I will tell you nothing!" Sibot screamed out the words.

Sibot's head rocked back from the trip hammer like blow that Nayeca hit him with. A heel strike with all of her combined wolf and elven power and Sibot's nose crumbled and broke, blood spurting from the wound as his nose cartilage burst from below the skin.

"You will sing like a bird for me." Nayeca growled as she rose to her feet. "And it will be neither painless nor short I promise you!" Nayeca nodded her head and the Durcunusaan on her right drove his armored fist down into Sibot's head with devastating power, the blow knocking Sibot into blackness. "Call for a STRIKER Rstev. Priority extraction. Inform Daniel we have the man who assaulted Anja." Nayeca spoke turning to look at the Durcunusaan to her left.

"Lady Nayeca." The man bowed his head and lifted his hand to tap his helmet COM.

Nayeca looked at the others. "Two of you drag his stinking carcass to the clearing we passed a hundred meters back. Do try to not get any of his blood on your armor. Once there, stabilize him so that he does not die, then have one of our Hadarian medics heal his legs. They appear to be broken. Martin will want to speak with him."

One of the Durcunusaan grunted. "I doubt speaking is on the King's agenda." He said. "Breaking his legs again is more like it."

"None of this is the Durcunusaan's fault and I want you to make sure all of them know it." Nayeca spoke once more. "Martin and Andro hold only themselves to blame for this. They should have informed you of what they had planned and we could have kept this from ever happening. They know this."

The Durcunusaan looked at her and Nayeca saw one of them grin under his helmet. "What?" She asked.

"We know of the King's penchant for risks Lady Nayeca." The Durcunusaan spoke in reply. "Queen Anja as well. We cannot prepare for everything. Our officers may be rezza that the King and Androcles left them out of the loop, but we know different."

"What do you know?" Nayeca asked.

"Whoever these igords are, once Queen Anja unleashes her temper and her tongue on them, they will be begging us to take her back. Who in their right mind would want a ackny sibfla malda female wolf in their midst. Especially one as skilled as Queen Anja." The man spoke and Nayeca heard the other Durcunusaan chuckle softly in agreement. (Bat shit crazy)

Nayeca laughed softly and nodded her head feeling the anxiousness and anger over what happen bleeding away slowly. "Yes, they will." She agreed. "Yes, they will."

VENTORI

DISCOVERY BASE

“...Told you what they were capable of!” Dynina shouted as she paced back and forth in the Command Center obviously very angry. “Why did you not listen?! Perlae and Ishma told you who they were and what they were capable of! You ignored our many warnings and acted piegnos!”

Gorgo, Dasha and Jezima were standing behind her as Dynina ranted at Martin, none of them wishing to interfere for they did feel the same way. However, Gorgo knew her son well and Dasha knew the man who worshiped her daughter well, and both of them knew Martin did nothing without a carefully thought out plan. Martin, Androcles, Murano and Daniel were at the main chart table going over the reports that were coming in and seemingly not listening to her which only enraged Dynina more. Gorgo saw it coming first but she was unable to stop Dynina from reaching out and finally grabbing Martin’s thick arm.

“You are not listening to me!” Dynina barked once more as she yanked his arm. “You need to listen...”

Martin Leonidas was a patient man and he could tolerate quite a bit, but given everything that had happened up until now, he was at the end of that patience. He whirled around, his eyes changing and his dual fangs exploding from his gums and he growled savagely and snapped his jaws together. This action caused Dynina’s eyes to go wide and she staggered back in fear at the look in those beautiful yellow gold wolf eyes.

“Enough staania!” He bellowed.

Dynina was made of stern material however, over forty thousand years of experience and loss fueling her desires. She stepped closer to him now, her own dual fangs extending and her eyes changing to that of the Matriarch wolf within her. In nearly thirty thousand years, no one had barked at her in anger as Martin just had. Dynina was unprepared for it but she did not back down in the least. No one moved to interfere, for no one wanted to come between them.

“Do not bark at me like some handmaiden Martin Leonidas!” Dynina snarled at him. “I am...”

“I know who you are!” Martin growled stepping closer to her. Dynina looked into those eyes and for a tiny fraction of a second she could almost feel the power within him, coursing through him, and it was terrifying to behold. “You are my staania, and I love you, but I am King!” Martin shouted at her. “I will decide what we will do and not do with my Queens at my side!”

“I have told you everything you need to know about the Coalition!” Dynina snapped right back. “You chose to ignore it and now look at what has happened! You should have listened to me!”

“I did listen to you!” Martin growled once more, his eyes never leaving her gaze. “And I decided to gather more information! They are Lycavorian staania! I will not just dismiss them out of hand!”

“They are not like us!” Dynina barked. “They are cruel and savage! They conquer others! Osrod rules out of fear and his lust for power! And he is always seeking more power, just as his father and his grandfather did! You dismissed what we told you and now look at what it has caused!”

“I dismissed nothing!” Martin shouted. “I cannot good make decisions based on one or two opinions! Opinions that are tainted by events that occurred in the past!”

Dynina’s eyes grew wide and she looked at him. “Tainted!” She gasped. “How dare you! What happened to me has nothing to do with this!”

“Doesn’t it?” Martin hissed. “What happened to you, as vile and horrific as it was, it has shaped your view of these Lycavorians for centuries now! You see nothing else staania! You feel nothing else! I cannot do that staania.”

“You do not believe me?” Dynina gasped in shock.

Martin shook his head. “That is not what I said and you know it.” He spoke a tad more calmly now. “I am King. Aricia, Anja, For’mya, they are three of my Queens. We will decide which direction to pursue and we will do so with all of the intelligence that we can possibly gather! In whatever manner we can gather it! I will not simply give up on our people based on one or two individual opinions formed millennia ago. I cannot do that. They are my people staania.”

“They are not your people!” Dynina barked angrily. “They are savages who have never evolved past what we once were on Lycavore! They do not deserve what you give them Martin Leonidas!”

Martin stared at her for a long moment and then nodded his head. “Maybe not. But I will give them that opportunity.”

“Why?” Dynina barked. “After all I have told you about them? Why?”

“Because they are my people.” Martin said softly. “The day that I stop believing in my people is the day that I will take my Queens and I will leave all of this King shit behind forever. I never fucking wanted it in the first place.”

“Destiny is...” Dynina began to speak.

“Destiny!” Martin barked angrily now as he glared at her. “Nubou Aldom! You think I am doing this because it’s supposedly my destiny? I don’t give a rat fuck about destiny!”

Dynina looked at him with wide eyes, shocked at his words. “But... if you are not... if you are not here because of this, then why are you here?”

Martin stepped closer to her. “I came out here looking for my past.” Martin spoke softly. “I wanted to discover my history. Our people’s history. I wanted to discover everything I could about the people I have only seen in my dreams, waking or otherwise. Grandfather Sumar most of all.” Everyone saw Jezima bring her hands to her face as her eyes flooded with tears at his words, Gorgo reaching for her as did Dasha. “What I am doing right now, I am doing because it is the right thing to do! It’s the right thing to do staania, and you know it is in your heart. Pen gur ter hipe aur bara oia aur cafna covi. Covi. Gur forn?” (I will not turn my back on my people ever. Ever. Will you?)

Dynina stared at him for a long moment wrestling with her inner emotions but found she could not deny what he was saying. The call of the wolf blood within her was just too strong to ignore. She finally shook her head slowly. “Joa.” She answered.

Martin’s fangs and wolf eyes returned to normal then and he nodded his head before pulling Dynina into his arms and hugging her tightly. Dynina sighed heavily and returned the embrace, wrapping her arms around his waist and relishing in the sensations of family and love that engulfed her.

Dynina drew her head back but did not release him as she looked into his eyes. “What now?” She asked. “We must go after her. She is your wife and mate Martin.”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes, she is.” He answered. “You don’t honestly believe that I would send one of those who holds my heart and soul in their hands on a mission like this without support do you?”

“I would never have believed you would do such a thing to begin with.” Dynina told him. “So obviously I do not know what you would do.”

Martin grinned. “Predictable is boring.” He told her.

“Carians I hate when he says that.” Gorgo spoke openly now, rolling her eyes in disgust and drawing soft laughter from those in the room.

“What of those who were taken from us today?” Dynina asked. “This act will cannot go unpunished Martin.”

Martin nodded his head. “And it won’t.” He told her. “Pen marvan forn.”

“What is this support for Anja that you speak of aur keto?” Gorgo asked now.

Martin glanced back at Androcles and saw him smiling back at his father because of the question. He turned back to his mother. “One very large, half Immortal half vampire wrecking machine; one large, half Kavalian half Lycavorian who worships his Tenna Anja; a pair of young, shadow ladies who positively hate violence, and one Evolli assassin who knows more ways to kill someone than I do.”

“What mother’s temper does not do, Radem, Kalis and the others will finish.” Androcles stated with that smile. “Tenna Endith has already sent the signal that they have retaken the ship staania.”

“Wait!” Dynina said. “Retaken the ship!? The reports... they said almost a dozen COLS soldiers got on the ship before it took off.” She said.

Martin chuckled. “Against my little Firecracker...” Martin said with a smile. “Sibfla, they should have brought more. Trust me, you don’t want to be in the same zip code when Anja gets wound up.”

Danny shook his head. “Nope. No way.” He chimed in. “Not if you got half a brain and like your nor where they are and still able to function.”

“Daniel Simpson!” Dasha blurted out.

“Oops!” Danny said. “Sorry.”

All of them turned when the door to the Command Center opened and Archer stepped into the large room. Martin turned to face him but kept one arm around Dynina holding her close.

“Archer?” Martin asked.

Archer met Martin's eyes as he moved a little closer. "Milord... a STRIKER is returning with Colonel Nayeca and her Durcunusaan detachment. They found the one who was thrown from the ship as it was taking off." Archer moved closer still. "He is the one responsible for beating Queen Anja Milord. Her blood was still on his knuckles. He is also the one responsible for shooting Atropos and Prince Calyb and the one who ordered shooting the civilians. Colonel Nayeca already confirmed this with the survivors at the clearing."

Everyone in the Command Center fell silent as they looked at Martin Leonidas. His smile had disappeared and his dark eyes had narrowed slightly. He didn't take his eyes off Archer but his words were directed at his grandmother.

"Andro... find Nalmos and those Justices who have arrived from the Tasmor homeworld. Bring them to the south pad. And bring the one Sadi captured as well." Martin spoke. "You said this act cannot go unpunished staania." He continued as she looked up into his face. "It starts now." He said coldly and then he began walking out of the Command Center.

CHAPTER SIXTY-FOUR

SPARTAN ONE

.5 LYS FROM JETANIA

Lazar watched from the couch that he and Rhaos sat on as Anja and Retta made sure the four Beta females who had been on the ship were comfortable and calm. He had watched them both use their healing abilities once more and though he wouldn't understand what they were doing until later, he could see the soft white glow of their hands as they ran their hands over their bodies while whispering to them all of the time. The same pair of hands that had caused him such intense pain were now being used to heal. It was unlike anything that Lazar had ever seen.

The two of them put off a soothing and calm veneer that radiated confidence and warmth. Lazar glanced quickly into the rear of the ship and could see his men within the cargo pen that held the two bodies, a powerful force field of red energy keeping them inside the pen. While they had plenty of room to move around, most chose to just sit on the floor away from where the bodies lay and stare through the field at the two large men who were guarding them. Several of them were injured after the severe beatings they had received, but neither Anja nor Retta had made any attempt to heal them as they had Rhaos and himself. Given what they taken part in, Lazar doubted he would have acted any differently than this woman. Neither he nor Rhaos would have ever believed anyone who told them they had seen a species that could move so fast as to be nothing more than a blur of vision, yet they had witnessed it themselves and they could not help but believe. How they had not detected these others by their scents was something that Lazar had been trying to determine but was at a loss to explain.

Lazar cut his eyes when he saw the black haired female approach the one who had called Anja mother. He had heard her called Zarah by the woman beside her now. Lazar didn't know what other species she was but she was exquisite in her beauty and her scent was filled with the same blood that the one called Retta had. What he could tell was that the wolf blood in her, like it was within Retta, was incredibly pure and so very potent. They were sisters, he could tell that from their scent, but Lazar's nose could also detect an orange clove like scent coming from the front of the ship with a similar hint of the very same blood within Retta and this other female. Another sister if his nose was accurate. The male wolf in the back had the same hint of blood but it was also different somehow. A close relation perhaps, not that it mattered really, for while Lazar and Rhaos were large and powerful Alpha wolves, the half breed in the rear and the other hulking species with him, they were not ones that Lazar wanted to confront. His senses told him those two men were dangerous in so many ways that he could not understand, along with the black haired female and the sister with the dark brown hair. They were warriors and predators, they moved like warriors, and they gazed at Rhaos and himself as little more than prisoners, which they were Lazar mused as he looked down at the shackles that wrapped around his and Rhaos' wrists.

All of his life he had been raised and believed that they were the strongest species in the universe. That no other species could do what they did. He was proud of this fact, but Lazar, because of his Mountain Pack heritage, did not use this knowledge or power to force others to do his bidding. The Coalition had not had a war in over three centuries now, everyone in this sector of space who they had not conquered now remained as far away from them as they could. Lazar was actually happy about this because he did not believe he would be able to lead his men in the subjugation of another species simply because they could. Lazar believed this ultimately hurt the Coalition, for without allies and friends you could not survive. The last few hours had shown him quite clearly that there were other species out among the stars that could and did make the Coalition look like children.

He just never believed fellow Lycavorians would be part of that.

Lazar Aspion didn't know what to make of everything right now but he did know that whoever the Alpha male was that had fathered these young women and the male in the back, he was without a doubt, extraordinarily powerful. His blood was far purer than even Lazar's own father given the scent of that blood in those around him, that was for certain, and his father was perhaps the most powerful Alpha wolf on Jetania.

Lazar had never smelled the blood of an Alpha so deeply embedded in a female as it was within this woman called Anja. Her diminutive stature was a clever ruse he now knew, for she was far more vicious and skilled than Lazar would have ever thought. No female Alpha wolf on Jetania held the blood of their Alpha mate mixed so deeply with their own. That blood and scent was also mixed just as deeply with five other feminine scents and this was something he had not expected. Even among the Mountain Packs, same sex pairings were frowned upon heavily for they would not produce children and to smell this upon her was not something Lazar was used to. Given the extent of how deeply she carried the scent of his blood within her, as well as the other females, Lazar estimated they had been together for at least three decades and the aura of another Alpha would have no effect on her as it would others. As he watched, Lazar's eyes grew slightly wider when he saw the two young women share a very open and loving kiss, a kiss that he would consider reserved for those who were mated, and then they were nodding to each other several times as if they were talking to one another without words, and then the one with the black hair moved back toward the front of the ship. Lazar watched as the half breed turned her dark brown eyes back on him and he looked away quickly.

The third half breed, the one called Mari, she was sitting at another computer station on the other side of the ship, her mother standing beside her as the younger one worked on the two computer consoles, her hands moving across the panels like a master. They obviously were not concerned that Lazar and Rhaos could see what they were doing, and to be honest, the only person who might be able to comprehend the equipment they were using was Laon. He had always been the one to explain and show Rhaos and himself about the more detailed equipment. Now though he feared for Laon and all of his crew. He had chosen most of them himself and he had made certain that they were loyal to him and to their ship and not to his father. It helped that most of them were from the many different Mountain Packs and that is why his father put so many spies on his ship Lazar knew.

"Wen forn hinvor?" The female voice spoke. (Are you hungry?)

Lazar's head snapped around and he saw the woman they called Anja standing beside the couch holding two trays in her hands. He had not heard her approach and this shocked him. The scent of meat and vegetables filtered to his sensitive nose however and Lazar looked at the trays she held. Two steaming slabs of sweet smelling meat, obviously cooked with many seasonings, a large pile of green vegetables of some kind and another heaping pile of what his nose told him were some sort of potatoes. Lazar looked at the tray and then up into Anja's face. Half breed or not, he had to admit she was an exceptionally beautiful female wolf.

Anja set the trays on the table in front of them and then reached out with her hand. Her fingers waved delicately over his wrists and the unique shackles that had been binding his wrists fell away. She did the same with Rhaos and he watched those shackles drop to the deck. They watched her move to the couch beside them and settle into it with a large mug of steaming liquid in her hands. Lazar and Rhaos looked at her for a moment and then at the trays of food in front of them. Lazar heard the mocking snicker and he looked up to see the dark red haired female standing in front of them now. She held two, tall metal glasses of water in her hands and she was staring at him with those incredible dark green eyes.

"Atle a jonia." Retta spoke as she set the glasses on the table and lifted the tray in front of Lazar. She stabbed into the white pile of potatoes with the utensil and brought it to her mouth where she quickly ate it. She put the fork back on the tray and thrust the tray into Lazar's hands. "Forn tiab un aldi." Retta spoke once more. (What a baby) (You need to eat)

"If we had intended to kill you..." Anja spoke from the couch. "You would be dead already. I would not waste the time or effort it would take to poison your food. I would just kill you and be done with it. And I think you know we could do this easily if we wanted too."

Rhaos was the one who didn't hesitate now, reaching forward and grabbing the tray and stabbing the fork into the meat. They had not had a decent meal since before leaving the ship and he was starving. As the first scoop of meat hit his taste buds, Rhaos was hooked and his eyes grew wide as he began to eat quickly. Lazar lifted the fork and followed suit just as Retta settled to the couch beside her mother. Being able to pull from Zarah and Lucia's strength was a godsend for Retta at this time. Their combined strength in the etheric realm was huge and being bound together in a way that many would never understand or know the reasons for was the explanation. Whatever the cause, Lucia was right when she had told Retta what she had. They had found each other and nothing would ever come between them now, but they also knew that only one wolf would ever call for the both of them equally. Dutkne would be joining them soon enough, and while they had only seen him once since Andro had arrived, there would be time for what they shared to fully blossom. Only Dutkne could affect either of them in any way and both Lucia and Zarah knew this and it made them even stronger. It was not the same as being able to pull from her twin Calyb or from Androcles, but it was enough to push back the burning of her wolf blood for this godlike Alpha wolf that Retta felt.

Lazar looked up at Retta first as he chewed and then he looked at Anja. "Will you feed my men?" He asked.

Anja nodded her head. "They are getting our standard field rations." Anja answered as she sipped her coffee. "They are not as tasty as what you are eating, but they are rather good as far as field rations go."

"Then you will kill us?" Lazar spoke.

Lazar saw Retta roll her eyes in disgust and Anja smiled as she looked at him. "I have no intention of killing you or your partner here." Anja spoke.

"Our men?" Rhaos asked now.

"Your men are responsible for the brutal deaths of almost twenty Beta Lycavorians from Ventori." Anja told him. "Innocent men and women. Their fate will be decided by the families of those they killed. If no family members are alive to pronounce punishment, then a court and jury of Ventori Lycavorians will decide what to do."

"Beta Wolves." Rhaos spoke. "Deciding the fate of Alphas?"

Anja looked at him now. "You consider yourself better than Beta Wolves, young Alpha?" Anja asked him with a neutral voice. "What is your name?"

"Rhaos Kyer." He replied.

Anja looked at Lazar. "Lazar Aspion." He told her.

"Prince Lazar Aspion." Rhaos spoke quickly.

Anja looked at him and her eyes narrowed slightly. "Oh yes... I will have to remember that won't I?" She answered. "So Rhaos Kyer, you consider yourself better than Beta wolves?" Anja asked.

Rhaos was no fool, and like Lazar he could sense the power within this female wolf. Half breed she may have been, but she was much stronger than nearly every Alpha female Rhaos had ever come across on their homeworld, even Lazar's mother who was the strongest Rhaos had ever met. "I will... I will fight to defend those who are not my equal, that is part of what an Alpha does, but yes, Alphas have always been superior to Beta and Gamma wolves. Omegas too. You are wolf, you should know this!"

Anja nodded her head. "We do not adhere to that long dead and silly thought process in the Lycavorian Union." She stated evenly. "That is how it was on our original homeworld yes, but we have evolved far beyond that now."

"That is what you call where you are from? This Lycavorian Union." Lazar asked now.

Anja nodded her head. "Yes." She replied. "And in the Lycavorian Union, there are Beta and Gamma wolves that serve in our government and military. Even many Omega wolves. All of them are held in the same regard and esteem as any Alpha would be. In many cases they even command Alphas."

Rhaos laughed at this and then saw that Anja's expression had not changed. "You are serious?" He asked.

“Yes.” Anja told him.

Rhaos was still shoveling the delicious tasting food into his mouth, unable to resist the smell and flavor. It was unlike any food he had ever eaten. “This Union of yours must not be very large.” He said while chewing. “Not with Beta wolves commanding Alphas.”

Anja smiled once more. “The Lycavorian Union comprises nearly nine hundred different species and totaling, at our last census, nearly thirty-one trillion citizens.” She told them as she sipped her coffee calmly. Anja saw the looks of disbelief cover Lazar and Rhaos’ faces and she couldn’t help but smile as Rhaos nearly choked on the mouthful of food he was chewing. “How big did you say your Coalition was again?” Anja sent out the jab.

“How... how is that possible?” Lazar finally blurted out.

“It is a rather long and very involved story but the short version is that many like minded people came together with the same ideals and values and formed the Union. It has grown from there.” Anja told him.

“You... you are Queen of this Union?” Lazar stammered the question as his eyes darted to Retta who he felt watching him intently.

“I am one of six Queens.” Anja answered. “We all speak with the same voice so we are essentially one I suppose.”

“You are a half...” Lazar stopped his words and looked at Retta once more remembering her words to him. He cut his eyes back to Anja. “You are not fully wolf.” He finished.

Anja shook her head with a smile for she knew exactly what Retta had told him and Anja could sense this Lazar did not want to incur her daughter’s wrath, and not because he feared what she could do to him. “No. I’m half Hadarian.” She answered him now. “We are a founding member of the Union. One of four founding members.”

“Half breeds are not welcome within the Coalition.” Rhaos blurted out and Anja saw Lazar wince at his words. He had not spoken the word harshly, only stating a fact, which told Anja and Retta both that he did not fully believe in what he was speaking.

“Well that’s a loss for the Coalition I suppose.” Anja said. “The Union embraces them.”

“Have you come out here to conquer us?” Lazar asked Anja.

Retta snorted in undisguised anger now and Anja let her daughter speak, knowing she could not stop her either way. “You shoot my brother and my Uncle like dogs!” Retta snapped at him forcefully. “You murder innocent civilians, beat defenseless women and kidnap us and then you have the arrogance to sit there and ask that question?”

Lazar met her eyes. “Sibot’s actions were not my actions!” He spoke. “I would not have done what he did?”

“Yes... yes! You already told us they were your father’s orders!” Retta snapped. “What if he had given you those same orders?!” She growled at Lazar. “Would you have done exactly what that other fool did?”

“No.” Lazar answered her honestly and without hesitating, his voice angry though. Anja sensed her daughter become less agitated at his answer and she calmed somewhat. “I do not kill innocents! Nor do I beat those who are not my equal.”

Anja rolled her eyes at his choice of words sensing that is not what he had intended to say and knowing what Retta’s reaction would be.

“Not your equal!” Retta snarled as she rose to her feet. “If I am not mistaken, I am a half breed! My sister and cousin are half breeds! And we just handed you and your superior Alpha attitude your collective asses! How does that compute for you?!”

“That is not...!” Lazar began to speak.

“You may be the most delicious Alpha I have ever smelled in my life, but you have to be the stupidest man I have ever come across as well!” Retta spat stunning Lazar with her words. She turned to her mother now. “Medwaw, I’m going to go sit with Normya, Endith and Tina. At least there, the superior Alpha hormones won’t affect me!”

Anja nodded her head silently and then watched as Retta glared at Lazar for a moment longer and then moved quickly out of the main living area of the STRIKER and up the short flight of stairs into the cockpit. Anja looked back to Lazar who was sitting there with wide eyes. Rhaos looked confused as well but he was also chewing his food. Anja could sense the turmoil within Lazar when it came to Retta, his aura was conflicted about what he felt seething through him and what he had been raised to believe. Anja also believed that Lazar was different from what he had been raised to think was right, for he showed this in his questions about his crew and his reaction when he thought Anja was going to kill Rhaos. Lazar finally turned his head to look at her.

“She misconstrued my words!” He spoke quickly.

Anja shook her head. “No, she didn’t.” She answered. “You just chose the wrong words to use. I get the sense that Coalition females are not afforded the same rights as Union females. They are not considered equal to male Alphas?”

Lazar met her eyes. “I do not follow that ideal!” Lazar hissed in defense of himself. “My mother is Matriarch to all of the Mountain Packs. They honor her and look to her for leadership. It is the City and Plains Packs that follow this fool mentality!”

“Led by your father.” Anja asked.

“I had no say in who my father was.” Lazar told her. “And I do not follow all of his views or ideals.”

Anja smiled at him. “Then the question remains, which ones do you follow?” She asked.

Lazar met her gaze and his eyes grew wider. “You are trying to trick me!” He hissed at her. “You wish me to reveal information that you can use against my people!”

Anja chuckled now and leaned forward putting her mug on the table. “I am not trying to trick you Lazar Aspion.” She spoke calmly holding out her hand to Zarah who stepped away from the bulkhead after a nod to Radem who was sitting at the doorway into the rear Dragon Pens. Zarah held out the data pad.

“Allon coi covieycle lon Endith for Normya sey kinchas sy nison medwaw.” Zarah spoke never taking her eyes from Lazar or Rhaos. (This is everything that Endith and Normya have discovered so far mother)

Anja nodded her head as she took the pad. “Cyn forn fenneenum.” Anja looked at Lazar and activated the data pad and placed it on the table in front of him. “I already know so much more about you than you do about us.” (Thank you daughter.)

Lazar looked at her confused and lowered his tray to the table and picked up the data pad. His eyes grew wider as he realized he was looking at news reports from Jetania. These news reports quickly switched to secure military communications and he looked up at Anja. “You have... you have decrypted our secure military communications!” He exclaimed. “How... how have you done this?”

Anja reached out and took the pad from his hands. Lazar attempted to stretch out and snatch it back but before he could even blink, Zarah had blurred to his side and now held the wickedly sharp blade of the knife to his throat. Rhaos had stopped chewing and was leaning back as he stared down the business end of the very large barrel of, at least to him, the Pralor Pulse Magnum that Radem had leveled at his forehead. Once more Lazar had never experienced or seen anyone move so fast in his life and he froze as Anja sat back on the couch calmly.

“If you wish to continue using that arm...” Zarah snarled into his face, her dual fangs now extended fully and her warm breath on his cheek. “...I suggest you lower your hand back down. I am not my beloved sister Retta Alpha wolf, and your scent and aura does not make my blood burn for you, but if you move another millimeter towards my mother, I will not hesitate and I will end your life where you sit.”

Lazar did just as he was instructed and lowered his hand back into his lap very slowly. Anja lifted her mug from the table once more and sipped the coffee.

“You strike me as being very intelligent Lazar Aspion.” Anja told him. “I instructed my pilot to only monitor civilian channels and those trivial military use channels that were mildly encrypted. See... the biggest mistake this igord Sibot made was shooting my son and killing those innocent people. I was willing to be very open had things gone as we had hoped they would. They did not and now because of what he did, I am going to be somewhat of a upaee.” Anja sipped her coffee again. “You don’t want to see me in full upaee mode Lazar Aspion. I guarantee it will not be a pleasant experience. I want our discussions to be civil and intelligent. My husband and mate would much rather be friends with a group of our own people. And trust me when I tell you, having Martin Leonidas as an enemy is perhaps the most suicidal position to be in.” Anja sat back. “I will leave it to your decision. We can have constructive dialogue, or we can do things your way. You can puff out your chest and espouse whatever you like, but considering that our technology is easily a thousand year or two more advanced than yours, that would not be the most productive of positions to be in don’t you agree?”

“And if I refuse to tell you anything?” Lazar questioned her.

Anja shrugged her shoulders. “Then we will deposit you and your friend Rhaos here at a remote location somewhere on your planet and we will leave you there to find your way back to your father and leaders.”

“My men?” Lazar asked.

Anja shook her head. “They will remain with us and face our justice for what they have done. After that, they will be buried honorably on Ventori, which in my opinion, they do not deserve. The Lycavorian Union has laid claim to Ventori and the Beta wolves in positions of power there have aligned with us. The planet is now under our protection. We will not allow any harm to come to them ever again and we will not seek relations with your Coalition ever again either.” Anja met his eyes. “But rest assured if we ever do meet again, it will not be as friends and you will not survive that encounter.” Anja rose to her feet and looked at him.

“I will allow you to think about that and talk with your friend here while we continue to monitor your planet for a time. After one hour I will ask you again if we can conduct ourselves as equals and if not, I will then have my pilot hack your main military database, which for her will be painfully easy, and she will take whatever information that is in it. We will then depart after leaving you on the surface.”

“You do not... you do not give me much leeway.” Lazar told her.

Anja chuckled and leaned close to him her eyes changing and her wolf fangs extending fully. Lazar’s eyes grew a little wider as those dual fangs became fully visible. “Igorda haro.” Anja snarled into his face. “If my son was dead we would not be having this conversation. My husband and mate, my son Androcles, all of my children and all of our military might would right now be laying waste to your father’s kingdom in retribution. That would not matter to you however, for you would be floating somewhere in space with your friend here.” Anja smiled once more, her fangs making the smile look more like a dangerous sneer than anything else. “Think about it.”

Anja’s head snapped around when they heard the beeping noise and she saw Kalis appear from the rear cabin quickly and go to where they had deposited all of the gear Lazar and Rhaos had been wearing. He reached down and picked up the small cylindrical object from among the objects there.

“Some sort of COM unit Tenna Anja.” Kalis spoke rising to his feet once more as he inspected it and then moved over next to her. “It appears short range however.”

Anja took it from Kalis and turned it over in her hands. She looked at Lazar. “Your fool father?” She asked.

Lazar shook his head slowly knowing as powerful as she was she would detect his lie instantly. “I was not due to report to my father for another two days. I do not know what Sibot intended once he had taken you. That is a private COM unit that only my mother has access too. I don’t know why she has activated it; she believes me to be out of the system.” He replied.

Anja blinked several times. “Really? This should be interesting then.” She handed it back to Kalis. “Plug it into the COM Mandri.” She said. “It will convert the signal automatically and then activate a holo-transmission. Let’s see if we can have a more productive conversation with Lazar Aspion’s mother.”

JETANIA
NORTHERN OCEAN
DEPTH 2419 METERS
DARASTRIXI LONG RANGE MEDIUM CRUISER

“Omrad?” Nilantha asked moving up beside him at the control station.

Omrad shook his head. “They are not moving.” He told her. “They entered the system and were moving for Jetania but they have stopped now and are holding position half a light year away.”

“Stopped?” Nilantha spoke softly. “Are they showing on normal sensors?”

“Taris?” Omrad lifted his head and looked at her.

Taris shook her head quickly. “No. All of the Coalition ships in the area are still at their standard positions and no alert has been sent via normal COM channels. All Coalition ships are maintaining their positions. They cannot see them Omrad.”

“How is that possible?” Loras asked now moving up to stand in front of the station where Taris stood. “We can see them but Osrod’s ships cannot? The Home Fleet is the most advanced of our ships.”

“This ship is equipped with an Etheric Sensor Grid Loras.” Nilantha answered her as she came to stand beside her. “It is one of three pieces of Pralor technology that was incorporated into this ship. The Teleporter is the second. Believe me it was no small task either if what I was told is true. The Pralor people regarded these two pieces of their technology to be very secret. Only their most advanced ships had either of them let alone both. How Dadrien of the Mountain succeeded in convincing those Pralors who followed him to do such a thing is beyond me.”

Loras met her eyes. “Then they have cloaking technology as the Coalition does?” She asked.

Rylin nodded her head now. “Yes, but it is far more advanced than anything COLS has operating now. These Lycavorians have technology that in some ways is even more advanced than what is on the Oracle’s ships. We cannot pick the ship up on normal sensors, no one can it appears. We are only detecting them because of the Etheric Grid established within the system and linked to this ship.”

“Carians.” Loras exclaimed in frustration.

Nilantha reached out and took her hands and squeezed them tightly. “Remain calm Loras Ranev.” She spoke calmly. “You have only just been exposed to all of this while Rylin, Taris and others have had years to learn it.”

“This is all so... it is unbelievable.” Loras rasped out the words.

Nilantha nodded her head. “Indeed it is. Do you trust me Loras?”

Loras looked at her with those captivating dark brown orbs and took a deep breath before answering with confidence in her words. “Yes.” She replied.

Nilantha smiled and squeezed her hands once more. “You will learn it all Loras. I make you a promise now. You will come to know and understand all of it over the next few weeks.”

“How Nilantha?” Loras asked her.

“Just as first Dadrien and then the spirit of Sumar granted me the ability to sense and communicate within the Etheric realm, the more you are exposed to it, especially at the levels you will see, it will stimulate the Etheric resonance within you and you will understand. I have told you that all Lycavorians are born with this ability, but the number who advance it past the initial levels are extremely rare among the COLS Lycavorians. Those who come from your original homeworld, from Lycavore, it was natural for them to use this skill. Especially after the Pralor Sumar and those who followed him were taken into the population.”

“Lycavore.” Loras whispered.

Nilantha nodded her head. “It is no more a myth or legend than I am.” She spoke. “Just as I told you earlier.”

Loras met her eyes. “Vada saan rie vada allsknesi.”

Nilantha nodded. “The Blood of the Ancients. Yes.” She said softly. “Rylin, Omrad, Taris and Anoria are only a few who have discovered this because, just like you, they carry the blood of the ancients within them as well.”

“How?” Loras asked with wide eyes.

Nilantha shook her head. “That I do not know.” Nilantha answered. “Only that it is within you. There were ancient Packs on Lycavore, those with the purest of wolf blood. One Pack was the purest of all and they were who ruled with the other ancient Packs as equals to them. I do not know what took place through the years after I left with your ancestors, but Sumar told me that when he arrived on Lycavore there were only six of these Ruling Packs left. The largest and the most powerful. The strongest and most dominant of these six Packs had dual wolf fangs and this is what set them apart from the others. This oddity in their bloodline, this is what made their Pack stronger, larger in size and far more ferocious, but it also granted them the ability to lead others and do so in such a way that others wanted to follow them. This only grew after Sumar and the Pralors with him were taken in by the Ruling Packs as I said. That is how you have had the visions like the others. Those with the blood of the ancients were always tied more closely to the Etheric realm. I can only surmise that those of you with this skill are descended from the Ancient bloodlines from before your ancestors left.” I have instructed Rylin, Taris and the other to the best of my abilities, which are infantile when compared to the Mard Revik and his family. To those who follow him.” Nilantha shook her head now turning away with an expression of confusion on her face. “This is not going as I had foreseen.”

“Nilantha?” Loras questioned seeing the puzzled look on her face. “What do you mean?”

“I was meant... I was hoping to have more time with you.” Nilantha told her. “To teach you some of what the others know. Your latent ability would have made it much easier as it did with Rylin and the others. They were not supposed to arrive here for months.”

Loras looked at her. “You knew they were coming?” She asked in surprise.

Nilantha nodded her head quickly. “I felt them the moment they arrived in this quadrant of space.” She replied. “Well... was overwhelmed by them is a better phrase. I was barely able to react quickly enough to hide my presence from them with the instruments on this ship.”

“Why would you want to hide your presence from them?” Loras asked.

“If they had sensed me here, especially the Tarivuos given what they are, then they would have descended down upon this area already.” Nilantha answered her. “This ship has an Etheric Void Shield which is the third piece of technology equipped that is Pralor in design and then engineered by them. It keeps all Etheric resonance within the ship and the surrounding area of the ship. It was experimental at the time, unlike the Teleporter and Ether Sensor Grid and my ship is the only surviving ship to have it. It is also why you and the others on Jetania who have an advanced Etheric resonance did not sense it before now. You would have been drawn to it without this shield. Even those among Osrod’s followers, including that brute himself.”

Loras’s eyes grew slightly wider. “He has people like... he is... Osrod is like Taris? Like Anoria?”

Nilantha shook her head quickly. “Carians joi!” Nilantha exclaimed. She pulled Loras closer, holding her hands. “Why do you think he chose you Loras Ranev?” Nilantha reached up and stroked her cheek and then ran her fingers down her arm. “Your obvious physical beauty and lush attributes not withstanding Loras Ranev, which has caused more than one Alpha to drag his tongue along the ground hoping to win your affection I might add, Osrod detected this difference in you.”

Loras looked away shyly, clearly embarrassed at her words and Nilantha and Rylin smiled knowingly. “As I explained, Etheric ability is a characteristic of all Lycavorians, but without the proper training and knowledge to expand it beyond the lowest possible level, as the Pralor people had, the use of it is spotty at best. Osrod has a few among his fool advisors that have a rudimentary ability to use it. You must have seen it when you were Queen.”

Loras’s mind was flung back to her decade in the palace and the capital. She nodded finally and met Nilantha’s gaze. “I thought it was just vaes. Parlor tricks.” She said finally.

Nilantha nodded her head. “Which it is essentially, without the proper training and skill. Many millennia ago other Lycavorians came here to Jetania.”

“Other Lycavorians?” Loras gasped with wide eyes. “There have been others who have come to Jetania? How? When?”

Nilantha nodded her head. “These are the things I wanted to speak of you with.” Nilantha hissed softly. “I will tell you of them Loras, I promise. Right now however, we have other issues.”

“Nilantha?” Loras pressed her.

Nilantha smiled. “Given what the future holds for you Loras my child, these are things you need to know. Do not worry. I will tell you everything child. Everything.” Loras stared at her for a few seconds then nodded her head in agreement. Nilantha turned to Omrad. “Can we determine how many are on this ship Omrad? And we must begin using the correct terminology used by them. Can we convert the Etheric sensors?”

“I have already finished entering the data Nilantha.” Rylin spoke. “I wanted to check with you before I had Taris program it into the databanks.”

Nilantha nodded her head. “It is given. Taris... program the new variables if you would.” Taris nodded her head and began working on the station she was at while Nilantha looked at Loras. “The Mard Revik and those with him use a different measuring equation to classify Etheric users in the Lycavorian Union. The Pralor fashion was too bloated with unnecessary information and categories.”

“How...?”

Nilantha smiled at her. “You have more questions than your mind can form right now, I know. About me, about everything.” She said. “I will answer as many as I am able Loras my child. But the answers to some will only come with time and exposure.”

“Exposure to what?” Loras asked.

“The future.” Nilantha answered her.

“New variables entered.” Taris called out.

Nilantha turned once more to Omrad. “Omrad?”

“This... this can’t be right Oracle!” He exclaimed.

“What do you mean? Are the variables not correct?” Nilantha asked.

“I was very precise Omrad.” Rylin echoed.

Omrad shook his head. “No Rylin.” He continued. “The variables are all correct. They are perfect.”

“Then what is wrong?” Nilantha asked.

Omrad looked at her. “Oracle, if these readings are correct, then that ship is carrying at least five Tier Seven Etheric users. I can’t get an accurate reading because there is something distorting the actual scans themselves.”

“Distorting how?” Rylin asked.

Omrad shook his head. “Almost as if it is reflecting the scans back somehow. Something in the hull composition of the ship.” He looked up at Nilantha who was staring at him with wide eyes. “The readings we are getting however; they indicate the presence of at least five Tier Seven users on that ship. Very high level Tier Seven users Oracle.”

Nilantha looked at him while Loras stared at her. “You are certain Omrad?” She asked.

Omrad nodded his head. “Yes. I’m detecting an additional four that would rate a Tier Six Level, but definitely five Tier Seven users.”

Loras hadn’t taken her eyes off of Nilantha and she turned slightly to face her. “What is the significance of this Nilantha?” She asked quickly. “What does it mean?”

Nilantha met her eyes. “It can mean only one thing.” She stated softly. “That ship is carrying members of the Mard Revik’s family on it.”

“How do you know this?” Loras gasped.

Nilantha met her gaze. “When I had Rylin configure the variables of Etheric conversion I had her add an additional level to the Six Tiered level system that the Union uses. Tier Seven is this new level. Most of the Mark Revik’s family cannot be considered Tier Six any longer. They are the only ones who would register at this new level given their power and skill. The Mard Revik himself and the Tarivuos, especially Androcles, they would not even register on any known scale now. They have reached far beyond any configurable measuring system.”

“What does this mean?” Loras asked.

Nilantha looked at her. “This... this centers around your son Loras.” She spoke. “That much I am able to sense. He is involved somehow. Can you contact him?”

Loras reached to her belt without hesitation and pulled out the small data pad and handed it to Omrad. “This has his personal communicator frequency on it.” She told him. “But it is only short range. He would contact me when he entered the system to let me know he was home. It will not work beyond the boundaries of this system. It is secure and no one can trace it.” Loras told her. “He is not in the system Nilantha. He is weeks away at this planet Ventori. He could... he could not...”

“Frequency locked!” Omrad exclaimed causing Loras’s head to snap around and look at him.

“What?” She almost shouted. “How is that possible?”

“Incoming response!” Taris barked from her station. “Transmission is secure Oracle. It is originating from that ship and it is synced with a holo-transmission!”

Nilantha looked at Loras and smiled, her bright emerald green eyes twinkling in the light. “Perhaps there is more to your son than I first thought Loras Ranev. Taris... please insure the communication cannot be tracked. We do not know what things Osrod has up his sleeve and he cannot find out about this. Not yet.”

“Already done Oracle.” Taris answered. “I have...”

The holo communications disc to the right of Taris sprang to life causing all of them to react with shock. The Coalition had not yet discovered holographic transmission technology and the Holo Discs on Nilantha ship had remained dormant for thousands of years.

Until now.

They could only watch in awe as the head and shoulders of the petite, red haired female appeared in the transmission, shimmered slightly and then cleared instantly. Nilantha was the one to gasp in shock, her hands going to her face as the incredible, jade green colored eyes of the woman in the transmission focused on her and grew wider.

“Son vada carians!” Nilantha muttered softly causing Loras to look at her.

“Nilantha?” She gasped as she gripped her arms tightly. “What is it?”

“Vada tryn gelleenat!” Nilantha gasped. (The Fiery Queen.) “The Gelleenat the Mard Revik covets most after his Anome.”

“You know her?” Loras asked in surprise.

Nilantha shook her head. “Only... only what the Archives tell me.” She answered. She turned to Omrad. “Why is there no sound Omrad?”

“The Communications relays are syncing the audio now Oracle.” Omrad answered. “They have never synced with such an advanced relay before.”

Nilantha nodded as she turned back to the screen. “Pralor technology, yes.” She spoke holding tightly to Loras’ hand. She could see the surprise on the face of the beautiful female in the transmission as she looked at Nilantha from her ship. Nilantha did not know her name, only that the Queen with fiery red hair was the Queen that the archives foretold the Mard Revik yearned for most after his raven haired Anome. A female who was a turned wolf, but was more powerful than any female Alpha residing on Jetania right now with the possible exception of Loras Raney, who had not yet realized her own power. The Archives on her ship spoke of the Fiery One with red hair, filled with such intense compassion, yet equally or more fearsome when aroused in anger. The Archives spoke of each of the Queens, the raven haired Anome and most lethal of the Mard Revik’s beloved Queens; the pair of serene elven Queens with supreme intelligence and grace; the vampiric Queen with superior skills and devotion to her husband and fellow Queens and then the half breed Queen, so skilled and quiet. The most dangerous one if pushed. Nilantha had studied them all yet now one stood before her, and it was like a dream.

“Audio synced!” Omrad exclaimed.

Nilantha watched as the red haired Queen moved closer before she had a chance to speak.

“To say this is a complete surprise would not be entirely accurate at this moment.” Anja spoke from SPARTAN ONE. “Perhaps you could enlighten me as to how a Darastrixi female is standing with Lycavorians?”

Nilantha’s eyes grew wide. “You... you know what species I am?” She gasped aloud.

Anja nodded her head. “Oh yes.” She replied quickly. They watched Anja turn to the young woman who appeared next to her and took the data pad. They watched Anja’s eyes as she read what was on the pad and then look up at them once more. “What is infinitely more confusing to me right now, is how there is a Darastrixi Medium Cruiser sitting at the bottom of your northern ocean surrounded by an Etheric Void Shield.”

Omrad’s eyes went wide. “They can detect us!” He exclaimed as his hands flew over the controls before him.

“Impossible!” Rylin stammered.

Nilantha saw Anja smile as she answered. “The impossible only takes a little longer as Martin is so fond of saying.” Anja stated.

“Where... where is my son?” Loras demanded now, unable to hold back. “You have his personal communicator! Where is he? If he is injured I will...”

“Loras!” Nilantha gasped.

Anja canted her head to the side as she looked at Loras in the transmission. She was silent for a long moment as if sizing her up for something and then she spoke. “Your son is here.” She stated motioning with her hand behind her as the view of the holo-transmission expanded. Loras gasped as she saw Lazar and Rhaos now standing to the side, both of them with shackles of some kind on their wrists. Her dark eyes narrowed and cut back to Anja.

“Why are my son and Rhaos shackled like animals!? Release them this very instant or I will...!” She hissed angrily, her eyes turning to that of her wolf persona and her long wolf fangs extending.

“Loras no!” Nilantha rasped out the words.

Loras’ eyes went wide, Nilantha and Rylin both gasping in shock as Anja’s eyes changed and her dual wolf fangs burst forth. It was something none of them had ever seen before and it was certainly frightening.

“Carians!” Rylin almost shouted. “Via cerleri vada saan rie vada allsknesi vorevor tya!” (She carries the blood of the ancients within her.)

“You will do what?” Anja growled menacingly as she moved closer to the transmission point where she was. “You are in no position to make any sort of demands of me woman!” Anja snarled back at her viciously. “Your son is the one who brought us here! The men under his command attacked and butchered over a dozen Ventori Lycavorians because they were in the way! They shot my youngest son and one of my dearest friends in the nubous back! Then they kidnapped me and others and brought us here! We retook our ship a short time ago. You are very lucky he is not a corpse!”

“Retook the ship?” Nilantha gasped.

Loras looked at her son with wide eyes, disbelief filling her. “Lazar?” She gasped aloud.

Anja was going to turn and encourage him to speak the truth but Lazar was way ahead of her and took a few steps forward.

“It’s true mother. It was Sibot.” Lazar told her. “Father sent him out here with another mission entirely. He told me one thing, investigate these new Lycavorians and report back to him. Sibot was there to do something else. He took command of a small team of men loyal to him and they assaulted this ship. Father wanted him to capture whoever he could so that he could interrogate them.”

“Pen toic forn un esto aer hin’mor el lon llokel bash blon!” Loras snarled angrily at her son. (I told you to arrange an accident for that monster long ago!)

Lazar nodded his head. “Pen pera medwaw.” (I know mother.)

“What have you done my son?” Loras exclaimed. She turned quickly to look at Anja. “Please... my son is young and reckless and...”

Anja held up her hand. “You don’t need to make excuses for him.” She stated. “I have nine sons who are exactly the same. Your son Lazar and his friend Rhaos here actually stopped what this man Sibot was doing. He panicked however, and stole the ship we are on. Not the most intelligent of things to do since this is the King’s personal ship but that is...” Anja moved closer again in the transmission. “...That is secondary right now.” She spoke.

“Secondary?” Loras gasped. “My son is not secondary to me!”

“Perhaps not, but you have stuck your collective noses in business that has nothing to do with you and you have done so in a way that all but ensures my husband and mate will retaliate in similar fashion and believe me, that is not something you want. Our son Androcles told your fool Captain that we do not answer to you or your government. You should have listened to him and remained out of our business.”

“Son?” Loras exclaimed when she heard that name again.

“You have no sway over us, and no claim of leadership over us. My husband and mate is King of the Lycavorian Union, and only someone of our blood will ever rule! You should have left it at that and stayed away.” Anja spoke evenly while staring directly at Loras in the holo transmission. “Right now however, I am far more interested in how a member of the Darastrixi species came to be on your planet.” Anja spoke trying to remain calm. “I would also like to know how you are onboard a Darastrixi ship that your Coalition and its idiotic leader obviously does not know exists, and exactly what else might be hiding in plain sight?”

All of them looked at her as if she was insane in the way she referred to Osrod without regard. Osrod had people killed for less throughout the years, yet this tiny woman held no fear in her eyes, her manner or her action.

SPARTAN ONE

Anja stared at the women in the transmission intently. This exotic and beautiful female was a very powerful Alpha female, that much Anja could detect even from here. Her Etheric resonance was untrained and barely restrained and while no woman could ever entice her away from her fellow Queens, Anja Leonidas had to admit this woman’s beauty was stunning in every way. There was obviously a rift of some sort within this Coalition. Lazar and this woman spoke of the COLS King as if they hated him, and based on their comments there was obviously much discord within the ranks of the military and the people.

Anja knew there was a reason that Martin and their family agreed to this mission. While it had not taken place as they had hoped, ultimately Anja was right where they had planned for her to be. Of all his Queens,

Martin trusted Aricia and Anja the most when it came to unknown situations such as this. Not because of their diplomatic skill, for Dysea and For'mya were far better diplomats, but because Aricia and Anja had an uncanny knack for reading people and their wolf instincts were almost never wrong. Anja had spent many years reading Lycavorian and Spartan history, and with Aricia's constant help and guidance since Seanna's death she had trained herself to let her wolf instincts take over and guide her in so many things. It had also forged a unique bond between Aricia, her and For'mya. When combined with the intense training and tools she had acquired as a Navy SEAL officer all those years ago, Anja and Aricia Leonidas were the perfect agents for this type of mission. For'mya had been doing this as well for the last decade, and this was the reason the three of them worked so flawlessly together.

Nilantha stepped closer beside Loras now. "Forn wen gelleenat un vada Mard Revik?" She asked in fluent Lycavorian. (You are Queen to the True King.)

Anja nodded her head slowly before choosing her words very carefully. The Darastrixi woman's fluency in their language came as a surprise because, of all the Darastrixi she had met and interacted with these last weeks, only Laren Ti-Shara had the gift of their language with such perfection.

"Jainn. Aur sha coi Anja Leonidas. Pen brol ared rie berim gelleenats." Anja tilted her head to the side again. (Yes. My name is Anja Leonidas. I am one of six Queens.)

"Vada tryn gelleenat." Nilantha spoke the name once more. "The one whose disposition matches the color of her hair. And the one who is the finest healer in all the universe."

"How do you know that? And why do you call Martin the True King?"

"Martin?" Nilantha whispered the word almost reverently. "This... this is his name?"

"Martin Leonidas." Anja spoke in reply. "Yes. Who are you, and how do you know about us?"

"You... you know of my species?" Nilantha asked. "How is this possible?"

Anja blinked several times unsure of how much to tell her, but she quickly decided that truth was what they needed now. "We have had the Darastrixi among the Lycavorian Union for almost three decades now. The Vrrarhoinpa caste. We did not discover there was a Jiilhoinsa caste until we met the Doraanar Sarlana on Manne. We..."

"A Doraanar!" Nilantha almost shouted.

Anja nodded her head. "Sarlana. Yes. It was she who explained what our sons Androcles and Dorian are. What Laren Ti-Shara is."

"The Lorsvek ar Sepas." Nilantha said in almost a whisper. "Then it is true. Everything is so true. They are so much more than Tarivuos. They are the Dahakoan reborn!"

Anja nodded her head seeing the animated expression on her face. "Given what we have seen our sons and Laren do recently, most of us are hard pressed to deny it I suppose." Anja said honestly.

Nilantha took a deep breath, having waited millennia for this day to come. It was upon her now, before she was fully prepared for it, but she needed to adapt and insure everything took place.

"My full name is Nilantha Ma'Carr." She began to speak. "Yes, I am Darastrixi as you can see. I was sent here as the Oracle to this Seed Mission of Lycavorians by the spirit of Dadrien of the Mountain."

Anja stepped even closer to the transmission. "Dadrien!" She gasped in surprise.

"I know of the True King and the Tarivuos, the Heralds, because of him and because of the Pralor Sumar." Nilantha continued knowing that this would definitely have a reaction and she was not disappointed.

"What do you know of Sumar?" Anja demanded as her wolf eyes grew even wider. "How is it possible that you... who are you?"

Nilantha smiled knowing that the time had now come. "I have spoken to both of them." She stated calmly. "They told me that you would be coming. They told me that the Tarivuos would be coming. They told me that Vada Mard Revik was coming, and everything as we knew it would then change. They told this to me many millennia ago and I have been waiting for the day when you would arrive. When he would arrive. We all have."

"Saoi sibfla!" Anja gasped aloud. "Martin was right... crazy does follow us around."

Nilantha couldn't help herself now and the tears came forth as she burst into laughter. Loras looked at her like she was crazy to laugh in a situation like this and Nilantha squeezed her hand. Nilantha got control of her laughter quickly however and she looked at Anja in the transmission. "From your reaction, I assume that you are still discovering things as you go." She spoke. "Ever since you arrived here in the Echo Quadrant."

Anja looked at her in the transmission. "You seem to know an awful lot about us." Anja spoke.

"I am no enemy to you Anja Leonidas, and I could never be an enemy to the Dahakoan." Nilantha answered her. "If you know of my people, if you know a Doraanar, then you know it is not within my blood. They are Dahakoan and they are the Heralds for... for your husband and mate. Vada Mard Revik."

Anja looked at her. "Why should I believe anything you have to say?" Anja finally asked.

Nilantha smiled and looked at Loras. She squeezed her hand tightly and pulled her closer to her body. "Because what you seek is here on Jetania Anja Leonidas." She answered her. "I know what you are looking for. I know what the Mard Revik is looking for. What he has always been looking for even though he did not know it."

"And what is that?" Anja asked.

"The Mountain of Stone and Light." Nilantha replied seeing Anja's wolf eyes go even wider. "Vada Dirrie Hal for Saar."

VENTORI DISCOVERY BASE ADHOC COMMAND CENTER

"...Said that?" Martin asked the transmission of Anja from the holodisc. Her entire figure was visible within the transmission sitting on one of the couches with Retta beside her and though no one else detected it, Martin, Aricia and For'mya did. Her petite body was relaxed and calm and they could tell just from her motions that she was in control and not worried about her current position. Retta was the same way as she sat beside her and this only reinforced what they felt from Anja.

Anja nodded her head. "It about floored me too Lover." She spoke in reply. "We spoke for nearly an hour before I ended it and told her I would speak with you and then decide what to do."

"Koppentotz Aviel?" Androcles spoke now turning to the second holo transmission that was active in the Command Center. Delnash was in the third transmission and remaining silent at the moment with Avatar 27 beside him. Laren and Sadi sat on either side of Andro, while Dorian, Dynina, Jezima and Gorgo sat to Laren's left. Ne'Veha, and the others sat behind Sadi and Andro while Sheva and Onera sat just behind Dorian. Danny, Aricia, For'mya were seated on the opposite side of the table with Helen, Wayonn, Kasdan and Murano. Deion, Eliani, Lisisa and Denali stood along the only wall not covered in computer stations.

"Dalis is searching other databanks that we have on our ships Dahakoan Androcles, but the amount of data is massive. My people are, to be blunt, we are overly retentive, and we keep detailed records of nearly everything. So far the only Darastrixi that we can find with the name Nilantha Ma'Carr was a Junior Intern for the Livaiji Sulevfu. Her entry date into the Livaiji Sulevfu Academy is listed as nearly three hundred and twenty-eight thousand years ago."

"That fits with how old she says she is." Anja spoke from the transmission.

"She was nineteen at the time," Aviel continued. "...And for her to be accepted at such an age she must have been very special."

"Must have been?" Aricia spoke now looking at him in the transmission.

Aviel nodded his head. "She is listed as having been killed in a transport accident thirty years after her entrance Daariv Aricia. She would have been considered still a child by all accounts. A baby really." (Queen in Darastrixi)

Aricia turned back to look at Martin. "Cukim?" She asked. (Coincidence)

"Tis duan nathos? Joa shyos." Martin answered. (In our family? No way)

"Aretor." For'mya echoed with a smile. (Agreed)

“She was put there by someone.” Dynina spoke now looking at Martin as her eyes grew wider in realization.

Sarlana nodded her head now. “By someone who obviously was influenced by Dadrien.”

“This is all before Sumar’s time Martin.” Jezima spoke now. Jezima had refused to return to Honelze, unwilling to leave her grandson just yet. Meral had returned to continue to run their business on Honelze but also to get to know the three Queens of her nephew that remained on Honelze and were helping to prepare its defenses.

Dynina nodded her head in agreement. “Yes, it is.” She spoke now. “How could this Darastrixi woman know all of this?”

“Because it is not before Dadrien’s time Martin, and it is apparent now that even within the afterlife, he had far more influence on events that have taken place than what we truly know or have believed.” Sarlana spoke now as she moved gracefully into the Command Center.

Andro rose instantly and motioned for her to take his seat. Sarlana smiled at him and did so, immediately taking Sadi’s hand in hers as she settled down into the chair. She may have been Darastrixi but Sarlana had quickly taken note of how those among Martin’s command and the Ventori Lycavorians treated her. She was looked upon with the same awe and respect as Helen as the Feravomir of their people and Arzoal as the Dragon Elder Mother. This treatment did not sit well with her but Sarlana knew that there was little she could do to stop it. However, with Sadi and Ne’Veha and Andro’s wives and mates, with Dorian’s wives Sheva and Onera, Sarlana felt normal. And she adored being around all of them.

Martin nodded his head. “Yeah, I am beginning to see that.” He said in reply as Sarlana got comfortable at the table. “I also get the feeling that there was more to Dadrien than what the Darastrixi knew.”

Sarlana nodded her head in agreement. “So do I.” She spoke. “He obviously had a much higher command of the Etheric realm than anyone ever knew. His history before the Onkmet Darastrixi were wiped out is not well known and very little written history existed about him until he became our leader.”

“What about the Onkmet dragons themselves Doraanar?” Dorian asked.

Aviel shook his head from within the transmission and answered for her. “Again, very little was known about them Dahakoan Dorian. As Sarlana has already told you, they were the most reclusive of Darastrixi breeds and they...” Aviel stopped talking as he began thinking.

Sarlana looked at him. “Aviel?” She asked. “What is it?”

Aviel shook his head quickly. “I would need to speak with Dytin to be sure, but I am sure that I read something about the Onkmet as a boy that would indicate a much more evolved connection to this Etheric Realm that you speak of. It may explain, at least somewhat, why the Dahakoan of Dadrien’s time were able to do what they could do when no other Darastrixi alive could.”

“You are speaking of their abilities Koppentotz Aviel?” Laren asked now.

Aviel nodded his head. “Yes Laren. Before Dadrien formed the Dahakoan, no Darastrixi had ever been able to manipulate the Etheric realm before. We knew it existed, we believed in it because we saw the Pralor people using it so often, but up until the Dahakoan were formed as I said, no Darastrixi of either caste ever exhibited these skills. They could not manipulate it as you and the others King Martin, and correct me if I am wrong, the skills they did have manifest themselves from within the Etheric Realm.”

“Who chose the first Dahakoan?” Andro asked now.

“Dadrien of course.” Aviel answered.

“Precognition? The ability to sense others like them? To speak within the Etheric Realm? These are all rudimentary Etheric skills, yes.” Helen spoke now.

“But yet we had these abilities. Even from before I became a dragon, those Darastrixi on Elear had these abilities. I would not have been able to do what I did if they didn’t.” Arzoal spoke now from where she rested in the nearby pen with the two dozen adolescent dragons who had come from Manne to reinforce those already here. Since she was outside the building she wore one of the devices that Kasdan had developed for the dragons on Artaaya and her voice carried through the internal COM units in the Command Center.

Aviel looked at Martin. “My point exactly Elder Mother.” He stated having spent much time with Arzoal over these last days learning about her history and what she had accomplished. Needless to say he had never been more impressed by anyone’s history and he now looked at Arzoal in a new light of respect and partial awe.

Martin looked at Delnash in the transmission. “Chief Elder, the Pralor people were huge explorers and you have charted far more star systems than any of us.”

Delnash nodded his head. “Most of that information was lost with the destruction of our homeworld but yes.”

“In all of those explorations, who besides the Pralor people, Lycavorians and vampires, and now obviously the Darastrixi that were part of the Seed Mission to Elear, who else are naturally born with Etheric ability that you have come across?” Martin asked him.

Delnash shook his head from his office. “None that I am aware of Martin. Not unless one of our kind granted this ability to others or those that your people have turned as you call it.”

Martin turned to Sarlana now. “Who chose the dragons that went on the seed mission with you Sarlana?”

“I do not know.” Sarlana answered in almost a whisper. “The selection process was very secret and only a few within the UrIkrisir Mamiss knew who the candidates were until they were chosen.”

Martin looked at Androcles and saw his son’s eyes upon him. They were thinking the same thing he knew.

[You know?] Martin spoke to his son.

Androcles nodded his head slowly, everyone in the room realizing that father and son were speaking to one another in a shielded conversation that no one would ever be able to breach unless they allowed it. [His last physical descendant is among those who are chosen to go to Elear.] Andro spoke now. [And the Elder Mother just happens to chose that egg to transfer her consciousness too?]

[What are the chances of that happening do you think keto?] Martin asked.

[Without a guiding hand of some sort... slim to none father.] Andro answered.

[Yeah, my thoughts exactly.] Martin spoke. [It is being driven.] Martin said evenly. [All of it. Everything that has happened through the millennia has taken place for a reason.]

[For what purpose father?] Andro asked. [And by who?]

[Dadrien is only one part of it Andro. He was the last surviving Winter dragon, he chose or guided those who chose the dragons to go to Elear] Martin answered him. [These things happened too far apart in both time and space for him to effect all of it. Sumar is another part, but there are still unanswered questions concerning him as well. The question remains who?]

“Martin?” Anja spoke from within her transmission. “What’s wrong Lover?”

Martin shook his head and looked at her. “Nothing.” He answered quickly. “I was just thinking.”

Anja did not press him on the subject for she knew he would share it with Aricia, For'mya and her when they were alone.

“So what is our play then?” Anja asked.

Sarlana looked at Anja in the transmission. “Was she clear in whom she spoke of Anja?”

Anja nodded her head quickly. “Oh yes, she was very specific in stating that Dadrien was the one who began her on this path. She only met Sumar etherically and that was not until much later.”

Sarlana looked at Martin now. “That would explain why it is a Darastrixi ship we are detecting and not a Pralor ship.”

“A Darastrixi ship with Pralor technology Sarlana.” Martin interjected.

Sarlana nodded her head. “Which indicates that Dadrien had already contacted and was working with the Pralor people.”

“Which is amazing given that Avatar 27 can find no instance in our entire history where an exchange of technology took place with the Darastrixi.” Delnash spoke once more. “The Teleporter, the Etheric Sensor Grid, these were things that we shared with no one Martin. Hardly anyone outside of our military, as small as it was, knew of them. And the Etheric Void Shield was still only in a theoretical stage when the first Scourge War began.”

“Did Sumar know of it?” Martin asked.

Delnash nodded his head. “As Chief Elder of course he did.” Delnash asked. “But by the time he became Chief Elder the project had been long abandoned because of the need for those assets to go towards our war with the Scourge.”

“The readings from your ship indicate that it is a much older class Darastrixi vessel King Martin.” Kenroe spoke now moving up beside Aviel. “Approximately two hundred and fifty-six thousand years old. It is still in pristine condition for such an old ship, which tells me it has not seen any action of any prolonged kind.”

“Perhaps because it built exactly for this particular mission.” For'mya spoke now. “To come here with the Pralor Seed Mission of these Lycavorians and park itself at the bottom of the ocean. This technology was obviously integrated into this ship completely. That takes time and personnel. Melyanna... she did tell you the Lycavorians on that planet do not know that she is Darastrixi, yet they refer to her as Oracle?”

Anja nodded her head. “Yes. A few know what she is according to her, but that number is miniscule when compared to the population of the planet, and she really only truly revealed that to others in the last few millennia.”

“What is the population Anja?” Aricia asked.

“Upwards of sixteen billion here.” Anja answered. “The planet, Jetania, is roughly the same size as Apo Prime. Eighty-seven major cities that we have scanned, with an equal number of large and modern settlements in the many Mountain Ranges. Hundreds of smaller settlements across the planet, but all of them modern for the most part. It is nowhere near as populated as Apo Prime, which is surprising to some degree, considering how long they have been here.” Anja leaned forward. “From intercepted COMS we have been able to determine that there are nine large colonies on other worlds within the system itself, and if the population numbers are even semi accurate, there are an additional twenty-four billion total among those nine cities, at least by the last census this Coalition had on record. So forty billion total. Mari was able to crack their low level history archives with little trouble. Their technology is slightly better than what we have seen on their ships, but it appears they have just not got around to integrating it into their fleet.”

Deion's face beamed at this news from where he stood beside his brother and Emylea. All of them had taken notice of how she had clung to his arm when they entered the Command Center, yet no one would question him or her about it, or the fact that Emylea's blood now carried his scent as well as Mari's within it. They would announce this when they felt the time was right, but it would essentially free Namiri and Androcles of having to maintain the façade that they were showing and allow Namiri and Byron to fully be open about what they now felt for one another. And the one who would soon join them much to their own shock but delighted surprise.

Helen nodded her head. “The numbers match up relatively speaking.” She spoke now. “They were obviously here before the Ventori Lycavorians, so a population of this size does reflect how prolifically our people breed.”

Martin looked at Anja in the transmission. “The Alphas from Ventori went there Red?” He asked.

Anja nodded once more. “That is what she told me. Many were not happy about it from what she says, but they were misled by this fool Osrod's great grandfather.” She replied. “They thought they would be free to return to Ventori after learning new skills and technology in order to advance their own lives and those of the Betas and Gammas they left behind. It was done very hush, hush Lover. Taken from Ventori in the night.”

“Which would explain why Nalmos and the others say they just up and disappeared.” Martin said.

Anja nodded her head. “Yes.” She leaned forward. “They obviously thought the Betas and other castes would die out over time without Alpha leadership.”

Martin shook his head quickly. “Not with the caliber of leaders like Nalmos and the other Justices that were chosen. They jumped in almost immediately and kept that from happening.” He commented.

“Martin, let me go there.” Anja spoke now as she looked at him. “This Darastrixi woman Nilantha has guaranteed our safety among the other things she has told us. She has kept the ship she is on hidden for thousands of years and nothing this Coalition has that we have seen so far in the way of technology could begin to detect it. This may well be a chance to discover things we never knew about our people and your history Lover.”

“I'm not willing to put you, our children or our family at risk for my history Red.” Martin said quickly. “No matter how important it is. Not to mention that there is obviously some sort of internal political discord between the Packs on that planet. I don't want to get involved in that. That could get really messy really quickly.”

“I'll go anyway.” Anja told him. “You know that.”

“Sibfla Red!” Martin snapped. “It's too dangerous and once you are on the planet COMS will be...”

“Three days.” Anja spoke. “Give me three days and if we don’t respond every day at predetermined times you can come rushing to my rescue. You know I like it when you sweep me off my feet.”

“Anja...” Martin snapped once more. “This...”

“She is right staaniketo.” Dynina spoke softly.

Martin looked at her now stunned. “Staania... you are the one who chewed my ass for letting her go in the first place!” He spoke exasperated.

Dynina nodded her head. “And as you correctly pointed out to me, I was being driven by my own experiences with them, my dislike of them and what was attempted with me. All of which was unpleasant. This is an opportunity that we never had Martin. And it may reveal more answers to the questions we already have. Maybe about the temple on Lorenu.”

“Fervon, we are forgetting that these midaeus knew what they were doing.” Danny spoke now. “They knew who they wanted to take and it wasn’t any of the Ventori Lycavorians. It was our people.”

“Daniel is correct Martin.” Murano entered the conversation now.

“Which begs the question how they knew?” Sadi spoke now.

Sarlana nodded in agreement. “Indeed.”

Dynina looked at Martin now. “That well may be our fault.” She spoke.

Martin looked at her now. “Staania?”

“I have told you that several hundred of their people left with us after our first and only encounter with them.” Dynina said.

“Yeah.” Martin said.

“We left a dozen couples there as well Martin. Hidden among those we made friends with.” Kenroe spoke now. “With the equipment to relay reports to us on Lorenu.”

“I’m not going to like this am I?” Martin spoke.

“Eighteen months after we left, they stopped reporting back to us.” Dynina told him calmly. “Given how events turned out and ended between myself and Osrod’s grandfather, we assumed that they had been discovered and killed. The last orders given by the COLS military over the channels we were monitoring as we left the system were that any of us captured were to be executed immediately. Perhaps... perhaps this is not the case.”

“You never attempted to find out Dynina?” Aricia asked her.

Dynina shook her head slowly in shame. “No. I did not want to risk a larger confrontation between us. As it turned out, I was correct because when we tried to move to Ventori to assist them after the Svorag attacked, COLS ships intervened and forced us to turn back. Perlae told you of this?”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes.” He answered remembering what Perlae had recounted to him when he had first spoken to her.

“Do you think they survived Staania?” Androcles asked now.

“I do not know. However, if they did survive, it could then account for what limited knowledge that they do have on us.” Dynina spoke in reply.

“What did they know?” Martin asked.

Dynina shook her head. “They were mated couples. Most of them were engineers or doctors and such. Kenroe and the others had not begun the intense schooling that all of those on Lorenu go through now, but their knowledge was far more than what COLS had at the time. This could explain how they have advanced so rapidly in the last few decades and how they built the sensor array that would detect our use of the Portal Generators.”

“If that is the case, how are they not more advanced then?” Martin said.

“Simple.” Dynina answered. “Resources. No matter what they may have learned from those we left behind, they did not have the resources to build such things. At least not to the same level as what we had at the time.”

“They also did not have the advantage of Sumar and the other Pralors integrating into their society as those on Lycavore did Martin.” This caused Martin and the others to turn and look at him. “Had Sumar not done what he did, society on your homeworld might not have advanced much past what this Coalition is now.” Delnash spoke from his holo link.

“The Ion storm and Lorendo’s actions forced us there Delnash.” Wayonn added quickly.

“Did they?” Delnash questioned causing all eyes and heads to look at him. “I have given this much thought over these last few weeks Martin.”

“Go on sir.” Martin told him glancing at Andro once more and seeing the same look that told him Delnash was thinking like they were.

“What we have learned up until now, what we are still learning, who is to say this was not all part of whoever was directing this plan? Are you not the one who likes to think outside the box as you say Martin? All of you do this. I am only just starting to think this way myself and having Avatar 27 with me has only made this easier. There are far too many coincidences for this to be just random acts throughout the millennia Martin.”

Martin nodded his head. “That is a scary thought Delnash, but I agree with you.” He said in reply.

“It is scary yes, but given what we know now, all of it seems to be directed at one thing in some way, shape or form.” Delnash said.

“The Scourge.” Andro whispered the name.

Delnash nodded his head in agreement. “Yes, Androcles. They are on the peripheral of this in every way, but what we have discovered so far seems to be directed at giving us the means to confronting them on more equal terms. The fact that the Praetorian gene, as rare as it is, was passed from those among Sumar’s ship and into the Lycavorians and even the vampires. That is something that none of us ever considered. In essence, and I am sure Murano will agree with me on this, in doing what Sumar and Wayonn and others did, integrating into Lycavorian population as they did, they created a different breed of Praetorian. A better and more powerful breed.”

Murano nodded his head. “This is true.”

“Are you saying that Sumar himself knew these things before all of this began?” Martin spoke.

Delnash nodded his head. “How else would he have known just when to send Dynina and the others away? How would he have known to contact the Darastrixi and Pralors, who were obviously already working at Dadrien’s direction, and have them send ships to Lycavore? Now we have discovered what Androcles, Dorian and Laren truly are? It seems to be...” Delnash stopped for a moment and Martin turned to face him fully.

“Brother?” Murano spoke now. “Speak what is on your mind.”

Delnash looked up at his brother in the transmission and then at Martin. “It seems as if someone is trying to unite our three species in some way Martin. Dynina and those with her are the largest sign of this. Ten thousand from each of our species that no one ever knew about except Sumar and Dadrien. They have come together, lived and worked together for thousands of years now. It is as if... to me at least, it is as if someone is attempting to atone for some sort of imagined mistakes they committed and this is their way of doing so. Bringing together the only three species in known history that ever resisted the Scourge and were successful.”

“Now that is an even scarier thought.” Anja chimed in.

“I agree Anja.” Delnash spoke softly. “But what if it is... what if it is true?”

“You are speaking of the Onab Delnash.” Wayonn said.

Delnash looked at him. “Maybe Wayonn.” He answered honestly. “I just don’t know. My people had more interaction with them when they existed but even that was limited in many ways. They were even more reclusive than how Aviel and the others describe these Onkmet dragons as being. We don’t really know what the Onab were capable of as a species. They were technological geniuses, that much we do know. They were the ones who helped us to develop and then build the Psionic Transference Chambers like the one Arzoal used. Like the one we used to punish Xaxon after what he did. This piece of equipment was not standard issue for Seed Missions Martin, yet there was one on Elear. And Arzoal discovered it.”

This brought everyone in the three locations to total silence as they contemplated what Delnash had said. Many ideas and scenarios were running through so many different minds that no one would have been able to keep up with it. It was the smallest of them that broke the silence after several long and reflective moments.

“We don’t really know what knowledge COLS has?” Anja stated from SPARTAN ONE. “Which is why we need to do this Lover.”

Martin looked at her intently and then turned to Aricia and For'mya first, both of them nodding their heads immediately. He looked at Danny and he nodded after a moment. He turned to Androcles, his oldest son and perhaps the one-person Martin Leonidas relied upon more than even his wives and mates and his brother, and Andro nodded as well. Finally, he turned to look at Dynina, Jezima, Dasha and his mother. All four women grasped each other’s hands and they nodded their heads. Martin looked back to Anja in the transmission.

“I don’t like it Red.” Martin told her.

Anja nodded in response to his words. “I know Lover.” She told him with a loving voice. “But you also know it has to be done. I will be careful Martin. I will not do anything that will risk our family, you know that.”

Martin nodded after a moment. “The first check in you miss, I’m coming for you Anja.” Martin told her. “And I won’t be coming to shake hands and kiss babies.”

Anja Leonidas had to smile where she was sitting. It was one of the many things that she and her fellow Queens all adored about Martin so much. He worshiped all of them and he made no bones about it. They belonged to him and since For'mya returned to them, he would allow no one to stand between him and his wives and mates.

“I know Lover.” Anja told him. “And that makes my hormones giddy.” She told him with a twinkle in her jade green eyes, causing Martin to blush slightly even under his dark tan. “Use Delta Protocols if you want Lover, but you and Andro and the others go to Lorenu and find out about this temple. Everything we have talked about right now seems to start at this temple. Find out what is there and then come here.”

Martin met her gaze. “You’re certain?”

Anja nodded her head. “Nothing is ever certain, but I am pretty sure this Nilantha and those with her are not our enemies.”

“And if you are wrong Anja?” Aricia asked her.

“Then we will put a hurting on them and E&E until you get here.” Anja responded with confidence. “Between Kalis, Tir’ut, Radem and Zarah and Lucia, we have more than enough power and skill to clean house short term if need be.”

Martin knew that to be true and he glanced at Androcles with a nod. It was his idea to send Kalis, Tir'ut and Radem and wherever Radem went Zarah and Lucia went with him. Between the five of them and the power and skill they could bring to bear if needed Martin felt secure. When you added Mari’s astounding computer skills and Normya’s piloting skills they had nearly every facet covered. Martin turned back to Anja. “Go with it Red.” He spoke now.

Anja nodded her head. “If I call you’ll come running right?”

Martin’s eyes narrowed. “With guns blazing. You know that.”

Anja beamed as she nodded her head. “I will see you in three days Lover.” She spoke. “Aricia, you and For'mya keep him under control.” She said looking at her.

Aricia smiled and nodded her head. “You know we will.”

Anja took a deep breath and nodded once more. “Ok. SPARTAN ONE is clear. Seeya soon.”

Martin watched as the transmission ended and he instantly turned to Danny who had risen to his feet in preparation of the order he knew his brother would give. “Delta Protocols fervon.” Martin spoke quickly. “Two ships. Have Manda pick them, but they need to have ground support capabilities. She’ll know what to send. You give the orders though.”

Danny was nodding his head and was already moving for the door. “I’m on it.” He replied.

Martin turned to Dynina. “Staanina how long to install one of these Portal Generators aboard Andro’s ship?”

Dynina looked at the active transmission with Aviel and Kenroe in it. “Kenroe?” She asked.

Kenroe shook his head. “A few hours at most, especially with the Worker Drones helping to align the matrix.”

Martin turned to look at his son but he was already lifting his hand to his jaw and he tapped the implant under his skin. “Armen?”

-I have been monitoring Androcles- He answered instantly. -I will make whatever they need available as soon as they come on board-

Andro nodded and looked at his father. “What about the ones we have outside father?” He asked. “They are being held near Pad Three.”

Martin nodded and exhaled heavily. “I can’t hold them all responsible for what happen.” He spoke. “And Red has the midaeus who actually conducted the attack. We...”

Martin looked up as Danny stuck his head and shoulders back into the Command Center. “Fervon... Nubian and her team just landed.”

Everyone saw Martin’s eyes narrow intensely and he nodded his head. “Take him to where the others are being held. He belongs to me.” Martin growled as he began heading for the exit.

Everyone in the room began rising to their feet to follow him, Gorgo and Dasha reaching out to stop Jezima from following. She looked at them puzzled.

“Jezima...” Gorgo spoke softly. “Perhaps it would be best if...”

Jezima shook her head quickly. “I will not.” She said firmly. “He is my blood. Would Sumar have dealt with this man any differently after he joined your people?”

Gorgo and Dasha looked at Dynina now and she shook her head slowly. “If someone had assaulted Sateia in this way... there would have been no mercy or respite. Not from Sumar’s wrath.” She answered.

Jezima nodded her head. “Then I will accept whatever punishment my grandson deems necessary for this foolish man who struck Anja.” Jezima spoke. “I do not fear what he is, for my blood runs within him as well Gorgo.”

Gorgo nodded her head. “Then steel yourself Jezima.” She spoke knowing exactly what her son would do for she had seen it before. “And justice will be done.”

Laon Kavar knelt on the ground in the front rank of the crew of the MOON RUNNER. They were gathered in the large open field not far from what was obviously a landing pad of some sort as he saw two different types of aircraft resting on the pad there. Incredibly advanced aircraft that he had never seen before in his life, much like the one that had brought him to the surface. Much of what had taken place after he was attacked by the captivating raven haired beauty on the ship was a blur. The white haired, pointy eared female with the amber colored eyes had taken charge of him. That she was not fully wolf was obvious to Laon, but the scent of the wolf blood within her was unlike anything he had ever smelled. More potent and pure than any wolf scent he had ever smelled, even Lazar’s father did not have such a scent and he was the most formidable wolf on Jetania.

The azure colored eyes of the female still haunted him though, and her deliciously sweet coca and mint scent was maddening to Laon. Never had a female affected him so, and never had he seen one so well trained and lethal. The amber eyed female and the one with Maya colored blue eyes who was not wolf had overseen his placement in a secure portion of the ship and then escorted him to the surface here. He had seen four other females on the ship as he was being brought to the surface, the jungle green eyed blond female was one of the most powerful Alpha females he had ever smelled before in his life. There was another blond with stunning blue eyes, another female with pointy ears and one with sky blue skin. All of them reeked of the scent of an Alpha male so deeply embedded in their blood that Laon could almost picture what this Alpha looked like. His mind kept returning to the azure blue eyed female wolf however, and what she made him feel and he found himself looking all around for her even in their current predicament.

The stern faces of over a hundred Lycavorians in black and crimson armor surrounded him and his crew however, and he was unable to look beyond where they were all kneeling. The armor, the weapons, the ships, Laon Kavar could not help but think they had stumbled upon something that Lazar’s father had not told them about. Whoever these Lycavorians and the other species among them were, they were vastly better trained than any Coalition forces Laon had seen in action. Their ships and equipment alone meant they were far more advanced in their technology than anything that COLS could field. Laon could detect dozens of half breeds among their ranks, yet the wolf blood within them was very dominant and even among those he could mark as Beta wolves, it was pure and potent. Laon looked at Kitas, who knelt beside him and had been part of Lazar’s ground team.

“Lazar escaped?” Laon whispered to him.

Kitas turned his head slowly and looked at him. “I don’t know. That nubous fool Sibot took half our security and went after one of their ships. He said he was going to take whoever was on it and bring them back to the King so that he could interrogate them. I informed Lazar and he said he would take care of it and that I should prepare to leave.” Kitas looked at him. “They were upon us before we even knew they were there Laon. They appeared like iquees from the night already within our ranks.” (Ghosts)

Laon looked around at the Lycavorians around them. “It would appear that they have adapted their Stealth technology for personal use as well.” He told Kitas trying to remain calm. “It is the only explanation.”

“I don’t care about explanations!” Kitas hissed softly. “My men and I were on the ground and disarmed before I had a chance to fucking blink. Sibot went after one of their ships! What do you think they will do to us? The Officer of the Deck said one minute everything was fine, and the next people began to disappear from all over the MOON RUNNER. White orange flashes of light and entire groups of our crew vanished!”

“Vanished?” Laon gasped.

Kitas nodded his head. “They have some sort of teleportation system. It has to be. The MOON RUNNER was empty before he could send out an alert or put the shields up. Less than a minute Laon! What did Lazar get us into?”

“This is not Lazar’s fault Kitas!” Laon told him quickly. “He knew none of this! This is the King’s doing! He sent us here blind, while Sibot had his own mission!”

“They have sinuovas that fight with them Laon! Sinuovas! The same beasts from stories that we were read as children and they fight beside these Lycavorians! And they talk!” Kitas rasped out the words still not believing that he was saying it.

Laon blinked and looked at him. “Talk.” He gasped.

Kitas nodded his head. “I heard one of them speaking with those who captured us as we were exiting the ship.”

“Carians.” Laon whispered to himself.

“What did our fool King send us into Laon?” Kitas spat softly.

“The unknown.” The voice spoke from directly in front of them, both Kitas and Laon snapping their heads around when the two figures materialize directly in front of them squatting down on their level.

“Fuck!” Laon gasped aloud leaning back in stunned shock.

The two figures, both of them exceptionally powerful Alphas which was setting Laon’s own wolf senses on alert. Whoever they were, their aura surpassed his in a way Laon could not yet understand. His brain was working however, and Laon instantly detected the pines and lavender scent, the mint and coca scent, and he promptly made the connection. The female on the ship, she had the same scent as one of them but all three of them were tied tightly together and Laon knew instantly that these hulking men were her brothers. Laon also remembered the scent on the amber eyed female as well as the others on the ship and it radiated from this very large Lycavorian in front of him. This is the one who had claimed all six of them. The larger of the two, clearly the older one and much more thickly muscled motioned to the second male who squatted beside him. “This is aur fervon Deion Leonidas. I am Androcles Leonidas. Deion is the twin brother of the female wolf you rudely pulsed with your aura on our ship. She is our sister you see.” Androcles spoke evenly. “We are very protective of our sister, especially Deion here.”

Laon never saw it coming and Deion’s fist connected with his jaw like a sledgehammer, rocking his head back painfully and knocking him over onto the ground. He bit his tongue viciously and Laon felt warm blood splash across his taste buds. Laon Kavar was a powerful and proud Alpha however, and he twisted his body on the ground, quickly rising back to his knees even as the pain washed over his head. He had not been hit that hard in his entire life and he knew he was going to feel it. His fangs burst forth and his eyes changed to that of his wolf persona as he turned back to Androcles and Deion, but he knew instantly it was the wrong thing to do.

“Foolish.” Androcles said and then his fist snapped out and smashed into Laon’s cheek with even greater power and his entire upper body spun around, his eyes exploding with bright stars all around and he was barely able to maintain consciousness. No one was in a position to help him or break his fall and he hit the ground hard enough to have a small cloud of dust erupt from around him.

“Andro! Deo! Joa cova!” The female voice barked out and Kitas turned his head quickly to see the young, and exquisitely beautiful raven haired Alpha female with azure colored eyes move between the two large Alpha wolves. She was an Alpha female herself Kitas took note and she imposed her body between the two Alphas and Laon. Kitas immediately smelled their relation and he looked up at them as they rose to stare at her.

[Arande?] Andro spoke to Nara as she put her hands on their chests. He sniffed her scent gently and both his and Deion's eyes grew a little wider. Deion stepped closer to his twin and Nara smiled happily as she felt his brother's aura wash over her.

[Nara you have... your blood no longer burns... you have... you have claimed her!] Deion gasped.

[Jacina?!] Andro gasped now stepping closer to her as Deion had done and Nara couldn't help but bask in the love of her twin and older brother.

[It... it was glorious Deion!] Nara told him happily. [I was helpless after this fool...] Nara turned to see Kitas and another trying to assist Laon back to his knees. She turned back to her brothers and both Deion and Andro noticed that her azure colored eyes, identical to their mother and Andro's, were bright and clear and focused. [We were meant for each other Andro.] Nara continued looking at her older brother. [Jacina felt it too. From the moment we met. When he... when he...]

Andro reached up and cupped her cheek in his hand, Nara smiling as both of them pulsed her with their auras. [You do not need to explain it to anyone sister.] Andro told her. [Least of all to Deion and I.]

Nara looked at him, her identical azure eyes gleaming and bright. [This man is... let me deal with this fervor. He is different Andro. And he affects both Jacina and I. She could feel it too after I showed her how to...]

Andro shook his head. [Nara enough... we do not need to know how or why. Only that it is.] He told her.

[Avoi.] Deion said leaning over to nuzzle her cheek firmly and hearing Nara giggle in delight as her twin's aura floated all around her and danced across her senses. [Do what you will sister, but be sure. Both of you.]

Nara nodded her head and took their hands. [Trust in me.]

Andro smiled at her. [Always.]

[I will take care of this fool.] Nara said.

Andro and Deion nodded and Andro turned to look at Jomann who stood a few feet away with a look of approval on his face. Eliani and Brendi stood on either side of their beloved husband and mate, an equal look of approval on their faces.

"This one Jomann." Andro spoke now. "And the one beside him. They are officers. Make sure they are separated from the others when father is done."

Jomann nodded his head. "Done."

Nara turned slowly, her azure eyes falling on where Jacina stood between Sadi and Ne'Veha, holding their hands tightly. It had taken place so quickly and so completely that in truth it had stolen their breath away.

Jacina met Nara's gaze from across the short distance and her smile held nothing but love and adoration. Jacina had taken Nara back to the main cabin of the PREMONITION to get her away from the male who had affected her so. At the time she had no idea what had taken place between them, but these last days with Nara Leonidas had been unlike any in her young life. Jacina was over three hundred years older than Nara, but to her it felt as if they were two buds of the same plant. What they had in common had stunned her beyond anything she had ever experienced and even in the first hours after they had met, Jacina had felt her emotions and connection to this exquisite woman growing stronger by the minute. They had not been apart since they had met, and slowly Jacina had felt that connection grow into desire. A deep and powerful desire that threatened to sweep her away at times. She could not explain it, only that it had felt glorious from the outset.

In the main cabin of the ship she had held Nara close to her while she shook in her arms, the vibrations of her body lessening somewhat as the minutes passed, but this only served to increase Jacina's own desire. Jacina did not know how it happened, and now she did not care. Their lips had come together somehow, and the world for both of them had changed right then. Somehow, they had found themselves in one of the empty guest cabins on the ship, and then the world for Jacina exploded into brilliant white lights of pleasure as Nara's lips and tongue and hands had explored her lush body with urgency and ardent fervor. It had gone on for nearly three hours, their passion and blood pounding in their heads and drowning out even what had taken place with her mother Anja. Neither of them felt anything else but each other, they saw no one else but each other, and the pleasures they had given to one another had both of them screaming out their passion. They could not get enough of one another, tasting and loving one another in more ways than Jacina thought could exist.

Their bodies were entwined, their skin slick with sweat and passion, their breasts pressed together and their centers touching in very intimate fashion. Nara had been staring into her eyes and Jacina had only nodded once knowing without question it was what she wanted more than anything. The pain was sharp and quick, but it was soon followed by a burning pleasure that swept through her body and ignited a fire within her unlike anything Jacina had ever felt. Nara had held her body crushed to her own, her fangs buried deep in the hollow of her neck, as the virus rushed through her system and even then began changing Jacina into something so very different. Since her Etheric abilities were already so advanced, the transition was much faster and far more thorough. The pureness of Nara's blood saw to that. Three and a half hours of unmitigated passion and lustful sex and without one single doubt or question filling her mind, Jacina felt herself blossom into the woman she had always known she would be. The powerful Lycavorian virus had changed her quickly and completely and soon the voices and scents of so many new people and things filled her mind. Nara had wrapped her mind within a protective cocoon and within moments she had shown Jacina what she needed to know in order to tame those voices and begin to sort through the myriad of new scents. The one thing that filled her mind and senses more than anything was the coca and mint scent of her sweet Nara, and the love that flowed through her directly onto Nara. She could feel the same being reciprocated back from Nara and this is all Jacina needed to feel in order to know this is where her future lay. This is what she wanted her future to be.

Sadi had been the first to detect the scent of their loving making and then Jacina's change. As Nara and Jacina had laid in that bed, stroking each other's flesh and basking in the new sensations that coursed through them, it was Sadi who had come to the quarters quickly explaining what had taken place. Jacina had been horrified and Nara had almost been beside herself in shame, but Sadi had quickly set them right. It was Ne'Veha and then Sehri who were next to enter the room, filled with happiness and love for what had occurred between them. With their added power and ability, it was a simple thing to instruct Jacina in how to manage the new abilities she would have, at least initially. More instruction would come they had told her, probably from Nara's mothers and more than likely Androcles, but what they had shown her was enough to at least allow her to not shut herself in a room and try to hide until she had better control. This was most important to Jacina for she had not wanted to leave Nara's side for anything and she insisted on going to the surface with her. Now she stood with Sadi and Ne'Veha on either side of her and Sehri just in front of her, each of them extremely powerful Alpha females in their own right, and all of them were focused on shielding Jacina from the burning of her new and developing wolf blood because of the man Nara stood in front of. It was nearly unheard of for this to take place in two separate female wolves for the same male, which to Jacina only confirmed the knowledge that she and Nara had always been meant for one another. They were one person and mind now really, and Jacina's turning had made that very possible and utterly complete.

Whoever this male was, his aura caused their blood to burn for him and only the fact that they had taken each other over and over in the last few hours; and Sadi and Ne'Veha were now helping them to resist that calling, allowed Jacina to be this close to him and maintain control. Nara would show her how she did it later when they were wrapped within each other's arms and tasting each other to their heart's content.

Nara tore her eyes from Jacina's delicious face and body and looked at where Laon kneeled in front of her. She took a deep breath, inhaling the potent aroma of his Red Oak scent and feeling it want to set her wolf senses afire. Nara knelt before Laon and he leaned back with wide eyes as she reached around and withdrew the wickedly curved, razor sharp fighting blade of the Shakur Fighting Knife. Nara looked at him, his soft blue eyes making her want to jump his bones right there.

"I apologize to you for my brother's actions." Nara told him seeing his eyes go a little wider. "They are very protective of me and all of their sisters."

Nara could tell he was holding his aura tightly in check by force of will. His scent told her that his instincts were calling out for him to pulse her over and over and take her but he was resisting this instinct admirably. He was powerful Nara decided. His blood was pure and wild and his scent tickled her female senses like no other Alpha male ever had, and Nara Leonidas had been respectfully pulsed by dozens of Alpha males since her Coming of Age had passed. This man however, this Alpha wolf, Nara Leonidas wanted to lose herself within his aura. She wanted to taste his hard body in every way, to feel his naked flesh against her own and feel him thrusting deep within her body. Jacina's new female aura was also pulsing and flowing through her and she was feeling the same things, which made it even stronger.

Never fear the unknown. That is what their family lived by, and Nara Leonidas was about to take that leap of faith.

Nara looked at Laon, his eyes still wide and wary of her. She reached up with a piece of cloth she pulled from her belt and slowly drew it across his lips, wiping away the blood from his skin and chin. She then leaned close to Laon, bringing her lips and nose right up to his cheek and causing him to tense slightly but unable to move back because of his awkward position. Nara inhaled deeply of his Red Oak scent and gasped softly when that scent filtered through her and ignited her senses. She drew upon Sadi, Ne'Veha and Sehri without question, fighting the sensations within her and then did something that would make certain Laon did not forget her or Jacina. Nara leaned closer and pressed her cheek to his, rubbing her skin against the soft growth of his facial hair and making sure that the scent glands along the back of her ear rubbed against his skin firmly.

Nara drew back her head and looked at him. "My name is Nara Leonidas." She spoke softly so that only he could hear her. Nara looked back at Jacina. "That is Jacina Leonidas, my wife and mate." She turned back to Laon who was staring at her with wide eyes. "We are one and the same and our blood screams for you. My father and mothers have raised us to be strong and independent and to go after what we want. We want you. We want to taste your aura, we want to feel you within us, and we want to give you more pleasure than you have ever imagined existed. But know this..." Nara held up the Shakur fighting knife so that Laon could see it clearly.

"The next time that your aura and scent washes across our senses, your intent had better be to take us and claim us as your wives and mates and make us scream your name to the moon. If that is not your intent, then I will use this..." Nara showed him the knife once more as her other hand snapped out and she grabbed his crotch in her free hand. Laon stiffened as her small hand closed around his cock and squeezed tightly. Nara gasped slightly when she closed her fingers around his cock and she barely suppressed the groan she wanted to let out feeling the impressive size and thickness in her hand. She heard the soft gasp that Jacina let out when she felt what Nara was feeling in her mind and Nara blinked quickly and met his wide eyes once more.

"I will use this blade here and I will cut your wretched cock from your body and watch as you scream and bleed your way unto death." Nara told him. She looked down at where her hand was holding his cock through his pants and then she looked back up into his wide eyes, her own azure colored eyes now almost glowing in desire and suppressed want. "Lon cedaur tur a nubous rasam." (That would be a fucking shame)

Laon heard the female laughter and he looked up to see several of the Lycavorian females nearby laughing softly with each other as they glanced at one another. His instincts and senses told him they were not laughing at him in a derogatory fashion, only at the stunned look in his eyes at Nara's words. They correctly deduced that Laon had never had an Alpha female wolf express her desire for him so completely or so forcefully.

"Think about that." Nara told Laon as she released his crotch and rose back to her feet, her wolf blood yearning to feel this powerful Alpha take her and Jacina. "Jomann?" Nara spoke turning her head.

Jomann looked at her, a smile on his face. "Princess?"

Laon looked up at Nara with even wider eyes when Jomann called her that. Nara looked at him. "Do as Andro said, but insure he is kept from harm please."

Jomann looked at Eliani now and she squeezed his arm and nodded her head. Eliani pulsed him gently with her own aura and Jomann felt a small portion of what Nara was experiencing because of this male wolf. He turned back to Nara and stepped away from Eliani to move up beside her. Nara met his eyes.

"I will see to it Nara." He spoke softly and he leaned over to kiss her cheek as Nara reached out and squeezed his arm in thanks.

Nara then did the only thing she could do and she moved directly to where Jacina was and embraced her tightly while their lips came together unashamedly in front of all of the prisoners. Jomann glanced at Laon now and he turned to face him fully.

"I am the Crown Prince's Captain." Jomann spoke sternly now looking at Laon intensely. "Whatever happens in the future, you must know one thing." Jomann shifted his body and then he squatted in front of Laon. "If you hurt Nara or Jacina in any way wolf, physically or even emotionally, there will be no place you can hide from the wrath of her family and me. We will find you, and it will take you three very long and painful days to die."

"I do not fear death." Laon boasted to this dominant Alpha wolf.

Jomann smiled at him, his eyes changing and his fangs extending fully. "You should not fear it." He said. "If you hurt them in any way, death will be a release that you beg for. You should remember that."

It was something that the crew members of the MOON RUNNER would never forget and this action, unbeknownst to Martin Leonidas, would begin the wave of utter loyalty to him that would reach fevered proportions in the years to come.

Nayeca walked behind the two Durcumusaan as they dragged Sibot between them. She stopped when Danny moved up to her and they shared a loving kiss. The Hadarian medic had healed his wounds though her heart had not really been in it and though he was now shackled securely Sibot felt powerful again. He would escape and he would wreak havoc among these fools before getting off this planet and seeking his vengeance against Lazar he thought to himself as he moved along between the men. He looked at the crew of the MOON RUNNER all kneeling on the ground, took note of Laon as the black haired female embraced and shared a passionate kiss with the red haired woman. He grimaced in disgust at such a display but he had no more time to think as the two large Alphas toss him down in front of the first rank of his ship mates. Almost directly in front of Laon Kavar.

“Sibot forn nubous igord!” Laon snarled angrily, his voice carrying over the open area and drawing attention from everyone. “You have done this? Our mission was to observe, not attack!”

Sibot looked at him as he rose to his knees. “You are weak Laon!” Sibot growled. “We do not observe! We are Lycavorians! We take and conquer! Lazar is weak, just like you! That is why his father gave me my mission!”

“And look what that got you midaeus!” Laon barked. “You killed our own people! You butchered them!”

“They were Betas!” Sibot spat. “They are beneath us! Just as all of these half breeds and fake Alphas around us are! You should have fought them! Killed them! Instead you let them take you prisoner like children!”

“Lazar was right about you!” Laon growled. “We should have killed you long ago and given your carcass to the cold of space!”

Sibot chuckled. “And that is why you will always be weak.” He snarled. “You cannot do what must be done! I am a true Alpha! I am...”

“A true Alpha?” The deep voice echoed in the still air cutting off Sibot’s words as his head snapped around trying to find out where the words had come from. The murmurs of shock and awe rumbled forth from the crew of the MOON RUNNER as they saw the air shimmer beside Sibot and then the body of the tall and incredibly muscular wolf appeared. This shock and awe turned to downright fear as the aura and dominance projecting forth from this wolf was staggeringly powerful. It was more powerful than any aura any of them had ever felt before. More powerful than even the oldest and strongest of the Alphas from their many different Packs on Jetania.

And far more powerful and dominating than the wolf they called King.

Sibot’s head lifted and he looked up into the bearded face of the Alpha in front of him his eyes wide. He too could feel the intensity of the aura being projected from this wolf. It was raw, pure and unrefined Alpha power unlike any he had ever felt in his lifetime. It permeated the air around him, thick and more potent than even the man Sibot called King. He saw those yellow gold wolf eyes and the savage looking dual fangs that were now fully extended. Long, dual wolf fangs that he had heard about only in legends spoken of by old fools. Sibot’s eyes bugged out of his head as he felt the vice like grip close around his throat. He never saw the large hand move towards him and now he began to feel fear creep quickly into his body as that hand tightened on his neck. Fear the likes of which he had never experienced before.

“I smell the blood of my Queen on your foul body boy!” Martin snarled loudly, his voice carrying without him even trying. “My Queen you fucking maggot!”

Martin felt the power well within him. The anger at what his beautiful and cherished Anja had endured at the hands of this fool. The pain she must have suffered. The lives that had been taken by him personally and by the orders he had given. Martin Leonidas did not hold back and the Etheric power swelled around him in a bluish white glow that no one had ever seen before. No one but Androcles, and that was only in his dreams. He squeezed tighter with his left hand causing Sibot to gag horribly as he tried to suck in air to fill his lungs.

“My name is Martin Leonidas...” Martin growled with a savage tenor in his voice as he leaned over slightly and stared into Sibot’s wide eyes. “I am King of the Lycavorian Union! I am a true Alpha of our people! You are nothing but a fucking worm!”

“I have fought enemies so vile they would make you shit your pants in fear! Across more star systems than your meager mind could ever know exists! I have killed men that make you appear as nothing more than a fucking stain upon the ground that they walk! I have led millions of true Alphas and warriors of all species into battle with everything from knives and swords to star ships and weapons more horrific than anything you could possibly imagine! I have seen places in this universe that are beyond your feeble comprehension and I have met species that others have never seen! I have seen places so beautiful and innocent that you would weep at their perfection, and I love only six women with a zealous passion that a fucking flea like you could never begin to understand! And you dare put your hands upon one of them!!”

Martin lifted his right hand and the Etheric knife exploded from his clenched fist. Eight inches of pure energy and power that seemed to glow with a life of its own.

“I am a true Alpha of our people!” Martin screamed into Sibot’s face. “A protector of our kind whether Alpha, Beta, Gamma or Omega! That is what I am, you disgusting creature! You are no Alpha! You are not fucking worthy to walk among the men and women who surround you now! Of any species! They are true Alphas! You are beneath them!”

Martin heaved Sibot off the ground, his left hand tightening around his throat and now causing him to gag and wheeze as air was cut off from his lungs and his face began to bulge in a painful effort to breathe. Painful because Martin’s powerful, iron like grip and already crushed his windpipe. The crew of the MOON RUNNER could only watch in horrified awe as this huge Alpha wolf held Sibot’s large body completely off the ground with one hand, nearly a complete foot, a feat no Alpha should have been able to accomplish so easily, that blazing Etheric knife almost sizzling in the air around his clenched fist.

“You laid your foul hands upon one of my Queens fool! You caused her pain!!” Martin snarled savagely into Sibot’s face. “No one causes them pain!” Martin clenched his fist even tighter around his throat. “You killed our people without regard! OUR PEOPLE!” Salvia was beginning to foam at the corners of Sibot’s mouth and his legs had begun to twitch as his lungs were starved for air. Martin leaned close to the dying man’s face. “Let me show you how a true Alpha dispenses justice for what you have done! No one kills my people without retribution! No one! And no breathing creature like you lays their hands upon one of my Queens and lives to speak of it ever again! To the pits of jorbhe with you worm! May you scream and rot in the fires of justice for all eternity so that none have to suffer your pathetic life again!”

Martin rammed his right fist forward and that Etheric knife drove straight through Sibot’s left eye and fully into his skull. His body began to jerk uncontrollably as smoke from his now burning flesh began to fill the air. Martin twisted his fist harshly and solidified the Etheric knife in a single instant, searing away nearly half of Sibot’s brain. His body twisted twice in its death throes before it became still and went limp. Martin jerked the Etheric knife out of Sibot’s head, and with a howl of utter rage he dropped the body and snapped out a front kick that struck Sibot’s body in the chest, crushing all of his ribs in that single motion and launching his body across the landing pad with devastating power.

To the astonished gasps of the crew of the MOON RUNNER, Sibot’s body flew almost twenty meters before it slammed into the landing strut of one of the ships parked on the pad with a sickening crunch of more breaking bones that carried the distance to where they all knelt.

Danny pulled Nayeca close to him as silence reigned supreme over the landing pad and she folded her lithe body against his lovingly. Nayeca looked up into his face with adoring amber eyes and saw him smiling. “What is it Daniel?” She asked him.

Danny didn’t take his eyes from Martin and his smile only grew wider as he watched first Andro and Denali and then Nara and Eliani and then all of Martin’s children move forward, crowding around him, reaching for him.

The Leonidas Pack.

Danny didn’t know it on this day, and he would not know it for centuries to come, but Carina and Moneus had started it and now it would only grow. They would grow over time and become the largest and most influential Pack in the entire Union. There would be more unions between Simpson and Leonidas children in the future and that would suit Daniel Simpson and his Mard Fervon just fine.

The Leonidas-Simpson Pack.

“Now things get interesting Nubian. Now things get really interesting.”

CHAPTER SIXTY-FIVE

SPARTA'S WRATH ANDRO'S READY ROOM

“...She be safe Nauta Melme?” Dysea asked the question from within the life-size holo transmission in Andro's Ready Room.

Martin sat on the large couch looking at the image of his three Queens who he had not seen in far too long. The mug of Aricia's coffee was in his hand, with Aricia sitting on one side of him and For'mya the other. Martin let his eyes gaze upon Dysea, Isabella and Cirith for a long moment before he answered and once more, as he had done many times through the years, he silently asked himself how six such breathtakingly beautiful women could love him as they did. Dysea's emerald green eyes were bright and alert as they always were, Bella and Cirith sitting close to one another at a table in whatever building they were using as a Command Center. He missed them terribly, they all did. They hadn't been apart for this long in nearly a year and Martin had gotten used to waking up smelling all of his wives and mates beside. He wasn't worried, for when they were back together the reunion would be very sweet indeed.

Martin finally nodded his head in response to Dysea's question. “She is reasonably certain Melda Min.” Martin answered her. “You know Red, she's got good instincts and she won't back herself into a corner.”

Dysea nodded her head. “Yes, this is true.” She spoke.

“The man who hurt her Martin?” Isabella asked now. “What of him?”

Martin met her hazel green eyes and nodded his head. “It was taken care of Bella. He paid for his mistake in touching her.” He answered her. “He will never harm her or another again.”

Isabella nodded when he told her this. “Zil ol zhal'la tlu.” (As it should be) Isabella whispered in the ancient vampire tongue. Martin felt rather than saw Aricia and For'mya nod their heads on either side of him.

“Zuch Bella.” Aricia commented from beside him in the vampire language. All of them were fluent in the ancient vampire tongue.

Bella looked at him now, her hazel eyes twinkling in the light. “Things are becoming very lively where you are it seems Du'ased M'ranndii.”

Martin chuckled and nodded his head. “Tell me about it.” He said playfully. “And all I ever want is peace and quiet.”

Dysea and Cirith were the ones who burst out into soft laughter at this while Isabella, Aricia and For'mya only shook their heads in humor.

“What word do you have of the Svorag ship Martin?” Dysea asked him with a smile on her face.

“I spoke with Yuriko before contacting you.” Martin said. “Their speed and course has not changed since they slowed down. Her new figures put them as arriving at Honelze in a little over five weeks. If they do not increase their speed again. Apparently our victory here threw them for a loop in many respects.”

“Do you still believe your theory Martin?” Cirith asked now.

Martin nodded his head. “It makes the most sense as we discover more. Thoti and his team should have hit the facility late last night, so we should be getting a report within a few hours. We'll know more then, but the more Andro, Danny and I put our heads together about this, the more it comes together.”

“And you think it is one of those Alphas taken from Dynina's group?” Isabella asked.

Martin nodded his head. He had kept all of them advised of what was happening on Ventori, he always did, even if it was just in simple secure flashes of information.

“It would explain how they have begun to use the technology they have taken. Anja and Duewa agree that they are retaining more and more of their memories because they have broken from Lorendo's control. Everything that has happened up until now is almost exactly what an Alpha wolf would do if faced with destruction. He would try and build his people back up no matter the cost.”

“And without the control measures that Lorendo put in place, they are free to follow those same instincts, only now they are beginning to remember higher function skills.” Cirith commented.

Martin nodded his head. “Bingo.” He echoed her words. “Our Spider Probes haven’t picked up anything so far looking for Lorendo’s main facility, but six of them still have yet to flash us data. He has covered his tracks well.”

“Not well enough if he has lost control of more than half the Svorag he created and they are now operating without whatever control measures he implemented on them.” Dysea spoke. “How do we know he will not lose control of the others he has influence over?”

“We don’t.” For'mya spoke now. “Which is why we are hoping Thoti’s mission brings us some new information.”

Dysea nodded her head as she moved back to the table where Isabella and Cirith were sitting and stood between them. “Preparations here are progressing well. General Koguth and Akod’dris are handling most of the training and... it is amazing to see Nauta Melme. The Pralor people seem to be almost like a soothing balm to the Kavalians that Koguth chose to come with us. They are reaching out to the Kavalians in friendship and openness and the Kavalians are jumping at the chances they are receiving. We have seen many budding friendships beginning to form and you know how hard it is for them to develop true friendships. They are learning that they can be so much more than what Keleru allowed them to be and it is infectious.”

Martin nodded his head. “I had a feeling Koguth would have that effect on them. He opened the door and they just needed a nudge to walk through it. Good, Ceale is reporting the same thing from Manne and Komirri reports that the few drills they have run since returning there have all been productive. The Kavalian ships that defected to us are coming around quite well and their officers are soaking up knowledge like a sponge.”

“It is knowledge that Keleru would never allow them to have because it took away from his control of them.” Dysea said. “Now that they have been exposed to it, they will not be denied the future all of them can see.”

“The three of you are secure?” Martin asked her. “And Tenna Meral?”

Dysea smiled and nodded her head. “We are tripping over our security Nauta Melme.” She told him.

“Well, better safe than sorry. Lorendo is just desperate enough to try and come after you there now. Delnash has exposed him for what he is on Artaaya, and from what he tells me, his own people want to hang him by his nor.” Martin replied. “I not willing to take that risk.”

“You cannot kill him Martin, you know that.” Cirith spoke now. “He is the only one who can translate the tattoos on Androcles and the others.”

Martin rolled his eyes. “I know and that burns my ass.” He replied.

“Is there any way around that?” Isabella asked now.

“Dynina’s engineers and the Worker Drones will be finished installing one of these Portal Generators on SPARTA’S WRATH in four hours.” For'mya answered leaning forward. “Then we will jump to Lorenu. Perhaps we will find something there in this temple that sheds light on everything and will allow us to not have to rely on Lorendo.”

“What does Andro say?” Bella asked now.

Martin chuckled softly. “I would have to relay that information to you in seven different languages. And none of it in very pleasant words.” He replied. “Andro hasn’t even met him and he dislikes him more than I do I think.”

“I doubt that.” Isabella commented with a smile.

Martin sat forward now. “Sit down Melda Min.” He said softly. “As much as I hate to do this, we have some decisions to make and we need to make them together.”

Dysea nodded her head and moved to the table and sat beside Isabella. “I know. We are putting it off aren’t we?”

“Only because we don’t want to face the possibility of it.” For'mya spoke.

“Avoi.” Aricia commented.

“It needs to be done.” Martin echoed softly. “No matter who it pisses off and no matter how much we don’t want too.”

The room was silent for a moment before Isabella nodded her head. "Then let's get it over with." She said.

JETANIA
HIDDEN AIRFIELD
SIX KLICKS NORTHEAST OF WARIM

It was one of the most closely guarded secrets among the leadership of the Mountain Packs. An airfield completely hidden from Osrod's eyes and realm of control. Nestled at the bottom of a deep, three-thousand-foot ravine northeast of Warim, you could pass right over the top of it without ever noticing it was there. The thousand-year-old trees grew tall on either side of the ravine and their canopies were almost interlocked together over a thousand feet into the air, with very few openings. Only someone who knew the terrain as well as the Mountain Packs would be able to navigate down through the openings in the canopy with enough skill not to crash their ship. Lazar had made this descent dozens of times and was one of the few pilots who had the skill to do so, yet as he and Rhaos watched with awe in their expressions, Endith and Tina were dropping SPARTAN ONE through the canopies as if it was the easiest operation in the universe. Anja stood beside them, Kalis directly behind his Aunt, unwilling to leave her alone with the two Lycavorians for any reason. Normya was sitting at the engineering station where Tina usually sat when For'mya was with them, monitoring their power output and also their weapons systems. Should anything go wrong, Normya had her fingers poised over the weapons console to her right and would lay waste to anything beneath them as they escaped.

Anja Leonidas had invited them into the cockpit for the descent, and Lazar instantly sensed the blood within the exquisitely beautiful pointed ear young female. For a split second he asked himself if all of this Alpha's female children were so stunningly beautiful. She was a daughter of the Alpha that he smelled on nearly all of them and within her blood he detected the scent of the massive, bone faced giant who was guarding his men. They were obviously mated and just from her sweet orange clove scent he could tell they were deeply in love. Lazar blinked quickly as visions of Retta filled his mind and he chased them away with a shake of his head and returned his gaze outside the cockpit view window. Most COLS ships had much smaller cockpits with fields of vision that were not so expansive. This did not go unnoticed by Anja however, and she looked at him intently.

"What?" She finally asked watching as Lazar's head turned to look at her.

Lazar Aspion shook his head dismissively in nature. "Nothing." He lied without caring if this Alpha female detected the lie. "We... our ships do not have such large views. It is odd to see all of this as we descend. Can you see this much from the cockpit in all of your ships?"

Anja canted her head to the side slightly but she knew the real reason he had lied and she said nothing.

Tina turned her head and looked at him with her hand over the throttle control as Endith guided them down. "No." Tina answered after receiving the nod from Anja. "We train on much smaller ships with smaller cockpit fields of vision. You have to graduate to this class of ship. It is pretty neat though, isn't it?"

"Nubous tiadala!" Rhaos muttered without thinking. He blinked in shock and looked at Anja with wide eyes. "Forgive me!"

Anja smiled and shook her head. "It is pretty amazing." She said. "I was stunned when I first experienced it."

Lazar looked at her surprised. "This... this was new to you?"

Anja nodded her head. "At one point, oh yes."

"How is... how is that possible?" Lazar stammered.

Endith snorted from her pilot's seat. "If I remember correctly, you blew chunks all over the inside of my RAPTOR the first time Anja."

Anja chuckled and nodded her head. "That was not a pleasant experience."

Tina laughed. "The Skipper was pulling it out of his hair for two days!"

Lazar looked between them. "What is this? Blew chunks?"

Anja smiled once more. "I lost my breakfast." She told him seeing his eyes get large with recognition.

“You admit this?” Lazar asked shocked.

“Why not?” Anja replied with a shrug of her shoulders and a smile. “It happened and we have laughed about it many times over the years since.”

“That we have.” Tina agreed. “That doesn’t compare to the Skipper though. Remember Lacora Five?”

Anja shook her head with another smile. “Well... in Martin’s defense Tina, you were flying upside down for nearly three minutes and he and Danny had just conducted a hundred kilometer sprint to the extraction.”

“Bah! Don’t make excuses for him!” Tina quipped. “It took us a week to get rid of the smell.”

“Five hundred feet!” Endith called out now as she glanced out of the cockpit. “Looks like we got company at three o’clock.”

All heads turned to the side and Lazar’s wolf eyes smiled as he recognized his mother. “It is my mother and Garget.”

“Lots of armed men mother.” Normya spoke from her console as she scanned the area below them. “Upwards of thirty.”

Lazar turned quickly to Anja. “This airfield is one of our most closely guarded secrets.” He told her. “They are the standard security detachment we leave here. This is not a trap! I give you my word!”

Anja stared at him for a long moment and unlike a few seconds ago, Anja detected not even a wisp of a lie in his words. He was being completely sincere. “And I will take you at your word.” Anja told him. “With one condition.”

Lazar met her gaze, glancing quickly at Rhaos and then back to her. “What is that?” He asked.

“If there is to be any sort of trust between us, a trust we can build on, you will not use the signals that you gave to your mother during our conversation.” Anja said.

Lazar looked shocked at her pronouncement. “How... how did...?”

Anja smiled at him. “We may be from different quadrants of space Lazar Aspion, but we are wolves as well. And we also have a unique, and soundless way to signal and talk with others that we know, much like the one you were using. We have no ulterior motives here Lazar Aspion. Trust needs to begin somewhere, correct?”

Lazar stared at her for a long moment and then nodded his head. “Yes it does.” He spoke.

“Good.” Anja spoke before looking at Endith. “Take us in Endy.” She told her.

Endith nodded her head. “Here we go.”

Garget stood beside Loras looking skyward into the opening of the canopy above them. “I don’t like this Loras.” He spoke.

Loras looked up into his face with an expression of insult marring her exotic and stunning features. “Do you not trust Lazar anymore Garget?”

Garget turned his head and looked at her with a stern expression. Garget Ranev had been the first of the elders among the many Mountain packs to endorse Loras as their leader after his nephew Warim had been assassinated. Warim and he had spent many hours simply talking after Warim had claimed Loras, Garget taking the place of Warim’s long dead father and Garget’s brother. Warim had always been praising Loras on her intelligence and inner strength. That her love for their people knew no bounds. Garget had seen it himself many times through the years and he had never doubted her for a single moment. He truly believed, as did Loras’s mother and father, that she was meant for greatness.

Garget had also been the one to take Lazar under his wing when he would come to visit them while Loras was Queen, and even after Lazar would sneak away from the palace to see his mother when she returned and became Warim’s mate. He and Warim had given the boy many years of instruction that Lazar would never have received with his father, and among that knowledge was the history of their true people and how they had come to Jetania. Garget knew that Lazar hated his father intensely, but the boy had enough intelligence to hide it better than anyone he had ever met.

“How can you ask me that Loras?” Garget hissed at her softly.

Loras quickly lost the expression she had and she reached up to take his arm. “Forgive me Garget.” She said softly. “He... Lazar sees you as the father he was denied for most of his life.” She commented looking at the ground. “He has warmed to you more than he ever did with Warim.”

Garget nodded his head slowly. “Warim knew this and he did not resent it.” He spoke. “I would never question your son’s loyalty to you or to our people. That would be like questioning my own loyalty. But bringing them here? To our most secret facility anywhere on the planet? Not even Osrod’s finest trackers have ever been able to find this place and he knows it exists.”

Loras met his eyes now. “Speak your mind old friend.” She told him.

“Where have you been these last two days Loras?” Garget asked her now. “Your Security Commander told me you were with the Priestess, but none of our local sensor scans detected your life signs on this continent or anywhere on the planet for that matter. There were many among us who were beginning to worry about you. Some even feared Osrod had managed to abduct you. Then you suddenly reappear with my youngest daughter and others and tell me to meet you here. That Lazar is bringing potential allies here, to the most secret of our bases anywhere on the planet. What is going on Loras? Who are these people and how do we know they are not agents of Osrod?”

Loras continued to meet his eyes and she took a deep breath. “I have been with the Oracle Garget.” She spoke finally meeting his gaze. “I have been to where she has been hiding for centuries and helping to train the Black Watch.”

Loras watched Garget’s eyes grow wide in disbelief as he looked at her. “The Oracle?” He finally sputtered in disbelief. “She... Loras she lives?”

Loras nodded her head. “And she is unlike anything that I... that I believed Garget.” She answered.

“What... what do you mean?” Garget asked her.

Loras squeezed his thick arm. “There is much I must tell you Garget, information that Nilantha wants me to share with you and the other Pack elders. I don’t really know where to begin. I have... I have discovered so much these last two days. So much that even I cannot believe it all.” She looked at him.

Garget shook his head. “We have... we have believed she was gone for so long.” He stammered. “That Osrod’s father succeeded in finding her and killing her.”

Loras nodded her head. “That is what I believed as well. That is how she wanted it to be in order to protect us and herself.” She told him. “I believed it until Rylin and Taris brought me to meet her.”

“Taris?” Garget gasped as she spoke the name of his youngest daughter. Taris had been a surprise to his mate and him, for they had thought they were done having children. When it was discovered she carried Taris, all things changed for Garget. When he first held her wailing body in his arms seconds after she was pulled from her mother’s womb Garget knew things would be different. Even as she had grown, and her beauty surpassed that of her mother and her sisters, Garget knew Taris was meant for something far beyond his understanding and he had embraced that. Her mind was like a trap, taking everything in and absorbing it completely. When she announced she wished to become part of the Black Watch, Garget did not hesitate in giving her his blessing. She continued to make his mate and himself proud of her every day. He looked at Loras intently. “Taris has known she was alive?”

Loras nodded her head. “There is more to your daughter than meets the eye Garget.” Loras said.

“So it... so it would appear.” Garget said softly.

“Did you know that the Betas, Gammas and Omega wolves on Ventori survived Garget?” Loras asked him.

Once more Garget’s eyes grew wide. “Impossible.” He gasped. “My father told me that they would not survive without the Alphas among them. It is why he and so many of the elders hold such disdain for Osrod and his bloodline, excluding Lazar of course. His ancestors forced them to leave and then refused to allow them to return. How could... how could they survive without Alphas.”

Loras shook her head slowly. “I do not know, but I have discovered that they did indeed survive and they built a thriving world of many, many millions. Only to see it destroyed by another species a few short years ago. Several of them on are this ship that Lazar arrives with.” She looked at him. “And there is something else Garget.”

“What?” He pressed her. “Loras... now is not the time to keep things from me.”

“Ethoni wen reull oia allon endra lon cerler vada saan rie vada allsknesi vorevor hel Garget.” Loras spoke softly. (There are those on this ship that carry the blood of the ancients within them.)

Garget pulled back from her slightly in disbelief. “Vada saan rie allsknesi!” He gasped aloud causing the heads of several of the nearby guards to turn towards them.

Loras looked around quickly and squeezed his arm tighter. “Garget!” She exclaimed to him softly.

Garget quickly reigned in his emotions and stepped back closer to her. “Loras you cannot be serious.” He stammered. “That is only... that is only a myth. A legend that we tell our children as they grow.”

Loras shook her head quickly. “No.” She spoke. “It is only a myth and legend because that is what Osrod’s father and grandfather wanted our people to believe in order to consolidate their power. It is why they chased the Oracle into hiding Garget. I have discovered so much in so short a time as I said Garget. Our ancient homeworld exists, the Oracle has been there. Those that carry the blood of the ancients within them exist.” Loras looked at him. “And the Fera Mard Revik exists. I have seen the distinguishing sign of Royal Blood Garget! I have seen it in one who I have spoken to myself Garget. Just hours ago!” She took his other hand. “A Queen. One of six Queens that...”

“What?” Garget asked.

“She is one of six Queens to the Fera Mard Revik.” Loras told him. “The First True King of our people. The King that our ancient writings and even our myth and legend have told us would one day come to walk among us. He lives now Garget! The First True King and jen Tarivuos. His Heralds.” Loras squeezed his hand and arm tighter. “I have seen her Garget! I have seen the distinguishing signs! On her! On her children with her! I have felt her within me Garget, even over the distance we were talking! And through her I have felt the other Queens. She is a beautiful wolf Garget, with dark red hair and amazing green eyes!”

Garget Ranev stared at Loras for a long moment. He was one of the few who had read the many Ancient Scrolls given to their people by order of the Oracle after they had arrived here on Jetania. The Priestess back then had told them they had more in common than they believed and the Scrolls had told them exactly that. Though they were locked away in a secret location much like this base, there were still those who read the Scrolls and what they contained. That those of ancient blood did exist, that they populated the stars far away, and that their original homeworld did in fact exist. The Ancient Scrolls spoke of many different things, all of them amazing to say the least, but they also were very specific in that those who carried the powerful and Ancient Lycavorian Royal Blood within them, the line of the First True King of the Lycavorians, that they would be most distinguishable by the dual wolf fangs that only the Royal bloodline would carry.

“Emdar delhims?” Garget asked her in a whisper. (Dual fangs)

Loras nodded her head. “Yes.” Loras answered with a nod. “She is... she is also not fully wolf Garget.”

“What do you mean?”

“She has been turned.” Loras told him. “She is a half breed, but she is more powerful than any pureblood Alpha female that I have ever sensed. Including myself and my mother.”

Garget’s eyes went a little wider at this for it was well known that Loras and her mother were among the strongest Alpha females anywhere on Jetania. Loras descended from a strong bloodline, both of her parents having some of the purest blood among all of the Mountain Packs on Jetania. The Ranev Pack was very similar and this is why Garget had pushed hard for Osrod Aspion to honor their ways and release Loras from her commitment to him in order to fulfill the arranged marriage that his brother and Warim’s father had agreed to when Loras was born. An arranged marriage between the Athltin and Ranev packs would surely cement the leadership of the Mountain Packs for many centuries to come since they were the largest and most influential of the packs. This Union between Loras and Warim had done just that. Loras’s father was the most senior Alpha on the Mountain Council at nearly two hundred thousand years of age, and he was anchored in the tradition and culture of their people from long before Garget was ever born. He was also one of the few remaining Alphas who had protested vehemently to Osrod’s father to allow them to return to Ventori. He was a hardened and experienced wolf, having survived several “accidents” that everyone knew had been assassination attempts by Osrod’s father, and he bore the scars proudly.

“Loras, how is that possible?” Garget finally asked.

Loras shook her head. “I don’t know for certain and the Oracle was vague in her answers to me but it is true Garget. This Gelleenat told me that being a half breed does not carry the same stigma within their empire as it does here. She was very open about this fact and she was very honest. You will see for yourself.”

“How... how large is their Empire?” Garget asked hesitantly.

Loras met his gaze. “She referred to it as a Union.” Loras answered. “She says it has over thirty trillion citizens within it and it spans hundreds and hundreds of light years.” She saw Garget’s eyes nearly bug out of his head. “Our people make up only thirty-five to forty percent of that population. She says she doesn’t know the exact number because that is not something that concerns them. All of their citizens are equal.”

“Son vada carians.” Garget gasped softly. “Where... where have they been hidden all of this time?”

Loras shook her head. “They have not been hiding at all Garget. They are not from this Quadrant of space! They come from the Alpha Quadrant!”

Garget gripped her arms tighter. “The Alpha Quadrant! Then they have... Loras are you saying that they have Interstellar Engine Technology? That... Loras that...”

Loras nodded her head. “Lazar did not speak much, he was sitting with her, but I saw the look on my son’s face Garget; and the body language he was using. Everything she was telling me was true Garget. Lazar signaled me that there was much he had to tell us. And given what I saw when with the Oracle, I don’t doubt it one bit.”

Garget looked at her oddly. “What... what did you see Loras?”

Loras smiled at him. “I will tell you everything Garget, all of it. You will be just as shocked as I was. And you will also be just as awed.”

Garget looked up just as Loras did as the soft whining noise filtered to their keen wolf ears. It was growing louder and Garget let his eyes move among the towering trees seeing nothing out of the ordinary. He turned to one of the nearby Landing Pad technicians.

“What is that noise?” He demanded.

The man was moving his hands over his podium control panel and he shook his head. “I do not know, sir!” He stammered. “We are detecting a two hundred percent increase in wind vortex within the area but...”

“Garget... perhaps you and my mother would be so kind as to move back a few dozen meters!”

Lazar’s voice boomed from all around them like an echo. “This ship we are on is rather large and the pilot does not wish to land on you.”

“Lazar!” Loras gasped as she clutched Garget’s arms.

A strange new noise filled their ears and both of them stood in open mouthed shock as the Shroud Shield on SPARTAN ONE lowered smoothly, revealing the huge ship directly above them and the source of the high pitched whine they heard.

“Saoi Sibfla!” Garget heard the technician’s voice near them as he stared at the ship. “Sensors never picked it up! We never saw it come into the lane!”

The ship was easily over a hundred meters in length and perhaps twenty meters in height from what Garget could see quickly. It was very sleek and almost beautiful in its design with a blazing black and crimson shield emblazoned upon its side near the rear. There appeared to be a hatchway on the side close to the nose of the ship, and also what could only be a ramp in the rear of the ship to allow access. His wolf eyes could detect people moving in what appeared to be the cockpit in the front of the ship and then they grew wider as he recognized Lazar looking out at them through the large cockpit view window over the shoulder of the pilot with rust colored hair.

Loras could only stare at the ship in silent awe. A smile slowly split her face and she gripped Garget’s arms even tighter.

“Garget my friend...” Loras Ranev spoke. “I believe our future has just made itself known to us.”

Anja stood beside Retta holding her hand tightly just behind Lazar and Rhaos at the top of the ramp. Zarah was on Retta's opposite side holding her other hand and while Anja could smell and sense Retta's fever and the burning of her blood for the tall, powerful wolf in front of them, Zarah, Normya and Lucia were helping her to hold it back and resist it. With the three of them combined helping her, Retta was in complete control of her actions and mind. Though barely seventeen years old by human measuring standards, Retta Leonidas was fully grown by Lycavorian principles and as Anja had stated before in many reports and findings published in the Union's Medical Journals, Lycavorian females were now coming of age sooner because of the natural evolution of their species.

Normya and Zarah were scarcely past twenty-two and both of them had already gone through their Coming of Age. Nara, because of the pureness of her blood, had already been through her Coming of Age and she was only a year older than Retta. It varied for Lycavorian females now, whether pure blood or half Lycavorian, but the purer the blood, the sooner the Coming of Age fever would present itself.

Anja looked at the broad backs of Lazar and Rhaos. She had never been on a first contact mission before, so this was going to be new to her as well. Anja Leonidas knew she had a quick temper and she had gotten better through the years at reigning in her more volatile nature when confronted with arrogance and stupidity, and she would have to be on her best behavior here. There was definitely something about these Lycavorians that had the short hairs on the back of her neck standing at attention. It wasn't a threat she felt so much as it was the unknown and possible answers to questions that Martin had held within him for his entire life.

Anja Leonidas could not even begin to imagine loving a man more than she loved Martin. It wasn't possible as far as she was concerned. It wasn't possible for any of them to love any man in such a way. Martin Leonidas was everything to her, to Aricia and For'mya and Dysea and Isabella and Cirith. He could make them laugh on a whim, and turn them to putty in his hands with just a simple caress. He worshiped the ground they walked upon as he had proven so many times through the years, and while the wolf within them made this impossible as long as he was alive, it was their minds that had come to that conclusion many years ago. Anja remembered something Gorgo had said many years ago.

“When a Leonidas loves, they love unconditionally, without doubt or shame. They love with all of the passion within them, all of the emotion, all of themselves.”

Anja had to admit that this statement was so very true, for she and her fellow Queens lived that statement every day. Their children who had taken wives and mates lived that statement every day. Anja looked at Retta and smiled at her daughter. All of their children would live that statement. And it all was because of the tall, handsome Alpha who made her whimper in utter bliss just being in his arms. If she could bring about the answers to some of the questions her husband and mate had carried within him for decades, questions they all knew he desired the answers too, Anja would do all she could to accomplish this.

Anja saw movement out of the corner of her eyes and watched Tir'ut and Kalis move up on either side of Lazar and Rhaos.

Kalis turned his head to look at Lazar, Serale standing beside Radem and Lucia behind Anja and watching intently.

“Know this...” Kalis told him in a low voice, but one that carried to where Anja and Retta stood. Kalis waited until Lazar and Rhaos had turned to look at him. “If this is a trap, or any of your people attempt to harm my Tenna and my nathos, Tir'ut and I will ensure that before we fall, you and your friend will die very painful deaths. There will not be anyone who will save you from this fate if you betray us. On that oath, and the oath I gave to my cousin and uncle, I swear.”

“As do I.” Tir'ut echoed his words.

Lazar and Rhaos both glanced quickly at where Tir'ut stood on their opposite side, even taller than them. His dark eyes twinkled in the light and they saw him bare vicious looking vampiric fangs in the small smile he produced. Lazar turned back to Kalis.

“This is no trap.” He spoke more calmly than he felt. “I give you my word.”

Kalis nodded his head as he checked his P190 A5. "Then as long as you keep your word, you will live a full life." He stated turning back to Lazar. "And possibly discover what it is that makes your blood burn in your veins."

Anja's smile beamed when she heard that statement and she glanced at Retta who also was smiling widely. Kalis had come a long way in so short a time and it was because he was among a part of his family that he knew loved him without question. He would discover soon enough that the love of a mother and siblings that he had thought lost so long ago was only weeks away and then he could go forward knowing he had come full circle. Anja glanced up when she heard the ramp unlock and begin to lower.

"Here we go!" She stated.

SPARTA'S WRATH STARBOARD OFFICER'S LOUNGE

"...Never been able to determine what is powering the Temple." Dynina was explaining to all of them as they sat in the lounge waiting for the Worker Drones and ship's engineers to finish installing the Sub-Space Portal Generator. "Through the years we have tried to gain entrance by many different means, but the material surrounding the temple is unlike anything we have ever seen."

"It is neither Darastrixi nor Pralor in origin." Kenroe chimed in now as he adjusted the monitor they had set up for him. "It encircles the entire Temple area, fully five kilometers in diameter. All of it underground."

"Five kilometers!" Martin exclaimed. "Sibfla! That is not a Temple, that is a... hell I don't know what that is!"

Dynina smiled and nodded her head at his words. "I have had this same feeling through the years as well staaniaketo."

Amena spoke up from her seat at the huge table. "We have tried to burn it, cut it, just about anything you can imagine. Not a scratch on it. Nothing. It appears to be resistant to energy and projectile weapons of every kind that we have tested. Essentially it is impervious to all of our combined technology."

"Even the Pralor Pulse Magnum weapons that we have now?" Androcles asked from where he sat.

Amena nodded her head. "Yes." She answered. "If I had to compare it to something, I would compare it to this wondrous Dragon Armor your people manufactured, though we cannot even determine the minerals used to create it, as we can with your dragon Armor. We've never seen them before."

Martin turned his head and looked at Kasdan where he sat beside Murano and Wayonn. Martin Leonidas was no fool and he used every bit of knowledge he had at his disposal. Though Kasdan would never know it, Martin viewed him as second only to Anja in intelligence. That fact alone endeared him to Martin in a way that nothing ever could. He was what Martin would affectionately call a "geek". "Kasdan... could it be these Onab that you mentioned?"

Kasdan nodded his head. "It is possible." He replied. "With the exception of what little technology they shared with us, we know painfully little about the Onab as a species, or their technology."

"Unfortunately, Kasdan is correct and the same can be said for our people." Aviel spoke now from where he sat beside Dalis at the end of the table. "We only encountered them perhaps half a dozen times in our travels and if memory serves me, the last contact we had with one of their ships was nearly two million years ago." Aviel looked at Dalis. "Dalis is that correct?"

Dalis nodded his head now. He had become an almost constant companion to Aviel now, his knowledge and skill set something that Aviel made great use of. Dalis had finally come to terms with the fact he would never have Nahko, her love for Aviel was too powerful, and he returned that love to her equally. Dalis had also come to see that Aviel Em'morr was nothing like the politicians he was used to. This man actually cared about those around him and he used his emotions and feelings to base all of his decisions on. Dalis had also become somewhat of a teacher to Laren, Andro and Dorian as well at Sarlana's request, giving them knowledge of the Darastrixi people that went beyond what their soul sister could provide to them. Nahko had remained on Ventori with the rest of the Darastrixi for many of them had volunteered to help begin the process of defending and rebuilding the planet.

“That sounds correct.” He agreed with Aviel’s statement. “Without a direct link access to our archive libraries however, I could not be more specific. We lost that link the moment we left Darastrixi space. I dare say with the exception of Kenroe and those with Lady Dynina, no Darastrixi has ever been this far from our homeworld.”

“That goes without saying for many of us.” Dorian spoke up.

Andro and Laren nodded their heads. “Indeed it does.” Laren spoke.

Martin turned once more to where Armen stood behind Androcles. “Armen... do you think you and Avi could determine if this is Onab tech for us if you had the opportunity to examine the materials?”

The huge Avatar nodded his head. –Like Avi, I was not made by the creators, but the inactive code is still within my neural network. Avi and I are among the first generation of Avatars King Martin. Those that were built by the Pralor Scientists directly from the Creator’s technical specifications– He replied. – Given enough exposure to what materials are on hand and with the information within Pralor databanks available to us, we should be able to answer this question –

“You don’t know for sure?” Martin asked.

–Nothing is certain King Martin– Armen answered.

Martin looked at Andro. “That’s what you would say keto.” He hissed at his son. “He’s hanging around you way too much.”

Andro crossed his arms over his broad chest. “Forgive me for not being as reckless as you father.” He spoke with mock indignation.

“Reckless?” Martin protested now. “What was that little stunt on Vania Six? A carefully thought out response?”

Andro’s azure eyes narrowed. “And Bogota City was what?” He snapped.

Martin held up his hand to respond but stopped himself just as he was about to respond. “Ok... you have a point there.” He stated.

Danny leaned forward from his chair beside Martin. “That was a sweet Op though fervon.” He said. “It was perfect all around.”

Martin looked at him and smiled. “It was, wasn’t it?” He said.

“You dropped a thirty story building on one man in order to kill him father.” Andro spoke.

Martin nodded his head. “Yeah... but he was a real asshole. He was killing innocent men and women in his mines. And he was a big guy too boot.” Martin replied puffing out his cheeks with air and posing with his arms and shoulders to make himself appear larger than he was.

“Popped him like a pimple!” Danny echoed with a grin. “Can’t get much deader than that! Like I said, it was perfect!”

“Yes, it was.” Martin agreed.

Andro and Dorian couldn’t help but laugh at their antics while Laren looked back and forth between them. Finally, she looked at Andro. “What does this mean Androcles?” She asked. “Popped him like a pimple? What is a pimple?”

“Enough!” Sarlana exclaimed from her chair causing Martin and Androcles to look at her and become quiet. She turned back to Dynina. “Dynina... continue.”

“There is really not much more to cover.” She spoke in reply. “We stopped trying to gain entry into the Temple, or whatever it is, several thousand years ago. We built a pseudo place of meditation over the entrance and it has remained this way since. It is on the edge of the city we have built on Lorenu.”

“But you have seen similar symbols on interior walls?” Sarlana asked. “Those like what Andro and the others carry on their skin?”

Dynina nodded as she returned to her chair. “There is only one entrance that we have been able to find. Double glass like doors, directly beneath the Meditation Hall that we built. They are on the wall directly across from these doors. Three symbols very similar to what they are wearing. The same type of symbols of this Dahakoan language that you recognized.”

Andro saw the look on her face and he leaned across the table. “Doraanar?” He asked causing Sarlana to lift her eyes and meet his gaze. “What is it?”

Sarlana shook her head. “I have never read anything in our written history or heard even a single hint of the Dahakoan ever leaving Darastrixi space and coming out here.” She told him slowly. “They fought the Scourge across all of our space and the surrounding systems during our conflicts with them yes, but as Dalis and Aviel have both said, our people were meticulous in our record keeping. Everything was written down. Every order. Every mission. Every decision made by the ruling body. I have been gone from Darastrixi space less than a hundred thousand years and I cannot believe this has changed.”

“It hasn’t.” Aviel chimed in.

“Then there has to be some meaning for this place.” Sarlana spoke. “I find it hard to believe that Sumar brought Dynina and the others here without knowing that this Temple was there.”

Dynina shook her head. “Impossible.” She said quickly. “Sumar was... he was perfect in everything he did. Every action he took was planned out right down to even the tiniest of details. Everything.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “Our history says this is exactly how Dadrien was as well.” She looked at Martin. “An unknown Temple, built with materials that we cannot identify, on a planet that has been hidden behind an Ionic Nebula deep in former Pralor space for at least fifteen millennia. Probably much longer given its location and that the Scourge have never discovered it. Sumar either knew of this planet before he was lost on Lycavore, or someone told him about it after he was turned by Dynina’s daughter.”

“Dadrien.” Andro spoke softly.

Sarlana nodded her head. “It is the only explanation that makes sense given that this Temple has symbols from the Dahakoan language on its walls.”

“I get the feeling there is quite a bit that Dadrien and my grandfather did not tell us when they appeared to us.” Martin spoke leaning back in his chair.

“Perhaps they were not able to.” Sarlana said. “They did say many of their own memories were lost somehow. Or removed.”

“The question remains as to why.” Martin spoke.

“To protect.” Dorian spoke now.

Martin looked at his son. “Dori?”

“To protect what they had built.” Dorian continued. “Is that not what we would do father? Perhaps not remove our memories, but to ensure that a secret we do not want discovered is kept, we would make sure that no one person or persons knew everything.”

“The removal of memories is much more thorough.” Dalis spoke again.

Andro leaned forward once more. “Father, Arzoal transferred her consciousness, her essence to a dragon egg using the Psionic Transfer Chamber.”

“Yes, so?” Martin pressed his son.

Andro looked at Murano and Wayonn. “Could this device be used to remove memories from one’s Etheric resonance Wayonn?”

Wayonn looked at Murano and then back to him. “I suppose.” He replied. “I cannot think of it every being used in such a way however.”

“What are you getting at keto?” Martin asked his son.

Andro returned his gaze to his father. “As Kasdan discovered, the third language blended into the tattoos we wear is Onab.” He spoke evenly. “Who gave the Pralors the technology of the PTCs?”

Murano’s eyes grew wider when he realized what Andro was saying. “The Onab!” He gasped aloud. “They... well they gave us the means and material to build them!”

“Murano is correct!” Kasdan spoke excitedly now. “That is in our history archives! The day this event occurred. There are, perhaps only a half a dozen of our people still alive from when that took place. It was a day of great celebration because it allowed us to release the Etheric essence of those who had passed on into the Rift of Time just as our belief tells us. It was what your people would refer to as a mass Memorial service.”

“How long ago was this?” Martin asked.

Kasdan shrugged his shoulders. “At least a million and a half years ago.” He answered. “Much of our older population was centered on our homeworld and the core worlds ring so that they could use their wisdom to teach our younger population. It worked well for us through the years, but it also allowed the Scourge to eliminate most of them when they broke through into our core worlds ring. Only a handful made it out of the CWR. With the exception of the six that still live, the rest perished on our flight away from the Scourge. That is why most of our population on Artaaya and our colonies is under half a million years old. And Delnash insisted that we do not group our people by age any longer.”

Martin nodded his head solemnly. “Delnash did the right thing when he gave that order.” He said finally. “But it still doesn’t leave us with any answers to the questions we have now. If anything it leaves us with new ones to add to the old ones.”

“And collectively we have no information on these Onab?” Dynina asked.

Kasdan shook his head now. “Aside from basic entries in our historical archives, no.” He answered. “Whatever information we did have was within the thirty-one texts that were lost in our main Science Research Museum when our homeworld was destroyed.”

“Copies were never made Kas? Aside from the one that fatass Lorendo made?” Martin asked.

Kasdan shook his head. “I do not know Martin. I don’t even know how or when Lorendo managed to make the copy he has before our world was destroyed. He was nowhere near our homeworld in the weeks leading up to the attack.” He answered. “Much of the time after its destruction is filled with chaos and the jumbled journals and ramblings of those who survived.

Andro turned in his chair. “Armen anything in your archives?”

Armen lifted his head slightly to look at the far side of the room, his eyes moving back and forth almost faster than anyone could follow. They stopped after three seconds and he looked at Androcles. –My databanks have nothing more than what is already within Pralor archives Andro- He answered quickly. –However, there appears to be a large file that was entered into my archives and labeled as Onab core root. The contents of this file was deleted exactly twelve point four hours before SPARTA’S WRATH departed the Pralor homeworld-

“How long after SPARTA’S WRATH left did the Scourge hit?” Martin asked.

-The Scourge attack on the Pralor homeworld began nine hours and six minutes after SPARTA’S WRATH departed space dock King Martin- Armen answered. –It came as a complete surprise-

Martin shook his head as he sat back in the chair. “No, it didn’t Armen.” He said softly. “Someone knew it was coming and they erased that file in order to protect the information on it in case you didn’t make it clear of the attack.” He said.

“Coincidence father?” Andro asked.

Martin grinned at him. “I’ll tell you like I told your mother. No way.”

Wayonn shook his head. “These are not coincidences.” He spoke now. “This Dahakoan language surviving as it did through the ages? The Temple on Lorenu? And what was written in the Ventori Archives.”

Martin looked at him. “The Ventori Archives?” He asked. “You keeping secrets from us Wayonn?”

Wayonn chuckled. “No... our time together has shown me that is not a healthy practice.” He looked across the table at Martin. “I had the opportunity to speak with Nalmos and three of the other Chief Justices that recently arrived from the Tasmor homeworld. Nalmos questioned you about it when he first met you but events kept you from answering.”

Martin leaned forward now. “I don’t remember any questions.” He said.

Wayonn looked at him. “The more we discover about past events, the more it all comes together. Each piece we discover fits into the puzzle of our combined history. The archives of Ventori history speak of Spartans Martin. Alpha Spartans, warriors of unmatched training and honor, warriors that would one day come here to Ventori and unite our people.” Wayonn looked at Martin.

“That could mean anything Wayonn.” Martin said.

Wayonn shook his head. “No. The last sentence of this legend or myth, or whatever you choose to call it, it says these Spartans will be led by an Alpha wolf with dual fangs and eyes of yellow and gold. The last time I checked, the only wolf in existence right now with yellow/gold eyes is you Martin.”

“Sibfla.” Martin muttered as he sat back in his chair once more.

“Someone or something is driving everything that has occurred through the years Martin. No matter where it is. Even events that were confined to our individual species, all of them have connections to the rest of us.” Wayonn spoke.

Martin nodded his head and looked at him. “You’ll get no argument from me Wayonn.” He said.

“The question remains as to why Vali’s star.” Andro spoke now.

“And who?” Helen spoke. “Though I am beginning to believe that these Onab, dead though their species may be, they are far more than what those who met them really thought.”

Murano nodded his head in agreement. “I concur Helen.” He said.

“As do I.” Sarlana spoke.

Armen lifted his head slightly and then stepped forward next to Androcles.

-The modifications have been completed- He told them. -Kenroe’s engineers have reported we can jump whenever you are ready Androcles. Alpha Nine concurs with this assessment-

Andro looked at his father. “Medwan?”

Martin nodded his head. “Let’s do it.” He spoke as he rose to his feet. “I really hope we can find some answers to what is going on in this Temple. I don’t like leaving Anja hanging out there with her ass in the breeze and I certainly don’t envy having to turn to Lorendo to try and translate this language. I’ll be lucky to keep the hordes of all our peoples who will want his head on a platter at bay long enough for him to do it.”

“If we find him.” Murano stated.

Martin met his eyes. “We’ll find his fat ass.” He stated confidently. “I have faith.”

JETANIA HIDDEN AIRFIELD SIX KLICKS NORTHEAST OF WARIM

It had been far too long since she had held him in her arms and Loras Ranev took advantage of this opportunity to squeeze her son as tightly as she could as he held her off the ground and embraced her just as tightly. She fought back the tears as she held him and inhaled deeply of his scent, detecting the difference in him almost instantly. She detected the scent of a powerful female Alpha on him, swimming within his own scent, almost as if she had already chosen her son. She pulled her head back quickly and took his face in her hands as he lowered her to the ground, but she said nothing about this. He would tell her in due time she knew.

“Aur keto.” Loras spoke in a whisper.

Lazar smiled as he held his mother and touched his forehead to hers. “It has been far too long mother.” He said softly. “I have missed you.”

“What trouble have you gotten yourself into this time?” She asked him with a bright smile.

Lazar rolled his eyes at her with a smile and then turned toward where Anja stood beside Retta. “Mother... may I present Lady Anja Leonidas, one of six Queens of the what is known as the United Lycavorian Union.” He said holding out his hand to where she stood.

Loras looked at Anja from several feet away and could not help but think that she was far more beautiful in person, and not nearly as she imagined physically. She was much shorter than Loras imagined, but she could tell quickly that she was in excellent physical shape. Her scent was very pronounced and it was mixed heavily with the mint scent of an Alpha male more powerful than Loras had ever felt. An Alpha male that made Osrod a child in comparison. Loras also detected the scents of five others mixed in with her own, five Alpha females. This was a stunning realization to Loras. This woman and five others had been claimed by the same Alpha male, yet they also had laid claim to one another as well, their blood deeply blended with each other as their scents were mingled together. This female wolf did not try to hide this fact, nor the fact that she was a half breed. The Lycavorian blood coursing through her was perhaps the purest blood she had ever smelled in her lifetime, and that was no small feat considering the pureness of the blood of many of the Alphas on Jetania, hers included.

This Anja Leonidas was, simply put, exquisitely beautiful.

Loras let her dark eyes take in those around her, letting her nose take in the scents of the gorgeous young woman beside her, as well as the two other females behind her. All of them carried the scent of that powerful Alpha blood in their veins, marking them as children of this Alpha, though not fully Lycavorian either. The one with platinum blond hair had two-inch-high pointed ears, something that Loras had never seen before. Something their people had never seen before. Loras gazed at Retta for a long moment, easily sensing that this was the young woman whose scent was mixing with her son's. Loras could detect that she was the daughter of this Queen, but she was equally as beautiful as her mother, just with a different build. She was slightly taller, her breasts not as large, and she had long legs for her height. That they were mother and daughter was unmistakable however. Loras glanced at Lazar quickly and knew he was avoiding her gaze intentionally. She turned back to Anja and stepped forward. They had spoken for nearly an hour on the Oracle's Communications Relay and Loras knew this woman was as intelligent as she was beautiful.

"Allow me... allow me to welcome you to Jetania." Loras spoke.

Anja smiled and held out her hand in order to greet Loras and that is when Garget acted.

"Echelon deploy!" He barked the words loudly, his voice echoing across the airfield.

The twenty odd men who were standing all around appearing to gawk at the crowd and the ship suddenly brandished weapons and came charging forward with those weapons leveled and Anja and the others. Loras's eyes flew open in shock and she whirled on Garget as half a dozen of the men broke for the ramp of SPARTAN ONE. Endith and Tina were at the top of the ramp this time however and before any of them made it within ten meters of the ramp she had slapped her hand down on the interior side wall and the silver blue force field exploded into existence, effectively sealing off the interior of the ship. The three closest men to the ramp ran directly into the shield and were flung back almost five meters from the force even as Tina was blurring in motion back to the cockpit.

Anja hadn't moved a muscle, one hand going to Retta's arm as two men suddenly were beside her and stuck their weapons in her face. It had been a large point of contention with Kalis, Tir'ut and Zarah, for all of them had voiced objections to this very scenario. They thought it was too risky and too many bad things could happen. Anja had insisted and all of them had eventually bowed to her decision though they did not like it in the least. Anja felt a swell of pride within her when she saw them restraining themselves as they were surrounded by the dozen plus men with weapons out and ready to be used.

"Garget no!" Lazar's voice rose above the rest as he imposed himself in front of Retta without even thinking, his arms held up in the air. He saw Rhaos mimic his move out of the corner of his eye, stepping in front of Zarah, Kalis and Lucia.

"Garget what are you doing!" Loras almost screamed as she saw now that he too was holding a weapon and it was pointed at Anja and the others.

"Loras let me handle this!" Garget barked now. "Step back! We will subdue and question them on our terms!"

"You will do no such thing!" Loras growled now, her eyes changing and her fangs bursting from her gums in anger as she stepped directly in front of him.

Garget stared at her. "I am the military commander of the Ranev Pack!" He bellowed now his own eyes changing and his fangs coming forth as well.

"And I am the Matriarch!" Loras shouted back at him. "You will stand your men down this instant! I have told you who these men and women are!"

Garget shook his head. "Your son was among them Loras!" He spoke to her. "Your judgement was clouded because they held him prisoner! We do not know who they are and you allowed them to come here! To our most secure facility! This is not something you would have done!"

"I am no prisoner!" Lazar barked. "Sibot attacked their people first! They could have killed me and Rhaos and they did not! Stand down Garget!"

"I will not!" Garget barked.

[Endy?] Anja reached out to Endith on SPARTAN ONE.

[We are ready Anja. Tina is in the dorsal turret and I will deploy it first. Serale is in the side turret!] Endith responded instantly.

[Zarah?]

[I will take the six closest to me.] Zarah answered. [Lucia and Radem will take the eight on your opposite side mother. Kalis and Tir'ut the ones on Retta's left.]

[No killing!] Anja stated firmly. [Move quickly because I sense more men coming. Endy execute now!]

It happened in the blink of an eye. Endith hit a switch inside SPARTAN ONE and the high pitched sonic pulse erupted from the belly of the ship. The sound was piercing and extremely painful and instantly caused every Lycavorian in the immediate vicinity to cry out in pain and reach for their ears. All except Loras and Lazar.

A split second before the pulse hit Retta leaped onto Lazar's powerful back and closed her hands over both of his ears.

Trust me! Retta projected with all of her etheric ability directly into Lazar's mind and his body froze in mid motion, his hands covering Retta's over his ears as he felt the most incredible sensation wash over him. A sensation of desire and passion wrapped within the sweet essence of Retta's female aura. He could see Anja reach his mother a micro second after the pulse began and do the same thing to her, dragging her back slightly as Loras's hands came up to cover Anja's.

Lazar could only watch in unmitigated awe as the others moved. Using their vampire speed, Zarah, Lucia and Tir'ut blurred among the Jetania Lycavorians and slapped their weapons out of their hands sending them skittering away as the men staggered and dropped to their knees in agony as the sonic pulse pummeled their sensitive wolf ears. Kalis was less gentle in his actions and simply used his combined Lycavorian and Kavalian strength, something he could now make use of fully, and punched four different men as hard as he could. They dropped to the tarmac unconscious.

Lazar realized that they must have had some sort of filters protecting their own ears so that the pulse did not affect them. He could hear and feel the pulse even through his and Retta's hands, but she had effectively sealed his sensitive wolf ears from the outside world and his hands only reinforced this, keeping the vibration and pain from reaching him. He pushed his hands tighter against hers to keep the pulse from affecting him and saw his mother doing the same thing. It took only eight seconds total, but in that eight seconds, they had disarmed twenty-two men as they staggered on their feet and their knees all around them. Amazingly, the half breed aside, they did not have to strike anyone and then they were standing back exactly where they had been all around him, but now their weapons were out and ready to use.

The sonic pulse ended at that very instant and Retta released her hands from his head, Lazar turning quickly to look at her with wide eyes. She smiled up at him shyly and then he turned to see Anja helping Loras to stand up fully. Lazar turned to Rhaos' large form now and saw him struggling to get to his feet, still holding his head with one hand. He moved to help his friend as Loras turned and looked at Anja in astonishment.

"How...?" Loras gasped.

Anja smiled at her as she stepped back slowly. "You pick up a few things when your husband and mate is the foremost tactical genius in the galaxy." She answered.

Loras turned her head to where Garget was struggling to get to his feet and she marched over to him and jerked him up angrily. "You fool!" She screamed at him.

"Shoot them!" Garget barked the order as she shook his head. "Shoot them!"

All of the Jetania Lycavorians were looking around trying to find their weapons and act on their order but none of them had their weapons anymore and they looked at the small group of strange Lycavorians and saw their side arms in a pile at their feet.

Loras grabbed Garget's shoulders and jerked his head around to look at her. "You will be silent Garget!" She shouted at him. "You are acting no better than Osrod right now! You are acting like the monster we all loathe!"

Garget looked at her wide eyed, his head still ringing in dull pain. "Loras we must..."

"You have acted stupidly!" Loras barked at him. "For all your years and wisdom you have acted more the fool today than at any time in your life!"

"Excuse me?" Anja's voice broke in and Loras turned to see her step up to where she squatted beside Garget.

"Be silent half breed!" Garget rasped angrily.

Anja chuckled. "Half breed?" She commented. "Wow... that's original." She jerked her thumb back toward SPARTAN ONE. "You should probably look on top of my ship." She told them.

Garget finally rose to his feet with Loras beside him and they both directed their eyes to the ship and saw the now occupied protrusion on top of the ship. It was not there before and it was obviously some sort of weapons turret. Garget's eyes went wide and he instinctively moved in front of Loras when he saw the gun turret come to rest pointed directly at him.

"Loras get..." He began to speak but Loras shoved him out of the way and remained in front of Anja.

"Ata uvenn Garget!" Loras snarled looking at him. "Aellsel ata uvenn!" (Shut up)

"You have more men about to enter this area." Anja spoke now looking at Garget. "Tell them to stand down or they will die. Just as you and everyone else here will die. I don't know what your problem is, but you will not succeed here. I will not allow you to take us prisoner."

"You will not allow?" Garget snarled at her.

Anja Leonidas was known throughout the Lycavorian Union as perhaps the one Queen that you did not want to test. Her combat skills were unquestioned as was her distaste for those who thought themselves superior to others. Her temper was famous and many had been cowed by her verbally through the years when they thought to challenge her. She was also known, along with Aricia, as being fearless. Anja stepped closer to Garget and allowed the wolf within her to come out. The black ring encircled her jade green eyes and her dual wolf fangs burst from her guns fully as she stared at Garget without fear.

"I will not allow!" Anja growled at him. "We came here, we brought Lazar and Rhaos back, even after your people attacked mine! Your people shot and almost killed my son!" Anja glared at him now, Garget's eyes wide as he saw the dual fangs and the ferociousness of this Alpha wolf. Half breed she may have been, but he could feel her aura pulsing with more power than he had ever felt from a pureblood in all his thirty thousand plus years. "We came here in friendship! You obviously don't want that friendship! We have nothing to do with that dipshit you call a King and your own arrogance and fear will ensure that doesn't change! We are going to board our ship now and leave you to wallow in your own ignorance!" Anja poked Garget in the chest hard, unafraid of him in the least. "You want to try and stop us vorat avan, go ahead! You will not succeed!"

"Anja no!" Loras pleaded.

Anja looked at her now. "I would have truly enjoyed getting to know you Loras Ranev, all of us would have, but we will not remain where we are not welcome. And Martin will not come here if this attitude is so prevalent. He has less patience for ignorance than I do."

"Anja please... we..."

Two large flashes of white orange light appeared on either side of Garget and Loras, Anja's head snapping around as suddenly a dozen men and women in light weight black and red body armor appeared on either side of them. All of them carried staffs of some sort and they immediately moved to take up positions surrounding Retta and the others, but facing outwards as if protecting them.

Loras looked around at them in shock. "Vada Brutu Stros!" She exclaimed.

"Tenna!" Kalis barked out as his hands tightened on his rifle, his eyes darting all around them as he made ready to dash forward and scoop her into his arms. He had been among them the least amount of time but he was also the most tactically sound and experienced and Anja knew it. And if he chose to act, Anja knew she would not be able to compete against his sheer strength in getting her to safety.

"Nysil Mandri!" Anja snapped quickly knowing what Androcles and Martin must have told him. Protect her at all costs. Kalis would do so even at the cost of his life Anja knew. (Hold Nephew)

Another flash of orange white light and suddenly Garget's wide eyes were focused on where Taris, Anoria and Rylin appeared as if by magic directly to his right. The Lycavorians in the landing area were also stunned into non-motion, unbelieving of what they had just seen take place.

"Taris!" Garget almost shouted when he saw his youngest and most cherished daughter twirl the staff she carried in her hand and move to stand beside Lazar with Anoria Vesrak next to her. Rylin stepped forward and looked at Garget shaking her head as if in disgust.

"Have we fallen so far into fear and mistrust that we no longer trust our own instincts Garget?" Rylin questioned him. Garget was about to respond when Rylin turned and looked at Anja. She bowed her head deeply which stunned Garget and those around them for the High Priestess of the Oracle never bowed to anyone. "Lady Anja, Queen Anja, it is with great hope and happiness that I greet you on behalf of the Oracle Nilantha."

Anja smiled and looked at her, Rylin's own eyes and fangs now openly displayed. They had spoken very briefly on the COM, most of her conversations having been with Loras, but she struck Anja as a capable and extremely intelligent woman. "Thank you." Anja spoke evenly. "Though I dare say there are some who do not share your sentiment."

Rylin looked at Garget quickly and then back to her. "Garget Ranev has led the Ranev pack with honor and a calm hand for many centuries Queen Anja. His only goal is to keep our people and Loras safe ever since she became Matriarch to the Mountain Packs. There are times when his devotion to his duties blind him to other things."

Anja looked at Garget then, bending over to retrieve his fallen and discarded sidearm and she stood back up. "I do have some experience in witnessing that very trait. Martin tends to be very overprotective at times."

Rylin smiled at this. "Vada Mard Revik is like this?"

Anja rolled her eyes slightly and her smile grew wider. "You have no idea." She said. He looked at Garget and held out the sidearm to him, seeing his eyes grow wide at this action. "This nubous igord King Osrod gave the order to shoot my youngest son and one of my dearest friends, Garget Ranev. We have no connection to him and given the opportunity, I will happily serve you his shriveled nor on a plate if that is your wish, if my husband and mate doesn't catch him first. That would be even more unpleasant for him I assure you."

Garget's eyes went wide at her words and even Loras and Rylin could not help the laughs that escaped their lips. Garget reached out slowly and took the weapon from her fingers, his eyes never leaving her face. He had not detected even the hint of a lie in her words, her heart calm and her words true. This Alpha female, half breed though she may have been, she had ice in her veins.

"Then... then it is true?" He gasped aloud. "It is all true?"

Anja glanced at Loras and Rylin. "Is what true?" She asked.

Loras reached up and put her hands on his broad shoulders. "Yes, Garget my friend. It is true."

SPARTA'S WRATH

The bridge of SPARTA'S WRATH was very crowded even with the immense size of the bridge itself. Martin stood to one side of the bridge with Aricia, For'mya, Jezima and Dynina. Asa and Archer stood closer to the bulkhead, ever present shadows to Jezima and now Dynina, per their King's instructions. The two women were their only concern now. Danny had returned to Ventori with Wayonn and Murano to prepare to jump to Jetania in COLS space if Martin or Anja called for him. There was no discussion Dynina noticed right away, only a few odd looks between the brothers that Dynina did not understand. She had questioned Aricia and For'mya about this as they made their way to the bridge and Aricia's answer had been very blunt and honest.

"Martin and Daniel do not need to speak to one another openly in order to know what the other is thinking Dynina. They do not even need to communicate etherically. That is why they are true Fervons rie vada Saan. They have a link that only brothers forged together in the fires of combat can have. If it is needed, and Martin or Anja calls for him, Daniel will jump to this planet Jetania with half our force of ships and Spartans. He will then lay waste to everything, opening the Letha rie Jorbhe upon them until Anja is safe or Martin orders him to cease."

Dynina really had not had much of a response to that statement and she had shuddered involuntarily at the cold way Aricia had replied. It was spoken with hardly any emotion at all, a simple declaration of fact. No doubt, and certainly no hesitation.

Dynina had immersed herself in the long history and lore of these Spartans that rose to greatness on Earth under Martin's father after her times connecting to Walter. Their code of honor, both as wolves and as men, was nearly unbendable. Dynina now fully understood why Helen had chosen the Spartan men and women to host the Ten Thousand in that dark time. They were extremely formidable even before the Lycavorian blood was introduced into their culture, and now they had blended their two cultures together so seamlessly that it was impossible to tell them apart. Dynina also knew that even among those many species in the Union that were not Lycavorian, the Spartan culture and way of life had taken deep root.

As they stood on the bridge now, only hours from fulfilling the goal Sumar had tasked her with so many years ago, Dynina let her dark eyes wander to where Androcles stood beside Armen across the bridge. Dorian and Laren were on standing on his left, his Anome Sadi on his right. Perlae, Ishma and Awser standing on the opposite side of the towering Avatar. They were speaking to one another in whispers but Dynina could see the animation of their faces and the joy that filled their eyes. The day she had wished to be upon her grandchildren was now here and they would have a hand going into the future.

Dynina could only watch as the spider like Worker Drone Alpha Nine moved from Armen to Androcles, crawling easily between their wide shoulders and all the while bouncing animatedly and singing out with brief chirps and whistles. It did not seem to bother Androcles in the least and he would often nod his head to the metal creature. Dynina had often heard of the Pralor Worker Drones from her friends on Lorenu but she had never witnessed them in action until she had arrived among these men and women. The plans to build these Drones had not been included in the information on the Pralor ships that they had arrived on Lorene with. She had seen them skittering all across the decks on this very ship, as well as others, and men and women acknowledged them even as they moved among the same corridors. It was almost as if they were treated as crewmembers.

Dynina reached out and touched Martin's arm seeing his head turn to look at her. "He actually understands all those noises that machine emits?" She asked.

Martin glanced over and saw Alpha Nine move from Andro's shoulder back to Armen and he smiled and turned back to look at her. "He always has been an oddball." Martin spoke.

For'mya snorted softly in humor. "And I wonder where he gets that from." She stated as Jezima smiled and squeezed her hand.

"Father!" Andro called from across the bridge causing Martin to look at him. "We are ready."

Martin nodded his head. "Let her rip Armen." He spoke loudly.

Andro looked at Armen and nodded his head. Armen stepped away from Androcles and moved to his command position in the center of the bridge.

-Helm... is your course locked in-

"Standing by sir!" The male voice echoed out.

-TO, ensure defensive systems are activated the moment we revert to normal space. All Refractive Shield Banks to full power and prepare all batteries for saturation fire-

"Defensive grids online and ready. Weapons powered and prepared to initiate saturation barrage sir." The female voice called out.

Dynina stepped closer to Martin. "Staaniaketo, these measures are not needed." She spoke softly.

Martin nodded his head. "I know, but this is standard procedure for us when jumping to an unknown location staania. And it keeps our people sharp."

-Very well. Helm Officer... engage the Subspace Portal Generator. Let's go where we have never been before-

Martin Leonidas rolled his eyes and shook his head while laughter carried across the bridge. "Great!" He muttered. "Another movie quoting Avatar. As if Avi wasn't enough."

Andro laughed at his father's reaction and all eyes turned to the main view window. The stars were beginning to distort and stretch in front of them, becoming white streaks of solid light and then SPARTA'S WRATH became the first Lycavorian Union warship in history to use the SPG Engine Drive. Those men and women watching from other ships above Ventori saw the white streaks engulf the massive command ship, like small lasers hitting every centimeter of her hull. and then the enormous ship was gone.

SPARTA'S WRATH
LORENU

The planet was beautiful to look at as it appeared in the view window and then the stars returned to normal and before them was a sight Dynina had seen many times. No one spoke as they all were staring at the planet before them. Perlae was closest to Androcles and she saw the look of astonishment on his face and she laughed softly. It was Martin's comment that brought loud laughter from those on the bridge.

"Nubou lae!" Martin gasped as he stared at the planet in front of him.

"Martin Leonidas!" For'mya barked as she slapped him hard in the shoulder.

"We are being hailed from the surface!" A female voice barked out from the side. "Secure QRC channel!"

Andro turned to Armen with wide eyes. "Armen, how far did we travel?" He gasped.

Armen's eyes moved back and forth quickly. -Overlaying known star charts- Armen spoke. -Fascinating. We are...-

Andro looked at him as he paused. "Armen?"

-We have traversed forty-seven thousand three and hundred and nineteen point nine light years- Armen answered his voice carrying with it something Andro had never heard before. He heard awe. -We are currently on the extreme edge of what was once known Pralor space. Sensors cannot penetrate outside the surrounding system due to the highly unstable Ionic Particle Nebula that encircles the Lorene planetary system- Armen looked at Androcles directly now, his eyes wide. -There is no way to determine how large the nebula is or how far it extends around the planet and surrounding system Andro, but essentially we are completely invisible to any known sensor arrays- Armen saw Androcles' eyes widen even more and his internal sensors detected an increase in his heartrate and that of Dorian and Laren.

"They will expect me to answer staaniaketo." Dynina spoke to Martin.

Martin looked at her still stunned and he nodded. "Andro... open the channel."

-Opening secure QRC channel- Armen spoke.

The main holodisc on the bridge flare to life with the image of several figures, Pralor, Darastrixi and Lycavorian in the background. The Darastrixi male was in the forefront and he looked at them with wide eyes as Dynina stepped forward.

"Kadeer." Dynina spoke very affectionately. She could speak no other way to the man who had loved her daughter with such fervor and dedication.

"Dynina!" Kadeer exclaimed.

"Father!" Perlae, Ishma and Awser all spoke as one.

Everyone on the bridge saw the Darastrixi's jaw twitch slightly as he saw his children and he smiled. "My children." He spoke calmly though his voice wavered ever so slightly. He turned back to Dynina. "We have been waiting eagerly Dynina. Do you..." His eyes shifted once more and he saw who his children stood next too. "Nomag wer navniki ve." He gasped in his native Darastrixi tongue. "Vada Tarivuos!" He switched to very fluent Lycavorian as he gazed upon Androcles, Dorian and Laren. His orange hued eyes snapped back to where Dynina stood and he saw Martin. "Wer irral Daar ar Fogah! Dynina you have... you have found them!" (May the spirits preserve me) (The first king of three)

Dynina nodded her head. "We have my dear friend." She spoke. "Please have..."

"Dynina... the Temple..." Kadeer interrupted her. "The Temple has come alive! It had... it happened only moments ago! It is continuing to power up. Our readings suggest that the entire facility is waking up!"

Dynina's eyes were wide. "Kadeer are you certain?" She gasped.
"Yes!" Kadeer answered. "It is..."

-Andro-

All heads on the bridge turned to see Androcles stagger slightly, and then they saw Dorian and Laren also teeter and grab for one another.

"Andro!" Sadi gasped aloud as she reached for him.

"Do you feel it?" Dorian echoed her words.

Andro reached out to grasp the computer station beside him with one hand and grip Sadi with the other as Awser reached for him. "Cousin?" He asked. "What is wrong?"

Andro shook his head. "I don't know." He answered softly. "Something... something is reaching for us!"

Martin did not hesitate and he moved across the bridge in half a dozen strides, his hands going to his sons and Laren without regard. "Andro?"

Andro gripped his father's arms. "We can... we can feel a presence father!" He spoke. "It is getting stronger and..."

Martin felt the surge of power through his son's hands and his own eyes grew wider. "Saoi sibfla!" He gasped aloud feeling the powerful etheric energy source swirling around them.

Directly to their right there was a bright flash of white light and then suddenly hovering before them was a ball of pure white light. Several crewmembers jumped out of their seats and drew weapons, leveling them at the ball of white light. And then they all heard the voice. A female voice, like the smooth gentleness of running water from a mountain stream.

Come to me. All of you. It is time. It is time for the Dahakoan Heralds and the True King to take their places. Come to me. All of you. The time has come for the Prophecy to be fulfilled.

As quickly as the ball of white light had appeared it was gone. Aricia and For'mya rushed across the bridge to join Martin and reaching for Androcles and the others.

"What the hell was that?" Martin barked.

-Unknown- Armen answered. -It did not register on internal sensors-

"We must go there Andro!" Laren hissed softly as she gripped For'mya and Ishma's arms. "We must go there now!"

Dorian nodded his head as he held onto Awser and Perlae. "Andro!"

"Yes!" Androcles spoke right after her.

Dynina was the one who acted decisively now. "Kadeer!" She barked out seeing his wide eyes come to rest on her.

Everyone in the control room on Lorenu had seen what had just taken place and their eyes were just as shocked as those on SPARTA'S WRATH. "You and the others meet us at the Temple entrance with all the information we have gathered through the years! Waste no time my friend! We will be coming down in haste!"

Kadeer Imuma glanced at his three children and then nodded his head. "We will be waiting!" He barked.

JETANIA
HIDDEN AIRFIELD
SIX KLICKS NORTHEAST OF WARIM

Rylin and Loras had led Anja and the others into the main airfield facility that was built into the side of one of the mountains that the airfield was hidden between. Endith, Tina and Serale had remained with SPARTAN ONE, the shield still in place covering the rear of the ship. Tina had told Anja they were not worried, nothing that they had seen so far suggested that these Coalition folks had anything that could breach the force field, let alone the Dragon Armor on SPARTAN ONE. They would maintain open COM channels from their implants and be ready for a quick departure if it was needed.

Garget found himself continually glancing at Kalis, Tir'ut, Normya, Zarah and Lucia. Two of them had the scent of this Alpha that was so powerfully prominent on the red haired Queen, which indicated they were his children. The young man he now knew was Kalis, the Lycavorian blood within him was very potent as well and smelled faintly of the same blood within Anja and her children Garget concluded. He must have been a relative of some sort in order for it to be so powerful. The huge one with bone spikes on his face had the blood of the platinum haired young female within his blood, and the black hair female also had the same with the other daughter. He did not understand what this meant, smelling them together like he did, but one thing he did recognize was that the young daughter, Zarah was her name, and the other one called Lucia were lovers.

Garget knew this was against the law among COLS, and while most of the Mountain Packs ignored this and many other laws they thought stupid, it was not a common thing at all. Garget personally did not have an opinion of this, it neither bothered him or pleased him. His take was the same as most of the Mountain Packs. Respect and honor those among you the same way you would want them to treat you. Garget knew of a few relationships such as this within all of the Mountain packs across Jetania, but they were not shunned and they were protected by their Packs from COLS law. As far as he was concerned, if two souls were meant to be in such a way, who was he to say otherwise. Garget blinked as Loras finished asked the question regarding Ventori and he looked at her quickly and then to Anja.

“...Betas and Gamma are still alive then?” Loras spoke. “Truly?”

Anja nodded her head. “What is left of them yes. As I told you before, they had built a great society and many cities through the years, but it was all lost a little over three years ago.”

“By these... by these... you called them Svorag?” Rylin asked.

Anja nodded once more. “Yes.” She leaned forward in her chair now. “Forgive me for being blunt, but that is not a concern right now.” She spoke. “What will be more of a concern for my mate Martin is why this Sibot person did what he did? Why did he try to kidnap us? The encounter our son Androcles had with your ships when they first entered this system should have given your leadership pause at the very least.”

Garget snorted in disgust now. “Osrod Aspion may be King, but he is no leader.” He stated with loathing in his voice. “He is a rudimentary tactician at best. His only concerns are cementing his own power and influence and acquiring more.”

Lazar looked at his mother and saw her nod. This did not go unnoticed by Anja and the others but Anja waited patiently. Lazar turned to look at her then. “When Nasso first reported the encounter with your ships to my father... he was not surprised.” Lazar told her. “It was almost like he knew about you already.”

“That’s not possible.” Anja said. “We have only been in this quadrant of space for a few months and we have not encounter other Lycavorians except those on Ventori. How could he already know about us?”

“The Tri-Alliance.” Garget said.

Anja met his eyes now. “I have heard that term before. Your ship’s commander accused us of being part of that. What is that?”

“Many millennia ago when Osrod’s grandfather was still King, there was another encounter with Lycavorians we had never seen before. They were with two other species that we had also never seen before. They were very technologically advanced, just as you are, but Osrod’s grandfather chose to try and force them to give up their technology to us and become part of COLS.” Rylin spoke now. “They refused. They were led by a woman. A Lycavorian woman of great beauty and intelligence. Osrod’s grandfather welcomed them into our society and for weeks they were among us, making friends and mingling with us. Osrod’s grandfather then chose to betray them in order to take the technology they had. He tried to force this woman to become his mate even after she rebuffed his advances. She injured him badly and somehow she managed to warn all of her people here on Jetania and told them to get off. How they managed this is unknown, but most of those who were here managed to escape before Royal Security Forces could capture them. A handful did not make it and were captured, but most got off the planet and back to their ship.”

“How many is a handful?” Anja asked.

“Rumors say half a dozen, perhaps more.” Garget spoke now. “No one knows for sure. They were declared enemies of the Coalition within hours. Those that were captured were... they were never heard from again. Osrod’s grandfather was mutilated physically by this woman... she...”

“Via ceit jen nor stasi.” Anja finished his sentence. (She bit his balls off)

Rylin and Garget looked at her with wide eyes. “How do you... how do you know that?” Garget finally asked in shock. “That is not... that information is not common knowledge!”

Anja nodded her head. “I don’t imagine it is.” She said. “I know that because the woman who committed this act is my mate’s staania, several times removed, but she is... she is our blood. As are her grandchildren, who your Captain Nasso wanted to capture. That is why our son Androcles did what he did.”

“Never surrender your family.” Loras whispered softly. “Not when they are innocent or persecuted.”

Anja nodded her head. “Exactly.” She stated.

“Then you are members of the Tri-Alliance?” Lazar asked now.

Anja shook her head quickly. “As I said before, we had never heard the term before this Captain Nasso accused us of being part of it.” She spoke. “And Dynina Mahanlo only came to be among us within the last three days. She arrived on Ventori the day before this igord Sibot attacked us.” Anja sat back in her chair now.

“Mahanlo?” Garget spoke with wide eyes.

Anja nodded her head. “Yes. Do you know the name?”

Loras looked at Anja. “It is... the Oracle has told us that the Mahanlo Pack is where it all began Anja. Where the Prophecy began on our original homeworld.”

“Lycavore.” Anja stated evenly.

“Then it does exist?” Garget almost yelled.

Anja nodded her head. “Oh yes.” She answered. “I have been there.”

“You have been there as well?” Rylin gasped now. “Truly?”

Anja nodded her head. “Many years ago to retrieve one of our children that had been separated from us. It is deep within High Coven space but now that Androcles has brought peace between us, we were hoping to take all of our family there one day.”

“This High Coven...?” Lazar asked now from beside Retta. “They are the ones who caused Vada Brutu Dur. Just as the prophecy foretold?”

Anja nodded her head. “Yes, but there were many among their kind that did not believe as their leaders did. Through the years many defected to be with us. Millions of them are now family and close friends to all of our people.”

Garget glanced at where Lucia and Zarah stood together, Radem just behind them. “And more it would appear.” He stated.

“Those of us within the Mountain Packs... that is what we have believed for millennia.” Rylin stated now. “The Oracle has tried to maintain this but it became very hard when Osrod’s father tried to murder her and ban our beliefs.”

Anja nodded her head. “Well... she is certainly not wrong.” She answered. “Though I personally believe it goes far beyond what she knows. Martin does too. We left the Alpha Quadrant in the hopes that we would find the answers to many of the questions that have plagued Martin since he was a little boy. We have discovered many of those answers, but the answers have brought far more questions.”

Rylin nodded her head. “As most answers do.” She replied. “The Oracle will be able to answer more of your questions Anja, but even she is not all knowing. While the scrolls she has mentioned this Mahanlo Pack in many important verses and statements, they do not go beyond them.”

Anja nodded her head. “I thought that might be the case.” She said. “But you knew about Martin, and you know of our sons and Laren. And you knew we would eventually come here?”

Loras nodded her head. “Not when exactly. Only that it would happen one day. Vada Mard Revik for vada Tarivuos gur ared jur chevsh.” (The True King and the Heralds will one day come.)

“And henes gur sey vada saan rie allsknesi vorevor hel.” Rylin finished the statement from the Oracle’s Scrolls. (And they will have the blood of the ancients within them.)

Anja looked at both of them for a long moment. “And you... you have believed this all of this time?” She asked finally.

Rylin nodded her head. “Yes.”

“It has been the cornerstone of our purpose.” Garget told her now, and his words caused him to go up several notches in Anja’s book. “At least those of us among the Mountain Packs. Those who follow Osrod, the Coastal, City and Plains Packs, they have drifted away from what the Oracle has been teaching for as long as any of us can remember.”

“Not all of them Garget.” Loras spoke. “There are some who still believe. And I think there are far more than what we know of.”

Garget nodded at her words. “Yes, you are correct Loras.”

“So this pinhead Osrod wanted to capture us, any of us, to get information out of us?” Anja asked. “That is what Sibot was ordered to do?”

Lazar nodded his head now. “I do not know what his exact orders to Sibot were.” He spoke. “Most likely that was part of it. More than likely he also wanted prisoners to barter to your mate for technology or other things. Anything to enhance his power base and make him stronger.”

“He would have been sorely disappointed.” Zarah spoke for the first time from where she stood. They all saw Retta grin beside Lazar and nod her head silently at this. “Our father and brother would have come for us. They would have brought ruin to this fool Osrod. Our fervon especially.”

“Mard astia.” Retta echoed her sister’s words. (True Enough)

“You are not fully Lycavorian child.” Garget spoke but he did so with respect and no malice in his voice.

Zarah looked at her mother. “Medwan?”

Garget looked surprised. “You refer to her as mother?”

Anja nodded her head to Zarah and she looked back to Garget. “My mother is a vampire. Queen Isabella. I am half vampire as are my sister Carina and my brother Dorian. And I do call her mother. We do not differentiate who our birth mothers are however, we never have. My brothers and sisters and I see all of them as our mother. They speak with one voice and always have, just as if they were the ones who brought us into this world.”

“Fascinating.” Rylin spoke looking at Anja. “You are...”

“I was Hadarian before Martin turned me.” Anja replied. “It is one of the many species within the Union.”

“But your blood...” Garget spoke softly. “Your aura... it is more powerful than almost any pureblooded Alpha female that I have smelled in my lifetime. I dare say only Loras comes close to matching your aura. How is that possible?”

“Una coi vada saan rie vada allsknesi Garget.” Rylin spoke. (It is the blood of the ancients.) “It flows within the True King and therefore any who are turned by him. The purest of any bloodline among our people no matter where we reside. Vada mard saan.” She looked at Anja now. “We have... we have always believed that we are descended from those who once lived on our true homeworld Queen Anja. We... oh my... what do you wish us to call you?”

Anja looked confused. “Call me?”

“You are Queen, one of six Queens to the Mard Revik.” Rylin spoke. “We must honor this.”

Anja shook her head. “Be that as it may be, you will find that we do not... we do not adhere to the usual decorum. Anja is just fine. We don’t consider ourselves any more important than the next person.”

“But you are... you are royalty.” Garget spoke. “By virtue of your blood.”

“We will refer to you as Lady Anja.” Rylin spoke putting an end to that conversation. “At least until we received new directives from the Oracle or from the Mard Revik.” All of them saw Anja smile and they heard Retta chuckle very softly. They looked at her with surprise and some distain but Retta shook her head quickly.

“Forgive me. I do not find you or your words humorous...” Retta quickly explained. “I just think my father will surprise you.”

“In what way child?” Garget asked.

“My father, our father...” Retta motioned to Zarah and Normya who stood behind her. “He is unlike any King that you might think of. In all the time we and our siblings have grown, he has done more to not be King to our people. He hates the job. He says that all of the time.”

“Retta!” Anja cautioned sharply causing her to meet her gaze. [Be careful what you say Baby Girl. We don’t yet know if we can trust them fully.]

Retta nodded her head quickly. [I'm sorry mother.] She spoke. [But I think you feel that we can trust them completely. It is what I feel.]

Anja nodded her head. [Perhaps... but your father would want us to be cautious Retta. You know that. Andro as well.]

Retta's face changed instantly and she nodded her head without hesitation. Anja smiled at this reaction because it was a simple fact among all of their children. None of them wanted to do anything that would dishonor their father, they would die before doing that Anja knew, but ranking right up there with that knowledge was the fact that none of them wanted to look foolish to their older brother. Androcles had been there for each and every one of them during their lives and he had taught them many things, far more things than even their parents knew about, as Anja and her fellow Queens were discovering as time went by, and none of his siblings would do anything that they knew Androcles did not find prudent or smart.

While Garget sat there in his chair and saw only Anja staring at her daughter with an almost stern expression, Rylin, Loras and Lazar felt the faintest of tremors within their minds. Like tiny whispers upon a wind that were gone almost before you could recognize them. Rylin knew what it was from almost the moment she felt the whisper, and while she had cultivated through the years what the Oracle had shown her in regards to her Etheric ability, Rylin now knew that what she could do was infantile compared to this woman, her children and the Mard Revik. Rylin quickly decided to move the conversation back the way it had been going. Now was not the time to get into a discussion about Etheric abilities, for Garget and Lazar would not understand fully what Loras and she already knew.

"As I was saying before..." Rylin began again. "Osrod's grandfather and father began to diminish this belief until it was no longer our history, but a myth and legend. They even had official history and records altered to reflect this. Many among the Plains, City and Coastal Packs have forsaken this history as gibberish, but those from the Mountain Packs, the Alphas taken from Ventori and brought here, we have always believed and our faith has never wavered. No matter what Osrod and his ancestors did they could not beat this out of our people. It is one of the main reasons we, while not shunned by the others, are avoided. We are allowed to go everywhere within COLS, serve in the military and such, all under the stipulation that we do not preach or try to convert others."

"Who taught you this?" Anja asked her.

"Our Oracle from Ventori did not survive the return trip here to Jetania, but her writings and teachings have been the basis for us for millennia." Rylin answered. "When we came here and discovered the COLS Oracle spoke and taught the same thing, it was one of the reasons we decided to remain. And the fact that Osrod's grandfather would not let us leave. Nilantha combined what our Oracle taught us into what she taught, they were essentially the same thing you see, and it was almost as if we did not leave Ventori."

"And how long have you been here?" Anja asked.

Rylin shrugged her shoulders. "No one really knows anymore." She answered honestly. "The Oracle I'm sure has the exact number of years, she was there to greet many of the senior Pack members when they first arrived, from a distance anyway, but for most of us it no longer matters. At least two hundred and fifty thousand years or something like that."

"And how long have the others been here?" Anja asked her.

Rylin shook her head slowly. "Long before we arrived here. Perhaps an additional hundred thousand years or so. Mountain Pack history begins when we arrived here, but the history of COLS goes back another hundred thousand years at least."

Anja nodded her head to herself. That timetable fit roughly with what information Martin and the others had been able to put together. She looked at Rylin and Loras. "When can we meet with Nilantha?" She asked.

Rylin nodded her head. "She will be arriving shortly. Taris and Anoria went to retrieve her. I..." Rylin turned when the door to the secure conference room opened and a young Alpha male moved in quickly and went right to Garget.

"Something has come up that needs your attention sir." He spoke to Garget.

Garget looked across the table at Lazar. "Lazar... you and Rhaos join me." He spoke coming to his feet. "Rylin we will be in the Command Center when the Oracle arrives. I would like to meet her Rylin, given what is happening all around us now."

Rylin nodded her head with a smile. "I believe it is time for just that Garget my old friend." She replied. "Finish what you need to take care of and return here." She said.

Anja watched intently as Lazar rose to his feet, glancing at Retta for a long moment, her green eyes looking up into his face before he turned and followed Rhaos and Garget out of the room. She turned back to Anja and the others as Zarah moved to take Lazar's vacated seat beside her sister, and Normya moved a chair from the other side of the wall to take up position on Retta's opposite side. Lucia simply stood behind Zarah, her hands on Zarah's shoulders.

Rylin watched this with interest for she could tell instantly that the young, red haired female was coming into Phase. Her first Phase if Rylin's nose was accurate, and it was going to be a powerful one if she was any judge, but amazingly she was suppressing it unlike any female wolf she had ever seen before. She was drawing strength from her sisters in the room and also from her mother in doing this Rylin was sure, any female wolf could do that to a degree, but this young female was suppressing her fever almost to the point that it did not hamper her mentally or physically in any way. Rylin did not know how she was doing it, but she was, and she also noticed that Lazar Aspion was the focal point of this young woman's interest. Rylin had seen desire in a female wolf before, yet what she saw in Retta's eyes for Lazar was pure, unbridled passion, deep longing and ardent desire. And though Lazar was fighting it very well, she knew he felt the same attraction to Retta, for he would never have sat beside her at the table otherwise.

"He doesn't trust us yet." Anja's voice drew Rylin out of her thoughts.

"Lady Anja?" She asked looking at Anja. Rylin didn't know it but she had just coined what everyone among the Mountain Packs would begin to call Anja and her fellow Queens now and into the future.

"Garget." Anja spoke sitting back in her chair and looking at Loras. "He doesn't trust us completely. I could smell that on him easily. And pulling Lazar and Rhaos out of here as if I would not know what he intended was a dead giveaway as well."

Loras leaned forward. "Anja, he is one of the most loyal men I have..." She began to defend him but Anja shook her head.

"No, I understand. Believe me I do." Anja spoke quickly. "In his shoes I would probably be the same way. I respect that. He cares deeply for both of you, that much is obvious." Anja looked at Rylin. "Does he know that Nilantha is not Lycavorian?"

Rylin shook her head. "Very few of our people do." She replied. "With you being here and the Mard Revik and the Heralds not far behind you, I believe it is time to change that."

Anja nodded her head. "That would probably be a good thing." She spoke. She looked at Loras once more. "You realize that once this fool Osrod finds out about her, he will use that knowledge to discredit her. Or try to anyway. Maybe even attempt to kill her if her knowledge is as extensive as I think it is."

Loras nodded her head. "Yes. We have always known that, but we are prepared for it." She answered. "She may be a different species, but as I have learned so very recently, there is no way she could know what she knows without being Lycavorian at least in her heart." Loras met her eyes. "And she is."

Garget drew Lazar and Rhaos into the separate room down the corridor as the young Alpha moved to the massive wall bank of monitors in the room. This was the main control point for the city of Warim and its defenses as well as the surrounding two hundred square kilometers of territory around Warim. Nothing living gained entry into that area without being detected by someone in this main control room. Thousands of hidden cameras and sensors of all kinds were spread all over the two hundred square kilometers and it was very nearly impossible to traverse more than a few hundred feet within the control area without some sort of sensor detecting your movements. Every Mountain Pack city was set up in such a way, and it was one of the reasons Osrod had never been able to extend his reach into their territory.

"What do you have Odak?" Garget asked him.

The young man sat in his chair and pulled up something on the huge monitor in front of him. "They came in through the western tunnels sir." Odak answered pointing to the monitor. "Half a dozen Alphas on what appears to be a hunting trip. You can see for yourselves who leads them."

Garget, Lazar and Rhaos all looked at the monitor as the picture tightened on the face of one wolf.

“Juyno!” Lazar snarled angrily. “Lon nubous lytor!”

“They continue to use the Western Tunnels thinking that we cannot see them when they enter our territory.” Odak spoke. “This is the third trip he has led into our lands in the last eight months.”

Lazar and Rhaos both snorted in obvious disgust at this information and Garget smiled in response to their reaction. “Hunting trip my mida!” Lazar snarled angrily. “If my dog of a half-brother is leading them, they are searching for any Mountain Pack females that may stray from the main travel corridors or ones they can snatch from a small village.”

Garget nodded his head. “Their forays into our lands are becoming more frequent since the two of you and Laon have been out among the stars playing hero these last years.” Garget told them. “Three of them have been successful in the last five years alone.”

Lazar looked at him. “The females?”

“Two from the Gorlet Pack and one from the Sinsal Pack.” Garget answered. “It took all of your mother’s will to keep the Sinsal Pack from openly wiping out the Plains Pack that took her. Loras’ proxy lodged a formal complaint with your father’s staff but they laughed it off as they always do.”

“Did they retrieve them?” Rhaos asked now.

Garget shook his head with a sly grin. “Surprisingly, all of the young females chose to remain. The Alphas who claimed them treated them well and have been committed to them to a fault since they were taken. None have taken other mates and the three females have garnered the trust of those around them now. They make excellent intelligence sources. All of them have children now, and when the Alphas bring them back to their Packs to visit, all three return with them and they act with honor and integrity. It took Melkot Sinsal longer to accept it, it was one of his daughters that was taken, but now even he is satisfied with the young wolf. He has proven his dedication to Melkot’s daughter, which is no small feat.”

Lazar nodded his head. “No it is not.” He agreed.

Rhaos looked at Lazar. “So there is still some hope for them.” He stated.

Garget nodded his head. “Perhaps. They are the only three that have been allowed to remain mated however. The other females they have taken have all been returned to their packs. Most of the COLS Alpha have no stomach for a Mountain Pack Alpha female. They want their women submissive and meek.” Garget looked at Lazar now. “That young half breed burns for you Lazar.”

Lazar looked up quickly and met his eyes. “And I for her Garget.” He answered honestly. He would never lie to this man, who he regarded as more a father to him than his own blood. “I do not understand it... I have been in the presence of other females in Phase. Powerful Alpha females, but none of them have affected me as Retta does. It’s almost as if my blood yearns to be with her. It burns to be with her. Her blood calls to me like nothing I have ever felt Garget!”

Garget nodded his head. “Half breed though she may be Lazar, if she truly does have the blood of the ancients within her, the blood of the Mard Revik, then no pureblood on Jetania will be like her. Her aura reeks for you Lazar. She wants only you. Even an old wolf like me can smell that. Do what your blood and your instincts call for you to do my boy.”

Lazar looked at him. “If the Mard Revik is even half as frightening as this tiny Queen he has chosen; I will do no such thing!” Lazar exclaimed. “I wish to keep my cock right where it is!”

Garget laughed now with Rhaos, who pounded his friend on the back. It lasted for several moments and then Garget looked at them. “Now tell me.” He spoke, his voice turning serious. “What did you see?”

“They have my ship.” Lazar spoke somberly. “My crew. After what Sibot did I don’t know what will happen to them. I failed them Garget.”

Garget shook his head quickly. “You did no such thing.” He retorted. “You acted as any good commander would have done when faced with what you told me you saw.” Garget turned and looked at the screen for a long moment. “After what I have seen this tiny Queen do, the power she commands and she is only half Lycavorian, no I do not believe they will harm your crew Lazar. It would give them nothing and if this is the Mard Revik he would know that.”

Lazar and Rhaos looked at him, Rhaos nodding his head and reaching up to squeeze the shoulder of his oldest friend and confidant. “Garget is right Lazar.” He said turning to look at Garget. “We did not see much before we left orbit of Ventori Garget.” He replied.

Garget nodded his head. “But what did you see?” He asked.

Lazar looked at him now. “Power.” He replied. “Power the likes of which none of us have ever imagined Garget. Ships that make our largest and most powerful warship appear infantile in comparison. Their troops are extremely well trained and heavily armed and as you have seen for yourself, not all of them are Lycavorian. We saw dozens of species, though the actual number who acted as warriors was limited to perhaps half a dozen. Their weapons and tactics are far superior to what we have. Lady Anja and those with her on that ship took us down without so much as breaking a sweat.”

Rhaos rolled his eyes. “You had to remind me didn’t you?” He spoke under his breath and reached up to rub his shoulder where Anja had stabbed him.

Garget smiled once more. “Never be ashamed of being bested by someone who is better trained and equipped than you Rhaos. We are not all superior as Osrod would have so many of our young troops believe.”

“Garget they fight beside sinuovas!” Lazar spoke.

Garget looked at him with wide eyes. “Impossible. Sinuovas are nothing more than a myth! Tales from books that we tell our children!”

“We saw them for ourselves Garget.” Rhaos spoke again. “They are massive and these Lycavorians ride them into battle! They wear armor of some kind and have vicious claws and teeth!”

Garget looked at Lazar and saw him nod his head. “He is not lying Garget. They are very intelligent from what we could see and it is almost as if they can talk to these Lycavorians.”

“Talk to them?” Garget asked.

Lazar nodded his head. “I don’t know how to explain it, but that is what it appeared like to me.” He shook his head. “We were not able to observe them for too long because of Sibot’s fool actions, but that is what we saw.”

“What the dark haired half breed woman did.” Garget spoke softly. “The other woman and that bone faced one. I have never seen someone move with such speed. They were only blurs in my vision.”

Lazar nodded his head. “That is how they got the upper hand on the ship.” He said. “They must have been hiding somewhere with powerful scent maskers waiting for the right moment. Were it not for Retta’s mother... had she given the word we would all be dead Garget.”

“Half breed or not, the blood within her is more powerful than any I have ever smelled with the possible exception of your mother.” Garget spoke softly. He moved to a chair and settled his large frame into it deep in thought. Lazar and Rhaos both watched him and remained silent for a long few moments. Finally, Lazar stepped forth.

“What is it Garget?” He asked.

Garget met his eyes. “All of my life I have believed what the teachings of the Oracle have told us, yet a large part of me would always push it aside as fantasy and that we needed to be ourselves.” He spoke. “Now... now the very prophesies that we have always whispered and hoped would take place, even though many of us never truly believed them, now it seems they were all true.”

“What does that mean?” Rhaos asked.

“It means that things are about to begin changing.” Garget answered. He looked at Lazar. “And I don’t think your father will be happy.”

“Nubou tye!” Lazar spat.

Garget laughed heartily now. “He is not my type young wolf.” He spoke causing both Lazar and Rhaos to join in his laughter. “Come, let us make sure that wondrous ship on our airfield is secure and then return to Rylin and the others.”

LORENU TEMPLE SITE

It had been a very quick exit from SPARTA'S WRATH to be sure. Sadi and Ne'Veha had the PREMONITION prepped and ready for departure before they were halfway to the landing bay. All of them had experienced the flash of great Etheric presence within Andro for he kept nothing from them now. The bond that Sadi and the others shared was an almost exact copy of the connection that Aricia and the Queens shared. The six of them were so tightly bound together now that it was a simple matter to talk and send their emotions to each other. It had taken some getting used to at first, but they had quickly grown in both strength and power. Even Carisia, who could not sense a wolf aura, was no longer left out. Whenever Andro pulsed one of them, it instantly translated within the Etheric realm to Carisia, who could then feel exactly what his aura did to them and almost exactly what it felt like. It was utterly glorious for Carisia Leonidas because now she truly felt whole in her love for Androcles and his for her.

The PREMONITION dropped quickly to the surface of Lorenu, flying over the city center and drawing many gasps and shouts of surprise. Kadeer was true to his word and several land vehicles were arriving just as Sadi and Ne'Veha brought the PREMONITION in for a landing in the lone, large clearing only four hundred meters from the entrance to the temple.

Androcles led Dorian, Laren and their father out of the ship quickly, leaping onto Elynth's back for the short, almost casual leap it took her to cover the distance to the flower covered entrance way into the Temple. Ryner, Ladur and Torma all followed without pause, causing everyone else to try and play catch up. Whatever it was that the four of them were feeling, it was being felt by their Bonded sister and brothers as well. By the time Aricia and For'mya made it off the ship Kadeer was running around the rear of the ship and looking up at the ramp to watch Dynina rush down and stand beside them.

"Dynina!" Kadeer gasped.

"Something appeared on the bridge of our ship!" Dynina gasped at him, reaching for his arm.

Kadeer nodded as he saw his children moving down the ramp quickly, their Bonded Ones matching their steps. All three of their dragons had grown in size immensely, something that no one thought they would do. The Vrrarhoinpa caste of their species were not abundant on Lorenu and those that did live here were much smaller than their Darastrixi kin from Icarava. It appeared that being among their kind within the ships of the Union had stimulated the growth of his children's dragons and they were now twice the size of when they had left.

"We saw it too!" Kadeer exclaimed as his children surrounded him and he embraced them tightly.

"Where are they going?" He gasped.

"Dynina we must follow them!" Aricia stammered as she clutched For'mya's hand tightly. "Whatever they are feeling within them it is growing."

Dynina nodded her head and grasped her other hand. "Kadeer, this is Queen Aricia and Queen For'mya, my staaniaketo's wives and mates."

Kadeer bowed his head formally. "My... my Queens."

"This way!" Dynina spoke urgently, grabbing Aricia and For'mya's hands. "The path is this way."

Martin and Androcles stood side-by-side, Dorian and Laren on either side of them as they stood there staring at the entrance to the Temple only a few feet away. The walls appeared to be polished rock of some sort that blended almost perfectly with the surrounding natural terrain. The double doors were in the shape of an arch, and much larger than normal doors, easily able to fit Torma through them if needed. Down the center of each door was a clear material that allowed them to look inside from where they stood and they saw the solid ivory metallic wall within with the symbols that Dynina, Nicha and the others had spoken of. All of them could feel the Etheric power radiating from the structure. Elynth and her father rested nimbly on the hard ground directly behind Martin and Androcles, their talons pulled under their bodies as if waiting to spring into action with Ladur and Ryner on either side of them behind their Bonded One. They could hear and smell the others begin to clear the trees and move into the large clearing behind them. The area had been turned into sort of a flowered garden like area with benches and tall lights all around. High above the face of the cliff in front of them they could see the back of the temple that had been built on the surface of the plateau where the city was.

Laren stared at the entrance, her heart racing almost out of control, along with Andro and Dorian's. She could hear her soul father's more measured heart beating, but almost equally as excited as hers. She turned her head and looked up into Martin's face.

"Ano medwan?" She asked softly.

Martin nodded his head slowly and gripped her hand within his. "Pen echea una kos ano fenneenum." (I feel it too soul daughter.)

Without really thinking about it, Dynina, Aricia and For'mya stopped about ten meters behind where they stood and the others fell in all around them. Kadeer was holding the hands of his daughters tightly and he looked at Dynina with confusion on his face.

"Dynina... what do they feel?" He asked all of them having heard Martin and Laren speak.

Dynina shook her head. "I don't know." She answered. "It... it does not feel any different than the other times I have been here." She looked at Aricia. "Aricia? For'mya? Do you feel anything out of the ordinary?"

Aricia and For'mya both shook their heads and looked at her. "No." Aricia answered for them. "We can sense the Etheric resonance just as you, but nothing else."

"We have never seen Martin or Androcles act in this way." For'mya spoke now. "It is... this is beginning to..."

Her words were cut off as all of them saw the white flash of light to the right of the entrance and the sphere of white light appeared once more, just as it had on the ship. Kadeer began reaching for his weapon but Dynina quickly grabbed his arm. "Kadeer no!" She exclaimed.

"Son vada carians!" Aricia muttered as she and For'mya suddenly staggered and dropped to their knees.

Helen and Sarlana had finally caught up to them just as Aricia and For'mya dropped and Dynina turned to look at them, reaching for Aricia. Sadi, Ne'Veha and Andro's wives and mates were right behind them with Sheva and Onera.

"Aricia!" Dynina almost yelled.

Helen was beside For'mya in the next instant and the moment she touched For'mya's arm, her eyes grew wider and she too gasped. "Oh... oh my god!"

Dynina fell to her knees instantly as Aricia gripped her tighter, and Sarlana moved up beside her reaching for her. "What..." Sarlana's emerald eyes went wide. "Ithquenti tiichi ve!" She gasped. (Gods bless me)

"Helen!" For'mya almost shouted. "Helen do you feel it? Dynina!"

The five women were crowded around one another now, the others from Kadeer's detachment gathered around watching with wide, and confused eyes. They could only watch as Sadi led the others right up to them, reaching out to touch them in some manner, not caring what was happening and soon there were twelve women all crowded together. Kadeer watched with worried eyes even as he squeezed Perlae and Ishma's hands within his own. "Dynina!" He barked out. "Dynina what is wrong."

He watched her eyes turn towards him and he inhaled sharply when he saw the amethyst color of her eyes shining back at him and almost glowing. "Oh... oh Kadeer it feels glorious!" She gasped aloud as tears flooded her eyes.

Kadeer's eyes snapped up when the white sphere moved quickly to hover in front of Martin for a long moment and then Andro, Dorian and Laren in turn. It returned to its position in front of Martin, pulsing with light and Etheric power. It was power and warmth that Martin and Andro had never felt before, Dorian and Laren not having as much experience with the Tomes of Sumar to truly expand their power and abilities as Martin and Androcles had. They could feel it the most however, basking in the warmth and overwhelming sense of knowledge, of power and the most of all, of family.

"Father..." Andro whispered almost reverently. "Father we have... Dorian, Laren and I have been here before."

Martin glanced at his son. "When you blacked out for those few seconds?"

Andro nodded his head. "Yes."

"I remember the doors most of all." Dorian echoed his brother's words.

Laren nodded her head. "Yes. The doors. When they opened we..." She looked at Martin once more. "It was... so much poured into us then, but it was gone when we woke."

Martin turned back to the white sphere which was hovering in front of him still, silent, as if measuring him in some way. Torma, Elynth, Ladur and Ryner had moved closer to them the moment the sphere appeared and now they were only a few inches behind their Bonded Ones. The sphere rose slightly, hovering just above Martin's head to seemingly stare at Torma's massive head and golden eyes. It shifted to Elynth for a long moment, and then Ryner and finally Ladur before returning to Torma and finally lowering back down in front of Martin.

“Ideas anyone?” Martin asked openly. “Because at this very moment I’m kind of fresh out of what to do.”

“We should...” Andro began to speak but the white sphere pulsed, and began to speak in that female voice from the ship, silencing his words.

Four million, six hundred and nineteen thousand, four hundred and twelve years and Revelation has finally come full circle. The Beginning has reached its End. And the End has brought forth The Beginning. The Bloodline of the True King is all but complete. The True King and his Heralds stand before the Temple once more. The Unification is just over the horizon. Now it is time to shape the invisible. For the future depends on it.

“Who are you?” Martin finally asked.

The sphere centered on Martin and moved closer still, within inches of his face.

Who? Not what?

“Not what.” Martin spoke evenly shaking his head as Canth’s words to him all those years ago resounded in his mind at this exact moment.

“You need to step beyond the power that you wield... step beyond the boundaries of what your eyes and your senses tell you. Everything is not always as it seems son of Leonidas.”

“I can... we can feel you. Whoever you are.” He said. “This... this sphere is merely a projection of you.”

The sphere hovered for a few seconds more.

You have learned well and taught better. You have honored your bloodline like no other before you Martin Leonidas. You are the True King reborn.

“Who are you?” Martin asked once more.

The beginning of your answers lay inside these walls Martin Leonidas. It is here where you and the Heralds will be bestowed a gift. A gift that you must accept for it will lead you to the Beginning of it all. The Mountain of Stone and Light holds the final item and the final answers that will signify to all that you have returned. And bring about the Unification.

“What is this Unification?” Martin asked.

The sphere seemed to hesitate and then it turned to Androcles.

You have not revealed the gifts to the one who gave life to you?

Androcles shook his head slowly. “How do you know that?” He demanded but with no malice in his voice. “We only just... we only just discovered it two days ago!”

Discovered it? Do you think me foolish Herald Androcles Leonidas? You, the only Herald that rivals your father in power? You and she felt their blessed conception the moment it occurred. The sanctified life that your beloved Sadi carries within her is the Reunification of your people on the grandest of scales. They will be the culmination of millions of years of separation coming to an end. And the children that follow with your other beloved wives will only serve to reinforce this and make that Reunification even stronger.

Martin looked at Androcles with wide eyes now, his head whipping around to look at Sadi who was now crouched beside For'mya with what amounted to a sheepish grin of utter embarrassment on her beautiful face, while Ne'Veha, Carisia, Caliria, Sehri and Lu'ria all stared at the hovering sphere with open mouthed shock at what the female voice had just announced.

“Sadi is... Sadi carries a child?” Martin gasped at his son even as Aricia and For'mya were suddenly swarming Sadi and nuzzling her cheeks with happiness and love.

Andro looked at his father with that same sheepish grin he had used his entire life when caught doing something he wasn't supposed to do. “Two actually.”

“Twins!” Martin almost shouted.

“I was going to tell you but things got...” Andro began but the soft feminine laughter cut his words off and they all looked at the sphere once more.

As it has been told, so now shall it be. It is time now. Time for all of you to take your places. Only those who carry the blood of Mahanlo within them may enter the Temple. Inside you will find what is needed for you to shape the future. Inside you will find me.

Martin looked at the sphere. “Find you? What is... what is in there?” He asked
The sphere moved closer to him, as if staring deeply into his eyes.

The answers you have sought for most of your life Martin Leonidas. It is time now for you to know everything. Your entire history, and where it all began. It is time for your sons Androcles and Dorian and for Laren Ti-Shara to know what they are and why.
It is time for you to know what you are.

The sphere moved away from them, gliding over to the double doors and positioning itself to the side before turning back to look at Martin and the others.

Enter you must.

Martin turned and held out his hand for Dynina and Aricia and For'mya, Androcles doing the same for Sadi and the others. The sphere darted forward away from the door quickly.

No. Only those born with the blood of Mahanlo may enter. Your beloved wives and mates must remain here.

“Eli?” Andro spoke reaching for his sister's hand. Eliani stood between Jomann and Brendi and had not expected this, her green eyes going wide.

“Andro I... I don't...” Eliani began to speak as the sphere drifted over closer to him.

Your oldest offspring with the fiery haired Queen Anja, Martin Leonidas. Born with the blood of Mahanlo in her veins. She may enter.

Eliani didn't hesitate then and she took Andro's hand, allowing him to pull her closer where she also took hold of her father's hand.

“Never fear the unknown sister.” Andro spoke as Eliani looked at him.

Eliani snorted at him softly. “Whenever you say that I end up having to patch up your mida.” She spoke turning back to look at Jomann. She saw her beloved husband and mate nod his head proudly and pull Brendi closer to him. She turned back and looked at Andro and then her father. “Oh, what the hell.” She said.

Martin chuckled. “That's my girl.”

They heard the soft female chuckle come from the sphere once more and they all looked at it.

There is Mahanlo blood within her for certain. As it flows within all of your children. Come. Do not be afraid.

The sphere moved to the doors once more and turned back to look at them.

The future awaits.

Martin Leonidas watched as the double doors closed behind them and they seemingly disappeared into the face of the mountain that this Temple was built into. Martin had to admit that he was more frightened now than at any point in his life. This was truly the unknown now, and Martin Leonidas had no idea what was going to happen. They could have just walked into a very elaborate trap for all he knew, and they had done it willingly. He turned back and saw Androcles, Dorian and Laren move up to the wall in front of them where the three symbols resided. They were large and etched in some type of bold ink directly into the wall. He watched as first Laren, then Andro and then Dorian reached up with their hands and caressed the symbols on the wall almost reverently. His eyes narrowed as Andro's fingers brushed the wall and a layer of dust fell away, Dorian and Laren doing the same and finally revealing a fourth symbol beneath the three. This symbol was unmistakable and known to them without doubt. It was the inverted letter V emblazoned on what could only be the etching of a Shi Viska.

Andro looked at his father with wide eyes now. "Father this is..." He gasped as Martin stepped closer with equally wide eyes.

"My shield!" Martin finished his son's words.

As it was passed to you. And will be passed to every King in your bloodline when the time is right.
The sphere spoke from the side.

Dorian and Laren were brushing more and more dust away, revealing connecting symbols and shapes moving up and down on the broad expanse of the wall. Some of the symbols and shapes, each of them encased in its own circular shape or fist size coin, had the letter M engraved into the upper right corner. All those that Dorian and Laren were revealing beneath Martin's shield had this same letter, while two of the three above it had the M. The third had the Darastrixi letter T engraved into it. Several lines branched out from that symbol, containing both the letter T and M. Eliani moved forward quickly, squeezing in beside her brother Dorian and Laren and she reached up to touch the wall directly over the circular symbol with dark red writing in the center and the letters M and Y.

"Father this symbol..." Eliani looked at him with bright eyes. "I have seen this before! At the palace on Hadaria. It was engraved into the columns on the Reliquary in the library! M and Y. Mahanlo and Yelu! It's grandfather's symbol! It has to be!"

Martin turned his head quickly to look at the sphere. "How is that possible?"

The Wall of Connection tells the story.

Andro was now reaching above his head and Dorian followed suit as they brushed away centuries of dust and revealed symbols and lines that reached across the face of the massive wall, up and down and to either side.

"Ithquenti!" Laren gasped aloud as she saw the symbols, reaching up to touch the one with the M and T on it, several lines extending away to the side which branched off into a dozen others. "This is the crest of my family!"

Andro's fingers traced the lines from their family down and to the side, brushing away the dust. His eyes narrowed slightly when he saw the slightly larger crest and the lines that branched away from it to the right of where his father's shield crest resided. He looked up at the sphere. "These crests?" He asked. "They bear the letter M but they are not connected to the others except by my father. Why?"

This way.

The sphere spoke as it moved around the end of the massive wall and disappeared. Martin and the other followed without thought now and they entered into the enormous cathedral like room just on the other side of the thick wall.

There were benches all around the single massive crystal fountain that resided in the center of the room. Clear water flowed from the top of the fountain and into the huge pond all around it. Pure mountain water if Martin's nose was correct. Several tunnels branched off from this main room, and there were murals of some sort on all of the surrounding walls mixed in with some incredibly advanced machinery of some kind and several of what could only be computer stations, complete with high backed chairs and small side tables. Huge flower planters were spread out all over with stunning and colorful floral of different patterns and kinds.

"Carians!" Eliani gasped. "It's... it's beautiful!" She moved forward and reached out to caress one of the huge flowers at the base of the fountain. As her fingers touched the silk like petals, Eliani gasped again, the petals seemingly curving towards the touch of her skin.

The Hall of Knowledge. The centerpiece of this facility. Within this room and others like it throughout this facility are the archives containing the history of our people from their inception.

"Our people!" Martin hissed as he looked at the sphere.

The sphere moved to one portion of the room that extended slightly out from the circular nature of the surrounding walls with all of the murals on them. There was a low rumbling sound and they all turned to watch as one entire section of the wall lifted away revealing a chamber of some sort. The sphere flared brightly and then it was gone and they were staring at the vision of an older woman in a form fitting white dress that fell to the floor. She looked to be in her early fifties by visual reference, with long flowing black hair and deep brown eyes. It appeared to be a very powerful Etheric apparition just as Sumar and Dadrien had appeared to them, but much more focused and clear. The woman appeared to be in the room with them.

This is me. The apparition spoke with a small smile.

Eliani moved forward now, all hesitation gone from her as she viewed the chamber and the surrounding equipment with a trained eye.

"Eli?" Martin asked his daughter.

"Alvva... this is... this is the most advanced life support chamber I have ever seen!" Eliani almost shouted out the words. "Nothing we have comes close to this! This could..." She turned to look at him with wide eyes. "This is a Cryo Chamber father!"

"What?" Martin almost yelled. "Are you sure?"

Eliani nodded her head. "It has all of the proper systems installed around the pod itself." Eliani moved over beside the large computer console. "Systems to monitor and regulate power output. There are some things here that I have never seen before, but this..." She pointed to the large chamber next to the computer. "This is... this looks like some kind of Neural Booster. I recognize some of the designs in comparison to our Mark IIs. This is ground based, though whatever is powering it is beyond what I can see." Eliani studied the console in front of her for several more moments and then she whirled around to look at her father. "Father, whoever is inside this chamber is Lycavorian! The life sign readings are unmistakable and..."

"Atle arande?" Andro asked her.

Eliani looked at Androcles with wide eyes. "If... if these instruments are correct, this body has been here for over four million years!"

Martin whirled around and looked at the image of the woman. "You?" He rasped out the question.

They all saw the Etheric projection of the woman nod her head. "My corporeal form, yes. The sphere is simply a means for me to project myself to other places as I did on your ship."

Eliani turned away from the consoles and looked at the woman. "This body is perfectly preserved! No physical degradation at all!"

"How?" Martin spoke. "Who are you?"

"My name is Reva." She answered them. "Reva Mahanlo."

"Mahanlo?" Martin gasped. "How... how is that possible?"

"The how of it is much more involved to say the least." The projection answered with a smile. "The technology you see, the Temple all around us, and the three others like it across the universe, they were built by the Onab in preparation."

"Preparation of what?" Androcles asked.

The projection of Reva Mahanlo smiled once more. "The future." She replied.

She waved her hand slightly and the lights in the massive room dimmed lower, the ceiling then coming alive with the depictions of stars and nebulas stretching across the entire area above them. Laren was the first to react and she released Dorian's hand, which she had been holding tightly and moved across the room to point up at several bright points.

"This is... this is Darastrixi space!" She gasped. "This is my homeworld! I recognize the star reference points!"

Andro moved up beside her now, his head canted upwards. "This is Earth!" He spoke pointing upward. "The Milky Way! And Apo Prime!"

Martin was staring at the image of the woman, her dark brown eyes focused on him now. He stepped closer to the Etheric projection. "It was you." He said softly. "You said that Sphere thing allows you to project yourself to other places. Based on what we have seen, I'm guessing that the confines of time and space and the Ion Nebula surrounding this system does not limit where you can go."

The Etheric image of Reva Mahanlo smiled and shook her head. "It does not... no. It has been quite enlightening to be honest."

"You are... then you are our ancestor?" Dorian asked now, turning from looking at the stars above.

They all saw Reva smile and nod her head. "Several hundred generations removed, but yes."

Martin reached up and rubbed his temple. "Man this is; this is out there. This is way out there."

"How?" Androcles asked moving up beside his father now.

"As I said, the how is far more involved than you could possibly imagine." Reva replied. "I have waited a very long time for this day to arrive. To see all of you standing within these walls now, the wait has been worth the journey." They watched as her figure walked over to one of the many benches surrounding the fountain and she settled onto it. "Allow me to fulfill my role and give you the knowledge that has always been meant for you."

"Knowledge?" Martin asked.

Reva nodded her head. "The how. The why. The answers to so many of the questions you have sought for your entire life Martin. The true history of your people and those who came before you."

"Are you saying that what we have been raised believing in is wrong?" Androcles asked now.

Reva shook her head. "Hardly." She answered with that gentle smile. "It is just not complete."

"Complete how?" Martin asked her.

"The knowledge that was stricken from our history by mutual decision over four million years ago." Reva answered. "Stricken from history by the leaders of the Onab and your very own ancestors Martin. This decision changed the course of events for the entire galaxy, and some of these events were not pleasant. It had to be done however, to preserve the future."

"You keep speaking of the future." Martin spoke as he sat down beside her now. "Do you know the future?"

Reva chuckled softly as Dorian, Laren, Eliani and then Androcles settled to the floor beside the fountain in front of her. Reva smiled as she saw Eliani lean against her older brother while Laren leaned against Dorian.

“Do I know the future... no.” She answered him. “Have I had a hand in shaping what has led up to this moment... yes.”

“So... the Dahakoan Scrolls and language?” Laren asked. “The Lycavorian Scrolls? You saved them?”

Reva looked at her and nodded. “I took steps to ensure that they were safeguarded and brought to safety throughout the many years, yes.” Reva held up her hand as Martin was about to ask her another question and she looked at him as he stopped his words. “To give you the complete history that was hidden away will take some time Martin aur saan, even in the very condensed version that I will give to you now. Within these walls and spread among the other three locations is the complete and unredacted version. When we are finished here, you will know their locations and then the many historians among our people and the different species it involves will have their content to study for centuries to come. It must be protected at all costs Martin. This knowledge must never be lost to the winds of time and change.” Reva looked at him intently, and for the first time Martin saw in her dark brown eyes what he saw every time he looked in the mirror. “And you will also have the knowledge to make the decisions that will shape the invisible.”

“Your eyes.” Martin spoke softly.

Reva smiled and nodded her head. “Yes.” She told him. “I know you can see it. Sense it within me. Only you would be able to do this.”

“You... you were there.” Martin spoke almost reverently. “You lived it.”

Reva nodded her head as she gazed at him, even as she heard Eliani gasp and Andro’s azure eyes grew wide. “You defy all of the expectations that we had ever hoped for Martin Leonidas. All we had hoped to create and see in the future. You continue to shatter all the conceptions of that which we wanted to save.” Reva turned and looked at Androcles. “And you have passed this trait to your first born son. To all of your children.”

Martin blinked several times and then shrugged his broad shoulders. “Predictable is...”

“...Boring.” Reva finished his statement with a small laugh. “Yes, I know.”

Reva took a deep breath and then lifted her hand. The stars above disappeared to be replaced by lush green forests and towering mountains and oceans. Spaced among the forests and mountains were shining cities of glass and steel that blended perfectly with the natural terrain and life all around them.

“It begins here.” Reva spoke softly. “Lycavore is your homeworld, it will always be your homeworld. Our people’s homeworld. That is what they wanted for all of our people, even those who have never been there. At least not yet. It all began here, however. This is where the true Royal Lycavorian Bloodline was founded. This is where it all began. This planet is where you, Androcles, Dorian, Eliani, all of your children, all of your wives and mates, even Laren Ti’shara, this is where the blood that flows within each of you started. This is... this is where hope was born. And this is where the journey begins.”

“What is its name?” Laren gasped as her dual colored blue eyes gazed at the images all around them.

“Cerath. It was called Cerath.”

“...Thought you had decided to wait?” Aricia questioned Sadi as they sat around the area outside of the Temple Doors.

The area had filled up quickly with both Durcunusaan security and members of the Tri-Alliance forces under Dynina. Kadeer took no chances with the safety of those who now sat in the sacred area around the Temple and he gave Jomann a full briefing and quick tour of the area so that he could secure the area. Lorenu was a very temperate planet and as the sun began to fall, the temperature remained at a very pleasant level with a cool breeze from the north. Dynina knew nothing would pull Aricia and the others from the entrance to the Temple and she had food and drink brought to them here. She was now sitting with the Leonidas women near the majestic fountain. Jezima, Dasha, Gorgo, all of them were here along with the wives and mates of every Leonidas male. Dynina had never felt more at home than she did now. Perlae, Ishma, and Awser sat with their cousins as if it was the most natural thing in the world and this caused Dynina no small amount of pride and happiness. None of them were treated differently in any way, and Kadeer took note of this as well very quickly, the same pride and happiness swirling through him. They had always been different growing up, the only children of two different species, but they had never really fit in until now. With Martin, Androcles and the others inside the Temple, none of them were leaving. Dragons now sat around the entire area, though Elynth, Torma, Ryner and Ladur were still off by themselves, closet to the Temple and seemingly in a deep trance. Tharua remained beside the massive body of her mate Jeth, Anthar resting beside him, his head always glancing to his beloved Elynth. Aurith, Isheeni and Aradace sat with Caydren and Cinol between them with Mara, Endeem, Jeru and Mayla now joining them not far from where the women had gathered. Denali, Deion and Calyb sat with Aviel, Nahko and Laren's mother and father Yokra and Robati. As Byron Leonidas was the youngest child, he had accepted the fact that he would remain on the ship for the most part as a last chance security measure. He did not mind in the least for it allowed him and Namiri to explore and discover each other in a way that brought them closer and closer together. Byron had claimed Namiri in the way of their people and while the information had yet to reach the Tasmor Quorum, Saydia Daret and a few others knew that Namiri was now truly a Princess of the Lycavorian Union. The fact that now two of her daughters were members of this family of Lycavorians was far more than Saydia had ever dreamed about. Emylea was already being referred to as Princess in the same breath as Mari, for Deion had claimed her their first night together with Mari. Saydia had always known her youngest daughters were so very different and now she was beginning to understand just how much.

Sadi sipped the water she held in her hand and nodded her head in response to Aricia's question. "That is what we decided yes, but when he came to us the other night he..." Sadi looked at Carisia and Ne'Veha quickly and then Sehri, Lu'ria and Caliria. "He was full of more passion and desire than we had ever seen from him before. He had all of us screaming his name in..."

"He was a beast." Lu'ria exclaimed with a small smile while Sehri and Caliria looked on with somewhat embarrassed expressions.

"I don't think he realized it." Carisia spoke now. "It was... gods it was glorious!"

Aricia and For'mya looked at each other knowingly and smiled. "His father has... he has done this before to all of us." Aricia finally admitted.

"He laid himself bare to us Aricia." Sadi spoke softly. "No shields, no barriers. His full aura swarmed around all of us in such a way that..."

"It was so powerful I thought I could feel his aura around me." Carisia told them. "My senses were so much more alive and..."

Aricia nodded her head. "You do not need to explain Carisia." She said reaching out and taking her hand. "Especially to us. And do not discount what you feel simply because you are vampire."

Carisia smiled and squeezed her hand. Aricia had always been the strongest supporter of her ever since she came into Andro's life and that had never wavered once.

"It was at the end..." Sadi spoke again. "He took us with such passion that..." Sadi looked at her. "We were looking into each other's eyes when it happened. He has never taken any of us as intensely as he did that night. When he filled me... when he filled me with his essence it... we felt it Aricia!"

Aricia and For'mya smiled brilliantly. They knew exactly what Sadi and the others were describing. All of them had dropped all pretense of shielding anything from each other and opened their souls to one another. Whenever Martin had done this to them through the years, one of them had ended up pregnant. There was no shame between the gathered women talking about this or the men who held their hearts. Even Carisia, who was pureblooded vampire and probably the most reserved and shy of all of Andro's wives and mates, when speaking with any female within the Leonidas family, they shared everything. It was one of the reasons that the family was so tightly woven together.

"It was so powerful it roused Ne'Veha and the others." Sadi said as she dropped her hand to her abdomen reverently. "They felt it too, and they came to us on the couch and we basked in the feelings."

"A boy and a girl?" For'mya asked.

Sadi nodded her head quickly. "And they are so powerful and pure For'mya." She told them. "We felt it the moment life was granted to them and..." Tears fell from her eyes suddenly and Ne'Veha scooted closer to her on one side and Carisia on the other.

"We have never felt such love." Ne'Veha spoke softly.

"We did not feel them?" Aricia said.

Sadi nodded her head. "We wanted... we wanted Eli to examine me first." She replied. "We are shielding them even now. They..."

Aricia's eyes went wide. "Sadi, they are... are you saying that they are aware!" She almost shouted.

Sadi met her eyes and nodded her head with a stunning smile. “We... when we woke the next morning... we were all wrapped with Andro’s arms and they made themselves known. I don’t know how but... they have taken from each of us Aricia. They have each of us within them.” She said. “They made themselves known to all of us. Quite loudly in fact.”

“Androcles fell out of our bed in surprise!” Carisia spoke with laughter in her voice. “He took Sehri and Lu’ria with him.”

“He almost crushed the life from me!” Sehri gasped happily. “The big brute!”

“But he is our brute Duangai.” Caliria spoke with equal happiness in her sea green eyes.

Sehri nodded her head instantly. “Yes, he is.” She echoed.

Aricia looked at Sadi and the others and could only feel great contentment. Each of her son’s wives and mates were absolutely stunning in their beauty and intelligence, as well as their physical attractiveness, which was heart stopping to say the least. What she noticed most of all was how they interacted with each other, spoke to each other and those around them. It was as if they were one person, just as she, For'mya, Anja, Dysea, Bella and Cirith were.

One mind. One entity.

Dynina, Gorgo, Dasha and Jezima had been sitting quietly listening and reveling in the same feelings of love and family. Dynina spoke now when she heard what Sadi said.

“You are all part of him.” Dynina told her softly. “All of you make up a unique part of Andro. Just as each one of those he calls mother, make a part for his father. In all my years I have never seen something so complete however.”

“Nor I.” Jezima spoke softly.

“Many times we do not see what fate and destiny have in store for us.” Gorgo spoke. “It will do what it wants, in whatever manner it deems necessary to fulfill what the gods have in store for all of us.”

“Avoi.” Dasha agreed.

Aricia looked at her. “You have said this before in the past Gorgo.” She said. “That you can hide from it for a time, run from it for a time, but it will always have its way.”

Gorgo nodded her head. “I believe this more and more each day.” She spoke. “All I need do is look at you Aricia. At Anja. At Sadi. At Carisia. At Eliani. Each of you, all of us, we all have a role to play, and now the pieces to that puzzle are coming together.”

Jezima reached out and took Gorgo’s hand. “Yes, they are.”

Kadeer moved up then and knelt beside Dynina and all of them looked at him. “Dynina, should I send for more security?” He asked. “Our people are asking questions. Many saw the ships come in over the city and know they aren’t ours. They are... concerned.”

Dynina glanced at the entrance to the Temple and then back to Aricia and For'mya. She looked at Sadi and the others and then back to Kadeer. “No.” She spoke.

“We do not know what is happening within the Temple Dynina.” Kadeer reminded her.

“You are tied to your children just as I am Kadeer.” Dynina told him. “They are tied to this family. Do you feel anything within them?”

Kadeer was silent for a long moment, almost as if he was reaching out and sensing his children’s moods. “Happiness.” He spoke softly. “Happiness and discovery.”

Dynina nodded her head. “Just as we all feel.” She told him. “There is no danger here or in there Kadeer my wonderful friend and adopted son. What is happening in there is... it is our history taking shape.”

It was Aricia who reached out and placed her hand on his arm. “Sit with us Kadeer.” She said with warmth. “Tell us of yourself and be with your family.”

Kadeer looked surprised and he opened his mouth to deny this but For'mya stopped his words. “You are the father of Perlae, Awser and Ishma.” For'mya spoke. “Our blood flows within them, as does your blood. That makes you our family now as well. Sit down and tell us of yourself.”

Kadeer looked at Dynina and saw her beaming face looking up at him. There was not a moment that he could remember that Dynina did not support and encourage the love that he and her daughter Maha had with one another. She had always been a pillar to both of them. Kadeer Imuma had arrived on Lorenu a single soldier, having left behind his only remaining family on the Darastrixi homeworld. He regretted the pain his parents must have endured knowing their only son had passed on, but he believed deeply in the mission and the reasons behind what they were doing. Discovering Maha had taken away the loneliness he had felt, and exploring their love for one another had been glorious to say the least. Maha had whispered to him to continue to live and find happiness once more just before her life left her, but until this day Kadeer had never followed her wishes for him. Perhaps now was the time to relish in the memory of his beloved wife and truly begin to move into the future just as she wanted him too.

Kadeer settled to the ground beside Dynina and began to talk. He didn't notice as his children and all of the Leonidas family moved closer to listen to his words.

LORENU TEMPLE HALL OF KNOWLEDGE

"...Lived in wonderful harmony." Reva was speaking as the images floating above them shifted and constantly changed. "The Onab did not consider us beneath them in any way, even though their technology was beyond wondrous."

"Did they... did they look like Avi and Armen? Avi told me when I was a child once that they were built in the image of their creators." Andro blurted out the question.

Reva chuckled but nodded her head. "Yes, they did Androcles."

"I was just curious." He spoke somewhat embarrassed by asking the question.

"And that is a good thing. The Avatars were numerous on Cerath, but they came to be viewed as sentient beings because of their ability to learn and grow. Something which you discovered soon after meeting Avi Martin." Reva told him with a gentle smile.

Martin met her eyes. "There was... there was too much showing through in his eyes to be just a simple machine."

Reva nodded her head. "And you were right." She smiled warmly as she looked at each of them. "We lived in perfect balance on Cerath. As our species evolved and grew, the Onab encouraged us to expand our horizons and views. They welcomed us into their many cities and homes freely. They provided advanced education to our people willingly, sharing all that they knew. We welcomed their wisdom and knowledge, often times using them as mediators between Pack disputes. For thousands of years this relationship grew and became stronger and more interwoven than anyone could have predicted. Our people were peaceful and happy. Cerath was a massive planet, and we could hunt in our true forms without worry of upsetting the delicate eco balance. On Cerath, our people held the seamless balance between our instincts and our minds." Reva looked at Martin and Androcles. "After many millennia, the Onab invited us to form a joint government and begin expanding. Cerath was largely unexplored even as large as our populations were, and the Pack leaders all jumped at the opportunity to explore and discover new territories."

"So the Packs had leaders?" Martin asked.

Reva nodded her head. "Oh yes. A Council of Fourteen Elders, Alphas that were formed just after the Onab were discovered. Wise men and women who made their decisions based on the benefit it had for all of our people. And for the Onab, since we considered them an ally and friend."

"So the castes did exist even then?" Eliani spoke from where she sat between Dorian and Laren.

"That is the nature of our species Eliani. It is not something that can be taken out of a species." Reva answered her. "In that time however, much like you have done within the Union Martin, caste meant very little for one's advancement. Within five hundred years of the Council being formed, four Beta Wolves sat proudly on that Council of Elders and all were treated as equals."

"There were no disputes?" Martin asked stunned.

Reva smiled and laughed softly. "There were always disputes. That is the nature of things. Packs often moved to make themselves better by marrying into a more powerful or influential family. No one stepped across that unseen line however, for they knew punishment was harsh. Our people were focused on insuring that we grew and expanded our knowledge and ability to provide for the whole. Anything that put that in jeopardy was dealt with very quickly and very harshly. The Onab were aware of this and over time came to view things as we did. I was just a small girl then, and times were so much easier back then."

“What changed?” Androcles asked now.

Reva’s face became somber and her eyes drew narrow even in the etheric projection of her. She finally met Andro’s gaze and took a deep breath.

“Those who you refer to by their Pralor name Androcles, the Scourge, they happened.” She answered. “The true name of their species is the Iais’Kai. Their appearance has changed through the millennia, especially after the vile things that Xaxon did, but they are all Iais’Kai. They are the personification of evil in its purest form. Those with black hearts and even blacker souls. They live for one purpose and one purpose only, to conquer and destroy. To enslave and dominate.” Reva took another breath before continuing, her chest rising and falling. “We don’t know where they came from, the darkest reaches of the galaxy perhaps, but our initial encounter with them was anything but pleasant.”

Reva stood up and waved her hand slightly, the images above them changing to one of a planet that looked desolate and utterly barren.

“This is Delum.” She spoke softly. “By this time in our relationship with the Onab, we had begun traveling the stars with them, discovering new planets and species. Forging alliances and relationships with other species. We had settled nearly a hundred worlds by the time the Iais’Kai revealed themselves. Delum was the farthest colony away from Cerath. They struck here first.” Reva took a deep breath and they could see this was difficult for her. “They struck early one morning without warning. The colony on Delum had grown in size and was now over forty thousand strong. The Iais’Kai landed their foul soldiers expecting to pillage and take, but they found something else instead.” Reva returned to the bench and looked at Martin. “Our people, all of our people but especially the Alphas, our instinct is to protect and ensure the survival of our people at all costs.”

Martin nodded his head. “It is one of our most pronounced instincts.”

“The Onab were not fighters.” Reva said with an even voice. “They were scientists and doctors and researchers. Most would not even reach your shoulder in height. Instinctively, our species became their defenders. The Iais’Kai must have been watching the Onab from afar, but they did not take into account their relationship with our people and how far that had evolved. There were some ten thousand of our people with the Onab on Delum when the Iais’Kai struck. Many were good friends and some had even been given honorary Pack status. The Iais’Kai attacked without warning thinking to overwhelm the Onab and instead they found us among them. They were unprepared for how we can shift our forms and at first this confused them allowing us to slaughter their first few thousand soldiers. Losses were great, fully a third of the colony was killed in the attack, but if not for our people it would have been devastating and complete.”

“What happened?” Martin asked.

“They tried two more attacks, but by this time we had enhanced what tools we did have into weapons.” Reva answered. “Both times we threw them back with massive losses. We even captured several of their kind to discover why they were attacking us. As I said, the Iais’Kai did not realize how evolved our relationship with the Onab had become. They were only after the Onab and their advanced technology. They did not consider us a threat to them. That changed the day we took up arms in defense of the Onab on Delum. In defense of the way of life we had chosen to have. The Iais’Kai ships in orbit, when they realized they did not have the numbers to take Delum by force, they... they bombarded the planet from orbit. They obliterated whole continents in five days of constant destruction. They spared no one. Those that had survived the ground assaults died in the bombardments. We did not have the structures necessary to protect against such a thing. At the end, the Iais’Kai launched six planet killing missiles into the core of Delum that cracked its planetary crust and destroyed the planet from the inside out. Nothing survived this destruction. Not even bacteria.” She looked up at Martin and the others after a long moment.

“That began Vada Zin sarakoa vyen ils.” Reva told them. “The Ten-Thousand-Year War.”

“Atle untinaa?” Eliana asked now.

Reva turned her head and looked at her. “Those on Delum were able to contact us on Cerath before they were destroyed. They were able to pass on what they had learned in their sacrifice. Even the Onab had never heard of the Iais’Kai before this day. The Council of Elders and the Onab leaders did not know what to do.”

Martin looked at her. “Something must have been decided if it started a war that lasted for ten thousand years.” Martin said.

Reva nodded her head. “Something did happen.” She spoke softly. “Your ancestors rose up from among the billions and billions of our people and truly united us as one! The birth of the Mahanlo Pack began that day.

The one true Royal bloodline came into existence that day. And to this very day it remains more potent and powerful than any bloodline before or after it. As it did that day on Cerath. Even more so now with the addition of the Praetorian gene within the bloodline thanks to your grandfather Sumar.”

“Tell me!” Martin exclaimed now, his blood pulsing and racing as the discovery of his heritage was right there in front of him.

“They were... they were twins Martin.” Reva spoke softly. “Twin brothers, born only seconds apart, each of them larger than any Lycavorian before them. Each of them with an aura of dominance that all recognized. By this time, they were nineteen years old and were already making a name for themselves. The love they held for one another was matched only by the love they held for their younger sister, born exactly two years later. They were imposing in human form, but they were devastating in our natural forms. If you ever wondered where the size in our bloodline comes from, it comes from them. The original of us. Some say they were the very first Lycavorians to have evolved to the next level among our species. No wolf could match their size, much like it is now with you and your bloodline. Daniho and Ashten. They were perfect together. Daniho was the passionate one, always using his instincts to drive him, filled with purpose and determination. Ashten, the cerebral one. Logical, compassionate and driven. Never have I seen such a love between brothers... I never thought I would again...” Reva looked at Martin. “Until I saw you and Daniel Simpson. Daniho was Ashten’s instinctive nature and Ashten was Daniho’s logic and compassion. Two pieces of a perfect puzzle. They spoke and thought and acted as one. Just as you and Daniel do.”

“Daniho.” Martin whispered the name reverently. “Ashten.” He looked at his family and then back to Reva. “My family.”

Reva nodded her head. “Yes.”

“What were they like?” Martin asked her.

“They were never apart.” Reva told him. “They did everything together. They took mates on the same day, from different packs, but their union day was the same. They loved their mates more fiercely than I have ever seen an Alpha love. By age nineteen they already had one child apiece. Each had a son, born only a week apart. And they loved their younger sister Kelia just as fiercely as they loved each other. No wolf would go near their sister if their intentions were not honorable in every way. They included her in everything they did, every aspect of their lives and Kelia was never happier than when she was with her brothers. For both of them, she was their hope and happiness. She was the future.”

“Reva... you speak... you speak as if you know them well.” Laren commented now.

Reva smiled and nodded her head slowly. “Yes. I did know them well. I should. I was the one who brought them into this world.”

Martin looked at her with wide eyes. “You!” He exclaimed.

“I gave birth to them and I raised them.” Reva spoke. “I watched them grow into the men and the woman that they were. That they became. It is why I have paid such close attention to you Martin, and to your children. What they had together as twins, that balance to one another, you have both within you Martin. It is how you have always been able to balance your instincts and your logic through the years. While they had each other to learn from, you have done it all on your own, and that makes you even more powerful.”

“I don’t want to be powerful.” Martin spoke. “I don’t...”

Reva nodded her head. “I know. And neither did they.” She spoke softly. “Yet you do every day exactly as they did all those millions of years ago. They took a stance for all in order to see everyone achieve their desires.”

“Do we... do we call you staania?” Eliani asked.

Reva chuckled and shook her head. “No Eliani my child.” She replied. “Dynina, Gorgo, Dasha, Jezima, they are the only ones who you and your siblings should call staania, for they have earned that title and honor by virtue of everything each of them have sacrificed and suffered up until this day in order to achieve what is happening now.”

“What is happening now Reva?” Martin asked her.

Reva turned back to look at him. “Revelation Martin my boy.” She told him warmly and with a brilliant smile. “The day that the one true Royal bloodline of our people rises from the ashes of history to once more lead and guide those of similar values and morals. The same way it did back then. It is your day now. See for yourself.”

Reva waved her hand once more and the scene all around them changed to a large room full of Lycavorians and Onab men and women. Hundreds of them gathered in what appeared to be some sort of meeting. It was taking place outside in what appeared to be an open air stadium like those back in Sparta. This time however, this time they could hear voices, all talking over one another, young voices, old voices, male and female.

“Enough!” One male voice rose above the others and then they saw him break from the cluster of men and women to move into the center away from the others. Beside him was an exact duplicate of himself. His twin.

Daniho and Ashten.

They were imposing figures to say the least, physically and radiating auras that Martin could almost feel. His eyes were wide as he stared at their image, Andro rising to his feet along with Dorian and Laren and Eliani to stare at them. Martin and Andro and to a great extent Dorian were almost mirror images of them two men in the Etheric projection. Right down to their height and muscled forms. They watched as the female now broke away from the crowds of people and the two brothers each reached for her hand and drew her close to them. Her hair was the color of crimson, long and fiery and falling almost to the top of her firm buttocks.

“I am Ashten Mahanlo!” The young man, barely twenty-one at this time, and far younger than most of the men and women present. “You know me and my fervon Daniho Mahanlo! You know our sister Kelia! You know our parents Reva and Jacar Mahanlo!”

“We recognize you Ashten Mahanlo.” The Onab male spoke now rising from his chair where he sat between two elder Lycavorians. “You and your twin are the first of your bloodline and the only Lycavorians alive today along with your sister who have dual fangs. This is an oddity that even our doctors and scientists cannot discover the why too. We know who you are. You and your brother and sister are spoken of quite differently than others. Most agree that there are great things are in store for you in the years ahead.”

“Yet we will not have those years if we sit here and do nothing!” Daniho exclaimed passionately.

Ashten looked at his brother and as they watched in the Etheric projection he reached out and touched his brother’s arm. The reaction was instantaneous and Daniho became instantly calmer. It was almost as if they were communicating etherically on a level that no one else could detect. Martin glanced at Reva.

“They are talking to one another.” He spoke.

Reva nodded her head. “They were born with very advanced Etheric abilities, as was their sister Kelia. Far more than what our people are usually born with. I do not know how, but some have said it is because of our exposure to the Onab and their advanced technology. They say it somehow affected my children. I have never believed this, for I felt them grow within me. I watched them grow through the years. It was just their nature.”

Martin turned his eyes back as Ashten began to speak once more. “These Iais’Kai have slaughtered our people. Lycavorian and Onab alike. We have done nothing to illicit this action. By their own admission their only goal is the technology that our Onab friends possess. And because they have shared this with us, the technology that we now possess. We have lived together, grown together for well over fifty thousand years now here on Cerath. Each year we grow closer together, more friends have been made, more relationships begun. Even now, there are over five thousand Onab and Lycavorian unions among our two peoples, even though no children can be made. This was done because of the love we have within each of our species. It transcends everything else and we have all accepted it.”

“You speak truthfully young Alpha.” The elder Lycavorian man spoke now. “And with far more wisdom than someone of your age should have.”

“I speak from my heart Elder Pengot.” Ashten answered. “As do my brother and sister. It is how our mother and father raised us to be. It is all we know.”

The elder Lycavorian nodded his head. “As you and your family have proven countless times since you joined this life. The Mahanlo Pack has risen in not only numbers but influence under your father and mother’s guidance. We will mourn the passing of your father for many years to come. It has been only a year, yet you stand here when you should be mourning.”

“We stand here because our future rests in the balance.” Daniho spoke now. “We cannot sit by and watch it slip away.”

Pengot nodded his head. "Indeed." He glanced around the semi-circle of men and women that sat to either side of him, Lycavorian and Onab. He turned his head back to Ashten. "This Council of Elders recognizes Daniho and Ashten and Kelia of the Mahanlo Pack. The Onab Elders agree. Speak what you came to say."

Ashten looked around and then finally rested his eyes on his brother and sister. He turned back to face the hundreds of men and women who had gathered and could see even more Onab and Lycavorian people moving towards the outdoor coliseum from the city. Everyone around them had grown quiet.

"We do not know who they are or where they come from, these Iais'Kai." Ashten began to speak. "But they have shown what is in their hearts and souls. Blackness. Forty thousand of our families and friends lie dead now. Butchered by a species who came from the abyss and is surrounded by darkness. They told us they would be returning. We don't know when. We don't know how. We don't know where they will strike again. Millions of Onab and Lycavorians reside out there among the stars on planets that we have claimed together. We cannot sit here and bicker about what to do. We must act now before these monsters return."

"We do not know if they will return." A voice spoke up.

"Do we wish to base our future on that?" Daniho spoke now, picking it up beside his brother. "I do not! My wife and mate cares for my three-year-old son as we speak now. Within her womb she carries our daughter! My brother's wife and mate carries twins! In the stead of our beloved father, who resides now among the stars, Ashten and I have given the blessing of our family to our sister Kelia and the one she has accepted as her future husband and mate. A proud and fine Alpha from the Kirek Pack. Lylor Kirek loves her without shame even though he is five centuries older than her. We do not wish to base our future and the future that Lylor and our sister could have on what we don't know! We do not wish to base the future of our people and the Onab on what we don't know!"

Martin, Andro and the others could hear the murmurs of agreement and the nodding of heads from dozens and dozens of voices surrounding them in the coliseum.

"The twins of Jacar and Reva Mahanlo speak with one voice." Pengot spoke once more. "This has been known to the Packs since you were born. Only you, your brother and your sister have the dual fangs so unique to your bloodline. Do not mince words young Daniho, speak what you and your brother and sister came here to say."

Daniho looked at Ashten and Kelia and nodded. "Tell them." He said.

Ashten looked at Pengot and the other elders. "We must change. We must adapt what we know. What we have known these past millennia. Our governments, until now, they have been separate but working entities. If these Iais'Kai return, if they return to do more harm, we must meet them united as one. We must unite under one leader. One banner. And we must prepare for them. Weapons. Ships. Tactics. All of these must be things must be developed and refined. We cannot wait until they return and do nothing. Next time they may come here in much larger numbers than what they struck Delum with. How many more of our people must die before we, as two peoples, unite and say enough. How many wives and husbands and children must perish before we make a stand to say we will not be meek in the face of these monsters! That we will defend what is ours! That we will protect what is ours!"

"That we will not surrender those we love to the dark chasm and the void of death!"

There was an eruption of loud cheers and agreement that rocked the outdoor stadium as hundreds of Onab and Lycavorians rose to their feet clapping and cheering. They could see Pengot and the other Elders and the Onab looking around as the cheers rose even louder. Even in the Etheric projection they could see hundreds, if not thousands of people in the distance still moving towards the stadium.

"Saoi sibfla!" Eliani Leonidas blurted out.

Martin and the others heard Reva chuckle softly as the image faded from view. "They did so have a way with words, my sons." Reva spoke with love and warmth in her voice. "You and Androcles have spoken some similar words in the past Martin. And you will again."

"Did they return Reva?" Androcles asked now.

Reva took a deep breath and nodded her head sadly. "Yes."

"What happened?" Martin asked moving closer to her.

Reva looked at him. "I will show you Martin, have patience." She said. "What you are seeing is history that has never been viewed by eyes other than my own. History that was utterly stricken from all written files and data archives in order to protect what was to come."

"What was to come?" Martin asked her.

Reva nodded her head. "This was the task that my children offered to me and that I accepted. The preservation of our history and the ability to ensure that it never died. To ensure that our bloodline never died."

"Then it has been you who was behind all of these events throughout our history and the history of the Pralors and Darastrixi?" Martin spoke to her. "The Dahakoan archives, the ancient Lycavorian language. All of it."

Reva met his gaze. "Yes. Either directly or indirectly." She answered him. "I loved my children Martin, just as deeply as you love your own. They are gone now and I am all that remains from the beginning. I will finish what they started, what they asked me to accomplish and then I will join them among the stars."

"What did they ask you to accomplish?" Laren asked her now. "How could you have been in so many places?"

Reva's Etheric projection smiled. "You have seen the Sphere Laren Ti'shara. It is not as it appears. It is not metal and glass as it appears to others. It is pure energy, for lack of a better scientific explanation. It allows me to go where I must in order to do what I must."

"Your consciousness... your Etheric resonance is inside that?" Dorian asked now.

Reva nodded her head. "To put it simply... yes." She answered. "It is similar to the Onab technology given to the Pralor people in order for them to join their ancestors within the Rift of Time."

"You know of the Rift of Time?" Andro asked in surprise.

Reva chuckled once more as she looked at him. "I could boggle your imagination with all that I have seen and experienced through the millennia Androcles. It is a blessing and at times it is a curse."

"Then you know of Dadrien and grandfather Sumar." Androcles continued.

Reva nodded her head. "It was I who guided first Dadrien and then Sumar here, to this very planet. It is where Dadrien and Sumar met and became friends while Sumar still lived."

"Grandfather knew Dadrien before he died?!" Martin exclaimed.

Reva nodded her head. "Oh yes." She answered. "It was Dadrien and Sumar who came up with the idea of the six of you." Her eyes moved to Andro, Dorian and Laren. "It was here that they devised this plan."

"What plan?" Laren demanded.

"The rebirth of the Dahakoan in you, Dorian and Laren." Reva answered. "The rebirth of the Praetorians within our bloodline and our people." She spoke turning to look at Martin. "Your friend Wayonn spoke true words only a few days ago, though he did not know how true they were. He thought he was referring to Androcles encounter with the Iais'Kai on that Science Station, when in fact he was far closer to the actual truth than he knew."

"Something was drawing together the three forces in the entire universe that fought the Scourge and won." Martin spoke softly.

Reva nodded her head. "If only he knew how close to the truth he really was." She said. "He will discover this when all is revealed, but for now it must remain with us here in this room and with those you are bound to outside."

"Why?" Andro spoke. "This is... Reva this is knowledge that all of our peoples should have."

Reva nodded once more. "And they will. In time." She shifted her body on the bench and looked at him. "The Iais'Kai you fought on that station wasn't just any Iais'Kai Androcles Leonidas."

"What do you mean?" Andro asked.

"Do you remember his words to you?" Reva asked.

Andro nodded his head. "He said he knew me." He answered. "I thought... I thought he meant that he had seen grandfather Sumar before."

Reva shook her head. "His name was Dalet Nulai." She spoke softly. "He commanded the Iais'Kai forces that returned to our space back then. And viler a monster there never was. He butchered millions upon millions of Onab and Lycavorian people during the war, but the one thing he could not do is defeat Daniho. He was their most skilled warrior in battle, the most vicious and well trained. They met in battle four times and each time my son bested him." She looked at him. "I must thank you Androcles."

“For what?”

“Dalet Nulai is the Iais'Kai monster who butchered Daniho's beloved wife and three of his children.” Reva spoke with great pain in her voice. “He did this for simple pleasure. It very nearly broke my son and if not for Ashten and Kelia it would have. The last time they fought, Daniho was his equal in every way. Their battle lasted for nearly an hour and covered nearly a hundred kilometers of land on Cerath. In the end Daniho was able to strike Dalet with his sword, what should have been a mortal wound, but Dalet was a cunning monster. Just before Daniho would have plunged his sword into that creature's head, Dalet had three of his men attack from hiding. They could not match Daniho, but they managed to drive him back to the edge of a cliff. It was here that one of their ships fired into the cliff side and caused it to collapse. Dalet watched and laughed as my son fell.” Reva looked at him. “This is why he said that you were dead. He did not recognize your grandfather Sumar, he saw in you my son Daniho, who he thought long dead. Do you wonder why you spoke the words you did that day. He was one of the foremost Iais'Kai warriors to have ever lived and you bested him with barely any effort. Did you ever ask yourself why you spoke those words?”

Andro shook his head. “It... they just came out.” He said. “I don't know why. It just seemed like the right thing to say.”

Reva nodded her head. “And it was.” She said. “You were speaking for those that monster destroyed. And I thank you, because with your actions that day, ending that beast's life as you did, vengeance and justice that had been building for nearly four million years was finally done.”

They watched Reva rise to her feet and move around the bench. She lifted her hand and the image above and around them changed to one of an interior gathering. A massive hall filled with men and women, both Onab and Lycavorian. Reva turned to look at them.

“His death will have been felt by the Iais'Kai Queen.” She told them. “All of the Holy Elites, as they call themselves now, they are linked to her in an odd mental telepathy of some sort. They cannot communicate as we do within their Etheric realm, but she will discover he is dead, if she has not already. And she will investigate. She will know that no mere soldier could have killed Dalet Nulai. If even a tiny fraction of that station remained, all she will have to do is touch it and she will know what happened there.”

“Nothing remained Reva.” Andro told her. “It was completely vaporized.”

Reva nodded her head. “Let us hope so.” She spoke. “Until the unification of our people is complete we are still vulnerable.”

“You used that term before.” Martin said. “What do you mean by that? Unification?”

Reva smiled at him. “I will get to that.” She spoke. “For now... allow me to show you the beginning of it all. The day our bloodline became Royalty.”

CHAPTER SIXTY-SIX

LORENU HALL OF KNOWLEDGE

“...Do you think they will do?” Ashten Mahanlo tossed the question out to those sitting at the table.

The image all around Martin and the others was now the interior of a medium sized home that was well lit and appeared to be built into the side of a mountain for parts of three of the walls were made up of solid rock. Daniho was seated in a chair at one head of the huge table, the stunningly beautiful dark haired woman sitting casually on one of his legs. His arm was around her waist firmly, both in a protective manner so that she would not fall, and one of deep love. His opposite hand rested on her slightly swollen abdomen, both of her delicate hands over the top of his. Ashten sat at another table, the equally beautiful young blond haired female wolf beside him and sitting slightly back from the table for she was very pregnant, Ashten's hand resting on her swollen abdomen as his brother's did with his wife and mate. Kelia sat beside the very large man who looked to be in his mid-twenties with long, almost wild dark brown hair and bright blue eyes. Kelia had both her arms wrapped around his left arm in a very affectionate manner and his large hand covered hers on the table, his fingers caressing the backs of her knuckles.

“They will do what they must.” Reva’s voice filled the room as she came into the image from a side room carrying the toddler in her arms. Daniho’s first born son. She looked almost the same as she did in the Etheric image right now, albeit much younger. “They have always been wise and they will not dismiss this. They cannot.”

“Who do you think they will select medwan? The vote was three days ago.” Ashten asked her.

Reva Mahanlo moved to the lone empty chair and settled into it, shifting her grandson on her lap. “It will need to be someone who everyone respects. Both the Onab and our people.”

“Kesas Pengot is a good man.” Daniho spoke. “And he is the leader of the Council of Elders.”

Reva shook her head. “The others might put him forward but he will refuse.” She spoke again.

“Kesas Pengot is not a leader and he knows this. He is a brilliant advisor, but he does not have the spirit to lead so many. He knows where his skills reside and he is the perfect Chief Advisor to whoever they select.”

“It would need to be someone from one of the nine major Name Packs.” Ashten spoke. “The people will not follow an Alpha from a lower pack, as stupid as that is. It is just not in their nature.”

“As long as it is not one from the Chetak Pack.” Lylor spoke up now. “I could not bring myself to follow one from the pack that tried to steal your sister from me.”

Kelia looked at him with adoration in her eyes and she lowered her head to his shoulder. “You do not need to worry about that my love. No one could do that.” She stated wistfully. She leaned over and nuzzled his cheek and neck in a very affectionate way that caused him to blush and look embarrassed.

“You did an admirable job ending that little fiasco Lylor.” Ashten spoke. “And in doing so you earned the respect of our family.”

“Avoi.” Daniho nodded his head.

“The next Assirina Cormunn is in two weeks.” Reva spoke again. This time it was almost a stern voice. “I expect you will claim my daughter under that moon and make it official Lylor Kirek. I believe we can cut short the courting right given how Kelia feels.”

“Mother!” Kelia exclaimed defensively as Daniho, Ashten and their wives laughed softly.

Lylor did not take offense and he smiled. He had learned through the months that he had courted Kelia that the Mahanlo Pack did not suffer fools and those who beat around the bush. “I already have the evening planned Lady Reva.” He replied.

Kelia’s head snapped back around to look at him. “You do?” She gasped.

Reva smiled at the young man and nodded her head. “Good.” She said. “Good. I knew there was a reason that both my husband and mate and my sons liked you.”

“I would like...” Lylor began to speak but stopped. Kelia looked at him oddly for she knew he could not find the words to express what he wanted to say. He had always had this problem, and while he was getting better thanks to her, Lylor was still a man of few words.

It was Ashten who leaned forward in his chair. “You are already a member of this family Lylor Kirek. You have been since the moment my sister decided that she wanted no other. Speak your mind my friend.”

“I wish to have... I wish to have the official ceremony beside the eternal flame of your father.” Lylor spoke softly. “With your permission Lady Reva. To have his spirit looking upon us would mean more to me than anything but Kelia’s love. My father and mother agree with this request even though it goes against tradition.”

Reva looked at the young man who had stolen the heart of her daughter and then her head turned to look at her sons. She nodded slowly. “You have my permission Lylor Kirek.” She replied finally. “And I speak for my sons in this matter as well. I believe they both would be proud.”

“That we would.” Daniho nodded his head as he answered. “That we would.”

“I will speak with my mate’s brothers and parents, but I think they would be most impressed as well that you are asking for this and they will agree.” Reva said.

“Your family and pack does know that once you become part of the Mahanlo Pack you will be considered just as crazy as the rest of us.” Daniho said. The others chuckled when his wife slapped him affectionately in the face.

Lylor was looking at him with a wide grin as Kelia smiled up at him. "We are looking forward to it." He said.

The door chime rang and Daniho's wife rose from his lap to move to the door in the other room while they whispered among each other. She was back in moments with the older Lycavorian man and they all turned to look at him as Daniho and Ashten rose to their feet.

"Atut... what is it?" Daniho asked.

"The Council of Elders have reconvened and they have asked for you, Ashten and Kelia to attend." The man spoke. "They have tallied the sum of votes and a decision has been made."

"So soon?" Reva gasped as she too came to her feet.

Martin turned and looked at her Etheric image. "Chetak?" He gasped aloud. "They were a Ruling Pack back then?"

Reva nodded her head. "Yes." She answered softly. "They were a founding member of the Council of Elders on Cerath."

Martin came to his feet slowly and shook his head. "And I am the one who wiped them out." He muttered to himself.

"You did no such thing!" Reva's image snapped.

Martin looked at her. "I killed the two most senior members of their pack! I ordered the others to be tried for their crimes and they were all executed! The only member of that family who lives is Isra. I destroyed his family! His pack!"

"I will not relate to you the many crimes and indiscretions that the Pack of Chetak is responsible for through our long history Martin. That alone would take days. You will see the reason for this soon, but you did the one thing that needed to be done. The only thing that could be done."

"Is that what I tell Isra when he asks me about what we saw out here?" Martin asked her. "He is a founding member of Mjolnir's Hand! He is one of my closest friends! He will find out about everything that has happened out here. I will not lie to him to protect myself."

Reva's image shook her head as she rose to her feet and she moved over in front of him and looked up into his face. "You do not need to lie to him." She told him softly. "The Chetak Pack was not always like what you know Martin. They were proud once."

"That doesn't make me feel any better." Martin said. "They were a Ruling Pack from the beginning!"

"And your blood was their King!" Reva snapped. "And they betrayed that King on more than one occasion!"

Martin looked at her with wide eyes. "What?"

Reva waved her hand once more and the images and scene around them returned to the outdoor coliseum from earlier, only this time the coliseum was filled beyond overflowing. Thousands upon thousands of men, women and children were crowding into the facility, both Onab and Lycavorian alike.

"...Made our decision and the votes have been counted from all across Cerath and the colonies we have settled." Pengot was speaking as he was the only one within the coliseum standing at the moment. The podium had been set up in the center of the open area and he looked around at the thousands of faces that were present and the billions that watched via holo discs across their planet and from their many colonies. "Our Onab brothers and sisters have done similar votes among their leaders and their people and the outcome was equally unanimous. Let it be known that as of this day, we have united as one people, one entity and henceforth we shall be known as the Ardorm Kys. The Winter Entity, given how half of Cerath is among the winter months at any given time and how both our peoples view this season and its beauty."

The cheers that erupted were deafening to say the least and they continued for several minutes as Pengot stood there proudly. He finally raised his arm for silence and over several minutes the coliseum once more became silent.

"In order to further unite our two peoples and bring about something greater we have chosen one leader." Pengot spoke once more. "From this day forward, we will follow him and the passion for life that he exudes. These last three days have not been easy, but ultimately that name kept returning to the forefront. As the representatives of the people, both Lycavorian and Onab came forward and gave us the decisions of their people, it became more and more clear. As of this day, the Ardorm Kys will be led by a King. A person dedicated to seeing our future in as bright a fashion as any that exist. The Onab people, by their very nature have never been involved in this form of government. By their own admission they are happily not leaders, but followers and doers. Our own people have never seen fit to have this form of government but most of us now believe it is time.” Pengot looked around. “Given the nature of the threat that we now face together, all thoughts of selfishness and personal gain must be put aside. We must unite as one as spoken only a few short days ago. We, as the Lycavorian Elders, the senior Onab leaders, we believe that this is the right way. His name was submitted by his brother, who told us that he would not want the position we are about to impart to him. He is from one of the nine Major Bloodlines among our people. The only truly unique bloodline.”

Martin and the others saw nearly every head in the stadium turn to look at where Daniho and Ashten sat. Daniho had an astonished look on his face, squeezing the hand of his beloved wife and mate, while Ashten sat calm and with the slight curl of a smile on his face, his own wife beside him sitting proudly.

“In all the years of their existence, none of our people has been able to determine the why of this uniqueness in their bloodline. Only that in every generation since their inception they have produced those who push for the betterment of our people and the protection and love of everyone around them. The Mahanlo Pack of the Lycavorian people has been an anchor for all of us throughout our history, and they are the only Pack among our people that carry the unique bloodline of dual fangs! We once thought this an oddity, but now many have come to see it as a sign. A sign that they were meant to lead us forward. To guide us into the future and beyond and whatever that may hold.” Pengot stepped around the podium. “The Onab people have made their choice! The Lycavorian people have spoken and the Council of Elders has ratified this decision by a 13-1 majority vote! Henceforth, we decree that the bloodline of Mahanlo to be Mard Hippeis Saan! Vada ared mard saanigaro! His brother and sister will now be known as Crown Prince and Princess! Their mother as Royal Lady Reva. I ask... we the people of the Ardorm Kys ask... will our new King, Daniho Mahanlo please step forward and receive the blessing of his people so that he may lead us into the future!”

Martin and the others watched as an obviously stunned Daniho slowly stood up to the uproarious cheers of the thousands gathered in the stadium and beyond. What he did not hear were the thousands of voices from across the stars joining in from every colony world they occupied. Slowly Daniho moved up beside Pengot, looking at the senior elder of their people. He leaned close to him.

“Pengot... I do not... I do not wish to be King.” He stammered the words, just barely audible over the deafening sounds of cheering and clapping.

They all saw Pengot smiled and nod his head as his hands came up and he took Daniho by his shoulders. “And that is why you were chosen young Daniho Mahanlo.” He spoke. “Fight with your head young Alpha, but lead our people, lead them with your heart.”

Martin spun around wide eyed and looked at Reva. “That is what... that is what my father told me!” He almost yelled.

Reva’s Etheric image nodded her head slowly. “And that saying from Pengot has been a phrase that has guided our bloodline for millennia. Passed down within our blood as a sacred memory. Just as your father’s statement on that field of battle now swirls within our bloodline. They will never be lost.”

Eliani was gripping Dorian’s arm tightly as she looked at Reva. “Then this is the day...?”

Reva nodded her head and smiled warmly at her. “This was the day that our bloodline became royalty, yes dear Eliani.” She answered turning back to Martin. “Now do you see Martin? You cannot escape destiny no matter how hard you try. You and Androcles have tried to do this for so long, yet all you succeed in doing is leaving your indelible mark on others in a way no one else can.”

“What are you saying?” Martin asked her.

“They say that leaders are not born, they are forged.” Reva told him, her etheric image moving closer to him now. “In your case Martin Mahanlo Leonidas... in your case, in your son’s case, and all of your children, leaders are both born and they are also forged. And it began this day. Our bloodline... out of dire need yes, and most definitely against our wishes... we were elevated to Royalty by the will of our people.” Reva spoke evenly. “Daniho certainly did not want this as you just saw, yet it was given to him. It was given to Ashten. To Kelia. To me. To our descendants. This is a call and a duty that you cannot turn away from. You can feel it burning within you every day, and you have since the day you were born. Just as Androcles feels it, as he also feels the call of the Dahakoan. As Dorian and Laren now feel the call of the Dahakoan. It is in your blood. Woven into the very tapestry of who all of you are. Of who we are.”

“Staanian... what do you mean by that?” Androcles asked her. “What do the Dahakoan have to do with what took place among our people? Are you saying the Darastrixi were somehow involved?”

“I do not have the right for you to call me that Androcles.” Reva told him, settling her dark eyes on him.

Andro stepped up next to his father and placed his hand on his shoulder. Martin looked at him and nodded his head. He turned back to Reva. “However many generations and millennia that have passed, you are still our bloodline. This is our history, is it not? The history of our people, of our family? You are where it all began.”

Reva nodded her head. “Yes.”

“This is what my father’s blood has called for.” Andro spoke. “For as long as he can remember, as long as I can remember. You and the history that you tell us now is the piece that has been missing from all of us.”

Eliani moved up beside Andro now, pulling Dorian and Laren with her easily since they felt it as well. “Avoi.” She spoke softly.

“Do not ask us to dishonor you, and our bloodline by treating you as if you are some sort of outsider. You are not. You are part of us!” Andro finished.

Reva stared at him for a long moment and if it was possible, all of them thought they saw tears in her eyes. She finally turned and looked at Martin. “Martin?”

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. “He takes after his mothers. They have always been better with words than me.” He said.

Reva’s smile was broad as she laughed heartily and nodded her head. “So they have.” She said. “So they have. Your actions speak far louder than your words ever will, and that is why so many have come to adore you.” Reva turned back to Androcles. “And to answer your question Androcles, yes, the Darastrixi are involved, but not for many, many millennia.”

“But how?” Laren gasped.

“I will come to that child.” Reva answered with a smile.

“They came back didn’t they staania?” Martin asked her finally. “The Scourge?”

Reva was silent for a moment as she appeared to be collecting herself, then she nodded her head. “Yes.” She answered softly, almost a whisper really. “The Iais’Kai made their return exactly one hundred years later, and this time they came in force.” She looked at Martin calmly. “However, they were not prepared for what greeted them, and this was both a blessing and a curse to all of us.”

“Tell us...” Laren spoke as she stepped close to Andro and took his other hand.

JETANIA HIDDEN AIRFIELD SIX KLICKS NORTHEAST OF WARIM

It was decided that they would remain on the hidden base for the foreseeable future, for Garget and Loras could not guarantee that they would not be detected if they went into Warim. While Loras walked the streets freely, the vast majority of the citizens of Warim were from the Ranev pack and those packs that were the most closely aligned with them, Loras and Garget both suspected that there were those within Warim who still reported to Osrod. Both Loras and Garget also suspected that Osrod was probably aware Loras still lived and that she was actually the power behind the man he dealt with normally, but there was really no reason to confirm this. How he had kept Lazar out of the way was a clear sign that he knew she still lived. Osrod was no fool however, and he knew that to attempt to kill her again would ignite a firestorm that he would not be able to control and it would lead to all of the Mountain Packs uniting against him in civil war.

To say that Garget, Lazar and the others had been stunned when they finally met Nilantha would have been the understatement of the millennia. To his credit Garget remained calm as she spoke and he asked intelligent questions. Anja watched him through it all, and she came to the conclusion that Garget was indeed a man that she could trust. He was a typical Alpha wolf, but he was also smart enough to know that there were things he could not explain but that he could not deny existed. It appeared that like the Lycavorians within the Union, being able to adapt came easily for those within COLS. Apparently it was part of being Lycavorian. They had spoken for nearly four hours before Loras, herself stunned at some of the revelations that Nilantha had given them, called for them to rest and come together once more in the morning. The quarters they were assigned to were standard it appeared, comfortable but not lavish. A typical military facility. Anja and her people had slept in far worse and while they could not detect any danger, Tir'ut and Kalis took no chances with her safety and that of the others and maintained a constant watch throughout the night so that Anja could sleep. They didn't know that Garget had already made the determination that Anja and those with her were exactly who they said they were. His orders to his men were to protect them at all costs and keep an even more alert eye to the surrounding area for Garget knew Osrod would attempt something if he knew Anja was on the surface of Jetania and that Nilantha was alive and not a Lycavorian.

Anja had slept soundly for four hours, knowing and trusting that Tir'ut and Kalis were about, but she had also learned something from Ventori and she would never be caught unaware again. While Aricia and Isabella were widely considered the more militant of the Lycavorian Union's Queens, Anja was recognized as the more tactically sound because of her experience as a Navy SEAL all those years ago. Anja knew that they had become overconfident and careless and that it had very nearly cost her Calyb and Atropos on Ventori. She swore that would never happen again.

It was early morning, the sun not yet having risen above the horizon and she was sitting on the ramp of the STRIKER sipping a large mug of coffee and basking in the knowledge that she and her fellow Queens would soon be grandmothers. She had spoken to Aricia via uniquely secured communications developed by the Darastrixi and Pralor scientists on Lorenu. The QCR scrambler essentially took their words and distorted them to the point that you could not understand them unless you had the proper receiver. It was basically a much more advanced version of their communications scramblers. Endith and Tina had maintained a constant vigil through the night and were able to establish the link and work out the details with Armen while Anja slept. With Serale now awake and monitoring the instruments in the cockpit, they had gone to their cabin to sleep. Since becoming wolf, Serale Leonidas had shown an even greater interest in becoming a better pilot than she already was for she wanted to command her own Medical Triage ship. Kalis had encouraged this without question and bragged about her skill whenever he had the chance to anyone who would listen and Serale had spent the last few weeks working closely beside Endith and Tina whenever she could.

Anja felt Tobia and Mari move up behind her and settle to the ramp on her left. Tobia's spirit had opened up the moment Murano had taken her into his arms, and they had become what she had always wanted. A family. Anja knew they were already talking of more children and Mari's mating with Deion only made this more pronounced. Tobia's Etheric resonance was radiating powerfully now, free of doubt and indecision, and Anja could sense why Sumar had chosen her to help carry on his legacy. Tobia and Mari were easily able to sense her Etheric resonance and they detected the bubbling happiness within her.

"Your... your aura radiates happiness Anja." Mari spoke softly.

"As does your Etheric resonance." Tobia added as she sipped her coffee. "What has taken place?"

Anja looked at them and smiled warmly. "We have discovered that we are going to be grandmothers." She told them with a smile. "Sadi carries twins."

Both of their faces lit up in happiness and Tobia reached out to grasp Anja's free hand and she squeezed it tightly. "Oh Anja... that is wonderful!" She gasped.

Anja chuckled and nodded her head. "We thought it would be awhile before... before anyone decided to have children. Aricia, For'mya, Dysea, Bella, Cirith and I, we are not ready to be grandmothers."

"Because you want more children." Mari spoke knowingly.

Tobia looked at her daughter. "Mari!" She admonished her in a gentle but humorous voice.

Anja laughed now. "She's right though." Anja spoke with a twinkle in her eyes. "And we will. Making babies with Martin is so much fun!"

Tobia grinned knowingly and nodded her head. "They are on Lorenu I take it?" She asked finally.

Anja nodded her head. "Martin, Andro, Eliani, Dorian and Laren have gone into the temple there. I can't sense his emotions over this great a distance, but Aricia and For'mya are calm, so I'm not worried."

"What do you think they will find?" Mari asked.

Anja shook her head. "Answers I hope." She replied. "Nilantha has provided some of those answers, but it still doesn't explain how it all ties together. Marty hates loose ends. And so do I."

"And those we have seen so far?" Tobia asked.

Anja met her eyes, sensing the purpose of her question. She nodded her head. "Loras, Garget, all of those we have seen so far, I believe we can trust." She answered. "They want the answers just as much as we do. This Osrod character, those who follow him, that is another story altogether given what we have heard. And there..."

Mari detected the hesitation in her aura now that she was wolf. Her transition had been much smoother than many who were turned simply because of the pureness of Deion's blood and their Etheric connection. Mari had learned so much from his sisters and from Aricia and Anja herself that she was years ahead of someone who had been turned.

"What is it Anja?" Mari asked.

"Loras." Anja answered. "There is something very special about her."

"In what way?" Tobia asked.

"You are a Praetorian just like Murano. You must have sensed that her Etheric ability is far more advanced than what she has shown." Anja said looking at Tobia.

"Oh yes." Tobia answered instantly. "Almost as if it is lying dormant within her."

"I felt that from her too." Mari spoke.

Anja nodded her head. That didn't surprise her. Deion and Nara were extremely powerful in their own right and Deion passed this to Mari when he bit her. "I think she is meant to be part of our family." She told them. "That she is already tied to us in some way. If what I feel within her was actually active, I would put her on a scale as a match for Sadi and Aricia. The two of them are closest to Martin and Andro in skill and power now."

Tobia shook her head. "Do not discount yourself Anja." She told her. "I have seen and felt great power within you. Your Etheric connection seems to have somehow intertwined with your healing abilities, but you are no less powerful."

Anja shrugged her shoulders. "Power doesn't concern me." She stated. "I am what I am and that is that."

Tobia chuckled. "Indeed you are." She said.

"So everything that Nilantha told us is truthful?" Mari asked.

Anja nodded her head. "I could detect no lie in her resonance, and her Etheric capability is on a par with Sarlana. That is not normal for a Darastrixi and they both have said this. I would have to say that she has been touched by Sumar, just as she said. There is no reason to doubt her at this point."

"Something tells me that there is much about Sumar that we do not know." Tobia said softly. "The man was an enigma."

Anja nodded her head once more. "Martin believes that as well, and after meeting him and Dadrien on Ventori, even in Etheric form, he believes it even more. There was much he was not telling Martin. Perhaps because Marty needed to discover it on his own or perhaps because Sumar did not remember it. They did say that they didn't remember quite a bit. Given the level of technology the Pralor people have, the ability to transfer a conscious mind into your Rift of Time, there is no telling what you could have done."

"Or someone else." Tobia said. "You must remember that quite a bit of the technology for such things we received from the Onab people. Well... they taught us how to build such things anyway. They were the true technological masters."

"And that is another interesting point that we have wondered about." Anja said. "I have a feeling that these Onab have a lot more to do with what is going on than what we know. It's no coincidence that their influence keeps coming up at odd times, and at many different points in history. These images in this Sanctuary that Nilantha told us about? Foreseeing the future? Our future. The possibility that the Temple on Lorenu is built with Onab materials? Since coming out here, we keep running into signs that these Onab were something different than what the Pralors believed and their influence is more far reaching.”

Tobia looked at her and nodded. “I have given that some thought as well, and I agree with that.” She said evenly. “It would also suggest that there is some greater connection to your people. Something that goes back further than anyone realizes. It just seems that each new discovery we make draws a further link between your people and the Onab.”

“Exactly.” Anja said in agreement. Anja truly loved Tobia’s mind. It worked just like hers and did not dismiss anything. “No one among your people ever tried to discover more about them?”

Tobia shook her head. “Not to my knowledge.” She answered. “Reclusive would be a mild word to describe them. We did not even discover their true home planet until after we detected the supernova that destroyed them. The meetings before that were brief but friendly. Our history states that in exchange for information they would give us the knowledge to expand our own technology.”

“Wait a minute, their true home planet?” Anja asked. “I thought the planet where you found their books and texts was their home planet?”

Tobia shook her head. “Oh no, that was a colony world of theirs. But the texts that we recovered from the colony apparently described another world. A lush and beautiful world with mountains and oceans and where half the planet was always covered in fresh snows. Not an arctic type land with bitter cold but something more seasonal and mild.” She tilted her head slightly. “I believe I remember someone say it was called Cer... Cerath. Yes, that was it. Cerath. It was far outside the borders of our empire and that may account for the infrequency with which we encountered them.”

“What information did they want from you exactly?” Anja asked her.

Tobia shrugged her slim shoulders. “Data about our Etheric skills and ability. Our people and culture.” She answered. “We never really complained about the one sided deals. Back then, anything that allowed us to advanced our technology was welcomed.”

“And this took place before the Scourge?” Anja asked.

Tobia nodded her head. “All of our encounters with them occurred before we came into contact with the Scourge as our history relates. Our first contact with the Scourge was...” Tobia turned and looked at Mari. “What do the history texts say now Mari?”

“Our first contact with them came three hundred years before our first war with them.” Mari answered. “That was half a million years ago, give or take a few centuries. I don’t recall exactly. History wasn’t one of my favorite courses.”

Tobia smiled at her daughter and saw Anja doing the same thing. She turned back to Anja then. “Murano or Delnash might know more, I’m only relating to you what I have heard or read myself. As you know from Kasdan, most of our written history and texts were destroyed when our homeworld was wiped out. Once our ships lost the direct link to the database archives on our homeworld, all they were left with was what was in their databases. Fragmented periods of our history. What we are teaching in our schools now comes mostly from the memories of the oldest among us and what few texts do remain.”

“That is interesting.” Anja said softly as her mind raced back and forth with different ideas and scenarios.

Anja smelled them long before they came into view, and once more she blessed that Martin’s blood flowed within her and had shaped her once he had turned her. Anja’s sense of smell, while not as keen as Martin’s, Aricia’s or their pureblood children, was extremely powerful. It easily put her on a scale with Loras and the other purebloods here on Jetania. She sipped her coffee again, relishing in the rich flavor as her jade green eyes detected them walking from the interior of the base. Loras, Garget and Nilantha appeared to be speaking freely, Garget fully engaged with the Darastrixi woman who he had believed was Lycavorian for so many centuries. Anja could sense the excitement of discovery in his demeanor, and he was not trying to hide it. All of them held mugs of what would pass for coffee if Anja’s nose was accurate. She smiled to herself, for she would have to get them to try Aricia’s blend and gain more converts. Anja, Tobia and Mari rose to their feet as they approached.

Garget bowed his head deeply to her. “Lady Anja.” He spoke.

“Good morning.” Anja said looking at him.

“I hope the accommodations were alright Anja.” Loras said as she stepped closer. “The base is not exactly meant for entertaining guests.”

Anja dismissed that with a wave of her hand. “Trust me, after three decades of following Marty around and the trouble he gets into, the accommodations were just fine.”

Garget looked surprised. “The Mard Revik gets into trouble?” He asked.

Anja laughed softly. “If only you knew.” She spoke. “Lead, follow or get out of his way. That is Marty’s motto. One of them anyway.”

Garget shifted on the balls of his feet and Nilantha smiled and shook her head. She then stepped up next to him. “Garget is too much of a coward to ask you outright so I will.” She said. “He would like one or two of his engineers to perhaps get a look inside your ship.”

Anja looked at Garget. “Lazar and Rhaos did not tell you everything that they saw while they were inside?”

Garget suddenly looked very embarrassed and his eyes darted back and forth to Loras and Nilantha. Anja saw Loras’s dark eyes narrow even more while Nilantha’s emerald eyes had a distinct twinkle in them, almost as if she was getting some perverse joy out of seeing Garget fidget.

“Garget has not been to my ship Lady Anja.” Nilantha spoke now. “He is not aware of the technological advances that my people and yours have made throughout the years.”

“Yet you told me that you are certain Osrod has at least some of the technology that he took from Dynina’s people when they were here. And the men and women he was able to capture.” Anja said.

Nilantha nodded her head. “That is what we believe, yes.” She answered. “However, since we have not seen great strides in our technology in the last few hundred years, aside from those made by our people here, I can only assume that he either killed them while trying to get information from them, or those scientists and engineers he has working for him just have not been able to determine how it works. Or how they can employ it.”

Tobia nodded her head. “If what Dynina told Martin is accurate then that may well be the reason Anja.” She said.

“He is a fool you know?” Anja spoke. “Have you thought about what you could have done as a people if only his father had worked with Dynina and those with her instead of trying to force their cooperation?”

Garget met her eyes. “I believe you already know the answer to that question.” He spoke in an almost defensive manner. “We are not...”

Anja held up her hand again. “I know that Garget.” She told him. “If you were, we would not be having this conversation.”

“Anja... we...” Loras began but Anja reached out and took her hand drawing her closer to her.

“No.” Anja spoke. “There is nothing to explain or try to defend. You are our people Loras, and you and those in the Mountain Packs are more like us than you know.” Anja looked at Garget. “No more than two Garget. No recording devices or weapons. Endith and Tina can answer whatever questions they have, but as a leader, you must understand that the influx of advanced technology into a society can do more damage than good if it is not controlled.”

Garget straightened up and nodded his head. “Yes.” He spoke. “Will... will the Mard Revik share what you know with us Lady Anja?”

Anja looked at Nilantha and saw her nod her head slightly. She looked back to Garget. “I think you already know what he will do Garget Ranev.” She replied. “And whatever Osrod may think he has, he won’t have it for very long once Martin gets here. Osrod and his father stole it from Martin’s staania, and they took her people against their will. If they are dead, he will answer for that.”

“Avoi.” Nilantha spoke in the Lycavorian language and everyone nodded in agreement.

“When will he get here? And the Heralds?” Loras asked now in an anxious voice that Garget did not understand but that Nilantha did. Anja also detected this anxiousness and what it meant. Loras knew something that Anja did not, something that caused her scent to become a tiny bit sweeter. It wasn’t something that Garget or any male wolf would detect, but it was something that a female would.

“We can proceed to my ship if you like?” Nilantha said.

Anja looked at her and then at Loras before she shook her head. “No.” She answered. “The knowledge in your ship of the future and what it brings, that should remain with you Nilantha. No one else should see it, other than those Black Watch members that already have.”

“There is so much knowledge there Anja.” Nilantha said. “Knowledge that I have hidden and protected for centuries. Knowledge of the future.”

Anja nodded in recognition. “And you can share that knowledge with the other scholars among our people when they arrive. I do not wish to know the future. Martin won’t either. We are strange like that. We like to discover things for ourselves. All of us do.” Anja looked at Loras. “And some things I can already feel.” She said with a warm smile.

“You... you know!” Loras gasped aloud with wide eyes.

Anja squeezed her hand. “I can sense it. I don’t know how or with whom, but you are meant to be part of our family Loras Ranev. And it will happen sooner than you think.”

Garget looked between them with wide eyes, not knowing what Anja meant but knowing that it was something that neither would tell him. It was a female thing, but if it bound Loras to the True Royal Family of their people, it could only be good for all of them.

Anja looked at Nilantha. “You know?” She asked.

Nilantha nodded her head. “I allowed Loras to view what I saw only a few days ago.”

“Then we should talk about that.” Anja spoke. “Right now though, I’m starving.”

“We have arranged for breakfast to be served.” Loras told her with a laugh. “The one thing you can always be sure of is that there is food wherever Garget goes.”

Anja laughed as his embarrassed expression. “Do not be ashamed of this Garget. You are going to be fast friends with Martin and our sons. They love to eat!”

LORENU HALL OF KNOWLEDGE

“...Was utterly amazing what we accomplished in that brief respite.” Reva was telling them as the moving images all around them depicted the same cities on Cerath but now they were built up and even more fantastic than any Martin and the others had seen before. Several massive space stations now resided in orbit of Cerath and they were surrounded by hundreds of ships that varied in size from several hundred meters to easily the size of SPARTA'S WRATH. “What we built was simply magical and through it all Daniho brought us together even more. He was our passion, our desire, our drive to succeed. He appointed Pengot, Ashten and Kelia his Senior Advisors for life. Ashten was his caution, Pengot his reason and Kelia, she was his purpose.” Reva’s face, even in the Etheric projection was animated and bright as she talked. “The members of the Council of Elders served as what you would call a Parliament or Senate. The Onab selected an equal number of their people and the First Council was born. Half of each were chosen to direct their attention to our people and colonies while the other half worked on the military portion. Every quarter century they switched so that new ideas were always brought forward and implemented. Some we used, some we did not.”

Andro pointed to an image above them. “The Avatars we knew... we knew the Pralor people did not build them, but the Worker Drones?” He spoke. “You made them! Not the Pralor people!”

Reva nodded her head. “We needed assistance in building what we wanted. The Drones and Avatars were the first thing that we created. The Onab had already been working on them and Daniho simply accelerated the project to completion within that first year. Within five years we had over a thousand Avatars and ten thousand Worker Drones. That number doubled within the next five years.” Reva looked around the massive room at all the images and they could tell the pictures were making memories flood through her even in the Etheric projection. “Within fifty years we had over two thousand ships. Most were warships, but many were very advanced transports that we used to reinforce many of our outer colonies at the time. We brought them weapons and built defensive systems around each of them. Daniho was a tactical genius, his mind was always working, always figuring, trying to determine from where they would come and what they would do. He never thought in the here and now Martin.” Reva looked at Martin affectionately. “Now you know how and why you and your son were blessed with this gift. To see signs and details that others cannot. When Sumar's blood was introduced into our bloodline this skill became even more pronounced because of the Praetorian gene within him. Resumar had it, your father and now you and..."

Martin looked at her image. "Wait a minute!" He spoke. "You speak like..."

"Like this was all scripted somehow." Andro finished for his father.

Martin nodded. "Yeah... just like that."

Reva looked at them and slowly nodded her head. "In a manner of speaking, yes."

"In a manner of speaking?" Martin hissed. "What exactly does that mean?"

Reva's image moved closer to Martin now and her dark eyes stared at him intently. "I know what you are thinking." She spoke softly. "And you misunderstand the meaning of my words Martin. Everything that you and your son have done, every decision that you have made over the course of the years, each of them has been your decision to make and yours alone. These decisions have made you who you are. Each of you. Androcles, Dorian, Laren, Denali, Eliani, Resumar, all of your children."

"You just said it has all been scripted." Martin spoke once more.

"No, that is how Androcles described it." Reva answered. "And he is correct to an extent. However, there is much more involved in what had occurred through the millennia prior to you joining this world Martin. And that is why it was wiped from the records. That is why it only exists here and in the other temples across the stars."

Martin shook his head. "Now I'm confused." He said.

Reva smiled and nodded her head. "Then let me continue and help you to see the purpose of it all."

Martin Leonidas stared at her for a long moment. All of his waking life he had desired the answers to these questions. How? Why? Who? The answers about himself, about his family, his history and his people. Each of his children were so very special in a unique way and he had seen that in their eyes the moment each of them entered this world. He couldn't explain it, could not put his finger on it, but now all of those questions were here in this one spot.

And finally all of those answers as well.

"Alvva?" Martin turned as Eliani reached out and put her hand on his arm, her voice soft and even. He looked into her fern green eyes, so much like her mother in her beauty and her intelligence. "Evell sey chevsh allon nison Alvva. Una coi daanth un kincha una hote." (We have come this far Papa. It is time to discover it all.)

Martin reached up and stroked her cheek seeing her smile at his touch and the fatherly aura he pulsed her with. His eyes cut to Andro and he saw his oldest son nod his head, and finally they moved to Dorian and Laren who stood side by side. Laren, his Soul Daughter, part Darastrixi and part Lycavorian. He had accepted this almost from the moment he saw her in that transmission. She had too much of Androcles and Dorian in her to deny it, and now he was finding out they had much of her in them. She clutched Dorian's arm in both her hands and he saw her nod her head along with Dorian. His youngest son, and the product of the love he had for Isabella and her for him. Vampire and Lycavorian. Yes, all of his children, born of his blood or not, all of them were special. Martin looked back to Reva finally as so many revelations of his life filled him and he nodded his head to her.

"You are our blood." Martin spoke.

Reva nodded her head slowly. "I suppose I am. Many thousands of generations removed, but yes."

"Then do not ask us not to acknowledge this." Martin told her. "There is nothing more important than family, and that is what their mothers and I have raised them to believe. You are our blood... our family. And you will be treated just as they treat my mother and Jezima and Dynina and Meral."

"That is hardly important now given my current form and..." Reva began.

"It is important to us!" Martin snapped. "All of us! If you have been watching us for all of this time staania Reva, then you know this to be true!"

All of them saw her look at him and once more they could almost see the moistness in her eyes even as an Etheric projection. Reva Mahanlo may have been an Etheric projection right now, but her connection to her physical body was still present and she could still feel emotion. Right now all she could feel was happiness and love. She nodded her head finally and met his eyes.

“I do.” She spoke softly. “It reminds me of... of the closeness that Daniho, Ashten and Kelia shared with me all those millennia ago. And it feels wondrous.”

Martin nodded his head. “They are our strength and our purpose. This is their history just as much as it is ours. It has been from the moment that we brought them into our lives and our blood now flows within them. Sadi carries the next generation of our blood staania. How much more important can that be?”

Reva met his gaze. “She carries far more than that Martin. Within her... within her she carries the reunification of our people.”

Andro knew what his father thinking and he stepped closer to him. “Then they should be here with us staania. Learning all of this, just as we are. We will share it with them anyway, isn’t it better if they learn it with us?”

Reva looked at him now and she nodded her head. “The time for long held secrets is now passed. You are correct.” She said softly as she closed her eyes.

The moon was full outside the Temple, the camp quiet. Durcunusaan patrols stood guard all around the perimeter with Darastrixi and Lycavorian and Pralor security from the city. They were conversing as if they were long lost friends who had been reunited and laughter could be heard among the small groups from time to time.

Aricia and For'mya were curled into each other’s arms on the bedroll near the large fire, Sadi, Ne'Veha and Carisia spooned with Sehri, Lu'ria and Caliria between them. Dynina, Gorgo, Dasha and Jezima lay sleeping only a few meters away. Jomann was the only one who was awake at the moment, Brendi curled into his arms. Jomann nearly jumped out of his boots when the figure of Reva appeared by the fire and he sprang to his feet in an instant. His sharp movements brought the others instantly awake and the image of Reva could only smile as she realized that none of them had left the small clearing around the entrance to the Temple. She watched as all of them moved from the shadows around the fire to stare at her. All of her blood family no matter how it had come to be, just as Martin and Androcles had told her. It only took a simple nod of her head to deactivate the security measures within the Temple and eyes went wide as they heard the doors to the Temple begin to open a short distance away.

“Carians!” Gorgo muttered as she clutched Dynina’s hand.

“It is time.” Reva spoke. “The love of this family, this bloodline, it knows no distinction of species or race. It did not in the beginning and as my grandsons have shown me, it does not now. Come, all of you. There will be no more secrets among family. Come.” Reva’s image waved her hand toward the double doors.

No words were really needed among the Leonidas family, and all of them broke for the doors at the same time, including Laren’s parents Yokra and Robati. Reva’s eyes were bright and smiling when she saw this and she turned her head to see Kadeer standing there silent, Perlae, Ishma and Awser beside him.

Reva’s Etheric form moved closer to them. “You carry the blood of Mahanlo within you, no matter how it came to be.” She spoke. “You are family Kadeer, as are your children with Maha. Set aside your role now and follow your family.”

Perlae and Ishma gripped their father’s hands and Kadeer Imuma did something he had not done since the day Maha had come into his life.

He took a leap of faith.

Reva Mahanlo had watched them all with a beaming face as they entered the Hall of Knowledge, their faces full of discovery and happiness. She watched her grandson Martin’s mates go to him first of all, how he nuzzled them and his aura put them at perfect ease. How the beautiful Sadi, carrying the future of their people in her womb, how she was enveloped within Androcles’ arms, his other wives and mates crowding around him without hesitation as he nuzzled all of them, his own aura pulsing them with love. Reva had been amazed, as she had watched through the years as the love between the Queens her grandson had claimed grew and developed. There was no competition between them in the least and their love for each other as well as Martin was unquenchable. Just as it now was with Andro’s wives and mates, and Denali and Deion and all of her grandsons who had claimed more than one wife. There was no doubt, no rivalry. While she knew it was not uncommon for a powerful Alpha to take more than one wife and mate, her bloodline had taken that to the next level.

She allowed them to wander the large room for a time, looking at the many murals on the walls and ceilings, always glancing up to the ceiling at the images that were flashing by and what she had already shown Martin and Androcles. There was no hesitation or inkling of uncertainty within any of them. This is where they all belonged and this was their history. This knowledge showed on their many faces and in their hearts and minds and though she could not get a true sense from Robati, Yokra or Kadeer because they were pure Darastrixi, the amazement and sense of purpose was completely evident on their faces. Kadeer and Maha's union of marriage was the only one like it in their history so far, and their three children would be paramount in the future to come. She knew that Laren Ti'shara would find love with a Lycavorian who would worship her as no other, but she did not know who or when she would meet him. If she ever would. Reva was content in the knowledge that in order to take and hold her heart, that wolf would first need to pass the devastating gauntlet of her bloodline, for Laren Ti'shara was Ano Fenneenum to the Mahanlo Pack as a whole and the Leonidas family in particular. Just as the elaborate tattoos on her body announced to all who would see them. Reva was sure that she would not want to be the wolf that attempted to claim Laren, for facing the Leonidas family was daunting enough, but facing Laren's father and all of her brothers as well, that would take a special kind of wolf.

The Bloodline tattoos on her body, on Andro's and Dorian's, and soon those on Martin's, they would never fade or dull. Any children born in the future would bear these same tattoos, and soon the rest of Martin's family would begin to show the sign of these tattoos forming on their bodies. Perhaps not in as elaborate a mural as the four of them, but they would begin to take shape now that they had entered the Temple. All of them were connected more deeply within the Etheric realm than Reva had ever felt with the exception of her own children. And now, Martin, Androcles, Dorian and Laren would be even more powerful because of the Praetorian gene within them, passed down by their Blessed Pralor ancestor Sumar. Really, any of their children with this gene would be more powerful, even as those without the gene would also begin to shape the future.

Eliani Leonidas had already done this and she had not even realized it.

Reva had not sensed it right away, but now, seeing her beside him, the way they touched one another, the way they held each other and the second red haired female, Reva Mahanlo knew. The tall Lycavorian Jomann, whose own blood was pure and powerful, he descended from the Kirek Pack. Reva did not know how this was possible for the decisions after the war had separated the Kirek Pack from the others that survived. She would need to delve into the archives at the other sites in order to discover how this had happened, but there was definitely no mistaking this now as she saw and felt them so close. Jomann carried himself in the same manner as Lylor had, proud and powerful and devastatingly protective of Eliani and this Brendi that shared their lives. His resonance within the Etheric realm was similar to Lylor in many ways and if she was able to detect his scent, no doubt she would detect the similarities as well. Reva had taken note through the years of the unique closeness that Androcles shared with his sisters Eliani and the beautiful young Zarah, as well as the adopted vampire female Yuriko. Somehow this closeness between them would play a role in the future she knew, but for now it would develop on its own.

Now they had to continue.

Reva turned her head in the Etheric projection and found Martin's eyes looking upon her intently. He sensed something Reva knew, and once more she blessed the gods for what he was. She nodded her head to him and Martin turned to look around.

"Everyone find a spot and park it!" Martin barked out the command and Reva laughed gently as the others reacted to his command. Within seconds everyone had either sat on the ground or the several benches that were scattered about and Martin looked back to her.

"Staania?"

Reva looked at all of them around her. "There is so much to cover." She spoke softly. She settled her eyes on Martin. "There is an easier way Martin." She spoke.

"Let's hear it." Martin said.

"I can... I can channel through you, and your pureborn children Androcles, Deion and Nara." Reva told them. "Their connection to our bloodline is strongest because of you." Reva explained. "I can activate the Etheric boosters within this Temple and use the four of you as the anchors for everyone because of the Praetorian gene within you. It is something that Sumar taught to me and to Dadrien.”

Jezima perked up. “Wait! You knew... you knew my son Sumar!?” She asked stunned and squeezing Dynina’s hand who sat beside her.

Reva nodded her head with a smile. “Yes I did, Jezima Mahanlo.” She answered. “And a finer man I have never met.”

“Why do you call me that? I am not... I am not Lycavorian.” Jezima spoke shyly.

Reva shook her head. “That is not entirely true.” She spoke in reply. “Whether you wish to believe how it came to be, all of you in this room have been touched by the blood of the Mahanlo Pack. You may be Pralor and Darastrixi, but you have interacted and been part of our lives in some manner. Perhaps not directly Jezima, but when Dynina’s daughter Sateia turned Sumar, he became Lycavorian. He became Mahanlo blood. Just as Dynina was. Just as her daughters were. Just as you now are. Why do you think Martin and his children treat you in such a way? It is in their blood.” Reva cut her eyes to Kadeer.

“So you see Kadeer Imuma... Maha Mahanlo loved you with every fiber of her being... and the moment she bit you in the manner of our people, you became part of this family. An integral part, for it is your hand that has guided your children to this day. Your hand that kept Dynina in their lives. Your oath to Maha, who you loved just as fervently as she loved you. Your role is not done Kadeer, you have much still to accomplish, for you are family. Never doubt that Kadeer. Never. In many ways, that oath you swore the day she passed into the next world, that is as Lycavorian as it gets.”

Martin turned to look at Kadeer and nodded his head. “Avoi.” He spoke softly as Perlae held her father’s arm tightly, tears rolling down her cheeks.

Reva turned her head and focused her gaze on Wayonn, who had so far remained silent and out of the way as if he did not belong. “You were the brother to Sumar that his twin never was Wayonn Mahanlo. He loved you Wayonn, more than you will ever know. And now you must put aside whatever doubts you may have in regards to your place here. You belong here, just as each of you do. And to those who are not here, through Martin and his children I can reach them as well.”

“Anja? Melda Min?” Martin asked her now.

Reva nodded her head. “All of them... including your brother Daniel.” She answered. “Through you. The pureness of the blood within you and your pureblood children is beyond what any Lycavorian will have no matter where they reside in the universe. Any touched by you will be the same, albeit not as powerful. You know all this Martin; Anja has told you this before many times. The Purity Coefficient that your friend Eurin developed, it is a good system, but it cannot take into account our blood. That is why it cannot be measured. Even the Onab were never able to determine the why of it. Your beautiful Anja, “Red” as you affectionately call her, she is perhaps the most intelligent individual alive in the universe right now Martin. Even the Onab and all of their technology could not do what she has done. What she will do in the future. Even she could not determine why our blood is so potent. It is a rare oddity that will never be discovered I think... but that is not important now.” Reva looked around once more.

“What is important are those in this room right now.” Reva continued. “And now all of you must know why we did what we did all those millennia ago. You must understand the why of it, or you will not be able to shape the future.”

“What... what did you do?” Gorgo asked now.

Reva smiled and lifted her hands. “Let me show you. Let me show you all of it.”

With that, a soft white light extended from her hands to engulf Martin, Androcles, Deion and Nara, and this white light quickly spread to everyone in the room and their minds came alive as they could feel one another within that Etheric bubble.

And Reva began to talk.

“They returned exactly one hundred years after our first encounter with them.” Reva’s voice began. “This time however, this time we were ready for them.”

HIDDEN AIRFIELD SIX KLICKS NORTHEAST OF WARIM

“...Is wrong?” Garget asked with genuine worry in his voice for a multitude of reasons. “What is going on Oracle?” His eyes were focused on where Anja sat lotus style on the ground near the bottom of the ramp of their STRIKER. Around her, sitting in similar positions, were Retta, Normya, Zarah, Mari and Kalis.

“I don’t know.” Nilantha replied. “I felt a surge of Etheric power and...”

“I felt it too?” Loras spoke now from beside Lazar. “It was fleeting and warm and...”

“It is Martin.” Tobia’s voice echoed from behind them and they turned to see her walk up with Tir’ut and Lucia beside her.

“Vada Mard Revik?” Garget gasped in shock.

Tobia nodded her head. She knew what that phrase meant for Aricia and Anja had been schooling her in their language for weeks now. “Yes. He must have discovered something that he needed to share with them. With his family.”

“He can... he can reach across the stars like this?” Rylin gasped. “He can touch them from where he is?”

Tobia nodded her head again. “I don’t know where exactly he is but yes. Etherically speaking he and his son Androcles are the most powerful Etheric users in existence right now. Their abilities and potential are untapped. If it was important enough to include Anja and his family, then yes, he would find a way. They would find a way.”

“Can we... can we do this?” Loras asked her.

“My people, all Lycavorians are born with this ability but most never advance it past the lower tiers.” Tobia answered. “Most do not have the concentration to control it as my people do, as Martin and those with him do. It requires a particular gene within our bodies that is so rare only one in a trillion have it now. Without the gene, we can only use Etheric abilities to a certain extent. Nothing like they are capable of.”

“You have this gene Tobia?” Rylin asked.

Tobia nodded her head. “My husband, Murano and our daughter Mari. Yes. Mari is wife and mate to one of Martin’s pureblood sons, Deion. His blood now runs through her.”

“Sibfla!” All of them heard the soft curse word and turned to see Rhaos beside Lazar now.

Tobia smiled and shook her head. “You have no worries Rhaos.” She told him.

“I hurt her. On their ship right after...” Rhaos stated.

Lucia shook her head. “You did so in an unknown situation created through no fault of your own.” She told him stopping his words. “Trust me, Mari has already made this known to Deion. You need not worry.”

“What is he showing them?” Nilantha asked looking at Lucia now.

Lucia shook her head. “I don’t know. Zarah will share it with me after, and Normya with Tir’ut here, but we do not carry the blood of their family in our veins. Tir’ut and I felt it at first but it was for their family only because of the Etheric connection. We just need to wait.”

“How long?” Garget asked.

“That we cannot answer.” Tir’ut replied. “I have seen Androcles hold such a connection by himself for several hours, but with his father and others with him, there’s no telling how long it could last.”

Nilantha turned back and looked at where Anja sat. She nodded her head slowly. “Lady Anja has been nothing but forthcoming since their arrival.” She turned to Garget. “Garget?”

He nodded his head without pause. “Yes.”

“Then we wait.” Nilantha said. “We are only just beginning to learn how closely tied we are with those of the True King. We have waited for millennia and we can wait for a few more hours if necessary.”

Loras wasn’t listening to Nilantha speak because the pull within her was more powerful than anything she had ever felt. She was staring at where Anja sat, the tingling of her mind alive like it had never been before. No one noticed as she moved closer to where Anja was, her eyes wide at the sensations that were racing through her. She felt more alive than at any time in her life and she did not know why. And then the voice filled her mind, a powerful yet gentle male voice that whispered within her mind like a cool breeze through the mountain valleys all around her.

“Enler jar aur valiath. Allon coi terit livca kos.” (Join us my wife) (This is your history too)

Loras felt such a wonderful sensation sweep across her that it shook her right down to her core. A sensation of love, desire and passion mixed with respect and honor. Without any doubt or hesitation in the least Loras Ranev crossed the last few meters' distance and saw Anja and Retta reach for her hands. She took them without pause and settled to the ground between them.

And on this day Loras Ranev entered a whole new world.

HONELZE

“...Sure there is nothing wrong?” Koguth asked as he stood beside Lexi in the small room inside the restaurant.

Lexi turned her eyes to him and nodded. “The King reached for them.” She replied. “It was a very powerful Etheric connection meant only for the four of them.” She motioned to where Dysea, Isabella, Cirith and Meral sat at the small table, all of them holding each other's hands. To Koguth they appeared to be in a deep trance of some sort.

“You are their Captain Lexi.” He spoke. “I do not begin to try and understand this ability that your people have, but if you believe they are safe?”

Lexi smiled and nodded her head. “They are fine General.” She said. “And there are many among our people that do not understand how they can do what they can do, so don't feel left out. I am among them.”

Koguth looked at her and smiled. These last weeks and months they had become good friends and Koguth was assured a direct line to any of the Queens when he needed their council. “I will take your word for it.” He said with that feline smile. “I was going to report that we have finished the eastern defensive positions and will start on the final positions along the north wall tomorrow. We should be done within the week.”

Lexi nodded her head. “I will tell them.” She spoke. “I'm sure they will want to cover the last portion with you when they are finished here. Isabella and Cirith most of all. They seem to have a more complete grasp of defensive fortifications.”

Koguth nodded his head. “I will return when they call for me.” He spoke.

Lexi watched him walk out and then turned her head back to where her Queens sat. She pulled a chair away from the wall and settled into it, knowing that this could be a long wait. She had seen the surprise on their faces when they felt Martin reach for them, the joy and love and the confusion. Whatever was taking place, for him to reach for them in this fashion, it must have been very important.

LORENU

HALL OF KNOWLEDGE

The images swirling all around them held their rapt attention while Reva's voice filled their minds like the narrator of a story. It was her voice, but it wasn't as she spoke, but no one really noticed.

Ship and ground battles from at least a dozen different worlds that they could tell. The Iais'Kai ships were massive in size, the smallest that they could see was equal in size to a LEONIDAS-IIA Class Strike Cruiser. There were thousands upon thousands of odd transports that carried the ground troops very similar to those Androcles, Dorian and Laren had fought on the Pralor Science station. They witnessed wave after wave of these ships attacking planets, hundreds of them obliterated by planetary defenses.

The ships of the Ardorm Kys gave as good as they got however, matching the Iais'Kai in firepower if not size. Their losses were heavy in the beginning for most of them were learning as they went, never having had to fight for their very survival. This is when the most telling aspect of the Lycavorian people came shining through.

Their ability to adapt.

Daniho was a masterful tactician it seemed, for he never made the same mistake twice. He cared for those who followed his orders and as the battles progressed, Daniho, Ashten and even Kelia became worshiped by both Onab and Lycavorian. Daniho may have been King, but Ashten and Kelia fought just as viciously alongside him. Kelia refused to leave the side of her brothers, and Lylor fought beside his beautiful wife and mate without question. The Kirek Pack became synonymous with the Mahanlo Pack through these first years. Where the Mahanlo Pack fought, the Kirek Pack was never very far away. Daniho Mahanlo was no fool and he used his people's skills and abilities to the best of his ability. Onab fought beside Lycavorian and vice versa, for there was no special consideration. All of them knew that their survival depended on each other. The Onab had a knack for commanding ships, almost an instinctual nature, which made them the logical choice to command the fleets, but Daniho insured that Lycavorians were among those who were in a position to learn from the Onab. The main shipyards at Cerath were turning out warships at an astounding rate once the Worker Drone program had been instituted, and soon after that the Avatars began to come online.

Cerath was the most heavily defended of their planets, something the Iais'Kai discovered in the first weeks of the war, much to their painful disappointment. Daniho was not about to leave their homeworld undefended for any reason. The entire planetary system had been turned into a no man's land as the Iais'Kai found out. Nearly four thousand massive planetary batteries protected Cerath, all of them shielded by the advanced regenerating shields developed within the last fifty years of preparation. When the Iais'Kai fleet arrived here first, intent on crushing their homeworld and making short work of their government and destroying all command and control, they were unprepared for what greeted them.

Nearly four thousand planetary batteries and almost five thousand Ardorm Kys ships met the Iais'Kai fleet when they entered the system. Ten thousand Iais'Kai ships boldly entered the Cerath system, the battle lasting for three straight days, until the Iais'Kai withdrew with barely two thousand ships left in their force. All but a few of the huge transports they had set upon the planet were destroyed before they ever made it into the upper atmosphere. Those that did land were met on the surface by overwhelming force. Daniho had been very clear in his orders, the Iais'Kai would offer no mercy or surrender based on their actions on Delum, and we would offer none either. It would be a fight to the death and the Lycavorians and Onab would take no chances or prisoners.

"...Suffered losses as well." Reva spoke once more as her Etheric form turned to face where Martin sat enthralled, Aricia and For'mya tucked between his legs. "We lost nearly half of the fleet guarding our home and a third of the defense batteries, but they ran. They were able to land fourteen transports on the surface, vile and savage warriors much like those you fought on the science station Androcles." Reva spoke looking at him now. Sadi was sitting lotus style between his legs, Ne'Veha and Carisia sitting on either side of her, their hands resting over the top of Andro's hand on her abdomen. Lu'ria and Sehri leaned against Andro's sides while Caliria sat tightly against Lu'ria.

"Thousands of them made it to the surface, but Daniho had forces ready for them. Their numbers were reduced by the planetary defenses and many were wounded but we spared no one. It was almost as if, they fought as if no one had ever stood up to them before. They were stunned at the ferociousness of our attacks on the ground and at how hard our people are to kill. Within a day, we had killed all those who landed, none survived to leave the areas where their ships landed and our population centers were never threatened."

"It was a great victory for us. The first of many in the coming years," Reva told them now. "But it would not last. Daniho and Ashten were suspicious to say the least. Others among our people were of the mind that our first victory on Cerath forced the Iais'Kai to rethink their invasion. They tried to bring others to their way of thinking. That we should reach out to the Iais'Kai and try to find out what it is they wanted. To make peace."

"I'm guessing that did not turn out well." Martin spoke softly now.

Reva shook her head. "No. Daniho was adamant, and within days we were rebuilding what we had lost while sending out scouts to follow those Iais'Kai ships that had left the system. They struck again within a month, utterly wiping out two Research colonies of substantial size, butchering over thirty-five thousand men, women and children and then we all knew as Daniho had suspected. It was far from over." Reva looked up at the images that were playing all across the ceiling and walls now. "They fortified these planets and gained a foothold in our space. That was all they needed. We did not know where they came from, where their home was, but they were very capable and organized. Pengot advised Daniho to strike the colonies and retake them quickly, as did many others. Daniho refused. He sensed something was not right and he was not about to leave Cerath undefended. Ashten and Kelia agreed, as did I. Three months later we discovered it was the correct course of action. One of our scout vessels was patrolling the outer edge of our system and they detected another fleet of Iais'Kai ships. A much larger fleet, and they were spreading out."

“The attack against Cerath was only a diversion.” Andro echoed his father’s thought just before he spoke the words.

Reva looked at him and her Etheric projection nodded. “Yes. They threw away hundreds of thousands of lives and thousands of ships attacking Cerath so that they could move larger forces into our space with no resistance.”

“How?” Andro asked softly. “Where did they come from Staania? A force that large had to have been detected as it was entering the quadrant.”

Reva nodded her head. “And they were.” She answered. “But the Iais’Kai, they had ships waiting for our scouts and they destroyed them before they could report to us. They then sent their own reports on our channels, which they obtained from the wreckage of the ships they destroyed.”

“That was smooth.” Martin spoke grudgingly. He looked at Reva. “I bet that never happened again.”

Reva nodded her head. “No, it did not. We instituted strict guidelines after we discovered what they had done.”

“What guidelines?” Martin was quick to ask.

Aricia was the one to pull on his arm. “Beloved, let her speak.” She admonished him lovingly.

Reva smiled as she saw Martin lean over and nuzzle Aricia’s cheek affectionately. “The details of the many battles fought through Vada Zin sarakoa vyen ils are well documented here and in the other Temples. As of today, you will have the ability to enter any of them to discover these things and so much more that I cannot cover with you right now. Any of you here, it will be encoded into your DNA, is being encoded as we speak. All of you will see a tattoo begin to take shape on your body, most often behind the shoulder as I have...” Reva turned and slipped the shoulder portion of her dress off her skin. Even the Etheric connection did not take away from the intricate detail or design of the tattoo. While not large in any way, the detailed image was unmistakable in its depiction. A large wolf with night black fur was shown standing on its hind legs and having dragon wings unfolded along its sides. The coloring was breathtaking and it almost seemed to bring the tattoo alive with its vibrancy. Reva released her dress and turned back fully to face Martin and the others.

“I do not know how it came to be, or who is responsible for its creation, all I know is that it will begin to appear on all of those present in this Temple and those connected to us within a few days. For those with our direct blood within them, it will appear much more quickly. And it will never go away. I have grown quite fond of it over the many years to be honest.” Reva turned and looked at Martin. “And it is something that the Onab foretold over four million years ago.”

Martin looked at her with huge eyes. “What?!!!”

Reva nodded her head slowly. “There is so much about the Onab that was known to only a few Martin. Daniho and Ashten among them. Things that you must know now.”

“How do... how do you know them staania?” Dorian asked.

“I was... I was the only one who Daniho and Ashten told.” Reva answered softly. “The Onab agreed to this arrangement so that I could... so that I could act in this manner through the many years to come. As the Harbinger of what was to come. To keep alive what they foresaw and to guide as much as I was able.”

“What they foresaw?” Martin asked softly. “Staania, you volunteered to... to act in this way? Why?”

Reva took a deep breath within the Etheric connection. “There were hundreds of battles during the Vada Zin sarakoa vyen ils; thousands of them if you include the smaller battles across many different planets. They are yours to read about as you will, but you must know the true events that took place in order to understand what we did, the mistakes that we made.”

“You were defending your homes!” For'mya interjected. “Your worlds! Those that you loved! That is no mistake!”

Reva smiled and shook her head. “No, it is not.” She agreed. “However, it is the reason the future was shaped as it was.”

“What do you mean?” For'mya pressed her.

“The Vada Zin sarakoa vyen ils changed us.” Reva spoke softly. “It changed all of us.”

“I don’t follow staania.” Martin spoke now. “War changes everyone by its very nature. It makes us different people because of what it forces us to do.”

Reva nodded her head. “This is true staaniketo.” She answered calling Martin grandson for the first time. It felt right to her as she spoke the words and it gave her no pause at all in speaking them. This only confirmed to her the truth of what Martin and Androcles had said to her a short while ago about blood. “Up until the Iais’Kai appeared we had never fought before.” Reva spoke. “Certainly there were disagreements between Alphas, between Packs, but never anything that caused us to... never anything that caused us to embrace the baser instincts of our people. It changed the Onab as well.”

“You are not making sense.” Martin told her.

Reva nodded her head. “As the war progressed, things were not going well for us at all.” She told them. “The Iais’Kai seemed to be everywhere, almost as if they had an unlimited supply of ships and troops. We had colonized nearly a hundred worlds when they first arrived, thriving centers of commerce and trade with dozens of other species in that quadrant of space. We had... the Iais’Kai went after them first. They utterly obliterated nine different species, over ten trillion lives lost, because of us. The Iais’Kai are cunning and shrewd. The others we had befriended abandoned us to save themselves. Some of them even turned on us and they thought by doing so they could survive, but they were wrong. The Iais’Kai came for them as well in time. By the war’s end we were alone. It was not until the war was near its end that we finally discovered the why of it.” Reva met Martin’s eyes. “We started the war Martin. We caused them to attack.”

“What?” Martin gasped.

“I have told you the Onab were technological geniuses.” Reva said.

“Yeah, so?” Martin hissed.

“A hundred and fifty years before the Iais’Kai first attacked, the Onab were finishing testing on what they called Portal Drives.” Reva told him. “Engines that could allow a ship to transverse from one quadrant to another in the blink of an eye. This could allow their ships to go almost anywhere in the universe instantly if they had the proper coordinates.”

Dynina’s eyes grew wide. “Like... like what we developed here on Lorenu!” She gasped. “We... the specifications were in the computers here! It took our scientists two thousand years to figure them out but...”

Reva nodded her head. “The plans for the Portal Drives were left here on purpose Dynina Mahanlo. They were left here by the Onab for those who followed you here to discover and begin to develop on your own.”

“They saw staania Dynina coming here?” Androcles asked now.

Reva nodded once more. “Yes.” She replied. “The Onab... The Onab had the gift of foresight. They saw things that would happen in the future. Not in any real order or sense but those who had this skill most often were artists and designers and they put their visions in paintings and drawings. Other scholars would attempt to put them in some semblance of direction but nothing was ever set in stone. The future never is.”

“So they... they saw us... one of them saw us sitting here and having this conversation?” Martin asked stunned.

Reva shook her head. “Nothing so exact staaniketo, no.” She replied. “They foresaw the end of the war, but not how. They foresaw we would meet the Darastrixi, but not how. They foresaw the Praetorians and Sumar’s rise to power but not how. They foresaw the end of the Pralor Empire at the hands of the Iais’Kai, but not how. They foresaw your birth Martin, and the birth of Androcles, Dorian and Laren, but not the how or when.”

“You said they made paintings and drawings.” Sadi spoke. “I don’t recognize anything on these walls or among the images we have seen Lady Reva.” She said.

Reva shook her head. “And you won’t dear Sadi. At least not here.” She replied. “All of the contents of the archives, paintings, drawings, even holo depictions, all of them were stored in one place. They have been hidden away for millennia. The last one, the last one is how I know that the children you carry within you are the reunification of our people.”

“Nilantha’s ship!” Martin exclaimed. “Anja said Nilantha told her that the history she carried was indispensable!”

“Your insight truly serves you well, Martin.” Reva told him. “She was chosen by Dadrien to be the guardian of this knowledge, yes.”

Martin looked at her. “Dadrien was a lot more than we think he was isn’t he?” He asked her.

Reva smiled warmly. “More than you can possibly imagine. As was your grandfather Sumar.” She said. She lifted her hand before Martin could continue. “Allow me to continue staaniketo. Your answers will come.”

Martin looked at Aricia and For'mya as they squeezed his arms and nodded their heads. He turned back to Reva. "Forgive me." He said.

Reva shook her head. "There is nothing to forgive." She told him. "The research was stopped on the engines after a particularly large phase of testing the Onab conducted. They actually stopped all research into them after this event."

"What event?" Dynina asked.

"The Onab arranged a test of three ships with these prototype engines." Reva spoke. "They were all remotely controlled and directed with the barest of systems installed in order for the ships to operate. They were given a set of specific coordinates in what we then thought was uncharted space. We were wrong."

Martin looked at her. "It wasn't uncharted was it?" He said softly. "It was Iais'Kai space."

Reva nodded slowly. "Yes." She answered.

"What happened?" Aricia asked.

"Two of the ships had catastrophic failures when they arrived at the set coordinates they were provided. They emerged in the middle of a radioactive nebula that we did not know was there." Reva told them painfully. "The ship's shields could not compensate for the radiation quickly enough and they exploded. What was the main travel corridor for Iais'Kai space; very near to what was their homeworld, traveled past this nebula."

"Oh boy..." Martin muttered softly. "This is not going to be good."

Reva shook her head. "No." She agreed with him. "The resulting explosions set off a chain reaction throughout the entire nebula. I don't know the scientific references to what happened, but the explosions caused the nebula to increase in size by a factor of one hundred. The lethality of the radiation within the nebula increased by a factor of a thousand. Within two days it had moved and engulfed four Iais'Kai worlds, including their homeworld."

"Carians!" Gorgo gasped in horror.

Reva nodded her head at Gorgo's reaction. "Yes." She spoke softly. "Every living thing on those four planets was killed within a week. Billions upon billions died."

"How do you know all this?" Jezima asked her.

"The third ship was undamaged. It had exited its jump outside the nebula and further away from the Iais'Kai homeworld." Reva answered. "When the Onab realized what had taken place they kept the third ship in position for as long as they could, taking sensor readings and trying to do anything they could think of to stop it. When they realized that nothing was going to survive and they could not stop the nebula from expanding, they brought the ship back." Reva looked at Martin. "What they did not realize was that an Iais'Kai ship detected them as they spooled up the Portal engines for the return trip. It was able to fire a tracking device of some sort onto the hull just before it jumped."

"They tracked the ship back to you." Andro said.

Reva nodded her head. "It took them a hundred and fifty years to come, but yes."

"The Onab knew all this could happen?" Martin asked.

Reva shook her head quickly. "Joa! Carians joa!" She exclaimed. "They assumed, we assumed that the planet was uninhabited from long range probe information. The probes were able to detect the nebula immediately upon entering the system but what we did not know was that the radiation from the nebula was something we had never seen before and it was affecting their long range sensors. The sensors did not give accurate information."

"A new form of radiation?" For'mya asked.

Reva nodded her head. "Something we had never seen before." She answered. "The Onab called it VerTech Radiation. Astonishingly lethal, and one hundred percent deadly to anything it touched."

"If you knew the nebula was there, why send the ships into it?" Aviel Em'mor asked now from where he sat beside Yokra and Robati.

"We didn't." Reva answered. "Or at least we thought we didn't. In the hundred years it took for us to plan and execute the test of the ships using the probe information, the Nebula moved."

"Moved?" Martin hissed. "Nebula's don't move! Do they?" He asked looking at For'mya who had more knowledge in this area and he knew it.

For'mya nodded her head. "It is very rare Martin duan enyla, but yes." She answered him. "We have one within Union space that moves half a light year every thousand years. It causes a beautiful light show for several weeks within the system from what I understand. Many of our astronomers make the pilgrimage to Nodon space to view it.”

“Wow!” Martin spoke genuinely surprised. “Learn something new every day.” He looked back to Reva. “And you didn’t confirm the information because everything you had told you it was a dead system.”

Reva nodded her head once more. “The explosions within the nebula limited any active sensor readings to very short range. The third test ship could not detect any life signs on their homeworld or the other planets. No Iais’Kai ships were detected either. The third ship exited outside the fringes of the nebula where its shields held against the radiation but the sensors were reduced to very short range as I said. When the two other ships exploded it cast a cloud out that engulfed the third ship but did no harm to its shields. The Iais’Kai ship must have been outside the edges of the nebula and this cloud and saw our ship visually.”

“How could that be possible?” Martin questioned.

“We only discovered all this after we captured a very high ranking Iais’Kai officer near the end of the war. One of the Iais’Kai Queen’s senior advisors.” Reva replied to the question. “No larger Iais’Kai warships were in that area because they were all supporting an invasion of a planet in another sector of their space. Only smaller planetary ships were in the area and that is what put the tracker on our third ship.”

“They viewed it as an attack.” Martin said softly.

Reva nodded once more. “Yes. And given their nature, their response was predictable. However, without our advanced technology it took them a hundred and fifty years to finally arrive and exact their retribution.”

“What happened?” Andro asked.

“You must understand; by this time, they were so close to defeating us.” Reva spoke and her words were obviously hard and pain filled. “The war had already... it had already claimed Daniho’s beloved wife and six of his children. Dalet Nulai was personally responsible for killing Daniho’s wife and three of his children. The youngest of them, two girls and a boy. And he did so in a vile and savage manner. If not for Ashten and Kelia, it would have broken him. In a small way I suppose it did.” Reva looked at the floor for a long moment but no one pressed her. Finally, she looked up and continued.

“Daniho ordered that the Iais’Kai officer be interrogated by any means necessary.” Reva said. “He wanted every bit of information that could be obtained from him. All of it.”

“What did he do?” Martin asked.

Reva met his eyes. “He had him tortured beyond imagination for days until the Iais’Kai broke.” She answered. “By this time, Daniho was barely holding on to his sanity. His beloved wife and mate, all but two of his children, they were gone. Ashten and Kelia and his two sons that remained were all that kept him going. He became obsessed with ending the war before any more of our people, any more of his family, before any more were taken from him. From all of us.” Reva’s words were spoken with great emotion and all of them could tell it weighed heavily on her mind. “By this time, our family, we were looked upon as saviors Martin. Daniho, Ashten and Kelia, even me, our people and the Onab viewed us as something more than we were. They would have done anything we asked of them, anything Daniho asked of them as their King.” Reva moved to one of the nearby benches and her Etheric form sat down. “We discovered that the Iais’Kai had brought nearly their entire industrial apparatus with them in their search to find us. They had conquered three planets twenty years before they came for us, in an area of space that we had not yet explored. That is why we did not discover how they were able to continue to make ships and fight as if they had endless supplies. Millions of their kind had come with this great fleet and they were now occupying three planets and providing the Iais’Kai Forces with all of the support they needed.” She looked at Martin.

“They essentially uprooted what remained of their entire species and came after us. We also discovered from this officer that they were preparing to send another large force to enter the battle from these planets. This would have made it possible to overrun what remained of us.”

“What did... what did Daniho do staania?” Eliani asked now after sitting silent for this entire time.

Reva opened her mouth to answer but her father beat her to it.

“He did the only thing he could do in order to insure their survival. He went after those planets.” Martin said softly.

Reva met his eyes and nodded her head slowly. “Yes.” She took a deep breath and stood up once more. “He had the Onab reactivate their Portal Drive archives and he equipped six ships with these prototype engines. With one enhancement.”

“Dark Matter Cores.” Androcles said softly.

Reva nodded once more. “Yes. Enormously dangerous and unstable and completely unsafe confined in a starship engine core. Even though the Onab knew of this energy source, they did not want to experiment with this type of power because of what it could do. The destruction it could wrought if misused.”

“What happened staania?” Andro asked now.

“Part of the information we got from this officer was where they would stage their forces for the final push. He sent one of these ships to where the Iais’Kai were staging this fleet.” Reva answered the question. “The ship only needed to be in the same sector as the fleet in order for it to do its damage. It was destroyed quickly by Iais’Kai warships, but in destroying it, they also detonated the Dark Matter Cores. And when combined with the Portal Drives, it created a mini Black Hole. The effect only lasted for several hours but in that time nearly ten thousand Iais’Kai ships and five million of their warriors were wiped out.”

“By the gods!” Kadeer Imuma muttered now.

“Another ship was sent to the largest of the worlds the Iais’Kai had conquered, and again, their warships destroyed it quickly. The result was the same. The world and everything on it died.” Reva told them. “We do not know how many were killed, but it was by far their largest science, construction and research center according to the officer we captured. These attacks caused Dalet Nulai to react just as Daniho had hoped.” Reva continued. “He came after us with everything that remained at his disposal here on Cerath.”

“But why draw him... why bring him here?” Dynina gasped now. “Why bring him to your world?”

Reva turned and looked at Martin then, his eyes watching her intently. He shifted on the floor and looked at Andro quickly before turning back to Reva. Aricia and the others took note of this and glanced between themselves before looking back to Martin.

“Beloved?” She asked softly.

Martin turned and looked at her, those azure colored eyes always able to penetrate to his very heart. He looked back to Reva. “Daniho baited him.” Martin spoke softly then. “By using those weapons he did the one thing that would make this Dalet Nulai blow his casket and do something stupid.”

“He made him come to you where you were the most powerful.” Androcles finished his father’s statement.

Reva nodded slowly. “We had built massive underground facilities on Cerath and that is where our people went.” She continued. “When Dalet arrived all that was waiting for him and his forces was death. We had turned the cities into death traps. Everything that could be used to kill them was used. Buildings, traps, mines. Daniho wasted nothing.” Her head turned to look at where Kadeer sat with his children and she smiled slightly at him. “And it was here that we were introduced to the Darastrixi people and our futures became intertwined.”

“What?” Aviel gasped aloud in disbelief. “How? My people... we never... we never ventured that far from our homeworld! Kadeer and those with him have come further than any of our science ships in our entire history! And we thought them destroyed and lost!”

Laren’s eyes went wide then and she reached for his arm. “Koppentotz Aviel!” She gasped aloud as she looked at him. “Wer Naushindtor Sjiri!”

Aviel glanced at her and then his eyes cut to where Sarlana had been sitting quietly, her eyes now closed as realization spread on her face. It was Andro who shifted on the floor and looked at her.

“Doraanar?” He asked gently.

Sarlana’s eyes opened slowly and she looked at him warmly. “Wer Naushindtor Sjiri, the Forbidden Scrolls. There have been rumors for hundreds of thousands of years that there is a series of Scrolls that exist that tell of a schism of our people. They have been sealed away in the Urkrisa Mamiss Archive vaults for nearly four million years. Very few among our people have actually read them, the Urkrisa Mamiss considers them to be extremely taboo, but they were unwilling to destroy them. Even the Doraanar were not allowed to read them. I... I just never made the connection until now.”

“You... you have read them Doraanar?” Laren asked in shock.

Sarlana shook her head. “Not the scrolls themselves, just the collection of writings of what many scholars believe was in them.”

“What connection Sarlana?” Martin asked.

“It is the reason the Darastrixi have always been so introverted Martin.” Sarlana told him meeting his eyes. “It is said that The Forbidden Scrolls tell the story of a large group of our people, scientists and researchers and military that wanted to leave our homeworld and explore the stars and what was held beyond what we knew. They date back to the very founding of the Darastrixi government. The UrIkrisa Mamiss forbid it of course, but after many years this group was able to steal several of our largest ships and leave our homeworld behind. The Forbidden Scrolls apparently tell us that they were lost many years later, their ship destroyed by something unknown. Apparently that is not the case.”

Laren’s dual colored blue eyes grew wide now and she looked at Sarlana. “Doraanar!” She gasped aloud. “They... they were the Onkmet Darastrixi!” She stammered in shock. “The Winter Dragons!”

Sarlana looked at her. “That isn’t possible Laren.” She spoke gently. She cut her eyes to Reva. “Is it?”

Reva nodded her head with a smile now. “Laren Ti’shara is correct in her words Sarlana.” She answered.

“How?” Aviel asked in disbelief now, stunned at this revelation. “How is that possible if...”

Reva held up her hand slowly. “Allow me to explain Aviel Em’mor. Cerath was nearly as large as Icarava and given the natural resistance to sensors that Darastrixi skin gives them, they were able to remain undetected even from us for millennia. They lived and they prospered in a region of the planet that we had no interest in and frankly we thought was unlivable.”

Martin looked at her. “Let me guess.” He said. “Impassable mountains and storms that could peel your skin off.”

Reva blinked several times as she looked at him. “How do...”

“We have seen it.” Andro spoke now before his father could answer. “Dorian, Laren and I staania. We have seen it within our minds ever since...”

“Ever since we were born.” Laren finished his statement.

Reva looked back to Martin. “They... they shared this with you?” She asked.

Martin nodded his head. “There is very little my children keep from me staania. You should know that.”

Reva nodded her head. “Yes. Of course.”

“You said the battle came here staania.” He spoke. “That this Iais’Kai fool Dalet Nulai that Andro killed, you said that he and Daniho fought here.”

Reva nodded now. “Yes. The Iais’Kai attacked in full force, but we were waiting for them. Once more they were able to land thousands of troops and running battles erupted across Cerath. The battle between Dalet Nulai and Daniho carried them up into these mountains while it raged above them. All around them. Dalet Nulai’s cronies saved his life that day and thought they had killed Daniho by pushing him off that mountain. It was a fall that would have killed him.”

“Dadrien saved him didn’t he staania?” Andro asked softly, a whisper of reverence that all of them detected. “He was there. On Cerath.”

Reva met his gaze and slowly nodded her head. “Dadrien’s father Arnor... but Dadrien was with him that day, yes. Young and so very powerful and full of vision.” Reva answered him. “Arnor snatched my son from the jaws of death only a hundred feet from crashing into the frozen ground beneath him. Daniho later told us that he had accepted his fate as he fell that day, and that he would join his beloved wife and children in the heavens. He told me that he saw Pria moments before Arnor grabbed him and that she was standing there holding the hands of his children and smiling at him, shaking her head. ‘It’s not your time my beloved.’ He told me she said to him. ‘It’s not your time.’ And then Arnor grabbed him as he fell.”

There large room was utterly silent as that shiver of disbelief and awe swept through them all. They could all sense it as they lifted their heads and Reva’s memories came into focus of that day and they saw the massive black and white dragon descending to the ground carrying Daniho’s limp body in its savage looking front talons. All around him were other dragons, many with two legged Darastrixi upon their backs, all of them landing in the clearing with hundreds of Lycavorians and Onab watching. They saw Reva run from the crowd even as others tried to hold her back, as Arnor gently lowered Daniho to the ground in front of her. Sarlana, Laren and Robati had tears rolling down their cheeks, Gorgo, Jezima, Dynina and Dasha clinging to one another on the verge of crying as well.

“Battles were still raging across the planet but in that one clearing time stood still.” Reva spoke as the images and Etheric memories showed them.

They watched Kelia and Ashten run up to their brother, Ashten embracing Daniho so hard it was painful, then both their arms were encircling their sister and pulling her to them. Finally, Daniho Mahanlo turned and looked with awe upon Arnor and the hundred other dragons and Darastrixi that had landed in the clearing. Dragons of similar color but varying sizes.

Daniho stepped away from his brother and sister slowly, moving closer to Arnor as he lowered that massive head to within inches of Daniho’s head and shoulders.

“Your spirit weeps with pain Daniho Mahanlo.” The deep gravelly voice came from Arnor’s muzzle shocking all the Lycavorian and Onab present.

“You... you can talk!” Daniho gasped in shocked and all of them saw the huge upper body move with gentle laughter.

“We have watched for many millennia from our hidden mountains where you would not go.” Arnor spoke once more. “We have seen your successes and your failures. We have seen your love and your anger. Both are formidable to behold Daniho Mahanlo.”

“You... you saved my life! Why?”

“You know why.” Arnor answered. “You saw her did you not? The one who holds your heart within her grasp. She spoke to you from the afterlife.”

“How do you... Pria...”

“We can see within. The Etheric realm is all encompassing Daniho Mahanlo. The spark within you, within your blood and your family cannot be denied any longer. It grows and it will become even stronger in the many millennia before you.” Arnor spoke gently moving his snout forward and pressing it to Daniho’s chest.

“What...?” Ashten had moved up beside his brother now, Kelia right behind him, none of them showing the same fear that the other Lycavorians and Onab showed openly on their faces.

“What do you mean?” Ashten asked.

“She was correct you know. It is not your time.” Arnor spoke. “My son has seen this as well.”

They watched the dragon beside him move closer now. Also black and white in color and slightly smaller in size, but still enormous in every way, even larger than Torma.

“I was not fast enough...” Dadrien began to speak and all of them recognized his voice now. “I tried to stop him... and my heart weeps with yours. I remained behind to ensure that your people got there before the animals and elements claimed their remains. For this failure I devote myself to you and your cause.”

Daniho looked at him with wide eyes. “What...?”

“The battles still rage across our world Daniho Mahanlo.” Arnor spoke once more. “It is past time for my kind to get involved. Their leader believes you dead, he is wounded but he will try to press this advantage now. I have fifty thousand Darastrixi warriors ready to assist you in defending what is our home as well. It is time that these vile creatures, these Iais’Kai, it is time that they felt the wrath of the Onkmet Darastrixi as well for invading our homeworld. We stand beside you and your people now Daniho Mahanlo. Let them feel our combined fury. Harness your pain and your anger young Daniho, grip it tightly, control the wrath that burns within you. Focus it, let it fuel you, but do not let it consume you.”

They all watched as Dadrien turned sideways and lowered his huge body completely to the ground. They saw what could only be a brown colored saddle uniquely strapped to his shoulders between the two large spikes that protruded from his shoulder blades where his wings connected to his body.

“A gift from those of my people who walk on two legs.” Dadrien spoke as he settled. “Allow me to carry you while we cleanse our world of this stain. It is not your time Daniho Mahanlo, just as your beloved mate told you. And one day, you will know happiness again.”

Daniho Mahanlo did not know it then, but Dadrien’s words would ring true. Now all he wanted was vengeance and he turned to snatch the helmet from a nearby Lycavorian before leaping up on the saddle and settling onto the shoulders of the massive beast before him without fear.

“Now it begins!” Arnor barked out before releasing a deafening trumpet into the skies and his legs launched him into the air. Dadrien followed his father’s actions and soon they were pulling away in to the sky as Reva and the others watched.

It was silent in the large room once more for a long, enduring moment and then Dorian's voice broke the silence.

“Saoi nubous sibfla!”

“...Waged across Cerath for another month.” Reva was speaking once more, all of them riveted to her words. “The Iais'Kai were unprepared for the ferocity of our defenses. The first attack on Cerath that Dalet Nulai led three years before this was a surprise. We were not ready for such a blatant move while our forces fought elsewhere. He was able to kill Daniho's mate Pria and his three youngest children before having to withdraw. This attack however, this attack we were ready for. He retreated to his ship, for the wounds Daniho had inflicted upon him were grave. He knew he wasn't safe there, and he had to withdraw out of the system and leave his forces behind to be slaughtered. And slaughter them we did.” Reva spoke, her voice filled with a perverse pride really. “We destroyed their ships, leaving their troops on the ground without support. For three weeks we fought pitched battles across Cerath, Dadrien and Daniho always at the front. Finally, only a few hundred were left, cornered in a valley that they could not escape. We were prepared to crush them all... but something happened.”

Martin Leonidas had risen to his feet while she talked and was walking among them, his head lifted up as he watched her memories in the Etheric projection that filled the ceiling. No one really knew what was going through his mind as he moved among all of them, for he said nothing, spoke no words and simply took it all in. Androcles might have known what his father was thinking, so much alike as they were, but he said nothing. Martin stopped beside Dorian and Laren now when Reva said that and he looked at her.

“He let them go.” Martin spoke softly. “Didn't he?”

Reva nodded her head now, smiling gently as she looked at him. “Yes.” She answered. “He ordered a ship be given to them, and he allowed them to leave. It was the only act of mercy he showed in those last days. Daniho ordered three of the remaining four Portal ships be used. They targeted the remainder of the Iais'Kai fleet forces and the next largest planet they had taken control of twenty years prior. After he did...” Reva stopped for a moment and took a deep breath. “After Daniho did this, he had Ashten and Kelia send a message to the Iais'Kai forces that remained on the final planet. Leave this area of space, leave every one of our planets that they had conquered, or he would unleash the Nyads rie Jorbhe upon them until all of them were dead.”

Gorgo and Dynina gasped in disbelief at this and Jezima glanced between them before pulling on Dynina's arm for a translation and Dynina looked at her. “What... what does phrase this mean Dynina?” She asked.

“The Hounds of Hell.” Dynina spoke softly. “To our people this... this phrase means...” Dynina couldn't bring herself to complete the meaning so Dasha spoke for her, and being the traditional Spartan woman that she was, it was very blunt.

“To our people... to unleash the Nyads rie Jorbhe... it is essentially a call to war that every Lycavorian will answer. Man, woman or child, no matter where they may be. It is... it is part of our blood. It says our enemies will die. No mercy or quarter will be shown for anyone, young or old. We will not pause, we will not stop, we will not relent. Every Lycavorian man, women and child, we will attack our enemies until none remain.” Dasha looked at Reva's image. “But it has never been used before in our history or the history of those on Lycavore. I studied that history thoroughly Reva; even Resumar did not utter this phrase though he had the most cause to after what the Coven had done. At least... at least until now.”

Reva nodded her head. “No. It has never been used thank the gods. Daniho did not have to go through with that order.”

“They left then staania?” Nara spoke from where she sat beside Deion. Jacina was beside her, holding tightly to her hand, the wolf changes within her already very evident to those in the Hall with them.

Reva nodded her head. “They did Nara.” She replied with another one of those gentle smiles. “Within a month they had abandoned all of our colonies that they had control of. What was left in their wake was horrific. Very few of our people survived and after ten thousand years, little remained of what we had built on them.”

“Did you follow them?” Martin asked.

Reva nodded once more. "For a time." She replied. "They abandoned the third planet they used as a staging ground, and what remained of their fleets and forces began the trek back to where they had come. It was then we discovered they were led by a Queen. It was she who gave the order to retreat even though Dalet and other military leaders wanted to continue the fight. A year after they left, Daniho sent a team to explore the world they had abandoned. What they found was... it was beyond imagination. Breeding cells unlike anything we had ever seen. Vile contraptions used for growing more of their kind. If we had explored the remains of the two planets we destroyed, we probably would have found the same thing." Reva rose to her feet once more, her Etheric image moving gracefully under the images flashing across the ceiling. She stopped next to where Martin still stood. "But what we found on that planet told Daniho one thing." She spoke looking at Martin.

Martin nodded his head slowly as he looked at her Etheric image. "It told him they would be back." He said softly causing everyone to look at him in surprise.

"Yes." Reva said just as softly.

"Wait!" Wayonn spoke now. "Martin how could you... how could you know that?"

Martin looked at him. "Because it is in my blood Wayonn." He said softly. "What... what they saw that day. I have... I have seen it too. Bits and pieces of it anyway."

Reva nodded her head. "No one knows what they discovered, an intact computer terminal perhaps, or something of that nature, but Daniho and Dadrien saw what was on it. The two of them had become inseparable over the weeks and months together, and they only shared what they found with Ashten, Kelia and Dadrien's father." Reva looked directly at Martin now, their dark eyes meeting and locking together. "Whatever they found Martin, it was the basis for what we did over the course of the next several millennia, and why it was purged from our history, from everyone's history. Over the course of time, since that day on that planet and what they found, only twelve individuals have ever held the knowledge of what they discovered. Only two remain that have it within them now."

Martin turned back to her. "Me and my first born son." Martin said softly.

Reva nodded once more. "It is within you, what they saw, within both of you, but you have just not pieced it all together. In time, you will."

"They never told you Lady Reva?" For'mya asked.

Reva shook her head turning to look at her. "No." She answered. "Given what I could see on their faces and in their eyes, a large part of me is glad that they did not."

"What happened then staania?" Androcles asked now as he gently leaned Sadi forward and rose to his feet now as well.

"Daniho called for a meeting. In this meeting were himself, Dadrien, Arnor, Ashten, Kelia and the two Onab who were looked to as their leaders." Reva told them as she moved back to the bench and her Etheric projection sat down once more. "They locked themselves away for nearly three weeks while everyone else began working to recover and restore what the war had taken from all of us." Reva took a deep breath within the Etheric projection. "When they came out of this meeting, Daniho waited a single day and then he addressed all of our people, across Cerath and what remained of our colonies and our ships."

Reva looked around at all of them. "It was at this time that he told us what would happen over the course of the next millennia. What he and the others had come to decide for all of us and our future. It was not an easy decision to come too, but for our future, it was what was needed in order for us to survive. Looking back, I believe Daniho and the others would agree that it was the wrong choice, but it is what they decided back then."

Reva looked up and let her eyes wander across the room once more, before settling on where Martin and Andro now stood beside one another. So tall and powerful, just like her sons when they were together. They exuded confidence and power and their auras projected this to all who could sense them, and even those who could not in different ways.

"Our people, we threw ourselves into these tasks that Daniho gave to us without question or doubt." Reva spoke. "Over the next two thousand years we built more ships. Great ships that could carry millions. As these ships were built, the Avatars that were among us evolved as well, to what you see today. Avi, Armen, others like them, they were built to be able to fly these huge ships on their own, for their passengers would be in suspended animation, much like you see my body now."

"For what?" Eliani asked.

“Daniho and the others made the decision that we needed to separate.” Reva told them. “It was not made lightly I assure you, but based on what they saw, to them, at the time, it was the only way to keep our people safe.”

“I don’t understand.” Dorian asked now. “You won.”

Reva looked at him. “Did we Dorian?” She asked. “Or did we just delay the inevitable.”

“The inevitable?” Jezima asked now.

“There is so much that we do not know about the Iais’Kai.” Reva spoke. “So much that we never discovered because we were fighting for our lives. These are some of the things Daniho and the others saw. This is what drove them.”

“Why not share it with everyone?” Aricia asked.

“Fear.” Martin answered for her. “Fear that it would cause many to give up hope.”

Reva nodded. “Yes.”

“So you made the decision to leave Cerath?” Laren asked.

Reva nodded again. “Yes. The Darastrixi and the Lycavorians. The Onab would remain with a contingent of Lycavorians and Darastrixi in order to maintain watch and as early warning against the Iais’Kai return. Things did not go as they had originally planned however because of unforeseen circumstances and adjustments were made to the original plans as time passed.” She held up her hand as more questions were about to come and everyone remained silent. “We sent out dozens of ships across the stars in search of a world where the Lycavorians could settle. It took three hundred and fifty years, even our propulsion technology, though far more advanced than any species in the galaxy at the time, was limited, but finally they discovered one.”

“Lycavore.” Dynina whispered the word.

Reva nodded her head. “Yes. It was a young world, lush, beautiful and perfectly suited for our people. It was also during this time that we discovered your people Wayonn.” Reva spoke looking at him and seeing his eyes go wide.

“My people!” He gasped. “But our history says that we did not encounter the Onab for a least another two and a half million years!”

Reva nodded her head. “I’m sure it does, however that is not the case. And nor is it the case with the Darastrixi.” She said turning to look at Aviel and Kadeer.

Aviel was less surprised than Wayonn at finding this out and he looked at Reva with calm eyes. “They came back didn’t they?” He asked softly. “That is why the Wer Naushindtor Sjiri has never been made public isn’t it?”

Reva nodded her head once more. “It took nearly six hundred years, but Arnor reached out and was finally able to strike a deal with the Urlkrisa Mamiss of that time. An agreement that allowed them to return to Icarava. The solitude of the continent they settled on when they returned was a large portion of the deal, but the Onkmet Darastrixi had been surviving and even thriving in a far less hospitable portion on Cerath so it was actually an upgrade for them in a sense. They were restricted to minimal interaction with the other breeds of Darastrixi and definitely no say in the government. Arnor told them of the Iais’Kai, he left nothing out, but it was not until the Darastrixi first encountered the Iais’Kai that they believed him. They had no choice but to turn to Arnor and use the knowledge that he had and the knowledge given to him by the Onab. And that is when Dadrien formed the Dahakoan.”

Aviel nodded his head. “They did not want the dissent from their rulings that Arnor and others would no doubt provide if given a seat within the Urlkrisa Mamiss.” He stated as his mind began to race. “I knew they... I suspected that... they knew all of this time! They knew!”

Reva nodded her head. “All of your leaders have known since Arnor and the Onkmet Darastrixi returned. Each new member was given a briefing and sworn to utter secrecy. You would have been required to take this same oath Aviel Em’morr, had events not led you to Laren and Ladur and then us.”

Aviel looked at her. “But why?” He gasped.

“The Urlkrisa Mamiss blamed Arnor for bringing the Iais’Kai to your doorstep.” Reva answered.

“That would have taken place regardless given everything you have told us this day!” Aviel exclaimed.

Reva nodded her head. “More than likely yes. But only Arnor, Dadrien and the Onkmet dragons knew what took place out there on Cerath. The Urlkrisa Mamiss did not want to believe or listen to them. Arnor told them to prepare but they ignored him. If not for Dadrien and his Dahakoan, the Darastrixi would not have survived the first conflict you had with them. And this is the only reason that they allowed Dadrien to begin searching for Dahakoan within the other breeds after the destruction of their island on Icarava by the volcano. He was the only survivor as you now know, and they needed him. They did not predict what effect he would have on their people as a whole and soon they lost control of him, if they ever truly had control of him to begin with.”

Reva saw Laren rise to her feet with Dorian and move up beside Androcles with Dorian beside her.

“They did not.” Laren spoke confidently.

Reva smiled at her. “I suspected not.” She said.

“You... you spoke with Arnor and Dadrien after they returned?” Kadeer asked.

Reva nodded her head. “Once I assumed this form... yes.” She replied. “The technology that the Onab built into the Sphere that appeared to you is quite astonishing. Far more advanced than anything existing today, even after as long as I have used it I still do not understand most of it. Even the Portal Drives that Dynina and her people discovered here on the computers and then built here on Lorenu, that was left for them to find and to refine and then build.”

“Staanian how did you...?” Martin began to ask.

“How did we know all this?” Reva finished his question.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes.”

“I told you the Onab had the gift of foresight.” Reva answered. “A tiny portion of their population, less than a thousand, had this gift. All of our time on Cerath and all they did was write and draw and paint what they saw. It wasn’t until after we had defeated the Iais’Kai that these Seers if you will, they came forward to Daniho, Ashten and Arnor. It was then that we took notice of what they had drawn and wrote. This is part of what they based their decisions on Martin. What they saw in these writings and drawings.”

“And all of these... these predictions came true?” Aricia asked softly.

Reva looked at her and nodded slowly. “They even foresaw how Daniho would end the war.” She stated. “They foresaw so many things and they either wrote it down or captured the images in their paintings and drawings.” She lifted her head once more and looked at Martin. “They foresaw your birth my staaniaketo, the return of the Mard Revik. They foresaw the birth of your firstborn son Androcles, Crown Prince and heir to our family’s legacy and the first of the three Heralds.” Reva looked at Androcles. “With blue eyes that could look through to your very soul. They foresaw the birth of Laren, of Dorian, so many things that have since altered the course of history in the past or have the power to shape the future as we move forward.”

“And my people Reva?” Wayonn asked now.

“The Pralor people were the key.” Reva told him. “The Seers had seen the coming of the Praetorians, the power they would wield, but they also foretold of their downfall. They saw the birth of Sumar...” She spoke turning to look at Jezima. “And the man he would grow into.”

“Sumar knew?” Jezima gasped.

Reva nodded her head. “When he became Chief Elder.” She answered. “Every Chief Elder of the Pralor people has known the entire history, or nearly all of it, and that is why each successive contact with the Pralor people that the Onab had, they gave them new pieces of technology that they could use and shape into something better. All of it was kept very secret, only a handful among any of the races knew what was truly happening.”

“You manipulated us.” Kadeer spoke now. “All of us.”

“Father!” Perlae exclaimed as she looked at her father with anger in her eyes.

Kadeer heard the inflection of her voice and he looked at her. “No Perlae... I do not mean that in a bad way.” He stated quickly turning back to Reva. “You... you used your knowledge to try and direct how things would take place. To make it easier for us to react events during our history.”

Reva nodded her head. “Not directly Kadeer, but you are correct.” She answered. “I cannot influence someone to go against their nature or what their minds tell them, but I can make sure that they see everything from different perspectives.”

“Like Tenne Ashten.” Deion spoke now. “This was his gift staania.”

Reva nodded again as she smiled at him. “Yes.”

“You could not see the results of our wars with the Scourge?” Wayonn asked.

Reva met his eyes and shook her head. “No. Nor those that they had with the Darastrixi. The Onab Seers could only see events and times in history and the future that did not include the Iais’Kai. For some reason their inherent darkness prevented the Onab Seers from seeing anything about them. They were able to deduce and translate from what they could see how events took place, or will take place.”

“Will take place?” Martin asked.

Reva nodded her head. “We are nearing the end of what the Seers saw Martin. What they could predict.”

“I don’t understand.” He pressed her.

“What is happening now, these are among the few events that the Onab predicted would take place.”

Reva told him. “There are perhaps another hundred years of predictions left. They were unable to continue their work on Cerath because of the supernova that destroyed Cerath and everyone left there.”

“They didn’t see that taking place?” For’mya asked now. “The end of their species?”

Reva shook her head. “It was not a naturally occurring event child.” She answered. “The supernova that destroyed Cerath was caused by the Iais’Kai For’mya. It was not something the Onab could prevent, even with all of their technology, and they did try in those last hours. This coincided within a few millennia with what Xaxon did during his experiments and...”

“Everything changed.” Martin said softly. “Because the Scourge changed.”

Reva looked at him and nodded her head. “Yes.”

“But why separate?” Andro asked now. “Why divide when you would have been stronger together.”

Reva shook her head this time. “I do not know what they saw Androcles.” She replied. “It was enough for Daniho and Ashten and the others to make their decisions as they did.”

“You say that my son and daughter, that our children...” Andro moved back to where Sadi still sat and placed his hand on her abdomen. “That they are the reunification of our people. What does this mean?”

“Just what I say.” Reva spoke.

“But Canth told me I would find the Lost Ones.” Martin said.

Reva nodded her head. “And you have Martin.” She answered him. “You found those left on Lycavore after the Black Day. Those of our people within the Beta Quadrant, and now the Echo Quadrant. All of the Seed missions that the Pralor Chief Elders before Sumar planned and executed.”

“That is why they used Lycavorians?” Aricia asked. “Because they had this knowledge within them.”

Reva nodded her head. “Ultimately, they believed they were prolonging what was to come. What they had been told was coming.”

“By spreading us across the stars?” Dynina hissed almost angrily now, though everyone could smell the frustration in her that was acting as anger.

Martin moved over to where she sat and squatted down behind her. He placed his hands on her shoulders as Gorgo and Dasha took her hands and all of them saw the tenseness leave her body. “So when you speak of reunification, what do you mean?” He asked Reva. “If all of our people moved to Lycavore then...”

“All of our people did not go to Lycavore Martin.” Reva answered him.

“What?” Martin asked now, his dark eyes becoming infinitely more interested and he rose back to his feet. “What do you mean?”

“By the wars end, the Lycavorian population had been reduced by a full third.” Reva explained. “The war had claimed so many lives. When the war started there were thirty-eight different Packs. There were fifteen packs remaining on Cerath when we finally chased the Iais’Kai away.”

“Gods!” Jezima gasped in horror even though she didn’t really know the number of Lycavorian lives that had been lost.

“Daniho, Ashten and Kelia knew that we could not remain together.” Reva spoke. “The Iais’Kai had somehow developed a way to track us when we were together because of the resonance we put off within the Etheric realm. It is how Dalet Nulai found Pria and Daniho’s children here on Cerath during his surprise attack. It hurts the Iais’Kai, but it also allows them to track someone with a strong enough Etheric resonance. This is why Sumar kept Tobia out of the fighting and nurtured her upbringing as he did. It is also why he made certain she survived the fall of the Pralor Empire before he was lost.”

“Wait!” Jezima exclaimed again. “Sumar... Sumar knew that we would fall?”

Reva met her eyes. “He knew they would attack again, yes.” She answered her. “It is why he chose to take those he could find with your Praetorian gene away to train them. So that they would not be discovered. He knew from Dadrien that he would discover where our people went after we left Cerath, and that our bloodlines would become one, but he did not know when. He thought he had more time and he certainly did not foresee what that nio ronnus Lorendo would do.”

Martin chuckled then even with the seriousness of everything they were learning about right now. “Anja is going to love you.” He muttered under his breath causing all of his children and the others of his family to grin.

Wayonn looked at her. “Then that he why he waited so long to merge with our people on Lycavore. He was... he was waiting for Sateia to find him.”

Reva nodded again. “Yes. Sumar was so much like Daniho and Ashten. As I have said before, his mind was like a maze, plans within plans. Lorendo’s fool actions only hastened what Sumar already had planned for himself and those Praetorians among his group. The vast majority of those he had chosen that carried this gene were with him on City Ship 41, but he had placed others among the different ships. One of those was discovered by your Isabella’s people Martin. Those you call vampires.” Reva waved her hand slightly. “I will not go over what you have already discovered on your own. That would be pointless. However, what Tobia can teach others, what she has passed on too many of you within the Etheric realm because of Deion and Mari’s union, this is the gift she has that can save so many.” Reva told them. “Sumar knew this and that is he why he kept Murano and her behind.”

“He knew they would come together?” Jezima said.

“And that they would have Mari.” Reva continued with a nod. “He did not foresee, and nor did the Onab, that Mari and Deion would come together as they did. They did not predict everything.” She turned to look at Sadi. “They did not foresee that it would be you who would carry the unification of our people my beautiful Sadi, only that it would come from somewhere within our bloodline.”

“Why does that matter?” Sadi asked.

Reva looked at Martin. “You still do not see it do you?” She asked softly.

“See what?” Martin asked her.

“You, Androcles, your pureblood children, even your children who are not pureblood, you are the closest to Daniho, Ashten and Kelia Martin.” Reva told him. “There is no purer Lycavorian blood anywhere in the universe. The measuring tool that your friend Eurin made was excellent, but as I have told you, even that cannot measure the pureness of the blood within you. There is no purer blood Martin, none. And every wolf alive, no matter where they might be, they will know this. The children that Sadi carries, your grandchildren, it will bring the bloodline of our family full circle.” Reva smiled. “She listens even now; I know you can feel her Androcles, Sadi. She has joined Anja and the others where they are. You can feel her within you for your son has already chosen her. Just as his father chose you Sadi, chose all of you, before he was ever born.”

Sadi’s head turned quickly to look up at Androcles with wide jungle green eyes, Carisia, Ne’Veha and the others staring at him with equal expressions of disbelief. “What?” She gasped.

Reva looked at Androcles who stood there sheepishly and she smiled. “You have not told them?” She asked.

Andro looked at her embarrassed. “Well... I suppose... in a manner of speaking...”

“A manner of speaking?” Reva asked with a smile and a small laugh as she shook her head. “You are too much like your father young Androcles.” She turned back to Sadi and the others. “The moment that he was conceived and became aware within Aricia’s womb he knew who he would love and search the galaxy for. He knew each of you. Just as his father knew each of the woman who would hold his very heart and soul in his hands the moment he entered this world.”

It was Aricia and For'mya’s turn to look at Martin with wide eyes as Sadi, Carisia, Ne’Veha, Caliria, Sehri and Lu'ria all were crowding around Androcles. “Beloved?” Aricia stammered.

“Huh?” Martin looked at her with his best I got caught with my hand in the cookie jar expression.

“Is this... is this true?” Aricia asked as she and For'mya rose to their feet.

“Well...” He stuttered.

“Martin Leonidas!” For'mya hissed.

“Jeez... do you know what Walter would have done to me if I told him that back then?” Martin exclaimed defensively. “He would have tossed me into the looney bin for sure! Walter... by the way... I know each and every woman that I will take as my wives and mates. I've seen them in my mind and my dreams." Martin rolled his eyes. "Yeah that would have gone over really well back then given what was going on."

Aricia and For'mya stepped up to him and threw their arms around him before he knew what was happening and they squeezed him harder than they had ever held him before, tears rolling down their cheeks. Reva smiled as she saw Sadi and Carisia holding Andro in much the same fashion, his arms wrapped around all six of his beautiful wives and mates, the eyes of their remaining family happy and moist.

"Do not discount the power of our blood." Reva spoke. "It will always know and it will always be correct. Just as it does now this very moment."

Andro finished kissing Lu'ria, running his hand through her satiny white hair and he looked at Reva. "You said staanio Daniho knew that you could not stay together. So what did they do?" Androcles asked.

Reva took a deep breath and looked at him. "They made a decision." She answered him. "That decision was to separate the remaining Packs."

"Separate how?" Martin asked her, holding Aricia and For'mya in his arms.

"He divided the remaining packs." Reva answered. "Of the fifteen that remained, twelve went with him and Ashten to Lycavore. The other three took to the stars with Kelia, Lylor and their six children to a location that only they knew of. With them they took the remainder of the Kirek Pack, the Arhtai Pack and the Nenay Pack. I was able to..." Reva stopped speaking for a moment and Martin looked at her intently.

"Staanian?" He asked seeing the pain on her face.

Reva looked up at him. "I do not know where they went, but I could feel my daughter within me. My grandchildren. That connection ceased over two million years ago, so I can only assume that they are gone. Just as Daniho and Ashten are gone. Now all I can feel is one."

"One?" Martin asked.

Reva nodded her head. "The one who your grandson has chosen." She replied. "She is with Anja and your family, and she must be protected Martin. At all costs. She is the last of my Kelia's bloodline. I do not know how this came to be, but I can feel her within me as surely as I feel all of you."

While they would never know for sure, and they really did not care, all of them assumed it was because of the Etheric power that swirled within the Hall of Knowledge. The male voice reached out within the Etheric realm for everyone to hear however.

"Staanian ehtas vada marden staanio Martin." (Grandmother speaks the truth)

Sadi's hands immediately dropped to her abdomen, her green eyes wide. "Achilles!" She gasped aloud.

"Pen ado tye ter un ehta medwaw. Vin cedaur ter vo un lae vada igord." The female voice followed instantly. (I told him not to speak mother. He would not listen to me the fool.)

"Neesia!" Carisia and Sehri gasped together.

Jezima's eyes went wide as did Robati's. "Ithquenti!" Robati rasped aloud.

Andro simply dropped his head and shook it slowly while his father and mothers looked at him sternly. "You named them!" Martin barked loudly. "You named them and didn't tell us that either!"

"Father I..."

"We're going to have a talk boy!" Martin snarled openly. "You and me! A really long talk!"

It was Eliani who burst out laughing at the expression on her brother's face. "Andro is so in trouble now!" She spoke which caused her brothers and sisters and Laren Ti'shara to join her in laughter while everyone else looked around confused. It served to truly break the veil of intensity within the temple and Reva could only smile as everyone relaxed even more.

Gorgo and Dasha had huge smiles on their face and they looked at Jezima and Dynina's confused expressions. Gorgo took their hands and they looked at her. "Dasha and I will relate to you at a later time of the significance of this." She spoke. "Needless to say, Androcles had his backside turned red far more times than his siblings."

Dasha nodded her head with a smile. "Usually because he was protecting or covering for one of them." She stated as she glanced at Eliani, who looked embarrassed, but could not stop laughing regardless.

Reva felt it then, the warmth of love and family as it filtered even more within the temple itself. No matter how dire things became, this family would always find something to laugh about in order to relieve the tension and despair. That too was in their blood. Martin looked at Reva after a long moment.

"How is that possible staanian?" Martin finally asked her.

Reva's Etheric image faced him. "I do not know." She replied honestly. "Just as I cannot explain how a member of the Kirek Pack found their way to Lycavore."

"Lycavore?" Martin asked. "You just said they went somewhere else."

Reva nodded. "They did... but the Alpha that has claimed your daughter... Jomann burns with the blood of the Kirek Pack."

"Me!" Jomann hissed as Eliani's head whipped around to look at him in shock.

"Oh yes." Reva spoke. "It is there within you as surely as all of you sit here now." She shook her head once more. "This must have been Daniho and Ashten's doing. Somehow... they must have done this, but I do not know how. I will have to review the journals when we are finished here."

"Why?" Martin asked.

"The Kirek Pack has always been aligned with the Mahanlo Pack. Throughout our entire history they have been beside us, not as underlings, but as equals and guardians to our bloodline through history." Reva explained. "Daniho and Ashten must have known that they needed a member of the Kirek Pack to come with them, and in doing so they..." Reva stopped talking and looked at Androcles. Her eyes moved between Andro and Jomann and realization dawned on her. "It stands before me and I did not even see it." She spoke. "They knew the role you would play Jomann Kirek. They knew what your purpose was to be. The Shield to Androcles' sword."

Jomann looked at her with wide eyes. "That is what... that is what Deia told me in the rubble of that Senate building." He gasped. "Not those words, but the meaning was the same, at least for her."

Reva nodded her head. "No doubt." She spoke. "Deia knows many things that no one else does. She has a knack for remembering things that few people would even pick up on. It is a gift she has had since she was a child. Why do you think it was she who first went to Resumar and told him of the Lunmai that Eliani was entering? She is a very resourceful and supremely intelligent woman. Never underestimate what she is capable of."

"I don't understand something..." Wayonn spoke up now as he rose to his feet. "If our people were so very advanced... why then, when we crashed on Lycavore as Pralors, why did we not see any signs of this Reva. We are talking about millions of years here, why did they not build great cities and ships after arriving on Lycavore?"

Reva shook her head. "The decision was made before we left Cerath." She answered. "When they reached Lycavore they would resort to the core of our instincts and upbringing. The ships that brought them to Lycavore were remotely piloted into the system's sun after everyone had gone to the surface. Very little advanced technology was kept and it was tightly controlled. Through the millennia Daniho and Ashten saw to it that this was also destroyed. Since the Iais'Kai were so interested in technology, Daniho and Ashten wanted nothing that would draw the Iais'Kai to them. They resorted to the old ways. This decision did not sit well with a few of the Packs that went to Lycavore with us. They wanted to begin building new cities and personal amenities and modern advances but Daniho and Ashten refused." Reva looked at him. "I could only watch as the schism began. Daniho and Ashten were the only ones who knew where this technology was hidden and they told no one. No one could challenge Daniho physically for rule of the Packs, none alive were able to defeat him in open combat and they knew it, and Ashten stood beside his brother always. The Mahanlo Pack was still the largest among them and they could not challenge us for rule because none would side against us. Daniho had ruled for over twenty thousand years by now and he had saved our people from certain death numerous times. Our people loved him. Loved them. The vast majority of our people understood the why of these decisions and they did not care. They had peace once more, on a beautiful new world and they had a future to build and nurture. Of the twelve Packs that went to Lycavore, four of them broke away within a thousand years of arriving on Lycavore and they formed their own government on another continent." Reva took a deep breath. "Well... Daniho forced them to break away really."

"Why?" Martin asked, now once more fully enthralled with what she was telling them.

All of them were actually. Sadi had returned to sitting on the floor lotus style, this time however, Eliani, Nara, Lisisa, Arduri, Sheva and Onera had moved closer to her, crowding around Ne'Veha, Carisia, Sehri, Caliria and Lu'ria. Androcles remained standing as well, while Wayonn and Jomann had moved closer to where Aviel stood. Yokra was standing now as well, Robati just in front of him, while along the wall of the Hall of Knowledge, Kasdan and Dalis stood beside one another silently, taking it all in. Neither of them had spoken so far, so amazed at what was going on that they could not find the words. Both of these men, from two very different backgrounds, were scholars and scientists and they were experiencing a part of history that had been stricken from all known texts of every species that was represented here this day. It was, to put it mildly, a ground shaking influx of knowledge that they were now privy too. Knowledge that could very well change the face of the universe as they knew it.

“They hatched a fool plan to kidnap Ashten and force Daniho to give them the modern technology that did remain.” Reva spoke. “They did not know of the connection between my sons because they were twins. Their Etheric connection was very powerful and while Ashten was severely injured, Daniho put down this revolt harshly and without question. He was... he was without mercy for they had injured his brother. In the end he gave them the choice to relocate to another continent or he would see all of them executed for their actions. They chose exile.”

“The Chetak Pack?” Martin hissed and everyone could hear the hatred in his voice.

Reva nodded her head. “They were the masterminds of it, but they allowed the others to take the fall. They did not find this out for many years and by then it was too late to banish them as well.”

“They should have!” Martin snarled causing Aricia to reach out and take his hand and squeeze it. Most of those in the Temple knew why the vitriol was in Martin’s voice at the mention of this name, but Jezima and others did not. Jezima looked at Gorgo and Dasha with many questions in her eyes.

“A conversation for another time.” Gorgo told her in a soft whisper.

“Regardless...” Reva spoke again. “Once the Packs were banished... life became simple again and moved on. And Arnor’s words to Daniho came true. Daniho found happiness again. A beautiful young female wolf from the Urnal Pack, with jet black hair and eyes of violet that could stop your heart.” Reva smiled then as she remembered. “Visha knew she could never replace Pria in Daniho’s heart and she did not try, but she was strong and proud and she loved my son without doubt. Daniho came to love her deeply as well and in time they found happiness together. She gave him five proud and beautiful children, three boys and two girls, and his sons with Pria that had survived the war and come with him to Lycavore, they looked over them and their step mother with ruthless and savage protectiveness. Just as their father did.”

Reva rose once more and began pacing the small area around her.

“Things did not go as they had planned however.” Reva continued. “As the years passed by, our people began to fall back onto our baser and feral instincts. Daniho and Ashten tried to counter this but they were... they were stopped.”

Martin’s head tilted to the side. “Stopped how?”

Reva turned and met his eyes. “By those who thought if they could kill my sons, they would end our bloodline.” She took a deep breath once more. “It happened over the course of many centuries, the plans within the plans, but eventually they struck. In one fell swoop they struck. My sons, their wives and mates, my grandchildren, all of them were assassinated over a three-day period. All but one of them.”

“Carians!” Dynina exclaimed softly as her hand went to her chest in shock.

Reva’s eyes never left Martin as she spoke.

“They were unprepared for the tenacity of the Mahanlo Pack however, and they paid the ultimate price for their betrayal.” She spoke firmly. “I... I wept for days, unable to do anything but watch and I cursed myself for agreeing to allow myself to become what I am now.”

“Staania...?” Androcles began as he stepped towards her.

Reva shook her head and looked at him with a smile. “I made peace with these events and myself a long time ago staaniaketo. I rededicated myself to what I had become, especially after I discovered who had survived.”

“What do you mean?” Martin asked her.

Reva smiled at him once more. “A grandson of Daniho had survived. His youngest son with Visha. His name was Arnor, named in honor of Dadrien’s father. He had taken a young mate that was a granddaughter to Ashten. A beautiful blond wolf with fire in her eyes. This was their only child before the Purge. So you see, in him, in this wolf that survived was the essence of both Daniho and Ashten. The perfect combination of each of them.”

“He was... he was the personification of both staanio Daniho and Ashten.” Andro spoke almost reverently.

Reva nodded her head. “Yes.” She said. “Daniho’s instinctive nature and Ashten’s calm intelligence. So while our enemies thought to destroy our Pack, our family, they only succeeded in bringing out the best of us. The Mahanlo Pack protected him viciously for many thousands of years, looking to him for guidance and leadership, while he learned all he could and he studied the journals of his grandfathers and their history.”

“He never took over the Packs?” Martin asked.

Reva shook her head. “No. However, he paved the way for the future, as was his intended purpose.”

“In what way?”

Reva’s eyes fell on Dynina then and her face was bright and happy. “He found a striking young female he took as his mate. A very young, female wolf with black hair and surreal and beautiful amethyst eyes. And a stubborn streak within her that stretched forever.” She said seeing Dynina’s eyes grow wider as she reached for and gripped Gorgo’s hand tightly. “She is a proud and strong female who did not hesitate when this wolf claimed her, even though he was a hundred thousand years older than her. He loved her insanely and she loved him just as deeply.”

Dynina’s eyes flooded with tears now. “Makeb!” She whimpered loudly as Gorgo and Dasha reached for her in comfort. “You are speaking of my Makeb!”

Reva nodded her head. “Your Makeb, yes.” She said softly. “Into you he poured all of his love. He knew what his fate would be Dynina, and so into you he poured everything that was our family. Into your daughters he poured everything that was our family. Our bloodline. He knew he did not have the strength to lead as his grandfathers did, he did not have it within him, but in you my dear Dynina, in you he saw the future.”

“He...” Dynina stammered. “He never told me.” She rasped. “I never knew who or... or where he came from. He just appeared one day in the city. There were... there were whispers that he was Mahanlo and he was feared, but I did not care. He was... he was beautiful to me.” Dynina buried her head in Gorgo’s chest now as she wept softly. “He... he never told me everything. I knew he was... he was keeping things from me. Things from deep within his heart and mind but he... whenever I asked him he would... he would just love me until I could not think of anything else. He did this on purpose?”

Reva nodded her head. “Yes, but it was not because he did not love you my dear Dynina. He did not want you to have the burden of his knowledge at that time. He knew it would come to you one day, the day that it was you who would guide the return of the Mard Revik, this day Dynina; but not then, for it would have weakened you for what lay ahead. And no doubt he would have wondered why you have never taken another husband and mate in all these years since his passing.”

Dynina shook her head instantly. “I could... I could never love another as I loved him.” She said as fresh tears clouded her eyes. “Not as I loved him.”

Reva smiled gently. “Oh my child Dynina... you stand with Gorgo, Dasha and Jezima as the Four Matriarchs of our bloodline now. Vada Rebe Issyera. Those who have had a hand in bringing us to this point in time. The rise of the Mard Revik and the Tarivuos of our future. Just as the Onab Seers foresaw it. You will find love again one day Dynina. It will hit you from the most unexpected of places and it will take your breath away. Just as it did for Gorgo and as it will for Dasha and Jezima in the years to come.”

Dynina looked at her with wide eyes. “How... how do you know this?” She gasped as Dasha and Jezima also looked at her with wide, stunned eyes.

Reva shrugged her slim shoulders in the Etheric projection. “As it has been for our family since the day Daniho and Ashten were born and then Daniho became King... destiny and fate will always find a way. It will not be denied.” She said softly. Reva stood up slowly once more and raised her hand. “There is much still for you to discover, and you will, but right now... now it is time for you to realize why this Temple was built here.”

Martin looked at her. “What do you mean staania?”

“This Temple has a dual purpose, which is why the Onab built it here.” Reva answered as her Etheric image moved slowly to where a large vase sat on a podium next to one of the larger flowered bushes. “Beneath this Temple are vaults.”

Dynina came to her feet now. “We... we never detected anything but this level.” She said quickly.

Reva nodded her head. “And you would not have detected them. They are hidden by a very advanced Etheric shield that only four people in the entire universe can open. And they must open them together.” Reva looked at Martin. “You, Androcles, Laren and Dorian.” She told him. “Only the four of you can open them Martin.”

“What’s in them?” Martin asked her as he moved closer to where her image stood.

Reva met her eyes. “Your birthright my staaniaketo.” She replied calmly. She turned her head to where Androcles had moved beside Laren and Dorian. “And the birthright of the future Dahakoan.”

“How did... how did we become like we are staania Reva?” Laren asked her now.

Laren Ti'shara had fully accepted what and who she was. She was Darastrixi yes, but she was also Lycavorian, and the Lycavorian blood that flowed within her made her part of this family without doubt or hesitation. She embraced that, did not distrust that fact, but the why of it had always escaped her. Escaped them all.

Reva smiled warmly as she looked at Laren. “The Onab Seers saw so many things Laren Ti'shara. They saw the coming of your Soul Father and they saw the birth of each one of you as it happened. You are wondering, each of you, you are wondering if the Onab had something to do with the Lycavorian blood that flows within you, the Darastrixi blood within Androcles and Dorian? A mix of blood that should not be possible.” Reva shook her head. “No.”

“Then how?” Dorian asked now.

Reva looked at him. “Evolution?” She answered. “A gift from whatever gods inhabit our universe perhaps?” She spoke. “Does it matter now? You are what you are Dorian Leonidas.”

“And what are we staania?” Androcles asked now.

Reva waved her right hand beside the vase on the podium and all of them began to hear the deep rumbling. All of them looked down at the floor tile beneath them as the large crack appeared in the once seamless floor. All of them scrambled quickly to step off of the large tile as it began to separate and reveal a winding staircase into a very dimly lit circular tunnel downward. The Etheric shield that covered the staircase was very evident as it shone with a light blue, almost glowing resonance.

“What are you Androcles?” Reva spoke once more. “You are the future. The four of you are the future. All of us in this room are the future. We only have to choose to embrace it.” Reva waved her hand once more, this time indicating that each of them should step onto the Etheric shield that covered the winding stairwell down.

Andro turned and looked at Sadi, meeting her jungle green eyes. Sadi dropped one hand to her abdomen, the other holding tightly to Ne'Veha's hand and she nodded her head. Carisia stepped closer to her on the right, Sadi's hand going to grip hers, and she nodded as well. Andro touched the eyes of all of his wives and mates, and in turn they moved into a tightly packed group, all of them touching one another, and Caliria nodded, followed by Lu'ria and Ne'Veha and finally by Sehri. Andro turned back to look at the floor and he took the first step onto the Etheric dais.

Laren was next as she looked at her mother and father watching her, Robati with tears flowing down her cheeks. Yokra took a deep breath and nodded his head, his chest swelling with pride and love unlike any time in his life before this moment. Laren turned back and saw Andro holding out his hand for her and she stepped forward, taking that hand without hesitation and moving up beside him.

“El vada falyne.” Laren spoke softly looking at Andro with those amazing dual colored blue eyes and smiling brightly. (For the future)

Andro turned his head and looked at his brother. “Fervon?” He asked softly.

Dorian turned and kissed Sheva hard on the lips, pulling her tightly to him. He then did the same with Onera, placing an equally blistering kiss upon her lips. They clung to him for a few seconds and then he turned and took Laren's hand, stepping onto the dais beside her as Sheva and Onera pulled each other tight.

Andro looked at his father then, holding out his other hand while Laren stretched out her free hand as well. “Medwan?” Andro spoke. “Magar tanor vada vochan medwan.” (Never fear the unknown father)

Martin met his son's eyes. “El forn arne pera vada panuro forn gur aley.” (For you don't know the wonders you will miss)

Martin turned and looked at Aricia and For'mya, each of them holding the other and he saw both of them nod. He felt each of his wives and mates within him, each projecting their love for him within their special bond. Martin Leonidas turned back and stepped forward with no hesitation and took Andro and Laren's hands, completing the circle on the Etheric dais.

Reva's face within the Etheric projection beamed proudly and she lowered her head in an almost reverent nature.

“For sy pinnos una ami.” She spoke softly. (And so does it begin)

Everyone saw the Etheric dais begin to glow brighter and then fingers of Etheric power began to reach out and up, engulfing all four of them as they held hands tightly. None of them wavered in the least, their faces set in determination as the Etheric fingers moved higher up their frames until in encompassed their entire bodies. In a brilliant flash of bluish white Etheric light, the dais flared quickly and then all four of them vanished from sight to the gasps of Aricia and the others gathered.

The Etheric shield over the staircase flickered, disappeared and then reappeared even brighter than before.

“Reva!” Aricia almost shouted.

Reva lifted her head and smiled at them. “We must wait for them outside.” She spoke the words.

“Where... where are they? Where did they go!” Dynina gasped now.

Reva’s smile grew wider. “They have gone where no one else could.” She replied. “Do not worry, they will return to us when it is complete. That is why we must wait outside.”

“Why?” Sadi challenged her. “When what is complete?”

Aricia opened her mouth to speak once more when Isheeni’s voice exploded in her head. Aricia my sister! Something is happening! Torma is... Elynth... they are...!

Isheeni!

Aurith! For'mya barked out for her Bonded sister.

For'mya come quick! Aurith responded. Something is happening to father and Elynth. To Ryner and Ladur too! Hurry!

Aricia and For'mya didn’t hesitate for a second and they broke for the doors with everyone else sprinting to keep up with them. The Etheric projection of Reva remained behind as the Hall of Knowledge emptied quickly. Her head looked around the Hall slowly, the smile never leaving her face and finally she nodded her head once.

“My duty is almost done my beautiful children.” She whispered to no one in particular. “And then I will join you in the beyond.”

Reva’s head snapped up when the voice answered her. Martin’s voice, so deep and so very commanding.

“No grandmother.” The voice echoed around the room. “It is not your time. You have much to do still. So much to teach and so much to savor. It is not your time.”

Reva’s eyes were wide as she heard the voice, felt it course through her, and then in a simple flash of light her Etheric projection vanished and the Sphere returned. And then it darted for the entrance into the Temple, following the others.

Martin, Androcles, Laren and Dorian looked around the massive room they now stood within, Laren holding tightly to Dorian’s hand. It was dark within the room, but as soon as they appeared they watched as lights began to come on from the ceiling, easily a thousand feet above them, and from the smooth steel walls that surrounded them. They were in the center of the room, an arena really, with the smooth walls a hundred yards from where they stood. They could see six doors all around them exiting from the arena they stood in, all of them leading in different directions.

“Father what was that?” Dorian asked.

Martin looked at his youngest son. “I have no idea.” He replied. “A teleporter of some sort. It brought us here. Wherever here is.”

“An Etheric teleporter?” Andro asked. “That would be new.”

All of them heard the footfalls then and they turned to one door in particular as the shadow approached and took shape into a man. A man of medium height, but well-built and with dark brown hair.

“No scent.” Andro spoke softly.

Martin nodded his head and moved closer to his son. “Something tells me this is not a man.” He said.

The figure strode up to within five feet of them and stopped. “Welcome.” He spoke his voice deep but warm. “Welcome to The Circle.”

Andro stepped closer as he realized that this figure was similar to Armen in many ways, just not as tall or broad. “You are an Avatar!” He gasped.

The Avatar nodded his head. “I am Lord Androcles.” He replied.

“I am... I am no Lord.” Andro spat.

“You are the direct descendants of Lord Daniho, Lord Ashten and Lady Kelia.” The Avatar spoke. “The first of the Royal Bloodline. As their descendants, the title is required.” He moved closer now. “I am Chiron, Avatar of The Circle and Keeper of the Temple. I have been waiting for a very long time for you to finally arrive.”

“You have been waiting for us?” Laren gasped.

“Indeed Lady Laren.” Chiron answered. “For two million, three hundred and fourteen thousand, two hundred and nineteen days, and fourteen point two hours.” Chiron told them. “Though I no longer keep exact time. Lady Reva told me it was unnerving for her so I ceased this practice.”

“*Staan*ia knows about you?” Martin asked him.

Chiron nodded her head. “Of course... there is very little about this facility that your grandmother does not know.” He lifted his hand and waved it around. “This portion however, this portion of the Temple she was unable to access. This portion of the facility is under my direct care.”

“You have been... you have been up there then?” Dorian asked pointing up towards the ceiling.

Chiron nodded his head. “Many times, yes.” He answered.

“Where are we?” Martin asked.

“Currently you are standing in the entrance arena to The Circle.” Chiron answered him. “Exactly nine point two kilometers under the Temple.”

“Nine kilometers underground!” Dorian hissed loudly. “Jeez... I’m really glad I’m not claustrophobic!” He glanced at Andro. “I’m not right *fer*von?” He asked.

“I certainly hope not.” Andro answered with a slight grin, knowing the question was his brother’s way of dealing with the nervousness inside him and attempting to put all of them at ease.

Martin put his hand on Dorian’s shoulder as he moved closer to Chiron. “What is The Circle?” He asked.

“The Circle is the training facility for the Temple above.” Chiron answered him. “It encompasses four square kilometers under the Temple.”

“Training facility?” Martin pressed him. “For what? For who?”

Chiron smiled then. “The future.” He replied. “I was placed here by the Onab in order to facilitate and assist Lady Reva as we waited for you to arrive. I am also charged with the total upkeep and the defense of Lorenu and this Temple. There are three thousand Worker Drones, as you call them, assigned to this facility and the Temple above.”

“The defense?” Dorian asked him.

Chiron nodded his head. “Lady Dynina and those who follow her have not and never will discover the defenses of this planet and the Temple unless I activate them. However, through the years they have built many formidable additions to the defense grid I already have in place and we are quite impenetrable, even if the Ion Nebula fails” He told them.

“Wait!” Andro rasped. “The Nebula! You are controlling the Nebula?”

Chiron nodded his head. “It is our first and most valuable line of defense.” He answered.

“How?” Laren asked. “How do you control a Nebula?”

“I can answer whatever questions you might have, but now you are here to claim your birthrights. I have been waiting for this day. Follow me.” He turned instantly and began to walk towards the door he had entered through.

Andro looked at his father and Martin shrugged his shoulders. “I guess we follow him.” He said.

They moved quickly to keep up with him, falling in behind his even gait as they walked.

“Why do you look different from...” Dorian began to ask.

“From Avi and Armen?” Chiron finished the question.

“You know about them?” Andro asked surprised.

Chiron nodded his head. “Of course.” He replied. “During his stay here, Lord Sumar added many terawatts of information to our databanks. Avi and Armen are Third Generation Avatars, designed to monitor and control Pralor warships they were assigned to. Warships that were designed to be partially crewed by those of your species Lady Laren, which is why many of them are exceptionally large. I understand you have begun to manufacture your own ships in this way King Leonidas?"

"What?" Laren gasped. "My... my people were meant to fight with the Pralor people?"

Chiron nodded his head. "That was the ultimate goal yes, however, unexplained events kept this from happening when it was supposed to and Dadrien had to significantly alter our plans."

"You... you know Dadrien too?" Andro asked.

Chiron stopped and looked at him. "Lord Sumar spent considerable time here before he passed on. Dadrien and he conversed here on many occasions afterwards. There are seventeen thousand Etheric nodes within the Temple and this facility and they are meant to channel and focus all Etheric power. It allows for many things that cannot be achieved without a substantial amount of raw energy. This we have since it comes from this planet's core."

"You don't speak like Avi and Armen." Martin said. "Why?"

"I am a First Generation Avatar." Chiron answered. "We were built initially in the image of the Lycavorians on Cerath and some of us in the image of the Onab. We were designed to be almost exactly like them for the purpose of interaction and cohabitation. The Onab did not foresee that such closeness and interaction would eventually grant all First Generation Avatars sentient life status and when they discovered it, they embraced it and so did the Lycavorians, unlike how so many other species would react." Chiron looked at Martin. "You have done this with Avi and Armen have you not? And they continue to evolve as they are exposed to so many different events. I predict that soon enough they will become Second Generation Avatars."

"They are more than just machines." Martin answered him. "I'm discovering just how much as time passes."

Chiron nodded his head as he began to walk again. "And this is why I know you are the descendants of Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten. They too embraced this ideal and they treasured the Avatars that were assigned to them. As did Lord Sumar with Avi, as you call him now. I was hesitant at first when the Onab gave the Pralor people the knowledge on how to build my kind, but Lord Sumar and a few others relieved this concern of mine with their actions."

"This... this Circle place is really huge." Dorian commented as they turned a corner and continued down another corridor, the ceiling lights coming on as they walked. When the corridors were fully lit they could see doorways and other corridors that led off into different portions of the facility.

Chiron nodded his head. "Four point four square kilometers in size, with another three levels beneath this one." He answered. "It will be able to serve the new Praetorians well when they begin arriving."

Martin stopped walking now. "How do you know about that?" He asked.

Chiron stopped also and turned to look at him. "You have Elder Shiria among you now." He replied. "This was listed as one of her duties when she left Pralor space. To search for and then discover new Praetorians. They would then be brought here to train. Lord Sumar was very specific in his directions."

"Grandfather Sumar knew about Shiria?" Andro asked with wide eyes.

Chiron shook his head. "Not her specifically, no. Only that someone would be guided to the Alpha Quadrant with this goal in mind." He replied. "Since we have monitored intercepts from the Alpha Quadrant for some time, I only determined what Elder Shiria's mission was after her actions on the Kavalian homeworld were made public." Chiron turned and began walking once more and they fell in behind him. "Lord Sumar knew that the new Praetorians would need a secure facility to begin training those that Elder Shiria finds, and because of our defenses, this facility was the most logical choice. Lord Sumar knew that and he made certain arrangements to facilitate that when the time came."

"Where are we going?" Laren asked now.

They came to the end of the corridor in front of a set of double steel gray door. The corridor branched right and left but the double doors in front of them appeared sealed tight. Chiron turned to face them. "We are here." He answered.

"And where exactly is here?" Martin questioned.

Chiron motioned to the double doors. "Each of you will need to place your hands on the doors in order for them to open. It must be done together. The biometric sensors will confirm your identity and the doors will open to an elevator. Step onto the elevator and it will take you to The Sanctum."

“The Sanctum?” Andro asked him.

Chiron nodded his head. “I had much time to come up with different names. After a million years simply referring to them by their number was tedious.” He replied. “Lady Reva approved.”

“And then what?” Martin asked him.

Chiron smiled then. “The future of course.” He spoke motioning with his hand to the door and stepping out of the way. “Please...”

Andro looked at his father. “Father?”

Martin looked at each of him and then nodded his head. “We’ve come this far.” He stated. “May as well see it through.”

With those words, all four of them reached out and touched the doors. Two hands on each door. The surface of the doors glowed a bright blue where their hands were placed and after several seconds they all heard the soft beep and the double doors slid completely open revealing a very plain looking elevator directly in front of them a few meters. Martin looked at Chiron then.

“Are you coming?” He asked.

Chiron shook his head. “Entry into the Sanctum is forbidden to any who do not have the Mahanlo blood within them. The Sanctum is what you would call the heart of this entire facility and where your birth rights have been waiting for you to claim. The biometric sensors detect Mahanlo blood, no matter how small a trace, and act accordingly. If an attempt is made to force or fool the sensors, the elevator will not operate and the Sanctum will be locked out from any type of access. The Temple will go into a lockdown and the defenses will activate automatically and go into a standby mode. If a second attempt is made within a five-minute period, then the Temple defenses will go active and anything within the interior of the Temple not in designated areas will be terminated. No exceptions will be made. If a third attempt is made within fifteen minutes, or if forced entry attempts are detected, then the Temple will activate its auto-destruct sequence. Twenty minutes after that takes place, this Temple, every living being present and everything within it will be destroyed by Directed Thermal Fusion Explosive Detonators.”

Martin blinked several times. “Wow!” Martin spoke. “Not taking any chances are we?”

“No.” Chiron replied.

“But staania’s city above?” Andro asked.

Chiron shook his head. “The city built by Lady Dynina and those that follow her will be quite safe.” He answered. “The directed explosions will spread out and down but not up. Aside from some minor shaking of foundations, the city will be quite safe.” Chiron motioned with his hand once more. “Please.”

Martin and Andro, the more cautious of the four of them looked around the interior of the room before following Dorian and Laren to stand on the elevator. They turned as Chiron appeared in the open doorway and the doors began to close.

“He lives in you...” Chiron spoke causing their eyes to go wide. “They all do.”

The doors closed just as the elevator began to descend.

“Sibfla!” Martin hissed loudly.

“I don’t suppose anyone else is as creeped out as I am.” Dorian commented.

Martin looked at his son. “If I have to scrape out my shorts I will let you know son.” He stated. “So far... the odds of that are looking pretty good.”

“Agreed.” Andro stated.

“Indeed.” Laren echoed all of them. She looked at Andro when she spoke and then she broke into soft laughter. The three of them followed in quick succession and they relaxed a bit more.

The elevator moved quickly and smoothly and soon it came to a halt and another set of double doors opened revealing a dimly lit corridor with four lines of light laid out on the floor, and then separating about halfway down the corridor with one going to the left and three going to the right.

“Ok... that’s subtle.” Dorian spoke as he looked at the lines of light on the floor.

“Well... the hairs on the back of my neck aren’t standing up so that is a good thing. I think.” Martin spoke as he stepped into the corridor fully. “Let’s do this.”

They moved down the corridor slowly, unable to see very much because there really was no light except from the floor. Finally, they moved up to the doors where the lines in the floor split. As they did, the two sets of double doors slid open to reveal not much else. The interiors of the adjoining rooms were dark.

Laren took both Dorian and Andro's hands in hers as she gazed into the darkness. "I am ready." She said softly.

Androcles looked at his father. "Well?" He asked.

"What have we got to lose?" Martin said with a shrug. "It's not just a job..."

"It's a nubous adventure." Dorian finished the sentence.

Andro shook his head. "I truly hate that phrase." He said.

Martin grinned. "Me too." He looked into the darkness before him and took a deep breath. "I'll see all of you on the other side." He stated before moving through the door without hesitation.

Andro looked at Laren and Dorian and shrugged his own shoulders. "Let's do it." He said and stepped off with Dorian and Laren beside him. The double doors quickly closed once they had passed through them.

"...Ahhh... maybe this wasn't such a good idea fervon." Dorian's voice echoed in the room. "I can't see shit!"

"Same here." Andro spoke as he tried to get his wolf eyes to focus even more, but the blackness was complete and not even a strand of light was present.

"Do not let go of each other." Laren spoke, her voice quivering slightly in the room and it echoed softly as well.

"Wait!" Andro hissed softly. "It's getting... it's getting brighter I think."

And that is when they heard the voice. It was unmistakable for all of them had heard it before on that Pralor Science Station.

"All of your lives you have wondered what you are. Who you are." The gravelly voice of Dadrien of the Mountain echoed within the room. "Each one of you has questioned your very purpose in this life. I have not."

Laren gasped as the massive etheric projection of Dadrien appeared off to the side in the room. His size alone caused all three of them to shiver involuntarily, but not in fear. Andro tilted his head slightly to the side. "It's a message." He spoke. "It's not him."

"If you have made your way here now, then I have already spoken with you and told you of your purpose." Dadrien continued. "Your reason for existing. I crafted this message for you in a gentler time, a brief time of peace, knowing that when you received it, war would not be far behind. This thing has already been set in motion, set in motion long ago by actions and deeds that were not controlled but not done out of hate or fear, and nothing can stop it now. It will be altered or diverted over the passage of time, but it cannot be stopped. By now you have already discovered and spoken to Lady Reva, your ancestor Androcles and Dorian and always a friend to you Laren Ti'shara. You now know more of the history of both your peoples. More than you ever have before and more than any among the Urlkrisa Mamiss would have allowed. Never have two species been more intertwined than ours. You will discover far more in the future to be sure, Lycavorian and Darastrixi history, but you are here now. Androcles, Dorian, Laren. Elynth, Ryner, Ladur."

In a bright flash of light that blinded all of them momentarily, the figures of Elynth, Ryner and Ladur appeared in the room with them by use of the same Etheric teleporter that had brought them here. None of them hesitated and soon their hands were upon their bonded ones in a soothing fashion. Elynth looked up first from where she had been laying on the ground above, outside the Temple, shuddering slightly as she absorbed everything they had seen and been told. And then, just a few moments ago, white light had begun to shoot through her brain, blinding her vision and causing her to bury her muzzle between her talons.

"Andro!" Elynth almost cried out.

Andro placed his hands on either side of her huge head, spreading his fingers out over her scales as he always did when soothing her. "I am here sister." He spoke the words next to her snout.

Elynth relaxed instantly, her golden eyes closing in happiness at his touch and then she lifted her head to look around the brightening room.

"Andro where are we?" She asked.

"We were just... we were just on the ground above with the others!" Ladur exclaimed.

"I have known your names for so long, spoken them in my dreams, seen what you look like, and my spirit felt you grow since you entered this world. I am truly gone now, joining my family and friends in the afterlife.” Dadrien’s image drew their attention once more as it continued speaking. “Androcles, Dorian, Laren. Elynth, Ryner, Ladur. Brothers and sisters of the Blood. Durcunusaan. Kaldakai vur Darastrixi ar wer isk.” (Wolves and Dragons of the Stars)

“You are the only six individuals of your kind in the universe. Each one of you born fully aware of everything around you. Able to sense and see things others could not. And as you have no doubt already discovered, this will be passed to your own first born children. Within each of you I placed a piece of my heart and soul. A piece of my essence. Now, now it is once more whole again. In time, you will pass this on to your offspring, your legacy. They will continue what you have begun. At least that is our hope.” Dadrien continued. “I regret I cannot be there to look upon you with my own eyes, but all my knowledge is now yours. Everything I have ever known is now yours. Use this knowledge well.”

“The Dahakoan will rise once more under your guidance and leadership, reborn and more powerful than ever before. It has already started. They will be needed just as much as the new breed of Praetorians they will fight beside. And a formidable force they will be together. To that end... I have left a gift for each of you. I have passed on the mantle to you, and in order to make you strong enough to carry this burden, you will need to be prepared. I give you Wer Dahakoan Litrix.”

The seamless wall in front of them opened in that instant, separating into three different sections. They watched as three massive pedestals began to extend outward from the wall and on each of these pedestals was a white, black and crimson set of body armor unlike anything they had ever seen.

“The Onab saw your coming...” Dadrien’s voice continued once more. “They saw what you would need. This armor has been forged from an impossibly rare Onab metal found only on what was once our homeworld of Cerath. The metal is named for the region on Cerath where it was discovered. Onkmeti Naami.”

“Winter’s wisdom.” Laren spoke reverently.

“How the Onab were able to do with it what they did is beyond my knowledge, but it was used to armor our warships in battle with the Iais’Kai.” He spoke. “It is impervious to any sort of projectile weapon and superior to all other known metals against energy weapons. It also has one very special gift that I felt was needed in order for you to be at your finest. It is a fitting armor for the reborn Dahakoan, and for the Tarivuos of your people Androcles, for we are forever linked.”

Dorian was beside the pedestal in front of him and he ran his finger along the length of the body armor, watching as the crimson color began to glow slightly. He jerked his hand back quickly and the glowing stopped.

“Wow! That’s so cool!” He spoke.

“There is a cost however.” Dadrien’s voice spoke causing all of them to look at his image in the recording. “As Dahakoan, it will become etherically bound to each one of you. It will become part of each you, part of who you are. This cannot be reversed. Once you have taken your place, there will be no going back.” Dadrien shifted his body in the recording and then continued.

“None of you have asked for this burden. It was placed on you long before you were ever born or hatched. You had no choice.” They watched him take a deep breath. “I give that choice to you now.”

They turned and watched as the pedestals shifted once more and three very odd looking devices extended from the rear of the pedestals. Each was identical and was shaped in the form of a human body.

“You each are etherically bound to your brother or sister of the blood.” Dadrien spoke once more. “Each of you must make your own choice, but each of you must agree in order for it to work. If one of you does not wish it, then it cannot go forward. When you are ready, if you are ready, simply move onto the platforms, be calm and it will begin.”

Andro turned immediately to where Elynth rested on her four legs, ready to spring into action should it be needed. “Sister?” He asked softly.

“This is the answer we have always sought my beautiful brother.” Elynth answered him. “What are we? Who are we?”

“We still don’t know the full why of it?” Andro reminded her.

Elynth lifted herself up and moved closer to him. She stretched out her snout until it was touching his forehead. “Don’t we?” She asked softly.

Andro reached up with both hands and placed them alongside her golden eyes. “Yes, I suppose we do.” He said softly.

“I am ready.” Elynth said confidently.

Andro looked at Laren and Ladur who were now next to each other, her diminutive body looking silly against his huge bulk. “Laren? Ladur?”

Laren looked at Ladur with a beaming smile and then turned back to him. “Like you and Elynth, we have waited for these answers Androcles. Yes, we are ready.”

“Yes.” Ladur agreed.

Andro turned and looked at Dorian and Ryner. “Fervon?”

Dorian and Ryner looked at him. The youngest of the six of them in every way, but Andro would dare say, the most contemplative of them. “We are the youngest of...” Ryner began to speak but Laren quickly shook her head.

“That matters not to anyone in this room Ryner.” She hissed. “We are all equal here. Just as it was meant to be.”

Dorian met Andro’s eyes and nodded his head. “Yes.” He spoke.

“We are ready as well.” Ryner finished the statement.

Andro looked back to the odd machine and nodded his head. “Then into the future we shall go.” He spoke before climbing up into the machine and settling into cushioned seat as Laren and Dorian did the same thing. “And we won’t look back.”

Martin stood like a rock in the dark room, his wolf eyes trying to adjust, but the darkness was thick and complete. He shifted on the balls of his feet expecting action of some kind, preparing himself to move.

“Maybe this wasn’t such a good idea.” He muttered to himself thinking he was alone.

“Always the realist my boy?”

Martin spun around when he heard the soft laughter and words and he saw the Etheric image begin to take shape behind him. The dimness in the room began to brighten as the image took the shape of a man. Martin’s dark eyes grew wide in disbelief as he recognized the figure before it had fully formed.

“Daniho!” He gasped.

Martin saw the image clear and focus and before him stood his ancestor Daniho Mahanlo. He watched as the head moved and the dark eyes looked around the massive room as it grew even brighter now, small light fixtures slowly coming on. Finally, that head stopped moving and those eyes focused on him.

“How... how is this possible?” Martin gasped.

“The how of it I never understood...” Daniho spoke as he looked at him. “Though Sumar did try to explain it to me once. I was never really interested in the different Etheric abilities of our people until I saw what Sumar could do. I even doubted that this ability was within me. I was wrong.”

Martin dropped to one knee and lowered his head. “Grandfather.” He spoke the word almost reverently.

The image of Daniho clucked his tongue in disgust. “Get up my boy!” He hissed. “You do not bow to me, or to anyone!”

Martin looked at him as he slowly got to his feet. “How... how are you here?” Martin gasped. “Now... after all this time?”

“A last gift from our Onab friends.” Daniho answered him. “Chiron told you of the Etheric nodes placed within this facility. With the assistance of the Pralor people who knew of us back then, the Onab devices here have kept my Etheric essence alive in a restive state since the day I died.”

“Why?” Martin asked.

Daniho moved up to stand directly in front of him. “As with your sons and Laren, to give you a gift.”

“A gift?” Martin gasped in stunned shock. “I don’t need a gift. The... the knowledge of you and the others that staania has given to me... our history... my history... that is all the gift I will ever need.”

Daniho smiled and nodded his head. “Yes, I know.” He spoke. “Do you hate me Martin?”

“What?” He rasped out the words.

“A part of me hated myself for so long.” Daniho told him.

“What do you mean? How could I... how could I hate you?”

“We are at this point in time partly because of our actions.” Daniho told him. “My actions are what began all this.”

“Duan julyings iada jar tia evell wen staanio.” Martin told him. (Our actions make us who we are grandfather)

The image of Daniho smiled and nodded his head. “Jainn henes alad.” (Yes they do) Daniho shook his head slowly in the image and he smiled once more. “I am not here to lament over my actions. We have... we have shaped events through time Martin... trying to make amends for the sins of our past. And in doing so, we have placed the burden of what we did back them on you in the here and now. On you, on your sons, on Laren Ti'shara. Your sons and Laren have accepted their roles in all of this. It was easier for them, they have always felt it within them and even though they did not know why, they embraced it. You on the other hand, you have felt it within you, but because of events we could not predict, you are not discovering the why of it until now.”

“Staanio I...” Martin began.

“You truly hate being King don't you?” Daniho asked him.

Martin met his eyes for a long moment. “Una idrao etany cutius.” Martin finally said. (It sucks donkey dick)

Daniho's Etheric image burst out in hearty laughter as he stood in front of Martin and after a long moment, Martin couldn't help but join him. After a few moments Daniho nodded his head while the laughter left him and he looked at him once more.

“Now you know how I felt.” He spoke. He smiled at him. “Unfortunately, I was chosen. And because of my blood, my descendants have been chosen to continue this. When Sumar merged his bloodline with ours, that became even more pronounced and powerful. You have within you the very best of myself and... my beloved brother Ashten. He would be proud of you, because I am proud of you. You have taken this burden upon yourself without question because of the compassion within you. That compassion comes from Ashten. You have followed your instincts all of your life...”

“Not always.” Martin interjected.

Daniho shook his head. “I know of what you speak and your meaning, but fate has a way of making sure events happen exactly as they are supposed to in the end Martin my boy.” He said. “We would not be here if this was not so. Androcles would not be here. And Sadi would not carry within her the unification of our people and our bloodline.”

Martin's eyes narrowed. “Come again?”

“Do you doubt the blood that runs within your veins?” Daniho asked him.

Martin shook his head without hesitation. “Never.” He answered.

“I thought not.” He spoke. “You have evolved to what you are now Martin, because of past events, and now you will never doubt your instincts again. Just as I once did.”

“You?” Martin gasped.

“We all have doubts.” Daniho told him. “How we overcome these doubts is also what makes us who we are.”

Martin nodded after a moment. “I suppose that is true too.”

“Then trust them always.” Daniho said.

“Forgive me but... that really doesn't make a whole lot of sense.” Martin told him.

Daniho nodded once more and smiled. “I know... but it will in the future.” He said. “It will in the future.” He looked at Martin. “My burden has now become your burden staaniketo. And one day it will fall to Androcles and then to his first born son Achilles, and so on down our line. This will never change. In many ways I regret this but looking at you before me, at your son Androcles, your other children, and those to come, I see the strength within all of them. It is undeniable and no wolf will ever be able to deny it either.” Daniho looked at him. “Unite our people again Martin. Repair what my actions in the past did to our people and do not make my mistakes.”

“Your mistakes?” Martin asked him.

“We lost our way for a time.” Daniho said. “I lost my way. You must make sure we get it back. Only together can we face what is coming and hope to defeat it.”

“Then war is coming.” Martin said. “The Iais'Kai... the Scourge are coming.”

Daniho met his eyes and nodded. “It was always coming Martin, Xaxon's actions made it much worse, but it was always going to arrive on our doorstep once again. It was only a matter of when.”

“And how do I win?” Martin asked.

Daniho raised his hand and pointed a finger at Martin's chest. "By doing what you have always done. By leading with your heart." He raised his hand now and stopped Martin's question. "You have many questions I know, but the answers to those questions reside within these walls and the walls of the other Sanctuaries. I have only two requests for you."

Martin chuckled. "Requests?"

Dani met his eyes. "My mother... what she did was selfless Martin, but now... now I cannot bear to see her as she is. Return to her what she deserves. To breath real air, to smell her blood once more through her own senses. She has earned the right to live out the remainder of her years among her blood."

Martin nodded his head, once more without hesitation. "This I will do regardless staanio. It is not something you need to ask of me."

Daniho nodded his head in approval. "Thank you." He said. "My time grows very short staaniketo. Soon I will join those of our blood in the afterlife. Even the Etheric nodes in this place cannot sustain me forever."

"You said you have two requests." Martin spoke.

Daniho met his eyes and nodded. "Yes. The second not even my mother knows. She believes she is the last when she is not."

"Speak to Chiron after you have taken my gift to you." Daniho said. "Speak the words Ardorm Panur. He will know what to do."

"I don't need a gift grandfather." Martin told him again. "Not after what..."

Daniho motioned with his hand. "Look behind you grandson." He said as he moved to the side and Martin turned, his dark eyes going wide. "And when you reach the Mountain of Stone and Light there will be another gift for you, and what you have wished for most of all in your life will be yours. Carry on my blood. Carry on."

CHAPTER SIXTY-SEVEN

JETANIA

Loras Ranev moved quickly to the edge of the huge landing platform and looked out on the valley stretched below, her mind and heart racing nearly out of control. The thick, tall green trees stretched for kilometers in all directions, broken only in the spots where the winding river moved through the base of the valley. Loras' hands were fully stretched across her upper body holding her opposite arms as her mind literally raced with what she had seen and what she now felt coursing through her unchecked. The breeze was blowing away from her, causing her long dark brown hair to lift from her shoulders and flutter in the wind as she stood there. It was unmistakable, what she was feeling, and the intensity of it was unlike anything she had ever felt before in her nearly six hundred years of life. In that intense Etheric connection, she could feel it so close to her, and it was so utterly absolute. Loras Ranev had never felt such a concentrated love before, so focused and bright and it was directed solely at her.

From him.

An Alpha wolf who had not even entered this world yet.

Loras Ranev was well aware of the Lycavorian ability to imprint their children, but never had she heard or experienced it in such a deep way. He was an Alpha wolf with the memories and knowledge of generations going back longer than she could count. She had felt his father in the connection, his grandfather, two men who radiated power unlike any Alpha male she had ever seen or felt in her lifetime. It terrified her when she felt the love from him for her for it was equally as powerful. It terrified her because she had never thought something like what she felt could even exist.

"Loras?" The female voice spoke from behind her and Loras then detected Anja's sweet honey scent and turned quickly. The breeze was blowing softly into her face as she turned and her mind was ablaze with different sensations and this is how Anja had gotten so close to her without her noticing.

"You should... Anja you should be with your family." Loras said turning to face her fully.

Anja stepped up to her without hesitation. “You are a member of that family now Loras Ranev.” She spoke softly. “You saw and heard it for yourself. I can sense the confusion within you Loras. The fear. What is wrong? Tell me.”

Loras looked at her, and she could almost see the confidence oozing from Anja’s pores, she could smell and sense the powerful aura emanating from within her. Half breed though she may have been, Loras thought to herself, this woman had the aura of an extremely powerful Alpha female. As did the other females Loras could smell within her blood. Females that were far more powerful than most of the Alpha females here on Jetania. Her honey scent reeked of the Alpha Wolf King that had claimed her and made her his own, and her aura held nothing but love and devotion for that same wolf.

“I am... I am terrified Anja. What I saw... what I felt... it frightened me as nothing ever has in my life.” Loras finally exclaimed gently. “I don’t... I don’t know how else to describe it.”

Anja smiled warmly in understanding and reached out to take her hands, which Loras quickly placed in her palms. Anja squeezed them in her own when Loras gripped them and she stepped even closer to her. “Then do not try.” She told her. “Do you think I felt any different when I first discovered who and what Martin was? What I was? I was totally overwhelmed. I could barely process anything else.”

“How did you... how did you deal with it?” Loras asked her.

Anja smiled again. “Well... that was easy. I grabbed onto the one thing that had been a constant in my life and I didn’t even know it then. I grabbed onto Martin’s love for me. It was there, focused and pure and bright, and for far longer than even he led us to believe.” Anja told her. “Which is something that I will let him know about when I see him again.” She finished her statement with somewhat of a sterner tone, as much as she could project since Loras knew that this revelation had caused a massive spike of love and warmth within Anja that all of them had felt.

“What she said about me?” Loras said softly. “I...”

Anja drew her closer. “Do you question what your instincts tell you Loras?” Anja asked her. “Do you question what you feel radiating from Achilles for you?”

“Carians how could I?” Loras gasped loudly. “It is more powerful than anything I have ever felt in my life from any Alpha who has tried to entice me. His aura was so... it was so pure and raw and unmistakable, and it was focused entirely on me! The sensations it caused within me I did not know I could even feel! How is that even possible Anja? I know of our ability to speak to one another with our minds in a rudimentary way, but he is...”

“Well... you can thank his father for that.” Anja replied with a small smile. “And his grandfathers before him. Andro has... Andro and his father have always been enigmas. Even to their family at times. What they can do... let’s just say it is very scary. But that makes us love them even more. Reva was channeling Martin and Andro and the others so I can only guess that Achilles was able to use that, focus on that, and then you.”

“I heard his voice in my head Anja!” Loras gasped once more. “As if he was standing beside me. He spoke to me. He called me his wife!”

Anja nodded her head knowing full well what Loras meant. It was the same for her, for Aricia, for For’mya. For all of them. What Martin did to them, in and out of their bed, it was beyond anything they could ever imagine experiencing and his love for each of them was utterly complete and absolute.

“And you don’t know how to process that?” Anja said with a gentle smile. “It is the same for his father and his grandfather. They love without question, without doubt.”

Loras looked at her. “Process it?” She gasped with wide eyes. “Anja, I did not know that such feelings could even exist!”

“Yes, you have.” Anja told her. “This knowledge has always been within you, and you have known it. If you did not, then you would have given yourself completely to Warim Ranev. You would have never held that part of yourself away from him. He was a good man and he loved you, and you cared for him, but inside you, in your blood, you knew there was something else waiting for you. Something that would take your heart, your soul and your essence and wrap it within love that you have never felt before. You heard Reva yourself.”

“But how?” Loras asked. “I have never known anything but Jetania. I was born here. My brothers, the gods bless their passing, they were born here. My mother was born on Ventori, my father as well. If our ancestors came from Lycavore to Ventori, how can I be what she says.”

Anja nodded her head. "All good questions..." Anja met her eyes. "But does any of that really matter now Loras?" Anja answered her question with another.

Loras met her eyes for a long moment. She opened her mouth several times as if to answer but then shut it and slowly shook her head. "No." She answered finally.

"The answers will come Loras." Anja told her. "As they come for us they will come for you. Right now though... I can feel it within you." Anja told her. "What you feel for Achilles. It burns within your blood Loras Ranev. Within your heart."

"He has not even been born yet Anja!" Loras stammered. "How is what I feel for him even possible?"

"We have asked that same question many times about those in our family." Anja told her. "Mostly about Androcles and his father and what they are capable of. How they are capable of doing these things that they do. Many of those answers we received today. But it also led us to even more difficult questions. You know what our people can do Loras, passing the imprint of what we have seen and experienced in our lives on to our children. For Martin, for Androcles and now for Achilles, it is just more complete and far more extensive than we had ever known. They have knowledge within them that no one should have at such a young age, let alone before they are ever born." Anja looked at her and reached up to place her palm against her cheek. "You worry that he will claim you regardless of what you want. As Osrod did. As even Warim did."

"It is the way of our people." Loras told her softly. "I could not resist him Anja, even if I wanted too. My body would not let me. You know that this is how it is for female wolves."

Anja shook her head with a smile. "It was the way of our people." She corrected her. "It has not been like that for many thousands of years. That part of the old ways died out a long time ago."

"Not here." Loras said.

Anja nodded her head. "Not here, no." She said. "But it will end as soon as Martin arrives that much I can assure you."

"Anja I... I do not want to be a trophy for another male." Loras said. "I hate Osrod for what he forced me to do for ten years, parading me around like a prize, taking me whenever he wanted knowing I could not resist him. It was different with Warim, I did care for him, but it was also the same."

Anja shook her head and squeezed her hands once more. "You have nothing to fear Loras Ranev. The future is ever changing and when that day comes, if it comes, you will do what your heart tells you. Achilles will not force himself upon you Loras, he loves you too much. Not to mention that his father and grandfather and all of his uncles would kick his ass five ways from yesterday if he did."

"But how... how do you resist when it is instinct to our people?" Loras asked.

Anja looked at her with a shy smile. "It's not easy I will tell you that." She replied coyly. "Martin is... Martin is built like a bull in the celie shusul..." Anja saw Loras' eyes grow wider and she giggled like a school girl. "... and he certainly knows how to turn each of us to putty in his hands. It's next too impossible to resist him, especially when we are in Phase, but in truth, we don't have to do anything."

"What do you mean?" Loras asked with wide eyes. "How?"

Anja squeezed her hands tighter and smiled brightly. "Let's take a walk and I will tell you." She spoke. "We love bragging about Martin, he hates it but since he is not here, I can brag all I want and he can't do a thing."

Loras nodded quickly and they turned to move along the edge of the platform under the watchful eye of Kalis, Tir'ut and half a dozen of Garget's men. This small group had spent the last several hours with each other already today, learning about one another, and a bond of mutual trust and friendship was growing quickly. They needed no words between them to know what to do.

None of them noticed Retta however, as she gently dislodged herself from the grasps of her family and with a quick glance in the direction of her mother, she sprinted for the door that would take her inside the base.

Only Lucia took notice of this from her perch on top of the STRIKER and she glanced back to where her beloved Zarah rested.

[Zarah?] Lucia questioned.

[Let her go my love.] Zarah answered quickly. [She is going to do what any daughter of my father would do. She is going to follow her blood and her instincts and claim what is hers.]

[Lazar?] Lucia asked.

[Yes. His blood burns just as brightly for her, though he does not fully understand it yet. He will though, if Loras is who staania Reva says, he will.] Zarah answered.

[Zarah ussta ssinsrigg...?]

[I do not wish to wait any longer either Lucia.] Zarah spoke before Lucia could finish her sentence.

[If it is too soon Zarah my love we can...]

[No. You have shown me that I can love and feel once more Lucia.] Zarah answered her. [My family has shown me this. And Radem told me the only way to...]

[Radem?] Lucia gasped. [He knows?]

Zarah chuckled softly in their private connection. [He is our master and our friend Lucia, thanks to my father. He knows.]

[What did... what did he say?]

[To conquer my fear... to conquer my fear I first need to shed the demons of my past. I have done that Lucia. With your love, with Andro's essence within me... within us... I have done that.] Zarah spoke. [When my brother returns to us, we will claim what is ours Lucia. I do not want to lose him to another because I was too frightened to believe in the future.]

[He said he would wait forever Zarah.] Lucia said.

[Do you wish to wait forever to feel his arms around us?] Zarah asked. [To feel what only he can make us feel?]

[Phraktos nau!] Lucia blurted out.

[We will have what is ours Lucia my love. Dutkne will be ours when my brother returns.] Zarah spoke softly. [And we will step into the future when we do. A future with him and us together.]

Lucia smiled and sent her a pulse of intense love through their connection, something that Zarah returned equally. [I look forward to that day my beautiful Zarah.]

[As do I.] Zarah replied. [We... carians!] Zarah gasped within the connection and Lucia's eyes cut to where she still sat.

[Zarah! What is it?] Lucia asked.

[Son hote lon evell nysil saoi! Andro! Father!] (By all that we hold holy)

LORENU

TEMPLE ENTRANCE

"...just disappeared!" Isheeni gasped aloud now, her normally soothing voice now filled with concern and fear. "Right after I called for you, Torma disappeared! Aricia my sister what is going on?"

For'mya stood beside Aurith now, stroking her snout to try and calm her, Arzoal and Helen standing off to the side silently. Neither looked or acted like something was wrong and this quickly drew attention as everyone else was nervous and their combat senses had come alive. It was Aricia who looked at them, her hand on Isheeni's muzzle.

"Helen? Arzoal?" She gasped aloud. "You... you know something! What is happening?"

"They can feel it." Reva's voice spoke now and they all turned to see the Sphere move up to where they all stood.

"Feel it?" Aricia questioned. "We cannot feel our Beloved Reva! We cannot feel our sons! What is going on?!"

"Be patient child." Reva's voice said. "Destiny's path is being fulfilled."

"What does this mean?" For'mya demanded. "We will not lose them Reva!"

The sphere shifted position and faced her. "Lose them child?" Reva spoke. "Child you are not going to lose them. They are being..."

"They are being Reborn!" Helen gasped.

THE CIRCLE

Martin spun around when the faint screams reached his wolf ears even through the thick steel walls. "... Andro!" He gasped as he headed for the door

"You do not need to go to them Martin my boy." Daniho's voice spoke from behind him once more and Martin turned. "They are in no danger and the screams you hear are their rebirth. Your sons, my grandsons, and Laren, they have accepted what their path is completely."

"What does that mean?" Martin hissed.

"It means that they have accepted what they are." Daniho answered him. "The Tarivuos of our people, of you. And the Dahakoan reborn, or I should say the Sentinels of the Stars. Wer Rithtari ar wer Isk"

Martin looked at him. "What?"

"They are the Dahakoan reborn yes... but they are so much more now." Daniho spoke as he moved closer to Martin. "They can no longer be truly called Dahakoan. Dadrien knew this would happen and what they would become. A message Dadrien made many thousands of years ago is with them, guiding them. You have nothing to fear for them staaniaketo, believe in me."

Martin stared at his Etheric image for a long moment and then his head moved back to what he had turned around to discover only a few seconds before. He glanced at Daniho once more and saw him nod and then he moved closer to the podium and what was held there.

The armor was quite impressive looking to say the least. It was suspended on the podium within an Etheric bubble of some kind, rotating very slowly. Around the base of the podium were several thin, rectangular box like objects probably no bigger than an old butane lighter. The upper chest piece, which is all Martin could see, was layered across the shoulders, the elbows and the forearms. It was very similar to how their Dragon Armor was forged to provide maximum flexibility to whoever wore it. This armor was dull silver in color, with the images of a dragon leaping into the air on either pectoral chest piece and the head of a Lycavorian wolf on the lower abdomen with wings on either side.

"It is called Onkmeti Naami." Daniho's voice spoke as Martin gazed at it. "A very special metal discovered by the Onab in the Winter Mountains on Cerath."

Martin turned back to his image. "Winter's Wisdom?" He said.

Daniho nodded. "The Onab named it, for they had never seen something like it before. After roughly fifty years of testing and research they discovered a way to make it malleable. It was used to armor our warships and gave us a sizeable edge in our war with the Iais'Kai and many other things. It is impervious to any known projectile weapon, and surpasses even your own Dragon Armor in its resistance against energy weapons. Heat. Cold. It can actually alter its molecular structure in order to protect against nearly any environment."

Martin looked back to the armor. "Is it alive?" He asked.

Daniho did not laugh at the question but he did smile slightly. He had asked the same question of the Onab all those years ago. "I asked that same question staaniaketo, many years ago." He said and watched Martin turn back to him.

"And?"

Daniho shook his head. "It has something to do with the molecular structure of the metal itself. I don't begin to understand it for it is far out of my knowledge base." Martin grinned to himself now and Daniho's head tilted slightly. "What?"

"I get that a lot." He spoke.

"Ah..." Daniho nodded his head in understanding. "The Onab... the Onab made this for me during the Zin sarakoa vyen ils." He continued. "They were always so concerned for my safety."

Martin looked at him once more. "You never wore it?" He asked.

Daniho shook his head. "No."

"Why?" Martin pressed him.

"An Onab Seer came to me one day after it was complete." Daniho said. "They told me they saw you wearing it. That only you would be able to wear it."

"Me?" Martin rasped. "Why?"

"As with the Wer Rithtari ar wer Isk, the armor is etherically bound to one person. Once this connection is made, it is permanent and can never be removed." Daniho answered him. "I did not possess the Etheric capability to make this connection. Only your sons and your ano fenneennum have this ability. Only you have this ability.”

“Because of staanio Sumar.” Martin said softly.

Daniho nodded his head. “Yes. Even from long before he was born, the gods of fate and destiny had planned for his arrival and his descendants. Just as they did mine. They knew how we would become one. And they knew of the place that vada sinuovas would act in that future. They knew how tightly we would become bound to them and them to us.”

Martin looked back at the armor. “Durcunus for Sinuovas rie vada Saan.”

Daniho nodded his head solemnly. “Wolves and Dragons of the Blood.” He spoke almost reverently.

Martin looked at him with wide eyes. “Arzoal!” He gasped. “Then it was... it was no mistake that she chose the last of Dadrien’s physical offspring to transfer her consciousness too before she died. Andro said... he thought as much!”

Daniho shook his head. “All of your children with your Queens are gifted in ways we never dreamed of Martin. Androcles especially. He is correct however, it was not a mistake.” He answered. “Dadrien and my mother guided her.”

He held his hand up in the Etheric image knowing what Martin was going to say. “And no... we did not influence any of her decisions, nor did we do this with you or anyone along the way. We only allowed them to see things from every perspective. The decisions she made, those that you have made, that Andro and Laren and Dorian have made, these decisions have shaped you into who you are now. My mother has told you this already, and it is time that you begin believing it my boy.”

Martin shook his head. “All this sibfla... it just seems so...”

“Otherworldly?” Daniho offered.

Martin looked at him. “Yes!”

Daniho nodded his head. “How do you think I felt, and I did not know half of what you know staaniketo.”

“I need... I need to step beyond the power that I wield... I need to step beyond the simple boundaries of what my eyes and my senses tell me.” Martin said softly.

Daniho smiled and nodded his head. “Ah... Canth’s words to you on that foul world. The day that true realization came to you of who and what you are.”

Martin looked up and met his eyes. “Yes.”

Daniho paused and blinked his eyes and in a brilliant flash of white and blue etheric light, Torma appeared in the room with them. Martin moved to him immediately, but Torma’s many years with Martin had given him countless aspects of Martin’s instincts and nature and he was calm now but ready to spring to attack in an instant. Torma closed his golden eyes as Martin stroked the scales under his eyes and they both looked at Daniho when he began to speak again.

“The mark of our family has already begun to appear on you and your children and wives and on others of our blood Martin. It will also appear on those meant to be part of our bloodline in the future Martin.” Daniho said softly. “It can no longer be denied my staaniketo. As much as you do not want this role, as much as you hate it, it belongs to you now. Just as it belonged to me. Wolf and dragon. We are bound by far more than words could ever describe. Take this armor and the gift within it Martin. There is a matching set for Torma as well. Together with your Bonded Brother Torma it will make you even more deadly than you are now, and it will show our people who you really are. Accept it, just as your sons and soul daughter have. See it for what it is. You son’s Anome Sadi bears the reunification of our people within her womb Martin and soon Carisia, Ne’Veha and Lu’ria will follow in her footsteps and make the final reunification impossible to ever break again.”

Martin looked at him with wide eyes. “You have seen this?” He gasped.

Daniho nodded his head. “It was foretold by the Onab Seers. Over time, the first four children of Androcles, the first of their line, Eliani and Jomann’s first sons, also the first of their line, Nara, Retta... your children will bring about the complete unification of our species not seen since those first days on Cerath. And those chosen by fate to be part of that will also bear the mark of our family no matter where in the stars they reside.” Daniho answered. “The Onab did not foresee Caliria or Sehri, or the others that your children have chosen to love and be part of their lives, but I believe Androcles did. His dragon blood gives him this ability and this only strengthens our people going forward into the future.”

Daniho met his eyes. “But only you can lead them Martin. They will follow only you.”

“Why?” Martin asked him bluntly.

“You are the Mard Revik Martin Leonidas.” Daniho said. “More so than me, or your grandfathers before you ever were. Within you... within you is a piece of all of us. That is the difference. That is your power. Take this as my legacy to you staaniketo, our legacy to you. Release my mother and fulfill my other request to you. It is your time now my grandson. It is your time now. It falls to you to shape the invisible Martin, what the Seers could not see, it falls to you.”

Martin looked at Torma now, his golden eyes focused and clear. “Torma?”

Torma blinked and nodded his massive head. “We have never feared the unknown before now my Bonded Brother.” He said. “Let us reach for it one more time.”

Martin Leonidas nodded his head almost immediately and turned to look at his grandfather.

“What do I have to do?” Martin asked.

Daniho motioned with his hand. “Step onto the podium my grandson. Step onto the podium and fulfill your destiny.”

Martin took a deep breath and moved for the podium but he stopped and turned back to Daniho. “Will I ever see you again grandfather?” He asked.

Daniho’s Etheric image smiled at him. “You are never without us Martin my boy. You have never been without us.” He replied as he put his hand over his chest. “We will reside within you here...” He touched his temple. “And here. Always.”

Martin nodded slowly and turned back to the podium. He took another deep breath and stepped fully onto the podium.

“For the future.” He whispered just before the entire room was bathed in another wave of white/blue Etheric light.

The pain had been excruciating and sudden, which accounted for the screams, but it passed in milliseconds and in its wake was a warmth that surged through their bodies like the waves of the ocean gripped in the fury of a colossal storm. Power the likes of which they could not describe rolled smoothly through their limbs, their bodies and their minds. It provided focus and clarity and above all else, it provided answers to so many of the questions they had asked of themselves for so long. Dorian’s birth had re-ignited those questions for Androcles and Elynth, reinforced them for Laren and Ladur, and then brought them back to the forefront with all of them. Now they had the answers they had sought for so long.

What were they?

Who were they?

The Dahakoan reborn into something more than what their predecessors were or ever could be. What only they could be.

Wer Rithtari ar wer Isk.

The Sentinels of the Stars.

Whatever had taken place had done so quickly, a sudden bout of nausea causing all of them to drop from the podium seats they had been in, heaving up what they had eaten only a few hours ago. Andro squatted on the cool metal floor, one hand bracing his body while he took great breaths to calm his stomach and his mind. His azure eyes opened after a long moment and regained their focus and then his eyes grew wide as he looked at his hand and then his legs beneath him. His eyes held confusion and wonder as he saw what encased his body now.

Glittering gold armor extended over a large portion of his body now, and around that was an armor he had never seen before in his life. It looked like a cross between the exquisite mesh weave that provided the superior protection of the Drow Scout Body Armor but with the obsidian color and texture of Elynth’s scales. Andro slowly lifted his hand off the floor turning it over palm up and he saw the same style armor extending up his forearms and across his biceps. He looked down at his chest and saw the gold armor on his chest and abdomen with the scale weave armor along his sides and armpits. As he began to move, his eyes grew wider for it felt as if he wore nothing at all. Andro’s head snapped up to look at Dorian and Laren and his azure eyes nearly exploded open at what he saw. They were just as he was, still confused and slightly disoriented, but wearing the same type of armor with the difference in color exactly the same as the difference in Elynth, Ryner and Ladur's scales. What caused his eyes to open in shock were the wings that extended to either side of their bodies and originated from their backs.

"Sibfla!" Andro barked causing Dorian and Laren to look up at him and seeing their own eyes go wide.

Andro sprang to his feet with instant action and his eyes grew even wider when he saw the shape of the wings so close to his own body. His head turned to the side and he saw the span of the wing curl back and he tried twisting his head even further around as the wing then curled around in front of him almost of its own accord. Andro spun around quickly but could not see where the wing originated because it moved with him. His head whipped around to the other side and he saw the same thing. As wonder filled him, he stopped turning and he saw those wings spread out, stretching four meters on either side of his body.

"Impressive are they not?" The voice spoke causing all three of them to whirl around to see Chiron silently enter through the door in the wall that had not been there when they first entered.

"Chiron!" Andro gasped.

The Avatar looked at Androcles and smiled. "Dadrien's gift to you." He spoke.

"They are..." Laren began to stammer out the words.

"Wings. Yes." Chiron spoke as he entered the room fully and the door slid closed behind him. "Forged from pure Onkmeti Naami, just as your armor is."

Andro felt Elynth come up behind him, her muzzle lowering to inspect the wings that now protruded from his back. They were shaped just as her wings were, smooth on the upper ridge bone and then scaly further away from the ridge bone until they became like smooth scale feathers. As she ran her snout over them she could feel them move in concert with the pressure she applied and her golden colored eyes grew wide.

"They are soft and move like... like the scales on my wings!" She exclaimed extending out her right wing, now covered completely in the Onkmeti Naami armor.

Chiron nodded his head. "It remains even today as one of the most successful feats the Onab ever accomplished, being able to manipulate the metal as they did. Your wings retain the same defensive nature as your armor, even though they are some of the thinnest armored portions ever designed by the Onab."

"How?" Andro asked once more looking at his left wing. The obsidian colored wing moved closer to his face for inspection and Andro's eyes grew a little wider.

Chiron shook his head. "As with the armor, the wings are now etherically bound to you." He told them. "They can never be removed."

Dorian moved closer to him, his own wings banging into Laren's as he did. "I thought you said you could not come down here." Dorian questioned him.

"I could not." Chiron told him. "Until the Mahanlo bloodline unlocked this level and the levels beneath us."

"Beneath us?" Andro asked.

Chiron met his eyes once more and nodded. "When the time is right you will know to explore these levels. Your presence here now has provided me the access into this portion of The Circle that was held within the computer's archived databases. I have full access to the facility now as Lord Daniho and Lord Sumar intended it to be once you arrived."

"Chiron this..." Laren began to speak but Chiron raised his hand stopping her question.

"You have many questions..." Chiron spoke. "Lord Daniho and Lord Sumar knew this would be the case. The answers to the questions you seek are already within you. Each of you is unique, and the knowledge you seek is part of the blood that flows inside you. The same can be said for your father Androcles. You do not need to ask questions when you already know the answers."

"Are you saying that... that I already know how to use wings?" Androcles asked him stunned.

Chiron nodded his head. "You have dragon blood within you." He answered. "You and Elynth have been flying since before you could walk. You see with each other's eyes, feel what each other feels, all you need do is just allow that knowledge to flow freely now. Do not seek it, just let it flow within you. It is already there, all you need do is think it and your instincts will take over. The same can be said for you Laren Ti'shara. And you Dorian Leonidas, the youngest though you may be."

He moved forward to stand in front of Elynth who did not shy away from him. Normally had anyone aside from Androcles or an immediate member of his family come this close to her she would have backed away quickly for she did not like to be touched by anyone outside of that small circle. Instead she allowed Chiron to reach up and place his hand on her snout.

“Believe it Elynth, daughter of Isheeni and descendant of Dadrien of the Mountain.” Chiron spoke. “Feel it within you.”

Chiron moved to the center podium where Laren had been sitting and he touched a few screens that were exposed. When he did, another larger panel rose from the podium and he stepped in front of it. He tapped the panel several times and they all heard the deep rumbling from behind them. They turned and saw a long, massively wide tunnel open up and extend before them. At the very end of the tunnel was a cone of bright sunlight. Chiron turned once more to look at them.

“You are Wer Rithtari ar wer Isk.” Chiron told them. “Now embrace it. Become what destiny has intended for all of you. Only then will you begin to shape the invisible with your father! Only then can we move forward.”

Androcles lifted his right hand and stared at it for a long moment, feeling the new found awareness and power filtering through him. He brought his fingers together in a fist and then squeezed that fist tightly before looking up at Dorian and Laren, both of whom were looking at him. His head shifted and he met the golden eyes of his Bonded Sister. Elynth moved closer to him and lower her head to his, touching her snout to his forehead.

“Una coi duan aldrom Androcles.” She spoke to him in Lycavorian, her voice warm and touched with a slight accent. (It is our destiny Androcles)

Andro stared into her eyes for a long moment, seeing the love within them for him, for Anthar, for everything. He turned his head to look at Laren. Ladur had moved up beside her and she was stroking the underside of his huge head with her fingers, and looking ridiculously tiny compared to him but exceptionally formidable with the new armor wrapped around her body and her wings slightly extended to her sides.

“It is what we were meant for Andro.” Laren spoke softly. “You can feel it within you just as we can.”

“Yes.” Ladur agreed.

Andro turned his eyes to his brother. “Dori?” He asked.

Dorian met his eyes. “Our Soul sister is better with words than me fervon.” He said. “Let’s do this!”

Androcles looked at Chiron one more time and saw the Avatar nod his head slowly. He motioned to the long tunnel. “You already know everything you need.” He spoke. “Your fathers will join you outside. This tunnel exits a thousand meters above the surface of the ocean. Reach for it and it will be yours.”

Andro closed his eyes briefly, Dorian and Laren doing the same, and the Onkmeti Naami quickly finished its complete deployment, the golden helmet encasing their skulls and leaving only their eyes uncovered and a long open area that extended from the tips of their noses down past their jaws exposing a portion of their mouths. Almost exactly like his Spartan helm. The Onkmeti Naami Scaled Weave Armor completed extending over the golden helmets until it was in the shape of a cowl, matching the color of their Bonded Brother and Sister’s scales. The obsidian color on Androcles looked devastating, the light green of Laren’s Scale Weave reacting to her shapely body in many ways, and the Sinopia colored Scaled Weave on Dorian was very imposing.

Andro opened his eyes once more and the azure blue color of his eyes were near glowing, Laren and Dorian’s eyes mimicking his in their brightness. He looked at Elynth and saw that the Scaled Weave armor now encompassed her, Ladur and Ryner completely.

“And we go!” Andro barked before breaking into a dead sprint down the tunnel, Dorian and Laren joining him in midstride and grasping his hands. With deafening trumpets of power, Elynth, Ladur and Ryner followed their Bonded Brothers and Sister.

Chiron stepped away from the panel and turned fully to watch them, his dark eyes glittering in the light of the room.

“And now we begin.” He spoke softly. “Now we begin.”

They were standing in the clearing outside the Temple, unsure of what to do or where to go. Aricia and For'mya were holding one another tightly, Sadi and Carisia holding the others as worry began to grow stronger among all of them. Robati was in Yokra's arms with Aviel helping him to comfort her, Dynina, Gorgo, Jezima and Dasha gathered together and all of the Leonidas children standing tightly together.

It was Achilles and Neesia that shook them from their positions.

The cliff mother! Achilles voice echoed loudly within Mindvoice touching everyone in the area.

Sadi gasped and dropped her hands to her abdomen as everyone turned to look at her. "Achilles!" She rasped out the word.

Father is coming mother! Neesia's voice echoed next. We must go to the cliff!

Sadi looked up at Dynina. "The cliff?" She gasped. "What cliff?"

Kadeer stepped forward now, holding the hands of his daughters. "The ocean meets the continental shelf not far from here!" He snapped. "The cliffs reach a thousand meters down to the surface!"

"Where?" Sadi gasped.

Kadeer didn't hesitate and he pulled Perlae and Ishma with him. "This way! The cliffs begin not five hundred meters from here!"

It did not take them long to reach the cliffs, they were exactly where Kadeer said they were and suddenly they were staring at a breathtaking view of the ocean extending in front of them, several islands far off in the distance. The Continental Shelf stretched as far as the eye could see to either side of them, the ocean waves crashing into the beach a thousand meters below them. It was truly a magnificent view before them, but they did not care about that.

"Where?" Ne'Veha barked. "I don't see anything!"

"Nothing this way!" Deion called out, his eyes focused in a southerly direction.

"I still cannot feel Martin within me! I can sense him but I cannot feel him!" Aricia pointed out.

"Nor I." For'mya chimed in.

Sadi looked at them. "It is an empty void where Androcles usually is. We cannot..."

Poooa nathos... Neesia's voice filled their minds once more. (Patience family)

...Henes wen ihoni ineen. Achilles finished his sisters statement. (They are almost here)

Eliani rolled her eyes and shook her head. "Great! More weirdos in our family that finish each other's sentences!" She hissed. "That is just so creepy!"

Deion and Nara bumped their shoulders against their older sister with huge smiles. "We'll make you..."

"Quiet!" Denali barked loudly holding up his hand. "Listen!"

The low roar reached all of their ears now, getting louder and more pronounced but somehow muffled.

"That is my sister! I would know her trumpet anywhere!" Aurith exclaimed as she stretched her head out over the edge of the cliff and her keen dragon eyes found the odd opening in the side of the cliff perhaps two hundred meters below where they stood.

"Aurith!" For'mya hissed as she reached for her.

"Below us!" Aurith shouted as she turned back. "An opening in the cliffs below!"

"An opening?" Kadeer spoke now as he moved to the edge beside her. "There are no caves or tunnels in the cliffs, they have been surveyed extensively." Aurith lifted her talon from the ground as Kadeer leaned over the edge as far as he could while holding her leg. "By the gods..." He muttered drawing everyone to the edge as they spread out along the cliff and leaned over.

The roar was unmistakable now and all of them focused on the opening in the cliff wall. Five seconds later their eyes exploded open and their lives changed forever. Elynth, Ladur and Ryner burst from the opening with thunderous trumpets, their wings snapping out instantly before they fell a hundred feet and then they were reaching for the clear sky with powerful sweeps of their wings.

What stunned everyone into horrified silence was when the three figures leaped from the cliff opening at a dead run and their bodies reached out from the cliff.

"NO!!" Sadi screamed in terrible fear. "Androcles!!!"

Robati Ti'shara's screams of horror echoed just after Sadi's as they witnessed what was happening. The three figures, Androcles, Laren and Dorian were unmistakable to those that they loved and who loved them, and now they fell to their certain deaths a thousand meters below. As they all watched with shock filled eyes and disbelief, something quite amazing happened. Something that all of them would remember until they day they passed into the next life.

They had fallen perhaps a hundred feet holding hands and then they split apart and three different sets of colored wings extended from their backs with thunderous echoes of air and power and their bodies changed direction instantly and reached for the sky above with powerful sweeps of those magical wings and they climbed to meet their Bonded brothers and sisters in the sky above.

“Son vada carians!” Gorgo gasped aloud as she dropped to her knees in wonder, Dynina and Dasha reaching for her but then stopping as they too felt it.

It was as if someone flipped a switch and the emptiness that all of them had been feeling since Martin and the others had disappeared from within the Temple simply vanished to be replaced with the most beautiful sensations of warmth and family and love that any of them had ever felt before.

Anse! I could get used to this. Martin’s voice filled their minds and all of them spun around, Dynina crying out and reaching for her throat in disbelief.

Martin Leonidas stood behind them, well he floated behind them actually, the obviously metallic dull silver wings moving gracefully as he hovered above them ten meters in the air. Beyond him, and slightly higher Torma held the same position his massive wingspan dwarfing even the ten-meter span of the wings protruding from Martin’s back. His body was encased in the dull silver armor, obsidian colored Scaled Weave armor covering his elbows and abdominal area as well as covering parts of his waist and then his knees. The bright sun reflected off the armor radiantly, but the dragons on his chest plates and the wolf head symbol on his waist were unmistakable. The helmet covered his entire head, almost exactly like his normal Spartan helm. Two slots that left his eyes uncovered and the single opening that extended beyond the nose guard that kept his mouth free. All of them could see those yellow gold eyes glowing under that helmet, the savage looking dual wolf fangs of the Leonidas and Mahanlo bloodline so very prominently exposed and the multicolored plume that resided atop the helmet signifying the hair color of each of his beloved wives and mates.

“Beloved!” Aricia cried out.

Sadi Leonidas felt the unabashed warmth and love of Androcles’ aura suddenly fill her and instantly she was spinning around with Ne’Veha and the others, their eyes going wide as they saw Androcles hovering only a few feet away from them but still out over the cliff’s ledge. Dorian and Laren were on either side of him, Elynth, Ladur and Ryner slightly higher and behind them, their combined wings causing a stronger than normal breeze along the edge of the cliff.

“Saoi sibfla!” Denali blurted out as he looked at his older brother.

They watched as Andro adjusted his wings’ position and moved over the edge of the cliff to solid ground, Sadi and the others backing up as he did and then he dropped the last few feet to stand in front of Sadi. His azure eyes were near glowing just like his father’s eyes and they looked upon Sadi, Ne’Veha, Carisia, Caliria, Sehri and Lu’ria with unabashed love, desire and devotion. Dorian did the same in front of Sheva and Onera and Laren dropped lightly to the ground in front of her parents, both of them with glowing eyes.

Martin executed the same maneuver then and Aricia and For’mya didn’t hesitate and were instantly in his arms. His aura washed over them with intense power and both of them were stunned at the clarity that now filled that aura, so much more than they were used too and it took their breath away. Martin’s aura had always affected them in different ways, always so powerful and filled with devotion to them, but now it was even more intense and focused and it caused Aricia and For’mya to shiver in delight in his arms as he held them tightly. It was no different for Sadi, Ne’Veha, Caliria, Lu’ria and Sehri as Andro’s wolf aura surrounded them and engulfed them, setting their senses afire with love and desire. For Carisia it was as if her mind had suddenly exploded with new found sensations and an Etheric aura, much like his wolf aura, engulfed her completely. It was something she had never experienced in all their time together and for Carisia it was absolutely divine. Sheva and Onera were experiencing this with Dorian for the very first time as well and it was glorious to them.

Martin finally turned as he held Aricia and For’mya tightly and he looked at the sphere that held Reva’s essence and mind. “You... you knew this would happen didn’t you staania?” He asked softly.

“I knew he left a gift for you.” Reva answered. “I did not know... I did not know what it was however. It is fitting my staaniketo.”

Martin blinked quickly and they all watched in wonder as the Onkmeti Naami armor retracted from his head and the helmet disappeared, leaving his head and bearded face bare once more. He looked at Aricia, reaching up to take her beautiful face in one hand and For’mya’s in the other as his huge wingspan shrank until the wings disappeared completely into the armor he wore, as if they were actually part of the armor itself. Their hands came up to cover his and they stared into his eyes.

“I will... I will share with you, all of you, but right now I have a promise to fulfill.” He spoke softly.

Aricia’s azure eyes cut to the sphere quickly and then back to him. “We... we will need Melyanna for that Martin. Only she will have the knowledge to do such a thing.” She said. Aricia and For'mya knew their husband and mate, they knew how he thought, and the moment he realized who Reva was they knew he was making plans to return her to her true form.

Martin nodded his head. “I know. I’m tired of us being apart though.” He spoke. “I’m bringing Dysea, Bella and Cirith back to be with us.”

“What about...” For'mya began but Martin touched her soft lips with an armored finger and shook her head.

“Let me worry about that.” He stated. “We’ll discuss it later and make our final decisions, but now I want us all together.”

“Avoi.” For'mya whispered.

Kadeer Imuma could only watch with moist eyes as Perlae, Ishma and Awser were pulled into the mass of bodies of the Leonidas family. Of the Mahanlo family. Ever since he had lost Maha he had questioned his purpose while still training and schooling his children with his beloved Lycavorian wife. He missed her deeply yes, but her absence had lessened in the last few hours after discovering everything they had found. He had lost sight of the fact that he was still part of a family and he always had been, and now seeing how his children and he himself were accepted and pulled into the arms of family without question had restored this knowledge to him.

“Kadeer!” Martin’s voice brought him out of his thoughts and he turned quickly.

“King... King Leonidas!” He barked pulling himself to attention by instinct.

Martin smiled and shook his head from where he stood, his arms still holding Aricia and For'mya. “No Kadeer my friend. You are family. You always have been and you always will be from now on. My family calls me by my name.”

Kadeer smiled and nodded his head though his eyes were moist. “Martin.” He spoke.

“Select a dozen of the best researchers that you have. Kenroe, Orman and Amena among them. They seem to be the most knowledgeable when it comes to what is going on. I want them exploring everything that is in the archives here.” Martin spoke. He turned to look at the sphere. “Staanio?”

“I will make the necessary entries into the security database so that they have unlimited access.” She answered. “It is what Daniho and Sumar wished after all.”

Martin nodded his head. “Good.” He said turning back to Kadeer. “Once you have done that, there is an Avatar inside, his name is Chiron, and he will assist you in uncoupling the two power units holding the chamber with my grandmother’s body and transferring it to SPARTA’S WRATH.”

The Sphere moved closer to him. “Martin what are you doing?” Reva asked.

Martin turned to face the sphere fully. “I’m going to fulfill a promise I made to my ancestor when I was speaking with him.” He told her. “A promise he asked of me.”

“What are you speaking of?” Reva asked him once more. “Him? You... carians... you spoke to...”

Martin nodded his head as he looked at the sphere. “Yes, grandmother I did. His Etheric essence was held in the levels below the Hall of Knowledge. Staanio Daniho spoke to me. He asked me to make sure that you were returned to your body. That you had done far more than he had ever wanted. It is time now for you to return to your family.”

“Martin I cannot.” Reva spoke. “I... the technology the Onab used to do this is... it does not exist anymore.”

Martin smiled. “Yes it does... and I know right where it is staania.” He spoke. “And I intend to keep that promise.”

“Father that...” Eliani stepped forward. “Staanio’s physical body will need...”

Martin nodded his head as he looked at daughter. “I know.” He told her with a smile. “So I suggest you get cracking.”

Eliani smiled at him. “Yes sir!”

Martin reached up and tapped his jaw activating his communications implant. “Chiron I assume you have discovered our implants and are monitoring?”

“Indeed Lord Leonidas.” The male voice replied.

“Meet me in the Circle’s main chamber Chiron.” Martin spoke. “Andro and I will join you there.”

“For what purpose Lord Leonidas?” Chiron asked.

“Ardorm Panur.” Martin spoke the two words.

There was a long pause before Chiron answered him. “Understood. I will be waiting.”

The sphere shifted and Reva’s voice spoke again. “What does this mean Martin?” She demanded. “Winter Wonder? What is going on?”

Martin leaned over and kissed Aricia and For'mya softly and lovingly. He gazed at them as he answered. “I’m going to put our family back together.” He answered her softly.

Martin looked over at Androcles who was holding Sadi and Carisia in his arms, one hand on Sadi’s abdomen, the Etheric essences of his children swirling through all of them. Sehri was scrunched up against his chest looking blissfully happy, while Ne'Veha, Caliria and Lu'ria were touching his still extended wings in wonder. “Keto? We have work to do.”

Martin turned, his wings extended out of his armor one more time, and he leaped into the sky as they propelled him away from the clearing. The sphere turned and watched as Andro touched all of his wives before he too leaped into the air and followed his father with powerful sweeps of those obsidian wings. The sphere turned back to where Aricia and For'mya still stood watching with love and pride on their faces.

“What is he doing?” Reva asked.

Aricia smiled as she looked at For'mya and then back to her. “Our beloved does not make a promise he does not intend to keep Lady Reva.” She answered. “Ever.”

THE SANCTUM

“...unlocked the full databases and made them accessible to just your personal PIs at this time. Further unlocks you can perform yourself King Leonidas.” Chiron spoke as they followed him down the corridor. They had taken the same elevator down into the Sanctum but turned in the other direction upon exiting. “You will be able to draw on this information whenever you desire, you just need to speak the same code word given to you by Lord Daniho. Only this exact code word, spoken in your voices will activate the data.”

“And what exactly is this information Chiron?” Martin asked as they walked down the corridor. “My staanio was not exactly generous with the details.”

Chiron stopped outside a set of double doors and placed his palm against the panel on the side. It glowed green briefly and he looked at them. “I have uploaded your biometric signatures to the databases of the Temple, the Circle and the Sanctum. Aside from yourself and Androcles I have uploaded your son Dorian, Laren Ti'shara, Daniel Simpson, Admiral O'Connor, Wayonn and Murano to the access database. You may add others if you wish.”

Martin shook his head. “Not right now. I want to know what Ardorm Panur means. You are avoiding answering my question, which is not something I’m used to from an Avatar. I know the meaning of the words Chiron, but what does the phrase really mean?”

Chiron blinked his eyes and the double doors slid aside. Martin and Andro’s eyes grew wide as they took in the massive galaxy star chart and the numerous computer positions across the huge room. Four enormous monitors came to life on the far side of the room as they entered, a dozen smaller ones spread across the different computer stations. The four huge monitors each depicted a different portion of the known galaxies based on the sampling of systems and stars that Martin saw.

“Sibfla?” Andro muttered as he stepped away from his father, his eyes wandering across the expanse of the room.

Chiron waited for the doors to slide shut before turning to Martin. “I am not avoiding the question King Leonidas, only waiting until we were in a more secure area to continue.” He looked around. “This Command Center is specially shielded and completely impenetrable by any sort of electronic monitoring. Any type of monitoring actually.”

“And?” Martin pressed him.

Chiron looked at him with something akin to a surprised expression on his face. Andro smiled at this as he turned back. “My father is keen to a saying from an ancient TV program Chiron. Just the facts ma’am.”

“What is a TV program?” Chiron asked.

“It doesn’t matter.” Andro replied. “What is Ardorm Panur?”

Chiron blinked several times and nodded his head. He moved to the main computer panel and typed several commands. Two of the large monitors changed and zeroed in on one portion of the galaxy while several of the smaller ones in front of them began to display information.

“Ardorm Panur is the nickname that Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten gave to their sister Kelia when she was born.” Chiron spoke now. “It is a name only they knew of, a name meant to signify the season during which she joined them.”

“Winter wonder?” Martin said softly.

Chiron nodded his head. “She was born during a large storm that brought fresh snow to our city and the morning after it was over, the entire city on Cerath was covered in a fine layer on snow and it appeared to many as...”

“A Winter wonderland.” Andro said.

Chiron nodded once more. “Hence the nickname they gave to her. No one knew of this nickname and they never used it with others present. Even Lady Reva does not know the true meaning.”

“Why?” Martin asked.

“Lady Kelia and Lord Lylor each had a beacon implanted into their bodies, as did all of their children and Kesas Pengot. A tracking beacon that also monitored their vital signs.”

“So they could be tracked?” Andro said.

“This Pengot went with Tenna Kelia then?” Martin asked.

Chiron nodded his head. “Through the many years of the Zin sarakoa vyen ils Kesas Pengot truly came into his own as Lord Daniho’s senior advisor outside of Lord Ashten and Lady Kelia. He was included in everything. He knew of everything. While not of their blood they accepted him into their family and he was far closer to their family than most realized. He left with Lady Kelia, taking his wife and mate and their four remaining children.”

“Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten did not destroy all of the advanced equipment that they had when they settled on Lycavore.” Chiron continued. “They secreted away a single computer to monitor these beacons. Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten always knew where their sister went.” Chiron spoke. “They could not communicate with her, but they knew where she was and that she was alive.”

“Why not tell staania Reva?” Martin asked.

“They did not want Lady Reva diverting her many activities in an attempt to monitor everything that was happening.” Chiron answered them. “The location of Lady Kelia was on the other side of the galaxy and even with the propulsion ability of the Sphere, it would have taken her decades to move between the locations.”

“But the Sphere has Portal Drive capability doesn’t it?” Andro asked.

Chiron nodded. “Yes, but in a much more scaled down version.” He replied. “Without the power of an entire ship to draw on, the Sphere’s Portal Drive was limited in its capability to go from one location to the next.” He explained. “It was not done intentionally, the Onab just did not know what Lord Daniho and Ashten had fully planned.”

“Wait a minute...” Martin spoke. “Staania said this Loras Ranev that is with Anja, she said she was the last one. That she felt the last of Kelia’s descendants on Jetania but could no longer feel her daughter. She was talking about this Loras?”

“That is correct.” Chiron said. “The pureness of your families’ blood allows you to feel each other even across vast distances, you know this. Lady Reva could feel her daughter within her and was content in that knowledge.”

“But staania said she could not feel her anymore.” Andro spoke. “That she had passed on?”

Chiron nodded his head. “Correct. Consequently, she believed that her daughter had been lost three thousand and fourteen years after the death of her sons and their family on Lycavore.”

“That was over two million years ago!” Martin said.

Chiron nodded once more. “Yes. Two million one hundred and thirteen thousand years to be exact.” He replied. “Lady Reva had thought she had lost all of her family except for Makeb, and she focused entirely on him and then on Lady Dynina and then on Sumar’s bloodline. And finally on you. She could only assume that since she could no longer feel Lady Kelia within her that those of our people who had gone with her and Lord Lylor were also lost.”

“But she can feel this female on Jetania? This Loras? How is that possible if Tenna Kelia is gone?” Androcles stated.

Chiron nodded his head again. “This began slightly more than five hundred and twenty years ago King Leonidas. It wasn’t a constant resonance, but it was enough for Lady Reva to pinpoint her location and determine who she was eventually. It is why she had Nilantha assign Rylin to protect her when she came of age.”

“Staania has been in contact with Nilantha on Jetania?” Andro asked.

Chiron nodded his head. “Oh yes.” He replied. “For many centuries, even before Loras Ranev was born.”

“She didn’t mention this to Anja.” Martin spoke.

“And she would not have.” Chiron answered. “Lady Reva swore her to secrecy from the first day. At least until you arrived.”

“And Nilantha knows what Loras is?” Martin asked now.

Chiron shook his head this time. “No. Lady Reva only inferred that Loras Ranev needed to be protected at all costs. That she was part of a much larger future. Nilantha accepted this without question as she was already devoted to what Lord Dadrien and Lord Sumar had left for her to do. She is the one your son Achilles has chosen Lord Androcles.”

“Does she know this?” Andro asked.

“She was within the connection with Lady Anja and the others for most of the time you were connected, so I can only assume that she heard what her destiny is.” Chiron answered. “She left the connection abruptly and Lady Anja followed moments later, just as you felt.”

“So I’m confused...” Martin spoke. “What does this have to do with Tenna Kelia? And how did someone with our blood get from Lycavore to Jetania and how does this Osrod idiot not know who she is?”

Chiron shook his head. “I am unable to answer these questions. The same can be said for Lord Jomann presence among you.” He spoke.

“What do you mean?” Andro asked much more interested now.

“I have reviewed all of the manifests of the ships that went to Lycavore and those that departed with Lord Lylor and Lady Kelia. There is no mention of a member of the Kirek Pack on those ships that departed Cerath for Lycavore.” Chiron explained. “I can only suggest that this was Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten’s doing. They inserted a member or members of the Kirek Pack on their ships going to Lycavore under a different pack name. To hide their identity. They were very good at subterfuge. A trait that you and Lord Androcles have taken to the next level I might add King Leonidas.”

“But why?” Androcles pressed him.

Chiron shook his head. “I do not know nor do I possess a sufficient amount of data to formulate an answer.”

“Guess.” Martin told him.

“Guessing would be...” Chiron began but stopped when Martin held up his hand.

“Guess Chiron.” Martin told him.

Chiron met his eyes for a few moments. “Given Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten’s sense for all of our people, I can only assume that they did this in order to keep the Packs alive should something happen to one group or the next.”

“So based on that, it’s very likely they did this with a small number from every pack?” Martin said.

Chiron nodded his head. “Yes.”

“Why hide them?” Martin asked. “And how did the other Packs not know this. They would have detected their bloodline the moment they caught their scent.”

Chiron nodded his head. “True. Unless they were masked somehow. At least for the short term, until they arrived at their destination. After that it would make no sense.”

“I know you can alter a scent for a short time. Scent maskers can do that.” Martin spoke. “How do you block a true scent completely? I’ve never heard of that.”

Chiron nodded his head. “It is very difficult, but not impossible. The Onab researchers were able to construct a small device that, when implanted in the host’s body, could alter their blood lipids and block the primary scent and disguise it. This masking would also be passed down through the blood to future generations. At least to those without the Mahanlo sense of smell.”

Martin looked at him. “What?”

Chiron turned back to the computer and typed several things. “After several decades of research into why the Mahanlo bloodline is the only one marked with dual fangs, they also discovered that your bloodline was also the purest of Lycavorian blood. Lady Reva told you this.”

Martin nodded. “Yes, so?”

“What she did not mention to you is that the Mahanlo bloodline is also superior to other bloodlines in physical terms. Strength, endurance, your senses. They are all superior.” Chiron told him. “It is extremely unlikely that someone of Mahanlo blood would not be able to detect this masking of a true bloodline. I would make a supposition and say this is what your daughter Eliani detected within Jomann the first moment she met him.”

“So Eli detected his true bloodline?” Andro asked.

Chiron nodded his head. “Yes. Which is why the attraction between them was so intense and why it continues even now. The Mahanlo bloodline will always choose the next strongest bloodline to mate with. It has always been this way. When they consummated their mating and shared blood, whatever was masking Lord Jomann’s true Kirek bloodline was removed and this is how Lady Reva detected it within him. Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten took four of the five purest of the Lycavorian bloodlines that remained with them. The last one went with Lady Kelia. The Nenay Pack.”

“Aricia?” Martin asked. “Sadi?”

Chiron nodded his head. “No matter what Pack that your history says they descend from, Queen Aricia’s true bloodline is of the Carbula Pack. Warriors one and all and behind the Kirek Pack, the most dedicated to the Mahanlo bloodline.” Chiron looked at Andro. “Princess Sadi descends from the Domara Pack Lord Androcles, most of them scholars and some of the most intelligent scientists and researchers among our people at that time. Your history is not wrong King Leonidas, but as Lady Reva explained to you, it is also not complete.”

Martin nodded his head. “In order to protect us.”

Chiron nodded his head. “Yes.” He answered. “Perhaps not the most efficient way to do this, but at the time there were no other options. Lady Reva is very correct when she says your son is the reunification of our people Androcles. Within your father are four of the eight original bloodlines that were on Lycavore. The Mahanlo bloodline is and always will be dominant, but over time it was mixed. Your birth Androcles, that made it six because of your mother Aricia. Your son’s birth and his choosing of Lady Loras will complete the circle of the packs that left Cerath all those years ago.”

“What about the four Packs that staanio Daniho exiled?” Andro asked him.

Chiron shook his head. “The four Packs that were cast out by Lord Daniho eventually died out in the ensuing years after their support of the assassination of the Mahanlo bloodline and its ultimate failure. The last of their bloodlines died during the Brutu Jur.” (Black Day)

“They lasted that long?” Martin asked surprised.

Chiron nodded his head. “They were nothing more than scavengers and mongrels by then.” He replied. “The other Packs on Lycavore would shun them and even kill them if they were caught. Through the years leading up to the Brutu Jur, their numbers dwindled to almost nothing, and as I said, the Black Day finished them.”

Martin stood up straighter and shook his head. “Wow!” He spoke. “Sibfla, this is almost too much to take in.” He said.

Chiron turned to the computer console once more and he began typing several more commands. “Back to your original inquiry about what this has to do with Lady Kelia?” He motioned to the monitor as he moved over in front of the large screen and they followed him.

Martin and Andro could see six bright dots on the screen in two different locations. Five were grouped together, while one was by itself on another planet it appeared. Chiron lifted his hand and pointed to the group of five white dots. "These dots represent the real time positions of Lylor Kirek, Kesas Pengot, and three of Lady Kelia's and Lord Lylor's six children. All of them went into stasis at the same time, the same time Lady Reva ceased being able to feel Lady Kelia and her grandchildren, but roughly fifty years after this event took place, three of their children's beacons stopped operating very abruptly. This was exactly one point three million years ago. The rest have remained constant since then." He pointed to the single bright dot. "This... this is the real time position of Lady Kelia."

Martin looked at him with wide eyes. "They are alive!" He gasped loudly. "Chiron you're telling me that they are alive! That Kelia is alive!!!"

Chiron nodded his head. "Very much so King Leonidas." He answered him confidently. "With the exception of Kesas Pengot, their vital signs have maintained a constant rate with no variation in the least since that time."

Andro looked at him now. "Are you saying they are in suspended animation?" He asked. "Some sort of cryo sleep?"

Chiron nodded his head. "I do not know for certain but given the state of their vital signs, yes, that can be the only hypothesis. Kesas Pengot's vital signs have varied through the many years but he is very healthy and still active it appears."

"Saoi nubous sibfla!" Martin muttered loudly as he turned away from the monitor for a moment.

"Father we must retrieve them!" Andro stated excitedly. "We must go to them!"

Chiron typed on the computer console once more upon hearing this and he watched as the screen shifted. "You should probably see this before you make any decisions."

Martin and Andro turned back to the monitor. "What?" Martin hissed softly.

"Without informing Lady Reva of my actions, I constructed a data probe five hundred and nineteen years ago with a limited Portal Drive capability. Two years after she began to feel Loras Ranev's resonance." Chiron began. "After an exhaustive search of the surrounding area of Jetania, I was able to determine how this Loras Ranev appeared on Jetania. Using classified information obtained first from Nilantha's ship archives and then again from computer archives on Ventori that I was able to tap into, I was able to trace her parents to Ventori but that is where the trail ended." Chiron looked at Martin. "Loras Ranev's parents did not arrive on Ventori with the others of the Pralor Seed mission that settled them there King Leonidas. I checked the Pralor data archives fully. They kept meticulous records. That leaves only one option. They came from somewhere else."

Martin nodded his head. "I'm with you so far." He said. "Then how did they get there?" Martin asked.

Chiron typed on the computer console once more and the images changed to another sector of space. "I programmed the probe to increase its search radius of the surrounding systems by a factor of twenty and to send a burst message back to me when it discovered something."

Andro moved closer to him. "It found something didn't it? What did it find?" He asked.

"Eighty-five years later I received a burst transmission from the probe." Chiron spoke as he typed in several more commands and the clear images of numerous planets appeared.

Martin moved closer to the monitor and was looking at the data as it flashed across the screen.

"Chiron... Chiron these are... these are Lycavorian life signs." He finally spoke.

Chiron nodded his head. "Yes King Leonidas. After carefully reviewing the data archives here, I realized that the probe had discovered the location of where the Arhtai Pack, Nenay Pack and the remainder of the Kirek Pack had gone."

Andro reached out and grabbed his father's arm. "Father!" He gasped. "The... The Lost Ones!" He stammered.

Martin looked at him. "No! That can't be. Those I found on Lycavore, the Rothryn, they were the Lost Ones."

"Are you... are you absolutely certain father?" Andro rasped out the words once more.

Martin looked at Chiron as his mind began to race. "Chiron?" He asked finally.

"I cannot answer that question King Leonidas but given the data that we have... what Lord Canth told you... I would theorize that Lord Androcles is correct." Chiron answered him. He turned back to the computer.

“The probe monitored communications and public channels for three weeks. The planet’s names are Koltar Four and Anlar Prime. The third planet here... this is known as Pakar Six.”

“It’s further away from the other two.” Andro stated. “Far less population too.”

Chiron nodded his head. “You are correct Lord Androcles. Pakar Six’s environment is, while not inhospitable, it is far less than ideal. The population is less than one million, eight hundred thousand four hundred and seven to be exact, while Koltar Four and Anlar Prime have a combined population of nearly twenty-eight billion. And something that they should not have as well.” Chiron spoke turning to look at Martin.

Martin met his eyes. “What is that?”

“Technology.” Andro said softly.

Chiron nodded his head. “Correct. It was agreed before all the Packs left Cerath that they would destroy all traces of Onab technology when they arrived at their destination. The Iais’Kai are attracted to advanced technology and that is what Lord Daniho wanted to avoid.”

“So they disregarded his instructions and kept the technology.” Martin spoke.

Chiron nodded his head. “It would seem so. The probe was able to scan all three planets and it discovered that Koltar Four and Anlar Prime have very modern technology, while Pakar Six does not. The technology present does not seem to have advanced much from what we had on Cerath, certainly not like Pralor technology or what you and our people within the Union have begun to develop, but it is advanced enough to attract Iais’Kai attention if they were in the area. Luckily that does not seem to be the case right now.”

“How far are they from Pralor space?” Andro asked.

“Given the current level of Iais’Kai propulsion technology right now, it would take one of their ships at least five hundred years to reach this location, and that is just from the very far reaches of the old Pralor Empire. We do not know where they are centrally located as a species now.” Chiron answered him. “They are also limited to Quantum Fusion Drives at present as you know and they are not known for exploring uncharted areas of space, which this area is.”

Martin looked at Andro. “That’s why they are messing with the Darastrixi in the way they are.” He said. “They think the Darastrixi have Portal Drive capability and they are doing everything they can to find out.”

Andro nodded his head. “Given what Koppentotz Aviel and General Dytin have told us, that certainly makes the most sense. It would also answer several questions as to why they are trying to create offspring from Darastrixi and Iais’Kai.” He replied. “But the Darastrixi don’t have that technology. Do they Chiron?”

Chiron shook his head. “No... they are not even close to it. Lady Dynina’s people here took what Portal Drive information was left for them and then improved on it and made it better after many years of testing as the Onab intended. This was something that the Onab did not do as much of as they should have. We are the only ones right now with that technology.”

“But the packs that went with Tenna Kelia...” Andro said. “Their ships had Portal Drives didn’t they?”

Chiron shook his head. “No. It was not a perfected science even when the Packs left Cerath and Lord Daniho refused to allow it to be used on our ships in order to keep them safe.” Chiron typed on the computer some more. “There is something else King Leonidas. Something more interesting and quite unsettling.” He adjusted the monitor and then pointed to several data entries. “The probe was equipped with moderately powerful sensors that were able to trace our Lycavorian bloodlines.”

“Oh... this isn’t going to be good.” Martin muttered.

Chiron adjusted the controls. “Koltar Four’s entire population is comprised of the Arhtai Pack bloodline. All sixteen billion of them. I can trace those bloodlines back to many of those that left Cerath. The population of Anlar Prime is comprised of a combination of both Arhtai Pack and Nenay Pack bloodlines. Interaction is active between the two planets, but it is very abnormal activity compared to what was displayed on Cerath. Numerous computer models have determined that normal mating cycles would have produced the corresponding population numbers given the number of years that have passed.”

“I sense a ‘but’ coming Chiron.” Martin stated.

Chiron adjusted the monitor once more to focus on Pakar Six. “The Lycavorians on Pakar Six are predominantly of the Kirek Pack, with a small mixture of the bloodlines from the Arhtai and Nenay Packs which suggests they took members of the two other packs into their own.” He looked at Martin. “The Kirek Pack left Cerath with nearly six million survivors among their number to include some smaller Packs that had formed due to their size under the Kirek Pack surname and leadership King Leonidas. As I said, the population of Pakar Six is barely one million strong.”

“And?” Martin asked him.

“Lady Kelia and Lord Lylor had six children that departed with them.” Chiron replied to him. “Between their six children, they had thirty-three children themselves. Lady Kelia and Lord Lylor were talking of having more children when they left. The numbers do not add up. The probe was only able to detect Mahanlo blood in the active stasis chambers King Leonidas. If my calculations are accurate, given the number of years that have gone by and Lycavorian breeding periods, there should be well over a million Lycavorians with Mahanlo blood in them by now. There are only five on these three planets. Loras Ranev and her parents on Jetania make eight, but I cannot detect the bloodlines in any of them.”

Andro turned his head from where he had been staring at the large monitor. “Loras and her parents are masking it?” Andro asked.

Chiron nodded his head. “That is the only supposition I can make at this time. Whether they are aware of this or not I cannot answer. I suspect they are not aware. Something inside them, something the probe could not detect readily with its sensors is hiding their true bloodline as Lord Androcles has said. And that can only mean it was put there intentionally by someone who knew the Onab possessed such technology.”

“And how many knew about that?” Martin asked.

“Only four that I am aware of. Lord Daniho, Lord Ashten, Lady Kelia and Lord Lylor.” Chiron answered. “It is possible Lord Pengot knew, but I do not have enough information to make that determination. As I said, he was closest to Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten outside of their sister and Lylor Kirek. What they may have told him, allowed him to see, it is not fully known.”

“And what about the Kirek Pack?” Martin asked as he turned back to the screen after a long moment.

Chiron shook his head. “Only those that reside on Pakar Six have Kirek bloodlines in them.” He replied.

“Out of nearly six million.” Martin spoke softly as his eyes narrowed.

“Yes.”

“And Tenna Kelia and Lylor were in charge when they left?” Martin asked him.

Chiron nodded his head. “This was agreed to when they departed. By all the Packs.”

“Father...” Andro spoke softly now reaching out to put his hand on his father’s shoulder. “They were betrayed.” He said.

Martin nodded his head slowly. “And nearly wiped out it seems.” He said looking back to the avatar. “Chiron is this possible naturally.”

Chiron shook his head. “A natural event or disease that targeted one specific pack?” He said. “It’s possible I suppose... but given the natural resilience of our people King Leonidas... it is extremely unlikely. In fact, the odds are seven million four hundred and nineteen to one that this was a natural occurrence due to the pureness of the Kirek Pack’s blood.”

“They... they betrayed and killed our blood!” Andro hissed angrily now. “And those who were our closest allies and friends for millennia! From the very beginning! They were Jomann’s ancestors!”

Martin pushed back from the computer console, his face unreadable as different emotions coursed through him and he reached out to put his hand on his son’s shoulder in order to calm the anger and hate he felt seething through Andro’s blood. He turned away from Chiron and Androcles after a moment and let his thoughts go. His mind flashed back to what his long dead grandfather had told him not so very long ago.

“My burden has now become your burden staaniketo. And one day it will fall to Androcles and then to his first born son Achilles, and so on down our line. This will never change. In many ways I regret this but looking at you before me, at your son Androcles, your other children, and those to come, I see the strength within all of them. It is undeniable and no wolf will ever be able to deny it either.” Daniho looked at him. “Unite our people again Martin. Repair what my actions in the past did to our people and do not make my mistakes.”

Martin turned to look at Chiron. “You said that Kesas Pengot is still alive. That he is not in stasis like the others?”

Chiron nodded his head. “Correct. His vital signs clearly indicate that he is active.”

“This probe you sent Chiron?” Martin asked him. “Is it still in the area?”

Chiron nodded his head. “I powered it down next to an asteroid field at the edge of the system. It is undetectable.”

Andro looked at his father, could see the wheels turning in his head. He stepped closer to him. “Father?”

Martin’s dark brown eyes focused on Chiron. “Can you program this probe to send a message to Kesas Pengot that will not be detected from the other planets?”

Chiron nodded once more. “A simple matter King Leonidas, however Kesas Pengot is no fool. If what we fear has indeed taken place, he will be very cautious in his actions now.”

Andro turned from his father and looked at Chiron. “Our crest.” He said. “Would he know what our family crest is now?”

Chiron blinked several times before nodding. “It was in the book of knowledge that he had with him when he left Cerath. A collection of Onab writings and prophecy. This symbol was in there.”

“Attach that to the message.” Martin told him.

“What would this message say King Leonidas?” Chiron asked.

Martin looked at his son. His first born and the one who knew him and what he would do better than anyone with the possible exceptions of Danny and Torma. He reached out and took Andro’s arm when he saw his son nod.

“The message should say... the message should say Evell wen chevshs.” Martin answered him. “We are coming!”

JETANIA

PRESENT TIME

Her sisters had lied to her. All of the times they had talked of these things, all the times they had described what they felt and they had not told her the truth.

Retta Leonidas was discovering it for herself now and it was utterly divine.

It was glorious.

It was paradise.

Her mind raced with happiness, her lithe, naked body and Lazar’s powerfully sculpted body were covered in a fine sheen of sweat, her dark red hair damp and plastered to her skin and his, and his powerful arms were wrapped around her waist as he gently suckled her firm, medium sized breasts and their breathing slowly returned too normal. His huge manhood was softening now, but still deeply buried within her depths and filling her completely.

This was paradise to her.

FOUR HOURS EARLIER

The scent of his blood had become too much to resist even in the background as it was. No matter where she turned, who was next to her, or how much her sisters tried to help her, his wonderful wild apples and cinnamon scent was maddening. Given the opportunity that the sudden Etheric link that her father had allowed, Retta turned to the one person she trusted and held above everyone else save her father and mothers. Her twin Calyb.

I don’t know how much longer I can resist Calyb. Retta had told him in their private connection even while Reva had talked. He is so tall and so powerful and so handsome.

Are you absolutely certain sister? Calyb had asked her. The first Phase is always the most powerful.

Calyb, my blood burns like it is on fire whenever I smell him. My body... it becomes so aroused and sensitive. I know the first Phase is the most powerful, but this is different. Retta told him. He is so proud Calyb and he is not like the others around us. He holds his own desire for me in check and it hurts him. I can smell the pureness of his blood within him. It is almost familiar somehow and it calls to me like a moth to a flame. I don't know how much longer I can fight it fervor.

Then don't. Calyb told her. Don't fight it arande. Don't resist. We are Leonidas. Father and our mothers have always taught us to go after what we want. If this wolf affects you so... then do what your blood calls for Retta.

I do not want... I do not want our family to be angry Calyb. Retta spoke.

If he burns for you as intensely as you say sister, then hurting you is not possible for him. Calyb spoke. If he burns for you as you burn for him... what do you think Andro will do? What do you think father will do?

I don't...

Yes, you do Retta. You know exactly what they will do. Especially our brother. Calyb told her. If you are certain sister, then you do what your blood calls for. Our father and siblings will sense it the moment they meet him. Have no fear sister. Reach for what you desire. Reach for it and take it.

Retta Leonidas had done just that and now she was so very happy that she had.

Finding his quarters had been ridiculously easy once she left their group and her nose told him he was inside. The door was not locked and Retta had entered without even pausing. She discovered him by the bed, dressed only from the waist down. Seeing the sculpted definition of his body had caused her to nearly lose control right there, but she was a Leonidas daughter and she grasped onto that fact tightly. His eyes had grown wide when he smelled her and her mint and honey scent collided with his nostrils. Retta had secured the door upon entering and she stepped closer to him, her own wolf eyes wide and her dual fangs fully extended in passionate desire. Yes, she wanted this, and the wild apples and cinnamon scent she smelled assaulting her own senses wanted it as well. Even more than she did.

"Retta... what..." Lazar stammered the words as her delicious scent wafted over him. He didn't know how, some instinctual part of him held his aura in check as he gazed at her with wide wolf eyes and extended fangs.

Then she was in front of him, millimeters from his body and the full force of her scent and female aura cascaded over him, calling to him, igniting his own aura even further as he struggled to control it.

"Retta... I... I cannot..."

"Then don't!" Retta hissed at him. "Take me now! Make me yours in any way you want, however you desire! Just... just promise to let me show you something."

Lazar shook his head as his desire for this female grew nearly beyond what he was able to control. "Show... show me?" He stammered again.

"Promise me Lazar Aspion!" Retta demanded in a husky voice filled with fervor and desire unlike anything she had ever imagined could exist.

And that is when Lazar Aspion gave in the desire within him and he grabbed Retta in his arms, lifting her up and feeling her arms instantly encircle his shoulders and her legs lock around his waist.

"Anything!" Lazar growled at her just before he unleashed his full Alpha wolf aura on her and covered her lips with his own with a desperate hunger.

PRESENT TIME

Carians he had fulfilled his promise to her and so much more Retta thought as she held his head tightly.

He had taken her that first time, with undisguised passion and fervor. His aura washed over her completely and Retta Leonidas experienced for the first time the full, unshielded aura of an Alpha wolf. She would have done anything for him... to him... anything he wanted of her she would have given him. She could not deny him.

As their passion cooled now, Retta remembered how he had nearly ripped her body armor off and then speared her completely from behind in one soul robbing plunge. Her blissful cries of ecstasy filled his ears and the entire room as she reached back with her hands and tried to draw him even deeper inside her.

Yet even that first time had not compared to what followed.

Retta could not recall how many times she had exploded as he filled her that first time, but when his essence erupted into her depths, Lazar, by force of will alone, reigned in his male aura and cradled her within his arms as they both shook in the wake of what had just happened. Without removing himself from her velvety warm, Lazar turned her to face him and kissed her with undisguised ardor. That is when Retta showed him that there was so much more. Even as her body burned for more of him, she had taken his face in her hands and pressed her forehead to his before opening her mouth and biting into his shoulder deeply. Lazar's arms had tightened around her body but he did not pull away and once more instinct took over for him and he bit down into her supple skin. His eyes had gone wide as his mind filled with so much knowledge and so many sensations. Things he had never felt before poured into his being and with barely any effort, and guided by Retta's loving touch, he reached out and encircled Retta's mind in a protective cocoon of Etheric ability that had laid dormant within him for his entire life. Dormant until it was unlocked by the woman who would hold his essence forever. The pleasure spiraled to new heights as they both surrendered to the passion that embraced them and Lazar Aspion did not look back.

Lazar released her delicious breast from his lips and lifted his face to stare at her as she gazed down into his face. Never in all his life had Lazar experienced anything like he had for the last four hours.

Lazar Aspion was no stranger to women by any means, but Retta Leonidas eclipsed them all by so far a margin they had quickly fallen from his memory. Her honey and mint scent was an addiction to him now, the feel of her lithe and supple body in his arms godly. Even now, four hours later, his aura and passion was still at its peak because of her, her female aura still tickling him, yet they were both too tired to continue. He could feel her silky depths gently squeezing him within her, causing shivers of lingering pleasure to swirl throughout both of them as their passion cooled. He stared into her captivating dark green wolf eyes now, those eyes flecked with spots of beautiful yellow gold and her hands came down to his face, caressing his bearded cheek with loving fingertips.

"You... you are mine." Lazar spoke the words that had wanted to come out for days now. "You are mine Retta Leonidas. All of you is mine. All of me is yours. I want no other. Desire no other. Only you."

Retta's eyes became moist and she lowered her lips to kiss him hungrily, her four-inch-long tongue plunging between his lips to do battle with his own tongue. Lazar's arms tightened around her even more and she whimpered in delight before pulling her lips from his.

"I am yours Lazar Aspion!" Retta gasped. "All of me is yours. All of you is mine. I want no other. Desire no other. Only you." She repeated his exact words to her.

Lazar shook his head quickly. "No... not Lazar Aspion. I would never dishonor you by making you take that name" He said. "I was adopted long ago by the Ranev Pack and that is the name I use. I only use my father's name in public when I am forced too."

Retta smiled brilliantly and kissed him softly. "Retta Ranev." She said trying out the words. "I like that."

"I have... I have never felt what I feel for you Retta. Even now my blood surges for you. It... it sings for you." Lazar said.

"As mine does for you." Retta told him.

"How is this possible?"

Retta shook her head. "I don't know." She answered. "And I don't care. Do you?"

Lazar smiled at her and shook his head. "No." He lowered his face and nuzzled her skin between her breasts. Her fever was still there, still bright, but now it was muted because he had claimed her. And she had claimed him. He looked up quickly, his beautiful dark eyes wide as if he remembered something. "Retta... are you... did..."

Retta immediately knew what he was talking about and she shook her head quickly. "No!" She told him.

"But how?" He asked. "You are... you are most fertile now and I am... I am not..."

Retta took her face in his hands once more. "I am not ready for children yet either my love." She told him. "But they will be your children when the time comes that we are ready. My father's blood and my healing ability allow me to... regulate my body in many ways. When we are both ready, then I will carry your children happily. As many as you like."

Lazar looked at her and his eyes took on a decidedly sexy glare in them that sent shivers through Retta. "Does that mean...?"

Retta threw back her head and laughed gleefully before looking at him. "You must feed me first aur enyla!" She told him. "I am starving!"

Lazar slid instantly to the edge of the bed and stood up, the echo of Retta's last words pounding in his head. My love. Lazar liked that immensely. Retta yelped in surprise as she wrapped her legs around his waist and her arms around his head as his manhood slipped from inside her when he stood up. "Food." Lazar muttered looking around for the exit to the door. "Yes, food."

"Lazar!" Retta hissed and she watched his face turn to hers surprised at the force of her words.

"What?"

"Are you going to take me to where the food is without any clothes?" She asked him with bright, loving eyes.

Lazar's eyes grew wider as he realized what she was saying and he began searching for their clothes. "Sibfla!" He snorted in embarrassment. "Clothes first... food second! Yes!" He told her.

Retta drew his head closer. "And then I will have you for desert." She spoke to him in a husky voice.

Lazar leaned over and furiously nuzzled her cheek and the side of her neck, being careful to intentionally linger around the back of her ear, which he had found was incredibly sensitive to his touch. Retta's gasp of obvious delight made him smile. "You are desert my sweet Retta." He whispered in her ear. "All the desert that I will ever need in my life going forward. Elly for innyne."

Tears burst from her eyes and she crushed him to her tightly. Lazar paused and sat back down on the bed, pulling her closer to him and reveling in the emotions sweeping through him now and the feel of her body in his arms. "Elly for innyne." Retta whispered in his ear. "Elly for innyne."

Yes. Forever and always sounded very good to Lazar.

They did not know it now, but their love would burn intensely for many thousands of years into the future and would be one part of the foundation that would be laid by the Leonidas children in the future to come.

Garget found Anja and Loras on the very far platform of the airfield, sitting lotus style and talking with each other. He and Rylin had been looking for them for nearly an hour now and they were now crossing the distance to where they sat.

"... why she left this connection?" Garget asked her as they walked.

Rylin shook her head. "She seemed confused and uneasy but physically she was fine."

"Rylin... you are the High Priestess of our people." Garget spoke softly as his dark eyes turned to her and his gait slowed. "Is this... is this really happening?"

Rylin smiled and slipped her arm into the crook of his elbow. "Oh yes, Garget my friend. Very much so." She spoke.

Garget shook his head once more. "It just seems so... I have believed in the Prophecy only halfheartedly. I never... I never dreamed it would actually come true. That it would truly take place."

Rylin nodded her head. "I doubted once as well." She spoke.

Garget looked at her with wide eyes. "You?" He gasped.

Rylin nodded her head again. "We all have had doubts Garget Ranev. Mine were washed away the moment I stepped onto the Oracle's ship and saw the prophecy for myself in the images and drawings it held. I have never doubted since then." She answered looking at him. "Never."

"Will I... will I see these one day?" He asked.

Rylin smiled at him. "You are seeing it as it happens my friend. You may think you have only believed in the prophecy halfheartedly, but your actions with Taris say different. With your own daughter and now Anoria they say different."

"What?" Garget gasped again.

"You allowed your daughter to grow and learn on her own terms Garget." Rylin told him. "Many fathers would not do such a thing."

Garget looked at the ground under his feet where they had stopped walking and now stood. "She is... she has always been special." He spoke softly. "I could see this in her eyes from the moment she entered this world howling like a banshee."

Rylin nodded her head. "Indeed." She said. "And now you know of her feelings for Anoria and what they mean but you allow it. As does Anoria's father Lasun Vesrak, a man I dare say is more traditional than even you."

Garget met her eyes. "I will not keep my only daughter from her dreams!" He hissed.

Rylin smiled and nodded her head. "And that cranky old wolf Lasun will not either." She said. "You have something in common in that Taris and Anoria are your only daughters. And as they have found each other now... the young Alpha who will claim them both is not far behind, and he will worship them both beyond anything else."

"What?" Garget gasped aloud now. "He is with the Mard Revik?"

Rylin nodded her head. "He is a son of the Mard Revik Garget." Rylin told him. "Young like Taris and Anoria, but already a warrior like his father and his brother the Tarivuos. And he is a healer as well. They know this my friend. They have seen this in their visions Garget and they welcome it, desire it more than anything."

Garget glanced up at the clear sky above them, the sun beginning its trip down across the horizon. "I will never deny her anything." He said softly.

"You will not be disappointed Garget my friend, for the Ranev Pack will be paramount in what is to come." Rylin told him. "And tied more closely to the Bloodline of the Mard Revik than you could ever hope."

"Rylin you do..." Garget began to speak when the shouted voice caused him to turn and they both saw the young wolf sprinting up to them.

Garget held up his hand as the young wolf came to a halt out of breath. "Calmly Kness." He said. "What is wrong young Alpha?"

Kness held out the data pad to him. "General Garget... he... King Osrod's son Juyno and his hunting party have changed direction." He said as Garget took the pad. "They are making their way here to Warim and will be here just after nightfall. Three hours maximum."

Garget looked at the pad carefully. "You are certain of their direction?" He asked.

Kness nodded his head. "They have already called ahead and arranged for lodgings."

Rylin's eyes were wide. "Garget we must insure they..."

Garget looked at her and nodded his head. "Be calm Rylin." He told her. "This is my area of knowledge now. Juyno will not challenge my directives for he knows I would be within my rights to pummel his piegn mida into the ground." He turned back to Kness. "Insure that the word goes out quietly to all of the families of our young females who are near or in Phase, especially those who are entering their First Phase. Osrod's fool son and his friends know the rules. They cannot take any female within the confines of our settlements. If they do, they are subject to our laws then. And our laws do not allow this. Make certain all of our females are suitably protected by members of their families at all times while that igord is within the city." He spoke. "We have seen this before Kness. We will act as we always act."

Kness nodded his head quickly and then turned to sprint back to the Command Center. Garget turned to Rylin.

"Everything will be fine." He spoke.

"Juyno is a beast." Rylin said. "He is worse than his father. If he discovers Lazar or Rhaos are here he will..."

"He will not." Garget spoke. "Lazar is far too preoccupied at the moment to wander into the city."

Rylin tilted her head. "What do you mean?"

Garget looked at her. "He has claimed a mate." He answered her with a smile. "I do not know who... but I have been told a young female entered his quarters several hours ago and the cries of passion began almost immediately."

Rylin's eyes grew wide in happiness. "Lazar Ranev!" She gasped. "Will wonders never cease! Who is she Garget? We must find out and have a celebration!"

"She is my daughter Retta." Anja's voice answered causing them to turn quickly and see her and Loras standing beside one another, holding hands like they had been dear friends for centuries.

Rylin's hand went to her face in shock. "Oh my, Queen Anja I didn't...!" She gasped.

Anja shook her head with a smile. "I am not upset." She said. "I could not be upset given what I have felt within my daughter."

Even Loras was stunned and she turned to face Anja. “Anja you are certain of this?” She gasped. “I... I am so sorry! I did not...”

Anja shook her head again. “None of you have anything to be sorry for.” She stated. “I have seen what your son Lazar feels for my daughter Loras. She showed me. And it was so very beautiful. He could not have done it if Retta did not want him too. I know my daughters and what they are capable of. Retta burned for him just as intensely as he did for her. Lazar is your son, and given the blood that burns within both of you, it doesn’t surprise me in the least to be honest. It is who you truly are.”

“Who they truly are?” Rylin asked. “I don’t understand.”

“It doesn’t matter now.” Anja spoke with a smile. “Retta chose him just as he chose her. Her father and her brothers will smell this on them both the instant they see them. Martin will welcome him after what he feels in Lazar. It is her brothers he will have to convince. Knowing Androcles though, that will not be hard.”

“How so?” Garget asked.

“Andro is the self-proclaimed guardian of his siblings.” Anja told them. “If Androcles accepts him, which I know he will, given what I can feel within Lazar, then our other children will accept him instantly. Do not worry. You will see for yourself.”

Loras smiled now her face happy and bright. “We will explain it to you Rylin. To both of you. I am still coming to grasp it myself but Anja says we will know more when the Mard Revik arrives.”

“He’s coming then?” Garget asked looking at her.

Anja nodded in response. “He pulsed me a single message just before they left the Etheric connection. He said one day; two at most and they would join us here.”

“They?” Garget asked.

Anja smiled and nodded her head. “Our family... Martin has a love of family that I have never experienced before. That we have never experienced before.” She answered. “You and Loras and Lazar, all of you... the Ranev Pack... you are now part of that family Garget. The Leonidas family can throw a party I’ll tell you that... and we have a lot to celebrate right now.” She stepped up to Garget and took his other arm since Rylin still grasped his elbow. “Let’s walk and I can tell you more. You will learn it first-hand anyway, so there is no reason to hold back from you. Not anymore.”

HADOR PRALOR SCIENCE STATION

“...Secure all of the main access hatches!” Thoti barked out the command. “No one is to go alone! Edrao how many of the station personnel are aware we are here?”

Edrao moved quickly to the computer console in the main control room for the station, his heart still racing and his eyes wide. The last fourteen minutes had been more intense than anything he had ever experienced in his long life as a Pralor, or his life now as a wolf. Their main ship was hovering only a few hundred meters from the station still under what they called a Shroud. The two transport ships they had come to the station on had also been shrouded, making them invisible to the Pralor technicians manning the station in the command center. It helped that Edrao knew that none of them were military and no one had ever attempted a forced landing on their station before. They were careless and inattentive. Colonel Thoti and those Spartans with him took advantage of that.

Their ships had landed on the massive exterior superstructure of the station, something that utterly terrified Edrao but also something that the Spartans thought very exciting. Once magnetically secured to the station’s outer hull they had cut their way through the thick metal and into the interior airlock. Since no pressurization had been lost, this entry went undetected to the horrified surprise of the seventeen men and women in the exterior corridor at the time, as well as the thirty-five technicians in the command center. When the sixty plus Spartans rushed into the Command Center all but three of them surrendered almost instantly. Those three were now dead, two shot cleanly through their foreheads, the third brought down by Thoti’s Nehtes which had extended and been thrown before Edrao even took notice. Edrao had recovered quickly from this shock and moved to a main computer station, his entire body shaking in a combination of adrenalin and fear as the prisoners were secured. He almost didn't hear Thoti's question and he nearly jumped from his seat when he appeared next to him and put his hand on his shoulder.

"Easy my friend." Thoti spoke in a clam voice, causing Edrao to look at him in shock. "I take it you have never been on an operation like this?"

Edrao shook his head quickly. "Konlar... he... he refused to allow me to go on missions. He said I was too... I was too important."

Thoti nodded his head. "A sound tactical decision. Take a few breaths Edrao. We are here now and we must move swiftly."

Edrao nodded his head and did just as he said, taking three deep breaths which did seem to calm his nerves a great deal. "I will be... I will be fine?" He spoke.

"How many remain on the station and do they know we have taken their control center?" Thoti asked.

Edrao turned back to the computer and lifted his hands, beginning to type quickly. As he looked at the screens he shook his head. "No. I can detect no internal alarms anywhere." He looked at Thoti. "I believe we are undetected."

"How many personnel?" Thoti asked.

Edrao turned back to the computer. "It looks like... yes... three hundred and seventy-nine remain." He replied. "All but sixty-three are located within the upper decks of the station. Living quarters and such."

"And the other sixty-three?" Thoti asked.

"All of them are centrally located in what appears to be the two lowest research levels." Edrao told him. He looked closely at the monitors and then turned to Thoti. "Those levels are High Security Levels Thoti. That must be where they are..."

Thoti nodded his head. "Most likely." He spoke. "Can you disable the elevators from the upper station to the lower levels?"

Edrao nodded his head. "From here... yes." He answered. "We have access to all of the stations systems from here."

"Is there a secondary Command Center?" Thoti asked.

Edrao turned back to the monitor once more and typed several commands. He pointed to the screen and dragged it down the schematic of the station. "Six levels down from here." He answered. "A Secondary Command and Power control center. Blue Access Wing."

Thoti turned to one of the Durcunusaan who had accompanied them. "Take a team of six and secure that Secondary Control center." He spoke. "Disable all systems and hold there. If you happen upon station personnel, try to take them prisoner."

The Spartan nodded his head without question and then turned and began moving out of the room as he signaled others to follow him.

Edrao was going through the systems on the computer and locking out elevators. He looked up as Thoti turned back to him. "I have isolated the power conduits to that room." He said. "I will disable the interface between them and when your people disable the actual systems no one will be able to restore power."

Thoti nodded his head. "Excellent." He said. "Edrao... do you detect Svorag life signs on the station?"

Edrao shook his head. "They do not have a definitive life sign that can be tracked... but Thoti, I am detecting thirty-four life signs that exhibit both Lycavorian and Tasmor traits."

"Are there security cameras in that section?" Thoti asked now.

Edrao nodded his head. "Yes."

"Pull them up on the main monitor here." Thoti ordered as he stood up straight and then moved to the large monitor while Edrao worked.

"Coming up now." Edrao spoke.

Thoti watched as the monitor came to life and he could see several figures in the room wearing what could only be hazard material suits. What was impossible to miss were the dozen cryo chambers he could see just in this camera view, all of them containing changed Svorag and all of them in some sort of stasis. Thoti felt his chest burn with anger as he watched them moving back and forth between the pods and different consoles. He was about to turn and order Edrao to purge the research levels with poison gas when Edrao stopped him.

“Thoti look at this!” Edrao gasped pointing at the computer monitor. “Station Command logs.” Edrao continued as Thoti came up beside him. “This one is dated five days ago.” Edrao looked at him. “That is the day we cleansed the Svorag from Ventori.”

“Play it.” Thoti said.

Edrao hit a button on the console and the monitor changed to the face of an older Pralor man. Thoti looked over quickly at the body of the man who he had killed with his Nehtes and realized he had been the Commander of the Station.

“...intercepted transmission being beamed to Artaaya from Ventori. The fool Svorag Commander that Elder Lorendo has been communicating with ordered an all-out attack on the Lycavorians there but they had received reinforcements. A news crew from Artaaya was on scene and filmed it all. They used dragons and their troops and some kind of fire missiles to eradicate the underground facilities and all of the test subjects on Ventori. The sensor arrays we had hidden in those old satellites were blinded for several hours but when they came back online, they could detect no Svorag left on the planet. The Lycavorian animals slaughtered them all. The facilities were completely destroyed during the attacks and after, dragons were sent into the tunnels and they finished the job. I don't know how much data they were able to obtain from the computers, but if they discover we had a hand in helping the Commander engage in his own experiments on the Lycavorian survivors of Ventori and the Tasmor people, it will make things even more difficult going forward. Elder Lorendo and his personnel on Artaaya were able to escape before that idiot Delnash imposed a lockdown and they will proceed to the two other facilities and gather all the data and then come here after destroying them. This station is no longer viable and we will move to the main research facility on Tarlan. Elder Lorendo will be arriving in six days to take all of us off with our data and the specimens in the Research Section. We'll set the self-destruct for the station before departing. It will wipe any data or items that we do not take with us. The explosion will also poison the atmosphere of Hador, eliminating all of the Lycavorians on the surface within a matter of hours.

“Some of our staff were upset by this, but they are only Lycavorian animals and I was able to convince them it was for the best. We are trying to save our people and discover a way to beat the Scourge. That is the most important thing right now. We cannot afford to let our sensibilities stop us from completing this goal. I have tried to tell Elder Lorendo that these new Lycavorians are different. They are smarter, stronger and far more cunning than the ones we have dealt with before. Even the ones who are part of this ridiculous Coalition on the far side of this quadrant do not compare to these ones from the Alpha Quadrant. We must be very careful in what we do now. They have technology that equals our own in many ways and this leader of theirs, he is a great cause for concern if what the reports about him say are accurate. If he is descended from Chief Elder Sumar and he is a Praetorian, along with the other in his family, our lives will be much more difficult and we will need to take extra precautions to not be discovered.

“I have already informed the Main facility on Tarlan of our impending arrival and they will be standing by. Elder Lorendo will be here in six days and we can leave this forsaken place forever.”

Edrao looked at Thoti as the recording faded. “They... they have been working with the Svorag that destroyed our world!” He gasped. “They were going to destroy Hador and kill everyone!”

Thoti reached out and grabbed his arm. “Calm yourself Edrao.” He spoke quickly. “This recording only confirms what King Leonidas and Queen Anja have suspected for some time.”

“We still have people on Hador Thoti!” Edrao exclaimed. “They are in danger!”

Thoti shook his head. “No they are not my friend.” He spoke. “Because we are not going to destroy this station now.”

“What?” Edrao almost yelled.

“Did you catch the part where he said that nubous ronnus Lorendo is coming here Edrao my friend?” Thoti told him.

Edrao's eyes went wide as this hit him. “We capture him?!” Edrao almost shouted.

Thoti nodded his head. “Exactly.” Thoti spoke. “Go through the remaining logs after this one and try to get a more exact time when Lorendo will arrive here. We must work quickly. The SPIRIT OF HADARIA and NORMYA'S LIGHT have returned to Manne but they can be to our location in six hours if we need them. I will contact King Leonidas and get his directives, but he will not let this opportunity pass by and he will not allow our people to die.”

Edrao nodded his head. “No... of course not.”

Thoti nodded his head. “And begin downloading anything that we can use. Establish a direct link to the DAKOTA and begin transmitting.”

Edrao looked at him. “They will know detect that immediately Thoti.” He spoke. “The Scientists in the research area are still linked into the computer system.”

Thoti thought quickly. “I will have the DAKOTA establish a low power jamming field around the station to stop any signals from going out so they cannot warn Lorendo. Can you vent poison into the cryo chambers from here?”

Edrao nodded his head. “It will take several moments to establish a link around what they have in place, but yes.”

Thoti nodded his head. “Do it. The moment you are ready we will take the Research Level and kill those vile monsters.”

“Then what?” Edrao spoke. “If Lorendo is coming here they will have pre-arranged signals to each other indicating all is ok.”

Thoti nodded once more. “Then we find someone who works in here and convince them to do what we say.”

“How do we do that?” Edrao asked. “They are all Pralors and they apparently don’t hold us in very high regard.”

“Perhaps I can change their mind.” Thoti said with a grin that exposed his wolf fangs as his eyes changed.

Edrao smiled now as well and nodded. “Go! I will find out what we need from here.”

LORENU THE CIRCLE

“Are you sure Thoti?” Martin asked. He stood in the Command Center of the Sanctum with Androcles, Wayonn and Murano now. Three QRC images were up along the side and Danny, Duewa, Anja, Radra and Delnash were in them. Thoti had been a member of his Durcunusaan detail on the Royal Spartan Estate dating back two decades and Martin trusted him completely.

All of them saw Thoti nod in the transmission. “There were far more Pralors working on this station that did not agree with what Lorendo was doing than he knew. They kept quiet and did their work because they feared that Lorendo would retaliate against their families. Three dozen of them are now helping us.”

“And you trust them Thoti?” Danny asked the question from Ventori.

Thoti nodded his head. “They were more than willing to help us and we could detect no hint of a lie in their bodies Daniel. They are sincere.”

“And fatso is coming there?” Anja asked from Jetania.

Edrao stepped into the transmission now. “I confirmed it Queen Anja.” He answered her. “With the help of those Pralor Researchers who are helping us we discovered his ship will arrive here in just under seventeen hours. Apparently they are at the second of two facilities and they are purging any sign that they were ever there.”

“Do you know where those facilities are?” Anja asked.

Edrao nodded again. “We have their locations.”

“Lover we need to eradicate those facilities.” Anja spoke immediately. “I mean we need to cleanse them completely. We can’t leave any trace of what they were doing there. Fatso and his people are blown now, they will be moving fast and they won’t be as thorough as we need to be.”

“Anja is correct Marin.” Duewa spoke with Radra beside her. “Even a small trace of the data or even tiny particles of the Svorag virus left alive could be potentially devastating in the future if someone inadvertently stumbles across it.”

“You’re just a bundle of good news Duewa.” Wayonn spoke now.

“Anja and Duewa are correct Wayonn.” Radra spoke up. “It needs to be done.”

“Send me the coordinates Edrao.” Delnash spoke for the first time. He looked tired in the transmission but everyone knew since the battle on Ventori had been broadcast live to all three of the Pralor planets he had been very busy. “I will send ships to do this.”

“Delnash we...” Martin began but he saw Delnash shake his head.

“You have too much going on and your ships are needed to protect Ventori and the gains we have made with the Tasmor people.” Delnash told him. “Dehov tells me that the officers and crews of his ships are enraged at what we have discovered.”

“How are our people taking it brother?” Murano asked him.

Delnash chortled slightly. “The remainder of the Elder Council wishes to string Lorendo up by his genitals.” He said very bluntly. “Even Sashan is enraged that he has been played and manipulated by Lorendo for so long. If he had not escaped before the lockdown went fully into effect, I doubt I could have stopped our people from killing him where they found him.”

“Their eyes have finally been opened.” Murano said softly.

Delnash nodded his head. “Indeed.” He said. “I was going to postpone the election, but the remaining Elder of the Council took it to our people without my knowledge two days ago. The election was held while I was sleeping and 27 advised me of the results when I woke the next morning.” Delnash looked at Martin. “I was elected to the position of Chief Elder of the Pralor people with ninety-eight point three percent of the vote.”

Martin nodded his head. “Congratulations sir.” He said.

Delnash looked at him intently. “I intend to lead just as your grandfather did Martin. I will do whatever I need to do in order to protect my people. Our people.”

“Brother you...” Murano began to speak but Delnash shook his head.

“No Murano.” He interrupted him. “We have hidden for so long in fear of the Scourge returning that we have forgotten who we are. I will no longer allow us to do that. I have ordered our Ship Builders to begin an accelerated building rate. With the help of the Avatars that we have and the Worker Drones, he tells me we can build a dozen warships a month in our three yards. I have also released the plans that you took from that abandoned Science Station and our engineers are already beginning to produce ground weapons. Garen is in the process now of training an additional four thousand volunteers to spread out and train even more. He asks that you separate some of your senior Spartans to assist in this Martin. If we are going to learn to fight once more, then I prefer it be from those who are warriors. Garen requested this so I ask if that is possible?”

Martin nodded his head without question. “Done.” Martin spoke. “Fervon?”

Danny nodded his head as well. “I’ll pick a dozen of our senior Spartans from here and put them on a ship to Artaaya tomorrow.”

“I will burst general Vengal on Earth tonight and have him dispatch a full training cadre from Earth and Apo Prime.” Martin spoke. “They can be to Artaaya within a week.”

Delnash nodded his head. “Excellent. Leave these two facilities to us.” Delnash looked at Anja in his end of the transmission. “Anja... your recommendation in how to do this so that we leave nothing to chance.”

Anja glanced at Martin in the transmission. “Lover?”

“Your call Red. This is yours and Duewa’s area.” Martin answered.

“Burn it Delnash.” Anja answered. “You have something similar to our nuclear weapons correct? They are ancient but they are very effective for this type of work.”

Delnash nodded his head. “I’m sure we have something compatible.” He replied.

“Drop one right on the facility and then four more on each of the four corners at the five-kilometer range.” Anja spoke. “That will ensure everything within that perimeter is vaporized. It’s the only way to be sure.”

Delnash nodded his head. “I will dispatch the necessary ships as soon as we get word that you have taken Lorendo.” He spoke.

Martin turned to Thoti in the transmission. “Thoti... we departing for Jetania in twelve hours. You bring that fat fuck to me there.”

“His condition Martin?” Thoti asked.

“As long as he is alive, I don’t care.” Martin replied. “He has a lot to answer for.”

“Martin do you not need him to translate the Onab texts?” Delnash asked now.

Martin shook his head. “No we have... we have solved that little problem.”

“Truly?” Delnash asked surprised.

Martin nodded his head now. “I will fill you in when we meet Delnash. We have... we have discovered a lot more than I ever thought and you need to be made aware of it.”

Delnash looked at him for a long moment and then nodded. “Interesting. I will be waiting for your word.” He said.

“Anja what about this station?” Thoti asked now. “Konlar’s people have not yet been able to evacuate everyone from Hador and according to the Pralor technicians here that are helping us, if we destroy the station it will poison the atmosphere of the planet.”

“How?” Anja asked.

“Lorendo had the station built with materials that will react negatively to the radioactive isotopes within the planet’s atmosphere that are normally harmless.” Edrao answered. “There is no way to counter this Queen Anja. The explosion will carry these particles into the atmosphere no matter what we do. Even a small portion could devastate massive parts of the planet and kill everything living on the surface.”

The room was quiet for a moment and all of them saw Anja deep in thought. She looked up finally. “Dee?” She asked.

“What other choice do we have Anja?” Duewa spoke.

“None.” Radra chimed in.

Martin looked at Anja. “You three want to fill the rest of us unknowledgeable mooks in.” He stated.

Anja looked up once more. “Thoti?”

“I am here Anja.”

“The Svorag that were on the station?” Anja asked him. “The ones the scientists were working on?”

“They are all dead.” Thoti answered instantly. “The Pralor scientists were not happy but after one of my men shot the senior Scientist, they quieted down.”

“You are certain?” Anja said.

Thoti nodded his head. “We used their hazard suits and incinerated the bodies and all the materials they had in their labs.”

“You have incendiary explosives?” Anja asked him.

“Yes.”

“Destroy everything husband.” Duewa spoke now. “Edrao has downloaded the all of the information stored in the databanks so now destroy what remains. The computers, the archives, the files, the equipment. Everything. We can build and properly staff a secure facility if we want to study this disease in the future and we can do it in a way that it will affect no one and put no one at risk.”

“Dee is right Thoti... if it does not compromise the integrity of the station Thoti, destroy it all.” Anja finished for her. “We’ll try to figure out a way to destroy the station itself after our people have all been relocated. Lirana has told me Hador is a beautiful planet and I don’t want to risk anything unless we can be sure.”

Thoti nodded his head in the transmission. “Consider it done Anja. My wife.” Thoti spoke in reply.

“Be safe my love.” Duewa spoke not caring that everyone heard her.

Thoti smiled at her. “Always.” He replied. “It has been too long since I have smelled and tasted...”

“Thoti!” Duewa exclaimed in shock cutting off his words.

Anja shook her head. “He’s been hanging around Martin too much Dee.” Anja said. “He turned him into a pervert just like him.”

This caused everyone to laugh softly within the transmission and Martin shook his head. “No respect.” He said. “I get no respect.” He crossed his arms over his broad chest. “Red, what about Staan Reva?”

Anja nodded her head. “From everything I have seen and what Eli has told me, it won’t be an issue Lover.” She replied to him. “It’s just a matter of stimulating her muscles and nerve functions again. It will take a little while for her to get used to it again, but I’m more concerned about her consciousness Marty. You are sure about what you know this machine can do?”

Martin nodded his head. "It was always Daniho's plan to have her returned to her normal self, he just did not think it would be so long before that happened. He hid the machine the Onab used to transfer her consciousness initially so that no one could find it. I know where it is."

Anja nodded her head. "I'll take your word for it." She said.

"The transference chambers do work Anja Leonidas. The Onab are the ones who gave us this technology initially. They perfected it." Radra spoke once more. "It is how we dealt with Xaxon and it is also how Arzoal came to be."

Anja nodded. "I know. It just gives me the creeps."

"Red?" Martin asked as he stepped a little closer to the transmission. "What's wrong?"

Anja looked up and met his eyes. "Something... something on this planet Lover." She said softly. "I can feel it just on the edge of my mind when I concentrate."

"Danger?" Martin asked her.

Anja shook her head quickly. "No. It's... it's somehow familiar to me in a way. I just can't explain it."

"We'll be there in twelve hours Red." Martin told her.

Anja nodded her head. "I know." She said. "Listen... there is something else you should know."

"I'm listening." Martin said.

"It has to do with Retta." Anja told him.

"We already know mother." Andro spoke for the first time moving up beside his father.

Anja looked at him. "Calyb told you?"

Andro smiled and nodded his head. "We could also feel our sister's happiness within us." He answered.

Anja looked at Martin. "Lover?"

"We all agreed a long time ago not to try and direct the lives of our children Red." Martin said. "Does he love her Anja? Beyond what his blood and instincts call for?"

Anja nodded her head. "The same way you love us." She told him.

Martin nodded his head. "Then that is all I can ask." He told her. "I can't exactly say she is too young now can I? In wolf terms she is a woman and far older than she looks thanks to my genes."

Anja's jade green eyes narrowed. "That's not what I expected." Anja said.

Andro looked at his father. "Nor I father." He said.

Martin smiled. "Let's just say I have it on good authority that things will work out fine." He said. "If they don't...?" Martin shrugged his shoulders. "Then I'll kill him."

Anja burst out laughing at the look on his face and shook her head. "Now there is the wolf I know and love." She said. She looked at Andro. "You make sure Sadi comes to see me when you get here. I am going to give her a full exam and make sure you did not corrupt her any more than you already have young man."

Androcles grinned. "Always mother."

"We'll see you in twelve hours, Lover." Anja said.

"We'll be there." Martin said.

Everyone in the Sanctum watched as the transmission ended and those in it faded away except for Thoti and Delnash. Thoti looked surprised that he was still connected and he looked at Martin.

"Martin?" He asked.

Martin turned to look at Delnash. "Delnash?"

"Colonel Thoti... those Pralors that you have captured and chosen not to work with you. How do they seem?" Delnash asked.

"They are quite hostile." He replied honestly. "They seem to be dire hard supporters of Lorendo and what he is doing. Why?"

"You have them secured?" Delnash asked.

Thoti nodded his head. "For the moment, yes." He replied. "They are locked within the living quarters portion of this station. I have two dozen Durcunusaan guarding the elevators and access points. Again... I ask why?"

"Colonel... those men and woman cannot be allowed to return." Delnash spoke softly. "They are complicit in the deaths of thousands of my people that we know of and perhaps millions of your people. Just one of them, if they escaped or were released, just one of them could start this all over again. I can't allow that."

Thoti looked at Martin in the transmission. "Martin?" He asked.

“He’s right Thoti.” Martin said. “You have confirmed that Lorendo and those people have been working with these Svorag ever since Lorendo lost control of them. None of them, aside from those who agreed to help you, none of them have showed the least bit of remorse in their actions correct?”

Thoti nodded his head. “No, they have not.” He said softly.

“The anos of millions of our people cry for justice. Thousands of Tasmor.” Edrao spoke softly beside him. “There can be no forgiveness here.”

Thoti took a deep breath and nodded his head. “I will take care of it.” He spoke finally.

“Colonel Thoti I will take responsibility if...” Delnash began.

Thoti shook his head. “You are correct Chief Elder Delnash.” He said. “As is my King. I will see to it.”

“I’m am sorry to put you in this position Thoti.” Martin said.

Thoti shook his head again. “Do not be Martin.” He replied. “I am a Spartan first and foremost and this crime against our people must have resolution and must never be allowed to happen again.”

“I will tell Duewa if you...” Martin began.

Thoti shook his head. “That is not necessary Martin.” He spoke. “My beautiful Duewa has fully accepted what she is now. Her time with Anja and the other Queens has seen to that. They have opened her eyes to this. She would expect me to do this. To see justice done.”

“Make it quick.” Martin said. “That is the only mercy to be shown Thoti.”

Thoti nodded his head. “Understood.”

“I am sorry Thoti.” Martin said softly.

Thoti looked at him in the transmission. “You do what you must Martin. No matter what tears at your heart and soul, you do what you must. That is why I follow you without question my King. That is why we all follow you.” Thoti stood up a bit straighter. “Once we have that rat faced ronnus we will join you on Jetania Martin.”

“Cui fas vada carians Thoti.” Martin spoke.

Thoti nodded one last time. “And you my King and my friend. Always.”

LORENU THE SANCTUM

Martin turned and looked at those in the room with him. Murano was the first to speak.

“It needed to be done Martin.” Murano stated. “There was no other way.”

“That doesn’t mean I have to like it.” Martin said.

“No father... it means that even though you don’t like it, you know it needs to be done and you do it.”

Androcles spoke now.

Martin looked at his son and nodded his head slowly. “Yeah.” He said. “You sure you don’t want this job?”

Andro recoiled as if he had been burned with a branding iron and he held up his hands. “Nubou joa!” He exclaimed.

Martin grinned at him. “Coward.” He said.

“In this case... yes... gladly.” Andro answered.

Wayonn moved closer to him. “What now Martin?” He asked.

“Now?” Martin asked. “Now I am going to take Aricia and For'mya and I am going to go into this city above us. I’m going to eat until I am ready to burst and I am going to spend time with my family. That is what I am going to do.”

Androcles nodded his head. “Fedor, Eirene and everyone else is already on their way down from SPARTA’S WRATH father. They will meet us in the city.”

Martin nodded his head once. “Good. Murano, you and Wayonn are part of that family and I expect you will join us. Believe me, we are going to need the down time because our future is going to get very exciting very quickly.”

Both men looked at him oddly. “What do you mean?” Wayonn asked. “What we have experienced these last months does not constitute exciting?”

Martin met his eyes and smiled, his eyes changing fully and his dual fangs extending to their full length. “Man... that doesn’t even come close to what is coming.” He answered. “Trust me when I tell you that.”

“Something tells me that you and Andro are privy to information that no one else has right now.” Wayonn pressed him. “Care to share that with us?”

Martin shook his head. “Not just yet.” He replied. “Soon though.”

“Why when you say that does the hair on the back of my neck stand up?” Murano asked.

Martin looked at him and grinned, the expression even more fierce looking since his fangs and eyes were changed. “Murano I’m hurt!” He spoke. “You know I am all peace loving and that I simply hate violence of any kind.”

Murano almost choked on his answer but Wayonn shook his head and answered for him. “As if anyone in their right mind would believe that rensibfla.” He muttered.

“Wayonn I am hurt.” Martin spoke.

Wayonn shook his head once more and looked at Murano. “Murano we should probably depart before the bullshit gets too deep and we are stuck here.”

“Agreed.” Murano said but with a smile.

Martin and Andro watched as the two men, two men that both father and son trusted without doubt, left the room. Martin looked at his son and shrugged his shoulders. “I guess they don’t believe me.” He said.

Andro grinned at his father as the previously hidden door opened and Chiron entered the room with them. Both turned to face the Avatar.

“Chiron?” Martin asked looking at him.

Chiron stopped and nodded his head. “The message has been sent Lord Martin.” He spoke.

“Our grandmother?” Martin asked him.

“We will disconnect the power couplings to her chamber just before we return to your ship.” Chiron spoke. “Armen has established a secure connection to the databanks here within the Sanctum as you requested and both of us will be able to access them at any time as long as this connection remains active. He has also reserved a large set of quarters where her chamber will be kept until we arrive on Jetania. I assumed that these will be her quarters after she is back among us so I have ordered all of her belongings brought there as well.”

“Good.” Martin said.

“Will you tell her of Lady Kelia and the others?” Chiron asked.

Martin shook his head quickly. “Not just yet.” He replied. “We need to find out more information first and I would like to speak with this Kesas Pengot as well if he responds.”

“May I ask why?” Chiron inquired.

Martin looked at Androcles and nodded. “Tell him.” He said.

Andro turned and face Chiron fully. “Something out there... where our people are? There is something wrong with all of that Chiron.”

Chiron’s head tilted slightly to the side. “I do not understand.”

“I feel it.” Andro told him. “There is more going on than we think.” Andro told him. “And until we know what that is... we need to move carefully.”

Chiron looked at him and then at Martin. “Ah... your Rihtari ar wer Isk sense tells you this.” He said. “I understand and it is interesting. Very well, given the information we do have caution is advised regardless.”

“Will you departing the Temple have any adverse effects?” Martin asked him.

Chiron shook his head. “I will activate my secondary body when we depart and all Temple defenses will transfer to his control.” Chiron answered. “Those you have designated will have unlimited access while we are gone, though nothing is to be removed from this location under any circumstances without yours or Androcles direct approval. I assume you wish to keep it like this for the foreseeable future.”

Martin nodded his head. “Until we have a better idea of what is going on, yes. Just Andro and me for right now.”

“And if something should happen to you or to Androcles or both of you are unable to be reached?” Chiron asked. “Who is the safeguard individual?”

Martin looked at his son, who met his eyes, and Martin saw him nod his head. Martin reached out with his hand and took the P1 that Chiron carried on his belt. He typed quickly on the screen since it was not biometrically encoded as theirs were and then handed it back. Chiron looked at the small screen and they saw his eyes widen slightly, and then return too normal just as quickly.

Chiron typed on the P1 briefly, deleting the information and then he returned the hand held computer to his belt. "I will see to it." He said.

Martin nodded. "Good. Keto, let's go spend some time with our family before we blow this joint. I want to get to your mother as quickly as possible. I didn't like the tone of her voice and I certainly don't trust that pin head who calls himself a King."

"He is still in the dark as to what has taken place father." Andro said.

Martin nodded his head. "Let's hope so..." He spoke as they began to walk out of the Sanctum. "...Because if so much as one freckle on her body is out of place I'm going to bring it all down right on top of his mida. It will be a nightmare he won't wake up from."

PAKAR SIX UNKNOWN SPACE

He had been alive far longer than he had ever imagined, seen and experienced things that would stagger the minds of so many of their young people, and yet he was as healthy now as he was the day he left Cerath so long ago. So many millennia ago that he no longer kept count of the years. There was no need to keep count, for his purpose was the same as it had been the day Daniho Mahanlo took the throne as King and became a leader that everyone had loved. Well... almost everyone he had come to realize too late.

Kesas Pengot did not know exactly how old he was, nor did he care. He did know about the thousands of young Alphas that held a contest every year to see who could guess his age and he thought this very amusing. He was certainly the oldest Lycavorian on Pakar Six, though you would not know it by his activities. His first mate, a female wolf he had loved for nearly sixty thousand years on Cerath, had perished during the Schism, killed by assassins as they tried to kill him and Lady Kelia's children. It had taken Kesas nearly two hundred thousand years to finally put her memory to rest and move on with his life. His second mate, a stunning young Alpha female with a stubborn streak as long as the many caverns on this planet, had revitalized his life and his purpose. They had been together for over a million years now, devoted to one another and their nine children even though he was at least two million years her senior in age.

Acki Pengot stared at her beloved husband and mates' back for a long moment before interrupting his thoughts. This difference in their ages had never matter in the least to Acki Pengot. She knew full well who he was when she first pulsed him with her aura all those years ago. She had not regretted that event for even a single hour. Others called her foolish and silly for not finding a young Alpha to mate with, but Acki did not listen to them. To this day her love for him remained as strong as it was that first moment.

Her dark brown hair fell to well below her shoulders, framing a very beautiful face and bright blue eyes. Acki Pengot was now one of the oldest females on Pakar Six, but her beauty still shone through, and her husband and mate let her know this fact every time they made love, which was quite often Acki recounted with delight. She found great joy in the fact that Kesas was just as virile as the young Alpha studs that roamed Pakar Six, and to the stunned surprise of the younger females, she took every chance to join in their conversations about their husbands and mates to brag about them.

"Are you going to stare at my back woman, or come into the room!" Kesas grumbled out the question as he rose to his feet and turned to face her.

Acki smiled brilliantly and moved into the room. "You looked deep in thought." She told him. "I did not want to disturb you."

Kesas smiled as she came right up to him and he took her hands in his, pulling her close to him and looking down into her blue eyes. "A disturbance by you is always welcome aur enyla." He spoke the words softly.

Acki blushed slightly as she always did when he spoke in such a way to her and she leaned up on tip toes and kissed him softly. "You did not hear the Duty Officer call for you so I said I would come down and get you."

Kesas nodded his head. "I had the intercom turned off." He told her. "I just wanted a few moments of silence."

Acki looked at her husband and mate. A million years and counting had taught her to read him very well and she reached up with her hand and placed it on his cheek. "What is it Kesas?" She asked him softly. "Forn ulyess laess." (You look troubled)

Kesas Pengot had long ago stopped trying to hide from her. She had threatened to leave him once because he would not share himself with her fully. The argument had frightened many of those who lived in nearby apartments and security had come to their wing in order to stop the argument, but by the time they arrived, Kesas had come to his senses and realized he did not want to lose this stubborn and beautiful female wolf who loved him completely. It had taken time, but now Kesas shared everything with her as it should be.

"I don't know Acki." Kesas answered. "I awoke this morning with... a feeling grips me Acki. Something I have not felt for more years than I can remember. It is why I did not join you for breakfast."

Acki nodded her head. "Our children wondered about that." She said. "Can you... can you describe it aur huor?" (My husband)

Kesas shook his head. "That's just it. It is within me. It has always been there but now a description fails me."

"You have always been intuitive Kesas." Acki told him.

"This is different though." Kesas spoke. He shook his head and squeezed her hands. "It will come to me." He told her. "What did the Duty Officer want?"

Acki shook her head. "He didn't say." She answered. "Only that you join him in the Operations center as soon as possible. Caylt and Yasha have already joined him there."

Kesas looked at her oddly. "Why?"

Acki smiled. "They are the leaders of our security force regardless of how small it is." She said. "It is their duty."

Kesas nodded his head and drew her closer to him, lowering his lips to hers and enjoying a long, loving kiss with her. Her hands caressed his face as they kissed and finally they drew apart and she smiled at him.

"Then you will join us for lunch." Acki said. "Your grandchildren wish to show you the project they have completed for school."

Kesas nodded his head. "I will be there." He told her. "Another school project?" He spoke as they turned arm in arm and left their quarters. "What are they teaching them in the schools these days. This is like their fifth project this year."

Caylt and Yasha Pengot turned when their father entered the large Operations center with a measured gait. They were the oldest of their father's nine children, four boys and five daughters. Caylt Pengot and Yasha Kirek were two years apart in age but had always been very close as siblings. They had taken mates only two days apart, and now their families shared almost everything together. Both of them were nearing six hundred thousand years of age, but looked no more than their middle forties. Both Caylt and Yasha also knew that nothing ever perturbed their father, and he could remain calm in even the most chaotic of times.

"Father!" Yasha spoke as she reached for him and they exchanged cheek kisses as had become the custom in their family over the last few millennia.

Kesas smiled brightly at her beauty, so much like her mother. "Your mother came and kicked me out of bed." He said with a grin.

Caylt Pengot laughed slightly. "Somehow I doubt that father." He said as he grasped his father's hand. "You have been waking before all of us for over half a million years."

Kesas chuckled. "And look what that has gotten me?" He stated. "More white hair and wrinkles."

"Your hair is far from white father." Yasha told him.

Kesas squeezed her hand and looked at his son. “So what is so important that the Duty Officer needs to see me?” He asked. “You are in charge of Internal Security Caylt. Yasha and Tiag Kirek handle everything else. What do you need me for?”

Caylt nodded his head and looked at the young wolf who stood the side by the computer station. “Tell him what you told us Captain.” He spoke. “And leave nothing out.”

Kesas looked at his son oddly and then turned to the young Alpha. Kesas recognized him from several briefings he had attended through the years but he did not know him well.

Life on Pakar Six was not easy for anyone. Their population was spread between three major mountain cities connected by an advanced tram system they had built from scratch. The planet, while able to support life, did not allow for extended living on the surface. The electric storms and acid rains could kill you within minutes, and the winds sometimes exceeded three hundred kilometers an hour. Even the natural wildlife did not venture out during these storms. The mountains provided the best protection and it was here that the Kirek Pack settled after the Schism.

Kesas did not think of those days very often now. They were a low point in the history of their people that he did not care to recall. Very few who had survived the schism remained alive now. The Arhtai and Nenay Packs had joined forces against the Kirek pack in a revolt that had seen so many deaths. The Matriarch of the Arhtai Pack had been a thorn in Daniho’s side even on Cerath and she simply bided her time until she could act. It began because the Arhtai Pack wanted to keep the Onab technology they had, even though all of them had agreed to destroy it once they had arrived here in order to keep the Iais’Kai from finding them. Kesas did not know what Yatia Arhtai had told the Nenay pack in order to get them to side against Lylor and Kelia. Whatever she had promised them did not bear fruit as eventually the Nenay Pack was ordered to leave Koltar Four and they settled on Anlar Prime. Once she had absolute control, Yatia Arhtai made certain things went her way.

Lylor and Kelia Kirek were captured along with their children and while Yatia knew she could not kill them, for the Mahanlo bloodline was still sacred to many of their people, she imprisoned them in their stasis chambers saying they had contracted a deadly disease and this was the only way to save them while their doctors tried to find a cure. Kesas and the Kirek Pack knew this was a lie and when Yatia announced that Kelia had left her in charge to lead in her absence, they acted. Yatia immediately declared the Kirek Pack enemies of their people and civil war broke out. Pitched battles raged for two decades across the planet but it wasn’t until a daring mission led by Kesas was able to liberate Lylor Kirek’s stasis chamber and three of their children threw everything into chaos. Yatia’s son was killed in this battle and Kesas Pengot decided she had gone insane with power.

Yatia Arhtai ordered the Kirek pack enemies of the state and called for their execution on sight. She also declared that anyone with Mahanlo blood within them had been corrupted by the same disease that afflicted Lady Kelia and needed to be captured and held for medical treatment and supervision. If they refused they were to be executed for putting their people and the future in danger. Somehow Yatia’s scientists had discovered a way to track those with Mahanlo blood even in hiding. Kesas suspected something but he had never been able to prove it and no one truly believed him enough to discover if this was the case.

Over the next fifty years, anyone with Mahanlo blood was systematically hunted down and killed while the Kirek Pack was slowly exterminated as well. The final straw came when Yatia ordered the deaths of Lylor and Kelia’s three children that she still held captive. She told everyone that the disease had claimed them which only strengthened her hold on the other Pack leaders. She privately reached out to threatened Kesas with Kelia’s life as well and swore to completely annihilate everyone of Kirek blood if they did not bend to her will and leave Koltar Four. By now Yatia’s Pack had all but convinced the others that what she was doing was for the good of their people and the Nenay Pack fell in line with few exceptions.

The Kirek Pack had very nearly been wiped out and they could no longer sustain an active fight against her tyranny. Kesas insured Lylor his three children remained in stasis for their protection. He could not risk them being discovered by whatever Yatia had developed that could track their blood. With Lylor and Kelia not able to speak, leadership of the Kirek Pack fell to him, and though they wanted to remain and fight, he took them off Koltar Four and fled to Anlar Prime. That move last only three hundred years before Yatia gave Anlar Prime to the Nenay Pack and forced them to retreat to the only planet left in the system.

Pakar Six.

The world was now their home and they had done what the Kirek Pack had always done. They survived and did what they needed to do in order to survive. Many things were different now, they had to be careful of how many children they had because of the resources, but they had survived and they had moved past those days.

Kesas knew that Yatia had spies among those from the Nenay Pack that had come here and joined the Kirek Pack, but Lylor and his children were hidden away where only he and four others knew, their stasis chambers safe. One day they would return and take Kelia back from Yatia Arhtai and her Pack would pay for their betrayal. Kesas knew she strong armed the Nenay Pack into following her, threatened them even, and that is why she expelled them to Anlar Prime.

When the day came, Kesas Pengot would see to it that everyone would face justice.

Kesas brought his mind back and looked at the young officer. "Captain?" He asked.

"You are aware that we monitor many communications channels Lord Kesas? As many as we are able in order to predict what the Arhtai Pack may attempt." The young man said.

Kesas nodded his head. "Yes. Fool that Yatia is, she did not know that the Kirek Pack was the only Pack that the Onab trained in building our own technological advances." He said. "Lord Daniho wanted it this way so that we could develop our own equipment. They still rely on what we brought with us and what they did not destroy."

The Captain nodded his head. "Yes sir. While not Koltar Four, Pakar Six has an abundant supply of raw materials to do just that. Our communications are far superior to them now. They have no one with the knowledge to maintain the Onab equipment and much of it has fallen into disrepair."

"Which is why they have spies among us." Kesas said nodding his head. "I know this. Now what is it that I need to see?"

The Captain looked flustered and Caylt smiled at his father's gruff nature. Kesas Pengot was not known for beating around the subject. He wanted details up front. "Captain... forget the history and just tell my father what you have discovered. He among us knows better than anyone what has taken place."

The Captain nodded. "Forgive me Lord Kesas."

Kesas shook his head and dismissed the apology with a wave of his hand. "None needed Captain. I am just a grumpy old wolf these days. Continue please."

The Captain nodded and motioned to the main star chart table and all of them moved to stand around the table. "Late last evening our communications team discovered an odd signal being beamed to Pakar Six from the edge of the system. They thought it was a reflection from standard intercepts from Koltar Four and filed it as such."

Kesas looked at him. "Odd how?"

"It is why I investigated further when I came on duty this morning." The Captain spoke as he brought up the image of the entire system on the map. "The signal is too powerful to be a reflection Lord Kesas, even at the low power frequency it is using. And the carrier wave is also far too advanced to be a reflection."

Kesas saw the direction of the communications beam. "A ship?" He asked.

"No sir." The young man answered. "It is being transmitted on a sub space carried wave I have never seen before, but it is most definitely not a ship. Our long range sensors would have detected a ship." He adjusted the holographic image and Kesas saw the carried wave take shape in front of him. His eyes grew wider and he stood up straight.

"Carians!" Kesas gasped.

"Father! What is it?" Yasha exclaimed moving up beside him.

"When did this start?" Kesas demanded.

"Late last evening Lord Kesas." The Captain replied. "It has been repeating every four hours since."

"No one thought to listen to the carrier wave?" Kesas demanded.

"No sir. As I said they thought it to be a reflection."

"That is no reflection!" Kesas stammered. "That is a Pralor sub space communications wave!"

Caylt's eyes grew a little wider now. "Pralor?" He asked. "Father are you sure?"

Kesas nodded his head. "Yes. Daniho did not trust Onab carrier waves to send messages after we left Cerath. He was afraid that the Iais'Kai may have figured out a way to intercept them and they would track them to us. One of his last orders was to use the Pralor sub space transmission waves once we left. They were far more random and secure than what the Onab used. It is one of the main reasons that we began trading with them in the first place once we discovered they existed. Most Onab technology was superior, but there were items that the Pralor people had created that were much better. We had exchanged with them for this technology fifty years before we left Cerath.”

Yasha looked at the Captain. “Is there a chance that this is an old transmission Tomar?” She asked him. “Something that has finally found its way across the galaxy?”

The Captain shook his head. “No, Lady Yasha.” He replied. “Given the low power of the of the wave and its direction, this transmission is very new and it is being beamed directly at Pakar Six on purpose. This is not an old transmission. This just started and it was done purposefully.”

“How long is it?” Kesas asked.

“Only four seconds Lord Kesas.” Tomar answered. “But it repeats every four hours as I said.”

“Four seconds?” Kesas spoke softly. “Can you decipher it?”

“I have not opened it Lord Kesas.” He answered. “I wanted to make sure that it was not some sort of electronic Trojan horse being sent by the Arhtai Pack. I thought it might be something new that they had developed.”

Kesas shook his head. “Impossible.” He spoke. “Yatia’s scientists are idiots compared to ours. Even after all this time they have not been able to reverse engineer the Onab technology! They are fools. Open it.”

“Father are you sure?” Caylt asked him now.

Kesas looked at him. “The only individuals who ever interacted with the Pralor people during our exchanges were the Onab and Lylor and Kelia keto! Daniho and Ashten allowed no one else to conduct these trades. Only they and Lady Reva knew of the meetings that took place and what information we exchanged with them. You have seen the prophecies just as I have.”

“We all have father.” Yasha told him. “Everyone on Pakar six knows the prophecies. You and mother have never allowed us to forget them. It is part of who we are.”

“Then what?” Kesas said.

“It has been... it has been so long father.” Yasha said softly. “Is it even... is it even possible that...”

“Open it Tomar.” Caylt Pengot spoke causing his father and sister to look at him. He met their gazes. “If there is ever a chance, no matter how slim, then I will take it.” He turned back to Tomar. “Open it Tomar. On my authority.”

Tomar nodded his head and began typing on the computer console. “Focusing carrier wave and preparing for deciphering.” His eyes narrowed as he worked and Kesas looked at him.

“What is it?” He asked.

“It is strange Lord Kesas.” Tomar spoke. “The message is... it is only three words and an image of some kind.”

“Display it Captain.” Kesas spoke.

“Yes sir.” He said. “Displaying now.”

The image appeared above their heads in the holo and their reaction was immediate and telling. Kesas stumbled back from the table, grabbing for his son’s arm as Yasha brought her hands to her open mouth in shock.

“Son hote lon evell nysil saoi!” Caylt Pengot’s words burst from his mouth as he struggled to hold his father upright. (By all that we hold holy)

The image was unmistakable to all of them. It was something that all of them had learned as children and then passed down to their own children throughout the millennia. It was the core of their belief as a Pack.

It was also something none of them ever expected to see outside the walls of their three cities. The head of the huge black furred wolf. A wolf with eyes of yellow gold. The intricate lines encircling the head of the wolf in different shades of blue and green and brown.

“Father!” Yasha almost yelled. “Father that is...!”

Kesas gripped his son’s arm tightly, his eyes wide and suddenly becoming moist at what they saw.

“Yes!” He exclaimed. “The crest... the crest of the Mahanlo Bloodline!”

We are coming

CHAPTER SIXTY-EIGHT

JETANIA WARIM

Juyno Aspion sat at the large table with his five friends as they devoured the thick and delicious steaks and large potatoes without much in the way of manners. Huge mugs of potent wine were beside the plates and the six young men ate as if they hadn't eaten in weeks. Juyno looked up as he chewed his meat and let his eyes wander around the interior of the café they had come to upon arriving in Warim. Most of the tables inside were full, the men and women eating and minding their own business and only occasionally looking over in their general direction. Juyno Aspion smiled to himself thinking that they were fearful of him, when in reality no one present would have stopped him from choking to death on his food.

Juyno enjoyed these trips, first because of the ideal prospect of finding a Mountain Pack female in Phase and taking her. Mountain Pack females were cherished by Alpha males across Jetania for their exotic beauty and their resilience. Most of them were closer to their instincts than the Plains females and they were known as totally uninhibited wives and mates in the beds of their husbands. They were not docile females like the female Alphas of the Plains Packs. It was a badge of honor and high accomplishment for a Plains wolf to be able to find and take a Mountain Pack female in Phase and then have children with her. Juyno also went on these trips because he liked to flaunt the power of his name and his father. He was the oldest son of King Osrod of the Coalition and a Prince, and this fact alone demanded that he received respect and attention. Juyno Aspion's mother Secha was the First Queen of the Coalition, a female Alpha who had come from one of the larger Plains Packs and was not a normal Plains female. She was strong and intelligent and she hated the Mountain Pack females with a fervor bordering on fanaticism.

When his father had taken Loras Ranev as one of his Queens, his own mother had been incensed and her hatred of the Mountain Packs had grown even more. When Lazar had been born, his mother Secha did everything in her power to make it difficult for Loras to care for the boy but she failed, mainly because Osrod ensured Loras had everything she needed. Lazar was Osrod's only child with Loras and his single connection to the Mountain Packs even though Lazar secretly hated his father.

Juyno loathed his half-brother Lazar with every fiber of his being, mainly because Lazar was everything Juyno was not. Lazar was a typical Mountain Pack Alpha, tall and extremely well built and powerful. He was also a leader of men. Those under his command were loyal and steadfast to him in every way and therefore his father had to have spies put among his crew to keep him under observation. Juyno knew that of his father's six children, he feared Lazar the most. Juyno had made a dozen of these trips in the hopes of discovering and then taking a Mountain Pack female. So far he had been unsuccessful. The Mountain Pack Alphas were very good at shielding their young females from him and others like him, and in the last few years barely a handful of Plains Alphas had succeeded in this. Surprisingly, they had been accepted into the Mountain Packs because of their devotion to the females they had claimed. One of the most defined differences between the Mountain and Plains Packs females was that once mated to a male, they remained together for life unless they chose to part ways. Among the Plains Packs it was very common for mated females who came into Phase to be taken by other males who were searching for mates. The male could do nothing about this by Plains Pack law and usually those males simply went out and found another female.

Juyno didn't understand any of this Mountain Pack fuss because females were simply a trophy as far as he was concerned. To be used and directed by the whim of their mate. Juyno had also come out here on this trip with a single goal. Since all births must be registered with the government, Juyno had used his position to force the duty officer to allow him to check the Main Birth Registrar before leaving the capital, for he had one thought in mind. He was going to take a Mountain Pack Alpha female that would give him status and power. He discovered that Taris Ranev had come into Phase and if he could claim the only daughter of Garget Ranev, his influence would surpass even Lazar's. It was well known that the Mountain Pack females often went into the mountains surrounding their homes during Phase to test themselves against the elements. This was something they did as part of a ridiculous female tradition to make them more suited as potential mates. It also served, unfortunately for them in some cases, to spread their aroused female scent around the entire area for miles to entice males. Taris Ranev was within the peak of her phase now and Juyno and his men had detected two such scents in the mountains around Warim the moment they had come into the area. It had to be Taris Ranev and another very powerful Alpha female from what Juyno could tell and he had every intention of finding her and making her his.

Juyno's mission was twofold however, the second part coming from a directive by his mother to him. The rumors that Loras Ranev still lived had been circulating and growing more frequent in the Plains cities in recent years and this was beginning to anger his mother. She wanted him to discover if there was truly any truth to these rumors, for if his father had failed to kill Loras when he had Warim assassinated it could bring trouble in the future. Getting this information from Lazar or any who were close to him and might have this knowledge was next to impossible Juyno knew. Lazar's friends would never betray him or this knowledge if they were aware of it, even under threat of death or riches. Juyno considered himself skilled enough to find out on his own just by observing people and their actions around him. He thought too highly of his skills really, but so far he had detected no odd actions since arriving in Warim aside from the fact that Garget had not yet made an appearance. This was odd since Garget Ranev made it a point to greet any Plains Alphas who came to his brother's city and the large territory surrounding it to make sure they knew what they could do and get away with. And, to inform them not to cross the invisible line, for that meant they were subject to Mountain Pack Law, which was very brutal and very swift for males who overstepped their boundaries. Juyno did not understand that the Mountain Packs held their females in a much higher status than did the Plains Packs. They were given much more say in how they lived their lives and who they mated with. They were also much better educated in many cases since the Mountain Packs were the only Packs on Jetania to allow their females to attend higher schooling.

Looking around Juyno could smell the distaste and mistrust for him and his men from the others within the café. Why his father didn't just order his men to swoop in and wipe out all but the females was beyond him. He had never been very good at the politics of different things and he thought brute force could solve everything. His head turned when the door to the café opened and the large form of Garget Ranev filled the doorway as he walked in with three other Alpha males, all younger, but stern faced and large. He was late Juyno thought to himself, he usually showed up immediately, but this time he had waited. No doubt he had heard they were coming, somehow the Mountain packs always knew they were in the area, and the head of the Pack or city greeted them almost instantly after arriving. Almost two hours had passed since they had arrived in Warim and this was practically unheard of for Garget Ranev. Juyno watched as Garget moved casually to the owner of the café and they spoke in whispers before he looked over to where they sat and Garget made his way over to them.

Juyno sat up a little straighter as he approached. "Garget Ranev!" He spoke loudly so that his voice carried across the interior. "A pleasure once more."

"Juyno Aspion." Garget spoke as he stopped beside his chair.

"That is Prince Aspion to you, old man!" One of Juyno's men hissed as he looked up from stuffing his face. Dyos Jemor had never come on this type of hunt before as he was still very young and he was unfamiliar with the Mountain Packs and their ways. Dyos was the youngest brother to Sitos, one of Juyno's closest friends and that is why he was here now. The Jemor Pack was a very influential Plains Pack and a powerful supporter of his father and that is why Juyno tolerated him. Juyno decided to let him find out the hard way since it would be very amusing and Sitos had not stepped in already.

Garget ignored the seemingly arrogant young Alpha and continued to look at Juyno. "I trust you had no troubles in our mountains." Garget asked him.

Juyno smiled at him. "None." He replied in a voice that dripped with sarcasm and the hidden meaning. "We are quite capable of taking care of ourselves and dealing with any potential trouble with the local wildlife."

Garget smiled back and nodded his head. "I'm sure you are." He spoke. "How long will you be staying here in Warim?"

"I haven't decided just yet." Juyno answered. "It appears one of your famous Mountain Lightning Storms is moving into the area so we will take shelter here at night. A day, perhaps two. Is that satisfactory with you?"

"Juyno why do you answer these questions?" Dyos questioned now. "We do not answer to this old man! We..."

Dyos Jemor never saw the large fist that connected with the side of his face. Garget's hand had moved faster than he could see and suddenly stars filled his eyes and the world spun around in circles. He felt someone grab the back of his head and was unable to stop Garget from slamming his face into the top of the table right in the middle of his half-eaten dinner. His head bounced off the table and blackness washed over him as he slumped out of the chair to the floor. Sitos rose now to defend his brother but Garget lifted his hand and pointed at him.

"I would not do that." Garget growled as the three Alphas who had entered the café with him moved closer to the table.

"He is my brother!" Sitos snarled.

"Then you should have schooled him in simple manners! You know the rules Sitos Jemor. You have been coming with him for many years. Perhaps you should have told your younger brother! Now he will sit out his time here in a holding cell until you decide to leave!" Garget snapped.

"For what?!" Sitos barked.

Garget shrugged his shoulders. "I will figure something out by morning! Now, sit down boy, before you join him on the floor!" Sitos glanced quickly at Juyno and saw him nod his head. Slowly he returned to his chair and Garget looked back to Juyno. "You should have warned him."

Juyno shrugged. "He needs to learn." He answered.

"Mind your place while in our territory Juyno Aspion." Garget warned. "You may be the King's son, but you are not above Mountain Pack law. Remember that."

Juyno nodded his head. "Of course."

Garget motioned to two of his men and they bent down to pick up the limp form of Dyos. “You can retrieve him when you depart our city for good. Now he will remain in custody.”

“You still have not told me why.” Juyno snapped as he sat forward.

Garget looked at him and nodded. “How about we start with stupidity.” Garget snapped right back. “He disrespected an Alpha thirty times his age. Per Mountain Pack law that is a mandatory sentence of a week in a holding cell.”

“A week!” Sitos exclaimed.

Juyno held up his hand to his friend and looked at Garget. “I have never heard of such a law.” He said.

Garget nodded his head. “I just made it up.” He replied. “To honor you.” Garget looked at his men and motioned with his head and they began to carry the unconscious Dyos toward the door. He turned back to Juyno. “He will be well cared for while you enjoy your trip don’t worry. Far better than he will be in your hands no doubt.”

“My father will hear of this.” Juyno said.

Garget nodded his head. “You seem to be of the mind that I care.” Garget spoke. “I do not. Do not overstep your bounds young wolf..” Garget told him. “You will not like the response you receive.”

“Is that a threat?” Juyno asked.

Garget shook his head. “A statement of fact.” He replied before turning and heading for the door leaving Juyno sitting there simmering in anger. He left the café and stopped outside in the cool night air and took a deep breath. He looked at his men holding Dyos between them. he reached out and lifted his head by his hair and stared at the handsome young face. Garget could smell the strength in this one, unlike his older brother and those he chose to associate with.

“Sir?” One of his men asked. “They will undoubtedly contact the Jemor Pack about this.”

Garget nodded his head. “No doubt. Let them, Osrod will allow them do nothing.”

“What do you wish us to do with him?”

Garget gently lowered his head back down. “This one might yet be saved.” He spoke. “He is still young and influential. And he is very strong and sturdy, unlike his brother.” Garget took a deep breath. “Confine him at the West Security Station. I will have my mate tend to him in the morning.”

“Yes sir.”

Garget watched as they began to carry him away and he looked at the third man with him. “Ettaso... make sure they are watched.” Garget spoke. “They are not here just to try and claim one of our females. Juyno Aspion is also here for something else, I just don’t know what that is right now.”

“Understood sir.” The young man spoke.

Lazar Aspion/Ranev stood in front of the mirror in the small bathroom in his quarters and tried to reflect on what had taken place these last hours. Lazar had never once seen himself in this position in the nearly three hundred and fifty years he had been alive. He was a wolf pup compared to many when it came to age he knew, but he had worked hard for everything he had right now, against odds that were always heavily tilted to make him fail. In all that time, what he felt coursing through him now had never been a factor.

Now it was.

Lazar knew the reason for his harsh treatment as he was growing was Juyno’s mother Secha, for she had hated him since the day he was born and his mother for far longer. It had only gotten worse when Secha discovered his mother had apparently been killed in an accident. Lazar knew the truth behind it but he kept his silence and continued to tolerate the abuse for it protected his mother. His father Osrod had four Queens once more, but Secha was the First Queen and therefore the one who controlled the others. She decided when they slept with his father, when they gave birth to more children, every facet about their lives was directed by her and she was a upae of the highest degree. Lazar knew Nitona and Aruina hated this foul arrangement but they could do nothing about it while Risi was close friends with Secha and therefore the two of them made sure they monopolized the King’s carnal attentions. Nitona most especially hated it, for she was the youngest of his father’s Queens and Secha constantly demeaned her and forced her to do all sorts of things in order for her to maintain her status as Queen. Nitona was from a smaller Plains Pack with almost no influence or power and only a colossal accident gone wrong had propelled Nitona into her position. Something Nitona had no control over. Without Secha's support behind the scenes none of the other Queens would be allowed to do anything. Nitona had not even been allowed to have a child with his father yet, Risi and Aruina only one each. He felt sorry for all of them for he doubted his father even knew what Secha did to control them.

The respect Lazar had garnered over the years had been because of what he had done on his own merits and not because of his father, unlike Juyno and his father's other children with his four Queens. Yet right now, at this moment in time, none of that mattered to him. All his focus was on the supple figure of the young woman who occupied his bed and had freed his soul. Lazar gripped the edge of the sink, and stared at the mirror. In the last hours, he felt more alive than he ever had before. His body surged with unrealized power and clarity and it felt good.

He had taken Retta to the large Mess area of the base where Rhaos and his half brothers and sisters from Loras' union with Warim joined them surprisingly. He loved each of them and there had never been a distinction made about who their fathers were. All that mattered to them was that they were siblings. Rhaos had been with him through it all, just like Laon, and that was a friendship that you did not dismiss. Lazar thought it might be a bit much for Retta to absorb, but he could only watch with pride and awe as she fell into the role of his wife and mate like it had always been meant to be. She was not shy or soft spoken in the least and she laughed with Rhaos and his siblings heartily while sharing stories of her own childhood and getting her twin brother Calyb into trouble. Not once did she allow her body to not be touching his in some way, and this was something that Lazar's siblings had detected right away and they would pass this on to others so that no young female tried to claim what was no longer available.

When they finally returned to his quarters, they had made love with such intensity and passion that it had stunned both of them. There was no denying it, both of them could feel the burning of their blood within them for each other, and now neither of them fought it. It had been the most incredible desire and fervent need that Lazar had ever experienced and only Retta could sate that need. It lasted until neither of them could rise from the bed, so exhausted as they were. Retta had simply curled into his embrace and Lazar drew her to him protectively and then they both fell asleep.

Lazar had awakened only a short time ago, by what he did not know. As he stood in front of the mirror everything seemed so much more clear. His senses were alive like they had never been before and he could almost feel the newfound power within him. He stared at the mirror, tilting his head oddly as he noticed something and he leaned closer still, reaching up and using his fingers to lift his upper lip. His eyes grew wider when he saw the tip of an additional fang next to his main incisor fang. He began to lean closer when Retta's voice stopped him.

"Lazar?"

Lazar turned quickly and saw her standing there, holding only the single sheet around her delicious body loosely. "Retta?"

"What... what is wrong?" She asked him.

"Nothing. Why?"

Retta shook her head. "No." She said moving up to him. "The back of your left shoulder. That was not there before."

Lazar turned his head, trying to look over his shoulder and finally he looked back into the mirror and saw the incredibly detailed tattoo. His eyes grew wide when he saw this, for while he had several tattoos on his body, this was not one he had done.

"Atle vada jorbhe!" He exclaimed. (What the hell)

Retta moved up to him and stood on his side as she lifted her hand and ran her fingers over the tattoo. "Una coi ter zoit." Retta spoke. (It is not new)

Lazar saw her shift her body in the mirror and then he saw it on her left shoulder blade. "Retta!" He exclaimed once more turning and reaching around to grasp her shoulder and look at the exact same tattoo on her left shoulder. The head of a large black furred wolf with yellow and gold eyes and surrounded by different colored stripes of some kind that ended in points going off in all directions.

"Sibfla!" Retta gasped as she looked over her own shoulder at the tattoo now.

"Retta what is going on?" Lazar asked her.

"I don't... I don't know!" She answered him.

Lazar looked down at her, his eyes growing wider when he inhaled of her honey mint scent. It so much sweeter to him than it was just hours ago. It was so pungent and pure and all-consuming now. It filled his head as nothing ever had, as no female ever had. Retta looked up into his face and saw his wolf eyes now.

“What... what is wrong my love?” She asked him.

Lazar reached down then and wrapped his arms around her lower buttocks and lifted her into his grasp. Her arms went around his shoulders as she gazed down into his face. “Nothing is wrong.” He said with a smile. “I feel... I have never felt like this and I like it.”

Retta smiled as he walked back into the bedroom. “Like what?”

“So full of energy.” Lazar answered. “So much stronger.”

“Sit on the bed!” Retta ordered him and Lazar complied instantly. Lazar sensed it almost immediately. This was no longer a shy young female wolf in the middle of her first Phase. Retta was now fully a woman and the blood within her made her confident. The Alpha she wanted had claimed her and now she proud and full of herself, but not in any arrogant sort of way. She scooted closer to him on his lap, ignoring the feel of his wonderful manhood against her hairless center and she lifted her hands to either side of his head. “Let me...” She said softly as her hands flared a soft white in color.

Lazar looked at her hands, knowing the pain she could inflict with them if she wanted. That is something he would never feel again he knew and Lazar nodded his head instantly. He relaxed and closed his eyes as Retta inched her hands closer until they hovered just millimeters from his skin. She closed her own eyes and reached out with her Hadarian power, scanning his blood, the lipids, the vital signs, the molecules that made up his DNA, everything. Lazar could feel the warmth spread through his whole body and he remained still knowing that he would never need to fear this woman again. She was his, and he was hers, just as the words they had spoken the night before meant. Lazar could feel it within him now, feel her within his being, and they had always been meant for one another. He opened his eyes and saw her staring at him silently.

“What?” He asked.

Retta shook her head slowly. “I don’t... I don’t know.” She replied. “You are... you are different. But you are the same.”

Lazar grinned at her and his hands pulled her closer by her ass cheeks. “That does not really constitute a medical diagnosis Retta.” He said.

Retta slapped him lightly in his face and the old Lazar would have been stunned and in shock at such an action but he just smiled and looked at her with an even larger smile, dual fangs extending from his gums as he gazed at her with desire. His fangs did not surprise Retta for she knew this happened to anyone who was bitten by a Leonidas. The dual fangs were part of their bloodline and all it took was a small bit to make them appear in someone else. She had just never seen it happen so quickly. It usually took days or weeks, but for Lazar it had only taken a few hours. That was not normal.

“I want to taste you again.” Lazar told her leaning forward to nuzzle one of her firm, medium sized breasts.

Retta grasped his head and a smile. “You have worn me out.” She told him.

“You taste so good though.” Lazar said continuing to nuzzle her breasts and adding in a lick with his tongue every few seconds.

Retta gripped his head and reluctantly pulled his face away from her skin before her desire became too much and she was too aroused to stop him. “We must talk to my mother about this Lazar.” She said softly her eyes rolling into the back of her head when she felt his aura pulse her strongly. “Please my love.” She gasped.

Lazar detected the concern in her voice and while it was not pronounced it was there. He reigned in his aura and saw Retta open her dark green eyes once more to look at him. “You are worried.” He said to her softly.

Retta grasped his face tightly. “I have just discovered you!” Retta rasped out the words. “I do not want to lose you!”

Lazar tightened his grip on her even more, her arms wrapping around his shoulders. “You will not lose me Retta.” He said firmly. “Never. This... we are meant to be together... I can feel it within me.”

“I feel it too Lazar my love! I do!” Retta said as she stroked his bearded face. “Like it has always been there and now it is coming out.”

“Does it frighten you?” He asked.

Retta shook her head instantly. “Never! Not for an instant! And that is what is strange about it.”

Lazar stared at her for a few moments longer and then he took a deep breath, reaching up to stroke her cheek. “We will have eternity, so I will get many opportunities to taste you.” He said with a smile.

Retta pulsed him with her female aura and smiled. “Yes, you will. And I will taste you.” She said. “You have turned me into a tas varo you know.” (sex pot)

Lazar laughed heartily at that and brought her head down to his. “Forn wen aur tas varo Retta aur enyla.” He said. “Elly for innyne.” (You are my sex pot Retta my love. Forever and always) Then Lazar kissed her more furiously than he yet had up until this point and Retta only whimpered in unabashed delight as she returned the kiss with equal fervor. After a sensually long, lingering moment their kiss ended and he looked at her once more.

“It is still early... let me just hold you for another hour or so.” Lazar spoke. “Then we will go and see your mother.”

His words caused her whole body to flush in happiness and she pulled his head to her breasts and held him tightly as his arms tightened even more around her waist and back. “Hold me my love.” She said. “Hold me and never let me go!”

SPARTA'S WRATH ORBIT OF LORENU

The true definition of family did not finally hit Kadeer Imuma until the tattoo had appeared on his left shoulder. As clear and defined as those that had appeared on his children and the others of the Mahanlo Bloodline. Dynina, Jezima, Gorgo, all of them now had the same tattoo on their left shoulders. While it seemed to only confirm for the others what they already knew, for Kadeer it was life altering. His love for Maha had been absolute, of that there was no doubt, and that they were of two different species had not mattered to him or her in the least. Now, after discovering all the history they had in the last hours and with even more to discover, it was with the utmost honor that he now wore that tattoo. He had become part of something far greater than he had ever envisioned, his children with Maha a key part of that, and now him. They had gathered in the city's massive Meeting Hall so that all of their people could look upon the future and be revitalized with hope for the future. It seemed to go on forever but in reality it had only been a few hours before Dynina and Martin and the others returned to SPARTA'S WRATH and he along with them.

The ship was an absolute marvel to Kadeer as he and his children stepped off the fast transport together. Perlae and Awser wanted to rush to show him everything, but Ishma reigned in their excitement as they were led to quarters on what he discovered had now become known as the Family Deck. It was here that Kadeer witnessed how close his people had become tied to these Lycavorians. The Vrrarhoinpa that he saw, Elynth and her mate Anthar, Torma and his own mate Isheeni, all the others, and even his own children's Bonded Ones, they had part of the massive deck all to themselves with what would amount to personal quarters meant just for them. Without really realizing it, the day's events had taken their toll on everyone and Kadeer found himself falling asleep for several hours and then waking feeling refreshed. Ishma and the others had left him and he took the data pad with the schematics of this ship and began to make his way to where he could get something to eat.

Kadeer saw at least nine different species on his trek to the Lounge four decks above him, though he saw no rank on any of the uniforms. When he entered the Lounge, he looked around to get his bearings and saw Dynina sitting with several other Darastrix, including Sarlana. He moved quickly to select some fruit he saw on the food line and then went to the table they all sat at.

Dynina quickly welcomed him with a kiss on his cheek. “Perlae tells me you fell asleep almost as soon as you sat down in your quarters.” She spoke.

Kadeer nodded his head sheepishly. “I did not think I was so tired.” He replied.

“I don't think any of us realized how tumultuous the last days have been or the toll it has taken on us.” Sarlana spoke now. “Just a week ago we were on Ventori fighting for our very survival.”

“Is this... is this how it normally is?” Kadeer asked.

Sarlana and Dynina chuckled softly. "I have been with this family only a short time longer than Dynina and I can tell you from experience, in those few weeks I was more active than I had been for the previous three hundred thousand years. So yes... it is always like this."

"And they act like it is second nature." Amena spoke from her chair beside Nicha shaking her head in awe.

Nicha nodded in agreement. "To them it is." She said.

Dynina nodded her head. "Avoi." She whispered the word.

"We are departing in a few hours." Kadeer said. "I have not seen Martin or Androcles since we came aboard. What are they doing?"

Dynina glanced up at him. "I would imagine they are preparing as well." She spoke. "I don't believe I have ever met two men who adapt so quickly to changing events. Sumar was like this as was my mate Makeb, but Martin and Androcles, they take it to the levels beyond."

"What will we do now Dynina?" Amena asked.

"We will prepare for what we all know is coming." Dynina answered. "We do not know when, and we do not know how, but we know it will come. All we can do is prepare and be as ready as we can be."

"Doraanar?" Kenroe asked looking at her.

"Dynina is correct." Sarlana answered. "We prepare. And we put our faith in those that have been chosen to lead us." Sarlana looked around the table at them. "I cannot help but..."

Dynina looked at her. "Sarlana?"

"I cannot help but feel that we were kept apart for a reason." Sarlana spoke softly. "You and those with you here Dynina, me with the Seed Mission, Nilantha with those on Jetania. I feel that this was done on purpose in order for us to discover each other when the time was right. It has been guided by some larger power to bring us all together now, at this time."

"To shape the invisible." Dynina said softly. "Just as Lady Reva told Martin."

Nicha looked at her. "What do you mean Dynina?"

"Reva... she said that these Onab Seers only predicted events for another hundred years." Dynina told her. "We have discovered each other now, all of us, in order to help and guide my staaniketo as he shapes the invisible. The future that no one can see."

"Should... should one family have such power?" Amena asked now. "The power to influence so much?"

Sarlana shook her head slowly. "No, Amena they should not." She said. "But what if it was a family that did not want such influence? I have been among them for weeks now my friends. Androcles, his father and mothers, his siblings, all of them hate how they are viewed by others but they cannot get away from it because it comes so naturally to them. They only wish to love and be loved by their family and those they have chosen to have a future with. Not one of them desires power or influence, yet it is theirs to command. Who better to lead than those who have no desire to lead? Who better to have that power than those who want nothing to do with that power? Who better to lead us than those who would give that power up at the drop of a hat without even thinking?"

"Avoi." Dynina said softly.

"That is why we are here." Sarlana said. "We will never control them, that is not possible to do, so our purpose, our mission is to guide them and make them see everything. From every direction and angle."

"For us all." Amena spoke.

Sarlana nodded. "Yes. For us all."

SPARTA'S WRATH DECK THIRTEEN PORT SPACEDOCK LOUNGE

The lounge was empty and dark and that is just the way Martin liked it. The lounge was for when the ship was in spaceport and would only be used in case of an emergency, so it was empty and had not been used since SPARTA'S WRATH had left Dreamland. Martin lifted the bottle of the ancient Corona beer and took another swig of the ice-cold liquid. He had been surprised to discover that Andro had requested the beer be placed onboard and kept for his father and Uncle Danny should they ever want one. He should have known his son would plan for just about everything. He smelled and sensed him long before he ever entered the lounge and he waited until the door had opened and then closed and locked again before bending over and taking another bottle from the pack of twelve. Using his strength, Martin easily twisted off the cap and held out the bottle to the side as his oldest son moved up beside him.

"I figured you would come here." Andro spoke as he took the beer from his father's hand and lifted it to his lips. He took a long pull from the bottle and enjoyed the smooth taste as it went down. It was the only vice Andro allowed himself since he did not like the taste of Spartan Wine and only drank it when he had to at official functions.

"Nice and quiet here." Martin said as he stared out the view window at the stars before them. He lifted the beer in his hand. "Thank you for this son." He said. "How many cases you got aboard?"

Andro chuckled softly. "I told the Brew Master to give me a quarter of his last batch." He replied. "Sixty-two cases."

Martin looked at his son and echoed his chuckle. "Expecting me to brood often I take it." He said.

"No, not really." Andro spoke. "I just know that this is how you process it all. You find a place like this. Quiet, out of the way, and you think. When I was small... we used to... Elynth and I would follow you and Torma to the top of Dragon Mountain and just watch you as you sat there while the sun came up or went down."

Martin smiled and nodded his head. "I remember."

Andro looked at his father surprised. "You knew?" He gasped. "We always thought... we thought we were sneaky to be able to get that close and not have you take notice."

"We took notice." Martin said. "We just never allowed it to show. I'm sorry Androcles."

"Sorry? Sorry for what father?" Andro asked.

Martin waved his hand with the bottle around. "This. All of this. What is happening. This is... it is beyond anything that I ever imagined."

"I think it is beyond anything any of us have ever imagined father." Andro said with a smile now. "And I have a pretty good imagination according to Sadi or Carisia. And I have also heard our mothers talking about your imagination father." He finished with a smile lifting his bottle of beer to him in a semi salute.

Martin laughed and looked at his son. "Yeah... yeah... I'm not going there." He said seeing Andro laugh as well.

"Good idea." Andro said.

"When you and Eli were born I just, I wanted so much more for you keto, for all of you. I didn't want this life that we lead for my children." Martin said turning back to look out the view window.

"Father, do you think for an instant that if this life was not what we wanted that we would be here? Especially now?" Andro asked him. "If you think that, you are wrong. We do this because we want to. We choose this life so that our children do not have to."

Martin looked at him. "What about Achilles? Neesia? They did not choose this life. It was chosen for them long before any of us were ever born. It was chosen for me. It was chosen for you."

"How do you know we would not have chosen this very life if given the opportunity?" Andro asked him. "I have heard so many people tell me it is easier for me than it is for you because I was born like I am. You have had to learn everything as you go father. That is the hardest thing to do. Knowing what you do now, do you think any of your decisions would have been different?"

Martin shook his head slowly. "No. And that is what scares me." He answered.

Androcles nodded. "Elynth and I had this discussion not so very long ago." He said. "It was when Dorian was born. His birth, it brought back the dreams as you know and we began... we began to question our purpose once more. But our purpose, it was also somehow clearer to us than before. I know that does not seem to make any sense but it is what we felt within us. Perhaps it was because Dori and Ryner were like us, or perhaps because once he arrived we could finally feel Laren and Ladur in the back of our minds."

"What did you decide?" Martin asked him.

Andro shook his head and shrugged his broad shoulders. "Nothing. Because it did not matter how it came to be, only that it was." He answered. "But we also made a vow to one another never again to question the decisions we had made up until then, or the ones that we would make in the future to come. Do we have regrets? Yes. I think we all do. It is how we go forward that determines who and what we are, not the regrets that we may have.”

Martin smiled at his son. “That’s pretty good.” He said. “Who told you that?”

Androcles met his father’s eyes. “You did father. The night before I departed for my Agoge.”

Martin chuckled. “I did huh?” He said. “I must have been really maudlin that night.” He said with a grin.

Andro laughed softly as well and took another pull from his beer. He moved to the single couch that faced the view window sat down as he too stared at the stars outside. Martin joined him after a moment, grabbing another beer and opening it. Andro looked at him.

“What are you contemplating father?” He asked finally.

“You don’t want to know.” He replied.

“Perhaps because it is the same thing that I have been thinking.” Andro ventured.

Martin nodded his head and looked at him. “Probably.”

“And?” Andro pressed him.

“I’m tired keto.” Martin spoke causing Andro to look at him intently. “I’m tired of our family, our blood being the blunt of everyone’s ire and ambition. I’m tired of discovering that I have lost family I did not know I had, without ever being able to know them. I’m tired of your mothers and your brothers and sisters being the target for midaeus who want to make a name for themselves because they don’t like me or they hate our blood.”

“You are speaking of staania Reva and Tenna Kelia aren’t you?” Andro said.

“I like to think of myself as a patient and tolerant man Andro...” Martin said. “...But these last years have stretched that patience and tolerance to their breaking point. I don’t know how much more I can take. If what Chiron thinks happened actually took place son, people are going to see a part of me that they have never seen before. A part that I have buried deep for a very long time. A part of me that only your Uncle Danny has ever seen.”

Androcles sipped his beer. “Perhaps that is what is needed father.” He spoke softly.

“I hope not.” Martin said.

“I am not interested in power for power’s sake...” Andro said softly after a long minute of silence. “But I am interested in power that is moral, that is right and that is good.”

Martin looked at his son. “Martin Luther King Jr.” He said.

“Yes. That is also you father, that has always been you.”

“The dead cannot cry out for justice.” Martin spoke. “It is a duty of the living to do so for them.”

Andro got to his feet and handed his beer to his father. “Lois McMaster Bujold.” Andro told him. “And that is you as well father.” He said before heading for the door. Martin Leonidas looked out at the stars and waited for the sound of the doors opening.

“Androcles?” Martin called out. He felt his son stop and turn to look at his back. “The shackles will come off son. I won’t hold back.” Martin felt his son nod his head.

“Then so be it father.” Andro told him. “So be it.”

SPARTA’S WRATH KING’S QUARTERS DECK TEN

“...Begun appearing on all of us as well Melda Min.” Aricia spoke to Dysea, Isabella and Cirith in the QCR Holo Com. “For’mya and I, all of you. Our children. We haven’t spoken to Anja yet but I imagine the same thing has taken place with her and our children on Jetania, really with anyone connected to our bloodline. I have never had a tattoo before and I... I kind of like it.” Aricia saw Dysea and Isabella smile in the transmission. “I do not know if this extends to those who we consider family but are not connected to us by blood, but given everything that Reva told us I suspect it does. We will know for sure when we see Daniel again.”

“How is... how is Martin taking everything Aricia?” Isabella asked from her chair beside Dysea. Cirith and Meral were also in the transmission, all four of them sitting close together in the room they were in. As always, the Queens of the Union were contemplative and intelligent, and all of them trusted Aricia’s intuition beyond a doubt.

Aricia was sitting on the couch in the large quarters, and she turned as For'mya came back into the huge main room with two mugs. She held one out to Aricia and she took the coffee while For'mya settled to the couch beside her with the mug of tea.

“You know how duan enyla Martin is Bella.” For'mya spoke as she got comfortable. “He rarely shows anything outwardly.”

Isabella nodded her head in the transmission. “Yes, I know. And that infuriates all of us.”

“He hasn’t spoken to us yet but something else is bothering him greatly. His resonance is unsettled, confused and... and angry. Androcles’ too.” For'mya spoke. “That is alarming in and of itself, that it effects both of them in such a way, but that there is anger there is even more unsettling.”

“We can feel that as well.” Bella said softly. “But this... we have never felt something like this from him before For'mya. It is like a slow... a slow, burning anger. A terrible anger and it is simmering just beneath the surface. It is even beyond what we felt from them during... during Alba Tau.”

For'mya nodded her head. “I know.” She said gently trying not to remember what they had all felt during that time.

Aricia nodded her head. “He and Androcles learned something else while we were on the surface of Lorenu Bella, but they have not told anyone what it is. It has something to do with the phrase Ardorm Panur. We don’t know what this phrase means outside of its translation but whatever it is, it has caused Martin and our son both to retreat into themselves in a way we have never felt before.”

“Winter Wonder.” Cirith said softly. “You have no idea what this means Aricia?”

Aricia shook her head. “No, and that is what frightens us Cirith.” She said. “We have talked with Sadi and the others and Androcles has not shared it with them either. Something is going on aside from everything else that we have discovered and only Martin and our son know what it is right now. You, of all of us Cirith, have more knowledge of our people from their time on Lycavore because of your father and his position. Does this phrase mean anything to you?”

Cirith shook her head. “My father made me study many of the Lycavorian history scrolls that were not destroyed by Veldruk, but I have never seen this phrase before.”

Dysea shook her head. “That is not good.” She said softly. She looked at Aricia and For'mya in the transmission. “If they have not shared it with us yet, it can only be something horrible. Something even they are still trying to process.”

“We felt... we felt a flash of this when he killed the man who had beaten Anja so badly.” Aricia spoke. “We told no one, but it was there.”

“Is this why he is sending for us?” Cirith asked.

Aricia shook her head quickly with a smile of love. “No. He made that decision before they discovered whatever they have. He misses all of you terribly. We all do.” Aricia said with deep affection. “It is time we reunited and remained together. Our bed feels empty without you in it with us. And we are stronger together. All of us.”

Dysea nodded her head. “Yes, we are.”

“And me?” Meral asked now.

For'mya smiled warmly. “You are our family Meral. Martin would not keep you away. Jezima is expecting you as well.”

“Good.” Meral snapped playfully. “I didn’t want to have to hit anyone to get on that ship.”

“Daniel has dispatched the ARC ROYAL from Ventori to Honelze.” For'mya told them. “It should arrive tomorrow for you. Akemi will send a KADEN down for you. Martin wants NORMYA’S LIGHT and MJOLNIR’S HAND to remain at Manne so they are able to respond quickly with their Fleet Groups if something changes with the Svorag ship. The SPIRIT OF HADARIA and the SCIMITAR will join with us when we reach Jetania and deal with the fools there. Their two Fleet Groups will be sufficient against this Coalition. Whatever information or items they may have taken from Dynina all those years ago, they obviously have not been able to use them in any important fashion. They truly don't realize how overmatched they will be. And after what that fool did to Anja, Martin will not play with them."

Isabella reached out and took Dysea's and Cirith's hands in hers. "It will feel wonderful to have his arms around us again. To have you around us again."

Aricia smiled and nodded her head. "Oh yes, it will." She said.

Dysea sat back in her chair. "Koguth is more than capable of finishing the defenses here." She said. "Have you spoken with Yuriko recently. She is... she is pregnant you know. She told us this two days ago!"

For'mya and Aricia's faces beamed with happiness at this as For'mya leaned forward. "We have not had the opportunity to speak with her! Oh, Dysea... that is wonderful!"

Dysea nodded with a smile. "She felt Achilles and Neesia when Andro and Sadi stopped shielding them, and she did not want to..."

"Yuriko is as much our daughter as Andro is our son, no matter her blood." Aricia stated firmly. "She always has been and she always will be. As will her children!"

Isabella chuckled now. "Believe me, I let her know that as I was scolding her for not telling her father and brother. Andro will let her know it too I think and she knows that."

"Androcles will be absolutely thrilled!" For'mya commented.

"What does Martin intend to do on Jetania?" Cirith asked.

Aricia shook her head. "I don't think he has made a determination yet." She replied to the question. "There is something on Jetania that Reva says we need to discover, something left for him, but as for the fools there?" Aricia shook her head. "I don't know."

"His actions with them would have been better had they not done to Anja what they did." For'mya spoke again. "He will not ever forget that, nor will he ever forgive it."

"You felt what happened with Retta I take it?" Dysea asked.

For'mya nodded again. "Oh yes."

"I do not think we need to worry about that." Aricia said. "This Alpha that has claimed her, he is the son of Loras. They both have Mahanlo blood within them. How we do not know, but we will discover it I am sure."

Isabella nodded her head. "We can feel them within us." She said. "The son, this Lazar, he is much more pronounced the last few hours, as if whatever was hiding his Etheric ability has been removed, but Loras remains the same. A faint echo, but it is there."

"How can they mask their bloodline?" Cirith asked now. "Even I know that is next to impossible to do."

For'mya shook her head. "That we do not know as of yet either." She replied. "One of the many things we will discover soon I hope."

"We have discovered so much in these last hours." Aricia said. "Answers to so many questions that we have asked for so long and yet now we have new questions." Aricia looked at them in the transmission. "Questions that I am not so sure we want the answers to."

All of them were silent for a long moment and then Dysea nodded her head. "I asked Daniel one night long ago, when we were just beginning to build Eden City. I asked him if he had ever seen Nauta Melme angry. Truly, deeply angry." Dysea paused and then looked at them. "He did not want to answer at first but I pressed him on it."

"Melda Min?" Aricia asked.

"All he would tell me is that it was a nightmare that would remain with him forever." Dysea replied. "A nightmare that he hoped would never occur again for there would be no remorse the next time."

This caused all of them to remain silent for several moments and it was For'mya who broke the long silence. "If what they have discovered is so terrible that Martin has not shared it with us yet, that Andro has not shared it with Sadi and Carisia and the others, then perhaps we do not want to know." She said softly. "It does not matter to me. I am who I am because of his love for me. His love for all of us. That will never change."

Isabella nodded her head and they saw Cirith and Dysea nod as well. "No, it will not. That could never change."

"We must trust in our husband and mate. He will tell us when he feels the time is right." Aricia spoke. "For now, for now let us come back together and be a family once more. Then we can decide where to go from there."

SPARTA'S WRATH BRIDGE

Martin walked through the massive double doors of the bridge and stopped, letting his eyes take everything in. He had not come to the bridge on the trip here and now he regretted that. The bridge of SPARTA'S WRATH was the largest he had ever seen on a ship and that was saying a lot. He saw dozens of men and women working at their stations and even more of them that were moving between these different stations doing their duty. It was damned impressive as far as he was concerned. His eyes found Andro and Armen standing on one side of the bridge with Chiron and he immediately moved over to them, noticing that Armen had that now familiar Worker Drone perched on his shoulder again. As Martin grew closer he saw the thin crimson stripes that now adorned its flat, armored backside.

"We are ready to depart King Leonidas. Another two hours to finish securing loading operations." Armen spoke causing Martin to look at him with surprise.

"Armen... your... voice!" Martin gasped.

The huge Avatar nodded his head. "Yes, King Martin. With the assistance of Chiron, I was able to modify my vocal processors to speak as he does. More naturally I believed he described it." As with Androcles, Martin had told Armen when he first came aboard that he was to use his first name. King Martin was obviously as far as he was willing to go.

"Very nice." Martin said looking at Chiron. "Avi?"

Chiron nodded his head. "His vocal processors were slightly less sophisticated than Armen's, so I allowed him to download these upgrades directly from my neural network. He was... happy to do so."

Martin laughed. "Happy? Well that's new for Avi." He said with a smile. "My staania Chiron? Armen?" He asked looking at them.

Chiron nodded again and handed him the data pad. "Her stasis chamber is secured in the quarters Androcles specified. Armen has linked its power source directly to the life support system so that it remains steady. The chamber itself was never designed to be moved, but with the Worker Drones you have on board, especially this one Alpha Nine, they took care of everything."

Alpha Nine bounced slightly on its legs before moving to climb onto Andro's shoulder. He smiled gently. "That was a compliment Alpha Nine." Andro told the spider like drone. The drone seemed to gaze at Chiron for a few moments and then chirped once more.

Chiron turned back to Martin. "Lady Reva's Sphere is with your mother Gorgo and Lady Aricia's mother Dasha at the moment." He said. "Armen has allowed me to access the internal ship's sensors so that I can track her whereabouts, but I refused any further access. This is his ship and I do not wish to interfere in that operation."

"He has earned it." Andro spoke.

Chiron nodded his head. "Indeed." He looked at Martin once more. "You have said you know where the device to transfer Lady Reva's consciousness back into her own body is Martin?"

Martin nodded his head. "It's on Jetania. Some place called the Mountain of Stone and Light." He told them.

Chiron blinked in surprise. "And these Lycavorians have never discovered it?"

Martin shook his head. "Apparently, there was a time when Nilantha thought they would find it and she moved all of the Onab Seer painting and drawings, all of the prophecies to her ship under the northern ocean. They didn't find it but she was being cautious and her decision was a good one. She doesn't know exactly what it is, but after what Anja has told me about her, I think she may have some idea."

Chiron nodded his head in approval. "Dadrien's choice of Nilantha was a superior one. She is also not without her own skills in being able to avoid the actions of this Osrod's father all those years ago and still continue her mission. To work behind the scenes so to speak as she has done, this trait is not normally found among the Darastrixi according to my information about their species."

Andro nodded in agreement. "Sarlane said the same thing father." He added. "She is very excited to meet her."

Martin nodded his own head. "I get the feeling that Dadrien had his talons in a lot more than we know of in order to get everyone this far." He said. "My grandfather also proved to be very devious when he wanted to be, so I can see the two of them working together really well."

Chiron smiled. "A unique trait that has obviously been passed down to you and your son Martin." He said. "Lady Reva has had many laughs at how you have given your enemies, as she describes it, unexplainable fits of mental coordination."

Andro laughed aloud at that while his father grinned broadly. "You mean he drove them insane."

Chiron nodded his head. "Indeed."

"Predictable is boring." Martin answered shrugging his shoulders.

"Yes, it is." Chiron added.

Martin hesitated for a moment but Andro knew why and he looked at Alpha Nine on his shoulder. "Alpha Nine, low frequency white noise scrambling around us. Two-meter radius. Ten minutes." Alpha Nine chirped twice as Armen moved closer within the two-meter cone and Alpha Nine's red eyes blinked as he bounced once on Andro's shoulder. He looked at his father. "We are good."

Martin looked at Chiron. "Anything?" He asked.

Chiron shook his head. "Not yet." He answered. "That is not surprising however, as I said before, Kesas Pengot is a very cautious man. He will be even more so if my hypothesis is in any way correct. You must understand Martin, the last time they heard from anyone with Mahanlo blood, aside from Lady Kelia and Lord Lylor, was when they left Cerath. It is very possible that they have believed for millions of years that they have been dead, and that your bloodline died with them. It may also explain why Lady Kelia's life sign is not with the others."

"Come again?" Martin asked.

"After my supposition to you in the Sanctum, I decided to do an intensive review of all the Packs that remained after the end of Vada Zin Sarakoa Vyen Ils." Chiron told him. "In order to do this I had to open previously unopened archives that Lady Reva had sealed."

"Why did she seal them?" Martin asked.

"I do not know." He replied.

Martin nodded his head in acknowledgment. "That doesn't matter right now. What did you find out?"

"The Kirek Pack, the Nenay and Arhtai Packs all departed with Lady Kelia and Lord Lylor in command." Chiron spoke. "The Nenay Pack was purer bloodline wise, behind only the Carbula and Kirek packs, but the Arhtai Pack was larger. It was Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten's hope that the three Packs would breed together and become stronger. The probe's data suggests another scenario."

"The Arhtai Pack got greedy and power hungry." Martin said softly.

Chiron looked at him with a nod. "Lord Nyser was the Patriarch of the Arhtai Pack when they departed. His mate was Lady Yelma. There were rumors even back then that she was the real power behind their Pack and that Nyser allowed her this role. The Arhtai Pack fought the Iais'Kai, they fought them hard, but they were never fully behind what Lord Daniho's vision was. Over the years, the Arhtai pack and the Mahanlo Pack receded from each other and barely maintain civil relations. It was one of the main reasons Daniho and Ashten chose them to go with Lady Kelia."

"If that was the case Chiron, if there was such bad blood between them, why risk such a thing?"

Androcles asked now.

"You must understand Androcles, the Packs were different back then." Chiron told them. "Daniho was chosen to be King by nearly every Lycavorian alive at the time. Only the leaders of the Chetak Pack truly opposed him, but that was not for ideological reasons. They simply felt they should be the ones in charge. Our people loved him Martin." Chiron spoke looking back to Martin. "They trusted him to lead them and he did. They put their hope and future in him and he did not take that lightly. He led them in a direction designed for the future, and while it may not have been in the direction that some of them wanted, they followed without question because they believed in him. The many years of war changed all that. Not their belief in Lord Daniho or the others, that never faltered one bit, for the Mahanlo Pack had suffered just as much as they had and they knew it. Their hope for the future had begun to waver however. Daniho knew they needed a new start and that is why not one of the Packs disagreed with his plan to leave Cerath. In his vision of leaving they saw their chance at a future once more renewed.”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “War will do that.” He said softly. “He just never saw that others had more nefarious ideas in agreeing with him.”

Chiron nodded his head. “Not until it was too late, but very correct. During the last five hundred years of the war, the Arhtai Pack was hit hard by the Iais'Kai on several fronts.” Chiron said. “Lord Nyser and Lady Yelma lost their five oldest children in the same battle. They had requested support of course and Lord Daniho dispatched it as soon as he was able but there was already an ongoing operation that took priority. The attack against the Arhtai Pack was not expected and it took everyone by surprise. It was after this that relations between the two Packs deteriorated badly. The other Packs knew what took place and they accepted it as the sacrifices of war that they had all had to endure. As I said, the Mahanlo Pack suffered as much, if not more than all the others, for they were on the front in every battle fought. Daniho finally chose the Arhtai Pack to go with Lady Kelia because he wanted to repair this relationship and Kelia was the only one who had the personality to do it.”

“She was the peacemaker?” Martin asked.

Chiron nodded his head. “Lady Kelia, from what I understand and have heard from Lady Reva speaking of her, she could charm the pants off even one of these Semtolian Pit Vipers you despise so much Martin.”

Martin looked at him with wide eyes. “How do you know about that?” He gasped.

Chiron smiled. “Lady Reva ranted for nearly a week after discovering you had done this.” He replied. “I won’t begin to relay to you the words she used to describe you.”

Andro chuckled and Martin shook his head with a grin. “I don’t think I want to know.” He said.

Chiron nodded his head. “This is why Lord Daniho sent them with Kelia. He wanted her to repair the damage his actions had done.”

“They weren’t his actions Chiron.” Andro spoke now. “It was war.”

Chiron nodded his head. “I understand this but...”

“If what you think has taken place, then apparently the Arhtai Pack did not feel the same way.” Martin spoke.

“If this... if this is true, then it only cements their betrayal!” Andro snarled angrily.

“The twelve Packs that departed with Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten were the Carbula, Domara and Chetak Packs as you know already. The others were the Aoni and Olere Packs, the Taild, Aenthi, Utane and Ormck Packs and finally the Sainn, Drarr and Ekela Packs. Of the twelve Packs that went with him to Lycavore, the Carbula, Domara and the Aoni Packs were the purest of blood behind the Mahanlo Pack. The Utane, Ormck, Ekela and Taild Packs were those that were banished for their roles against the Mahanlo bloodline and they eventually died out. The other Packs, all of them, began to interbreed after several centuries on Lycavore. Many smaller Packs broke off with their own names from the central Packs, but they could all be tied back to the original Packs that arrived on Lycavore. You see now why Lady Reva and I have told you that your history is not wrong; it is simply just not complete.” Chiron explained as he looked at Martin. He turned to Androcles. “Your children with Lady Sadi, they will have the bloodlines of all the eight original Packs that remained on Lycavore Androcles. It does not now matter who or why, only that it is. The Onab prophecy stated that your son will unite with one who carries the blood of the three Packs that departed Cerath alone, thus reuniting the Packs as one. The exact wording was simple, unique and without question...”

“The one born of purest Mahanlo blood, his father with glowing blue orbs and his mother with green gems that glitter in the light, he will discover the one born of three bloodlines and they will unite the Lycavorian people a final time under their guidance. Never to be torn asunder again.”

“That is why Lady Reva has been protecting Lady Loras all of these years.” Chiron said. “I do not know what significance your daughter will play Androcles, for they did not see there would be twins, but given your bloodline I remain confident it will have a role in the future.”

“So Loras Ranev carries the blood of the three Packs that left alone?” Martin asked him now.

Chiron nodded his head. “Her Mahanlo blood is and always will be the dominant blood, but to answer your question, yes. She carries Arhtai and Nenay blood within her, probably from one or both of her parents, but it is there. Their union will reunite all the bloodlines from the original Packs on Cerath, just as the Onab foresaw.” Chiron looked at Androcles. “I can only theorize that the Pralor blood within you, this Praetorian gene as your mother Anja calls it, this has allowed you and your father to sense and in some cases, even see in different ways those that will share your lives in the future. It happened for your father in his dreams, it happened for you before you were ever born and now it has happened for your son in the same manner. In truth, it has happened to all of your children in some manner Martin.” Chiron spoke turning back to him. “It is why they are so confident in the decisions on who they will spend their lives with. They can feel it in their blood.”

“Wow!” Andro commented. “Like no pressure there Chiron.” He said.

Chiron nodded his head knowing the context of what Andro meant. “I do not have the ability to sense the emotions that you feel, but Lady Reva has explained to me in detail about it, or tried to at least. It is a burden that the Mahanlo blood has carried since the very first day and you have not shirked what your blood calls for you to do. This has given Lady Reva comfort through the years.”

Martin took a deep breath and there was silence between them for a long moment before he nodded his head. “Back to business.” He offered softly. “Dwelling on the past has never been a strong suit of mine.”

Chiron nodded his head. “As we have determined, the Mahanlo blood is being masked within her somehow, but it is there. The same can be said for the children she has already mothered.”

Andro shook his head. “Not anymore.” He spoke.

Chiron looked at him. “What do you mean?”

“Loras’ son Lazar has claimed my daughter Retta in the old way Chiron. They bit each other.” Martin spoke. “A few hours ago, whatever was masking his presence went away. His Etheric resonance is a clear echo to us now, so I can only assume that whatever was masking his bloodline is also gone. He is tied very tightly with my daughter’s resonance within the Etheric realm.”

“Can others detect this?” Chiron asked.

Martin shook his head. “Not unless they have Mahanlo blood in them, or have sufficient Etheric ability to detect his resonance. So far that ability seems to be limited to my family and a few other Lycavorians and Pralors that are close to us. Jomann for example. No one else among our people, that we know anyway, none of them has developed Etheric powers beyond a Tier Six level. The vast majority of those are either Durcunusaan or members of Mjolnir’s Hand. And any one of them has had ample opportunity to take out me or any member of our family for decades now. I trust them Chiron.”

“Then so shall I.” Chiron spoke.

Martin nodded his head. “Good.”

Chiron nodded his head. “Jomann I can understand, for he has Kirek blood within him, as well as the Praetorian gene that is within you and your family. Wayonn and Murano have the ability to detect her Etheric resonance as you say, but not her true bloodline. Murano is not Lycavorian and Wayonn’s mate was from the Aoni Pack” He said.

“May I make a supposition King Martin?” Armen spoke now.

They looked at him. “Go for it Armen. I trust yours and Avi’s suppositions more than most people’s facts.” Martin answered him.

Chiron glanced at Martin when he said this and contained the smile that would have split his normally stoic Avatar face. The Onab had made one prophecy that had already come true it seemed given how Martin and his family treated Armen and Avi and the Worker Drones all around them.

“I have reviewed the data that Chiron has given to me.” Armen spoke. “From a tactical sense his theory is sound.”

Martin looked at Chiron with a grin and Chiron shrugged his shoulders. “Armen is a Tactical Avatar where as I am not. It made logical sense to have him review my findings.”

Martin smiled and looked back at Armen. “Ok.” He said. “And?”

“Based on the facts and the reason of the information presented so far, it is only logical to assume that since Loras Ranev nor her parents are from Ventori as Chiron has told you, then they must be from one of these three planets that you have discovered. That can only lead to the confirmation of Chiron’s theory.” Armen spoke.

Martin and Andro nodded. “We’re with you so far Armen.” Andro spoke for them both.

Armen nodded his head. “And if they indeed have this bloodline masking item or device or whatever it is within them, then someone knows they are there.”

Martin nodded smiling at Armen’s use of slang in his sentence structure. “Ok.”

“It is also logical to theorize that whoever put this masking device within them knows exactly where they are.” Armen said evenly. “And they know the purpose of hiding their true bloodline.”

Andro looked at his father then, putting it together a little faster than him. “Kesas Pengot did this.” He said finally.

Armen nodded his head. “That would be the logical conclusion.” Armen spoke. “From a tactical standpoint. Chiron has already stated Loras Ranev’s parents did not come from Ventori and were not part of the Seed Mission there. It is the only option that is viable.”

“Unfortunately that confirms that there indeed was a coup against Lady Kelia and Lord Lylor.” Chiron spoke. “And a... an attempt at the cleansing of the Mahanlo bloodline like on Lycavore.”

Andro looked at Armen. “Armen?” He asked.

Armen nodded his head. “Again, from a solely tactical aspect Androcles, that is the only conclusion that can be reached.” He spoke.

“And Kesas Pengot sent Loras’s parents to Ventori to safeguard our bloodline. In case, in case anything happened to the rest of them.” Martin spoke softly, his genuine respect for the man jumping a hundred-fold and he had not even met him yet.

“We are talking about the genocide of an entire bloodline.” Chiron spoke once more. “If Kesas Pengot devised a way to hide the Mahanlo bloodline, he learned of it from the Onab. It is the only way he could know such things.”

“That doesn’t explain why Tenne Lylor and Tenna Kelia are still in stasis.” Andro spoke. “Or their three children.”

Chiron’s eyes grew a little wider. “Perhaps it does.” He spoke.

Martin looked at him. “Why? How?”

“Think about it out of the box Martin Mahanlo Leonidas.” Chiron said. “Think like you normally think.”

Martin was silent for a long moment as he stared at Chiron, his mind flipping through scenarios left and right and tossing them aside when they didn’t figure into what he was searching for. It took all of six seconds but Martin lifted his head higher and looked at his son as they both came to the same conclusion and the same time.

“Pawns.” Martin said softly his jaw tightening in anger. “They are pawns.”

Armen blinked several times. “Pawns?” He inquired.

“Pawns in a much more insidious game.” Androcles growled softly.

Chiron nodded his head slowly. “The Arhtai Pack is using Lady Kelia as leverage against the Kirek Pack and whoever might be aligned with them. If they attempt anything then they will kill her.”

Andro shook his head. “That isn’t all of it.” He said “It can’t be. There has to be more to it.”

Chiron nodded his head. “I would agree with that statement, but until we make contact with Lord Kesas, we are only guessing.”

Andro looked at his father with wide eyes now. “Medwan... mother, Retta, Zarah, all of them could be in danger!”

Chiron looked between father and son. “I do not understand.” He said. “What do you mean?”

“You do not send someone into hiding without a means to monitor their safety.” Armen spoke now. “And if you have a means of monitoring them, then so do your enemies.”

Chiron’s eyes grew wide now. “Sibfla!” He swore in very un-Avatar fashion. “That would mean that the Arhtai Pack has agents on Ventori and Jetania. Looking for what Kesas Pengot is trying to hide!”

Martin nodded his head. “And Lazar Ranev just claimed my daughter Retta. She has my blood in her.”

Chiron met his eyes. “And your blood, the blood of your children, it descends directly from Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten. The purest of all.”

“Retta bit him.” Andro said softly. “Her bite must have...”

Martin nodded his head. “...unlocked whatever it was blocking his own bloodline and resonance and exposed his Mahanlo blood to whoever is looking for it.”

“We do not know this for sure Martin.” Chiron said finally. “The facts do not all add up.”

“This is not about facts anymore Chiron.” Martin spoke.

“This is about instinct.” Andro echoed his father and turned to Armen. “Armen... inform everyone that they have fifteen minutes to finish their operations. Then plot an immediate Portal Jump to Jetania!”

Armen nodded his head and turned to begin issuing orders as Martin lifted his hand and tapped his jaw.

“Denali?” He barked.

“Father?” Deni’s voice answered instantly, though full of surprise.

“Where are you?” Martin asked his second pureblood son.

“Hmmm... Lisisa, Arduri and I are with...” Denali sounded almost embarrassed and Martin understood completely.

“Forgive me keto.” Martin spoke.

“Father what is it?” Lisisa’s voice broke into the COM now, a little out of breath but clear and focused.

“Gather our family in the landing bay by the PREMONITION Lisi.” Martin spoke clearly but quickly.

“All of them Denali. Including Wayonn and Murano. We’re departing for Jetania in fifteen minutes. Your mother, sisters and all of our family with them may very well be in some serious danger. We’re going in under Crimson Protocols Denali.”

“Nubou!” They heard Denali hiss aloud. “We’ll meet you there in six minutes father!”

Martin turned to Andro now. “Break out the Pralor weapons keto.” He spoke. “I’m not going to jack around anymore. With anyone.”

Andro nodded and began heading for the bridge doors. Martin turned to Chiron. “I want you to send another message Chiron.”

“Of course. What should it say?” Chiron asked.

“Tell Kesas Pengot we are going to secure our bloodline on Jetania.” Martin told him. “And tell him, tell him that he had better answer you Chiron, or I’m going to come there and put my size ten and a half boot so far up his fat Lycavorian ass he’ll be singing soprano for a motherfucking decade! Then I’m going to go and dance a fucking death tune on the Arhtai Pack and get my Tenna back! The days of beating down the Mahanlo bloodline because you don’t like us are done! Over! Kaput! You tell him that!”

Chiron blinked at the heat in Martin’s voice but could say nothing as Martin had already turned and headed for the double doors off the bridge. Chiron watched his back until the doors closed behind him and then he let the smile slowly split his face.

“Martin Mahanlo Leonidas. If only you knew how much you and your son sound like Lord Daniho.” Chiron spoke to no one in particular. “It is long past the time for fear to become part of the equation again. For all of us.” Chiron looked down at the floor and saw Alpha Nine looking up at him with those red orb eyes. He bent down and picked up the Worker Drone. “Come Alpha Nine... we have a message to send. A message that will send ripples of the past to the future. And what a shockwave it will be.”

JETANIA

Lazar had been very nervous when Retta brought him to the Medical Center to meet with her mother. He had claimed her daughter in the old fashion of their people and he had done it completely by instinct. He did not know how well that was going to go over with Anja or the others. He thought for sure there would be anger in her eyes and her mannerisms but he could not have been more wrong.

Anja could feel the Etheric resonance of her daughter as easily as if she was breathing. That resonance told her all she needed to know, for Retta’s Etheric echo and her female aura did nothing but pulse with love for the tall and handsome Lazar. Anja could see how things had gone, for Retta hid nothing from her mother. Anja could see how Retta had surrendered to his male aura at first, but then how Lazar had kept his promise to her and allowed her to show him what Anja and other pureblood and turned females within the Union knew from experience. It was so much more glorious when the woman in your life had her wits and her senses to control of her own free will. Then she could show you pleasures that you had never seen. Anja could feel the passion and desire within each of them for each other and it was focused and so very pure. Just as her love and desire for

Martin and her fellow Queens was a powerful beacon, now so was Retta and Lazar's love and desire for each other.

Lazar would not make eye contact with his mother at first until he sensed that she was not angry with him for taking Retta. Instead he felt happiness within her and acceptance for how things had turned out. Her aura towards him, as with Anja's, radiated warmth and happiness for both him and Retta.

Lazar sat on the medical table shirtless as Anja's glowing white hands slowly moved over his head and shoulders and upper body. It was truly magical to him what Retta and her mother could do and he simply sat there unmoving trying to be a good patient. Retta knew how close Lazar was with Rhaos, he considered him to be a true brother just as his friend Laon was and Retta demanded that Lazar make sure he was there as well. He had witnessed what her mother had done to him on their ship anyway so he already knew of their healing power. He stood in the corner of the Medical Center behind Loras quietly, taking everything in.

Anja finally stepped back and lowered her hands. "How do you feel?" Anja asked him.

"Alive!" Lazar answered her instantly.

Anja chuckled softly and glanced at Loras with a smile before turning back to him. Loras moved up beside Anja, a warm smile on her face as she looked at her oldest son. "That is not what she meant Lazar." She told him.

Anja looked at him. "Do you love my daughter Lazar?" Anja asked him though she could see the answer on his face whenever he looked at Retta.

Lazar turned and looked at Retta. "More completely than I have ever loved anything." He replied softly. "She is..."

Anja held up her hand quickly. "I don't need the details!" She interjected.

"I do!" Rhaos exclaimed from behind his mother.

Anja laughed aloud as Loras turned and looked at him. "Should I inform your mother of your voyeuristic tendencies Rhaos Kyer?" She asked him in a mock stern voice seeing his eyes go wide.

Rhaos shook his head quickly as Retta giggled. "Carians joa!" He exclaimed.

Loras smiled at him as she turned back to Lazar. Anja rested her hand on Lazar's forearm and looked at him. "You would not have been able to hold Retta's attention if your feelings for her were not true Lazar." Anja told him. "She would have sensed this within you. You have nothing to fear from me young man, nor from anyone who is her family. So, put that out of your head."

"Does that include her father and her brothers?" Lazar asked.

Anja smiled and wagged her hand back and forth. "They'll give you grief I'm sure, but they will honor what their sister has chosen and accept it. And they will stand with you through anything." Anja could almost see Lazar relax even more. "Now I ask again, how do you feel?"

"That is the word I used Lady Anja." Lazar answered. "Alive! My mind... I have seen so much that I never dreamed could exist!"

Anja nodded her head. "That comes from Retta's Etheric power and the memories her father and I shared with her when she was conceived. You know that."

Lazar shook his head. "Yes, I know that much. She explained this to me. When I say, I feel alive... it is what I mean."

Anja looked at him oddly. "How so?"

"I feel... I feel..." Lazar struggled to try and explain it but Retta moved close to him and put her hands on his arm and chest.

"Say what you feel my love." She told him. "Hold nothing back from our mothers."

Lazar looked at her and pulled her close with one arm and nodded his head. He looked at Anja. "I feel more alive. I have more energy within me, my senses are even more acute than before we claimed each other. All of them. Retta told me of the Etheric portion of her family and what you can do... I understand that part."

Anja smiled and shook her head. "You haven't met her father, her brothers or her sister yet." She said. "There is a lot more to it with them."

Retta smiled. "I didn't feel the need to try to explain everything at once mother." She said sheepishly. "We were preoccupied."

Anja smiled and laughed softly. "I'm sure." She said.

“It is not that,” Lazar continued. “It is a physical sensation. I truly feel more alive Lady Anja. Stronger, faster, more alert and aware of everything around me.”

“His scent is stronger too mother.” Retta spoke. “Even more than from before he claimed me. It is... it is more pungent to me.”

Rhaos had moved closer and now he stepped up beside Lazar with a grin. “I have been telling you for years to take more bathes fervon.”

Retta laughed happily and hit Rhaos in his chest with her fist. Loras and Anja both took notice of this interaction and how seamlessly Rhaos seemed to accept Retta and Lazar claiming her.

Anja looked at her daughter and shook her head. “I can’t detect anything odd Jonia hara.” Anja said using Andro’s nickname for her. “Not without a full medical work up with our equipment. The medical technology in use here does not come close to ours and couldn’t tell us the same things Retta. You know that.”

“I don’t need technology to tell me something I already know mother.” Retta said with the confidence of an Alpha female.

Rhaos took that time to look at his longtime friend and he noticed the wolf’s head tattoo on Lazar’s left shoulder. It was incredibly detailed and an exceptional piece of work from what he could see. He moved from the corner and reached up and ran his fingers across the tattoo.

“When did you get this done Lazar?” He asked. “This is new.”

Retta saw what he was looking at and she nodded her head. “And then there is this mother?” She spoke.

“What?” Anja asked.

Retta used her hands to turn Lazar sideways on the table and she showed her mother the tattoo. “This was not there last night mother.” She said before reaching up and pulling aside the shirt she wore of Lazar’s. She had not wanted to put her full Drow Scout armor back on and she instead chose to go with the lower portions of the armor and one of Lazar’s shirts. She exposed her own left shoulder and saw her mother’s eyes go wide. “And I did not have this last night either. They were there when we woke this morning however.”

Anja looked at Loras now with wide eyes, her expression mirroring Anja’s. Lazar and Retta both saw their faces and Lazar leaned forward. “What is it?” He asked.

Anja turned back to him and Retta and she reached up to unfasten her Armorpoly armor. She removed the upper chest portion quickly to reveal the t-shirt that covered her and then she pulled down the corner of the shirt to reveal her left shoulder. Retta gasped as she saw the identical tattoo and she grabbed Lazar’s arm as he got to his feet in shock.

“What is this?” He exclaimed looking at his mother. “Mother?”

Loras turned slightly and pulled aside the shirt she wore over her shoulder and they saw the identical tattoo on her skin, though it was faint and not fully as clear as it was on Anja, Retta and himself.

Retta’s green eyes were wide as she looked at her mother. “Medwaw what is happening here?” She stammered.

Anja looked at her. “Something happened after we left the Etheric connection with your father and the others.” She said. “Zarah and Normya filled me in on a little of what was said this morning but...”

“What did they say?” Retta demanded. “Do not hide anything from me mother!”

Anja shook her head quickly and reached up to lightly caress her daughter’s cheek. “You know I would not do that Retta.” She said warmly. “Zarah, Normya, Kalis, Serale, anyone who has our blood within them, Mahanlo blood, they all have this tattoo on their left shoulder now.” Anja explained to her. “Anyone touched by our bloodline, your father’s bloodline, they will have it as well.”

Retta looked at Lazar quickly. “We... we bit each other.” She gasped.

Lazar nodded his head. “I am not unhappy about that Retta.” He spoke with a smile.

Retta shook her head and slapped his shoulder playfully causing him to smile even wider. “Neither am I fool!” She hissed at him happily. “But that doesn’t explain your mother. And why is the tattoo not fully formed on her skin like the rest of us?”

Lazar saw what she was saying and looked at his mother now. “Mother?” He asked.

Loras shook her head, unwilling to tell Lazar what she had seen on the Oracle’s ship or what Anja had already told her. She could feel Achilles within her, albeit faintly. It wasn’t anywhere near the power it was when she had been in the Etheric connection, but his presence was still there and so very warm, loving and comforting.

“I don’t know keto.” She said.

Anja looked at Loras for a long moment, different scenarios going through her mind at a thousand miles a minute. It was one of the things that Martin and her fellow Queens had told her countless times that they loved about her the most through their years together. Her mind was incredible at being able to look at a situation from every angle without Anja actually having to focus her attention and think about it.

“Loras, do you mind if I try something?” She asked.

Loras met her eyes. “Like what?”

“I can run a preliminary blood screening right here.” Anja spoke. “Your equipment is able to do that.”

“Blood screening?” Loras asked. “Anja why?”

“To test a theory that just popped into my head.” Anja replied.

Loras looked at Lazar and then back to Anja and she nodded her head. “I don’t see the issue with that, but you will not find anything.”

Anja nodded her head. “Probably not, but it couldn’t hurt.” Anja reached up and touched her jaw.

“Kalis?” She spoke aloud, not wanting to hide anything from them.

Kalis’ voice responded instantly as Anja knew he would. While they could not hear him answering her, she made certain they heard all of her end of the conversation. “Mandri, get my Kit Bag from the STRIKER and then you and Serale join me here in their Medical Center. I want to run some tests.”

“Is everything alright Tenna Anja?” Kalis asked protectively.

Anja smiled and nodded her head. “Yes, everything is fine. Just get my bag and meet us here.”

“Five minutes.” Kalis answered.

It did not seem like it took five minutes as Kalis was there within three minutes at least, Serale clutching Anja’s bag in one hand and Kalis’ hand in the other. Anja took the P9 from within the bag and set it up on the table where Lazar had been sitting. She turned to both Lazar and then Loras with the small medical device in her hand.

“This is a blood sampler. I’m just going to touch it to your arms and that is it.” Anja spoke.

Lazar and Loras both nodded their heads and Anja touched it to their forearms quickly and drew a miniscule drop of blood from each of them. Gone were the days of drawing vials of blood to do simple tests and it more than pleased Anja when she discovered this so long ago on Earth, as well as her own heritage. She processed the samples within the Injector and then took the small chip out of the bottom and plugged it into her P9. Anja had Avi transfer quite a bit of files to her personal P9, mostly from the main Hadarian Medical Computer on Earth, and now she could do most everything she wanted to do off of her P9 computer. She also guarded it with a purpose for if it ever fell into the wrong hands it would not be good.

Anja straightened back up and looked at Loras. “I’m running a simple blood analysis.” She told her. “It will compare your samples with those already in the database on my computer which is quite extensive.”

Loras looked at her oddly. “Our blood samples should not be in your database Anja.” She spoke. “We have only just...”

The P9 beeped loudly, interrupting her words and Anja turned back to the screen. “That was quick.” She spoke as she touched the small console and brought up the results for all of them to see. “Saoi sibfla!” Anja gasped as the readings appeared on the screen.

“Mother?” Retta asked as she stepped closer to her and looked at the screen. Her own eyes grew wider and she looked quickly to Lazar.

His dark eyes filled with surprise and he reached for her. “Retta?” He asked his voice filled with concern.

Loras looked back and forth between them and then turned to Anja. “What is it?” She asked.

Anja turned and looked at Loras. “Loras... I thought you said you were born here on Jetania?”

Loras moved closer to her. “I was, why? What... Anja what have you found?”

“And your parents?” Anja asked her. “You said they were born on Ventori?”

Loras nodded her head. “Yes. Anja what are you saying? What did that thing tell you?” She asked moving closer to her.

“Loras... you and... you and Lazar, and I would guess your children with Warim as well... you have Mahanlo blood in you.” Anja told her. “You have our blood within you.”

Loras laughed softly at this and shook her head. "That isn't possible Anja." She said feeling relieved. "Being able to... being able to feel Achilles is one thing... but having the same blood is not possible."

Lazar looked between his mother and Anja. "Who is Achilles?" He asked.

"Blood doesn't lie Loras." Anja told her ignoring Lazar's question for the moment. "It's a different strain than what is within me, Retta and the others of our family but it is unmistakable to say the least." She motioned to the computer screen. "Look here... do you see these DNA strands here? These are the Mahanlo bloodline strands. All of us have these strands within our blood molecules. They are uniquely unmistakable from the other Lycavorian strands because of the Mahanlo bloodline. The Mahanlo bloodline has a much higher red blood cell count than normal and their blood has a Thrombin level ten times that of normal Lycavorians, which in turn makes up part of the DNA strands. The Mahanlo bloodline and their Gene Regulation stands out from others. It cannot be reproduced or copied but it is very distinct." Anja adjusted the screen and beside the two samples that were already there a third came up. "Look... this is a sample of Martin's blood. Do you see the individual strands here? You see how they are brighter and thicker?"

Loras nodded her head. "Yes."

Anja nodded and shifted her finger to the images of hers and Lazar's samples. "And these are you and Lazar." She said. "They are different, but these three strands are identical. Which, in laymen's terms means we are related Loras. Leonidas blood, Mahanlo blood, it will always be dominant over different Lycavorian bloodlines because of the unusually high red cell count and the Thrombin levels."

"Are you... are you saying we are related?" Lazar gasped looking at Retta.

Anja nodded her head. "Based on what I am seeing here, there is Mahanlo blood in both of you, but it is genetically different than ours. As if it came from another source within the same family." Anja looked at Lazar and her daughter. "It is why the attraction between the two of you was so much more intense. The wolf blood within us will always yearn for the most powerful bloodlines to be together."

"So we... we are related?" Retta asked.

Anja nodded her head slowly. "Yes... but by many thousands of generations Retta."

Retta looked at Lazar then and saw the worry in his eyes, but she ended that instantly and wrapped her arms around his waist and allowed him to pull her tightly to him. Lazar lowered his head to the top of hers and affectionately nuzzled her dark red hair while pulling her even closer.

Anja smiled and then looked at Loras. Her face had a look of disbelief on it and she reached for her in comfort but stopped when Serale's voice echoed. "Anja... look?"

Anja turned and saw Serale looking at the results of the samples on the screen. "Serale?"

Serale pointed to some of the other results. "Look at the differences in the gene regulation Anja." She spoke. "Lazar's is much higher than his mother which should not be the case. They should be the same, yet it almost looks like Loras' is being diminished somehow."

Anja looked back fully to the screen. "Diminished?" She spoke as she looked at the screen.

Serale nodded her head. "My mother taught me Cellular Protein Structures. It was an incredibly boring class but it does allow me to tell them apart as if it is second nature. These bluish proteins in Lady Loras' blood are not in Lazar's, and they also seem to be somehow shielding the Mahanlo proteins. Swarming around them."

Anja blinked suddenly. "Not shielding." She said softly as she looked at Serale. "They are hiding them."

"Hiding?" Loras asked. "What do you mean?"

Anja looked at her. "It's why we did not detect it right away within you and Lazar. We are not... we are not pureblood. Our sense of smell is good, better than average actually, but it is not anything as powerful as Martin or Andro or any of our pureblood children."

Serale nodded her head as Anja spoke. "These proteins would definitely alter the scent." She spoke confidently. "They would not register to the Olfactory Epithelium of a turned wolf, or even a normal pureblood Anja."

Kalis looked at his beautiful Serale with an odd face. "An olfactory what Serale?" He asked.

Serale met his eyes and smiled lovingly at him. "It is how we tell scents apart my love." She answered him. She saw recognition come over his face and Kalis turned to look at Rhaos, who held up his hands defensively.

"Don't look at me..." He spoke quickly. "I have no idea what they are talking about. They lost me a long time ago."

Serale chuckled and turned back to Anja. “Look at how the proteins are swarming Anja.” She said. “Only someone with a highly evolved sense of smell, a sense of smell not typically found in normal pureblood Lycavorians would be able to muddle through the garbage proteins and detect the differences.”

Anja met her eyes. “Only a pureblood of Mahanlo descent.” She said softly. “But why are they present in Loras’ blood and not Lazar’s?”

“These masking proteins are not permanent Anja. I would hazard a guess and say when Retta and Lazar bit each other, when they claimed each other, that the more powerful Mahanlo proteins simply eradicated those that were masking his true bloodline.” Serale answered. “I’m no expert... but I would have to say that these masking proteins were purposefully introduced into their blood, and given their cellular structure, they would pass from mother to child in the womb.”

Anja turned quickly to look at Loras once more. “Loras where are your parents?” Anja asked.

“What? They are in Warim I would assume. They operate a small shop where my father sells trinkets that he and my mother make. Why?” Loras answered.

Anja was about to answer when she staggered against the table and Retta slumped against Lazar as their minds were suddenly filled with the most wonderful sensations of love and family. Loras and Kalis reached for Anja at the same time.

“Anja what is wrong?” Loras demanded as she gripped her hands.

“Tenna Anja?” Kalis blurted out the words as he held her arms. Her was still learning of his Etheric abilities and was not attuned to his family’s resonance. He had been angered at this first until Andro had told him it would come in time and with concentration and not to rush it. It took only a few seconds longer and then Kalis felt it too.

“Oh boy!” Anja gasped. “Martin... Martin is here!” She spoke as his beautiful aura and Etheric resonance swarmed all around her. “Martin and our family are here!”

“All of them!” Retta gasped as she held Lazar’s arms. She looked at her mother intently. “Medwaw... they are not...”

Anja nodded her head. “They are not happy in the least!” Anja gasped aloud.

JETANIA SIX KILOMETERS NORTHEAST OF MOUNTAIN PACK HIDDEN BASE

On the nights when the breeze was blowing in from directly north, the scent of the ocean reached this far inland and you almost felt like it was just over the mountain horizon and not eight kilometers away. The cave was a special place for Taris Ranev and would forever remain so after the last night. She had discovered it six years ago, concealed behind the huge waterfall that dropped five hundred meters to the valley below. It wasn’t large, equal in size to the main room of the home in Warim where she had grown up and through these past years she had added many different things to make it a unique spot for her to come and read her books and conduct her Black Watch schooling.

Last night however, it had become the place where both she and Anoria had surrendered to the feelings and emotions within them for each other. It had been a glorious night of simple exploration and taste. The pull to each other was too much to resist any longer and both young women had set about to discover all they could about each other.

This morning they simply sat facing each other, their long legs stretched out across each others’ and their naked skin touching in as many places as they could manage. The thick, skin blanket was huge and it covered a large portion of the inside of the cave. It was actually several different skins from the local Nakoc herds that covered the mountains in large numbers. Large four legged animals that provided much of the meat to the surrounding cities. Taris had stitched them together and brought the plush, Nakoc skin rug here one night several winters ago. Their breasts were pressed against one another as they shared the deep and loving kiss. Anoria’s white blond hair was slightly longer than Taris’ and it cascaded over one shoulder and mingled with Taris’ lustrous black locks. Their bodies still hummed from the previous night of exploration and the discovery of new pleasures that neither of them had known could exist. That they were both fully in Phase made it all the harder to resist one another and they both gave up trying. Now however, now they were so very happy they had.

Their passion for each other had quelled the rising need for the man who would claim them both, and it brought them so much closer together. Their female scents saturated the cave, the aroma of sexual arousal easily detected, but to them it was so wonderful and natural. Soon they would not need to wait for both of them could feel the wolf that would claim their hearts and souls within them and he was getting closer.

Taris drew back from their kiss and Anoria's arms tightened on her waist and she tried to grab those delicious lips with her teeth. Taris giggled softly and reached up to brush some of her hair from her face.

"Why... why didn't you tell me?" Taris asked her finally.

Anoria pulled her even closer. "And what was I to say?" She asked. "Taris Ranev I want to taste you and make you cry out in bliss? I want you to taste me and make me howl your name in desire?" Anoria smiled. "Somehow I could just not get up the nerve to say that, even though I very much wanted too."

"The Oracle?" Taris asked.

Anoria nodded her head. "She said it would be best to wait until you discovered it for yourself. She could sense it within you, I could sense it within you, but like me at first you could not determine what it was. It was only after I saw the picture of us, with him, that realization fully came to me."

Taris nodded her head and leaned over slightly to kiss her shoulder gently. "I as well." Taris agreed with her.

"Do you think he looks as he does in the picture that we saw Taris?" Anoria asked her. "He is so very handsome if he does."

Taris met her eyes. "Does it matter?" She asked. "He will love us more than we can stand. And we will love him equally as much as we do each other."

"I have always wondered how we would first meet." Anoria said softly. "How he would take us in his arms and..."

Taris smiled at her with sexual energy. "Nubou jar itori?" (Fuck us silly)

Anoria burst out in laughter as she nodded her head. "Jainn!" She exclaimed.

Taris stared into her eyes. "Sune dremsa tor panuros Anoria." She said softly. (Last night was wondrous)

Anoria smiled lovingly and reached up to cup her face in her hands. "El lae aen fan." (For me as well)

"I will never want it to stop." Taris said honestly.

Anoria grinned at her. "Nor I."

"We should..." Taris began to speak but stopped almost instantly as she caught the scent on the air as it blew into the cave and her eyes narrowed.

Anoria looked at her with concern, but then she detected that same scent only seconds later. Several scents to be exact.

"Sibfla!" Taris swore softly.

"I make four of them." Anoria said quickly.

Taris nodded her head. "And one of them is that igord Juyno Aspion!" She hissed as she scrambled to her feet and began reaching for her normal clothes.

Anoria followed suit instantly but looked at Taris as she was pulling on her pants. "Taris, our scents saturate this entire valley. We cannot escape them, and they are between us and the way back to Warim." She spoke. "They will be able to follow us."

Taris nodded her head. "I know. We must make our way to the Western Ridge. My father has a hidden cache there with a radio. We can call him and he will send Alphas to protect us."

Anoria hissed angrily. "Alphas to protect us!" She snarled.

Taris looked at her as she was pulling on her shirt. "I feel the same way Anoria, but if they get close enough to us, we will not be able to resist them! I have no desire to feel anyone's hands upon me other than yours and the Alpha who will claim us!"

Anoria sat on the log and began pulling on her boots. "Sometimes I truly hate being a female wolf!" She snapped.

Taris stepped across the small distance and kissed her hard on the lips, grasping her face in her hands while she did so. Anoria delighted in the kiss and she smiled as Taris drew back after a moment and she looked at her. "I love that you are a female wolf." Taris spoke. "And so will the man who will claim us as his own." Anoria's smile grew wider and she nodded her head. "Yes, he will." She agreed. Taris smiled at her. "Hurry!"

"... got them!" Juyno hissed as his blood grew hotter with the scent of Taris Ranev and the other female in his nostrils.

"They are moving!" Datet Torkin snarled. He was another of Juyno's friends dating back several years.

"Taris Ranev is mine!" Juyno spat. "The rest of you can fight over the other female, but Taris is mine!"

"We need to catch them first!" Karcon Perest spoke now. "They are running!"

Juyno hated that Sitos had remained behind to try and coax Garget to release his younger brother, but he was stuck with what he had. He broke into a run first, moving ahead of Datet and Karcon easily, his mind a single focus now. He had Taris Ranev's scent, and it was so very sweet indeed. He was going to catch her, he was going to pulse her until she submitted to him in a blind, submissive fervor and then he was going to make her his while he fucked her for hours right here in these very mountains that her father thought he controlled.

Juyno turned to the third member of their group. "Delris! Get in front of them! Turn them back towards us! Go!"

The young man nodded and shifted into wolf form and sprinted off into the trees. Juyno looked at the others. "Follow me!"

JETANIA RANEV PACK BASE LANDING PLATFORM

Garget Ranev was a large and older Alpha. He was the most senior male wolf of the Ranev Pack and the one who was first to endorse Loras when she became Matriarch to all of the Mountain Packs on Jetania. Garget loved his younger brother Warim and that love extended to Loras when she became his mate. Garget had always suspected that Loras did not truly love his brother, that something he did not really understand held her back, but she was the ideal Alpha female and mate. She honored and she respected her mate Warim with no hesitation and she genuinely seemed happy in his company and his embrace. Garget had always respected Loras for this, and she may have even cared enough for his brother to live a life of contentment with him.

That was not meant to be and Osrod Aspion was responsible for that.

His actions had put Loras in a position that she did not want to be in. A position that was thrust upon her, but one that she did not turn away from as most others would have. Given how everything was beginning to happen all around them, Garget Ranev now knew that Loras had been meant for much greater things. Things he did not quite understand, but things that he now accepted deep in his heart were the way events were ordained to happen. The arrival of the half breed Queen Anja was only the first of these things and in the last two days his respect for Anja Leonidas had grown by leaps and bounds. Though obviously much better educated than Garget and others around her, Anja treated them all with respect and friendliness. She did not have to give what Osrod's fool soldier had done, but she did nonetheless. As did all of those with her. They had already begun to sit in the Mess Center and talk of things that could be. Garget knew events were changing quickly, perhaps more quickly than anyone really knew, but so far he was not frightened of those changes. It could only mean good things for his people.

Garget Ranev was nearing thirty thousand years of age and had the battle scars and the experience to prove it. In the shadows of the rising sun, as the brightness began to chase away the night, his keen wolf eyes detected the figures standing by Anja's ship openly. They did not try to hide their presence as he saw others moving in and out of the ship. He had given strict orders that no one was to enter her ship without his permission and only after he had obtained Anja's consent. She had relented yesterday and allowed two of his most gifted engineers to tour the ship and to say that they had been overwhelmed was an understatement. Having his men enter that ship without his approval would not look good and it caused his anger to flare, until he saw one of the figures turn in the brightening light. His eyes grew wide as he realized that none of these figures were wearing the uniform of his people and this cause Garget Ranev to go into combat mode.

Garget lifted his arm and brought his wrist to his mouth. "Priority Alert!" Garget hissed in to his COM unit. "Intruders on the landing platform! Ready Security Detail respond to the east entrance! I will be waiting!"

"RSD Commander acknowledges! We will be there in two minutes!" The male voice answered.

Garget Ranev smiled in approval and his eyes changed and his wolf fangs extended. However Osrod Aspion had found this secret base, those he had sent would not live out the day to inform him of what they had discovered.

Those were the thoughts that had been running through his mind only moments ago. Now the only thoughts running through his mind was how he felt as if he was a newborn wolf who knew nothing and how he was going to keep from dying. His men had arrived and they stupidly exited the interior of the base from the west entrance, directly in line of sight of the rear of the ship. They were charging across the platform and Garget had risen to rush forward and stop them when he was ripped from his feet and propelled through the air towards the lone figure at the bottom of the ramp. Garget suddenly found the large hand of the silver armored figure wrapped securely around his throat and holding his six foot four body off the ground as if he was a mere child. Out of the corner of his eyes he saw shimmers of light all around him and he heard the grunts of pain from his young soldiers as they were beaten down and their weapons taken from them with speed and ease unlike anything he had ever seen before. Whoever these people were they had disarmed his men before most of them had even realized what was happening. These were not Osrod's toy soldiers Garget thought briefly, these were professional soldiers who knew what they were about.

Garget watched as behind the silver armored figure he saw the day light shimmer three more times and then three additional figures appeared, two armored in black and one armored in black and shimmering gold. All of them were wearing strange helmets as they appeared behind the man now holding Garget twelve inches off the ground with his hand.

Andro looked around casually, his near glowing azure blue eyes taking everything in, and his Nehtes in his fist. Garget's eyes grew slightly wider when he saw Andro's lips part to speak, revealing the viciously long and savage looking dual wolf fangs. They were longer and thicker than those he had seen on Anja, but they were utterly unmistakable.

"We are secure father." Andro spoke clearly. "Carisia and Lu'ria report no one else in the immediate area. Uncle Atropos and Calyb are on the perimeter of this facility with a complete Durcunusaan detachment."

Martin Leonidas was not in a very good mood after stewing over what Chiron and they had spoken of less than an hour ago and he let his eyes scan the area and see for himself that indeed Denali, Dorian, Laren, Lisisa, Fedor, Jomann, Sheva, and Onera had taken care of the twenty other Alpha Lycavorians that had come rushing out of the interior of the facility straight for the ramp of the STRIKER. It had not been done gently either as he could see at least half of them that were not getting up any time soon. Sheva and Onera were particularly deadly with their vampire speed and the brief thought that his son had chosen his wives very well flashed through his mind. And for the first time, Yuri flashed within his mind and who she had become now. If this is how she trained and schooled her children now, perhaps Martin should have done more to save her all those years ago. He let that thought go quickly however as he turned back to look at Garget. His children could sense the anger within his aura and his resonance and they were feeding off of that as well.

Martin looked intently at Garget, his own dual fangs now fully extended and his usually dark brown eyes now changed to the yellow gold of his wolf persona. "The women and men that were on this ship?" Martin asked Garget. "Where are they?"

Garget was trying unsuccessfully to claw at the hand that was now firmly seated around his throat. The grip was like a vise with power unlike any he had felt before in his life. The wolf aura radiating from the man that held him dwarfed all others he had felt in his lifetime and nearly all of the others around them were unquestioned in their supremacy. Garget Ranev had never felt such an aura on a fellow wolf in all his life. Not even King Osrod radiated such an aura at his peak and for the very first time in his life Garget felt fear begin to creep into his veins.

Garget was old enough to have read the Ancient Scrolls and he knew all about the sacred Prophecy of the Oracle.

One day Alpha wolves would come.

Alpha wolves who descended from the original homeworld of their people far away in the stars. A world long thought to be nothing more than a myth. Alpha wolves who would be more powerful than anything anyone had ever seen. Among them would be the Taviruos of the Mard Revik.

Vada Revik rie Arve.

A King with eyes of yellow gold and dual fangs that would cause fear to grip even the bravest warrior. Dual wolf fangs that only the bloodline of the Mard Revik would bear. Garget felt the man pull him closer to his face, those eyes holding him in their grip like nothing ever could, even as he tried to get his fingers under the iron like grasp that held his throat and was slowly choking the life from him.

“Pen gur toer quvor ared cova daanth.” Martin Leonidas snarled angrily, Garget’s eyes going even wider as he spoke with such natural fluency in their language. “Vada channes lon intus oia allon endra. Cingola wen hnes?” (I will only ask one more time) (The women that were on this ship. Where are they?)

“I... I do... do not know!” Garget managed to choke out the words for he did not know where Anja and the others were.

Martin drew him closer still. “You see the three men behind me?” Martin growled at him. “The older one is Murano. You took his wife and daughter! The young man beside him is my son Deion! Murano’s daughter is my son’s wife and mate! My son wants her back! You took my daughters... and you took my Queen!” Martin hissed at him angrily. “You see the two women behind me?” Garget cut his eyes to see the two females standing at the top of the ramp of the STRIKER. One with striking raven black hair and eyes just like the third young man who stood behind the monster holding him in his grip. The other had four-inch-high pointed ears and golden blond hair. “They want their fellow Queen back! The others you see around you are her children! You will return them to me unharmed and you will do so now! My son and Murano, my Queen’s children, they do not have any patience at all right now. Too many people have been trying to hurt them for too long. Patience left me a long time ago when it comes to my Queens.”

“Queen... Queen!” Garget gasped aloud as he felt that grip lessen ever so slightly from around his throat. “You... you speak of the red haired, half breed female Anja! The one... the one with a sharp tongue!”

“My mother is no half breed!” Androcles shouted in savage anger as he stepped forward, closer to his father.

Martin’s eyes narrowed in anger. “She is my Queen!” Martin almost screamed. “And I want her back! Do not make me ask again old man!”

“I do... I do not...” Garget once more had trouble getting the words out around the fingers that continued to clench tighter around his skin.

Martin’s snarl of savage anger cut off his words and he brought Garget’s face to within an inch of his own, so much so that Garget could see the lips peeled back in barbaric savagery and saliva dripping from those cruel looking fangs. Close enough to see that those two eyes were like glowing suns up close and held within them nothing but painful death.

“Let me be clear old man!” Martin growled once more. “I know every divine inch of her body like I do my own! Every single strand of her hair! Every freckle that dots her skin! For this Queen, I will spill however much blood I need too. For this Queen, I will shatter and crush however many bones I need too. For this Queen, I will burn whole worlds to fucking ash! For all of my Queens I will bring death incarnate and unleash its wrath upon whoever would do them harm! And now... now old man, I will start with you!”

Martin Leonidas did not see the look of complete love and devotion that passed between Aricia and For'mya at his words. Given what Dynina had told them on Ventori, about who their beloved mate truly was and what was within him, what she had told them about Anja, what he had just told this man was as completely truthful as possible. And neither Aricia nor For'mya disagreed with Martin’s stated course of action when it came to Anja if she was not returned to them.

How could they when they felt the same way.

Garget Ranev’s eyes nearly exploded from his head as he saw massive wings spread from Martin’s back. Huge, metallic like wings that spread out fully and were nearly ten meters across behind him. Garget felt his large body lift higher and he closed his eyes in preparation for being slammed to the hard earth beneath him without mercy or reprieve. His last thoughts were of his beautiful wife and mate and what they would miss after discovering Anja and what the future could have held.

“MARTIN LEONIDAS!”

Anja’s distinct voice carried across the expanse of the landing platform like a shot out of the dark and Martin’s head instantly snapped around to the side. He saw her Persian red hair flailing about behind her as she ran towards him and without thinking for an instant he tossed Garget aside like so much trash.

Martin reached out with his hand and engulfed Anja within the grips of his Etheric power and quickly pulled her towards him. Anja had been prepared for that however and she lifted her upper body straight as she felt his warm embrace. Her jade green eyes grew wide as she saw those wings, but then they focused on his face and she was in his arms. Anja nearly cried out in blissful relief as his arms closed around her and he held her off the ground and laid a kiss on her that set her senses and her body on fire.

Neither of them saw Androcles and Deion break for Retta and Mari first and then the rest of the Leonidas clan followed suit. Murano met Tobia half way and scooped her into his arms without hesitation, tossing aside centuries of Praetorian training at hiding his emotions and kissing her in such a way that it stole Tobia’s breath away. Deion had lifted Mari in his arms, losing his balance and falling to the ground while cushioning her against his body and now he pinned Mari to the hard ground and was nuzzling her neck furiously while her hands held his head in delight.

Loras, Lazar and Rhaos stood to the side with each other as they watched this reunion and after today none of them would ever deny the emotion that radiated from this family. It was exposed for all to see right in front of them. Retta was swarmed by Lisisa, Eliani and Nara as Androcles released her and moved to embrace Kalis and Serale. They heard the soft squeal and turned to see Tir’ut unwrap the shadows from around his body with Normya in his arms. Zarah and Lucia were right behind him with Radem between them and suddenly it had turned into a full-blown family reunion right there on the platform while so many strangers looked on in stunned disbelief.

Anja simply stared into those beautiful yellow/gold wolf eyes as she stroked Martin’s bearded cheek and felt his aura swarm around her with undisguised and unashamed love and devotion. Her body was alive with wonderful sensations, her own eyes changed and her dual fangs exposed.

“Carians I have missed you Lover.” Anja finally gasped aloud.

Martin didn’t care who saw him and he nuzzled the valley between her large breasts and up her neck and throat and Anja hummed in delight. “Tell me you are ok Red.” He said. “Tell me you...”

“I’m fine Lover.” Anja stopped his words. “So much better now that you are here, but I am fine. These people are not enemies to us Martin. They helped us and...”

Martin kissed her once more, silencing her words and Anja didn’t resist. She never could when it came to his kisses. He could curl her toes with just a simple kiss and he did so again in front of everyone even as he lowered her to the ground and then Aricia and For'mya were there, pulling her into their embrace even as they too showered her with kisses of deep love and total affection.

Martin looked around and saw his family all around him as they were reunited and the only thing that flashed through his mind was that he was still not done. The reunion was not yet complete, and it wouldn’t be until he rescued his Tenna Kelia and reunited her with her mother and the rest of her family. Martin turned then and looked at where he had tossed Garget and without pause he stepped over to him and held out his hand as his wings retracted into the back of his Onkmeti Naami armor, the Onab words coming more easily to his lips as the hours went by and his mind absorbed so much knowledge.

Garget stared up at Martin, his own hands holding his throat and his backside hurting from where this man had tossed him with such ease. Whatever Rylin had told him about the Mard Revik through the years did not do this man before him justice. This Alpha wolf reeked of power and confidence that Garget had never experienced before. His aura pulsed like it had a life all its own and the supremacy he felt from within him was beyond any question or doubt.

Martin saw his hesitation and slowly knelt next to Garget still holding out his hand. “It appears that I have acted too quickly out of passion and concern for my Queen.” Martin told him. “For that, I apologize to you...”

“Garget. Garget Ranev.” He replied.

Martin extended his hand out further. "Then take my hand Garget Ranev and let's see if we can't start over."

"You... you are the Mard Revik!" Garget gasped aloud.

Martin nodded his head. "That is what some call me, yes. Personally I hate that name but it can't be helped." He answered. "Today however, today I was just an Alpha wolf who loves his mate and wanted her back."

Garget heard that and didn't hesitate as he thrust out his own hand and took the offered one. Martin pulled him to his feet with confidence and strength and though Garget was taller than Martin by two inches he felt somehow shorter.

"I... I know this feeling." Garget spoke as he looked at Martin once he was fully on his feet.

"Forgive me for my actions." Martin told him. "I should have contacted Anja and told her we were here but we received some disturbing information not long ago and I thought she that would be in danger. My children and friends too. I acted without thinking."

"You acted as any Alpha would." Garget told him honestly. "I... I cannot fault you for this."

Martin shook his head. "You could... but I thank you for not doing so regardless."

Garget stared at him for a long moment not truly believing that the Mard Revik stood in front of him. He seemed so normal to Garget, an exceptional specimen of an Alpha wolf to be sure, but normal nonetheless. He was thickly muscled, his beard and mustache neatly trimmed but his shoulder length black hair somewhat untamed and wild. His scent and aura radiated raw, unrefined power and it had a wildness that Garget had never smelled before.

"You have questions?" Martin asked him.

Garget shook his head in disbelief. "You have... you have no idea." He answered finally.

Martin smiled at him. "Oh, I bet I do." Martin told him. "I have just as many as you do. What do you say we try and find some of those answers together?"

Garget Ranev smiled and nodded his head. "I believe I would..."

The single crack echoed over the horizon and turned the heads of everyone as it rumbled across the landing platform. It was easily distinguishable and Martin instantly tapped his jaw activating his implant.

"Atropos report!" Martin snapped.

"Nubou!" Atropos' voice echoed in the COM. "We are six clicks northeast of your position Martin! Calyb has been acting..."

"What?!" Martin barked as Anja moved closer to him grasping Aricia's and For'mya's hands.

"Ever since we left the STRIKER." Atropos spoke now. "The mountains are saturated with the scents of two strong Alpha females well into their first Phase. Calyb has been... he has been unusually agitated since we landed. Their scents are affecting him more than they should for some reason! The moment the shot rang out he shifted and bolted in the direction of the echo. He moves with purpose Martin! Deadly purpose! Jeru and Mara are following him above the trees but they will not answer me either!"

Martin looked at Garget. "Two females in phase in the mountains? Is that normal here?" He asked.

Garget's eyes went wide. "Taris!" He exclaimed. "My only daughter Taris! She and her friend Anoria... they went into the mountains to Taris' cave last night!"

"Sir!" One of the soldiers that had only been slightly injured barked from behind Garget. They turned to see Kalis beside him, with Serale healing his injuries. "Juyno Aspion and his cohorts departed into the Dahok Mountain range this morning."

Garget hissed viciously and his fangs burst forth from his gums. "Argh!!" He screamed. "That scum is hunting them! I will kill him for this if he has hurt her!!"

"Hunting them?" Martin asked the question to no one in particular, aghast that this would be going on if what Garget's words implied was actually taking place.

Anja stepped up to Martin now. "Lover you have to do something!" She spoke urgently.

"Atropos can you catch him!" Martin snapped into his COM.

Impossible Martin! Atropos answered instantly within Mindvoice, shocking all those who stood around Martin for none of them had ever heard it used with such power and clarity. No matter the why of it now, the natural Etheric ability within all Lycavorians came rushing to the forefront now for Garget and so many others around him. The Etheric power just from this one family could stimulate an entire city and that is just what it was doing. Anja, Martin and the others knew from the tone of Atropos' voice that he was running full out in wolf form as hard as he was able. Even in wolf form the implants were still present and they could still hear as they would as if in human form. I could not catch up to him on my best day! He is too fast and too strong! He is one of your sons Martin!

Jeru! Mara! Martin screamed out into the Etheric realm even as Retta and the others moved closer. He turned to Retta. "They aren't answering Retta!"

They will not Martin. Torma's voice echoed now. They are focused on Calyb and will not deviate from his side!

Torma how far! Martin asked.

Five kilometers from your current location!

Martin turned to Anja. "Get everyone on the STRIKER Red!" He shouted. "Go! Go!"

Martin it is too late! Isheeni's voice spoke now. Calyb... Calyb is upon them!

"Fuck!" Andro's voice echoed and eyes went wide as his wings exploded from his armor and he launched himself into the air in the direction of his brother. Martin wasted no time and was behind his son in an instant.

"With me now!" Anja screamed as she grabbed Garget's hand. "Now!"

"Anoria help me my love!" Taris cried as she tried to pull her lover along the ground.

"My leg!" Anoria screamed in pain. "They broke my leg!"

They had managed to stay in front of Juyno and his friends and had almost reached the hidden cache when the single shot rang out and Anoria stumbled forward with a cry of pain and rolled to a stop. Taris thought she had just tripped and fallen and stopped to turn and grab her lover's arms. Anoria's words caused her eyes to go wide and she glanced down at Anoria's left leg. Blood was gushing from the hole in her thigh, the bullet having snapped her thigh bone before exiting.

"Carians!" Taris gasped as she moved to her leg and began to apply pressure to the wound. Her Lycavorian healing system was already working but she was losing blood fast.

"Leave me!" Anoria rasped out the words through clenched teeth and the pain. "Leave me Taris!"

"Never!" Taris hissed.

"Don't let them... don't let them take us both!" Anoria pressed her. "Leave me!"

Taris looked at her face, twisted in a grimace of pain. "I will not leave you! I have just found you!" She cried out again. "No! Never!"

"Midaeu! You hit her!" the male voice shouted and they both turned to see Juyno Aspion and the other three males break through the thin trees into the small clearing.

Taris turned to face them quickly while drawing her Black Watch knife, preparing to defend them both for as long as she was able.

"Stay back!" Taris snarled at them as her eyes changed and her wolf fangs burst forth.

Juyno looked at her now, could smell her potent female scent and how the fever within her was acting. His own blood began to burn slowly as he was affected by her female aura, but there was something different about it. Taris Ranev was in Phase yes, but her aura was not reaching for his as it should be. He needed to move quickly in order to take her.

"Taris is mine!" He snarled as his eyes changed and his fangs extended. "Treat the other upae and you can fight over her, but Taris Ranev is mine!"

Juyno turned back to look at her and he unleashed his full male aura upon her, expecting her to drop the knife and become instantly submissive to him, wanting him to take her. His wolf eyes grew wide when he saw what happened.

Or more importantly, what didn't happen.

Taris Ranev's eyes grew even wider than Juyno's when nothing happened. She could feel his powerful aura washing over her, surrounding her, but nothing was happening. She glanced at Anoria, her blue eyes just as wide as she realized that Juyno Aspion's aura was having no effect on either of them.

Juyno moved closer to her, acting on pure instinct now. “Submit to me!” He growled as he watched her bring up the knife close to her chest prepared to fight him. He pulsed her as hard as he could, focusing his aura completely on her and still Taris did not lower the knife. “Submit to me Mountain Pack upae! Don’t make me force you!”

Taris snarled at him, exposing her long fangs and not understanding why she was not doing exactly as he said. His aura should be causing her to become so aroused and willing that she would have accepted him anything he did to her by now. It didn’t however. She could feel his aura swarming around her, trying to force her, but it was not having the desired effect and she did not know why.

“I... I will kill you first!” Taris stammered out the words in pure anger but instinctively meaning exactly what she had just said. She heard the others laugh as they heard her words and she glanced at them. As long as she held the knife none of them were brave enough to approach her beloved Anoria and Taris had no intent on going down without a fight.

Anoria suddenly gripped her arm painfully. “Taris!” She exclaimed. “Taris, do you feel it?”

Taris’ eyes were wide as she did indeed feel it. The new Alpha wolf aura was reaching for them, cascading over both her and Anoria with supreme power. The pungent scent drifted to their senses now and both of them gasped as they smelled the sweet, wildness of the honeydew mint.

“Taris!” Anoria almost shouted. “Carians Taris my love! He is here!”

Juyno Aspion blinked in shock as he watched something else affect both of them. He could see their bodies reacting to another male aura that had interjected itself upon them, and they were reacting to that aura as they should have been reacting to him. Their skin became flush and he could see the nipples on Taris’ medium sized breasts suddenly become erect and aroused. Juyno could sense this new aura and his head twisted around trying to pinpoint the location of this new Alpha. He was easily superior to him, Juyno could detect that right away, and he turned back to look at Taris. He needed to get to her first. He needed to take her first so that this new Alpha would have no claim to her. Juyno Aspion took three strides toward the unsuspecting Taris Ranev and that was as far as he got before his own eyes grew wider still and he turned quickly to the side at the smashing of the brush and small trees to his right.

The savage roar of the wolf that burst from the tree line to his right was unlike anything Juyno had ever heard. His eyes exploded open when he saw the size of the russet furred wolf as it leaped from the trees, its lips curled back in a vicious snarl, revealing razor sharp dual fangs unlike anything Juyno had ever seen before. This Alpha wolf was easily as large, if not larger than him and he froze in his spot unable to decide what to do.

Those two seconds almost cost him his life.

Calyb Leonidas was not as large as his pureblood brothers Andro, Denali or Deion, but he was just as large as any normal pureblood Lycavorian in most cases. Two and a half feet at the shoulder and nearly two hundred and sixty pounds of pure muscle and bone. His father’s blood was dominant within his body and Calyb Leonidas had embraced his Spartan upbringing more so than his twin sister Retta. He had finished his accelerated Agoge onboard SPARTA’S WRATH with the praise of his instructors. Having Androcles there to instruct him in arts that were not normally taught made this possible and Calyb had gotten excellent referrals from all of those Andro had chosen to train him and Retta along with Deion and Nara. These were men who had helped to train his father all those years ago and they did not hold back with a son of the King.

Calyb Leonidas also did not hold back. He was just as powerful as his sister Retta when it came to the healing abilities that all Hadarians had, but he also liked to fight. His Hadarian blood was purer than any Hadarian boy his age, and his healing skills equaled a Hadarian healer three times his age. Calyb Leonidas was one of the few exceptions to the rule that Hadarian males were not as powerful when it came to healing. All of that didn’t matter to Calyb right now. At this moment Calyb embraced his Spartan blood like never before. The moment he had left the STRIKER, the scents of the two females was pulling at him.

Delicious chocolate almond and sweet, fresh Daises.

The two scents combined were driving him mad, enflaming the Alpha blood within him like nothing ever had before. He was his father’s son for sure and now Calyb Leonidas wrapped that around himself like a badge of honor as he acted. He acted as his father and brothers would have acted if anyone threatened their wives and mates. Calyb was not as thickly muscled as his father or brothers, but his two hundred and ten pounds was exquisitely cut and defined. His five foot ten body was ripped in the fashion of a gymnast from the old times on Earth and he held nothing back now.

Juyno could only stare in open mouth shock as he watched the huge, russet colored beast shift in mid jump and then the two booted feet smashed into his chest with the force of a falling mountain boulder. Juyno's body rocketed away from where Taris and Anoria lay, several of his ribs snapping like dry timber as Calyb's two hundred and ten pounds struck him center mass. He flew through the air until he impacted the thick trunk of the tree ten meters away and he slumped to the ground at the base completely dazed and unable to act. Calyb didn't stop moving as his Nehtes appeared in his hand and it extended in the blink of an eye. His momentum carried him right up to where Juyno had landed and Calyb lashed out with his armored fist, smashing it twice across Juyno's stunned face in quick succession, Juyno's nose instantly crushed under the powerful blows and his head rocking back to smash against the base of the tree painfully. To add insult to further injury, Calyb brought his extended Nehtes up, twirled it gracefully in the air three times and then brought the blunt end down across Juyno's face. The savagely powerful blow shattered his jaw with a loud pop that carried across the small clearing like a gunshot and Juyno dropped to the dirt and his eyes rolled into the back of his head as blackness washed over him.

Calyb Leonidas spun around to face the others, Taris and Anoria watching with wide, adoring eyes as they saw him snarl viciously, those green hazel wolf eyes open wide in horrific anger and his dual wolf fangs fully extended. Without a split second's hesitation he fell upon the other three males without mercy or thought. Calyb was a Lycavorian Spartan and a Prince of the Union. He was his father's son. He allowed his training to guide him and he did what any Spartan would do when outnumbered.

Calyb attacked without hesitation.

As he glided easily into range of the other three males, all of them unmoving in shock, Calyb brought the blunt end of his Nehtes around again in a mighty swing directly across the face of the closest male. This blow crushed his cheekbone and fractured his eye socket while physically flipping his body end over end, until Delris landed three meters away unconscious and out of the fight. Calyb felt the presence of Andro and his father then, even as he brought his Nehtes up and delivered a devastating forward thrust that perforated the chest of the second male completely. The spearhead of the Nehtes exploded out between his shoulder blades neatly, cleaving the heart of Datet Torkin completely in two as the Nehtes impaled him clean through.

Calyb didn't hesitate and wrenched the Nehtes back as the body of Datet dropped like a limp noodle and then he was bringing the blunt end of the Nehtes around once more to deliver a blow that would have crushed Karcon Perest's head. The young Alpha stood there with wide eyes, still unable to move to avoid the blow that would have certainly split his skull open like a melon. Calyb blinked suddenly when the rush of wind hit him and the end of his Nehtes stopped as if it had hit a wall, three inches from the right temple of Karcon's head.

Calyb blinked once more as his father's scent filled him and then he realized that it was his father's armored hand that had caught the end of the Nehtes, stopping it from the killing move.

"No more keto!" Martin hissed loudly.

"Medwan?" Calyb muttered, his grip on the Nehtes lessening when he smelled his father and then his brother as Androcles landed only a meter behind him.

Martin held the Nehtes in his fist and he watched as Karcon, eyes wide in fear, fainted right there, the front of his pants quickly soaking with liquid as he voided his bladder. Martin ignored the scent of urine and turned to face his son fully.

"You have done your duty Spartan." Martin told him firmly. "Now go to those who need you. Those who are yours."

Calyb blinked once more as the bloodlust drifted away from him completely and he turned his head to gaze upon Taris and Anoria. His blood surged once more, but not for battle this time, it surged with desire and devotion. Calyb released his Nehtes instantly and was beside Anoria in four steps, both of them still looking at him with wide, adoring eyes. He practically ripped his Spartan helm from his head as he looked at her injured leg and reached for it without thought. Calyb looked up into her stunning ice blue eyes as his hands wrapped around her thigh.

"Be still now." He spoke softly.

Taris and Anoria were trying their very best to maintain their composure, Taris having shifted under Anoria to provide her support and Anoria's upper body was now in Taris' lap. Calyb's aura was swarming around them now with devotion and ardor, but doing so in a way that left them shivering in delight and completely in command of their emotions. Their blood was also on fire, burning in a way neither of them had felt before and it was because of this devastating young Alpha that was before them. The young Alpha that would claim them both and make them scream his name to the heavens. That two other Lycavorians with huge wing spans extending from their backs stood only a few meters away did nothing to draw their attention away from Calyb.

“You... you are...” Anoria stammered out the words but could not complete them as Calyb lowered his head next to hers in that instant, pulsing her with his aura in a way that made her senses scream out in bliss as he nuzzled her cheek and jaw firmly making his intent known. Anoria gasped and then he was kissing her fervently. The pain in her leg vanished as her senses went into overdrive and she reached up to grasp his head. He pulled away too quickly as far as Anoria was concerned but her heart raced in happiness when she saw the reason for this. When he pulled away from her, Calyb did the same thing to Taris who was watching with wide eyes. She too inhaled sharply in utter enchantment as he nuzzled her in exactly the same way, her hands going up to shoulders briefly before he pulled back and laid a kiss on her that caused her to whimper in utter bliss. Calyb pulled back reluctantly from Taris and looked at Anoria once more.

“Remain still and I will heal you.” Calyb spoke once more. “It will only be a moment, but you will feel warmth in your leg. Take Taris’ hand Anoria.”

“You... you know our names!” Anoria gasped in disbelief.

Calyb smiled at them both, his young face becoming bright and more handsome than any Alpha wolf either of them had ever seen in their short lives. “I know... I know I will make you mine.” Calyb told them. “Both of you. And I will do this soon. But now I must heal you.”

Calyb bent to do his work, not seeing his father collapse his Nehtes and turn to look at Andro. They could hear the STRIKER approaching fast as Andro dragged the body closer to them and dropped Juyno’s limp form to the ground.

“This one lives.” Andro spoke. “Though he will regret this day ever occurred when he wakes up.”

Martin looked at the three bodies to his right and then back to his son. He could not help but feel a modicum of pride at what Calyb had done. He had waded into a battle outnumbered and he would have killed three of the four attackers had he not stopped him.

“This is probably not good.” Martin spoke as he looked at Andro. He looked skyward between the breaks in the trees above them as the STRIKER came to rest on the ground not far away. Torma, anything else in the area?

No. No other Lycavorians for several kilometers.

Jeru... you had better get down here. Martin spoke. Calyb will need you soon.

King Martin I...

Martin shook his head quickly. You did what any Bonded Brother would do Jeru. You remained with your brother. Now get down here. Mara, Retta is landing in the STRIKER.

Andro looked at his father. “He acted as you or I would have acted father.” He spoke calmly. “I am... I am proud of him.”

Martin nodded his head and met Andro’s eyes. “So am I. Damn proud!” Martin said quickly. “I don’t care about that Andro.” Martin continued. “They got what was coming to them for doing what they were trying to do. I’m more concerned about who they are.” He looked down at Juyno’s limp form on the ground. “They are not Mountain Pack for sure.”

“No, they are not!” Garget’s voice echoed behind them.

Martin and Andro turned to see him pulling Taris to her feet and embracing her tightly in his arms. She was returning the embrace, burying her face in her father’s chest as the tears came now. Garget held her for several moments before whispering to her softly and she returned to the ground beside Anoria as Calyb continued to work on her leg. They watched as Retta was the first to reach her twin after leaving the ship, and she dropped beside him to assist while Anja dropped on his opposite side. Martin chuckled inwardly, but did not show it. This young female had three of the most powerful Hadarian Healers alive working on her. There wouldn’t be even bacteria left within her body when they finished.

Martin cut his eyes and saw Atropos shift into human form as he appeared out of the trees with the Durcunusaan detail all around him. “Atropos give me a perimeter!” Martin barked out the orders. “No one in or out! And make sure there are no more of these midaeus out in the woods hiding! If there are, they more than likely shit their pants after seeing Calyb clean the clocks of these igord and they are running or hiding!”

Atropos nodded without hesitation and turned to began issuing orders after briefly taking in the damage Calyb had wrought and feeling pride swell within his own chest for his mandri's actions.

Garget moved up beside him and Andro now, his eyes wide in disbelief. "He... he attacked four of them and killed two!" He gasped in disbelief.

"He would have killed them all if I hadn't stopped him." Martin hissed softly, but not in anger Garget saw.

"Why did you?" Garget asked.

Martin met his eyes but it was Andro who answered. "My brother... he has never had to kill before. He is a healer first, a warrior second. When he realizes what he has done..."

Garget shook his head. "He saved my daughter and Anoria from being taken against their will." He stated. "I am... I am forever in his debt."

"Garget what happened here?" Martin asked him. "What was all this about?"

Garget looked almost ashamed and he glanced at the ground quickly. Martin looked at Andro and motioned with his head. "Keto... get your mother to take care of this asshole. But not too much. I want him to feel pain when he wakes up for what he has done."

Andro nodded his head as he retracted his wings and turned to move where his brother knelt between his sister and mother. He lowered his hand to Calyb's shoulder and saw his brother lift his head and look at him.

"Fan aden fervon. Fan aden." Androcles told him softly. "Mother... father wants you to treat the fool who started this." He spoke looking at Anja.

"Fuck him! He opened this dance now let him wallow in his pain for now!" Anja snapped. "She comes first."

Andro knew better than to argue with his mother and he turned to see Kalis and Serale moving up beside him. He grasped Kalis' hand tightly and they embraced forcefully for a short moment before he looked at Serale. "Serale... could you..."

Serale nodded her head and lifted the medical bag in her hands. "I will see to the fool." She spoke.

"Just make sure he doesn't die Serale." Andro told her. "Leave him to endure whatever pain he will have when he wakes but make sure he doesn't die."

"With pleasure." Serale spat before heading toward where Juyno's unconscious body rested between two Durcunusaan, next to Karcon's limp body.

Andro pulled Kalis to the side as Aricia and For'mya settled to the ground beside Anoria and Taris. "Talk to me chrora." He said softly.

"...is vile yes, but we have allowed it in order to keep the peace." Garget was explaining to Martin where they now stood away from the others by the edge of the clearing. "Fools like this almost never succeed King Martin, our females are too well schooled in the mountains and how to move around."

"Almost?" Martin asked.

Garget nodded his head slowly. "Some have succeeded through the years, but most do not stay mated for very long to our females. The Packs and families put an end to that quickly. There have been some that have been approved of by the families of the females and they are allowed to remain. They have become loyal to the Mountain packs through the years and have come to hate where they came from after being exposed to our life here in the Mountains."

"It's wrong!" Martin hissed angrily. "It's nubous wrong and I won't allow it to continue for a moment longer!" Martin looked at Garget and the much older Alpha took a step back when he saw the look in those yellow gold wolf eyes. "Our females are not trophies to be fought over or fucking hunted! If they wanted one of the Mountain pack females, they can do what normal wolves do and court them. Impress them in other ways and allow them to make their decision!"

"This is not something that we..." Garget began to defend himself but Martin shook his head and reached out to take his arm.

"I do not blame you Garget." Martin told him. "Don't think that. You and the other Pack leaders have only done what is necessary to keep the peace. Civil war solves nothing."

Garget shook his head in agreement. “No... it does not.” He said. “But this... this has never happened before. Juyno Aspion stepped far beyond his station with his actions this day. Anoria’s father Lasun Vesrak is not going to be pleased in the least.”

Martin glanced over to Juyno’s inert form and saw Lazar standing over his half brother. He turned slightly to gaze at the young Alpha and Garget saw where he was looking. “Lazar.” Garget spoke. “He is...”

Martin nodded his head. “I know who he is.” Martin said. “He is the Alpha that claimed my daughter.”

“King Martin... Lazar is a fine wolf.” Garget said quickly thinking he needed to defend him. “He is not like his father or his half brother. He...”

Martin turned back and looked at Garget. “My daughter would never have allowed him to claim her if he was anything but.” He said proudly.

“I can introduce you and...” Garget spoke.

Martin shook his head. “When he is ready.” Martin said. “I trust my daughter Garget, just as you trust yours. There is a whole lot going on and I have a feeling things are going to get very interesting very soon.”

Garget nodded his head. “I will need to inform Lasun of what has taken place.” He said. “He will come here and he will demand Juyno’s head no doubt! Anoria is his only daughter as Taris is mine.”

Martin looked at him. “Then I guess it is up to you and me to make sure events don’t spiral out of control.” He said. “I’m trying to put my people back together Garget, not see them torn apart by civil war.” Martin began to walk towards the STRIKER but Garget did hear what he spoke under his breath.

“There will be enough war to go around soon enough.”

PAKAR SIX

UNKNOWN SPACE

He had not felt such happiness within him in more millennia than he cared to recall. This surpassed even the joy he felt when Acki gave birth to each of their children because of what it meant to their people. To the Kirek Pack. To all of them. he had gathered the senior members of the Kirek Pack in the large, secure conference room to inform them of what was taking place. He did not expect a second message to arrive so quickly and he certainly did not expect the content of the message or who had sent it. Kesas had not heard the name Chiron in over two million years. The Avatar that had become Daniho’s constant shadow had left with him or so he had thought. The message had been short, but very much to the point, and the hidden threat aside Kesas Pengot had erupted in hysterical laughter the likes of which none of them had ever seen before. Mixed in with that laughter were the tears of joy that washed down his face without regard for who saw them. the laughter had gripped him for several minutes as the other Kirek Pack leaders and the Lords of the smaller Packs that had broken off and formed under the Kirek Pack leadership sat around the huge table. Nine men and women, among them Lylor’s only surviving sibling, and the one who had led the Kirek Pack from the day Lylor had been put in stasis.

Aryera Kirek.

She was a wild and passionate female Alpha, a woman who loved her mate unashamedly and every one of her thirteen remaining children. She would just as easily throw down in a fight with the fool who challenged her as she would sit across a table from you and be diplomatic. Kesas, Lylor and Kelia aside, Aryera was among the oldest of their people behind them, having survived the Ten Thousand Year War and not starting her life with her mate until they had departed Cerath. She also harbored a great hatred for the Arhtai Pack for three of her children had fallen during the purge of the Mahanlo bloodline and another in the mission to rescue her brother and her niece and nephew. While his son Caylt handled Internal Security, it was Aryera Kirek who commanded the few fighters that the Kirek Pack could field now. While everyone could hold and weapon and fight, only a few were actually part of a regulated military. Along with herself, Aryera’s son Tiag and Kesas’ daughter Yasha, the three of them trained their five thousand soldiers hard every day and they spared nothing in the way of time and effort to keep them on the razor’s edge.

Aryera was also the only one of them with contacts among the Nenay Pack. Through her contacts they had discovered that Yatia Arhtai had forged an elaborate lie to feed to the leader of the Nenay Pack. Ranol Nenay was no fool and neither was his wife and mate Gara. It was not known what exactly was told to them for them to turn on Lylor and Kelia, but Kesas at least now knew that none among the Nenay Pack took part in killing any of Mahanlo blood and most of them remained out of the fighting against the Kirek Pack. Those that chose to fight against the Kirek Pack were summarily banished from the Nenay Pack and this is part of the reason why Yatia exiled the Nenay Pack to Anlar Prime.

Aryera Kirek finally rose from her chair and moved across the room to stand beside Kesas who had regained control of his laughter, clutching the data pad that held the message on it. Aryera saw the tears that streaked his face and her own dark eyes grew wider at this for she had never seen Kesas Pengot cry in all of her life.

“Kesas?” She gasped as she reached up to take his arm.

Kesas smiled and nodded his head. “I am... I am fine.” He told her. “In fact... I am better than fine.” He held out the data pad for her to take and Aryera took it and began to read, her eyes growing wider by the second.

Kesas turned to look at the others in the room and all of them gasped when they saw that he had been crying. Yasha came to her feet instantly and moved for her father but Kesas held up his hand.

“It is alright fenneenum.” He spoke quickly.

Aryera took a few steps closer to him while she was reading, her own heart and pulse beginning to race out of control. “Kesas this...”

“Read it to them Aryera.” Kesas told her. “Everyone must know what it says, for this message marks the beginning of the end.”

“What do you mean Lord Pengot?” Tiag Kirek asked as he rose to his feet.

“All of you have seen the first message.” Kesas spoke. “Do any of you doubt the crest that we saw?”

“Impossible!” Marda Kirek spoke now. She was Aryera’s youngest sister and a mere two hundred thousand years old. “It was only after our Pack was exiled here to Pakar Six that you allowed all of us to view the Book of Knowledge King Daniho gave to you Kesas. It is the only one in existence and it is the only book that shows the future crest of the Mahanlo bloodline as prophesized by the Onab Seers on Cerath.”

“So we agree that the first message could have only come from someone with Mahanlo blood?” Kesas asked them all. “Regardless of the lies that Yatia Arhtai continues to spew.”

“Who else could know this Kesas?” Rothan Luas asked now. He was the Lord of the Luas Pack, the largest of the three Packs that had broken from the Kirek Pack but remained steadfastly loyal to them and the Mahanlo bloodline. He was also one of the few remaining Pack members who had fought the Iais’Kai and left Cerath with the Kirek pack.

“No one.” Aryera spoke now from beside Kesas.

“Yatia Arhtai is a upaee Kesas.” Another Lord spoke up now. “Are we certain that she is not the one behind this? Trying to cause us to act.”

Kesas shook his head firmly. “No. I know for a fact Daniho had no contact with anyone from the Arhtai Pack for at least three years prior to leaving Cerath. He left it up to Kelia and Lylor to arrange everything for the exodus. The Onab did not give Daniho this book until six months prior to everyone leaving, and he did not give it to me until they day we left Cerath. Yatia Arhtai certainly did not learn this from me, and as Aryera said, I told none of you until after we were banished here.”

“Is there any way to be certain father?” Yasha asked now moving up beside her brother.

Kesas met her eyes and then turned to look at Aryera. She looked up and matched his gaze. “There is one way.” She finally spoke.

“How?” Rothan asked. “If this... if this is true Kesas... it would...”

Kesas nodded his head. “It would change the face of everything we know.” He finished the statement.

“Then how do we discover is this is all true?” Caylt asked.

Aryera looked up and around the table. “We wake my brother.” She spoke confidently.

Everyone at the table came to their feet in shock and all speaking at once. Kesas left them rage for a moment and then held up his hand. “ENOUGH!” He bellowed.

This brought everyone to silence, though none of them returned to their chairs. Marda Kirek looked at Aryera in disbelief. “Aryera you can’t be serious!” She gasped. “How does that prove anything? We know what will happen if we wake up Lylor or his children. The spies that Yatia has among our own people will discover this the moment we unlock his stasis chamber. We know that they have placed their vile blood detectors all over Pakar Six. The moment that Lylor is awakened, they will see this on Koltar Four and she will know we have broken our agreement with her.”

“There is no agreement!” Aryera barked now. “She did this to keep Lylor from coming for Kelia which we all know he would do. He would have slaughtered hundreds of her Pack in order to retrieve his wife and mate! This is her way of controlling him and us! Of controlling the truth of what she did! It has been for millennia! And we abide it!”

“What choice do we have?” Marda exclaimed. “I am not... I was not alive to see this as you were sister, but I hate it as much as you do. We cannot stand against the Arhtai Pack! They outnumber us a hundred to one! More!”

Aryera softened her look instantly and nodded her head. “I know arande.” She said softly. “Forgive me sister.”

Kesas shook his head now. “There is nothing to forgive. Aryera is correct and so is Marda.” He spoke. “However... events have now changed.”

“Changed how father?” Caylt asked.

Kesas turned to Aryera. “Read it to them Aryera.” He said. “All of it.”

Aryera moved closer to the table and lifted the data pad. “The Prophecy has been fulfilled Kesas Pengot. Know that the descendants of King Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo live. The Mard Revik is among us. Mahanlo bloodline on Jetania in danger. Moving there to secure them.”

Kesas heard all of them gasp at this information for only the people in this room knew of the actions he had taken so many years ago to preserve the Mahanlo bloodline. He held up his hand to keep their questions quiet for the moment and looked at Aryera. “Finish it Aryera.” He said.

“He bears the name Martin Mahanlo Leonidas.” Aryera continued even as she heard them all gasp again. “He is the reincarnation of Daniho and Ashten together Kesas. He carries both their blood within him and he wants...” Aryera stopped to compose herself as she read the message. “He wants his family back together.” She began again. “He does not understand why you do not reply to him or why his Tenna Kelia is not among you, but his message is clear now. He demands that you answer, as is the duty given to you by King Daniho. If you do not, he will come for you and...” Aryera stopped and looked at Kesas.

Kesas Pengot smiled and nodded his head. “All of it Aryera.” He said.

“If you do not, he will come for you and kick your fat ass. Then he will go and retrieve his Tenna Kelia and reunite his family no matter who he has to destroy. Knowledge of who and what he is has only recently come to him with the help of others Kesas Pengot, but trust me, his bloodline is true and he will come for you. He is a Spartan, as are all of his children and the men and women who follow him. Their equals in battle I have not found. If you believe in nothing else Kesas Pengot, then believe me when I tell you he will sweep aside all who stand in his way. He is more like Daniho than either of us could have predicted when we left all those millennia ago. Trust in me now as you trusted in me then. Chiron.”

Kesas once more could not contain his happiness and he gripped the back of the chair as he laughed once more. No one had ever seen him this way and they could only look at him confused.

“Chiron?” Rothan gasped as he looked at Kesas. “The Chiron?”

“Who is this Chiron?” Marda asked now.

Aryera looked at her sister. “He was the Avatar the Onab built for King Daniho.” She answered. “He went nowhere without him. Ever.”

Kesas nodded his head. “He is also the only one who was present in the room with me and Daniho the day we left Cerath. He is the only one to have heard what Daniho told me that day.”

“Told you?” Yasha asked her father. “What did he tell you father?”

Kesas smiled warmly. “He told me that if I failed the Mahanlo bloodline he would find me no matter where in the universe I was and he would kick my fat ass. If he was gone, then he would make sure his descendants did it for him.”

Kesas saw the realization on their faces as what the message meant and how it could have only come from who they thought long dead. Rothan could not remain standing and he dropped his large body back into his chair in stunned disbelief.

“By all that we have held holy for so long.” He gasped out the words. “It is... it is truly happening! All we have hoped for... all we have wished for... it is alive Kesas! The hope we thought lost so long ago... it truly lives!”

Tiag Kirek saw the look on his mother’s face and knew that what she said was true. He moved to embrace her but Yasha beat him to it, wrapping her arms around Aryera tightly as Tiag then embraced both of them.

“The message said he is going to Jetania to secure his bloodline there.” Kesas spoke. “As you all know we sent the youngest son of Lady Kelia’s daughter Yarta to Ventori with his wife and mate after she was killed in the purge. She was of both Arhtai and Nenay blood. As we also know the Lycavorian Seed mission to Jetania found the Alphas on Ventori and took them to Jetania.”

“You used the Onab synthetic to mask their bloodline Kesas.” Rothan spoke once more. “How could they be in danger after all of these years.”

“There is only one way.” Kesas answered. “The synthetic proteins that the Onab gave to me were designed to mask the Mahanlo bloodline within them and whatever offspring they had. It would pass down within their bloodline to future generations. The only way to cancel out this masking is for someone of pure Mahanlo blood, descended from Daniho and Ashten, to have bitten the person whose blood was being masked while they were claiming each other in the act of mating. The injection of pure Mahanlo strands of protein would negate the masking effect completely.”

Aryera’s eyes were wide now. “Kesas... are you saying that a child of Daniho’s descendant has mated with one of the offspring from Kelia’s grandson?”

Kesas nodded his head. “Yes. Yarta’s son and his mate took the Pack name Athltin when they arrived on Ventori.” He replied. “His last message to me was just before they departed for this planet Jetania. Their cover was intact, but he was angry for having to leave all the Betas on Ventori. I instructed him to only take the emergency beacon and activate it only if he was sure that they had been discovered. He never activated it.”

“That would mean...” Aryera gasped as she realized what she was about to say.

“Sister... could it be true?” Marda asked her.

Aryera looked at her. “The Prophecy spoke of one who would carry the blood of three within her... and she would become the wife and mate to one who was the descendant of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo and who carried the blood of eight within him. It is said the first-born son of the Mard Revik would be his father and he would be...”

“Ared rie arve Tarivuos rei vada Mard Revik.” Rothan spoke once more coming to his feet. (One of three heralds of the true king) “We all know the prophecy.”

“Thus their union would reunite our people for all time.” Aryera said.

Marda nodded her head. “Yes, we all know this.” She spoke. “Are you saying this female is on Jetania.”

Kesas nodded his head. “She is on Jetania and one of her children has become a mate to someone of pure Mahanlo blood.” He answered. “Which means he or she is no longer protected by the masking and if there is anyone from the Arhtai Pack on Jetania they will discover this. And who she is as well.”

“We know they sent members of their Pack to Ventori.” Aryera said.

Rothan nodded his head. “Yet we never could find out why.”

“I think we all know why.” Tiag spoke again. “They wanted to purge the Mahanlo blood everywhere.”

Kesas nodded his head. “You may be right Tiag... but if what Chiron says in this message is accurate and he was never wrong, then it will not matter anymore. If this Martin Mahanlo Leonidas is there, he will detect their true bloodline instantly by their scent. The masking was never meant to hide them from someone of pure Mahanlo blood. They will be safe.”

Caylt stepped closer to the table. “Father... I need to play oratos angyn right now.” He said. “Let us assume that everything we have just heard is all true. You said there was a way to know for sure but it involved waking Lord Lylor from stasis. Why?” (Devil’s advocate)

Kesas looked at his son. “Everyone touched by Mahanlo blood, will bear the crest of Mahanlo on their left shoulder. This includes anyone mated to one of Mahanlo blood; anyone turned by Mahanlo blood; anyone who is regarded as nathos by Mahanlo blood; or anyone simply chosen to be part of the future of the Mahanlo bloodline. All of them will bear this crest on their skin if the true descendant of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo, of Reva Mahanlo, if they live and finally have awareness of who they are.” He replied. “It is the only way to be certain. Lylor will bear this crest on his left shoulder because he is the husband, mate and Anome to Kelia Mahanlo.”

This brought everyone in the room to silence as what Kesas said soaked in. Everything they had lived for, everything those that they had loved had died for, it all stood before them now.

It was Aryera Kirek who spoke the answer all of them were thinking. “We must wake Lylor.” She said plainly. “We can try our best to block the sensors, but we must know for sure Kesas. Waking Lylor is the only way. If he carries the crest then Reunification is upon us.”

Kesas nodded his head slowly. “All of you know what this means.” He spoke. “I have to believe what Chiron is telling us in this message.”

Rothan looked at Kesas. “Do we have the means to establish communication with this probe and then Chiron himself?” He asked.

Caylt nodded his head. “It is possible, yes.” He answered. “But it could also be picked up by the Arhtai monitoring arrays as well.”

“Do we know that for sure Caylt?” Aryera asked. “They have not detected these two messages to us have they?”

Caylt shook his head. “No. But that does not mean they can’t.”

Kesas shook his head. “They would not know of the Pralor frequencies that Lord Daniho chose before we left Cerath. That information was only given to Lylor, Kelia and myself keto. That is how Chiron is communicating with us.”

“Waking Lylor up is dangerous Kesas.” Rothan said. “As much as I want to wake him up, it exposes all of us to that upae’s rinth.” (Bitch’s wrath) “Controlling Lylor Kirek if they have his beloved Kelia is impossible and you know that. And we would be hard pressed to stop our warriors from joining whatever mission he went on to get her back. Jorbhe... you would be hard pressed to stop me from going with him.”

Aryera nodded her head. “Rothan is correct Kesas.” She said.

Kesas nodded his head slowly. “I know.” He said softly. “I just...”

“What father?” Yasha asked him touching his arm.

“I believe... no one could have known what Daniho spoke to me that day.” Kesas said. “I believe this is Chiron without question. I also believe that... if this is truly the descendant of both Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo, when they discover what has taken place here... what Yatia Arhtai and her pack are responsible for...”

Aryera nodded her head and stepped closer to him taking his hand. “They will come for blood.” She said softly.

Kesas looked at her. “Blood?” he said. “No Aryera... if this is the descendant of Daniho and Ashten and he has children already as Chiron’s message suggests... he will... they will come for far more than blood.”

Rothan nodded his head. “They will come for justice.” He said softly.

CHAPTER SIXTY-NINE

JETANIA WARIM

Lasun Vesrak was equally as large as Garget Ranev and even more rooted in honor and tradition. There wasn’t a wolf among any of the Mountain packs who did not know who he was, for his word was his oath. Like Garget Ranev, Lasun was cut from the same mold when it came to a Mountain Alpha, and when he spoke, people listened. He would go out of his way to make you feel welcome and comfortable, but cross him in any way and he could become your largest nightmare. No Plains wolves even attempted to go into the area of the Vesrak Pack to attempt to claim one of their females. The Vesrak Pack was too high into the mountains to make the trip and almost always those Plains Alphas ended up disappearing to never be seen again.

When Garget contacted him, Lasun had gone into a rage at first, even throwing several large chairs out of the windows of his office in his own City Settlement of Avona high up in the Western mountains. He calmed almost immediately when Garget told him what had occurred and who had saved Anoria from the fate Juyno had planned for her and Taris. His eyes had only grown wider when Garget continued to explain who was now in Warim and that he needed to come here without delay. It had taken him and his mate Issna Vesrak only ninety minutes on the Overland Tram that connected all of the Mountain pack settlements within the many different mountain ranges and the trip allowed him to regain some of his calm demeanor. His wife and mate of nearly thirty thousand years had that affect on him, as she was the glue that kept his more volatile nature from exploding outward, and it was she who had explained to four of their six sons that they needed to remain in Avona. Their father's rage would more than compensate for their own she had told them, and they needed to remain calm. It was well known that in the city of Avona that in order to get near Anoria Vesrak, you had to go through her brothers as well as her father. A gauntlet that very few would survive. It also raised suspicion among the spies of Osrod Aspion as well, especially when they saw Lasun depart so quickly with his wife headed for Warim. Word was quickly sent back to Osrod in the capital almost immediately after Lasun departed his city of Avona.

These were things that did not concern Lasun in the least once the large man saw his only daughter laying on the medical bed and smiling at him when he entered with her mother. He did not recognize the others in the room with her, two Alpha females and a young Alpha male, but he could not deny the pureness of their wolf blood that was for certain. He knew instantly that none of them were pureblood wolves, but the blood within them was as pure as Lasun had ever smelled before, purer than even King Osrod himself. None of that mattered after an instant and he moved up beside the bed with his wife and mate Issna, coming to stand beside where Taris Ranev stood close to Anoria's head and held her hand tightly.

Lasun Vesrak was no fool, even as rooted in tradition as he was, and he knew his only daughter was different the moment she came into this world wailing like a banshee. She had been a surprise for him and Issna, but a hugely welcome one for both of them after six proud sons, and he knew things would be different going into the future the moment her ice blue eyes, so much like his own, had settled on him when she was just hours old.

Anoria Vesrak's beauty was unrivaled in Avona and more than one Alpha had expressed an interest in her as she grew, but Lasun and her brothers had quickly shut that down. He loved his only daughter beyond any emotion he had ever felt, and he denied her nothing, much to the chagrin of many of Avona's elder wolves. Her older brothers protected and looked after Anoria viciously, as did their own wives and mates. When Anoria announced that she wanted to join the Black Watch, Lasun Vesrak had supported her decision whole heartedly, as had his wife and mate. Anoria had shared with him many secrets as she had grown, secrets that daughters do not normally tell their fathers, and Lasun knew of her visions about Taris Ranev and their future together with the young Alpha who would eventually claim them. The intensity of her emotion and how she explained it all to him made Lasun embrace this way of thinking and he began to change even his old ways. He trained her in ways that even Mountain pack females did not train and he began to communicate more and more with Garget Ranev until the two men had become very close friends. He also discovered that Taris was no different in her actions with her father Garget than Anoria had been with Lasun, which as far as Lasun Vesrak was concerned only sealed his belief about the future.

Lasun took Anoria's hand as she reached for him and he pulled it close to his scruffy, bearded face and kissed the back of her hand.

"Pen brol frinna alvva." Anoria told him with bright, ice blue eyes. "Marde." (I am fine papa. Truly)

Lasun noted quickly that her scent was saturated with the scent of an extremely strong Alpha wolf. A honey melon and mint scent that mixed with hers openly. He glanced at Taris beside him and detected the same thing. That scent filtered within them in such a way as to tell any wolf in the area that they had been chosen and no one was to come near them if they valued their physical wellbeing. The Alpha that did this was stronger than any of the young Alphas he had smelled before in Avona, strong and pure. He snapped his head around and looked at the brownish, red haired young man behind him. He was standing beside the dark red haired young woman and the Queen that Garget had told him had come.

Lasun turned to fully face Calyb Leonidas. "You... you are the one who stopped Juyno Aspion's foul actions?" Lasun asked sternly.

Anoria's face twisted into one of concern. "Alvva reyna." She spoke quickly. Taris took her hand tightly and shook her head. (Papa please)

Calyb Leonidas remained standing before this Alpha wolf, a man who was even larger than his own father physically. He nodded his head slowly even as his heart raced with anxiety. He was able to hide this well enough with his etheric ability, making it seem to Lasun Vesrak as if this young wolf did not fear him in the least. Lasun stepped closer to him now, staring at him with his own ice blue eyes and the only thing that Anoria had inherited from him. Everything else about her looks was her mother, which Lasun often times thanked the gods for, causing his wife and mate to laugh at him for. Lasun Vesrak sensed a powerful warrior's blood within this young Alpha, but tempered by a scholar's blood. He did not flinch from his gaze, did not show his inward self and this impressed Lasun Vesrak more than anything.

"I... I owe you a debt I can never repay young Alpha." Lasun spoke calmly surprising even his wife and mate.

Calyb Leonidas was a young Alpha he knew, and he was a half breed, which obviously these Lycavorians were not used to, but his father's blood was dominant as his mother often told him happily and he should embrace that. He was a Leonidas and even though he was inwardly shaking with fear, he rose to his full height of five foot ten and met Lasun's eyes.

"There... there is a way sir." He spoke.

Lasun admired this young wolf's bravery and he nodded his head. "Speak then." He told him.

"I would ask... I would ask that you allow me to court and claim your daughter as my wife and mate." Calyb blurted out the words, Retta beside him and filling her twin with her own newfound confidence and feeling his heart and mind racing. Retta knew Calyb did not yet understand the overwhelming attraction to both of these young women, but soon that would no longer matter.

Lasun Vesrak glanced back at Anoria, her beautiful features beaming in happiness as she clutched Taris' hand in one of her own and her mother's hand in the other. He turned back to Calyb. "My daughter is... she is very special young wolf." Lasun spoke. "She has been special since she came into this world screaming at all those around her."

"Papa!" Anoria exclaimed in embarrassment.

Calyb looked at her and Taris, his own blood burning within his veins for both of them, and only Retta's calm resonance helping him to control it and hold it down. He turned back to Lasun.

"She and Taris Ranev are one and the same, sir." Calyb spoke softly. "Two who are one. My blood... my blood burns for each of them equally... as if they are one. You know this sir, I can see it in your eyes."

Lasun Vesrak nodded his head, impressed by his actions and his words. A warrior poet it appeared that this young Alpha Calyb Leonidas was. Lasun knew deep within his heart that no other could love and defend his daughter and Taris Ranev more than this young Alpha before him. He would burn worlds for them and he would heal their wounds should the need ever arise. And he would never cast them aside.

Lasun tilted his head to the side. "You are very young Calyb Leonidas." Lasun spoke slowly. "But you have the spirit and the heart of a warrior and a sage ten times your age. How is that possible?"

Calyb didn't hesitate. "I have the blood of my father within me sir. And the blood of my mother. That is all I need. That is all I am."

Lasun glanced at Anja who had so far remained silent and he turned back to Calyb. "So it would seem young wolf. So it would seem." He turned and looked at his wife and mate. "What does my beautiful Issna say to this young Alpha's request?"

Lasun watched his wife and mate, as she looked quickly to Anoria and then Taris. Issna Vesrak was a female Alpha wolf who had stood beside him for more years than he could remember and never flinched. A woman who had given him six, strong and proud children and raised every one of them in the same fashion. A female wolf who was the only one who could stir his blood because of her endless beauty and intoxicating eyes. He watched her dark eyes meet his and she nodded her head.

"I approve." She stated simply.

Lasun nodded his head and turned back to Calyb. "Impressing her is far more difficult than impressing me and you have done this. You have our permission Calyb Leonidas." Lasun stepped closer looking down into his unwavering eyes. "Love them as you have never loved anything before young wolf, and you will discover what I did the moment I took her mother as my mate, they will make your life worth living."

Anoria's ice blue eyes filled with tears at her father's words, as did Taris' for it was almost exactly what her father had told Calyb not thirty minutes ago.

Calyb looked at them both and Lasun could see that devotion and love in those green hazel eyes. “That will never be an issue for me sir.” Calyb spoke looking back to him. “I will treat them and love them as my father does my mothers. Utterly and without fail.”

Lasun saw Anja’s chest swell in pride behind her son and he nodded his head. “Then so be it.” He spoke. “When... when will she be able to leave this place Queen Anja?” He asked looking at Anja. Garget had already told him everything about this fiery haired Queen and what she was capable of and he had been looking forward to meeting her, just under different circumstances. “I hate medical facilities.”

Anja smiled at him and motioned to Calyb. “My son is her doctor Lasun Vesrak.” She replied.

Calyb smiled and looked at Anoria and Taris. “She will remain here overnight.” He stated formally. “Her injuries are healed but I want her to rest. I will stay with her through the evening with Taris. You are welcome to return at any time but I’m sure you are interested to meet my father.”

Lasun nodded his head. “Indeed.” He held up his hand. “Do not claim my daughter in a hospital room Calyb Leonidas.” He stated seeing Calyb turned a bright red in embarrassment.

“Lasun Vesrak!” Issna Vesrak exclaimed aloud.

Anja couldn’t help but laugh and she stepped forward to take his arm. “Come this way Lasun.” She told him. “I will take you to see Martin. He and Garget are close by.”

Issna glared at her husband as he turned but she could not be mad at him for very long as she saw the twinkle in his eye. “I will remain as well Lasun.” She spoke to him. “For a time anyway.”

Lasun look at Anoria a last time, saw her beaming face and knew he had done the right thing. He nodded his head and then looked at Anja. “I wish to see the scum that did this to my daughter.” He spoke.

“Lasun!” Issna looked at her beloved mate. “Do not make things worse my love.” She told him. “Promise me.”

Lasun stared at her for a long moment and then nodded his head. Anja took his arm and led him out of the room.

Garget was standing outside the lone room at the end of the corridor, the glass partition allowing them to look into the room unhindered. He turned when Anja walked up with Lasun and he bowed his head to her.

“Queen Anja.” He stated formally.

Anja shook her head with a smile. “I have already told you about that Garget. However it came to be, we are family now. Retta and Lazar, Loras in the future hopefully. As family we do not stand on formality. Please.” Anja told him. “Besides, we are your guests here and we are not your King and Queens.”

Garget shook his head quickly. “That is where you are wrong.” He spoke confidently. “But that is a discussion for another time I suppose.” He said. He quickly held out his hand to Lasun who took his forearm without question. “It is good to see you again old friend.”

Lasun nodded his head. “Thank you Garget.”

Garget shook his head once more. “I did nothing.” He replied. He looked at Anja again. “They are down the adjoining corridor in the large conference room Lady Anja, though I am sure you can find them.” He said motioning with his hand down a separate corridor to their right. “I will bring Lasun along shortly. We have some things to discuss first.”

Anja nodded her head and looked at Lasun. “We will see you again Lasun Vesrak.” She told him. “It has been a pleasure to finally meet you.”

Lasun bowed his head to her. “More for me Lady Anja.” He told her. “More for me.”

Anja smiled and headed down the corridor as Lasun stepped up beside Garget. His eyes followed Anja for a short time and then he turned back to his friend. “You were not joking when you said she was tiny Garget my friend. And this is the one who made Lazar and Rhaos look like children?”

Garget grinned and nodded his head. “And a detachment of my own men when they arrived here.” He said. “Do not let her size fool you. She is more vicious and cunning than I have ever seen from a female wolf before and I imagine her fellow Queens are no different. Do not underestimate her.”

Lasun grunted. "I do not intend too. The smell of the Alpha within her blood alone would give any man pause if he had half a brain." He turned and looked fully at Garget Ranev. "What happened my friend?"

The two men had become as close as brothers over the last decade because of their two daughters. As with Lasun, Taris had shared everything with her father, opening his eyes to things he would never have considered before. Knowing what their daughters would share in the future and with whom, this had brought the two men closer than anything had before then. Among the Mountain Packs it was well known that in the last decade, the two men had stood together on every issue that had come up and they had not wavered. Garget Ranev and Lasun Vesrak had become synonymous with each other and if you angered one, you automatically angered the other. And no one wanted both of them aligned against them.

Garget looked at his friend. A man who had replaced his lost brother Warim in his eyes. They were only five years apart in age anyway. "Taris and Anoria went into the mountains last night. She has a cave under a waterfall. A retreat of sorts for her. They went there to be together and..."

Lasun nodded his head knowingly. "Our daughters have always been different Garget. They have changed us both in many ways. We have known for longer than they have that they would be together. That is not something I will ever question."

"Then you see the love they carry for each other in their eyes?" Garget said. "And for Calyb Leonidas."

Lasun nodded his head slowly. "He is a half breed and yet his aura burns brighter than most of the Alphas in my Pack." He said. "I cannot deny that, nor can I deny what I see in my daughter's eyes when she looks at him. Or Taris' for that matter."

Garget nodded his head. "Nor I." He held out the data pad to him. "Juyno had this on him." He spoke as Lasun began reading. "The birth registry. He knew Taris would be in Phase at this time and he purposely came up here for her. He did not know that Anoria is a member of the Black Watch and that she would be here as well. And he certainly didn't know she would be with Taris."

Lasun looked at him. "These files are supposed to be confidential Garget." He hissed.

Garget nodded his head. "When have you ever known Osrod to abide by rules that he himself sets?" He spoke. "This however, this stinks of his upaee Queen Secha. Juyno's mother. She is devious and she hates the Mountain Packs for some reason that we have never been able to determine. Especially Loras. Her treatment of Loras when she was a Queen should have been all the knowledge we needed."

Lasun shook his head. "I should have supported her openly Garget." He admitted to his friend. "Seeing what she has done in these last years is amazing. How she has brought us all together and got us to work for the benefit of all our Packs. I should have... perhaps if I had been more vocal what happened with Warim would never had taken place."

Garget shook his head. "Do not dwell on it Lasun." He told him. "She has always known that you were behind her. And what took place is what destiny intended. My brother lived a full life and he died defending the woman he loved."

Lasun met his eyes. "Loras was a loyal and devoted wife and mate to him Garget, but she did not truly love him did she?"

Garget shook his head slowly. "Warim knew this I think. Deep inside I think he knew Loras was meant for much greater things."

"What did Queen Anja mean when she said Loras was to be a member of their family in the future?"

Lasun asked. "Do you know?"

Garget shook his head. "It has something to do with the prophecy that I have not seen." He replied. He looked at Lasun intently. "She does bear the same mark on her shoulder that the members of the Mard Revik's family all have now. A wolf's head. It is not as clearly defined as Lazar, for he has taken Anja and the King's daughter Retta as his mate, but it is there. I suspect that it will appear on Taris and Anoria once Calyb claims them."

Garget reached out and touched the small control panel beside the window of the room. The opaque glass suddenly disappeared to reveal the inside of the room and Lasun's eyes grew wider when he saw Juyno Aspion lying on the bed.

"He will live unfortunately." Garget said. "Another young woman like Queen Anja, a Hadarian as her species are called, she is the wife and mate to Anja's mandri Kalis, she kept him alive. His sternum was fractured in two places, six of his ribs were broken clean in half and one punctured his lung. His skull had a minor fracture and his jaw was broken in three different places. Serale, that is her name, she made sure to treat the more severe of his wounds, but she left the others to be worked on by our medical people.”

Lasun could only stare at Juyno in shock. His face was still heavily bruised, and very swollen. His jaw had been reset but the bruising from that was very obvious as were the two pins in either side of his cheek that held the thick bone together now. It would heal, but as with all Lycavorians, their bones were so tough and thick, it would take time for the injury to heal fully. He looked at Garget with wide eyes.

“You... you are saying that Calyb Leonidas did this?” He asked in shock. “Juyno Aspion is... he is at least six inches taller and sixty pounds heavier than him.”

Garget nodded his head as he looked back to Juyno in the bed. Juyno’s right hand was secured to the bed frame with flexible cuffs, but even still, Garget had two of his men in the room with him.

“I said as much to myself. He killed one of the others with Juyno and crippled another. He would have killed them all had not his father and brother arrived to stop him.” Garget said finally with a nod of agreement. “I have never witnessed such a thing in all my life. Once his father and brother were there, he went from savagely protecting them to healing Anoria in a split second. It is... it is this Spartan training that all of their people undergo Lasun. Even the King’s family it seems. I have never seen men and women move as they do Lasun. I do not know what this Spartan training regime consists of, but apparently they do not play at war as Osrod does Lasun. A painful fact that I believe he will discover very soon.”

Lasun Vesrak was silent for a long moment as he stared at Juyno Aspion on the bed. He wanted to kill the fool for injuring his beloved daughter, kill him in the most painful way that he could possibly devise, but he also realized that the severe beating that Calyb Leonidas had given to him would remain with him forever. A pain that his mind would never forget.

Lasun looked at his friend. “What... what is he like Garget?” He asked finally.

Garget met his eyes and smiled. “He is not what you expect Lasun.” He answered. “He is not what I expected. But there is no doubt in my mind that he is the Mard Revik.”

Lasun looked back to Juyno through the window. “Then everything... everything Anoria and Taris and the Oracle have been saying all of this time. It is truly real.”

Garget nodded his head. “Yes... it is.” He spoke. “Come my friend, you will want to meet him.”

Lasun snarled silently at Juyno’s still form before turning and following Garget down the corridor.

Lasun Vesrak had believed longer and more deeply in the prophecy than his friend Garget Raney, primarily because of his now long dead parents. Anoria’s birth and everything she had told him while she was growing had only cemented this within his heart. Lasun knew that the same thing had happened to Garget when Taris was born and he discovered just how special she was, but Lasun’s faith had never wavered. He hadn’t really given much thought to how he expected the Mard Revik to be, but whatever conceptions he may have had got tossed onto the trash heap when he entered the room and saw him.

His wolf aura alone was enough to stagger Lasun in such a way that he paused for a long moment and gripped Garget’s arm, his eyes wide in disbelief. Never in his lifetime had he felt such an aura of power and dominance. Garget smiled at this reaction for it was no different than what he had experienced on the landing platform only a few short hours ago. Lasun could only gaze with wide eyes upon the one the prophecy said would come. He was tall, easily over six foot, but his body appeared as if it had been forged from granite. He was thickly muscled, far more so than even his youngest and strongest warrior, the shirt he wore doing little to hide the cut of his arms and his broad shoulders. His raven black mane of hair was shoulder length and now pulled into a tight pony tail at the back of his head. His beard and mustache was perfectly trimmed, his skin deeply tanned, telling Lasun that this was a man who did not stay inside very often. At the moment, the fiery red haired Queen Anja was in his arms, her own arms wrapped tightly around his narrow waist and her head pressed to his chest; the other, taller women on either side of her, all of them pressed up against him intimately.

The female with the same hair color as the Mard Revik, as black as the darkest night, and almost blue in the dim light of the sun from outside the huge window of the lounge, was a pureblood Alpha female whose aura dwarfed any female he had ever seen in his lifetime, even his own beloved Issna. Her beauty was exotic and utterly surreal, and the color of her eyes unlike any he had ever seen before. This could only be the Mard

Revik's Anome, his Lycavorian soulmate as the prophecy foretold and Anoria had told him of from the Oracle's teachings during her schooling among the Black Watch. The second female, with golden blond hair and four-inch-high pointed ears, was equally astounding in her beauty. Her deeply tanned skin was without a single blemish of any kind, so smooth and radiant. This could only be one of the elven Queens as Anoria had also told him of, both of them devastating in their beauty as all female members of their species were.

Lasun glanced quickly at Garget still unable to process what he saw and could obviously feel within the room. Garget nodded his head. "I know my friend. I know." He spoke softly. "I felt just as you do not a few hours ago. I'm still getting used to it. Come."

Martin had smelled them come into the room but he was ignoring them for the moment. The scents of three of his Queens filled his senses now and that is all that mattered to him as he nuzzled the top of Anja's head once more.

[Red, are you sure that you...?] He spoke within the shielded connection they all shared. Martin did not know if any of these Mountain Pack Alphas had any Etheric ability beyond the rudimentary use of it and he was not taking any chances.

Anja pulled her head away from his chest and looked up into his dark brown eyes. His mint scent combined with Aricia's lavender and coco and For'mya's orchid scent was heaven to Anja right now. It would be even better when Dysea, Bella and Cirith were back among them as well, but Anja was delighted at the moment.

[I'm fine Lover.] She answered him. [Really.]

[Maybe this wasn't such a good idea Melyanna.] For'mya spoke now.

Anja shook her head. [No, For'mya. We discussed this, all of us. We agreed it needed to be done. We didn't expect how it went down but the result was the same.]

[You getting beat to within an inch of your life was not part of the plan.] Aricia reminded her.

Anja looked at Martin. [I have a hard head as you have told me so often through the years.] She said with a brilliant smile. [It worked out Lover. I'm fine and we have the result we wanted.]

Martin lifted his hand and stroked her cheek watching as her eyes closed in bliss and Aricia and For'mya pressed closer to her as they felt it as well. [You are as obstinate as a Rock Spider too.] He told her.

Anja chuckled softly. [And just as deadly.] She offered.

Martin nodded his head. [That is for sure.] He agreed. [You are certain about this Loras and Lazar then?]

Anja nodded her head. [No doubt.] She replied to his question. [Loras and Lazar both have Mahanlo blood within them. Serale says that when Retta bit him, when they claimed each other, her pure Mahanlo blood proteins removed whatever was masking his. Ceale schooled Serale hard in blood proteins and such. She knows what she is talking about. Loras' are still masked, as are her children with this Warim and probably her parents as well. There wasn't time to do any tests on them before you showed up with an attitude.]

Martin grinned at her stern look. [My first plan was to kill them all and...]

[Let god sort them out?] Anja finished. [Carians Lover, that is so old.] She said with a laugh that Aricia and For'mya joined in on.

[He was going to do it Anja.] Aricia stated. [Andro stopped him.]

Anja smiled again. [Thank god. Our son has more sense than you sometimes you know. Not often... but sometimes.]

[Martin...] For'mya spoke turning her head slightly and seeing Garget behind him with the other Alpha.

Martin nodded his head. [Yeah, I smell them.] He looked at Anja however. [Can you find out for sure Red?]

Anja nodded her head. [Easily. Her parents might not be too happy about it if what you, Andro and this Chiron says is true.]

Martin nodded his head. [We need to know for sure. And if one or both of them have Mahanlo blood in them, they will already know we are here.]

Anja nodded her head. [True enough. I'll get on it.]

Martin leaned over quickly and laid a blistering kiss on her and pulsed her with his aura before she could blink and Anja couldn't help but whimper softly in delight as she kissed him back. She glared at him when he pulled away, her pulse racing.

[You had better plan on picking this up again soon Lover.] She snarled at him while gripping the front of his shirt.

Martin grinned and waggled his eyebrows. [I do.] He told her.

All three of them burst into soft laughter within their connection and Anja slapped his face lightly. [I'll hold you to that big boy.] She told him.

[We will come with you Anja.] Aricia said. [We wish to meet this Loras. Her role in our family is only just beginning. And this young Alpha who has stolen the heart of our daughter intrigues us.]

Anja took their hands. [You will like him.] Anja said as she began to lead them out of the room. [He reminds me of Isra in his demeanor, and for a young Alpha, he is very handsome.]

Martin smiled to himself and shook his head as he turned to face Garget and the other Alpha. The man was every bit as physically imposing as Garget Ranev, though a bit more grizzled around the edges. Martin's eyes went wider when he watched Lasun drop to one knee and bow his head deeply.

"My... my Lord King!" Lasun spoke the words not really having any idea what to say or do. This was a moment that they had all dreamed of, but now that it was here, Lasun Vesrak had no idea how to act or what to do.

"Carians nirr uvenn!" Martin gasped aloud seeing Lasun look up to gaze at him. "Forn soas un joa ared!" (Gods get up. You bow to no one)

Lasun looked at him with wide eyes as he rose back to his feet. "You... you are the Mard Revik!" Lasun gasped loudly.

Martin nodded his head. "And as I told Garget not so very long ago, I hate that name." He said. "You want the job? I'll give it to you cheap!"

Lasun looked at Martin stunned as Garget laughed loudly at his expression. "Lord Martin Leonidas... this is Anoria's father Lasun Vesrak. He leads the Vesrak Pack from the northern mountains."

"It is an honor, sir." Martin told him. "And I apologize for what happened with your only daughter. That is not exactly the way my son Calyb wanted to meet her and Taris."

"He... he knew he would find them?" Lasun asked stunned as he rose to his feet fully.

Martin nodded his head. "He didn't tell anyone except his twin sister, but he knew." He replied. "My children can be pretty closed mouth when they want to be."

"He saved her from a fate..." Lasun's eyes were wide still and he could only gawk at Martin in disbelief. "He saved her from being taken against her will and perhaps even her life." He said finally. "He... he boldly asked for my permission to claim her not a few minutes ago. He does not lack for confidence that one."

Martin smiled and nodded. "That is my fault. I have raised all of my children to go after what they want and let nothing stop them. I am sorry about that."

Lasun shook his head quickly. "You should not be sorry My Lord. He shows more about what it means to be an Alpha of our people than most of the purebloods on this planet and he is only half Lycavorian. My mate Issna and I gave him our blessing. He was able to impress my mate Issna in mere minutes. That is something it took me a year to do when I first claimed her." He spoke proudly. "My daughter Anoria is... she is like Taris and she has always been special. I do not try to understand most of it but..."

Martin nodded his head in understanding. "I do know the feeling Lasun Vesrak. May I call you Lasun?"

Lasun could not believe the question and he nodded instantly. "Of course My Lord." He looked at Garget then and then back to Martin as if something had just occurred to him. "My Lord, how are you here and King Osrod knows nothing?"

"The ship I arrived on is in orbit over Warim at the moment." Martin replied.

"Orbit?" Lasun gasped his eyes wide. "His men would be all over Warim by now if they saw your ship in orbit!"

Martin smiled and shook his head. "It's hidden." He said.

Lasun looked confused. "You mean like the stealth mode on our ships?" He asked finally.

Martin nodded his head. "In a manner of speaking yes. We call them Shrouds. And trust me, King Osrod numb nuts, or whatever his nubous name is, he won't know it's there until I want him too." Martin brought his left arm up and looked at the small display on the Pralor wrist computer Murano had given to him some time ago. It was linked directly to his P1 and made so he did not have to carry the P1 wherever he went. He had only just starting wearing it and it was growing on him. “And that will be in about six minutes, give or take a second or two.”

Lasun blinked quickly. “I... I don’t understand.” He said.

Martin nodded his head. “Many years ago, this fool’s ancestors took something from my staania and I want it back!”

Lasun looked even more confused. “Your staania?” He asked. “How is that...” His ice blue eyes opened wider when the realization hit him. “You speak of those who came before you?” He gasped. “The ones from the great ship?”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes.”

“I can’t... I remember her... Dynina!” Lasun almost yelled. “Her name was Dynina!”

Martin nodded again. “She is my grandmother.” He said. “This fool Osrod’s grandfather, or father, I don’t really give a shit which one to be honest, they took something that belonged to her and they kidnapped people that followed her and I’m pretty sure they are now dead. I want that material back and I want justice for them.”

“I did not know that they took anyone?” Lasun gasped looking once more to Garget and then back to him. “We avoided contact with Osrod’s grandfather and father in the beginning. My parents, Garget’s parents, Loras’ parents, none of them, they wanted nothing to do with him or his rule. They were the ones who took our ancestors from Ventori and did not allow them to go back. When this finally came to be fully known they brought us up here into the mountains away from the Plains Packs.”

Martin nodded his head. “Yep, they did that too.”

“It is why we came into the mountains and formed our own Packs.” Garget spoke now. “You say they took something from your staania... this Dynina female?” Lasun asked him.

“It was advanced equipment of some kind. When my staania refused to give it to them freely, one of them tried to take her as his mate against her will. That didn’t go very well for him. She bit his nor off.” Martin told them.

Garget and Lasun looked at one another with wide eyes. “Then it is true!” Garget gasped aloud.

Lasun nodded his head. “There were rumors that something of this nature happened. We never really believed it, but Osrod’s grandfather, he died shortly after due to some infection that he supposedly caught.”

Martin grinned. “Infection my mida. My staania probably did something to him that she won’t even tell me. She can be vicious.”

“So it would appear.” Lasun said nodding his head approvingly. “You say they took something from her?”

Martin nodded his head. “Equipment that they didn’t understand then and they probably still don’t, since we have detected nothing to indicate they were able to engineer anything from what they took.”

“You can detect this?” Lasun asked stunned.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes. We know right where he is keeping it too.”

Lasun blinked quickly once more. “How... how do you intend to get it back My Lord?” Lasun asked. “Osrod is many things but he is no fool. He is much smarter than his father and grandfather and many would say he is a better leader, his arrogant faults aside of course. He has proper security all over the place. His men are well trained and loyal to him.”

Garget nodded his head. “He has done many things his father and grandfather would not have done.” He said. “Things that have angered many of those older Plains Pack elders.”

Martin’s expression was void of any emotion. “Nubou hel.” Martin hissed angrily. (Fuck them) “I don’t particularly care what he is. To me he is a little piss ant dictator and in about four and a half minutes now, I am going to take a massive shit all over his little parade.” Martin’s face took on a smile that grew even wider. “And his security people have never met my son or his siblings and friends. They are an odd bunch, but they have attitude! You know how young people are. You want to watch? It will be a good show.”

“What do you mean?” Garget asked confused.

Martin lifted his wrist up to his mouth. “Armen... you have my location locked?”

“Affirmative King Martin.” Armen’s voice replied. “And the two individuals with you.”

“Bring us right to the bridge Armen.” Martin said.

“Stand by.” Armen said. “We have also received a transmission from Colonel Thoti King Martin.”

Martin blinked not expecting that. “Go.”

“Martin...” Martin noticed how Armen did not say King before his name this time and this caught and held his attention. “Colonel Thoti has taken Lorendo and his ship into custody. Lorendo is injured but alive. Thoti will be arriving in the morning.”

Martin grinned at this information. “Well how bout that?” He quipped. “Things are looking up. You ready Armen?”

“Teleporting now.”

Lasun opened his mouth to ask the question when his eyes grew wide as the orange hued light engulfed all three of them and they vanished from the conference room.

SPARTA'S WRATH ORBIT OF JETANIA HOLDING POSITION OVER WARIM

Garget and Lasun had both dropped to the deck instantly after arriving on the bridge of SPARTA'S WRATH, their bodies tingling and both of them feeling nauseous. Their stomachs were doing flips in their body and they looked up at Martin staring down at them with a grin.

“Sorry about that.” He said. “It’s the quickest way to move around without waiting for a ship. The nausea will pass in a few seconds. It takes getting used to, but after three or four teleports it goes away.”

“Carians!” Garget almost bellowed as he rose to his feet and he and Lasun steadied each other. “That was...” Garget Ranev didn’t notice the four Durcunusaan soldiers who waited in the shadows of the bridge, their sole purpose was to protect their King. This had been Armen’s doing, an extra precaution against those who would try to harm Androcles’ father and the King. He determined that it was probably unnecessary, but he had four of them come to the bridge to take positions regardless. Had either Garget or Lasun tried anything, they would have been dead before they could act.

Garget’s words ended in his throat when he saw where they were and his eyes went wide.

“Nubou lae!” Garget Ranev almost shouted causing Lasun to shake his head and look around, his own eyes going wider.

“Saoi sibfla!” Lasun echoed Garget’s words and Martin laughed at this as the two men looked around.

“Welcome to my son’s ship SPARTA'S WRATH.” Martin told them. “It can be a little overwhelming at first.”

Garget turned slowly in his spot his eyes never having seen the likes of what he was seeing right now. “By the gods!” He gasped once more. He took in the many computer stations and the large number of men and women who were not Lycavorian as they went about their duties without giving the two men a second glance. He saw many with ears like the elven Queen he had seen on Jetania, and still more that had reptilian like skin and several that had feathers covering their entire bodies.

Lasun finally turned back to Martin as Garget’s eyes continued to sweep the bridge. “This is... this is one of your ships?” He gasped.

Martin shook his head. “This ship is one of a kind right now.” Martin said. “Hopefully we’ll either discover and find more of them or build them ourselves.”

“Given the current status of Dreamland and Admiral O’Connor’s imagination, the odds are that you will begin building them within a year King Martin.” Armen spoke from just behind Martin. “I estimate you will complete construction within six months because of the Worker Drones and the ingenuity of Union engineers.”

Martin smiled and turned to look at him. “Really?” Martin said surprised at that. He would have to have a talk with Ben on that. “Wow... that’s good to know.” He turned back to Lasun and Garget. “This is Armen. He is the ship’s Avatar and Commanding Officer.”

Lasun and Garget stared at the towering Avatar with wide eyes. “He is not... he is not...” Garget managed to rasp out the words.

Armen nodded his head as he stepped up beside Martin now. "You are correct Garget Ranev... I am not a living individual. The closest definition that you would understand is that I am an advanced cybernetic lifeform. An AI if you will, though that term is rather limited in its description."

Martin looked at Armen and smiled. Since the day he had discovered Avi on Lycavore, Martin had never considered him anything but alive. He felt the same way towards Armen as well, as did his son. He didn't know what it was, but they just considered Armen and Avi and the Worker Drones something more than what others did. It also explained Andro's obvious affection for the Worker Drone Alpha Nine. The spider like Alpha Nine was always around him whenever Andro was on the ship. Martin had discovered that the Avatars and Worker Drones each had their own quirks, which to Martin and his family were almost like personalities, and it made each of them unique.

Martin looked at Lasun and Garget and motioned to what appeared to be a plain bulkhead of some sort. "You'll want to see this." He said. "Armen?"

Armen nodded and turned his head. "TO, please lower the Ducorsis armor around the bridge view windows."

The elven male nodded his head from across the bridge and his hands flew over his duty station. "Ducorsis Armor retracting."

Lasun and Garget watched with wide, stunned eyes as the strange bulkhead in front of them suddenly shifted and they watched as armor of some kind retracted away, exposing a view that neither of them had ever seen before in real life. They had seen pictures of course, pictures of Jetania from orbit that others had shown them, but neither of them had ever experienced it themselves in their lifetime and it was sobering to say the least.

"Son vada carians!" Lasun was able to mutter as he and Garget stepped closer to the clear view window. It was nearly floor to ceiling they saw and though fear gripped them at the exposure, both of them were too overcome with disbelief and awe to keep from moving. It did not seem to bother anyone else and they quickly determined that they were safe and they simply stared out on the greenish, purple surface of Jetania.

"Pretty awesome huh?" Martin spoke from behind them. "I was pretty much the same way when I first saw my planet from space."

Garget turned to look at him with wide eyes. "You?" He gasped.

Martin nodded his head. "I was actually born in space." He told them. "On a cruiser to be exact. A much smaller ship than this to be sure, but still in space. I didn't know that until much later in my life but that is a story for another time."

Garget turned back to the view window and he could see the many Coalition ships in orbit around Jetania as well as the massive space station that was their primary ship building facility and military headquarters.

"I have... I have never had a desire to leave the surface." Garget said softly.

"Nor I." Lasun agreed.

"They... they cannot see us?" Garget asked in disbelief.

Martin shook his head. "No. I'm guessing that our Shroud technology is probably two or three thousand years more advanced than the stealth capabilities of Coalition ships." Martin said looking at Armen.

Armen nodded his head. "That is reasonably close." He answered.

Martin turned back to Garget and Lasun as he watched Lasun reach up and place his hand against the clear view window. "Gods!" He muttered to himself before looking at Martin. "This is... this is what my daughter Anoria tried to describe to me from one of her... one of her visions. Or dreams. She was so detailed in what she was describing. She said that this was... it was normal. How...?"

Martin nodded his head in understanding. "I'm going to take a wild guess and say that is because of my son Calyb." He told them. "The Etheric realm is quite infinite and often times we cannot explain things fully. I would guess and say that your daughter and Taris were seeing the future in their dreams. What they knew was coming. They saw my son Calyb, perhaps even through his eyes."

Garget looked at him now. "You speak of our ability to talk using our minds. This Etheric ability. No one among our people on Jetania is very good at this. It is a simple tool for us. It is hardly used at all."

"Hopefully that will change." Martin said.

"How?" Garget asked.

Martin nodded again. "We call it Mindvoicing." He told them. "The ability to use the Etheric realm. My people... our people..." He amended that statement. "Those of us who came from Lycavore, or are descended from those who came from Lycavore, we use it far more than the Lycavorians here on Jetania. Perhaps you did not have those who could teach you how to use it fully as we did. The people that brought Lycavorians to Ventori and then here to Jetania, they took your ancestors from Lycavore before we fully learned how to use it. They did not realize at the time what they were doing, but they are good people and were only doing what felt right to them."

Lasun looked at him. "You have seen them?" He asked. "The ones who brought our people here?"

Martin nodded his head. "Their descendants yes." He answered. "That is also another story for a different time."

Garget shook his head quickly. "Argh!" He gasped. "So much... so much that we have never believed could exist and suddenly we discover that it does exist!"

Martin smiled. "Believe me Garget Ranev... I have been through what you are feeling." He told him. "It does get easier."

"Ninety-seven seconds King Martin." Armen broke in and Martin nodded.

Lasun looked at him. "What... what happens in ninety-seven seconds?" He asked.

Martin smiled and motioned to the massive station in the distance. "King Osrod numb nuts is going to find out just how small he really is in the grand scheme of things." Martin looked at Armen. "Armen... split screen it and put up the facility from the PREMONITION feed next to the exterior view."

Armen nodded and blinked his eyes several times. Lasun and Garget moved back in surprise when half of the large window changed to a view of a large building. His eyes went wide as he recognized it.

"That is the main Research and Development Facility in the capital!" He exclaimed.

Martin nodded his head. "It's also where they are keeping what Osrod's grandfather took from my staania. My son is getting ready to retrieve it."

"Retrieve it?" Garget gasped looking at him. "Martin... that building is guarded by over tow hundred of Osrod's most loyal soldiers! They are the best trained and heavily rewarded for their loyalty."

"Over two hundred?" Martin asked. "Really?"

"You said your son is going to retrieve it?" Lasun spoke now. "Does he have a large enough force? If they do not assault without a full battalion they will not succeed."

Martin smiled. "He doesn't have a full battalion." He spoke. "I think he has..." Martin looked at Armen. "What is it Armen? Sixteen?"

Armen shook his head. "Fifteen King Martin. Commander Torian still has not returned to duty yet."

Martin nodded and looked back to Garget and Lasun who were staring at him as if he was insane. "Fifteen." He said. "He's got them outnumbered."

Garget looked back to the screen and his eyes narrowed. "This is real time." He finally spoke. He turned back to Martin. "You have a ship watching this facility don't you?"

Martin smiled. "Sitting about five thousand feet above it." He answered.

"What are you waiting for?" Lasun asked him now.

Martin's smile grew wider still. "I'm waiting for my fervon." He replied. "He loves to make flashy entrances."

PREMONITION

FIVE THOUSAND FEET ABOVE COALITION RESEARCH FACILITY

Androcles rested on one knee between Sadi and Ne'Veha as they held the ship perfectly motionless and waited. His azure eyes were watching the facility below with keen interest, but he smelled and sensed Carisia and Lu'ria come up behind him. Both of them placed their hands on his shoulders affectionately and he turned his head first to kiss Carisia's hand and then to the other side to kiss Lu'ria's knuckles.

"How much longer?" Carisia asked.

Sadi looked up at the instruments above her quickly. "Forty-nine seconds." She replied.

“I hate waiting.” Lu'ria commented.

Andro nodded his head. “As do we all.” He stated in agreement. “SirsanGai... you have the location locked?”

Ne'Veha nodded her head from the co-pilot's seat. “Four levels down. Main elevator lifts to that level and then an immediate right out of the lift. A hundred and thirty meters down the corridor. It is in some kind of vault, but our sensors can penetrate it, so I'm guessing it is not as secure as they think. Whatever they have hidden in there, it appears to be Pralor in nature. Some kind of power source if the readings are accurate.”

“Technology wise they aren't even close to us Duan Enylar.” Sadi said turning her head slightly to look at him. “All of the time they have been out here and they have only advanced to this level of technology? It just doesn't seem right.”

Andro nodded in agreement. “Unless someone or something was holding them back.” He stated. “Pralor power sources are not “Twenty-three seconds.” Ne'Veha called out.

Andro nodded his head. “We move exactly one minute after Uncle Danny enters the system. They will be at the peak of confusion and...”

“Andro!” Deion's voice caused Andro to turn and he saw him entering the cockpit with Mari close on his heels holding her P9. “Fervon... you need to see this!”

Andro turned fully and rose to his feet as Mari moved up past Deion. “The Avatar Chiron was able to do a massive upload of information to all of our P9s Andro. I have been going through some of the new information and...”

Andro smiled for he could tell she was excited. “Mari... just spit it out.” He told her with warmth. “You do not need to explain anything to me.”

Mari met his eyes. “One of the archives uploaded was a database of all the bloodlines of our people from Cerath and Lycavore. I was playing with the port lateral sensor array, having it do a random sweep as we have been holding position.”

“Ten seconds Andro.” Sadi called out.

Mari moved closer to him. “Andro... the sensors have detected half a dozen individuals in the city below with the Arhtai Pack bloodline. Two of them are in the facility we are about to attack, and if these readings are accurate one of them is pure Arhtai bloodline. No mixture at all.”

Andro's eyes went wide. “What?!” He gasped.

“That's not all!” Mari continued. “I have detected fourteen that are at this very moment in Warim and closing on the position of your mothers and Loras Ranev.” Mari saw his azure eyes go wide at this information. “All of them are pure Arhtai bloodline as well.

“Time's up everyone!” Sadi called. “Daniel is here!”

Father! You have to help her! Achilles' voice thundered within the Etheric realm. He really needn't have bothered for Andro's decision was easy enough for him to make and he spun around.

“KertaGai! Back to Warim! Now!” He almost yelled.

Sadi and Ne'Veha didn't hesitate for a spilt second. They knew their beloved Androcles too well.

“SirsanGai! Full power to thrusters and main engines!” Sadi screamed as she yanked the PREMONITION into a gut wrenching turn over the city and the ship leaped forward as if shot from the barrel of a gun when Ne'Veha jammed the ship's engines to full power.

None of them realized that such a burst of power would send shudders reverberating all over the immediate area and even though they were five thousand feet above the facility, the sound and backwash from engaging the PREMONITION'S Pralor engines at such a low level was felt by everyone on the ground. Nearly two dozen men and women who were standing outside the facility or preparing to enter it staggered under the immense rush of air and the thundering sound of the ship breaking the sound barrier within half a second. Eyes lifted to the sky to search for what had caused something none of them had ever experienced before but they saw nothing.

Nor did they realize that one set of those eyes belonged to a pureblood female wolf of the Arhtai bloodline.

And she knew something was going on immediately.

Secha Aspion began heading back to where she knew her foul husband would be as quickly as her legs could carry her.

JETANIA MILITARY COMMAND STATION

It was truly a marvel of engineering for the Lycavorians on Jetania. The station had been built entirely from scratch while in space and had taken a full decade to complete. Now, fully ten years later, it stood as a bastion of the Coalition's military and their superiority. Or it did for them anyway. It was the single largest undertaking the Coalition had ever completed, and now the station, known simply as the MCS, was the heart of the Coalition military. The MCS was sixty-one levels and the cone shaped station was nearly half a mile across at its widest point. Ten thousand men and women called the station home, while hundreds more shuttled back to the station day after day for their duties. The MCS was the crown jewel of Coalition technology and might and to be able to work aboard the station was a significant boost to the influence you brought to your Pack. The Alpha who now commanded the MCS was an older wolf from the Plains Dohon Pack. They were the third largest Plains Pack behind the Aspion and Jemor Pack and he had worked very hard to secure this position for himself and his Pack. He had held this command for the last forty-seven years, and the Dohon Pack had benefited greatly from his position. He was well respected among the different Packs and held great influence with them. While his father was their Pack leader, Ristan Dohon was looked to as a leader and even his father sought his council at different times. This was something that Ristan provided willingly for unlike other Alphas in his position, he loved his parents, siblings and his wife and mate without hesitation. Ristan had been mated to the same female Alpha wolf for going on a full millennium now, which was almost unheard of among the Plains packs, and she had given him seven strong and proud children in that time. He was not concerned for another Alpha taking his mate from him, the last two who had tried ended up very dead. He had killed one while his wife had castrated the other and left him to bleed to death in a fit of anger at his actions.

Coalition Colonel Ristan Dohon sat in his command chair within the MCS's Operations Command Center now. This massive room was the nerve epicenter of the entire station. Over a hundred men and women worked within the OCC, all of them monitoring their duty stations. Incoming and outgoing ship traffic, standard orders to all of the Coalition ships that were out of the system, overseeing the refit and upgrade of the nine COLS cruisers currently docked to the station. It was the very heart of the station and the surrounding system, and it was here that they received the first warning.

Ristan looked up from the data pad he was reading from the previous logs of the night before when the insistent chirping began sounding from one of the consoles across the center. He remained calm as his Second Officer moved smoothly to the station where the young female wolf sat, her hands flying across the computer station in front of her. No one who worked on the station and in particular on the shift that Ristan ran was new or unknowledgeable. All of them were the best at what they did and had finished tops in their respective fields in order to be here on his command shift. His eyes narrowed when the young woman looked at his Second Officer Benic Uchea and shook her head quickly. Ristan rose out of his chair.

"Something Benic?" He asked.

Benic turned to face him from across the room. "It doesn't make any sense sir." He spoke quickly.

"What doesn't make sense?" Ristan asked him.

"Sir we...?" Benic began to speak but stopped himself.

Ristan shook his head just as quickly. "The politics of the Packs remains on the surface of Jetania!" Ristan spoke. "I have always demanded this from all of you! Up here we are all equal no matter our bloodlines. I will not have it any other way Benic, you know this."

"Yes sir!" The man spoke.

"Then talk to me man!" Ristan insisted.

Benic looked at the young woman. "Tell him Coya."

"Sir!" The female spoke now rising to her feet. "Station sensors just detected a massive spike in Quantum Matter Particles throughout the entire planetary system!"

Ristan looked confused. “Quantum Matter Particles?” He questioned. “How is that even possible Coya? My knowledge says Quantum Matter Particles are only theoretical. How are our sensors able to detect something that doesn’t exist?”

The female nodded as she glanced at Benic and he nodded his head. “Tell him all of it.” He spoke.

“Tell me what?” Ristan asked.

“Sir, the last software update from the main Research Facility on the surface contained theoretical work on Quantum Mechanics. Something our scientists worked up quickly sir. It is designed to allow our sensors to pick up what our scientists thought would be what Quantum Matter Particle fluctuations along all spectrums of space.”

Ristan moved closer to her from his chair. “They added theoretical software updates to our equipment without informing me? When did this happen?”

“King Osrod ordered it done after Captain Nasso’s encounter with the new Lycavorians in Sector fourteen, sir.” Benic replied now, regaining his composure. “I instructed Lieutenant Coya to let it run in the background with the other sensors and to ignore it. They based their work on only one report Colonel and...”

Ristan nodded his head. “And Nasso is known to be notoriously ignorant.” He finished the sentence for him. “But Gomar is one of the finest Sensor operators that we have. Him I trust and this was his conclusion as well correct?”

Benic nodded his head. “Yes sir.”

“And now there is a spike in these... these Quantum Matter Particles?” Ristan asked the young woman as he moved fully up next to her.

Coya nodded her head. “Almost identical to the readings that Captain Nasso’s ship was able to detect during his encounter sir. Just before those ships jumped away they were able to detect massive Quantum Matter Particle fluctuations. I have been reviewing the logs since copies were made and sent out to all ships and commands. They were... they were very impressive sir.” She told him almost shyly.

“How large is massive Coya?” Ristan asked her knowing that Coya was one of the brightest stars on the MCS in her work.

“A five hundred and sixty-three percent increase sir.” She answered instantly. “More than five times the levels found within normal space.”

“So these ships... Coya are you telling me that these ships have working Quantum Matter Propulsion drives?” Ristan gasped.

Coya nodded her head. “That is what the data suggests sir.” She replied. That also implies that they have Interstellar capability and carians knows what else. Technology like this is at least a thousand years ahead of ours, probably more to be honest.”

“This was not in the security briefings given to us after Nasso encountered these new Lycavorians!” Ristan almost shouted. “We need to get that full briefing from Nasso and we...”

The entire Command Center erupted in chaos then as alarms began to sound all around them and red flashing lights began to come on in different locations. Another Lycavorian stood up from his chair and looked at Ristan.

“Colonel!” The man shouted. “Colonel... unidentified ships are jumping into the system sir!” He almost screamed as he was staring at his sensor screen. “They are all around us sir! Over a hundred ships of unknown origin!” His eyes grew even wider if that was possible. “Colonel... son vada carians! Another ship just appeared sir! It is already in orbit of Jetania and it is...”

“What damn it!” Ristan shouted at him.

The man looked at him. “Colonel it is even larger than the station we are on right now!” He gasped aloud.

Ristan felt his heart slam in to his chest. “Coya!” He almost snarled. “Get on it girl! Tell me what is going on! Benic bring the station and the fleet to full alert! Issue Epsilon Order Four Three! Prepare to defend...”

“Colonel!” The COM officer screamed from his station. “Colonel we are receiving an open hail from... from one of the ships sir!”

SPARTA'S WRATH

Lasun and Garget could only gaze out the view window in utter astonishment as they began watching ships appear all around the MCS and the Coalition Fleet ships that were in orbit. Huge ships that looked every bit as dangerous as they did impressive. The smallest one that they could see was equal in size to the largest COLS cruiser and they watched as the ships began to maneuver in a very direct fashion, quickly surrounding those Coalition ships that were in orbit. Their eyes grew even wider as one of the huge ships that they saw began to spew what could only be small fighters from either side of its superstructure like angry bees from their nest.

They heard a soft pop as if someone had turned on an intercom and then the booming male voice filled the bridge where they stood.

“Honey! I’m home!”

They turned as Martin laughed softly and shook his head. “My brother.” Martin told them.

“Incoming transmission from SPARTAN’S SOUL!” The voice announced on the bridge.

Martin’s eyes grew slighter wider at this and he nodded to Armen. “Let’s see it Armen.”

“COM officer, main holo disc!” Armen ordered.

“Transferring!”

Martin turned to the small holo disc in the center of the bridge and Garget and Lasun followed suit as the disc flared to life and almost instantly cleared. Martin felt genuine warmth and happiness fill him when he saw Daniel’s tall figure on the bridge of his own ship. He didn’t know how, but someone must have released the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser from its duties on Earth. This was Danny’s personal ship and his home away from home. Martin could make out with his eyes the ARIZONA and at least nine other LEONIDAS IIA Class ships with the SPARTAN’S SOUL, not to mention upwards of at least a hundred other Union warships. He smiled when he realized his brother was not taking any chances and brought the most firepower with him that he could without leaving Ventori undefended.

Danny met his eyes in the transmission. “I heard you were throwing a party so I brought the party favors.” Danny spoke with his trademark smile, exposing his brilliant white teeth and his long wolf fangs for all to see. Garget Ranev and Lasun Vesrak looked at one another for they were thinking the same thing it seemed. This man was easily their equal in height and he had far more muscles than they did. He was utterly huge.

“Bout time you showed up!” Martin quipped.

Danny nodded his head with a smile. “You know me fervon... I do like to make an entrance.”

Martin saw Anuk and Nayeca step into the transmission with Kesyla between them. “Do not let him fool you Martin...” Anuk spoke. “He has been like a child since the SPARTAN’S SOUL came to Ventori two days ago.”

Danny nodded his head. “Yeah... that means I don’t have to leech off of you anymore. I got my own ship back now. We got way better food and the sleeping arrangements are much more to my liking! If you get my drift fervon...” Daniel told him wagging his eyebrows.

“Daniel!” Nayeca admonished him with a sharp intake of breath and a slap that struck the back of his head lightly.

Lasun and Garget stood there in shock as Martin burst out laughing. This man, this Alpha wolf was speaking to the Mard Revik of their people as if he had not a care in the world and Martin was allowing it. They watched him step closer to the transmission.

“Ventori?” He asked Danny.

Dan nodded his head quickly. “Admiral Ceneu did some maneuvering of the CFGs and he released SPARTAN’S SOUL and her entire CFFG to us out here. He said they were standing around doing nothing anyway. I left the 2nd SED on Ventori and only brought Manda’s and my Fleet Groups. I figured that would be enough. The ARC ROYAL is returning with Dysea, Bella and Cirith; they should be arriving in the morning. Ventori now has a full SED on the surface and upwards of four hundred ships guarding them fervon. Ceneu even sent a detachment from the 1st Elven Engineering Division. Nalmos and the other Justices are working really fast and the Tasmor are jumping in right alongside them. Nalmos has offered them a permanent place on Ventori for those who wish to stay, and Saydia already has about a thousand of her best Tasmor engineers on Ventori working with our folks and preparing to rebuild Jorlari for starters. They will branch out from there.”

“You have been busy.” Martin spoke with a smile.

“Who says I can’t get things done without you?” Danny snorted playfully. “All of the adolescent dragons are on the surface and Syrilth chopped several of her best instructors from Dragon Mountain. They arrived with SPARTAN’S SOUL and are having a blast teaching them.” He told him. “Carina and Moneus are coordinating everything from Manne.”

Martin stepped closer to the transmission still. “Danny we have... we have learned quite a bit.” He said softly.

“I’m assuming some of it has to do with the tattoo that now mars my beautiful and flawless skin.” Danny spoke with a grin, even as Martin saw Anuk and Nayeca roll their eyes and Kesyla laughed softly. “Pablo saw it and about shit his pants over the detail.”

“Who else?” Martin asked him.

“Our whole team fervon.” Danny answered him. “Anuk, Nubian and Kesyla have it now. Moneus as well.” Danny looked intently at the man that he called his brother without question. “Shri’a deployed with SPARTAN’S SOUL and she has it too.” Danny told him meaning his oldest daughter with Nayeca. “I haven’t spoken with Anton yet but if Moneus and Shri’a have it then I’m assuming he does too and our little ones on Earth. What does it mean fervon?”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “It’s a long story aur mard fervon and I got a feeling the parts we haven’t heard are not going to be pretty.”

Danny nodded his head knowing what he meant. “They never are Marty.” He agreed with him solemnly. “We’ll get through it Martin. We always do.” He told him. “Now, you told me I would be able to kick someone’s ass! How bout that?”

Martin grinned at him as his spirits began lifting. “Hold that thought. I have a call to make.”

“Well hurry it up old man!” Danny barked. “Captain Jaban tells me we got a new refit and I want to try out some of the new toys!” He said referring to the man who commanded SPARTAN’S SOUL for him and had for the entire time Danny had been in charge of the 2nd SED.

Martin chuckled. “Stand by.” He said turning to Armen. “Andro should be hitting that facility right about now Armen. Open a channel to this station and let’s talk to whoever is in charge.”

FATHER! Andro’s voice exploded from within the Etheric realm like a blast from a fog horn, causing both Lasun and Garget to reach for their heads in pain.

Martin’s eyes grew wide and concerned, for his oldest and most experienced son never acted out of emotion as he was doing now.

Andro! What is wrong?!

Mari has detected fourteen individuals with Arhtai bloodlines within Warim! They are closing on mother’s position right now! Loras and Retta are with them father! As are Sarlana, Nilantha and stania Dynina and Reva’s Sphere!

“Nubou lae! Henes wen cuia morg Loras niob! They must have detected the Mahanlo blood in Lazar! Shit! They will find out that Reva is...” Martin gasped aloud. (Fuck me. They are going after Loras now!)

We are twenty-eight seconds away father. Andro told him.

Martin Leonidas snarled angrily now. Kill them all keto! I don’t care how! I will meet you there! Martin turned instantly to Armen now. “Prepare to send us back to Warim Armen! Have Danny handle these ass hats up here! Tell him what is going on! Have Chiron tag Loras’ parents and her children with Garget’s brother! I want them covered by Durcunusaan in two minutes!”

Armen didn’t blink. “Understood.” He told him closing his eyes. “Activating teleport!” The orange white light flared on the bridge once more and then Martin, Lasun and Garget were gone as they had appeared.

Armen didn’t hesitate and he turned. “Burst General Simpson and inform him of what is happening! He is to act accordingly! Chiron are you monitoring?”

“Affirmative.” Chiron answered from another portion SPARTA’S WRATH. “I am already marking their locations Armen.”

Armen activated the internal ship Com with a simple blink of his eyes. “Durcunusaan Ready Detachment report to Teleport Bay three! Prepare to deploy under Spartan CRIMSON PROTOCOLS! Chiron is sending you your targets! Secure at any cost! Secure at any cost! This is no drill!”

“I will guide them Armen.” Chiron spoke once more. “Command the ship my... my friend. That is your duty now. Mine is to safeguard our... our family.”

Armen didn't blink. “Understood!”

Chiron did not stop however and Armen heard his next commands. “Commander of the DRD, this is the Avatar Chiron! I am sending the locations of your targets to your personal data pads! They are in four different areas of the city below! You are to secure their safety at any measure!”

Armen heard the next words with no hesitation.

“Commander Chatai acknowledges!” The stern voice answered. “We will be off ship in twenty-seven seconds!”

Armen turned to his XO. “Begin powering weapons!” He ordered quickly. “And prepare to launch all APOC Drones in support if Admiral Lorian's fighters come under attack of any kind!”

JETANIA WARIM

The Warim Flower Atrium was well known on Jetania for it was the only facility on the entire planet which had every known type of flora living under one facility. The aroma of hundreds of different species of flower filled the entire massive building. The interior of the Flower Atrium was broken up into several different sections, all under the main stadium sized rotunda. The huge ceiling was broken into four different glass sections that allowed the sunlight and the moonlight to enter freely. Students from the many different Mountain Pack schools had gathered the huge assortment of flowers from every corner of the planet and brought them here. Dozens of them were right now working within the massive facility caring for the different species of flowers, many of which were very rare and needed precise care in order to flourish away from their natural habitat.

Loras Ranev was very proud of the work put into this facility and those who cared for all of the flowers. There was a full-time staff, but most of the work was done by students from all across the different Mountain Packs who came here for two month stints at a time. Learning the flora of Jetania was one of the many required courses for all Mountain Pack children, for it brought them all much closer to the landscape and therefore their own instinctive nature as wolves. The school system had been centralized for four decades now thanks to Loras' hard work and all of the Mountain Packs had seen the performance and skills of their children nearly triple in that same time.

Loras had decided that there was no longer a reason to hide who was among them any longer. It would begin seeping out into the general populous and better that their people saw and felt it for themselves then let rumors and innuendo run free.

The first place she decided to take them was the Flower Atrium.

Loras came here often when she could not sleep at night or she wanted to calm herself. The smell of the flowers soothed her and help her to think. Right now she was walking between Anja and For'mya and holding their hands tightly as she led them deeper into the main Atrium, the center of which was backstopped by a beautiful water fountain and surrounded by dozens of comfortable benches for students or anyone wanting to study or think in a serene atmosphere.

Loras Ranev, for the better part of her young life so far, had always felt out of place and different. Her mother and father kept telling her it was her imagination and to drive herself forward always. Her parents doted over her and her only remaining brother and sister. Her three other brothers had been killed through the many years since coming here to Jetania, all of them from natural causes on hunts. Now however, now Loras felt peace and family filling her like never before and it radiated from these women all around her. Aricia walked just behind them, her hands holding Lazar's arm as Retta walked on his opposite side. Lazar had always hated coming here as a child, but now he too seemed at peace and genuinely happy and Loras knew it was because of Retta. These three women were like one person Loras thought as she walked with them. Ever since she had been within that Etheric transmission, her own Etheric awareness had increased ten-fold and it was continuing to grow stronger just being around them. She could sense their connection to one another and how their resonances mingled so flawlessly with one another. Loras could also feel Achilles' Etheric resonance within her, echoing ever so softly in the background. He had not spoken or reached out to her since calling her wife, but he was there Loras was certain.

Nilantha had been utterly overjoyed to meet the second Darastrixi female, a prophet of some kind among her species she came to realize, and the much older Lycavorian woman walked with both of them as if it was the most natural thing in the world. Loras also realized that this was the leader of the Lycavorians who had come to Jetania so very long ago and who Osrod's grandfather had tried to force himself upon. She was a powerful Alpha female, more so than any Loras had ever felt with the exception of Anja and her fellow Queens. The knowledge that so much existed off Jetania than what Loras had originally believed was a sobering fact to be sure, but surprisingly Loras was absorbing all of it easily. It was almost as if she knew that it was there deep within her but it had remained hidden for so long. She was coming to understand the why of it, her true bloodlines, something her parents had withheld from her for reasons that she did not understand as of yet, but she would certainly question them about it when she saw them again later this evening.

Loras did not know what to make of the odd shaped floating sphere that followed the two women Dynina and Sarlana around, never moving very far from them, but she was beginning to realize that there was so much more going on that she did not know or understand. Loras didn't care about that right now, what filled her with happiness was the sensation of family and the utter peace that gave to her. It was what she felt when with her mother and father, but so much more intense and focused.

It was For'mya who finally broke their silence as they walked and took in the hundreds of beautiful flowers within the Atrium.

"We have several places like this on Elear, the planet I was born on." For'mya spoke as they moved into the center of the huge Atrium. "None of them are as large, but they are places of peace and reflection. What you have done here is amazing Loras."

Loras smiled as they all stopped and gathered in near several benches. "All of the Packs send their children here at some point. It is required. It helps to teach them about what it means to be Lycavorian. It is how we have remained so close to our instincts."

"And this is what sets you apart from the Plains Packs?" Dynina asked her.

Loras nodded her head. "Unfortunately, yes." She replied. "The Mountain Packs have remained much closer to our natural instincts than those among the Plains Packs. They are not bad men and women, in fact many are hard working and follow a code of honor, but they have allowed technology to move them away from who we really are as a people."

Dynina nodded her head. "We sensed this when we first arrived all those years ago." She spoke softly.

"It has not been easy for sure." Loras said. "As much as I hate..." Loras stopped and took a deep breath to calm herself. She felt Lazar pulse her with a son's love and she looked at him and smiled. "As much as I dislike Osrod, he is much better than what his father and grandfather were. At least he listens to reason and he is smarter than they were. He seeks compromise more than conflict among the Packs."

"Most of the time." Lazar agreed.

Loras nodded her head. "Yes... most of the time."

"And what his son Juyno did?" Dynina asked. "This is allowed?"

Loras shook her head quickly. "No!" She exclaimed. "Juyno stepped far beyond his station. Mountain pack females are prized among the Alphas on Jetania for their beauty and their intelligence. It is why we allow the Plains Pack Alphas to do this. In a way, it was our attempt to change the Plains Packs from the inside."

"If a Plains Alpha claimed a female from the different Mountain Packs then they..." Anja began to speak.

Loras nodded her head. "They would be subject to our laws and our rules." Loras spoke. "Through the centuries those Plains Alphas who have succeeded in claiming one of our females who were in Phase, most of them have become part of our society seamlessly. There have been some who were denied their claim by the female's parents or Pack, but for the most part, these unions remain solid and stable and the males have come to live among the Mountain Packs."

“You do realize that our Martin will not let this continue.” Aricia spoke now from beside Lazar. “He will not allow males to hunt females in the hopes of claiming them. If they wish to claim a female then they should court them and show them how interested they are. How good a husband and mate they would be?”

Loras nodded her head. “I agree Aricia.” She said. “But changing centuries of how we do things is not going to be easy.”

“It never is.” Sarlana spoke now. “It never is.”

“As much as I do hate my father...” Lazar spoke now. “This is not something that he would allow. This is Secha’s doing.”

Retta knew who this woman was from swimming within Lazar’s thoughts the night before. They had spent several hours as Retta had shown him the delicate intricacies of Etheric communication and what they could do. Lazar had been fascinated and wanted to learn more and more and he opened himself to Retta as he had never opened himself to anyone. In those few hours he had seen things and felt things that had brought him closer to the young woman who had claimed his heart than he ever thought possible.

“Juyno’s mother?” Retta asked him.

Lazar nodded his head. “She is a upa...” Lazar stopped quickly and looked at his mother in embarrassment.

Loras smiled at her son. “She is a upae. Secha is the First Queen of Osrod.” She finished for him. “She is the one who holds the most power and influence of his four Queens. None of the others comes close.”

Lazar chortled in disgust. “She treats them like they are beneath her. They must do everything she tells them or she will make their lives miserable.”

Loras nodded her head. “She held such disdain for me while I was Osrod’s mate and I never knew why. I tried to reach out to her but she rebuffed my attempts at every turn. I just accepted it finally. I was glad to be rid of it when I was released back to my Pack and Warim Ranev claimed me. But she always treated Lazar with equal disdain for some reason. She is just... she is just an evil woman.”

“Evil how?” Dynina asked now, her interest peaked.

Loras shook her head. “Rylin could tell you more. She knew her better than I ever did. She had to work with Secha on different Pack issues and was always complaining about her inflexibility and vehemence toward the Mountain Packs, my parents and Lazar more often than not once I was claimed as killed with Warim. I guess her hatred of me carried over to Lazar and my parents.” Loras looked around now. “Where is Rylin by the way Oracle? I have not seen her all day.”

Nilantha met her gaze. “She told me she had some Pack business to complete before the Mard Revik came to the surface.” She replied. “That was late last evening. I have not seen her since then.”

“She should be here.” Loras spoke. “She...”

All of them heard the yelps of surprise and fear and they turned to see over a dozen heavily armed men rushing forward towards them with weapons out and leveled at them. Lazar instantly stepped in front of Retta, pulling her behind him with one arm while reaching for his mother. Anja and For'mya had already stepped in front of Loras as Aricia’s hand dropped to her thigh and she snatched her Nehtes from its place there.

“Don’t!” The female voice boomed within the Atrium as half a dozen young Lycavorians were pushed and shoved towards the center of the Atrium and Loras’ eyes grew huge when she saw Rylin leading the men doing the pushing and shoving with a hand weapon.

“Rylin!” Loras gasped.

Nilantha’s eyes were equally as large in shock. “Rylin what is the meaning of this?” She demanded. “What are you...?”

Rylin lifted the hand weapon and the booming noise echoed in the Atrium as the single shot struck Nilantha in her chest and flung her body back several feet to the floor, her blood beginning to soak the clothes she wore and leak onto the floor.

“No!” Sarlana screamed as she dropped to the floor beside her.

Rylin pointed the weapon at Aricia now. “I always hated that foul, inferior woman! Drop it and kick it away from you!” She snapped viciously. “Or I will kill every one of these pitiful students!”

Aricia’s azure eyes moved between the six men now holding the four young females and two males on the floor, their rifles shoved against their heads. Aricia opened her hand and let the Nehtes drop to the floor and she kicked it aside. Rylin motioned to Anja and For'mya. "Now you two half breed bitches! Drop your weapons and kick them away from you!"

"Bitches?" Anja hissed in anger.

"Rylin! What... what are you doing!?" Loras screamed out.

Rylin looked at one of her men on her left holding the young blond female wolf. "Kill that one!" She snarled.

"NO!" Anja and Loras screamed together just before the man pulled the trigger on his rifle and sent a single shot into the back of the young woman's head. Her body slumped to the floor amid the wails of fear from the others. The single shot had been instantly fatal, covering the floor around her body in blood and brain matter.

"Do it now!" Rylin screamed as she looked back to Anja and For'mya.

Anja and For'mya slowly took out their Pralor Particle Magnums, both of them cut down in size to fit their smaller hands and they tossed them to the side, away from their bodies.

"Now that knife you carry too upae!" Rylin barked out looking directly at Anja.

Anja reached behind her and removed the R14 Hybrid fighting knife from its hidden location at the small of her back and she tossed that to the side as well.

"Rylin what have you done?" Loras shouted now as she moved forward towards her. Lazar grabbed her arms and held her in check.

"Mother no!" He shouted.

Rylin looked at her. "What am I doing?" She snarled. "I'm making something right! I'm going to kill what it has taken us over a million years to finally discover!"

"What are you talking about?" Loras cried now as she looked at the body of the young female wolf. "She was... she was just a child! What have you done?"

"I'm going to finish what we started all those years ago." Rylin snapped. "We let your parents escape! We don't know what he did to hide them, but we knew they had escaped! First to Ventori and then here! Now I am going to finish the job we started!"

"I don't know what you mean!" Loras barked savagely. "Why are you doing this? She was innocent! You murdered her!"

Rylin looked at her surprised now. "You don't know?" She gasped. Her laughter was meant to be condescending and it was. "Your parents never told you did they?" She snapped. "You don't know what you are?"

Loras' eyes widened suddenly and Rylin moved a little closer, but the hand weapon never wavered.

"You do know." She hissed. "Or you have some idea don't you? She revealed some of it to you didn't she?" Rylin barked motioning with the weapon at Nilantha's limp form, now in Sarlana's arms as she continued to bleed and she and Dynina were trying their best to stop it and keep her alive.

"You... you are speaking of the prophecy." Loras said.

Rylin laughed bitterly. "The Prophecy! What a joke! You! Your parents! Your children with that fool Warim! All of you! You are the last of a dead bloodline! When I kill you, we will be able to finish the job we started so many years ago and we will finally end what remains of your stinking family on Koltar Four! Then my pack, the Arhtai Pack, we will rule our people!"

"The Arhtai Pack!"

Reva's voice echoed loudly now in the Atrium as Rylin saw the strange sphere move forward slightly and she shifted her weapon towards it, her eyes widening. "What is this?" She snarled.

"What has the Arhtai Pack done!" Reva barked angrily for she could not smell the woman's scent in her current form. Once more she cursed her metal body silently, regretting that she ever agreed to this.

"Reva no!" Aricia snapped.

Rylin's eyes went wider now. "Reva?" She gasped aloud.

"Who are you?" Anja snapped now as she came up beside Loras slowly and gripped her arm. She, Aricia and For'mya could feel them now. Both of them were so close. Anja needed to keep them talking for a few moments longer.

"Why does it matter to you bitch!" Rylin barked. "When my mother Secha discovers what your foul offspring did to Juyno she will make sure that you and he do not live out this day!"

“Secha?” Loras gasped in disbelief. “Your mother?!”

Rylin nodded her head. “Yes, my mother.” She answered.

“How is that...? Who are you people?!” Loras screamed.

Rylin smiled now. “I truly liked you Loras. I did.” She spoke. “So, I will tell you what you wish to know. My real name is Roeza Arhtai. I was sent to Ventori with my mother to kill your parents! To kill them do you hear me! You have no idea who your parents truly are do you? A pity. They were well hidden from us though; our bloodline detectors could not find them. Whoever hid their bloodline did so with technology we did not have. Before we could discover who they were, Osrod’s fool grandfather showed up and took all of the Alphas from Ventori and brought them here. We came as well obviously, for our mission was not complete. All of this time and you have been right under our noses. My mother will not be happy with herself about that but she can take solace in the fact that you will be truly dead.”

“How did you discover who she was?” Anja asked now.

“My equipment began to go off the moment Lazar’s bloodline was revealed. It very was simple to trace after that.” Rylin answered her. “I really had no idea until his true bloodline was revealed.”

“You have this device with you now?” Anja asked her.

“It never leaves my presence.” Rylin snapped. “Why should that matter to you in the least half breed? It is none of your concern!”

“Really?” Anja pressed her. “Have you checked it lately?”

“I do not need to check it!” Rylin barked. “It is foolproof!”

“Then I don’t suppose you know why, all of a sudden, that Lazar’s true bloodline set off your little toy?” Anja questioned her.

“I don’t need to know why!” Rylin snarled at her. “What difference does that make? I have discovered what I needed to discover!”

“So it was designed to detect the Mahanlo bloodline?” Aricia asked now, knowing where Anja was going with her questioning and feeling them getting closer by the second.

“Do not mention that vile name!” Rylin screamed at her. “Never mention that name!”

“You are far older than your scent tells us you are.” Aricia continued. “Aren’t you?”

“You have no idea you small child.” Rylin spoke. “My mother is even older!”

“What is her real name?” For'mya asked now.

“I will tell you only so that you will know who it was that ordered the death of your bloodline.” Rylin answered. “My mother’s real name is Sama Arhtai.”

“Sama!” Reva announced once more. “Sama Arhtai!?”

Rylin glared at the sphere once more. “What is that infernal thing?” She screamed.

“I knew Sama Arhtai.” Reva spoke moving closer once more. “She was a spoiled little child who thought the world owed her everything!”

Rylin made the mistake of leveling the weapon she held at the sphere and she pulled the trigger twice in quick succession. Both rounds impacted the sphere’s outer shell and ricocheted wildly off into the distance. Rylin’s eyes went wide at this.

“Do you think your puny weapons could penetrate Onkmeti Naami armor you fool girl!” Reva’s voice barked out angrily now.

Rylin’s eyes grew wider still when she heard that. “Onkmeti Naami armor!” She gasped. “That is not... that is not possible!”

“You cannot hurt me foolish girl!” Reva bellowed. “Now... you will tell me what you have done to my family or I will rend your flesh from your body until you scream in agony?!”

“Family?” Rylin gasped in horror.

Aricia smiled slightly. “You speak to Reva Mahanlo.” She spoke clearly. “Her body is in our ship above this planet and her mind occupies this sphere you see. Your so-called bloodline detector did not work so very well as you thought. It has not shown you who we are.”

“You?!” Rylin shouted. “What do you mean?”

“You should probably check your toy.” Anja stated as she gripped Loras’ arm tighter and prepared to act. She could see Aricia and For'mya’s bodies beginning to tense.

They watched as Rylin grabbed for something in her clothes and she pulled out the small square device. Her eyes grew wide as she saw the flashing green light on the small box and she pressed a button on the box device and they could all hear the solid, whirring alarm sounding. Rylin looked up with wide eyes.

“Impossible!” She rasped out the words.

“Rylin, what is it?” One of her men asked.

“The only reason your little toy detected Lazar’s true bloodline is because my daughter bit him when he claimed her!” Anja snarled at her. “When she bit him, when Lazar bit her, the pure Mahanlo blood within Retta destroyed whatever was masking Lazar’s blood from your little scanner there!”

Sarlana lifted her head now and looked up towards the glass ceiling, her emerald eyes wide in disbelief. “Ithquenti!” She spoke in Darastrixi. “I can... I can feel him! He is... they are here!”

Aricia’s azure colored eyes began to glow and she smiled. “You wish to discover those with Mahanlo blood woman?!” She barked now. “Then you should probably meet those two men descended from the purest of all Mahanlo blood to have ever lived! From Daniho Mahanlo and Ashten Mahanlo themselves!”

Anja grabbed Loras then on one side and For'mya on the other. “You are well and truly fucked now forn upaeel!” Anja shouted.

Rylin saw the shadow on the floor and she had enough time to look up and see blackness blotting out the sun from above before the glass ceiling of the Flower Atrium exploded in a shower of glittering slivers and hell opened its doors.

PREMONITION

“Where Mari?” Andro demanded as they stood by the open ramp and looked upon the many buildings below them. Sadi had deactivated the Shroud Shield and now hundreds upon hundreds of heads were looking above them at the ship.

Marti held her P9 up and tapped on the screen. “There!” She barked. “That large building with the glass ceiling Andro! Sadi... come five degrees right and two hundred meters north!” Mari snapped into her jaw Implant.

“Five degrees!” Sadi’s voice replied.

Marti looked down out of the open ramp. She had never had a fear of heights before and after Deion had taken her as his wife and mate, claimed her and then turned her, that slight fear became even less. She had ridden on Jeru several times and the feeling was absolutely glorious.

“That’s it!” Marti snapped looking at Andro. “Right below us! You mothers, Sarlana, Dynina and this Nilantha. Loras, Retta and this Lazar person as well.” Mari’s eyes opened wide. “Carians Andro, those wolves just entered the main facility where they are!”

FATHER! Andro screamed out within the Etheric realm.

I’m tracking your mother’s scents keto! His father’s voice answered instantly and Andro could tell he was running full out in his wolf form by the tone of his words. But Armen sent us back to our former location! We’re moving but still two or three minutes away! Garget Ranev is leading us to the west entrance of this place!

Father we are...

Blood before all else my son! Martin spoke clearly and without fail. Blood before all else!

Andro took a deep breath. So it shall be. He spoke before turning and looking at Jomann who was never more than three meters away from him now. He could see his siblings and Kalis all looking at him, Dorian and Laren closest to where Jomann stood.

“I know that look!” Jomann screamed at him over the wind and the sounds of the ship’s engines.

“Secure the entrances!” Andro barked out the orders. “No one in nor out! Kill them if they give you trouble.”

“Andro you...” Jomann began to speak but he was already turning to where Sehri stood beside Carisia and Lu'ria.

“Duan Gai!” Andro hissed. “I need you.” Sehri didn’t hesitate and stepped up beside him. “Do you trust me my wife?” He asked reaching up to stroke her cheek.

Sehri's answer was to wrap her arms around his waist. "Always!"

Androcles pulled her body tighter to his and he looked at Elynth now. "Sister! Follow me out and cover my mothers!"

"Andro no!" Jomann screamed once more but it was far too slow as Andro sprinted to the rear of the ramp and just stepped off into nothing. Elynth didn't hesitate in the least and she followed her Bonded Brother out the rear of the ship seconds later. "Shit! Shit!" Jomann snarled. "Sadi! Put us down! Put us down! I don't care where!"

Like her love for him, Sehri's trust in Androcles was absolute. She clung to his waist even as she felt no ground beneath her feet. A slight jerk caused her tightly shut eyes to fly open and she saw those wings extend from his back. She looked down once, saw the brilliant glass ceiling approaching them at terminal velocity and Sehri simply closed her eyes again and buried her face in his armored chest. Amazingly, the gold plated and scale like armor was not as hard to the touch as she first thought it would be seeing him wearing it. Sehri had time to look up once, saw Elynth's massive form above them and then she heard the shattering of glass. Andro projected into her thoughts what he was going to do and Sehri nodded without hesitation. These last days and weeks training with Carisia and Lu'ria had improved her confidence to new levels, not to mention her unarmed skills, but Sehri knew where her power resided and that is what her beloved Androcles wanted her to use.

She felt Andro pulse her madly with love and then Sehri pushed away from him and fell backwards. She executed a back flip and within seconds she landed cat like on the floor below, a hundred meters from the now shattered glass ceiling. Sarlana and Dynina were clutching Nilantha, while Retta, For'mya and Lazar were only two feet away, all of them looking at her with wide, astonished eyes as she brought her hands together, called on the added power that her new Bonded Brother Marux projected to her lovingly and without question from the ship above and the bluish Etheric shield exploded into existence around all seven of them.

Rylin could only watch with disbelief as she saw the two huge figures smash through the reinforced glass ceiling as if it was paper mache. One of them was a huge Darastrix dragon like from the stories of Cerath her mother had told her as child. Large and small pieces of shiny glass rained down on them like a hail storm, but most of them had been shattered into such tiny pieces they did no harm.

"Kill them!" Rylin screamed now. "Kill them all!"

Rylin watched as her men, all young warriors from the Arhtai Pack sent here many years ago, raised their weapons and open fire.

All for naught and far too late.

Rylin's eyes grew even wider when she saw the dragon's body up close, now armored in the black scaled and gold armor, as she wrapped her massive wings around Nilantha and the others even though Sehri had erected an Etheric shield that no weapon could pass through. Andro was taking no chances however, for the moment he touched the ground his own wings scooped his mothers Aricia and Anja and Loras together and pulled them close to his body as his wings wrapped around all of them tightly. The sounds of the projectiles striking his armored wings and his back were distinctive and loud as the thunderous roar of the weapons deafened anyone in the general area.

Loras Ranev could only stare in open mouthed shock at Androcles' face, sandwiched between Anja and Aricia as she was. His glowing azure eyes were brighter than any eyes she had ever seen before except for...

Loras gasped as she realized who this was. This was Androcles. This was the most powerful of the Tarivuos for the Mard Revik.

This was... this was Achilles father! His eyes were the giveaway. Azure blue in color and right now nearly glowing in intense emotion. Achilles had two different color eyes in the picture of them she had seen on Nilantha's ship, one an azure blue like his father before her and the other a dazzling jungle green that could only have come from his mother. This man was his father, so tall and so very powerful. His Alpha male aura reeked of confidence and power that no wolf had ever had before. This was the father of the man who would one day claim Loras and love her until she could not stand it anymore.

She watched those glowing azure eyes turn and settle on Aricia and Anja as the firing began to slacken. “Mothers!” Andro hissed.

“We need her alive keto!” Aricia told him.

Andro’s eyes narrowed in undisguised anger. “She has tried to kill you!” He snarled. “I will not offer mercy!”

Anja reached up and placed her palm flat on his still bear cheek. “Alive Androcles.” She spoke. “She has answers we need!”

Androcles took a deep breath and nodded his head and Loras Ranev could only gaze at him in unmitigated awe as she watched more of the gold, black scale armor extending around his neck and head in the shape of a helmet with simple slots for where his glowing azure orbs were and one for his mouth, where his savage looking and long dual fangs were now exposed. It finished with a cowl like hood that did nothing to hide the glow of his eyes. To Loras it was the most frightening thing she had ever seen in her life.

Sister! Andro barked out the single word etherically, Loras hearing it easily and her eyes going even wider.

I have them! Now Andro! The female voice barked back.

Loras could only watch then as those wings, wrapped so tightly around her and his mothers, began to unfurl and extend out to the sides to their full diameter across. Fully eight meters across to be certain. She did not see the huge dragon shift from behind her, but then an even larger wing was wrapping around her, Anja and Aricia and urging them back.

Androcles turned slowly to face Rylin and the men with her, his wings arching upwards above his back, and seeing their faces widen in disbelief that he was not in the least bit injured. The only sound in the massive chamber was the constant and unnerving sound of the small device in her hand and its solid alarm going off. Rylin lifted the small blood detector device, a tool devised by Arhtai Pack scientists and her eyes grew wide in utter disbelief as she saw the once blinking green light turn suddenly a bright, solid green as she held it towards Androcles.

“Son vada carians!” She gasped looking at Androcles. “It cannot be! You... you wear the Arwa rie Vada Tarivuos! That... that does not exist! It is only a myth!”

Andro stared at her with unrepentant hate. “A myth to you perhaps!”

“You... you bear the blood of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo within you!” Rylin gasped once more. “That is not possible! They are dead!”

“And now I know what the scent of Arhtai Pack traitors’ smells like!” Androcles snarled angrily.

He reached up slowly and gripped the hilts of Saar and Cana, wrenching them off the front of his armor from where they had resided in slightly recessed slits in his chest armor. As the intricately carved blades, forged from pure Dragon armor to razor like sharpness, burst from Flat Space, they were now encased in a bluish light of pure Etheric energy.

Rylin knew immediately that something was very wrong here. Before her stood an Alpha Wolf of astounding power and aura; a wolf with the blood of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo in his veins. Pure wolf blood different from anything she had ever smelled, blood that surged with immense power unlike anything Rylin had ever felt before. Pure Blood she had only smelled once in her lifetime and that was when they had put Kelia Mahanlo in stasis. Her pure blood had sent chills down her spine at the time.

When the Blood Detector was going off for Anja and the others Rylin thought perhaps that it was just some kind of malfunction, but this now, this was no malfunction.

Rylin turned her head to the side, sensing something else. Something was getting closer to them. Something that was wrapped within pure rage and power. Her eyes grew even wider when she realized it was another Alpha Wolf that dwarfed even this monster before her in power and aura and the pureness of its blood. Rylin turned back when she heard one of her men laugh.

“The fool brings swords to fight us!” He growled confidently as he slammed in a new magazine into his weapon and lifted his weapon.

“Vada voray rie Cerath coi dangua niob!” Androcles growled menacingly in a loud voice that only Reva’s sphere reacted too. The single bright light on the face of the sphere focused entirely on Androcles as he spoke words she had not heard in millions of years. “Una coi vada daanth rie toniru!” (The snow on Cerath is melting now) (It is the time of Reckoning)

“How?” Reva gasped out the single word.

Androcles lifted his arms and threw Saar and Cano with all of his considerable wolf strength in either direction, the swords rocketing off on a curved path with a bluish trail behind them. Rylin and her men could only stand there frozen in utter shock as Cano and Saar, guided by Androcles’ will, moved with blinding speed and curved inward, and then whipped along in front of the fourteen men, cleaning slicing through the rifles each of them held and severing them in two pieces. As the pieces of the rifles clattered and dropped to the floor, Cano and Saar returned to Andro’s hands and he quickly willed them away back into Flat Space, returning the hilts to the recessed slots on his armor. This... this he would finish with his bare hands.

“Kill them!” Rylin screamed once more staring at Androcles with real fear in her eyes now. Real fear surging through her veins. “Kill them now! Something else approaches!”

None of them understood the smile that split Andro’s face under the helmet, exposing the dual wolf fangs of his Mahanlo bloodline.

“NO!” Andro screamed out the single word before his massive wings lifted him ten meters into the air in a single, powerful motion.

Loras Ranev had been watching all of this from behind the edge of Elynth’s wing and her eyes went wide in sudden shock when those wings lifted Androcles into the air above them and the bright sunlight from the now shattered glass ceiling struck those same wings and for a single, heart stopping instant...

...It appeared as if those wings were on fire.

“Aur carian!” Loras Ranev muttered loudly. (My god)

Vin gente vinn’ tryn arduş mornar mero shylon un vada darsam.” Loras remembered those sacred words she had spoken not so very long ago. “Mornar jen sha tor Androcles.” (He came upon fiery wings and he brought death to the unjust. And his name was Androcles)

“Brace yourselves!” Elynth screamed out openly as she tightened her wings around those she was protecting, adding the armored protection of her wings over the top of Sehri’s Etheric shield. “It is about to begin!”

Androcles paused for a single moment at a height of ten meters, those in front of him frozen in shock at what he had just done. He lifted his armored right fist, channeled all of his combined Etheric and Dahakoan power into that fist as Murano and Sarlana had taught him, as his grandfather Sumar’s Tomes had taught him, and then with a mighty downward thrust of his wings he drove himself back to the floor and rammed his fist into the steel and concrete with everything he had within himself.

The steel and concrete floor shattered like delicate glass from the impact, the entire floor buckled upwards and then began to race at Rylin and the fourteen men around her like an out of control tidal wave. Rylin and those with her were launched into the air with devastating Etheric force as the buckled floor rose up and slap them about like so many rag dolls. The follow-on shockwave of the Etheric move continued on and blew out two full sides of the Flower Atrium building, opening the inside of the facility to the bright sun and open air of the city of Warim and terrifying hundreds of onlookers who were rushing towards the facility at the first sound of gunfire.

Elynth drew her head back now and retracted her wings from around her charges. She looked at Aricia, Anja and For'mya, now inside Sehri’s Etheric protection and her next words were spoken almost as if in apology.

“Now... now you will see what we never wanted you to see.” Elynth told them. “Forgive us for what we must do.”

Aricia opened her mouth to respond but Elynth was gone, leaping into the air with powerful grace.

“By the gods!” Anja muttered softly and Aricia and For'mya turned to where she was looking.

If the six Queens of the Lycavorian Union had thought they knew their oldest son before this day, today they were going to learn just how much about him and his father that they did not know and would probably never understand as they watched Androcles fall among five of the assassins a hundred meters away, half of them still inside the Atrium, the others now outside from the force of the Etheric wave, as they were staggering to their feet.

Androcles Leonidas was many things to many different people.
He was the epitome of a Spartan Warrior. Brave and laconically fearless.
He was the harbinger of death to his enemies, almost as feared as his father among the opponents of their people.

He was Soul Slayer.

He was a beloved husband and devoted Alpha mate to six, breathtakingly beautiful young women who held his very heart and soul within their grasp.

He was a loving and trusted brother who his siblings could share anything with and they knew without question that he would defend them and stand with them to the bitter end no matter what that was.

He was a dedicated friend and ally to those he called friend and to those who called him friend, for they knew he would never leave them or betray them in any way.

And most importantly, he was his father's son.

He was all of these things proudly.

Today however, today Androcles Mahanlo Leonidas was simply a son.

A son that, like his father, had now reached the end of his patience and tolerance towards those who would inflict harm to his family. And most especially to the women whom he called his mothers.

The first Arhtai Pack member to stagger to his feet, died without ever knowing what truly happened to him. Androcles simply stepped up behind him, his black scaled armored wings still fully extended from his back and shoulders, grabbed the man's head in his hands, twisted his body around until the man was doubled over backwards and then Androcles snapped his neck like the proverbial twig. He dropped his twitching body before the life had fully left the man and was upon the next two men as they turned to face him with dazed eyes.

These two men made the mistake of trying to draw the side arms that they carried and bring them up. Andro grabbed the wrist on the man on his right, shifted to his left with blinding speed, wrenching the man's arm upward and hearing his screams of agony as his arm bent at the extremely odd angle and his forearm broke in two with barely any effort and the stark white bone tore through the muscle and flesh of his arm as he dropped the hand weapon. Androcles released that arm, as he was close to the man on his left in a near squatting position, and he drove his armored fist directly into the man's exposed sternum, adding his Etheric power to the devastating punch. The Arhtai Pack's soldier's eyes bugged out of his head as he felt the intense and excruciating pain of seven of his ribs being crushed into tiny slivers. The crunching of those bones was ghastly and very audible, as half a dozen of those slivers tore through his lungs and heart and blood spewed from between his lips, his eyes open wide in horrific pain. He had time to blink in surprise before Andro's second punch, again aided by Etheric power, smashed into his exposed throat, utterly crushing his larynx. The force of the punch to his throat also carried enough kinetic power in it to completely destroy half a dozen of his neck vertebrae, pulverizing them almost into dust at the force used.

As the man began his death drop to the floor, Androcles whirled on the man with the shattered arm and with a roar of unsustainable savagery and anger that drowned out his own screams of pain, Andro grabbed his head with both of his hands and drove his armored helmet directly into the man's face. His screams ceased instantly as that armored forehead shattered his nose and drove a dozen now devastated pieces of his nose cartilage directly into his brain. Two shots rang out as Androcles allowed the body to drop from his hands and the faint cries of his mothers' horror reached his ears as both of those rounds struck him directly in his helmeted head.

Onkmeti Naami was made to not only be resistant to projectile weapons, but it also was made to be pliable. The force of such rounds impacting the armor was distributed throughout all of the armor so that it was barely felt by the wearer.

The Arwa rie Vada Tarivuos, as the myth Rylin spoke of, did its job magnificently this day. (Armor of The Heralds)

Andro simply turned his head to look at the two men who held the side arms, their eyes wide in disbelief that their rounds had done nothing. They saw those azure orbs begin to glow even brighter and then they were ripped off their feet as Androcles lifted them with his right hand encased in the glow of his Etheric power. Their screams of agony began immediately as Andro closed his fist slowly and their bones began to pop and snap with unholy sounds as their bodies were literally crushed within their flesh. Andro sensed more of the Arhtai Pack assassins regaining their senses behind these two men, including the upae Rylin. Androcles knew his father was almost here, could sense him almost upon them, and he would not let any of these monsters escape their justice. With an almost casual wave of his arm Andro sent the two men, now with most of the bones in their bodies shattered or crushed, sailing off to the side as almost an afterthought. They impacted the side of the fountain nearly thirty meters away from his mothers with ghoulish sounds of wet flesh, blood pouring from their eyes and mouths.

Androcles called forth his Etheric power once more and without even hitting the ground this time, he shoved his hands forward and unleashed an Etheric wave that caught Rylin and three other men in its power, lifting them from the floor once more and sending them careening out of control towards where Androcles felt his father approaching.

Screams of fright drew his attention and Andro whipped his head around as he saw six more of the assassins regaining their feet half in and half out of the blown-out Atrium wall. He could see dozens upon dozens of innocents looking on with horror and awe at what was taking place, frozen in their spots at the action, and Andro knew he could not allow these men to recover enough to injure innocent men and women. With a wolf roar of unmitigated savagery and rage, his dual fangs exposed for all to see, Androcles flexed his wings and propelled himself towards them with barely a pause.

Seeing Androcles leap further away from them and wanting to do what any mother would do with a child in danger, Aricia and For'mya both tried to get up and move through the Etheric shield that Sehri was holding around all of them. neither of them succeeded and both stumbled back.

“Sehri!” Aricia barked. “Let us through!”

Sehri looked up from where she was squatting beside Dynina and helping her and Sarlana to hold Nilantha’s upper body as Anja knelt beside her, the glowing white of her healing power coursing through Nilantha’s chest area.

“I cannot!” Sehri spoke calmly.

“You will let us through this instant!” For'mya barked now. “He needs our help! He is outnumbered and alone Sehri!”

Sehri allowed the small smile to split her face, Aricia and For'mya seeing the dual fangs that were the signature of their bloodline so prominently displayed.

“I love you both as Androcles’ mothers, but I act with his will and the will of Sadi and the others.” Sehri spoke slowly and confidently. “You are not to be put at risk for any reason. My shield stays in place until this is over.”

“Aricia! For'mya! He is our son and we know what he is capable of!” Anja barked from beside Nilantha’s inert body. “Martin is almost here! Let our son do what he was born for and help me with Nilantha!”

Aricia and For'mya made the decision instantly. Anja’s words rang true in their ears and both of them knew their son and their beloved husband and mate were never truly alone. Both of them moved to where Anja knelt.

“Lift her legs!” Anja spoke quickly. “The bullets did massive damage to her internal chest area and we have to keep her blood circulating there while I repair the damage!”

Sehri smiled once more as Aricia and For'mya complied. “As his beloved mothers, you know the truth within you. Androcles is never alone.”

As if to emphasize that very point, they heard to unmistakable trumpet of Elynth entering the battle beside her Bonded brother.

They did not need to talk to one another to know what each other would do. This was something that they had never needed. They saw with each other’s eyes. They felt with each other’s emotion. They thought with each other's minds. Elynth had leaped away from his mothers to curl around the interior of the Atrium above, waiting while her Bonded Brother easily dispatched the first half dozen assassins with barely any effort.

Together they saw the others beginning to recover and the same thought that had crossed Andro's mind went through her mind at the identical instant, prompting Elynth to act. As she saw Andro leap for the shattered remains of the Atrium wall with a commanding thrust of his wings, Elynth dove into the battle.

Their only thought now was to get away from the beast that was killing them. They had never seen or experienced anything like what was happening. Rylin had told them it would be easy to dispatch a few women then escape into the mountains to where their ship was hidden. A ship that would return them to the home they had been away from for far too many years. Until this very moment, none of them believed that they could fail.

They never truly understood how wrong they were.

The shockwave had sent them hurtling toward the now shattered wall of the Atrium and all of them had landed painfully. One of them had a broken leg he was certain, the lower portion of his right leg bent at an odd angle, but he was struggling to get to his feet.

"We must go!" Another shouted.

"Rylin is still in there!" the second barked out as he came to his feet.

"Nubou Rylin!" The man screamed. "That is not some simply pure blood in there! That monster is pure Mahanlo blood! He will carve us up and spit us out in pieces!"

"Rylin said that..."

The two men heard the screaming now and they turned to see the rabid Mahanlo Alpha grab the head of their cousin in his hands, their cousin's arm twisted and broken in an odd direction, blood spurting from the wound. They watched that Alpha drive his armored head forward into their cousin's face and the screaming stopped instantly and then that head turned slowly to look at them.

"Rylin is dead you fool!" The man screamed. "Or she will be soon! We must escape and inform Sama!"

"Help me!" The assassin with the crushed leg stammered out, holding out his hand.

"No... I think not!" The female voice spoke causing the two men standing to turn and their eyes went wide when they saw the Sphere with the glowing front white light. "Your doom is now upon you for attacking my family! The Reckoning is upon you!" Reva's voice boomed out.

They heard the trumpet now and whirled around once more as they saw the armored form of the dragon dropping from above. The obsidian and gold armor shimmered in the sunlight, even reflecting off of the black scaled portions of Onkmeti Naami armor. They could only stare in unabashed horror as Elynth dropped on them, her right talon landing on their cousin with the crippled leg. They heard his screams of agony for a split second as Elynth's four tons crushed his lower body with the ease of crushing a bug. They heard the crunch of his bones and the gurgling of his voice before all of that ended and they watched in horror as two of her four talons impaled the man on the ground beneath her foot. Blood exploded from his mouth as it opened in silent agony and they saw the life leave his eyes instantly.

Neither of them had time to act as Elynth leaned over and snatched the second one up in her forward arm like talons and with a savage trumpet of retribution, Elynth simply torn him completely in half, tossing aside his remains like so much trash. The three shots rang out, all three rounds expertly striking Elynth in the head. This gave her a moment of epic pause only because she had to stare at the man in disbelief at his final actions. He was holding the weapon at her with wide eyes, unable to fully comprehend that his shots had only focused the anger within Elynth to extreme portions.

"Fool man!" Elynth screamed the words to the shocked expressions of the man before her and all those who were watching and were within ear shot of her voice.

Which were hundreds.

"You attack the mothers of the Orwara Indalfrid!" Elynth screamed out once more. "You attack Mahanlo blood! My blood! You attack my Bonded brother! Now you pay the price for your foul actions!" (Crown Prince)

Elynth opened her maw, exposing her razor-sharp dragon teeth, and she let rip with a stream of flame tinged, superheated breath as intense as she could possibly make it. Her Etheric power, because of her connection to Androcles and because of the Dahakoan blood within her, allowed her to focus her stream far more than she had ever been able to before. As hundreds of men and women watched with wide, horrified and amazed eyes, Elynth simply burned the Arhtai Pack assassin to smoking ash in front of her. It took only seconds with the intensity of the nearly four-thousand-degree burst, but when she ceased, nothing remained on the blackened ground but that ash.

“NO! You will not!!”

Elynth’s head snapped around when she heard Androcles’ voice thunder above the sounds all around her.

Androcles landed right where he wanted, atop one of the assassins as he was trying to get to his feet. All two hundred and twenty pounds of his tightly packed, muscular form landed directly on the man’s back, crushing his spine and sending him back down with a scream of intense pain.

The other two remaining assassins turned to watch in horror as Androcles stepped off of the man, bent over slowly, lifted his head by his hair and then rammed his face back into the hard, broken surface of the ground with enough force to snap his neck with an audible pop and crush half of his skull and cease his cries of agony. He rose back up and stared at the two men, those glowing azure blue orbs terrifying them. Androcles knew instantly what they intended and his hands dropped to either side of his Herald armor. From recessed slots, much like those that held Cano and Saar, Andro took his two Dragon Armor forged Glaives and with a forward snap of his arms, he sent those two blades whipping forward.

The man closest to him was the one to receive the full force of the attack. One Glaive simply curled inward and chopped his legs out from under him, easily slicing through his lower legs as if they were simple pieces of meat. As he was falling, unable to even scream out his agony the second Glaive slashed across his throat, opening a four-inch-deep cut that fountained blood at an explosive rate as what remained of his body fell to the ground minus his lower legs. The last assassin watched as those Glaives returned to Andro’s hands and he prepared to throw them again. He turned to run, fear gripping him, but he stopped instantly when he saw the towering Lycavorian in black and crimson body armor standing in his way, the large barrel of the wicked looking assault rifle staring at the center of his chest.

“There is no running from justice dog! Not today! Not ever!” Jomann snarled viciously from under his helmet, his own dual wolf fangs exposed for all to see. It had taken some time because of the pureness of his own just realized blood from another bloodline, but the Mahanlo blood within Eliani Leonidas was still as pure as it got, and he had watched as the dual fangs marking their family bloodline grew in over time until they were now part of him as well.

Jomann would come to discover in the future that his love and desire of Eliani Leonidas and Brendi Faith was matched by only one other who bore the bloodline of Kirek within them. An ancestor he would come to regard as a second father in the years to come as he learned of his true Pack’s history and lineage.

The Arhtai assassin looked quickly to his left and right and saw several others wearing this strange armor begin to make themselves seen through the crowd of men and women who were gathered. Men and women were quickly backing away from these armored figures, fear and awe in their eyes. Not one of these new figures had any sort of mercy in their eyes for him. His eyes grew even wider when he saw two individuals step from around the crowd of people, huge wings attached to their shoulders and backs and wearing the Arwa rie Vada Tarivuos. One was obviously female from the way the armor conformed to her lithe figure, and the other was male based on his muscular definition. Neither of them had an ounce of pity in their multi-colored blue eyes that stared at him without mercy.

He did the only thing that he could think of and he stepped to the side and snatched the small child from the Lycavorian mother who had made the mistake of being too close to him. He wrenched the screaming child into his hands and whirled back to face Androcles.

“I will kill the whelp!” He shouted.

“NO! You will not!!” Androcles bellowed loudly. “Cowen!” He shouted as he looked up.

All eyes followed his and the Jetania Lycavorians now saw the large ship holding station directly above them with what appeared to be a ramp down in the rear. A huge man, definitely one that was not a Lycavorian, could be seen sitting on the ramp and holding a huge rifle and it was pointed straight down.

“I have him Andro!” Cowen Shan’s voice echoed in Andro’s ear piece implant.

Andro dropped to one knee instantly and reached out with his Etheric power, ripping the small girl from the man’s arms and pulling her across the ten meters that separated them into his waiting embrace. He whirled around to face away, his wings wrapping around himself and the small girl in case the man was good enough to get off a shot or two.

“Take him!” Andro barked.

It turns out the man wasn’t even close.

The instant Cowen saw the girl leave his grasp, he was pulling the trigger. As Andro’s words echoed, Cowen fired one round. The large caliber, explosive tipped round entered just above the assassin’s right cheekbone, penetrated a quarter of an inch and then blew his head apart like an overripe melon.

“Perfect my love!” Sherice announced from beside him and she leaned over to kiss his lightly furred cheek as Jomann and Kalis rushed forward below towards Andro. Dorian and Laren also moved from either side of the assassin, their wings fully unfurled, Ryner and Ladur right behind them, causing men and women to scramble frantically to get out of the way.

Androcles waited for a split second and then rose back to his feet holding the small child in his arms. She was gazing at him in awe with wide blue eyes and he smiled down at her through the armor of his helmet.

“You are safe now little one.” Andro told her and he saw her smile and jump up to throw her arms around his neck and squeeze tightly.

Andro smiled in returned and squeezed her gently as her mother rushed over to where he stood. She hesitated as she saw those huge wings unfurl even more but then Andro was holding her daughter out to her.

“She is unhurt.” Andro spoke. “I must apologize to you for what has happened.”

The young mother held her daughter tightly while she stared at the armored man before her with wide eyes. She saw Dorian and Laren move closer and then she turned back to Androcles.

“You are... you are the Tarivuos!” She gasped aloud causing everyone in the area to also begin to whisper in awe. “Vada Tarivuos rie vada Mard Revik!” (The Heralds of the True King)

Andro tilted his head and hundreds of gasps followed as they watched his armored cowl and helmet retract, as did Dorian and Laren’s.

Andro shook his head slowly. “That is what we are called... yes.” He answered her. “Today however... today I am just a son of my father.”

“The True King is here!” A voice echoed from the crowd as they pressed closer.

Andro felt his father within him and what was currently happening. He nodded his head but did not stop looking at the women. “He is here, yes. Though, at the moment, he is slightly busy dispensing justice to those who wished my family harm.”

With that Androcles turned, his massive wings curling tighter to his back and shoulders and he made his way back into the now destroyed Atrium, Dorian, Laren, Jomann and Kalis directly behind him.

There was a god Rylin thought as she rolled over painfully on the ground from where that Mahanlo monster’s unearthly power had tossed her and two of the others a second time. Had she known what awaited her, Rylin would have wished for death.

She glanced back and saw Androcles tearing into the others of her Pack and the two men who had landed near her. She began to struggle to get to her feet.

“We must go!” She screamed out.

“Rylin! The others!” One of them men rasped out the words as he got to his own feet.

“They are dead now!” Rylin shouted. She turned and saw the maintenance door only a few meters away. “We must get away and inform my mother of what has happened! She must know that the descendants of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo live! That they are alive and...”

Rylin was staring at the two men with her when she suddenly saw their chests explode in a shower of blood and flesh. She stood there frozen in terrible horror as their blood splashed wetly onto her chest and face. She could only watch as their bodies were lifted completely off the ground and blown back some half a dozen meters, huge, gaping holes in the center of their chests. It was only a split second but Rylin was able to see completely through their bodies to area behind them as large as the holes in their chests were. Their large bodies landed not far away unceremoniously and were still.

Rylin felt it then. The absolutely staggering aura of an Alpha wolf more powerful than any she had ever encountered in her long life.

Roeza Arhtai was nearing a million and a half years of life now and she had seen much in that time. Her mother was even older, being only a few decades old when they left Cerath all those millennia ago. Roeza Arhtai had grown up hating the Mahanlo bloodline and all it stood for because of her mother Sama and her teachings. The Arhtai Pack history of the Purge of the Mahanlo Bloodline was well known within the Arhtai Pack, though very one sided in how it was told. The ensuing years after the initial purge where most of them were killed was taught in their schools on Koltar Four. Those following years were filled with small and violent pitched battles against the Kelia Mahanlo and the Kirek Pack until their moment had come and they had captured Kelia Mahanlo in a particularly vicious battle that saw the death of all but six of her children.

Rylin had happily volunteered for this mission with her mother to insure that the Mahanlo bloodline was truly gone and destroyed. They had no way of knowing about Daniho and Ashten and after so many years had passed without communication with them, it was naturally assumed that they had perished by similar means, since this had been the plan all along by the different Packs when they had left Cerath.

Something must have gone wrong.

They were here now. Something must have gone terribly wrong and she needed to warn her mother so that she could get word back to Koltar Four.

Rylin had never felt such power within a bloodline before as she felt within that monster who was tearing through her men and her cousins. Kelia Mahanlo was the most powerful female she had ever felt before, the scent and aura of her bloodline terrifying to be around, but this man and the one she felt getting closer surpassed even that. Her blood detector had not stopped going off, the insistent noise driving her mad and she ripped it from her clothes and threw it as far away as she could as the bodies of her two cousins rested on the ground.

She needed to get away.

Rylin turned without thinking and began to run.

She got four steps before her head came up and she ran full tilt into the huge armor figure standing in front of her. Rylin hit the unmoving figure with such force it staggered her back and she fell on her ass, her eyes wide as she looked up. She opened her mouth to snap at the figure thinking it was another of her cousins and the words died in her throat at the sight before her.

The towering, muscular figure was adorned in dull silver Onkmeti Naami armor. It was unmistakable to those who knew what it was, and Rylin was one of those people. The silver scaled armor, black in some portions conformed to the figure before her like a second skin, the full helmet covering all but the smallest portions around his mouth and eyes. Rylin could see the savage dual wolf fangs that marked the Mahanlo bloodline and then she saw the yellow gold wolf eyes that gazed upon her with utter contempt and savage anger. She saw the head of the massive black furred wolf with yellow gold eyes adorned on the figure's waist and the massive depiction of the dragon across the broad chest armor that glittered in the sunlight. And then Rylin saw the massive armored and dull silver scaled wings extend outward from the figure's shoulders and back slowly and her eyes grew even wider in disbelief and horror.

Vada Arwa rie vada Mard Revik.

The armor that Daniho Mahanlo would not wear. The armor that many among the Arhtai Pack had searched for fruitlessly before leaving Cerath, just as they had searched for the armor of The Heralds. Everyone knew the Onab had created them, but no one knew where they had been stored. Now Rylin knew, for the figure before her was wearing it.

Rylin looked at the armored helmet, saw those eyes gazing upon her with intense hatred. "Vada Arwa rie vada Mard Revik!" She gasped finally, unable to really find anything else to say. Rylin saw Lasun and Garget appear from behind that huge wing span, their faces neither happy to see her or very friendly. “Garget! Lasun! Help me!” She barked out. “This... this monster’s men are killing...”

“BE SILENT WOMAN!” Garget Ranev screamed out the words shocking her into silence.

Garget and Lasun had not left the side of their King since returning from the wondrous ship above and in the few moments that they had been back on the surface running towards the battle, their King had etherically passed to them all that he knew had taken place in the past. The amount of information was enormous to say the least, and their Etheric ability was not as evolved as his own, but the connection he established to them as they ran beside the massive black wolf had been complete. To them he had shared all he had discovered, all of their history in these last few days and weeks and months. All of the questions he had as a boy growing up about who he was. What he was. He had shared it all with them and in doing so he had earned their undying trust and commitment.

Martin Mahanlo Leonidas stared down at Rylin’s shocked face, the anger burning within him as it burned brightly within his first-born son and the rest of his family. The intensity for him however was a hundred-fold for so many different reasons. He knew exactly what had taken place, every word that had been spoken, and every sorry bastard that Andro and Elynth had killed. This woman however, this woman was far greater a prize than anything he had yet learned and he had every intention of discovering all that she knew.

As well as the upaee who was her mother.

“You and your mother have much to answer for Roeza Arhtai.” Martin growled out the words. “Vada voray rie Cerath coi dangua niob!” Martin snarled viciously in a loud voice that caused Rylin’s blood to go cold. “Una coi vada daanth rie toniru!”

Rylin heard the scream of absolute rage and her head whipped around as she saw the last remaining member of her cousins come rushing forward from the side door of the maintenance corridor. He was the youngest of those sent to Jetania and had been securing their exit out of the building. Rylin watched as Martin lifted his hand and she saw the body of her cousin wrenched from his running feet and then he was suspended beside Martin, that armored hand clenched around his throat and beginning to squeeze with greater strength. Martin wasn’t even trying hard as he held the young wolf twelve inches off the ground and he looked back to Rylin gazing up at him with wide, terrified eyes.

“You and your vile bloodline made one mistake!” Martin growled out the words to her. “One mistake or you might have succeeded in your nefarious intentions! That mistake will cost you and your pack everything! Including your lives!”

“No!” Rylin screamed just before Martin turned his head and looked at the face of the young man he held in his iron like grip.

Martin lifted his left hand and called forth his Etheric knife. It extended from his fist as Rylin looked on with horror and then he plunged it into the soft underside of the man’s jaw. His eyes went wide in horrific pain for a split second and then Martin solidified the Etheric knife as it was buried in his skull. Rylin could only watch in sadistic fascination as the young man’s leg twitched madly, suspended off the ground as he was by Martin’s right hand. This went on for several seconds until Martin withdrew the Etheric knife and his body was still. Martin Mahanlo Leonidas then channeled all his rage and hurled the body away from him with such force, it struck the wall ten meters away with a sickening sound of bones shattering and internal organs popping. Rylin still watched as the broken body fell to the floor then, all life gone from the still open eyes. She felt movement and turned her head quickly back as Martin squatted down in front of her and she watched fascinated still as the Onkmeti Naami helmet began to recede from his head exposing the still yellow old eyes and the bearded face of the...

...The Mahanlo Mard Revik.

Roeza Arhtai lost control of her bladder then as she stared into the face of a long thought dead hero of the Lycavorian people.

Daniho Mahanlo this was not, Rylin thought to herself in some obscure portion of her brain. No matter that he was an unmistakable descendant, this man was something far, far worse.

“The Time of Reckoning is here.” Martin Mahanlo Leonidas spoke the words one last time before he sent his armored fist smashing into her face with enough force to snap her head down and watching as it bounced painfully off the floor and dropped her instantly in blackness.

It was Lasun that moved closer now. “My... my King.” He spoke softly as Martin stared at the woman’s limp body. “These words you speak. What... what do they mean?”

Martin rose to his feet slowly and looked at him as his eyes returned to normal. “I don’t know Lasun.” He said honestly. “I feel... I feel within me somehow that they were spoken a long time ago by my ancestor. In another place. In another time. Another war.” Martin said.

Martin looked at Rylin’s inert form one last time before allowing his eyes to gaze out into the shattered remains of the Atrium building. He could feel the auras of his beloved wives calling to him like never before.

“We must get a handle on this before it gets out of control my friends.” Martin spoke turning to look at them. “This is not the way we wanted to greet our people here, but now we must regain control. Take her somewhere and lock her up. And have that scum Juyno Aspion secured with her. He does not deserve to be in a hospital.”

“We will see to it.” Garget spoke moving forward now.

Martin nodded his head and then flexed his wings out wide to the sides. “The Time of Reckoning is upon us.” He spoke once more. “And we will unite our people once more.”

Martin then launched himself into the air towards where he felt Aricia, Anja and For'mya and his wings quickly carried him away.

Garget turned to Lasun then. “Lasun my friend...” He began.

Lasun met his eyes and nodded his head. “Our future just became so much brighter my friend.” He finished Garget’s statement. “So much brighter indeed.”

CHAPTER SEVENTY

JETANIA

SPARTAN’S SOUL

“Jaban!” Danny barked as he came to his feet. He could feel his brother within him, feel the rage and hate within him and Androcles. Anuk, Kesyla and Nayeca watched him with wide, worried eyes as he spun around and faced the Lycavorian Captain who had commanded his ship since its commissioning. “Something is going down on the surface! Report!”

“The ARIZONA just launched six squadrons!” Jaban exclaimed in return. “I am ordering our fighters to launch as well! First Echelon is moving into position and Second Echelon is spreading out to cover our flanks! Armen had just ordered the Durcunusaan Ready Detachment to deploy under Spartan Crimson Protocols!”

Anuk stepped closer to her husband and reached up to touch his arm. She could sense his unease and concern for Daniel never held back from her or Nayeca. “Daniel what is it?” She asked softly.

Danny turned to face her, his ebony skin tense and Anuk reached for his face as Nayeca and Kesyla moved closer as well and put their hands on his arm. “I don’t know.” He answered her instantly. “Something is happening on the surface and whatever it is, Andro and Martin both just went ballistic.”

Anuk and Nayeca knew their husband as well as they knew themselves and his love for Martin was absolute. Kesyla was discovering this as well now, as Anuk and Nayeca often spoke of what the two men had done in the years before. Daniel had blood brothers from his parents that he loved, sisters too, and Martin had half siblings from Gorgo and Riall, but Martin had been and always would be Daniel’s one true brother. Their bond had been forged through the fire of combat and so much more that others would never understand, and now that bond of brotherhood would never be torn asunder. Both Daniel’s and Martin’s brothers and sisters accepted this and relished in it, for they had had many times through the last years just sitting with Daniel and Martin and listening to them tell stories of their adventures together.

“Trust in your fervon Daniel.” Anuk told him. “Do what we came here to do, just as you and Martin discussed. He is not alone Daniel our love. He is never alone.”

Danny met her cerulean blue eyes and calmed instantly as both Anuk and Nayeca pulsed him with their female wolf auras. Kesyla was still learning how to use her wolf aura but she added her own developing aura to theirs and he looked lovingly first at Nayeca's amber colored eyes and then at Kesyla's dark eyes and he nodded his head.

"Jaban?" Daniel spoke turning to look at him.

"General?" The man answered.

"Let's stick with the plan!" Danny said confidently. "Martin can't talk to the douche bag on the station, so we'll talk to him instead. Open a channel and get me whoever is in charge over there."

"What do we tell them?" Jaban asked with a crooked smile.

"Tell them if they do not stand down in the next twenty seconds, I'm going to blow that station and every ship in this system right straight to nubous oblivion." Danny spoke.

Jaban's smile grew ever larger. "COM Officer!" He shouted. "Find the channel they are on and let's say hello!"

COALITION MILITARY COMMAND STATION

"Coya... talk to me!" Ristan barked aloud.

"Multiple contacts sir!" She cried out from her station. "Sensors are detecting over two hundred ships Colonel!" Her hands were moving across her sensor consoles with speed and efficiency, but her heart was racing out of control to be sure. "Sibfla! Some of them are huge! Four thousand meters at least! Unknown power signatures, but definitely Quantum based!"

"Colonel! We are also picking up dozens of smaller contacts leaving one of the larger ships!" Benic barked from where he stood beside Coya's sensor station. "Fast moving sir! One man fighter ships of some kind!"

"Fighters?!" Ristan gasped. "Impossible!"

"Station defenses can't track them, sir!" Benic announced just as loudly. "They are too fast and they are spreading out among the Home Defense Fleet!"

"The other ships are deploying as well!" Coya shouted. "Some sort of attack formation maybe!"

"What about that big fucker?" Ristan barked. "Tell me about that big bastard! What is it doing?"

Coya shook her head. "Nothing sir!" She answered. "Strange power emissions but it is remaining in stationary orbit. Sensors cannot penetrate the outer hull sir! Of any of the ships! It's made from some sort of metal I have never seen before! Its current orbital position puts it directly over the Mountain Pack settlement of Warim."

"Colonel! HDF Captains are screaming for orders!" Benic shouted. "Do they attack!"

Ristan's eyes went wide. "Attack!? Attack what!? Fuck no!" He screamed. "Do they see what is around us?!" Ristan whirled around. "Get me King Osrod! Contact Ground Command! Do it now!" He barked at the COM officer.

"Colonel!" Coya shouted. "Colonel I am detecting two smaller ships maneuvering in the atmosphere above Warim! Some kind of transports I think!"

"Nubou!" Ristan snarled. "They have already landed troops! Activate all planetary units! Bring defenses online! We..."

All of them heard the pop on the internal speakers within the command center and they looked up as the deep, male voice echoed all around them. "I would not do that if I was you." The voice spoke. "Not if you want to be alive thirty seconds from now!"

"Colonel they have tapped our COMs!" The COM officer rasped out the words. "All of our secure channels are compromised!"

Ristan's eyes were wide. "How is that possible?" He gasped.

Everyone nearly jumped out of their chairs when the intense flash of white light erupted in the center of their command center and then they were staring at the image of the tall, ebony skinned Lycavorian. His short black hair was neatly cut, the thin beard and mustache neatly trimmed and groomed. He was easily six and a half feet tall from what Ristan could determine and he was without a doubt an Alpha wolf. His dark eyes were bright though and his long wolf fangs were fully extended and exposed for all to see.

“What... what is this?” Benic gasped in shock.

“It’s... it’s some sort of holo transmission!” Coya gasped in reply to his question. “But the power needed to...”

“Colonel Ristan!” Another voice yelled now. “Destroyer Four One Three is powering its weapons and preparing to fire on...!”

“No!” Ristan screamed out the word.

It was too late however as they saw the COLS ship alter its course slightly and unleash a full barrage of its missiles and beam weapons upon the SPARTAN’S SOUL. The man in the holo transmission staggered only slightly in the transmission, obviously onboard the ship they had just fired upon and his face took on an immediate expression of anger and disbelief.

“Wen forn nubous neshy lae?!” The man snarled viciously. (Are you fucking kidding me)

“No! Wait! We...!” Ristan began to shout the words but it was already too late as they watched the large Lycavorian turn in the transmission.

“Target that pathetic bucket of floating fucking bolts and blow it out of the stars!” Danny growled.

The Command Crew of the MCS could only watch and listen in horror as voices in the background of this new ship responded instantly.

“Main starboard batteries six through fourteen!” The voice out of their view barked out the order.

“Target the enemy ship and fire!”

Ristan and the others on the MCS could only watch in stunned shock as one of the largest ships outside of the behemoth in orbit above their planet, fired nine beams of intense white light that crossed the distance from them to the COLS Destroyer in the blink of an eye. All nine of the MK9C Type 1 Alpha Series Batteries, as well as those remaining on the ship, had been upgraded to fire Quantum Particle Beams much like those weapons that armed SPARTA’S WRATH. The SPARTAN’S SOUL was part of the first stage of a massive refit going on back home that Martin and Ben had approved several months ago, and which would eventually see every ship within the Union military armed with such weapons as long as they were powered by the newer Hypermatter Fusion Drives. The Hypermatter Fusion Drives were a step down from the Quantum Resonance Reactors that powered the new ARIZONA-Class ships, but they vastly improved the ships being refitted. While they were no where near as powerful and devastating as the pure Quantum Beam Arrays on SPARTA’S WRATH, or the arrays on the ARIZONA class ships, but they were certainly much more powerful than anything that COLS possessed.

By roughly a hundred-fold.

The six-hundred-meter-long COLS Destroyer that had stupidly fired on SPARTAN’S SOUL really had no chance at all. The QPBs, as they had affectionately been nicknamed by the crews of the refitted ships, punched right through the lightly shielded COLS Destroyer and blew huge, gaping chunks out of the COLS Destroyer’s hull as if it was made from glass. Massive internal explosions could be seen even with the naked eye from the MCS and Ristan and the Command Crew could only gawk in terrified response as one of their newest and most modern fleet ships was erased from existence in the single blink of an eye.

“Son vada carians!” Coya muttered softly, but loud enough that her voice unintentionally carried across most of the Command Center.

Ristan was staring at the figure of the Lycavorian in the transmission and his eyes went wide when he spoke next.

“Admiral Lorian are you monitoring?” Danny spoke.

“Affirmative General.” Manda’s voice replied instantly.

As far as anyone within the Union military was concerned, Daniel Simpson was the third most powerful man alive when it came to giving orders, behind only Martin and Fleet Admiral Riall. His orders were acted upon without hesitation or question no matter where he went, and while like his mard fervon, Daniel hated such unflinching loyalty, he knew exactly how to use it when it was needed.

“Manda, prepare to clean out this system.” Danny spoke angrily. “On my order, you and your ships will begin exterminating every one of these ugly ass ships until none remain. Is that order clear?”

“Crystal.” Miranda answered from the bridge of the ARIZONA. “Establishing all primary and secondary targeting solutions as we speak!”

“Wait!” Ristan screamed as he stepped towards the transmission. “Wait!”

Danny's eyes turned to look at him. "You got something to say midaeus?" He growled.

"We did not... I did not order that!" Ristan pleaded. "The ship's... the ship's captain acted on his own!"

"So, you don't have control of your own ships?" Danny snapped. "A better reason to kill them all and then we won't have to worry about them doing something stupid!"

"No!" Ristan screamed out the words. "We... we surrender! We surrender!" His words caused most of his Command crew to turn and stare at him in shock.

"I don't want your surrender!" Danny snarled now. "We didn't come here to conquer or invade igord!"

Ristan's eyes were wide. "What... what do you want?!" He gasped.

"I'll give you ten minutes!" Danny snapped. "Order every one of your puny little ships to power down their weapons and engines! Nothing but life support active! If you don't, then in ten minutes and one second, we are going to kill them all! Including that fugly station you are standing on right now!"

Ristan looked at him with wide eyes. "I have... there are almost ten thousand men and women on this station!" He gasped.

"And their blood will be on your hands! Just like those fools on that ship!" Danny barked loudly.

"I must contact my... my King!" Ristan declared. "He is on the surface and..."

"Don't push me asshole! My patience is really thin right now because your fool people have already attacked my fervon and his family on the surface of your stinking planet! Your people have attacked our King and three of his Queens! Our family! That means every one of my people up here right now wants to rip you and your silly toy ships a new asshole the size of Mount motherfucking Rushmore! Ten minutes! That is how long you have to decide if you live or die!"

The transmission ended and the holoimage disappeared from the open area in the MCS leaving the entire Command crew stunned in to silence.

Ristan turned quickly. "Get me Ground Command!" He screamed. "Get me King Osrod! Now!"

SPARTAN'S SOUL

Danny turned from the now ended transmission and looked at Jaban. "That convincing enough?" He questioned.

"Sibfla General!" Jaban answered. "It scared the piss out of me."

Danny cursed under his breath. "How many on that ship?" He asked after a moment.

Jaban sobered quickly and his smile vanished. "Sensors indicated eighty-seven General." He replied. "Daniel... you did the only thing you could do."

Danny met his gaze and slowly nodded his head. Captain Jaban Velat had turned down four promotions in order to remain in command of SPARTAN'S SOUL in the nearly thirty years since it was brought into service. Command of the Flagship for Daniel Simpson was status enough for any older Lycavorian such as himself. He was happy, his wife and mate was happy, and they had built a family on this ship that included not only their own children, but every one of the crew. Through the years Jaban had become one of a handful of men and women within the Union who would dare call Danny by his given name. It was something that Danny all but demanded of the much older man and they had grown close through the years. Jaban did not normally refer to Danny by his name in front of the crew, but now it seemed like a good idea, and it had the desired effect even though Daniel's wives and mates were also on the bridge.

Danny took a deep breath and nodded his head. "Talk to me." He finally spoke.

"Armen began transmitting the moment we entered the system." Jaban replied. "We have been getting all of the information that he was able to scan since they arrived. Public channels. Military channels. Defenses. Everything."

"Threat?" Danny asked.

Jaban shook his head. "Minimal." He answered. "Their weapons didn't even scratch our shields. Hopefully they'll take that into account."

Danny moved to his Command chair which rested right beside Jaban's chair in the center of the bridge. He tapped a button on the armrest and instantly a holoimage of Miranda came alive a few feet to his left. All Command Ships of the fleet were linked in such a way so that the commanders could instantly talk to one another. He turned to face Miranda's image fully. She was also sitting in her command chair on the bridge of the ARIZONA while activity was high all around her.

"Manda?" He spoke.

"I've deployed my Wing into Attack Formation Gamma." She answered him instantly meeting his gaze in the transmission. "Steven is now airborne with six full squadrons keeping them honest. For the most part none of their ships are moving. Long range sensors are showing an additional nineteen COLS ships that have turned around and are heading back this way."

"How soon before they get here?" Danny asked.

Miranda shook her head. "Not soon enough to change the outcome Daniel." She told him. "Nineteen hours even at their best speed, and that is factoring in how often they can jump."

Kesyra Simpson was still a new wolf and was still learning different things. Her love for Daniel, Anuk and Nayeca was beyond question, and she simply adored being able to shift her form and see and sense the world from her wolf persona, but she was still half Pralor and the benevolence of her people caused her to step forward before Anuk or Nayeca could stop her. She had not yet fully come to understand the mentality or the Spartan nature of the Lycavorian people she was now living among. No one faulted her for this for she was learning fast with so many helping her.

"Daniel, you cannot..." Kesyra began as she stepped up to him. "They cannot stand against us. Destroying their..."

Daniel met her dark eyes and smiled at her warmly while Anuk and Nayeca stepped up to her on either side and attempted to interrupt her. Daniel reached up and caressed her flawless cheek and pulsed her with a fraction of his male aura. He saw Kesyra's eyes close briefly in bliss and she reached up to put her hand on top of his where his skin touched her cheek as her eyes opened again. Daniel stepped close to her, towering over her five foot six body, and he leaned over to kiss her ever so softly on the lips.

"You worry too much." He said softly.

Kesyra looked instantly embarrassed by what she had said, but this quickly passed as Anuk and then Nayeca wrapped their arms around her waist and drew her tightly to them. Kesyra should have known better and the look on her face said as much. Warriors without equal they may have been, but these men and women were not butchers.

"Carians. Forgive me." Kesyra said softly.

Danny shook his head. "For what?" He said softly. He leaned over once more and kissed her again softly, a kiss that she returned and he let his fingers drag along her jawline as he had discovered she liked so much. Daniel smiled at her lovingly once more and then turned back to the image of Miranda. "Manda, you got your targets?"

Miranda nodded her head. "Each of their ships has a central power distribution core in roughly the same location. A low power laser will cut right through their hulls and destroy it. Main power on all the ships will be kaput and their backups will kick in. The only thing they'll be able to power is life support and sensors. Zaala says their back-up generators can't handle anything else."

Daniel nodded his head. "Casualties?" He asked.

"Unless they are standing right next to the power core when the laser hits it, low grade electrical burns, if that." Miranda answered him. "It's about as non-lethal as we can get Daniel. It will take us three minutes to retune our main batteries."

"Do it!" Danny ordered. "Jaban?"

"Already on it." Jaban echoed.

"Good. Now, someone get me a report from the surface!" Danny snapped. "And please tell me that our family and friends are ok. If not... all bets are fucking off."

JETANIA
CAPITAL OF DRINDA
COLS MILITARY COMMAND CENTER

“Talk to me!” Osrod Aspion roared as he entered the MCC. He was not in a very good mood at all and everyone in the MCC Operations Center knew it.

The Duty Officer had interrupted his time with Nitona and right now he was not a happy person. Secha kept his other Queens so busy at times that Osrod finally determined that she was doing it on purpose. Secha could be a colossal upae when she wanted to be, more so towards Nitona than the others. Nitona was half Mountain Pack female. Her father was a Plains Pack Alpha who had claimed Nitona’s mother long ago. Her mother’s Mountain Pack had refused to acknowledge the union, but against their wishes, Nitona’s mother had escaped with her father for she was truly in love with him. Nothing could really be done about this since she had gone willingly, and they soon began their life on the outskirts of Drinda. Nitona’s father was a well-respected Alpha who held a good amount of influence among his Pack. He treated Nitona’s mother like a precious gem and as time passed, their love for each other grew even stronger. Nitona’s mother also clung to her Mountain Pack upbringing, which did not make her any new friends at first, but over time this attitude and her commitment had earned her equal respect and influence and soon her status had grown within Kochar Plains Pack to the point that she was now considered sacrosanct among the Kochar Pack. Over the many years, the Kochar Pack had become more and more aligned with the ways of the Mountain Packs and while they did not follow all of their traditions, the Kochar Pack was as close as you could get. Nitona had seven older brothers and three older sisters, making her their youngest child, but certainly the most rooted to the Mountain Pack way of life like her mother. All of her siblings adhered to many of the Mountain Pack ways and their father encouraged this without question.

The day Osrod had seen her in the Drinda markets he knew he had to have her. Her surreal beauty was nearly equal to that of Loras Ranev with her flowing red hair and enticing blue eyes and her sweet scent was nearly too much for him to be around. Nitona quickly caused him to forget all about Loras and even though she was his youngest Queen in terms of years, Osrod favored her over Secha and the others by far. Her body was lithe and muscular in a lean way and she kept herself in superb condition. He hated having to sneak around his own home in order to be with her for any length of time, but Nitona certainly made it worth it. She was not docile by any means, always demanding his attention when they were together in bed and very willing herself to return that attention to him. Even her fear of Secha discovering them did not keep her from seeing him whenever they could manage it. Osrod knew Secha could be a very vindictive bitch, and he always took extra security precautions when meeting Nitona in order to keep her safe from Secha’s wrath. Osrod Aspion did not know how to explain it to himself let alone anyone else, but he was a different person when in Nitona’s arms, and this made him feel good about himself.

Osrod did not care very much for the mother of seven of his children. Secha was arrogant and rigid in her ways, and she treated him like he was beneath her. Secha however, she was incredibly smart, and she knew things that others did not, and Osrod normally let her advise him in many different matters. Osrod’s father had arranged the marriage and union between them without ever really telling him why it was so important, but Osrod did not care at the time. She was a beautiful wolf with a slightly odd scent, but she was definitely a trophy wife and mate, and at that time that was all he cared about. Secha took care of herself physically and her beauty had not faded over time, but even in the beginning Osrod knew there was something different about her that put him off.

Secha Aspion was not the most inventive female in their bed, in fact she was downright boring, nothing like Nitona, but she was dutiful. Osrod also knew that she could be very cruel to those she saw as a threat to her, and he had heard rumors of her wrath towards young females or even others who had gone against her will. Even his other Queens, Risi and Braaha had suffered her anger at different times.

Nitona he shielded as best as he was able however, and she remained docile to Secha as the senior Alpha female, though it was hard for her. Today had been planned by the two of them for weeks. Secha would be at the main Research Facility all day, for she was in charge of most of the scientific research done by their people. Risi and Braaha were going to be out of the city for a few days visiting their families, which left Nitona in the palace alone. They had fallen into each other’s arms happily, eagerly anticipating their hours together, but it wasn’t to be. After only a few passionate moments, their time together had been shattered and the Duty Officer came calling. Nitona had soothed his anger at the interruption with her touch and warm voice, promising even greater pleasures in the future. Today he needed to be King, she had told him before he had left her.

The MCC's Commander, a man with the same rank and status as Ristan stepped forward. "My Lord, just over four minutes ago, two hundred and sixty-nine unknown warships jumped directly into our Planetary Defense Grid without any warning!" The man spoke calmly. He was much like Ristan in that he was older and had seen many battles. Not much rattled him now and he was loyal to his people and his Pack. "We never saw them coming sire. At the exact same time that they appeared, the ship Captain Nasso reported encountering on patrol also appeared, already in orbit and directly over the Mountain Pack Settlement of Warim! The remaining ships match the configuration that Captain Nasso put in his report!"

Osrod looked at him with wide eyes. "What?" He gasped. "How is that possible? How did they get inside our defense grid?"

"We don't know My Lord." The Colonel answered him. Teech Rilton knew his King and how he thought. Osrod Aspion wanted facts and he wanted them up front, with no rensibfla. He sometimes did not make the best decisions with those facts, often times taking Queen Secha's advice over his military advisors, but as far as he was concerned Osrod was a decent leader and he knew they could do far worse. "Their Stealth technology is apparently far more advanced than we first thought."

Osrod moved to the main plot board and his eyes grew wide as he saw the number of red colored ships now, in and around his planet. And some of them were massive, easily dwarfing even their largest and most powerful cruisers. No foreign ships had ever gotten this close to Jetania in as long as he could remember. They were always seen coming and met before they ever got close to the Coalition's home world.

"They initiated contact with Colonel Ristan on the MCS my Lord, but..." Teech began but Osrod looked at him when he stopped.

"What?!" Osrod demanded.

"One of our Destroyers sire." Teech spoke. "Most of the crew was on shore leave and the Captain of the ship was meeting with other senior officers here on the surface. His First Officer was in command and he fired upon one of the unknown ships."

"He fired on them!" Osrod almost screamed. "Is he stupid! I want him arrested and..."

"He is dead sire." Teech told him shaking his head. "The ship he fired upon unleashed one volley King Osrod. And it was not even a full attack from what our sensors could see. Nine of their main batteries, out of the nearly one hundred that we think they could have used. The ship was obliterated completely. No survivors."

"Carians!" Osrod exclaimed.

"They spoke directly with Colonel Ristan my Lord." Teech told him. "He is standing by."

Osrod nodded his head instantly. "Put him up!"

Osrod turned to the massive main monitor in the room and watched as the picture of the man he knew and had appointed to command the MCS came onto the screen, fluttered and then cleared. Osrod knew something was wrong right away when he saw the harried expression on Ristan and the look of concern in his eyes. Osrod knew instinctively now was not the time to play hard ass King.

"Ristan... talk to me." Osrod spoke with more calm than he actually felt.

"They appeared out of nowhere my Lord." Ristan answered. "They jumped right into our Planetary Defense Grid with no warning and exacting precision. They appeared between and all around our ships in orbit as if it was the most natural thing in the world." Ristan reported to him quickly. "They have nearly a hundred smaller craft, fighters I believe, swarming all around our ships and my station.

"Fighters!" Teech exclaimed. "That is what they are? We thought they were drones of some kind!"

Ristan shook his head quickly. "They are definitely fighters! And whoever is flying them is very well trained. They are extremely fast and maneuverable and our guns cannot track them. We've detected at least two, possibly more, transport sized ships moving within the atmosphere above the Mountain Pack settlement of Warim as well."

"Warim! Are you certain?!" The female voice echoed now and all of them turned to see Secha strode into the center as if the world revolved around her. Osrod cursed under his breath but turned back to Ristan.

"Yes, my Queen." Ristan answered. "It appears they already have forces on the ground there. We don't know how many or what their purpose is."

"They are Lycavorian Ristan?" Osrod asked next.

Ristan nodded his head quickly. "Yes, my Lord. Alphas. At least the one who spoke to us was an Alpha. We saw other species on the bridge of his ship, some unlike anything I have ever seen before, but most were mainly Lycavorians.” He answered. “He was... he was a matus brutu ronnus. And after our ship fired on him he was rezza.” (Big black bastard) “Osrod... you must find out what is happening in Warim.” Secha spoke now.

Secha Aspion was a beautiful female Alpha, with long dark blond hair, bright dark eyes and a figure that still turned the heads of many male wolves within COLS. She was of medium height, with large, firm breasts and long legs. Most who were around her on a regular basis, especially those within the military branch of COLS, hated the woman. She was arrogant and looked down on all of them as if they were insects.

“Why?” Osrod demanded.

“Something happened at the Research Facility as I was leaving.” Secha told him, moving closer. “A boom of some sort and then a massive rush of air. Like a ship was leaving the area very quickly. It knocked many of us on the ground about strongly, and it was heading in the direction of Warim.”

“You saw nothing my Queen?” Teech asked.

Secha shook her head. “No, but you have said yourself that their Stealth technology is far better than our own. It had to be some sort of ship that low to the ground.” She told him. “What else could it be?”

“The Alpha that spoke to us...” Ristan began again. “He was definitely in command, at least of the ships up here, and he said that we had attacked their King and his family on the surface!” He told them.

“Attacked them?! On the surface!?” Osrod exclaimed. “What is he talking about?”

“Our son is in Warim Osrod.” Secha spoke now with a touch of concern in her voice.

“My Lord... he gave us ten minutes to power down all of our weapons in orbit.” Ristan spoke. “All of our ships are to go to Life Support only and the MCS is to power down all weapons and sensors.”

Osrod snarled for he did like to be given orders. “And if we do not?” He barked.

“He said he would order his ships to destroy our Home Defense Fleet and the MCS.” Ristan answered. “He was not making light of this sire.”

“Can we do nothing?!” Osrod asked now.

“My Lord, you can see the size of their ships.” Ristan spoke. “A full-frontal barrage by our destroyer with missiles and beams did not even scratch their defensive shields and they obliterated that fool in less than ten seconds. They have twenty-nine of the large ships in orbit now, sire. Each of them four thousand meters long or better. These ships alone could lay waste to our entire HDF. The other ships are not as large with the exception of the one that appears to be carrying these fighters, but I must assume they all have sufficient firepower to fulfill their threat.”

“You assume!” Secha demanded. “You say these are Lycavorians! They should bow to their rightful King! Did you demand that they do this?”

Ristan looked at her as if she was insane. “With respect Queen Secha...” Ristan spoke keeping his words controlled and even. “They say their King is already on the surface of our planet! Their largest ship is over twenty-one thousand meters long and it was completely hidden from our sensors until it chose to reveal itself! This happens to be the same ship that Captain Nasso’s report speaks of! You will forgive me my Queen, if I did not see the opportunity to negotiate from a position of strength!” Ristan finished his statement with an angry snarl.

Secha stepped forward, her own eyes changing to her wolf persona and her wolf fangs extending in anger. “You would do well to watch who you are speaking to Colonel!” She growled at him.

“I will be sure to remember that when my people and I are nothing but space dust!” He snarled right back unafraid of her.

“Enough Secha!” Osrod snapped at her causing Secha’s eyes to widen in shock at his reaction to her. “Ristan! You say they already have forces on the ground in Warim?”

“We know nothing for certain my King.” Ristan answered. “We detected ships in the atmosphere above Warim, and that big ronnus ship is holding station in a protective orbit over Warim. Other than that, we know nothing. Our agreement with the Mountain Packs does not allow our satellites to cover their settlements sire, as you know. And that big ship is somehow distorting what coverage we do have in the area.”

“Distorting how?” Osrod asked.

Ristan shook his head. “Unknown at this time sire. I have people up here working on it, but it seems to be some sort of low power disruption field. I have ordered ground forces into the area from the nearest garrison to compensate, but it will take them several hours to reach Warim using the Overland Tram system built by the Mountain Packs.”

“We will need their permission to disembark the Trams Sire.” Teech spoke now.

Osrod was silent for a moment and then nodded his head. “Ristan, do as this Alpha told you. Order all ships to power down to nothing but life support and...”

“Osrod you cannot bow to these unknown...” Secha began to protest but he whirled on her with anger, his own wolf eyes and fangs now exposed.

“I am King!” He bellowed. “Not you woman! I will not sacrifice our people in the name of vanity! Now be silent!” He turned back to Ristan. “Do as I order you Ristan.”

Ristan nodded his head. “As you order sire.”

“Which units are heading for Warim Teech?” Osrod asked.

“Ristan dispatched the 3rd and 9th Battalions of the Home Ground Regiment my Lord.” Teech answered.

Osrod nodded his head. They were men completely loyal to him and extremely well trained. “Monitor their progress and contact Garget Ranev. Instruct him that they will be entering Warim via the Tram and he will act in accordance with the Mutual Defense Pact that they signed and allow them to disembark and begin searching for this so-called King and his people already on the surface.” Osrod looked at Teech intently. “And find my son Juyno! He was in the city of Warim with others and I want to talk to him!”

Teech nodded his head. “Understood my Lord.”

Osrod turned and glanced at the Plot Board as Ristan’s image blinked off of the monitor above them. “Quietly activate all of our ground units and have them stand to Teech.” Osrod spoke to him calmly as he looked at the Plot Board intently now. “All sensitive material is to be secured and all Research and Military facilities are to go on full alert status as of right now.”

“Yes, sire.” Teech answered him.

“Prepare a full ground detachment for me.” Osrod snapped. “I’m going to Warim.”

“Sire, I do not recommend that!” Teech spoke. “We don’t know enough about...”

Osrod looked at him. “They are Lycavorians!” Osrod hissed loudly. “They will follow my orders as their King! I will deal with them if they do not!”

Teech bowed his head quickly and then watched Osrod turn and strode out of the Center with a purpose. Secha turned and followed him quickly, trying to keep up with his longer stride.

The Colonel turned and watched as his Second Officer moved up beside him.

“Sir?” He asked.

“Issue the King’s orders.” Teech told him.

“What are you thinking Colonel?” The younger man asked him.

Teech met his eyes. “What am I thinking? You see these ships above us Captain. If they already have forces on the ground and we did not know this...” He paused and shook his head. “I’m thinking that things as we know them are going to change very quickly Captain. And many of us are not going to like those changes.” He said softly. “Do as the King has ordered now.”

“Yes, sir!”

WARIM MEDICAL CENTER MAIN MOUNTAIN PACK MEDICAL FACILITY

It was named for Warim Ranev, just like the city that bore his name. To honor his legacy and his deeds. It was the most advanced medical facility among the many Mountain Packs and all of the Packs were represented here and used the facility.

At the moment, the Warim Medical Center was surrounded by nearly one thousand of the Durcunusaan Ready Division and nearly a dozen dragons. A full Security Brigade of the DRD had deployed with SPARTA'S WRATH and most of them were on the ground now and providing full security to the building that held nearly all of their Royal Family. Torma, Isheeni, Elynth, Anthar and Miath sat atop the ten-story building keeping watch of the surrounding area, while Majeir, Jeth, Tharua, Aurith and Aradace conducted long, lazy flyovers of the city and the surrounding area, often times coming in low to land and quickly switch with Ladur, Ryner, Jeru, Marux and Mara. The brothers Caydren and Cinol had parked themselves on the exterior of the main entrance to Warim Medical Center and were sitting with a dozen Durcunusaan, intently watching the men, women and children who were very quickly gathering all around. Hundreds if not thousands of Lycavorians from Warim were surrounding the building on three sides as word quickly spread throughout the large city of the battle that took place in the Atrium and the news that the one True King and his three Heralds had come. Most were equally as amazed as they saw the huge dragons that now circled the city or were set up on the outside of the building. They were mythical creatures from stories that all of them had been told by their parents as children, yet now they were not so mythical any longer.

The main lobby of the Medical Center was now a command post of sorts, Martin, Garget and Lasun standing in the waiting room as the portable holo disc in Martin's hand held the figure of the huge black skinned Lycavorian they had seen on the ship.

"...fucking kidding me?" Martin gasped as Danny filled him in on what had taken place. "What kind of fool fires on a ship five times its size?!"

Danny nodded his head. "That is what I said." He spoke. "I had to take the ship out fervon."

Martin shook his head. "You did what any of us would have done Dan." Martin said quickly.

"Well... it woke them up at least." Danny said. "I gave them ten minutes to power down their weapons and whatever passes for shields, and they started doing that about three minutes ago. They had ships inbound from other sectors but apparently, they have stopped and are holding their current positions according to Manda."

Martin nodded his head. "Leave things up there to Manda and Armen fervon. That is their business. I want you and the others down here with me. And bring Nubian and Anuk. Red could use some help here in their medical facility and I want Nubian to be here when Thoti brings that fat bastard Lorendo for a visit."

"Problem?" Danny asked.

Martin shook his head. "You know how Anja is when she gets into a hospital. She wants to fix everyone. They are still dealing with problems that we got rid of a long time ago. I won't go into the details since I didn't understand much of what she said to begin with."

Danny chuckled softly. "Good enough." He told him. "We'll join you in an hour."

Martin nodded as the transmission faded and ended and he looked up at Garget and Lasun as he detected Anja's honey scent getting closer. He turned when he saw her Persian red hair in the crowd of people and the Durcunusaan parted to allow her through. Garget and Lasun instinctively bowed their heads to her when she stepped up to Martin.

"How is she Red?" He asked at once.

Anja nodded her head and put her hand on his broad chest with a gentle smile. "She will be fine Lover. She lost a lot of blood, but thankfully Dynina and Sarlana were with us. Between the two of them, they were able to guide me in repairing the damage the bullet did. She is resting now, Sarlana and Dynina haven't left her side and Retta is watching over her. Reva's sphere is with them as well."

Martin breathed a sigh of relief and nodded his head. "Danny is coming down with Anuk. Knowing her, she will bring a full team of medics and equipment."

Anja nodded her head in approval. "Good. I have already spoken with the administrator of the hospital and we will start treating their most serious patients as soon as she gets here."

Garget looked between them. "Serious patients?" He asked. "Were others injured in the battle?"

Anja shook her head quickly. "No Garget, but your people... our people here are still contending with diseases and medical conditions that we wiped out within the Union hundreds of years ago. We are just going to start doing the same here."

"You... you can do this Queen Anja?" Lasun gasped.

Anja smiled at him. "According to this big oaf..." Anja jerked her thumb at Martin. "I'm a miracle worker. Don't believe everything he tells you though, me and my people are just good at our jobs."

Martin grinned. "She works miracles." He said.

Anja snapped out her hand and used the back of her knuckles to slap him hard in the abdomen. "Loras and the Administrator of this hospital have already agreed to this." She said looking at Garget as Martin winced.

Garget shook his head quickly. “These things are far out of my realm.” He spoke. “I will always take Loras’ direction at times like this.”

“Can you... can you do this for all of our people?” Lasun asked her.

Anja smiled and reached out to squeeze his arm. “Loras is already putting together a plan to get all of the Mountain Packs taken care of.” She said. “We...”

Martin smelled them the moment they entered the main entrance, even before the deep male voice bellowed out the words.

“GET OUT OF MY WAY! WHERE IS HE?”

This drew the attention of everyone in the main lobby and many of the Durcunusaan were reacting to the perceived threat even as the four members of the Durcunusaan Ready Detachment signaled them everything was ok. As the Quick Reactionary Force for that time, they had deployed from SPARTA'S WRATH in under thirty seconds, which was a new record for them, and Chiron’s orders had been very specific. Bring those they were to secure to the King.

Martin Leonidas detected their blood even through whatever was masking it and he stepped forward into the main corridor into their view without hesitation, the Durcunusaan parting ranks for their King. The much older male and female wolf came to abrupt halts when they saw him and Martin watched both of them take deep breaths, the woman’s hands going to her face in stunned shock. The older male, far older than his scent told others that he was Martin knew, stepped forward slowly. His hands were shaking, his bulky but muscular medium height frame visibly trembling. Martin watched as his dark eyes became moist, tears beginning to spill from them and as everyone in the room watched with confusion, Martin Leonidas didn’t pause and he moved forward and crushed the older man in a powerful embrace.

Doseb Athltin wailed out his utter joy as his powerful arms wrapped around Martin in a bear hug that would have crushed a lesser man. Anja was standing with Garget and Lasun and saw Loras burst out of the room down the corridor as she heard her father’s voice. She moved away from the two stunned men and quickly moved to intercept Loras. Anja knew who they were the moment they entered the hospital, just as Martin did. She could smell their blood easily enough now that she knew what she was searching for. Anja grabbed Loras’ arm gently to hold her back.

“Loras wait.” She exclaimed softly.

“Anja they are... they are my parents!” Loras gasped.

Anja nodded as she pulled her close. “I know.” She said in reply. “But they are... they are also Martin’s family. Our family.”

Loras looked at her with wide eyes, realizing what she was saying and she turned back to look at her mother and father. Loras Ranev had never seen her father cry in all of her years, yet now both he and her mother had tears pouring out of their eyes almost uncontrollably.

Doseb Athltin pulled back and grabbed Martin by the sides of his head, holding him tight as he saw the tears in Martin’s eyes as well. “I... carians pen kirsis iadour uvenn aery cana.” Doseb stammered the words. (Gods, I had given up any hope)

Martin reached up and gripped his shoulders tightly with a smile. “Ethoni coi innyne cana.” He spoke softly, his own words choked up and emotional. (There is always hope)

Doseb roared out his happiness and wrapped his arms around Martin once more before turning and grabbing the woman by his side. “Allon coi... allon coi aur valiath Irani.” (This is my wife)

Martin Leonidas couldn’t keep the huge smile from his face as he didn’t hesitate and embraced the much smaller woman. He lifted her off the floor and she cried out in joy as her arms went around his shoulders. Martin could smell the different bloodlines within her, but as with anyone, Mahanlo blood was far more dominant and pronounced. He could smell her true age as well, and he knew that they had been mated for probably more years than most of those alive on Jetania had been living. He felt her arms tighten around him, could feel the intense happiness within her, just as he did Doseb, and it filled him with peace and contentment just as it had when he had discovered Dynina and now Reva.

And Martin Leonidas longed for the day when he could hold his tenna Kelia in his arms with his staania Reva beside him.

Soon... Martin thought to himself.

Soon...

WARIM MEDICAL CENTER

“...Should have told me!” Loras almost shouted as she sat in the chair at the head of the conference table, her mother and father sitting to her right, Aricia and For'mya to her left.

They had moved out of the main lobby of the hospital into this large conference room which now was heavily guarded at both of the entrances. Four Durcunusaan stood watch at either door into the room, effectively denying entrance to everyone unless told otherwise by their King or one of the Royal family.

Martin stood behind the chairs where Aricia and For'mya sat, both of them greeting Doseb and Irani with embraces of happiness and love, which caused Irani to cry even more and Doseb to feel something he had not felt since he was a small boy. A unique and powerful sense of family filled him once again after more years than he could even remember. When he greeted Androcles, Deion, Denali and Eliani, Doseb could no longer keep his own tears in and he cried once more as he embraced each of them. The smell of Mahanlo blood was so very potent and so powerful within them, especially the three sons of Martin, and it was very nearly overwhelming to him. The introductions continued for nearly half an hour as he and Irani met each of their bloodline and discovering that even more of their family resided on the ships above. After so many years of thinking that they were alone in the galaxy, Doseb and Irani became so overcome with emotion that they both had to sit down, where Loras had quickly joined them.

Gorgo and Dasha, unwilling to remain on the ship any longer after sensing what was happening on the surface, came to Warim on their own to help Anja within the hospital. No one with any sense would dare try to hold the mothers of the King and Queen Aricia back when they set their minds to something. Everyone within the Union knew how the King felt about his mother, Dasha and Dysea's mother Normya, and Armen did not even try to stop them. He knew to attempt to do so would be futile. He made certain they were protected however, as Androcles would expect him too. Now, they sat in the conference room as well, for they knew that Martin would keep nothing from them. Secretly, everything that was happening aside, Gorgo and Dasha were having the most fun of anyone discovering so much and relishing the time with their family.

Garget and Lasun were standing with Androcles, his sister Eliani and the tall Alpha wolf they now knew was called Jomann. He was the husband and mate to Eliani they had discovered, and Androcles' Captain and shadow. Jomann was also one of the most physically imposing Alphas that they had ever met, and Martin's daughter looked miniscule when compared to him. Eliani Leonidas took after her mother obviously, the same type of physical build, if a few inches taller, but when held against the Alpha wolf who was her husband and mate, like her mother Anja, she looked tiny in comparison. Which seemed to suit her just fine as she stood leaning up against the front of his body almost casually. Dynina and Sarlana had elected to remain with Nilantha as did Reva in her sphere.

It was Loras' mother who answered her daughter's question.

“And what would you have had your father and I tell you Loras?” She asked calmly. “By the way child, we come from a bloodline of wolves that is being hunted across the stars and this was the only way we could think to protect ourselves?”

“You know what I mean mother!” Loras hissed trying to act angry but not really able to pull it off. Loras could not remember ever being angry with her parents in all of her life, and she could not start now after what she had learned these last days.

“Your mother and I made this decision long before you were ever born daughter.” Doseb told her. “If you wish to be angry with someone then be angry with me. It is my bloodline that...”

Irani quickly reached out and took his hand. “Doseb no!” She snapped at him. “I knew what I was doing and what it would mean the moment you claimed me. I welcomed it with all that I was my husband, all of my heart and I have not regretted a single day since. Not one!”

Doseb smiled at her and leaned over to nuzzle her affectionately. “Nor have I.” He said softly. Irani smiled back at him brilliantly.

“So... so how old are you really?” Loras asked her. “You and mother were not born on Ventori were you?”

Irani looked at Doseb and she squeezed his hand as he nodded to her. She looked back to Loras once more. "Our true ages do not really matter now, but if you must know, both your father and I are over a million and a half years old. Give or take a few centuries." Irani said with a humorous flippancy. She saw Loras' eyes go wide in disbelief. "We don't really keep track."

"Son vada carians!" Lasun muttered aloud to himself but his voice carried throughout the entire room.

"And no... we were not born on Ventori." Irani spoke. "Both of us were born on a planet called Koltar Four. Four hundred and nineteen years before the Purge of the Mahanlo bloodline began."

Loras looked even more stunned as she gazed at her parents. "You have... you have been together all of that time?" She gasped finally.

Irani smiled at her and nodded. "Since we were both barely a hundred years old. Life with your father has never been dull, that is for certain." She said with a chuckle.

"Mother! How can you joke about this?!" Loras exclaimed.

Irani looked at Doseb for a quick moment and then back to Loras. "Because humor is the only thing that has gotten us through these many years Loras. It is the only thing that allowed us to continue after we thought... after we thought all had been lost."

"Kesas Pengot did this didn't he?" Martin asked now causing Loras to look at him in confusion.

Doseb looked at him now, surprise in his eyes. "How do you...?"

Martin held up his hand stopping Doseb's words. "We'll get to that." He told him.

"We don't..." Doseb shook his head. "I had to destroy our only means of communicating with Kesas Pengot and those of the Kirek Pack that remained. They had taken refuge on Pakar Six and..."

"They were exiled there Doseb! Do not mince words husband! Tell them the truth of it!" Irani snarled viciously.

Aricia glanced quickly up at Martin at the vehemence in Irani's words. They were filled with hate and anger even now, which told all of them quite a bit.

[Irani wears her Mahanlo blood like a badge of honor Beloved.] Aricia spoke to him in their shielded connection. [She embraces it tightly and guards it.]

Martin nodded his head. [That she does.] He answered. [Chiron told Andro and I that with the information eh was able to gather it would have taken several centuries for the Arhtai Pack to accomplish what they did. Perhaps this is why?]

Doseb looked at her and nodded his head once more as his face became sterner as he looked at Martin. "They... we were exiled there by the Arhtai Pack. Irani is correct King..."

"I am not your King!" Martin barked now surprising everyone in the room except those of his family. "You are my blood! My family! My family calls me by my name! Period! None of this King rensibfla when we are together! I won't have it! I won't!"

Doseb looked at him for a long moment and then a small smile split his lips after a few seconds. "I... I remember *Staan*ia Kelia telling me of her brothers when I was a small boy. She showed me holoimages of them." He spoke causing Aricia and For'mya to reach up and take Martin's hands on their shoulders and squeeze his fingers when they felt him tense slightly. Doseb looked at him. "It is frightening how much you and your sons look like them Martin. You are different, yes, but it is there. In your eyes. In your demeanor. I have not... we have not smelled the pureness of Mahanlo blood in..." Doseb's eyes began to tear up once more and he stopped speaking, Irani reaching out to take his hands within hers.

Martin turned his head and looked at Eliani. "Eli..." He spoke.

Eliani lifted her hand and exposed the hypo injector. "We can solve that issue right now." She spoke with a smile as she pushed away from Jomann's form. "If you are willing."

Doseb looked at her and then to Martin. "What is this?" He asked.

"It's a protein enzyme booster." Eliani answered. "I made it myself. It was pretty easy actually once mother told me what was involved and..."

"Eli?" Andro spoke now with a roll of his eyes and Eliani instantly looked embarrassed.

Eliani smiled then knowing at times she got like her mother when it came to explaining things in medical terms. "Sorry." She said. "It will reverse the blood masking protein that was introduced into your bodies and return your natural scent to you. Your natural Mahanlo scent. It will take several hours but by tomorrow the masking proteins will be gone, and like my sister's husband and mate Lazar, it will be back to normal."

"Lazar?" Doseb gasped looking at Loras now. "Lazar has taken a wife and mate? You did not tell us this Loras!"

Loras nodded her head slowly. "It only happened in the last 36 hours alvva and so much was happening around us."

"She is of Mahanlo blood?" Irani asked.

Martin nodded his head. "Yes."

"Our youngest daughter Retta." Aricia continued proudly. "Anja is her birth mother but we and our fellow Queens do not distinguish this among our children. They are all our children. This is how we have raised them and this is what they believe themselves. Lazar and Retta claimed each other in the old way, and Retta's bite purged the masking proteins from Lazar's body."

Doseb shook his head slowly in disbelief. "I should have known. I knew something was happening when the tattoo appeared on our bodies." He said looking at Irani. "Kesas told us the... he said the Prophecy of the Onab predicted this. I believed at first but after so long..."

Martin shook his head. "Believe me... it took all of us by surprise."

"Fellow Queens?" Irani asked now. "How... how many are you?"

For'mya grinned now and glanced at Martin before turning back to her. "There are six of us." She answered. "Dysea, Isabella and Cirith will be arriving here later today."

"Six!" Irani gasped looking at Martin now and watching him look embarrassed.

"We love and desire each other nearly as much as we love and desire Martin." For'mya spoke once more.

"Are you not satisfied with one good woman boy?" Doseb asked him humorously.

"Hey, I..." Martin began to speak but Aricia cut him off.

"Do not worry Doseb Athltin..." Aricia spoke with a wide smile. "Our beloved is more than capable of loving all of us. With equal passion and commitment. Destiny meant for it to be this way and we have embraced that."

Doseb Athltin couldn't really say anything in response, but he could feel his chest swelling with pride. "Avoi." He said softly.

"How many children do... do you have?" Irani asked now.

"Eighteen." For'mya answered with pride in her own voice. "All but two of them are out here with us now. You will meet the rest of them as time passes, trust me. They will demand to meet you."

This announcement caused Doseb's chest to swell even more. Eighteen lives that were filled with Mahanlo blood and all of them were walking around proudly, their blood pure and unmasked. He looked at Eliani now. "This protein.. you say it will... it will remove the masking of our blood?"

Eliani nodded her head. "Yes."

Doseb looked at his wife and Irani nodded without hesitation. Both Doseb and Irani stood up and held out their arms. Eliani looked at her father and saw him nod. She moved around the table and quickly pressed the injector to first Doseb and then Irani's arms and then stepped back. She looked at Loras then.

"Loras?" She asked.

Loras looked at her parents. "Mother?"

Irani nodded her head as she rubbed the injection point on her forearm. "You have a right to know your true bloodline Loras. You and your brothers. Your children. It is part of who you are child. It is who you are. It is part of who we all are. Our history and our... and now our future once more." She finished looking at Martin.

Loras met her father's eyes and saw him nod. Loras had never once doubted her father or his love for her and her siblings. She looked at Eliani then and nodded her head. Eliani stepped up to her and pressed the injector to her arm and it was done. Eliani looked at her father. "I can inject the others medwan, they are waiting two floors up. Confused but calm. Dorian and Laren are with them."

Martin looked at Doseb and Loras. "That is up to them." He said.

"Yes." Irani said instantly.

Doseb looked at Martin. "You can protect them?" He asked. "Irani and I do not care for our wellbeing, but our family is..."

“Jomann?” Androcles spoke once more.

Jomann nodded his head. “It will be done.” He said confidently and then held out his hand for Eliani. She came over quickly and took it and they both exited the room.

Andro looked at Doseb now. “Jomann is my Durcunusaan Captain. He will see to it that all of them are protected.”

“Durcunusaan. Wolves of the Blood.” Doseb spoke softly. “This is what you call those men and women with you? The ones outside and protecting this building?”

Martin nodded his head. “True Spartans all.”

“Avoi.” Andro echoed his father’s words with a nod. “Jehar vada meim rie duan staanio’s erranya alad evell umbar duan anos.” Andro spoke softly. (Into the hands of our grandfather’s spirit we commend our souls)

Doseb and the others watched as Gorgo, Dasha, Aricia, For'mya and Martin spoke in unison. “Krius vin cabur duan julyongs for tayils for eenu jar uvenn olyn evell iri.” (May he guide our actions and thoughts and pick us up if we fall)

Doseb looked at Martin again. “Your... your father?” He asked softly.

Martin nodded his head with a smile. “Leonidas. My father, yes.” He replied seeing his mother look at him with love out of the corner of his eye.

“They call you... I heard them call you King Leonidas. This is where... this is where the name Leonidas comes from then?” Irani asked.

Martin nodded his head again. “Yes.” He answered her. “Though given everything that we have discovered in these last weeks and months, it’s Mahanlo-Leonidas now I suppose.” He smiled. “It’s got a nice ring to it don’t you think?”

Doseb smiled and this and nodded his head. “It is... it is fitting.” He spoke. “That young wolf... Jomann... he is... he is of the Kirek bloodline.” He spoke with some awe. “I have not smelled the bloodline of Kirek in... how is this possible Martin?”

“The how is still somewhat up in the air...” Martin answered. “But the who is easy. My staanio did it. Somehow.”

“King Daniho?” Doseb gasped.

Martin nodded his head. “It’s a long story and one I will happily share with you, but let’s get back to how you got here.” He said.

Doseb nodded his head and returned to his chair. Irani did as well and reached over to take Loras’ hand in her own. “When... when Osrod Aspion’s grandfather came to Ventori and began taking all of the Alphas from there I had to destroy the only real means Irani and I had of communicating with Kesas and the survivors of the Purge on Pakar Six.” Doseb told them.

“Why?” Aricia asked now.

“The risk in them discovering such advanced technology would have been too dangerous for us.” Doseb replied. “And it would have signaled whoever the Arhtai Pack sent after us who we were.”

“So you knew that they sent someone?” Martin asked him.

Doseb nodded his head. “Kesas Pengot suspected that they would. There was no way to hide the ship that we took that left Pakar Six. They would have detected it easily. Kesas knew they were watching us even after we were exiled to Pakar Six. Irani and I were in stasis like the others, put there by the Arhtai Pack. We were among those that were rescued from Koltar Four during the last days of the purge. A single mission that Kesas and the Kirek Pack conducted was able to rescue our stasis pods from Koltar Four as well as that of Tenne Lylor and three of our cousins. Many died in this mission from what he tells us. Kesas Pengot woke us secretly many years later, when he discovered what the Pralor people had done on Ventori and he had to move swiftly for the Mahanlo bloodline detectors that the Arhtai Pack seeded all over Pakar Six would have detected us quickly once we were awakened. We did not want to leave our family, but his logic was without question. We agreed, Irani and I, and we prepared for six weeks and then we left.”

“So you knew the Pralor people?” Martin asked.

Doseb shook his head. “Only what Kesas told us while we prepared to leave Pakar Six. How we had begun trading with them even while our people were preparing to leave Cerath. How King Daniho kept it secret from all but a few. We have never met them but we know what they did across the stars with our people.” Doseb explained. “I don’t know how long it took for the Arhtai Pack to follow us, but they knew the only place where we could blend in was Ventori and Kesas knew as much. It was also the only place where they could not act against us even if they knew we were there?”

“Why?” Martin asked him.

“The Alphas on Ventori were looked at as... for lack of a better term... they were looked at as higher beings by the Betas and other wolves.” Doseb told him. “To act against any Alpha on Ventori would have turned all of the Alphas against someone. And the results would have been lethal. Whoever the Arhtai Pack sent after us knew this, and since they could not detect our bloodline because of the masking, it made their job infinitely harder. It is why many of us still harbor great animosity towards Osrod Aspion’s grandfather. We did not want to leave Ventori. I don’t know who the Arhtai Pack sent but...”

“Does the name Sama Arhtai mean anything to you?” For'mya asked.

“Sama!” Irani hissed in disgust now. “That vile witch! They sent her?!”

“So you do know her?” For'mya pressed her.

“We know of her.” Irani answered. “The youngest daughter to Nyser and Yelma Arhtai. And my chrora.”

Martin’s eyes grew wider. “Your cousin!”

Irani nodded her head. “As much as it pains me to say, yes. A distant cousin, but still my cousin. But not my blood! Never my blood!” Irani took a deep breath before continuing. “We lived on opposite continents on Koltar Four. I never met her, but we know she had a hand in helping her mother during Vada Dremsa rie Saan.”

“Wait a minute!” Martin stopped her quickly causing everyone to look at him. “Vada Dremsa rie Saan? The Night of Blood. What is that?”

Irani nodded her head slowly. “It is what... it is what we called it.” She answered him. “The purge of our bloodline. It happened over many centuries yes, but Vada Dremsa rie Saan began it all Martin. It... it happened exactly five years after Doseb and I became mated. I... I carried our first child then. A girl.” Irani lowered her head slightly and Doseb reached for her. “I was injured and she did not survive.”

Martin’s jaw tensed instantly and only Andro detected this in his father. He didn’t step forward, didn’t speak any words, he simply reached for his father within the Etheric realm on a level that even his mothers could not hope to match.

[Father?]

Everyone saw Martin turn slightly to look at his son. [I don’t... I don’t like the sounds of that keto.] He spoke.

[Nor do I father but we... we must have facts before we act.] Androcles told him. [The only one who can provide the facts we need is Kesas Pengot. You know this. Only he has a full perspective.]

[Andro...]

Now everyone did see Andro step closer to his father, their faces puzzled and confused and Aricia and For'mya wore concerned expressions for even they could not hear what was being said and that usually did not signal good things.

[I feel as you do father.] Andro spoke. [Even more so with the Dahakoan blood flowing within me. It was you who taught me to have all the information available to us before we make a decision. Now is not the time... now is not the time to let emotions rule our actions.]

[And if I am right?] Martin asked him.

[Then we will stand together, all of us, as we exact our brand of justice father. Spartan justice.] Andro replied.

Martin took a deep breath then and nodded his head. [Then we wait. And we hope that I’m wrong.] He said pausing another moment. [Thank you son.]

[You are not alone father.] Andro told him. [Ever.]

Martin turned back to Irani who was looking at him confused and he nodded his head. “I’m sorry. Please... continue...”

Irani looked at Doseb and then back to him but said nothing. After a moment she began to speak again. “Yelma Arhtai kept her immediate family apart from her extended family. She is the real power behind their Pack. Nyser is merely a figurehead. She is a cruel upae and will not hesitate to kill anyone in her way. Sama was only a small girl when they left Cerath and Nyser and Yelma have had many children since settling on Koltar Four, but Yelma... she keeps their power among them. If she sent Sama, then her ultimate goal was our deaths for certain. Sama became her mother's right hand. She took great pleasure in seeing the Purge of our Bloodline."

"So this Sama doesn't know what you look like?" Martin asked.

Doseb shook his head now. "It would not matter. Both of us had reconstructive facial surgery done before we left Pakar Six. Another precaution that Kesas took to safeguard us."

"I'm liking this Kesas Pengot more and more." Martin said with a grin as this statement made him feel slightly better and allowed his anger to bleed off even more.

Doseb looked at him. "I only wish I knew if he was... if any of them were still alive." Doseb said softly. "Staanio Lylor, Staanian Kelia, so many dead or imprisoned. So many lost. All because of a desire for power."

Martin smiled broadly now knowing this was important and happy news he was about to deliver. "Oh, Kesas Pengot is alive." Martin told him seeing Doseb look at him with wide eyes. "And so are Tenne Lylor and Tenna Kelia. And three of your Aunts or Uncles. My Aunts and Uncles too I guess. I don't know which ones."

Doseb came to his feet as if he was shot out of a gun. "Martin you... do not jest with me boy!" He snarled. "Tell me... tell me you are not joking!" He almost yelled as Irani held her hands over her mouth in shock. "How can you... how can you know this?"

Martin saw Garget tense and reach for the earpiece he wore in his ear. It was a crude device but similar to their implants and it allowed him to speak with the men and women under his command throughout Warim. Lasun looked at him as Garget's face tightened and Martin turned to face him fully.

"Garget?" He asked as he saw Andro lift his own hand and put a finger to his ear to activate his implant.

Garget lowered his hand and looked at Martin. "I have just received word from my scouts that Osrod Aspion has ordered two of his ground battalions to commandeer the West Bound Trams and they are heading here." Garget told him. "He is also approaching Warim in a shuttle with Queen Secha and he is demanding clearance to land. He wants to know where his son is and why unknown ships have been detected flying above Warim."

Martin looked at Andro and saw him nod. "Armen is picking up the same transmissions father." He said.

"How many?" Martin asked him.

"The sensors on SPARTA'S WRATH detected roughly three thousand men loading out." Andro answered. "They did it quickly and efficiently. Two of these Trams coming from two different locations."

"You can listen to their communications? You can see them!" Lasun gasped.

"How far out keto?" Martin asked his son.

"Less than an hour now." Andro answered him. "He waited to inform us because of the different tracks these Trams use and he didn't know for sure if they were headed here. Now he is sure."

"The 3rd and 9th Home Guard Regiments Garget." Lasun spoke again. "They are the only ones close enough to get here that quickly."

Garget nodded his head in agreement. "And they are loyal to Osrod. Well equipped and well trained." He said looking at Martin. "They will pull into the Main Arrival Station in Warim. It is the only place that many troops can offload quickly. It also gives them access to the entire city!"

"That didn't take long." Martin said.

Loras rose to her feet now. "Osrod may be a ronnus but he is not stupid." She said, seeing Martin turn to look at her. "And he is a very competent commander Martin. More so than many under his command."

"Loras is correct Martin." Lasun agreed.

Martin nodded his head. "Danny put the kabash on his ships so now he is doing the only thing he can to find out what is going on." Martin said. "Works for me. I always wanted to meet a real live King."

Andro grinned at his father's words, sensing him feeling more upbeat at the chance for a fight, while Garget and Lasun looked confused. "I will handle the troops father." Andro said as he headed for the door.

"Andro?!" Martin called out and watched Androcles turn to face him. "Please don't break anything else keto." He said. "We already have to fix one building. I'd prefer not to have to fix these Tram things either."

Andro's face twisted up into a ghoulish mask of disgust and he stuck his tongue out at his father before turning and leaving the conference room. Martin, Aricia and For'mya chuckled as he turned back and looked at Garget.

"He gets sensitive sometimes." Martin said with a smile. He turned to Doseb. "Doseb, you and Irani stay here for now. I want you protected. I got a surprise for you that I think you will like anyway."

Doseb looked at him oddly. "I don't understand." He said.

Martin grinned. "Oh, you will." He said. "When King shit Osrod and his Queen show up here to collect their son."

WARIM

MAIN SHUTTLE ARRIVAL LANDING PLATFORM

Osrod Aspion knew something was very wrong the moment they set down on the landing platform. The only thing he could see out of the shuttle's windows were dozens of Mountain Pack soldiers arrayed along the sides of the platform. Mixed in with them were an equal number of unknown men and even women that he could see. All of these unknown men and women were wearing strange, black and crimson body armor of some sort. Odd helmets of some kind adorned their heads that he had never seen before. The black and crimson armor covered their bodies with ample protection while leaving their joints free for the most optimum movement, and it conformed to the shape of the person wearing it, which is how he knew that there were women among them. Osrod had never seen anything like it before for his scientists were still trying to discover a way to forge the metals that they had on Jetania into similar types of armor. They had failed so far, but Osrod saw exactly what they were hoping to discover right in front of him now.

All of them were also very well armed from what his trained eye could see, though none of those weapons were even angled in the direction of his shuttle. The strange rifles appeared to be hanging from some sort of quick release straps, and he could also see sidearm weapons in holsters and even the hilts of bladed weapons on some of the unknown men and women. Osrod had never seen this type of body armor or weapons before. None of those species that COLS regarded as enemies could even field such equipment, he knew this for certain, and just by the physical size of most of the men he could see, he knew these strange men and women were Lycavorian. He turned his head to look at Secha, who sat beside him reading from a data pad.

"Something isn't right." He said.

Secha lifted her head and looked at him. "What do you mean?"

Osrod motioned with his head at the window. "See for yourself." He stated. "Garget Ranev has apparently gone beyond his station and made contact with the Lycavorians that Nasso encountered."

Secha leaned over quickly and looked out the window as Osrod rose to his feet, feeling the engines on the shuttle beginning to power down. Her eyes grew wider when she saw the strange Lycavorians on the platform, and the equipment they had. All she could see of their faces under the odd helmets were their eyes and parts of their mouths, given the slots in the full faced guard helmets.

"You are head of our Science and Research Division Secha." Osrod spoke again. "You have had the technology my grandfather took for centuries now and we have discovered nothing that we can use."

Secha didn't look at him as she continued to look out the window of the shuttle at those around them. "Scientific research is not as basic and easy as you believe Osrod." She told him. "We still do not even know what we have. Perhaps if your father had not ordered those that we captured with the device butchered we would know more now. We could have learned more."

Osrod stared at her for a long moment. He had not yet been born when this event had taken place and in many respects he agreed with Secha's statement. His father had acted too quickly after the attack on his grandfather and he executed the people they had taken with the device. As always however, he did not fully believe Secha was telling him everything. He had placed her in charge of all Scientific research the moment she had become his Queen because she was supremely intelligent and had a gift for science. After all of these years however, Osrod had begun to suspect that she was not telling him everything.

"What was Juyno doing up here?" Osrod asked her now, causing Secha to turn and look at him again.

"What do you mean?" She asked him again as she rose to her feet as well. "You know why he came up here with his friends Osrod. They were hoping to find a Mountain pack female or two to claim as their wives and mates." She answered with some disgust in her voice. "I tried to convince him to not come but he would not listen. He does not need some low bred Mountain female as his trophy to make him a man."

“Why here though?” Osrod pressed her. “No Mountain Pack female from Warim or any smaller pack aligned with them has been claimed by a Plains Pack male since I claimed Loras. That was almost four centuries ago. The Ranev Pack is too protective of their females and they are too well guarded when they come into Phase. Why did he come up here? He knows this. He would not have succeeded!”

Secha shook her head. “I do not pretend to know what goes through our son’s head.” She told him. “And do not mention that vile witch’s name to me again!”

“Do you think me a fool Secha?” Osrod hissed at her now. “I know how much you hated Loras Ranev and I know how much you hate my son with her. I also know how much influence you have over Juyno and all of our children. What are you not telling me?”

“I do not know what you are asking me?” Secha spoke angrily. “Yes I hated her! I do not deny that! And I rejoiced when she was killed in the accident with her foul mate! I do not know why he came up here though! And perhaps our children spend so little time with you because they do not like how you treat me.”

Osrod snarled softly at her. “Do not play with me woman!” He hissed at her softly. “I know what you teach them. I have heard what you call me in their presence when you think I am not around. I am King and I have eyes and ears everywhere.”

“Now is not the time for this discussion!” Secha hissed right back at him. “We are here to find our son and to discover why that fool Garget Ranev has gone around you and contacted these new Lycavorians.”

Osrod shook his head. “You give Garget and the other Alphas from the Mountain Packs too little credit Secha.” He spoke. “They are smarter than you think.”

“They are aging brutes who cling to the traditions and cultures of a past that is long dead and buried!” Secha told him. “They believe in outdated myths and the ridiculous legends of some phantasy true King that will one day come and save them all! You give them too much credit Osrod.”

“You have always hated them.” Osrod said. “Why?”

“The why of it is not important to you or to anyone.” Secha answered him. “It is my business.”

Osrod waved his hand at her dismissively. “I would hold my tongue while we are here then. You have never been here, and they will not react kindly to you treating them as inferior to you.” He told her.

“I will treat them however I feel they need to be treated!” Secha snapped. “I am Queen and they will show me the respect due me!”

Osrod stared at her for a long moment, her scent carrying her anger and distaste in it, but also not one shred of regret or backdown. It was times like these that Osrod Aspion longed to have Nitona’s sweet, almond scent filling his senses. He finally shook his head and turned as the ramp began to lower in the rear of the shuttle.

“Do what you will.” He stated offhandedly. “You always do.” He looked at his personal Guard Detachment Commander step up to him. “Colonel Navin?”

“Garget Ranev awaits outside sire.” The man told him. “My Lord, Lasun Vesrak is with him.”

Osrod’s eyes grew a little wider. “Lasun Vesrak? Here?”

The Colonel nodded his head. “I spotted him standing with Garget when we were landing.”

Osrod’s eyes narrowed somewhat. “The leaders of the two largest and most influential Mountain Packs together in one place. Interesting.” He commented. “Has my arrival been announced?”

The Colonel looked at him and slowly shook his head. “No, sire.”

Now Osrod Aspion’s arrogance came forth and his face twisted slightly into anger. His presence was to be announced to everyone whenever he went to one of the Pack cities. It was his right as King. “Have our pilot announce that I have arrived!” Osrod snapped.

Navin shook his head. “He cannot sire. Our external COMs have been jammed. It took place the moment we landed. Only our internal COMs units are usable right now. Range is very limited however.”

“Jammed?” Osrod gasped. “Jammed by who? The Ranev Pack would not dare!”

“We don’t know, sire.” Navin answered. “We do not know where the jamming signal is originating from. Your pilot is certain that it’s not coming from Warim though.”

“Then where?” Osrod asked.

Navin shook his head. “He is trying to pinpoint the source now, but he believes it is coming from orbit.”

Osrod looked at Navin, his eyes going slightly wider. “The ship in orbit above us.” He said.

Navin nodded his head. “Yes, sire. That is what he believes.”

“So we cannot communicate with the Guards Regiments?” Osrod asked.

“No.”

“How far out were they when we landed?” Osrod asked.

“Thirty-seven minutes My Lord.” Navin answered.

“They know the drill.” Osrod said. “They will know what to do.”

“My Lord, as your Detachment Commander, I must advise against this.” Navin said. “We do not know who these new Lycavorians are or what their agenda may be. I recommend that we lift off and return to Drinda so that we can determine what is happening.”

Osrod nodded his head. “I know Navin.” He spoke evenly now. “I should have waited. But we are here now. Garget Ranev will not pull anything underhanded. He knows it would throw our people into chaos.”

Navin stepped closer to his King. “Are you certain sire?” He asked in barely a whisper.

Osrod was not offended by the question. He was arrogant and reckless, this Osrod knew of himself. He was also intelligent enough to know when he could push someone and when he could not. Civil War was not the answer to anything, and it was not something that their people needed here on Jetania. It was the main reason he allowed the Mountain packs to conduct themselves as they did, and adhere to their own beliefs. Garget Ranev and the other Alpha Pack Leaders among them knew this as well, and that is why the fragile co-existence between them had succeeded so far.

Osrod shook his head slowly. “Garget and Lasun are not stupid Navin.” He told him. “Civil War among our people is not the answer and they know that.”

Navin nodded his head. “Yes, My Lord, but how long have these unknown Lycavorians been among them? And what have they been telling them?”

“All good questions.” Osrod said. “Why don’t we go find out.”

Navin nodded his head. “As you wish sire.”

Osrod turned to look at Secha who still wore a disgusted expression on her face. “Stay close to me.” He told her.

“I am not afraid of these fools!” Secha snarled. “They are acting out like children, just as they have done in the past. This time they have gone too far and you know it Osrod. By inviting these unknown Lycavorians to our world without our permission they have violated every agreement that we have with them.”

“Let’s just find out what is going on and where Juyno is.” Osrod spoke to her. “They do not like you Secha, you know this, so keep your sharp tongue in your head while we are here and do not make matters worse.”

“I will not...”

Osrod stepped closer to her, stopping her words. “You will do as I tell you in this regard Secha!” He snapped at her. “You have not garnered any compassion from the Mountain Packs through the years with your words and deeds!”

“They are beneath me!” Secha hissed.

“So you keep saying.” Osrod told her plainly. “But I am King and you will abide by the agreements I have forged with them. Is that clear?”

Secha stared at him for a long moment. “Fine!” She snapped. “But if they have hurt my son...”

Osrod held up his hand stopping her words. “If Juyno is injured, it is because of his own foolishness.” He stated. “He knows the laws we have in place and he is not above them simply because he is our son.”

Secha opened her mouth to reply but Osrod had already turned as the ramp lowered completely and he stepped off with Navin at his side.

Osrod stood in front of Garget Ranev and Lasun Vesrak on the edge of the platform. He had met Garget Ranev several times through the years but he had only met Lasun Vesrak twice. According to his Intelligence reports on him, the Vesrak Pack was even more rooted in tradition and culture than the Ranev pack and the last few decades had seen the two men and their Packs become close friends. Like the Ranev and Vesrak Packs, The Mountain Packs as a whole had come together in the last century unlike at any time in their history. They were working more closely with each other, they now had mutual defense and aide treaties, almost as if a single leader was driving them to do these things. They had adopted almost all of the same laws, they had standardized their education systems and even their medical facilities worked hand in hand. The Overland Tram Rail system had been their project from the outset and it now connected all of the Mountain packs with each other as well as the Plains Packs in the lower regions.

Osrod knew that many of the outlying Plains Packs and their Alpha Leaders had taken in upon themselves to develop closer relations with the Mountain packs who were on the fringes of the many Mountain Ranges on Jetania. They traded openly and honestly with each other and Plains Pack travelers were allowed into their cities to visit and enjoy the many festivities that the Mountain Packs partook in. Unlike with the Ranev and Vesrak Packs and those larger Packs that remained in the deeper mountains, marriage unions between Plains Pack Alpha males and Mountain Pack Alpha females were much more common on the fringes of the Mountains. This had the added effect of drawing the two different Packs closer together, but the Mountain Pack ideals and values were always the ones that ended up being dominant. Osrod knew this, and while many of his advisors urged him to put a stop to this, he allowed it. Osrod Aspion did not want to be King of a divided people. The one piece of advice his father had given him before he had died, a piece of advice that Osrod actually adhered to, a united people made him stronger. A divided people made him weak and ineffective.

Osrod Aspion did not like to be weak.

Osrod looked around them taking in the Mountain pack troops and the unknown troops. Nearly all of them were Alphas, that much he could tell easily, and even the Beta wolves that he smelled had scents and auras that in many ways equaled those of many of the Plains Packs. The Mountain troops stared at him with indifference in their eyes, but the unknown troops in the black and crimson body armor looked upon him almost as a threat. Their eyes, their auras and their demeanor told him volumes about them. This also told Osrod that they did not fear him or the men with him in the least bit.. Whoever they were, the way their weapons were displayed, their stance and their indifference to him told Osrod that they were extremely capable. The Alpha within him told him that these men and women were dangerous. Very dangerous. He turned back to Garget and Lasun.

“It has been a long time Garget Ranev.” Osrod spoke finally.

Garget nodded his head. “Thirteen years Osrod Aspion.” He said. “Not long enough if you ask me.”

Osrod noticed instantly that he did not refer to him as King Aspion and his tone of voice was anything but respectful but he held his tongue. Something was going on here and he wanted to discover what it was. He held his hand up before Navin could step forward and try to demand he speak more respectfully. That would not go over well with Garget Ranev Osrod knew. Osrod looked at Lasun Vesrak now.

“And Lasun Vesrak.” He spoke. “This is a surprise. The Alpha leaders of the two most powerful and influential Mountain Packs in the same city at once. What should I infer from this if I may ask?”

“Why have you come here Osrod?” Garget asked him ignoring the question. “And you arrive with an armed escort no less? What should we infer from this?”

“I was not aware Lasun was here within Warim.” Osrod spoke.

“We do not need to share with you or your spies where we go.” Lasun spoke firmly.

“It is just odd don’t you think?” Osrod said keeping his voice calm. “Given what is going on above us right now.” Osrod looked around at the Spartan troops mixed in with the Mountain Pack soldiers. “And what is happening here in Warim as well it seems.” He said as he turned back to Garget. “Perhaps you could explain to your King what is happening.”

“Your security detachment will leave their weapons here with my men.” Garget told him. “Then we will go someplace and discuss why you are here.”

Navin could not contain himself now and he stepped forward. “We are the King’s Guard! We do not go anywhere unarmed!”

Garget looked at him with disgust. “Your King is not our King boy!” Garget snarled at him. “And you would do well to remember who is your better and your senior lest you receive a welcome you will not like! And you will surrender your weapons or you will remain here!”

“You threaten the King’s Colonel!” Navin spat.

“He threatens a child who thinks he is superior to others around him simply because of the position he holds!” Lasun snapped now. “You are barely three thousand years old boy! You would not last three seconds against Garget Ranev. Mind your manners and your tongue or he will rip it from between your lips! And none of your pretty soldiers will be able to do a thing to stop him.”

“Navin!” Osrod snapped now. “Stand down!”

“Sire, they disrespect...”

Osrod held up his hand once more silencing Navin as he stared at Garget and Lasun. “Who are these men and women Garget?” He asked now. “And who gave them permission to come to my planet. I certainly did not.”

Garget smiled now. “They are Spartans!” He spoke loudly. “Lycavorian Spartans of the ared Mard Revik’s army, and he does not need your permission to come to Warim or any other Mountain Pack city.”

It was Secha who laughed disparagingly now and she shook her head. “You still cling to the silly myths of a King who does not exist Garget Ranev. Pitiful. Where is my son?” She snapped at him.

Garget turned his head and looked at her. “Your vile son is right where he belongs.” He told her. “I will allow you to see him before we put him on trial for his crimes.”

Secha’s eyes went wide. “Crimes?” She barked. “What ridiculousness is this? What crimes?”

“Where is he?” Osrod growled now.

Garget ignored her and looked at Osrod once more. “Do you wish to remain out here on the platform and discuss all of this Osrod Aspion?”

“You are very close to crossing the line Garget Ranev.” Osrod spoke menacingly. “You will tell me who these so called Lycavorian Spartans are and what they are doing here? Their ships are in orbit above us right now threatening our ships! Our people! They have already killed over a hundred of my people! I want answers and you will give them to me! And you will give me my son!”

“Eighty-seven of our people are dead because of you.” Lasun spoke once more. “They died because you have instilled a sense in them that they are superior to all those around them. They died because one of your officers was stupid enough to fire upon an unknown ship five times his size without even knowing what was happening around him!” Osrod’s eyes were wide now, not expecting Lasun to know what had happened in orbit. “Garget and I know exactly what has happened Osrod Aspion! We saw it with our own eyes! We know exactly how many have died because of you! And we know exactly what is going on above us right now!” Lasun Vesrak stepped a inch closer to Osrod, his face twisted into an angry snarl. “And your son will face our justice for what he has done! He is lucky that Garget and his people took him before I did for shooting my daughter. I would have gutted him where he was and strung him up by his entrails!”

“Shooting your daughter!” Osrod gasped now.

“You dare accuse the King’s son of this... this heresy?” Navin barked now reaching for his sidearm and his men reacting right along with him.

It happened far faster than any of them were prepared for, even Garget and Lasun. They would later learn that Martin Leonidas had ordered the Spartan Captain that Garget and Lasun were to be protected at all costs. No matter the consequences. Garget Ranev and Lasun Vesrak learned this day just how far their King’s Durcunusaan, his Spartan warriors, would go in order to fulfill his command.

The Durcunusaan Captain and six of his men, all of them standing with the Mountain Pack soldiers, moved instantly when Navin made the mistake of reaching for his weapon. The Captain, a man who had been a member of the Durcunusaan since their inception under the elven General Vengal more than two decades ago, made contact first. Navin got as far as being able to draw his weapon perhaps two inches from the holster it resided in when he felt the single blow on his forearm. The Durcunusaan Captain hit him with the blunt end of his collapsed Nehtes directly on the forearm bone. Navin cried out as his forearm snapped with a loud crack and he doubled over to the side as the Captain lifted his Pralor Pulse Magnum and jammed the barrel on the PPM into his left cheek painfully. His dark eyes had changed to that of his wolf persona and his fangs were fully exposed under the Spartan helm he wore. Osrod Aspion did nothing but freeze as he saw the barrel of the wicked looking rifle suddenly appear beside his right temple. He heard the painful grunts of his personal detachment as they went down, heard the snapping of Navin’s bone, and Osrod knew that his people were far outmatched. Secha simply stood beside him and glared at the obviously female soldier as she held a PPM on her face, perhaps two inches from the end of her nose.

“I am Durcunusaan Captain Darden Iagar!” The Captain snarled viciously from under his helmet as he pressed the PPM even harder against Navin’s cheek, causing him to wince in even more pain. “Since you refused to do what Garget Ranev has requested of you, my men and I will ensure that his directive is complied with!" He leaned over slightly and glared into Navin's face. "Or I can just relieve you of your ability to breath right now igord! Make your choice!"

"Enough!" Osrod barked. "I am King Osrod Aspion and I order you..."

Darden snapped up his PPM and glared at Osrod while holding the PPM half an inch from the tip of Osrod's nose. Osrod's eyes went wide at this blatant disrespect but his words stopped instantly as Darden looked at him.

"The Durcunusaan do not take orders from you midaeus!" Darden spoke clearly, his fangs fully exposed now. "We serve the Spartan King and the King of the Lycavorian Union, who are one and the same! You are not now and never will be him! Now tell your men to stand down and hand over all of their weapons or I will kill each and every one of them in front of you."

"You threaten the King of the Coalition of..." Secha began to speak.

The female Durcunusaan touched her PPM to Secha's lips quieting her. "No one asked you to speak upae!" She growled at her, fangs exposed. "You will suffer the same fate as those around you if you are not careful. Now shut your hole or I will remove your ability to speak more than a few words at a time!"

"Our King is not in a very forgiving mood at the moment after your people attacked and injured one of our beloved Queens and your fool people in orbit fired on his mard fervon's ship above us." Darden spoke again. "You have five seconds to comply with my order."

Osrod knew when he was in a poor position and he turned his head slightly. "Stand down and give them your weapons!" He snapped. "Do it now!"

Five knives and two small clubs were given up then under the watchful eye of the six Durcunusaan, and then Darden stepped back slightly, his PPM still leveled at Osrod's face.

"Your toy soldiers will remain here as Garget Ranev has instructed them. My men will keep them company. I will advise you now, there are Durcunusaan throughout the entire city of Warim after your actions and should you or your men attempt anything, you will be dead before your ignorant brains have the opportunity to inform you of this." He spoke as he pulled his PPM down slowly.

"Take me to this King of yours." Osrod growled.

Darden smiled at him, barring his still exposed fangs even more. "Do not be so quick to face the Alpha wolf that will decide whether you live or die this day Osrod Aspion." He spoke. "You may not like the outcome."

WARIM MEDICAL CENTER

The petite, Persian red haired Queen they called Anja had joined them and now they were engaged with Irani at one end of the table, speaking with Loras and who Doseb now knew was Martin's birth mother Gorgo and Aricia's birth mother Dasha. Martin stood alone by the large window in the conference room overlooking the city of Warim, his hands crossed at the small of his back, his eyes gazing out over the city. The Arwa rie vada Revik conformed to his body as if it was a living thing itself, the sun glittering off of the dull silver portions of the armor. The Arwa rie vada Revik and the Arwa rie vada Tarivuos had been two things of legend among the Kirek Pack as he was growing. Spoken of with true reverence and awe even as so many others of their people dismissed that they even existed after so long. Well, they did exist Doseb now knew, and those with Mahanlo blood wore them.

Once more Doseb had to maintain his composure for standing as he was, Martin looked exactly like the many images his grandmother Kelia had shown him as a small boy of both her beloved brothers. Daniho and Ashten. Martin and his sons looked so much like them it was actually frightening to some extent. While all of his children that Doseb had seen retained small physical marks of their bloodline that were very pronounced, it was Martin and his oldest son Androcles who looked more like the two brothers than any of them. At this moment, standing as he was, Doseb was thrown back to those times when his grandmother showed him the pictures of her brothers and how her voice filled with love and longing whenever she spoke of them. Doseb moved up slowly to stand beside Martin, his eyes gazing out over the city of Warim as well.

“You are deep in thought Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas.” Doseb spoke finally.

Martin nodded his head slowly. “There is a lot to think about.” He answered.

Doseb nodded in agreement. “Indeed.” He said. “So this Nilantha woman is Darastrixi. Like those that staanio Daniho discovered on Cerath?”

Martin nodded his head. It hadn’t been a very hard decision for him after his mother had suggested it and Martin had passed an abbreviated version of what they now knew to Doseb and Irani through an Etheric connection. He included Loras and her siblings as well as their children to include Lazar. It wasn’t a full accounting of their history, but it was enough for them to begin to understand their past and what it meant. Martin kept certain parts from them, mainly those about Reva until such time as she was returned to her true form. Irani was absolutely taken with Aricia, Anja and For'mya and full of questions, which they were happy to answer as they sat with her and Gorgo and Dasha.

“For lack of a more scientific explanation, there are two subspecies of Darastrixi. Those like my Bonded Brother Torma and like Dadrien and then those like Nilantha and Sarlana.” Martin spoke.

“And it was this Nilantha that followed the teachings and guidance of Dadrien and your grandfather, the Pralor Sumar?” Doseb spoke. “She is the one that kept the truth alive here on Jetania.”

Martin nodded his head again. “Yes.” He answered. “I don’t know what happened to the Oracle that was with the Ventori Seed Mission, we’ll probably never know for sure, but when this fool Osrod’s grandfather brought you here, Nilantha naturally took her spot.”

Doseb nodded his head. “We were amazed that many believed as we did when we first arrived here.” He said. “I should have figured it out, but I didn’t.”

Martin shook his head. “Don’t feel bad about that. Dadrien and my grandfather Sumar were very careful in their plans. Even more so after they passed into the next life.” He said with a small grin. “Not everything happened as they had hoped, but the end results is what truly matters.”

“And this is where these... these powers that you and your children possess come from?” Doseb asked. “From the Pralor blood within you.”

Martin nodded his head once more. “Yes.”

Doseb shook his head in disbelief. “So much... it is so much to take in.” He said.

Martin looked at him. “You have no idea.” He said with a grin.

Doseb glanced back at the table. “Your wives and mates? They know all of this?” He asked.

Martin followed his gaze and then turned to look back out the window. “When I look at them, I do not see six different women.” He said. “I see one complete entity. They think the same, they act the same, and they speak with one voice. They are my center. My core.”

Doseb looked at him. “As it should be.” He said in agreement. “As Irani is and has been my center for so many millennium.”

“I can’t really explain it Tenne.” Martin said seeing Doseb’s eyes go a little wider when he called him that. “It just is.”

“You called me... you called me Uncle.” Doseb said.

Martin nodded his head. “That is what you are to me.” He answered him. “No matter the number of generations that are between us, you are Tenne to me and to all of my children. Irani is Tenna to us. You are family. That is what matters most to all of us.”

Doseb reached out and put his hand on Martin’s arm and squeezed his thick bicep. “And you are family to us aur Mandri.” He said softly. “A family we thought lost so long ago.”

Martin looked at him. “Not lost...” He said. “We just got a little side tracked is all.”

Doseb smiled at this, knowing the meaning of his words. “What now mandri?” He asked finally. “I know you and your son were speaking to one another so that none of us could hear your words. I could see it in the faces of your wives and mates, of your mother. You do not do this often I take it?”

Martin shook his head. “My son Androcles and I... we have a connection that only we can use. It began the moment he was conceived and became aware while Aricia still carried him in her womb.” He replied. “We do not use it often, for no one else can hear us, and we do not like to keep our family from our thoughts.”

“But this time you did.” Doseb commented. “Why?”

Martin looked out the window once more and Doseb waited patiently knowing he would continue when he was ready. He saw Martin take a deep breath finally. “All of my life I have wondered who and what I am Tenne.” Martin spoke softly. “I have discovered so much this last year, so much about my ancestors, my past and my history. To me and to my first born son, there is nothing more sacred than our family and our people.”

Doseb nodded his head in agreement. “As it should be.”

“We have discovered some things.” Martin told him. “Some very disturbing things that do not sit well with us.”

“This has to do with Vada Dremsa rie Saan doesn’t it?” Doseb asked.

Martin nodded his head slowly. “Part of it, yes. But even among others that have no idea about our history or who we are, our family, my family, we have always been a target.” Martin said. “My wives and mates have suffered because of this. My children. My people. I’m tired of it Tenne.”

Doseb looked at him intently. “And?”

Martin met his gaze. “We need to speak with Kesas Pengot.” Martin told him. “I need to hear from him Tenne, before I make any decisions.”

“And if he tells you what I believe you and your son already know in your hearts Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas?” Doseb asked him softly.

“Then the souls of my family whom I was never allowed to know, the souls that cry out for justice even now, they will have their voice.” Martin spoke softly. “And what I will do will cause their voices to resonate across the stars forever as a warning to all those who would do us harm without cause.”

Doseb Athltin shivered slightly at the intent of Martin’s words, but not a single part of him could find grievance with his words or what actions he would undertake. Doseb finally looked out the window once more and nodded his head.

“Avoi.” He spoke softly.

For Osrod Aspion it was the most incredible sight he had ever seen.

And the most frightening.

He remembered the stories his mother used to tell him as a small boy of great beasts that could fly and spit fire.

Sinuovas.

Never in all his years did Osrod Aspion ever believe that they could be true, yet as they approached the Warim Medical Center he saw them. Massive dragons of different color and shapes, all of them looking upon him as if they wanted to eat him. The two at the front of the Center were nearly identical in appearance, he did not know that Caydren and Cinol were twin brothers, and as they passed them and the dozen armed Durcunusaan, both sinuovas looked at him as if they wanted to tear him apart with their talons and feast on his insides. Osrod Aspion felt marginally better when they entered the facility, but inside he could see more of these new Lycavorian Durcunusaan standing guard at different points within the main lobby. He saw at least four different new species that he had never seen before, the most telling were the ones with the four inch high pointed ears. Most of them were female he saw, and they were stunning in their beauty, though their scents did not really tickle his senses as Nitona’s did. They were conferring with the doctors from the Warim Medical Center as if it was the most natural thing in the world. When Osrod looked at Secha to see her reaction, he was surprised to see that her face remained impassive to everything around her. It did not really register with him that she could possibly have seen these things before, or that he did not truly know the female wolf who had been sharing his bed for the last several hundred years.

Garget and Lasun led them to a larger conference room in the rear of the first floor where the office area was established. Osrod had never been to this facility but he had heard from many of his spies about the quality of care that was given here and how no one was denied. The Warim Medical Center was the most modern Medical Facility he had ever seen, and it certainly surpassed even the finest hospital in Drinda.

Once inside the conference room, it was Secha Aspion who whirled on Garget and Lasun. “Where is my son?” She demanded.

Garget looked at Lasun and then motioned to the chairs at the large table. “Your son is being brought here from another location.” He told her. “I suggest you sit down.”

“I am Queen!” Secha snapped. “I do not take your orders!”

Garget shrugged his broad shoulders. "It was not an order, but if you prefer to stand, that is up to you." He stated calmly.

"You have some explaining to do Garget Ranev." Osrod spoke now as he settled into one of the chairs. "I am not unreasonable, but it is obvious you have gone behind my back and made contact with these new Lycavorians and invited them onto my planet."

Garget looked at him. "We did not make contact with them Osrod." He stated. "They made contact with us."

"And you still refuse to address me properly." Osrod spoke once more. "This blatant disregard for the proper recognition of my..."

"Of your what?" Garget stopped him. "Your so called title? A title that neither you, nor your father, nor your grandfather ever earned?"

"How dare you?" Secha exclaimed.

Garget looked at her. "I will dare much more in the coming days woman!" He snarled at her. "Especially now that the truth is coming out!"

"What truth? What are you babbling about?" Secha barked.

Garget took the data pad from the pouch on his belt and held it out to Osrod. "Perhaps you could explain this?"

Osrod took the pad from him and looked at it, his eyes narrowing. "How did you get this Garget?" He spoke quickly looking up at Garget. "This is the Planetary Birth Registry! This is not common information! This is secured information! How did you get this?"

Garget nodded his head. "And so we thought as well." He replied. "The Mountain Packs agreed to allow this registry only after you gave us your assurance that it would not be used for the gain of others."

"And I kept my word!" Osrod snapped. "This information is not available to the general population! It is restricted access only! Senior members of my cabinet and the military! That is it!"

Garget met his eyes. "We discovered this data pad on your son Juyno after he and his friends attempted to force themselves upon my daughter Taris and Lasun's daughter Anoria."

"What nonsense is this?" Secha spat.

Garget ignored her and continued looking at Osrod. Garget Ranev considered himself an excellent judge of people's reactions and from the expression on Osrod's face, he had no idea what Garget was talking about.

"Garget if this is some kind of..." Osrod began.

"Your son used this list to discover which of our females would be coming into Phase based on when they were born!" Garget snapped. "My daughter among them! He then came up here with the intent of finding her and forcing himself upon her!"

"That is ridiculous!" Secha spat.

Garget looked at her as his anger grew. "Do not toy with me woman!" He snarled now. "He knew Taris was coming into Phase! It was not just chance that he showed up in Warim at this time! And he knew because of that list!"

"What difference does it make?" Secha growled. "You agreed to this arrangement! As did your now dead brother!"

Garget almost lost it at the way she mentioned his brother Warim and only Lasun grabbing his arm stopped him from striking Secha right in her pompous face and knocking her on her ass.

"The Mountain Packs agreed to this arrangement only after Osrod gave us assurances that the information we provided to him would not be used for political purposes!" Lasun snarled now, holding his friend back.

"And I have kept my word!" Osrod barked loudly. "I don't know how Juyno got this list! I did not authorize it to be copied from the archives! Let me speak to my son and I will find out how he got this!"

"We already know how he got it." Lasun told him and his eyes went to Secha. "Queen Secha provided it to him."

"What?" Osrod snapped.

"You lie!" Secha exclaimed. "I did no such thing!"

"So your son is a liar then?" Lasun pressed her. "We questioned him after he was treated for his injuries and..."

“Injuries?” Secha hissed. “What did you beasts do to my son?!”

“Beasts?!” Lasun roared now. “One of the igords with your son shot my daughter!” He stepped closer to Secha but she was unable to back up because of the table behind her. “They shot her Secha Aspion! To keep them from running away! And then they were going to force themselves on her while your foul son took Taris Ranev against her will! They did not even think to treat her wound, they were only concerned with claiming her body!”

“Taris Ranev was in Phase! She could not have resisted him and it would not have been against her will!” Secha snarled at him. “As for your daughter, if she was in Phase as well, then the same rule applies! You know how it works with female Lycavorians just as anyone does Lasun Vesrak!”

“Then you did know!” Garget barked. “You gave him the list!”

“So what if I did?!” Secha snapped at him.

Osrod rose to his feet now. “Secha!”

Secha whirled on him now. “You are weak and you let the Mountain Packs do what they will without any guidance! They need to be brought into line just as the other Packs are kept in line! You do nothing and you let them resist you at every turn!”

“You gave Juyno the list?!” Osrod snapped now.

“Yes, anse it!” Secha snapped. “Someone had to do something! They don’t respect you! They don’t even call you King! If Juyno had claimed Taris Ranev then they would have to look at you with respect and do as you tell them!”

“You violated the agreement I negotiated with them!” Osrod barked. “You had no right to do this!”

“I am Queen!” Secha shouted. “I had every right! The Mountain Packs have laughed at you ever since you gave that upae Loras back to her father! They do not fear you Osrod! To them you are weak!”

Osrod stepped closer to her. “I allowed Loras to return to her Pack to keep a civil war from breaking out!” He growled at her. “What does it matter to you! You hated her and you have hated my son with her ever since he was born!”

“As well I should!” Secha snarled viciously. “He is a stain upon...”

“Upon what?” The female voice barked out from behind Garget and Lasun. With large smiles both men parted and allowed Loras to step fully into the room, the looks on Osrod and Secha’s faces was priceless. Neither of them could believe what they saw as she moved between Garget and Lasun and went to the end of the table to look directly at Secha and Osrod.

“Loras!” Osrod gasped aloud finally. “You are... you are alive!”

Loras Ranev smiled at him, but it was not a smile filled with mirth. “You seem surprised Osrod?” She spoke now. “Why?”

“It was... it was reported that you were killed with Warim when your ship crashed.” Osrod stammered. “How are you...?”

“Yes, I’m sure that it was.” Loras said calmly. “Because that is how I wanted it to be.”

Osrod’s face twisted into confusion. “What?”

Loras ignored Osrod and looked at Secha. “You seem to be even more surprised to see me alive Secha Aspion.” She stated. “Now, I wonder why that is?”

Secha blinked then and looked at her with wide eyes. “I... how... how is this possible?” Secha felt fear creeping into her body for the first time in more years than she could remember. Loras’s scent was different now and Secha Aspion would never forget a scent. She had smelled that bloodline before.

Loras smiled now, feeling more confident and empowered than she ever felt before in her life. Discovering everything Nilantha had told her and then all that Martin Leonidas had shared with them not so long ago had made her this way. It had been easier for Loras this time around, the Etheric connection being established, since she had experienced it before. This time she did not exit the connection so abruptly, this time she remained to experience it all. In the coming years Loras Ranev would learn just how powerful she was. It was something that both of her parents had obviously experienced before because they did not flinch. The knowledge was within Loras now, almost like it had always been there and just been hidden behind walls she could not discover or penetrate. Loras could almost feel the proteins that Eliani Leonidas had injected her with working to destroy whatever it was that was masking her true bloodline. Loras felt it fully now. The bloodline of her parents. The bloodline of her past and quite possibly her future. And she wanted to know more.

The Mahanlo bloodline.

And Loras knew Secha could smell it within her as well.

“That is all you have to say?” Loras asked as she moved calmly to the table and sat down at the head. “I had expected a much more lively response. Perhaps not from Osrod, but certainly from you.”

“We saw... we saw your body.” Secha stammered in disbelief.

Loras shook her head. “No. You saw a body.” She corrected her. “The young female wolf who was helping Warim and I keep our records in order was returning from Drinda with us that day. She was on the transport with us, though you never saw her. She remained on our ship while we met with you and Osrod. She died in the crash with Warim. I did not. I was gravely injured but I survived.” Loras looked up at where Garget stood. “Garget and several other brave souls saved me that day. They have protected me, shielded me, supported me since that day. Until now.”

“Supported you?” Osrod exclaimed now. “You! You have been the one controlling the Mountain Packs all of these years!”

Loras met his eyes. “You are not as dumb as Secha believes you to be Osrod.” She stated evenly seeing his jaw twitch in anger at her words. “I have not been controlling them however, merely guiding them to something better than what you would allow.” She looked at Secha once more. “Why don’t you ask your Queen. Secha has known I have been alive for quite some time now. All you need do is ask Rylin about that. Isn’t that right Secha? Or should I call her Roeza?”

“Rylin?!” Osrod hissed. “The Mountain Pack High Priestess? What does she have to do with anything?”

Secha looked at Osrod. “I have no idea what she is talking about!” She spat. “She is malda! I told you that from the beginning!” Secha turned back to face Loras. “Where is our son!” She screamed. “You will bring our son to us this instant! And then you will surrender yourself to our Security Force for crimes against the people!”

Loras chuckled softly and shook her head gently. “My mother said you would remain defiant to the end.” She said softly. “You have hunted them for so long that you have become desperate and stupid Secha.”

“How dare you!” Secha growled.

Loras snarled angrily and came to her feet. “I dare forn upaee!” She screamed. “And I will dare so much more!”

Osrod stepped forward slightly his face a mask of confusion now. He would never forget Loras’ sweet scent and why he was attracted to her in the beginning. Her beauty had not diminished in the least, so surreal and exotic, but she was not the same anymore. And neither was he. Her scent was different now, very different, and it did not illicit the same reaction in him that Nitona’s scent did. It was at that single moment that Osrod realized something. He wanted Nitona and no other. With her he felt the weight of the world lift from his shoulders. She did not ask him for anything, did not demand anything, she did not care that he was King and that she was one of his Queens, she only wanted to be with him. With Nitona, Osrod could just be a man.

“Loras you... you are different.” Osrod spoke now keeping his voice calm and even. “Your scent is different. What...?”

Loras nodded her head. “Yes, it is different.” Loras told him. “I am different. I have discovered things that you could not imagine Osrod. About me, about my family, about our people and most especially about my bloodline.”

“What... what things?” Osrod asked.

Loras turned her eyes from staring at Secha and she looked at him. “I hated you Osrod Aspion. I hated you for taking me without choice. It was the way of our people long ago on our second homeworld of Lycavore, I know this now, so I can not fault you for following your instincts. Our instincts as a people. But I will never forgive you for it. And I will never forgive you for trying to keep my son from me.”

“Loras I...” Osrod began to speak but his words died when he saw Lazar walk into the conference room now with the petite red haired female wolf holding his arm tightly. Osrod knew instantly that she was not fully wolf, but the wolf blood within her was purer than any he had ever smelled before. Her dark green eyes held defiance and pride in them as Lazar stopped beside his mother and wrapped his arm around Retta’s waist, pulling her close to him. Osrod could also easily detect that his son had claimed this young woman for his scent saturated her body and her blood. And Lazar’s scent was completely different than he knew his son’s scent to be.

“Hello father.” Lazar stated calmly but with a hint of anger in his voice.

“Lazar! What... what are you doing here?” Osrod gasped. “You are supposed to be...”

Lazar smiled. “I am supposed to be on Ventori. Yes, I know.” He said. “Events did not work out as you had planned however.”

“What?” Osrod gasped. “What the fuck is going on here!”

Secha could only stare at Retta in disbelief for she could detect the blood within her as easily as she could smell her own. Blood that she had thought she would never have to smell again. She whirled on Osrod. “Kill them all Osrod!” She screamed. “Kill them now! Order your troops into Warim from the Trams and have them kill everyone!”

Osrod looked at Secha with wide eyes. “Shut up Secha!” Osrod snarled at her causing Garget and Lasun to smile as they saw her stunned reaction to his command.

Osrod looked at Loras once more. “Second homeworld?” Osrod asked her. “What are you... what are you talking about Loras? Why is Lazar here now and not with his ship? Where is your ship son? How did you get here without the MCS detecting you?”

“You see Osrod!” Secha hissed. “She is malda! All of them are crazy! You need to act now! She doesn’t even know what she says! None of them do! They are a stain upon our people and you must kill them!”

Loras looked at Secha once more. “Vada voray oia Cerath coi dangua niob.” Loras spoke softly watching as Secha turned her head to look at her with stunned eyes and an expression of utter disbelief. “Una coi vada daanth rie toniru!” (The snow on Cerath is melting now. It is the time of reckoning)

Secha stared at Loras in shock and horror. “How... how did you... where did you hear that?” She screamed out the words now.

Loras looked at Garget and nodded. He held out the COM unit to her and she took it and turned to Osrod. She stepped closer to him, ignoring Secha and put the Com unit on the table and slid it over to him.

“Contact your troops on the Trams Osrod. They are thirteen minutes away.” She told him. “Tell them that you are aware of what is happening and they are no longer needed. Tell them to return to their bases.”

“Why would I do that?” Osrod demanded.

Loras met his eyes. “If you do not, they will die.” She spoke plainly. “The moment they begin to disembark the Trams in Warim, the Tarivuos rie vada Mard Revik will slaughter them before they even know what is happening.”

“The Heralds of the True King?” Osrod spoke. “What nonsense is this?”

Loras shook her head. “It is not nonsense Osrod. The prophecy of the Mard Revik is very real. Just ask Secha. She knows all too well what I am talking about. It is why she and her vile daughter have been trying to kill my parents for more years than any of us have been alive.” Loras looked at Secha now. “It is why, less than three hours ago, her daughter Roeza and a dozen others from her true bloodline tried to murder me and those with me. Including three of the Mard Revik’s Queens. They failed obviously.”

Osrod glanced at Secha and then back to Loras. “What?” He nearly yelled. “True bloodline! What are you talking about Loras? We don’t have a daughter named Roeza! You know that!”

Secha glared at Loras with murder in her eyes. “What have you done?” She screamed. “Where is Roeza?”

Osrod looked at Secha with wide eyes. “Who is Roeza? Secha, what is Loras talking about? Who is Roeza?”

Loras continued to look at Secha. “You don’t know your Queen very well Osrod.” She said calmly. “You don’t know what she has been party to in the past. I cannot find fault with you over this. I have discovered recently that Secha is a master manipulator and has been for many thousands of years. Just like her mother. They have controlled, fooled, connived and manipulated men far better than you. Perhaps it would be better if I called you by your real name. Wouldn’t you agree... Sama Arhtai!”

Secha’s eyes grew even wider as she stared at Loras in disbelief. “What... what manner of deceit is this?!” She stammered.

“Deceit?” Loras spoke. “They only person in this room filled with deceit is you!” Loras turned and looked at Garget and Lasun and nodded her head. Loras looked back to Secha as Garget and Lasun moved for the two opposite doors into the conference room. “You smelled her the moment she came into this room. She knew who she was the instant you saw her.” Loras spoke as she came to stand beside Retta who was proudly pressed up against Lazar's side. "This is my son's wife and mate Secha, or Sama, or whatever you wish to be called. This is Retta Mahanlo-Leonidas."

"NO!" Secha screamed. "Impossible!"

Loras shook her head. "I think not." Loras said. "Retta is the one who bit my son during their lovemaking when he claimed her. When she bit him, when he bit her, the proteins in her pure Mahanlo blood began to destroy the masking proteins in his blood. They revealed his true bloodline. Just as they have now revealed mine."

Loras heard Garget and Lasun open the doors and she felt Aricia, Anja, For'mya enter the large room. Directly behind them came her parents and then Gorgo, Dynina, Dasha, and two of Martin's pureblood sons, Denali and Deion. Loras saw Secha gasp almost as if she was in pain when she smelled them enter the room. A dozen others quickly followed Denali and Deion into the room, among them two of her four children with Warim and more of Martin's children since they had been together on the floors above. While Loras had yet to learn all of their names, She would, for they were her blood. And she was their blood.

Mahanlo blood.

Her family.

"As smart as you think you are Sama Arhtai, as well as you have manipulated Osrod and the others around him for millennia, you failed in the most important thing you should have been concerned with." Loras told her. "You failed to make sure that the descendants of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo were all dead. You acted without all of the information you should have had."

Secha smelled him before she saw him and her eyes went even wider. Her head turned as she saw his bulk fill the doorway into the conference room. She saw the Arwa rie vada Revik adorning his tall, muscular body, conforming to it like a second skin. She saw his wild black hair and the yellow gold eyes and then she saw the savage, dual wolf fangs unique to only one bloodline of Lycavorian people across the entire universe.

"NO! IMPOSSIBLE! NO! IT CAN'T BE!" Secha screamed out the words.

Osrod Aspion could only watch as Secha's face filled with real terror when she saw the tall Alpha wolf enter the room. He was equal to Osrod in size to be certain, perhaps an inch or two shorter, but his wolf aura was unlike anything Osrod had ever felt before in his life. His wolf aura pulsed with a power and confidence that Osrod did not know could exist. Not even Osrod's father had such an aura and he was the strongest wolf Osrod had ever known in his life. The strange, dull silver armor was unlike anything Osrod had ever seen before and it wrapped around his thick body like a second skin. His mane of black hair was wild and shoulder length and his wolf eyes a yellow gold color that Osrod had again never seen before in his entire life. Nor had he ever seen a wolf with dual fangs as this Alpha had. Long, thick dual wolf fangs that looked as if they could rend flesh from bone as easily as cutting butter with a hot knife. As he looked around quickly, Osrod could see that almost all of the men and women who had entered the conference room in the last few minutes had the same dual fangs as they looked upon him and Secha with what could only be contempt and hate.

Whatever was happening here was far beyond him Osrod knew almost immediately. This had nothing to do with him, for he was completely lost at what was happening. Lost and Osrod had to admit, completely out of his depth. The men and women in this room now, their blood was purer than anything he had ever thought could exist among their people. He could smell that easily. His own blood, while pure, did not even come close to the blood flowing within those in this room. Even those who were not fully wolf, their blood was purer than anything he had ever smelled before. And all of them were focused on Secha.

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas stared at Sama Arhtai and wanted nothing more than to rip out her throat and watch her die in front of him. He held that anger in check however, feeling the love of his wives and mates coursing through him, the pride and love of his children around him filling his being. No, he would not succumb to the base instincts of the wolf and kill this woman for her crimes.

At least not yet.

Martin turned his head and looked at Osrod Aspion now. "I will only ask one time." He growled out the words. "Order your men to return to their bases and I will not have my son, his fellow Heralds and the Durcunusaan with them, turn them all to ash. This is your last and only chance to save their lives."

Martin saw Garget take the COM unit from the table and hold it out to Osrod.

"You are not a stupid leader of men Osrod Aspion." Garget spoke. "Give the order and save the lives of your soldiers."

With wide, confused eyes, Osrod took the Com unit and activated it. He was confused yes, but he wanted to know what was going on here for it was far more than he imagined. "This is King Osrod Aspion. Code Beta Four One. Return to your bases. I repeat, Code Beta Four One."

There was a pause and then the male voice replied. "Acknowledged. Beta Four One. Shall I leave a detachment sire?"

Osrod shook his head. "No. That will not be necessary. Everything is under control here."

"Understood, my Lord." The male voice answered.

Osrod looked at Garget as he took the COM unit back from him and then he turned to look at Martin. "Who... who are you?" He asked finally.

Martin smiled and turned his head to look at Secha. She was still staring at him with wide, fear filled eyes and then Martin smelled the stench of urine in the air. Secha Aspion, so-called Queen of the Lycavorian people, had lost control of her bladder and wet herself.

Loras still stood beside Retta and she shook her head in disgust as the smell of urine filled the room. "The terrible and feared Secha Aspion." Loras snorted loudly. "How pathetic you look now woman!"

Martin smiled at Loras' words. "We have a lot to talk about Sama Arhtai." Martin spoke once more. "And believe me when I tell you... you will tell me everything I want to know."

"I will tell you nothing monster!" Sama Arhtai screamed out. "Nothing!"

Martin felt them come into the conference room behind him and he smiled as he turned and saw Danny standing with his arms across his chest, Nayeca standing directly in front of him, her long white hair cascading all around her beautiful face and her four inch high elven ears prominently displayed for all to see. Even Garget and Lasun looked somewhat shocked at Danny's six foot five body, and the definition of the muscles that obviously adorned his form. He did not wear any sort of body armor, just a standard set of fatigues, and if Garget was any sort of judge, he was easily two hundred and fifty pounds of ripped muscle and bone. He looked even larger in person than when they had briefly seen him in the transmission on the ship in orbit above.

Martin turned back to Sama. "This is my mard fervon Sama Arhtai." Martin spoke. "The woman you see in front of him is one of his cherished wives and mates. She is a Drow elf. Her name is Nayeca but we in my family, we very affectionately call her Nubian." Martin smiled at Sama, the stench of her urine still pungent in the air. "Drow elves have a wonderful gift don't you know. They have the most uncanny ability to get information from people who don't want to give up that information willingly."

Sama glanced at Nayeca and saw her smile, revealing her fangs and her amber hued eyes promising pain of untold levels.

"You will... you will torture me!" Sama exclaimed. "That makes you no better than the rest of your foul bloodline! You are just like them!"

"Torture?" Martin asked her. "Who said anything about torture?" He shook his head. "No, torture is unreliable and messy. I don't like messy. Drugs on the other hand, drugs are very reliable. And very neat. I like neat." He said seeing her eyes go wide. "Just ask your daughter Roeza, she is singing like a canary right now."

"Where is Roeza?" Sama screamed out. "What have you done to her?! I will kill you for this! I will..."

"You will do nothing upae!" Martin snarled putting his face an inch from her nose and silencing her words as her eyes went even wider in fear. "I don't know what you think you are used to when it comes to my bloodline Sama Arhtai, but I am unlike anyone you have ever met before. I am not like my grandfathers Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo."

"Grandfathers!" Sama gasped in disbelief. "But... but how??"

Martin smiled once more, but it was more frightening than it was humorous. "Those you and Roeza brought with you, your cousins I believe, to kill those of my bloodline! To murder them!" Martin snapped. "They are now dead! All of them! They made the mistake of angering my first born son by trying to kill those he calls mother! My son Androcles... he has a really nasty mean streak when it comes to those who wish to do harm to those he calls mother! So do his siblings, many of whom are in this room right now, and they want to rip your heart out and feed on it in front of you!"

Sama/Secha glanced out of the corner of her eye and saw Denali and Deion glaring at her with murder in their wolf eyes, their dual fangs fully exposed and ready to rip into her flesh with glee. She tore her eyes away from them and looked back at Martin.

“Osrod do something!” Sama/Secha screamed out. “I am your Queen! Your mate! Why don’t you do something?”

Loras moved from beside Retta and Lazar now and stepped up beside Martin and stared at Sama/Secha. “You were never his wife and mate!” Loras spat in her face. “I may hate Osrod for what happened between us, but you... you have manipulated and deceived him for far too long. My eyes are now open Sama Arhtai. It has been you that has contrived everything that Osrod has acted on. He is not like his father and grandfather, yet you made it certain that he would be seen that way by others.” Loras shook her head. “No more.”

Martin looked at Loras and saw her nod her head. He stepped back slightly and seemed to issue an order with his thoughts and then two, large Durcunusaan soldiers appeared like magic in the doorway and moved up beside him. “Take her.” He said. “Secure her in a room on one of the upper floors away from where any patients might be. Full Security protocols. Nayeca will join you shortly.”

The two Durcunusaan nodded their heads and grasped Sama/Secha’s arms tightly as she began screaming. “No! Osrod stop them! Do something you fool man! Help me! Help me!”

Martin stood there and closed his eyes as she was dragged out, her voice carrying across the room and the corridor outside. Danny and Nayeca moved up beside him now and he looked at her, reaching for Danny’s hand at the same time. They grasped forearms and Martin leaned over and kissed Nayeca’s cheek.

“Lu’ria’s father is with this other woman.” Nayeca said softly. “I did not know he had come with us out here.”

Martin nodded his head. “Lu’ria’s parents did not want to remain on Earth while Lu’ria was out here. Daba is a Senator from Earth, so she remained on SPARTA’S WRATH with Ulana as a political delegation while the others remained in the Beta Quadrant. Re’lon, well Lu’ria’s father is a unique character to be sure.”

Nayeca nodded her head. “He is legendary among the Drow for his skill and cunning.”

Martin nodded his head. “No doubt.” He said. “Let Re’lon handle Rylin or Roeza or whatever the hell her name is. When you are done with this bitch, put together a full report and then come find me.”

Nayeca nodded her head. “Of course.”

Martin leaned over once more and kissed her cheek softly. “Thank you Nubian.” He said.

Nayeca smiled affectionately and squeezed his arm with her hand. “We are family Martin Leonidas. Always.”

Martin nodded his head. “That we are.”

Nayeca smiled and then turned to head out of the room while Martin turned and looked at Danny. “So?” He asked.

Danny shook his head. “I saw the building as we were coming in. Sloppy fervon. Very sloppy. I thought we trained Andro better than that.”

Martin chuckled. “In his defense, he lost his temper a bit.”

“A bit?” Danny hissed. “If that was a little bit, I don’t want to see him completely lose it.”

Martin grinned and nodded his head. “We should...” Martin lifted a finger to his ear and then tapped his jaw implant. “Hold on Andro...” He spoke as he pulled out the Holo Disc from the belt pouch at the small of his back. He flipped it over and activated it, placing it on the table top.

Every one in the room saw the small, full sized image of Androcles appear very clearly in the transmission, even Osrod Aspion, who looked utterly stunned at this type of technology he had never seen before. COLS was still using standard subspace communications that had to be viewed on monitors. Holographic transmissions were unheard of to him. Martin had ordered everyone to use their implants and standard Union COM Holo Discs while on the surface as opposed to their Etheric connections since the vast majority of Lycavorians on Jetania would not be able to use their natural Etheric power to its full capability. At least not yet.

“Go keto.” Martin spoke.

“The two Trams have reversed their direction father.” Andro spoke now. “They appear to be moving back to the bases they came from. Armen is tracking their progress and I have sent Dorian and Laren with Ryner and Ladur to trail them from the air.”

“And the item you were going to retrieve before you got sidetracked?” Martin asked him.

“Mari can tell you what it is father.” Andro replied. “Once she informed me of the threat against my mothers...”

Martin nodded his head in acknowledgement. "I know son." He said. He turned and looked at where Mari stood pressed up tightly to Deion's side. "Mari?"

"It's a Shielded STR 9 Pralor Power convertor Martin." Mari answered immediately. "I confirmed the power readings with Armen. It's an older model by current standards, but more than capable of powering two thirds of their capital city if they had managed to breach its protective shields and actually use it."

"They didn't?" Martin asked.

Mari shook her head quickly. "The STR 9s were equipped with multiple Rotating Fractal Encryptions. Most of our power convertors are. If you don't get each level of higher decryption correct, all of them reset. The variables are endless so..."

"That would explain why they haven't been able to tap into it even after all these years." Martin said.

Mari nodded her head. "It also needs to be activated by someone with Pralor genes." She told him. "Even if they had managed to break the encryption, they killed the only people able to use it when they executed the scientists they took."

Martin glanced back at Osrod now who was staring at him. "That was really stupid for several reasons." Martin told him. "You got anything to say for yourself sport?"

"I am Osrod Aspion, King of the Coalition of Lycavorian States!" Osrod blurted out the words. "I can smell that I am older than you and therefore that makes me the senior Alpha of Royal blood! I demand that you surrender your title, position and authority to me as the rightful King of our people!"

Loras cried out in stunned humor, wanting to erupt in a fit of laughter but instead her hands went to her face in shock over what he had just said. Lazar simply stood there and shook his head sadly while looking down into Retta's beautiful eyes.

Danny looked equally incredulous and he stared at him for a long moment before looking at Martin. "Did this fool just say what I think he said?"

Martin nodded his head with a small smile. "I think he did."

"Osrod, you misbegotten fool!" Loras snapped now. "You have no royal blood within you! And nor did your father or grandfather! Your grandfather pronounced himself King, and your father did the same! Before you stands the only King of true Royal Blood! The Mard Revik of the Lycavorian people!"

Osrod's eyes grew infinitely wider and the gasps of shock from Loras and others in the room was very evident as the Pralor PPM appeared in Martin's hand from the recessed holster on his right thigh. He had drawn it so fast that no one had even seen him move. Martin pressed the large barrel of the weapon to Osrod's forehead, right above the bridge of his nose.

"Give me one good reason why I shouldn't spread your brains all over the wall behind you and end your miserable life right here and now?" Martin growled menacingly.

Osrod Aspion was many things, some of them not very appealing, but he was certainly no coward. He froze in his spot but he held himself to his full height of six foot four and he did not flinch.

"I will not... I will not beg for my life!" Osrod snapped.

"I'm not asking you to beg asshole." Martin snapped at him, his dual fangs fully exposed and his yellow gold wolf eyes on full display once more.

Osrod closed his eyes slowly, accepting his fate. He had wanted to do so much more, and now his only regret was that he would not be able to feel Nitona's supple body against his one last time. He would not smell her sweet scent or feel the touch of her hair in his hands. I should have made her my first Queen. My only Queen. Osrod thought to himself as he prepared to die.

Martin's head tilted to the side slightly, and he lowered his Etheric shields just enough to reach out and sense the surface thoughts of Osrod Aspion. He could see the clear images of the stunning red haired female in his mind. That is all that occupied Osrod's thoughts right now. Not power or greed or revenge. But regret. Regret for not...

Martin pulled the PPM back quickly from Osrod's forehead but lashed out viciously with his left fist, connecting directly on Osrod's jaw with the Etheric fueled punch. It wasn't strong enough to break his jaw, but it was certainly strong enough to cause Osrod's eyes to fly open in pain and then blackness washed over him as his body slumped to the floor unconscious.

Martin turned quickly as he returned the PPM to its holster and he looked at Loras. "Who is Nitona?" He asked.

Loras looked confused. “Nitona?” She asked. “Nitona Aspion. She is... she is Osrod’s fourth Queen. The youngest of them. Why?”

“Tell me about her.” Martin spoke.

Lazar stepped forward now. “Secha... Sama... she hated her. Risi and Braaha too.” He began. “She is half Mountain Pack King Leonidas and...”

Martin held up his hand stopping Lazar’s words. “You have claimed my daughter Lazar Ranev. You have made her happier than we have ever seen her. You do not call me King. Is that clear?” Lazar looked somewhat flustered but Retta squeezed his arm tightly with a brilliant smile and he nodded his head finally. “Now tell me about her.”

“Her father is a respected Plains Pack Officer in the military.” Lazar continued. “He is a common sense type officer. Nitona’s mother went against her Mountain Pack after her father claimed her, refusing to return. They live on the outskirts of Drinda now. Nitona is their youngest child, but my father... Osrod... he followed all of the normal mating rites for Nitona. In all honesty, I believe he... I believe that he was beginning to change somewhat because of her influence. It was one of the reasons Secha hated her so.”

Martin turned to the holo disc that was still active and held Andro in it. “Keto, I’m sending Mari and the rest of your team to you. Recover this Pralor device and then find this Nitona Aspion. Bring them both back here.”

“Father they will not just give it to us.” Andro said.

“Non-lethal munitions Androcles.” Martin told him. “These are our people as well. Too many of them have already died because of the stupidity of those they call leaders. They are arrogant and have a serious chip on their shoulders. It’s time to knock that chip off. Danny has already started that... now you finish it. No more killing keto.”

Andro nodded his head without pause. “Una gur tur aden medwan.” (It will be done father)

Martin watched the transmission disappear and he looked at Danny. “You did what needed to be done fervon.” He said softly.

Danny nodded his head. “Doesn’t mean I have to like it.” He said in reply.

Martin reached up and placed his hand on Danny’s shoulder and squeezed him hard. “And that is what makes us different.” He said softly.

Garget and Lasun stepped closer to the two men. “What about Osrod?” Garget asked.

Martin looked over at his inert form and then back to Garget. “I have a feeling that we are going to discover quite a bit of information in the next few hours.” He said. “It may very well paint Osrod Aspion in a different light.”

Both Garget and Lasun looked surprised at this. “Do you know something King Leonidas? About Osrod?” Lasun asked.

Martin shook his head. “A feeling, that’s all.” Martin answered him. “Whatever Osrod’s fate, his son will answer to you and Garget for his crimes. Your people would put him on trial, yes.”

Lasun nodded his head. “Yes.”

Martin nodded his head. “And so would we.” He spoke. “His fate is yours to decide. I have bigger fish to fry.” He looked back to Danny. “Thoti?”

“His ship is in orbit.” Danny answered with a nod. “He’s waiting on your word to bring Lorendo to the surface. Dy, Bella and Cirith will be here in an hour.”

“Garget... I need a cell in your base if that is possible. A holding area.” Martin spoke turning to him. “Far away from others.”

Garget nodded his head. “Of course. The lowest level of our base has such a place. One way in and one way out. Completely secure. It was our weapons armory until the upper levels were finished.”

Martin nodded his head. “That is what I need.” He said. He looked back to Danny. “Get in touch with Delnash fervon. He’ll want to be here for this.”

Danny grabbed Martin’s arm and waited until his eyes focused on him. “What is going on Marty?” He asked. “There is something that you aren’t telling me. Us. You and Andro both. You can’t keep it inside fervon. You know that.”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “When Andro gets back.” Martin said. “When he gets back, then I will tell you what we have discovered.” Martin reached up and put his hand behind Danny’s neck. “All of it.”

“I’m not going to like it am I?” Danny asked softly as Garget and Lasun stood there wondering what they were talking about.

Martin shook his head. “No.” He replied softly. “And my staanio Reva will like it even less.”

“That bad?” Danny asked.

“Is genocide ever good?” Martin asked softly.

Danny’s eyes went wide at that word. “Carians.”

“That’s putting it mildly.” Martin spoke.

CHAPTER SEVENTY-ONE

JETANIA

WARIM MEDICAL CENTER

MAIN CONFERNECE ROOM

The family reunion was semi-bittersweet only because all of them knew that two of their brothers and one of their sisters and their wives and mates were not among them.

Martin Leonidas had crushed Dysea, Isabella and Cirith to him in an embrace of love and devotion as he nuzzled them furiously, not caring in the least who might have been watching. Dysea and Cirith both reciprocated this action while Bella let her hands wander all over his face and shoulders in delightful bliss as she showered his skin with kisses. It had always been this way, and while Isabella may not have been able to feel his wolf aura with her senses, his Etheric resonance managed to do exactly the same thing to her when he touched her with it. It was the way all of them now pulsed her with love and desire, even her children, and it made Isabella Leonidas sing in happiness and pride.

Their greetings with Aricia, Anja and For'mya were just as loving and blissful, all of them touching each other in some way constantly. They were Union Queens yes, but they were also intimate lovers and the very best of friends. Under Dysea and Isabella’s skillful tutelage, Cirith had embraced more about her vampire and wolf blood than at any other time in her life. Though her father had tried to teach her what he could, there were things that even he did not know, and Dysea and Isabella had filled in the knowledge he had been unable to teach her. In the last year, Cirith had learned more about herself, her wants and desires, her many skills, and her place in the grand scheme of things. She had fully accepted who she was now, a proud and devoted wife to Martin Leonidas and the sixth recognized Queen of the Lycavorian Union. This task had been happily undertaken by Deia back within the Alpha Quadrant, and just six months ago, Cirith Leonidas was officially named and coronated as the sixth Queen of the Lycavorian Union in absentia.

Androcles and his siblings had been completely respectful of their parents and given them a full hour together before none of them could contain themselves any longer and moved into the conference room. They were quickly followed by Gorgo, Dasha, Dynina, Jezima and Meral with Reva’s sphere right behind them and then finally Doseb, Irani and Loras. Martin stood to one side of the huge room now, Isabella in one arm and Anja in the other, his face at peace as his senses filled with the wonderful scent of family. It filled the huge room, saturated it really, and it was the sweetest thing Martin had ever smelled outside of his Queens.

The potent smell of Mahanlo-Leonidas blood he now knew.

Martin Leonidas had always been dedicated to his family. Even before he knew who and what he was, Danny and his team were his family and he had protected them viciously. Now Martin knew why. Now he understood. As the years passed and each of his children had joined this world, the devotion to family only grew stronger and stronger within him, the love for his wives and mates grew more intense and complete. Everything they had discovered in this last year plus had only increased this devotion within him even more. And now Yuriko and Filrian and Andro and Sadi would soon give him his first grandchildren. He may have thought he was far too young to be a grandfather, but Martin looked forward to this day almost as much as his children.

Yuriko and Filrian had arrived by their single Shrouded KADEN transport, Eliani now quizzing her older sister and Filrian both on how she was doing, what she was eating and if she was getting enough exercise while Jezima and Meral got acquainted with them since it was the first time they had met Yuriko and her Hadarian husband. Yuriko Leonidas may have been an adopted daughter to Martin, but to him, to his wives and mates, to his other children, she was a Leonidas through and through. There had never been a question about that.

Lisisa, Arduri and Iama were crowded around Sadi, Sehri and Lu'ria, while Ne'Veha, Carisia and Caliria were having an animated discussion with Eirene, Miseo, Normya and their mother For'mya. Aricia and Dysea were standing close together with Gorgo, Dasha, Reva's sphere and Dynina as Dysea had not yet met either of them and they were taken with Dysea's platinum blond hair and the delicate tattoos that adorned her body. Retta was pressed tightly to Lazar's side as Doseb, Irani and Loras got to know her better. Calyb was the only one not present with them in the huge conference room, but Martin knew where he was and what he was doing, and he could not have been prouder of his young son. Mari, Emylea, Murano and Tobia stood with Deion, Denali, Tir'ut, Kalis and Serale discussing something that had Murano and Denali looking completely lost while Tobia was pressed against his side looking utterly enchanted. Cirith, Sheva and Onera were speaking in a small group with Dorian, Laren, and Laren's parents Yokra and Robati, as well as Byron and Namiri, small fits of laughter coming from one of them every so often as Dorian Leonidas was his usual humorous self. He had become another one liner comedian within their family along with Denali and this fact had endeared the two brothers to everyone even more since they could put people at ease in about twenty seconds. Byron Leonidas had claimed Namiri already, her face brilliantly happy and at peace. Like her sister Emylea with Deion and Mari, Namiri was never more than an arm's length from Byron. Saydia Daret and Namiri's sisters knew about Namiri and Byron and they could not have been happier for her. It was not the arranged marriage that the Tasmor Quorum had expected, but even they were now coming around to Saydia's way of thinking and had embraced what was happening fully.

What made Martin Leonidas happiest of all was seeing Zarah and Lucia. They stood with Andro, Jomann and Dutkne now, both of them pressing close to Dutkne and looking at him with adoration in their eyes. Dutkne had finally gotten around to coming down from SPARTA'S WRATH at Andro's insistence. Martin knew that he did not want to pressure Zarah and Lucia even as much as he craved them, but Dutkne was surprised to find that Zarah and Lucia had already come to the realization that he was the one meant for them and they, for him. Zarah Leonidas had blossomed in these last months being among her father and mothers and under the watchful instruction of Radem. His teachings had brought both of them out of their shells and now they were confident and strong young women who knew what they wanted. Lucia's unfettered love for her and Zarah's equally powerful love for Lucia in return had been the biggest medicine that Zarah had needed to put the assault behind her and move on with her life. Zarah did that with Lucia's help and now they wanted Dutkne as much as he wanted them and they were able to admit it and act on it. His arms were around their waists possessively, and though Martin knew he had not yet claimed them, that would come in time and Martin was not the least bit upset about their choice in a mate. It might not happen soon, for Dutkne was a very honorable Alpha wolf, and he wanted to court them in the proper way. That did not mean he would not ensure that everyone knew they were his, something that Zarah and Lucia were only too happy to acknowledge for anyone who saw them. Dutkne was Wayonn's grandson and Andro's Praetorian Mage, and Martin could not hope for a man who would love his daughter and Lucia more.

His family and the Lycavorian Union are what Martin Leonidas existed for now. Every individual in this room was now marked with the crest of their bloodline and it made each of them walk a little taller and hold their heads a little higher and that, more than anything, that made Martin Leonidas feel pride and love for all of them.

Martin also knew that he had family out there among the stars who bore this same crest on their bodies. Family he had not even met or known existed until only a short time ago, and they were in trouble. He did not want to truly know the extent of that trouble, for it frightened him in a way that no one but Andro and Danny could sense, but he would listen to his people, and then he would make a decision. And he swore to himself that anyone who had harmed his blood would pay for their folly. In spades.

There were very few men or women within the Lycavorian Union that could just walk through the levels of intense security that now surrounded the Warim Medical Center and into a gathering of this many Leonidas family members in one spot.

Colonel Thoti was one of those individuals.

Aside from the three hundred or so Durcunusaan that now were posted all around the hospital grounds, every dragon that was bound to a Leonidas family member now either lazily circled the Medical Center or rested on the roof of the building keeping careful watch. All of them knew what was happening within the building for they could see with their Bonded Ones eyes and they felt just as much happiness as they did. Torma and Isheeni had not had nearly all of their offspring so close to them in a long time, and while Cemath was absent with Resumar, his siblings all longed to see and feel him once more.

Martin saw Thoti nod to the Durcumusaan troops outside the door as it opened and then he strode into the huge room without pause. Loras and her parents could only stare in awe at the two Avatars that followed him, Avi at nearly seven and a half feet tall, while Chiron was barely six foot.

Reva also took notice of Chiron entering but for different reasons, and she watched as Thoti moved over to where Martin was standing.

Thoti bowed his head slightly to Anja and Isabella. "My Queens." He said.

Isabella smiled and reached out to squeeze his arm in greeting. "Thoti, it has been a long time our friend. How is Duewa?"

Thoti smiled at her and nodded his head. "She is doing very well Isabella, thank you." He spoke realizing once more just how close he was to this powerful family. He had commanded the Royal Villa detachment for over a decade and he had jumped at the chance to join Martin and the others on this mission when it had begun. All of them insisted on the Durcumusaan that were closest to them calling them by their first names when not in public, and Thoti was among a handful of those men and women who were allowed this. "Adjusting far more quickly thanks to Anja, Aricia and For'mya."

Isabella nodded. "Good. It will be wonderful to see her again."

Anja smiled then. "Just think Thoti." She commented. "Pretty soon she'll be under all of our influences."

Martin grinned at the look on Thoti's face and Anja chuckled as she leaned up on her toes and planted a friendly kiss on his cheek. "Don't worry Thoti... we won't corrupt her too bad." She said before squeezing Martin's arm. "I'm going to check on Yuriko before we start Lover." She said.

Martin nodded and watched her move gracefully away from him. He turned back to Thoti. "Lorendo?"

Thoti nodded his head. "He is quite secure in the armory Garget brought us to. Four Durcumusaan and four of Garget's men are standing guard. We have sealed that floor of the base with another dozen security personnel as well. It is hardly used now according to Garget, which suits our purposes."

"Delnash?"

"He will arrive tomorrow around midday." Thoti answered. "He was most pleased."

Martin grinned. "I just bet he was." He said. "Thank you Thoti."

"After what he has done Martin, it was truly my pleasure." Thoti told him.

Martin nodded and put his hand on his shoulder. "Now get your ass on your ship and go back to Duewa."

"Martin, I will stay." Thoti spoke quickly. "I..."

Martin shook his head. "I told Duewa I would let you go back to Ventori when we had that fucker in custody. Don't make a liar out of me, ok. You've done enough, Thoti. Go spend some down time with your wife and mate. Trust me, there will be plenty to do in the coming weeks."

Thoti smiled and nodded his head. "I look forward to it." He spoke.

Martin nodded his head. "He say anything to you?" Martin asked him.

Thoti chuckled now. "He has had plenty to say... until Ranala had heard enough of his ranting and hit him right in the mouth. Once. His fat ass hit the deck three seconds later and when he woke up he kept his mouth shut."

Martin winced at this for he knew Ranala Yel'ine well. She had been a core member of Thoti's Durcumusaan detachment for almost a decade now and the elven female was one of the toughest women Martin had ever met next to his Queens. She was also fiercely and thoroughly devoted to her elven husband who was also Thoti's Communications Officer.

"Now, he was ranting again at Garget's men when I left, about how he was a political prisoner and he would reward them if they let him go." Thoti said. "Until one of them stuck his weapon under his double chin and told him to be silent."

Martin laughed at that and nodded his head. "I would have loved to see the look on his face." He leaned over and kissed Isabella deeply and then looked at Thoti once more. "Get going Thoti. I don't need Duewa on my case as well as my Queens."

Thoti chuckled and nodded his head. "We will see you in a few days then?"

"More likely a week or so, but soon. Now go." Martin told him.

Thoti bowed his head once more and then turned to head for the door. Martin's face changed as Thoti walked away and Isabella detected this within his demeanor and she looked at him.

"Martin?" She asked softly.

He looked at her and gave her a soft smile. "Time to get back to work I suppose." He said.

"What is wrong husband?" Bella asked him.

"You'll know soon enough Bella." He answered her softly. "It probably won't be good. Bad news has become a norm out here. Tell the others to start sitting down if you would. This may take a while, and some of them are not going to like the decisions that we've made." He took note of Reva's sphere moving up behind her and he noticed that Chiron had stopped moving towards him with Avi.

Isabell nodded her head and moved off as Reva's sphere glided silently up to him and he looked at the single white light on the front of the sphere. "Staania?" He spoke.

"What is going on Martin?" Reva asked him. "I was not aware that Chiron had left Lorenu. Why did you not tell me? Why is he here?"

"He activated one of his secondary Avatars and they are with the base." Martin told her. "I felt it would be more helpful if he came with us. He agreed. He has knowledge that can only help us. Now, why don't you ask me the question that I know you want to ask staania."

Reva's sphere stared at him silently for a moment. "That phrase... you and Androcles both spoke it. I heard him speak it, and then I heard you speak it. How... how did you know that phrase?"

"You heard me?" Martin asked her.

"The audio receptors of this sphere are very advanced Martin Leonidas... and do not avoid my question." Reva scolded him. "Answer me."

Martin shook his head. "I don't know grandmother." He answered her honestly. "It just... it just came to me at that instant."

"One of you speaking that phrase... that could be happenstance." Reva spoke. "Not both of you Martin. With Androcles and you... it was so clear and so..."

"So, what...?" Martin asked her. "This phrase has meaning doesn't it grandmother? What meaning?"

Martin felt Andro come up beside him and Reva's sphere glanced to him and then back to Martin. Reva's sphere slowly floated further away from the table and others in the room and they followed without question. Finally, she stopped next to the large window and spun to look at them.

"It was what Daniho... it is what your grandfather said to our people the morning of the last day of the war." Reva told them. "It was a speech he gave to them. It was carried across the planet and to all of our forces and he did not even know it. He never intended it to be part of our future history. I remember those words as if... as if he spoke them only yesterday." She said softly.

"Tell us staania." Androcles asked her softly.

"From far away, across the mountains deep, we will stand as they charge." She began. "We will raise our weapons from the ground, and we will not back down. This day we will fight the final battle to end this war of suffering. Look all around you, for the snow on Cerath is melting now. It is the Time of Reckoning." Martin looked at his son, Andro's azure blue orbs meeting his gaze for a long moment. "The Onab, our people, after the battle, after it was all over, they began to call it the Mahanlo Creed. They..."

"What?" Martin asked her.

"They believed it was Daniho's blessing upon them." Reva answered him. "To them it was proof that he saw the end of the war then. That we would have our vengeance upon the Iais'Kai. The day of that battle was one of the warmest in recorded history on Cerath and the snow was melting in the high mountains. No one knows how Daniho knew this, but he did. That is why they named it the Mahanlo Creed. The rallying cry of our family and our blood."

"Carians." Andro spoke softly as he lowered his head.

Reva's sphere turned fully to face Martin. "You know something staaniaketo. You and Androcles." She spoke. "Something you and your son are not telling anyone. Something that you are not telling me. And it has to do with our family, with our blood. I can feel it. What is it?"

"Do you trust me staania?" Martin asked her.

"You ask me that? Now?" Reva demanded.

"You know me." Martin told her. "You have watched me grow even from afar. You know how I am."

"You will not act until you have all the possible information at your disposal." Reva told him. "Yes."

"Then let me do that now grandmother." Martin said to her.

"It is... it is that bad?" Reva asked.

Martin shook his head. "No. It is unknown right now." He answered. "But you know how I will act in any regard grandmother."

Reva was silent for a long moment. "Very well." She finally told him. "I have your word to me?"

Martin nodded his head. "You do."

"And mine staania." Andro said.

"Then I will... I will be patient." She said. "When will you... when will you transfer me out of this infernal machine?"

"Tomorrow." Martin told her. "The day after tomorrow at the latest. Anja wants to make sure she has everything she needs and then we will go find this place. Andro, Laren, Dorian and I will find it. I promise you."

"Reva!" Gorgo's voice called for her from across the room and they turned to see her beside Yuriko and Sadi with Anja, Dasha and Dynina.

"Protect our blood Martin, Andro." Reva spoke softly.

"Always." Martin and Andro answered together.

Reva paused and then her sphere turned and glided away across the room. Andro looked at his father then.

[Father.] Andro spoke within the connection only he and his father shared.

[Re'lon has finished his first interrogation of this Roeza or Rylin bitch.] Martin told his son. [He'll do one more. Your Tenna Nayeca is almost complete with Sama Arhtai. When we are done here we'll meet with them at Garget's base.]

[Did he give you an idea?] Andro asked his father.

Martin met his son's eyes. [It isn't good keto.] He replied. [We...] Martin stopped as Chiron moved up beside them. "Chiron... now is not..."

"King Martin... Kesas Pengot has sent us a message. I felt you would want to see it right away." Chiron told him holding out the data pad. "I transcribed it to written form so as not to raise suspicion. You can view the Holo message at your leisure."

Martin took the pad with wide eyes and quickly began reading, holding it out so that Andro could move closer and read it with him. They did not see Avi move up beside Chiron, but they felt the presence of the tall avatar almost at once and for father and son this gave them more comfort than most people would ever realize. Martin looked up at Chiron after a long moment.

"When did we get this?" He asked quickly.

"We received it only forty-seven minutes ago," Chiron answered. "I verified the content and then transcribed it to text to bring it to you."

"Sibfla!" Martin hissed softly.

Andro took the pad from his father's hand. "This changes things father." He spoke.

"It damn sure does." Martin snapped. "Why did they wake him up?!"

"I told you Kesas Pengot is a careful man Martin Leonidas." Chiron responded. "And the more we discover, the more it becomes clear that what we feared has indeed taken place. He will do nothing that will endanger those he now protects."

"But if what this says is true, if they have these Blood detectors like that upae Roeza had, and spies among them, then the Arhtai Pack will know they have woken him." Andro spoke now. "Why risk that?"

"If I had to make a supposition..." Chiron answered and he saw Martin nod his head in response. "They woke Lylor Kirek in order to see if the crest of your family had appeared on his shoulder. It would be the clearest and most absolute sign to them that you actually live Martin. You must remember, there has been no communication between our two groups in nearly four million years. Daniho and Ashten had the means to see that their sister and those that were with her were alive, but they still could not communicate with her nor did they know their location. This was done on purpose so that..."

Martin nodded his head. "I know." He said softly. "Grandfather and Tenne Ashten were closer to the Iais'Kai in terms of distance than Tenna Kelia and those that went with her. They did not want her location revealed if the Iais'Kai found them on Lycavore."

Chiron nodded his head. "Yes."

"Four days." Martin said softly. "Five maximum before they can no longer hide it."

Chiron nodded his head again. "That is what Kesas projects, yes. He may be able to delay them another day after that, but then they will come for Lylor Kirek. It will be at least several hours before they can speak with Lylor Kirek, but they will have their answer the moment they bring him out of stasis. It will take twelve hours before the effects of such a prolonged stasis wear off however. It will be less for Lady Reva because of what Lady Anja has planned."

"What are we talking about Chiron?" Martin asked.

"I have seen the medical regimen that Lady Anja has begun to use in order to prepare Lady Reva's physical form to come out of stasis, and it is quite amazing, but it will not be able to compensate for everything as you know. Lady Anja also knows this and she is doing it on purpose. Lady Reva's recovery will be faster than Lylor Kirek's because they do not have Lady Anja with them to direct what they do once he is awakened. His senses will be distorted for a few hours and his full vision will not begin returning to him for at least an hour. Then it will be a slow process for him to regain full function of his body. Twelve hours at least according to Lady Anja's estimate when I asked her. I would not try to clash with her on this. Right now, she is the foremost medical mind in the universe as we know it King Martin, even I, as a First-Generation Avatar, even I would not attempt to dispute her word in this matter."

"Smart man." Martin said with a slight grin. "Avi...?"

"SPARTA'S WRATH can arrive within minutes of the decision to leave, Martin." Avi answered knowing what Martin was going to ask him. "Armen has already confirmed this and put SPARTA'S WRATH on stand by. He decided to remain onboard in order to ensure that we were ready but he is listening. The Onab Portal Drive is a wondrous thing and the Worker Drones are fine tuning it even more. We have Pakar Six's coordinates so it would be a simple matter to jump there. Our other ships however, depending on which ones we bring with us, they will need at least a day to make the trip. Even with our new Hypermatter Fusion Drives and the ARIZONA's Quantum Resonance reactor, we will need to plot a course around Kintaur space and several spacial anomalies. They will need to make four jumps just to avoid even the rudimentary sensor grids that the Kintaur have."

"We'd be going in blind." Andro spoke now. "We have no intelligence on what the Arhtai Pack has or does not have."

Martin nodded his head in agreement. "Agreed. Hopefully we can get some of that from our two prisoners." He looked at Avi. "Avi, if we pulled all of the Worker Drones from SPARTA'S WRATH and our other ships, how many ships do you and Armen think that they could refit with Portal Drives in say two days?"

Avi's orange hued eyes blinked several times as he processed this in seconds. "Armen says the refit was conducted quickly on SPARTA'S WRATH because of her Pralor origins. In many cases, some of the most advanced Pralor ship technology is derived in some way from Onab technology. With the exception of Zaala Randall, who would at least understand and be able to work on the concept of the Drives, no one but the engineers with Lady Dynina has sufficient knowledge to do such a refit. We would need all of their engineers who worked on the project brought here from Lorenu with their equipment and materials in order to do what you ask."

Martin shook his head. "No way. I'm not risking them."

Avi nodded his head. "Understood. Given that, the only ships that we could refit in the field in the time frame that you wish are the ARIZONA and the PREMONITION. They are closer to actual Pralor technology than our other ships. It would be a simple matter to field refit them with Portal Drives. Well... it would be easier at least." He amended his statement.

“Do it, Avi. Make sure Armen takes charge of it.” Martin spoke the order. “And keep it quiet for now. I’ll inform Miranda and Zaala.”

Avi nodded his head. “Armen says it will be done.” He said.

“We need more Intel, father.” Androcles said.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes... we do.” He looked at Chiron. “How long before Lylor is able to communicate and move around, Chiron? Based on what you know?”

Chiron’s head tilted to the side slightly. “Tomorrow morning at the earliest if they have only just woken him in the last hour or so.”

Martin nodded his head. “Send Kesas another burst transmission. Have him prepared to speak to us tomorrow at midday. And I want Lylor there as well.”

Chiron nodded his head. “I will send it right away.”

“...Did not come to these decisions lightly.” Martin was speaking from the head of the table where he stood between Aricia’s and Anja’s chairs. There were four holo transmissions active in the room, one with Miranda in it from orbit, one with Delnash transiting from Artaaya aboard his ship, the third with Saydia Daret and Chief Justice Nalmos from Ventori and the last was General Koguth’Juturi from Honelze. “Your mothers and I have already discussed them thoroughly and decided it was for the best. We just haven’t had the time to tell everyone until now. Some of those plans have now changed given what we have discovered here on Jetania and Ventori, but we are going to try and stick with most of them as best we are able.”

Martin took a deep breath and then continued.

“As all of you know, Manne has been officially designated as the first Union colony world outside of the Alpha Quadrant. I have appointed Ceale’Juturi as the interim Governor with her husband Nedoli’Juturi as head of the local garrison there.” All of them could see Koguth’s face in the transmission and he looked absolutely stunned. “The 1st Elven Engineer Division has now deployed a full brigade to Manne and they have already begun establishing the primary settlement. Those of the Juturi pride that did not deploy to Honelze are now working on quickly setting up defenses and housing within the settlement perimeter. Right now, it is being called Manne City, but that may change in the future. The first group of ships from the Union Reclamation Bureau has already left Union space under heavy escort. A dozen URB carriers have been refitted with our Hypermatter Fusion Drives and they should arrive in four weeks with about three hundred thousand men, women and children. Families. Engineers. Doctors. Scientists. You name it. Among them are two thousand of our Nodan brothers and they will begin putting the PROMETHEUS Command Station together in orbit. Those men that have defected from my...” Martin paused for a second and then continued after looking at his mother quickly. “From Marshall Pusintin’s command have turned out to be invaluable. Pian and Jalersi were able to get all of their families out of Kavalian space before they locked down their borders. They are on the way to Manne as well. Manne City is going to be something special to be sure.” Martin looked at the image of Delnash in the transmission. “Delnash?”

Delnash leaned forward in the chair he was sitting in, everyone keenly aware of Avatar 27 just to his right. “I have authorized the Pralor Science Bureau and the Pralor Defense Bureau to deploy half a dozen Research and Material ships to Manne. Along with them, a dozen of our most powerful warships. It is all we could spare given the imminent arrival of the Svorag. They will aid in setting up new Planetary Defensive Fortifications using the lost schematics of Pralor weaponry brought back to us by Murano and Androcles. The Science Bureau will work hand in hand with their Union counterparts to begin a colonization blueprint for Manne that will not affect the environmental status of the planet or the indigenous species. I actually... I had to beat back the number of volunteers that came forward for this operation. The sins of our past are being tossed aside by our people and now it is time for us to move forward.”

“You can spare that many ships Chief Elder?” Androcles asked now.

Delnash nodded his head. “Sashan has assured me that we will not be limiting our ability to defend ourselves or project what power we do have by doing this. He has rededicated himself to his position, as have we all.”

“What about the Svorag Mother ship father?” Denali asked now.

Martin nodded his head and motioned to Yuriko. “Yuriko?”

Yuriko leaned forward at the table. “The Svorag Mother Ship is maintaining its base course, though at only a quarter of its former speed. Apparently, the ass whooping you guys gave them on Ventori has made them overly cautious.” Yuriko said with a smile. “OMEN THREE is shadowing them, but from a larger distance now. The other vessels with the Mother Ship are staying in close formation and not deviating from the base course either. We have run several different scenarios, and all of them have come to the same time frame. At present speed, the Svorag Mother Ship will arrive at Honelze in four weeks and two days. Give or take an hour or so.”

“They slowed that much arande?” Andro asked now.

Yuriko nodded her head. “We were surprised as well, but they haven’t altered course or speed since the attack on Ventori. Most everyone now agrees with our mother Anja and father in their assessment when they say the leader of these Svorag is a turned Lycavorian Alpha who has retained most of his instinctual nature. He is probably one of those the Svorag took from staania Dynina’s people during one of their research missions after they arrived in this quadrant of space and settled on Lorenu. All evidence that we have points to this fact, including all of the information that Thoti recently was able to obtain from the computers on Lorendo’s base above Hador.”

“Lorendo is in custody...” Martin spoke now. “And once Delnash arrives we’ll begin to question him. From the information Thoti was able to discover, and intelligence given to us by those Pralor scientists working with Lorendo that had begun to see he had lost his nubous mind, it seems he has lost control of all the Svorag he created. This Svorag Alpha is now in control of them and that is why Lorendo has been trying so desperately to cover things up. And to find a way to regain control of them.”

“That hasn’t worked out so well for him it appears.” Murano commented from where he stood behind Tobia’s chair.

Martin shook his head. “No, it has not.” Martin agreed. “And it has cost us a lot of people because Lorendo kept it silent and wanted to play hero. More Pralor and Lycavorian casualties through the years, but now also at least several thousand Tasmor given what we discovered on Ventori. Now, based on that information I have made a couple of decisions that I would not normally have made. I conferred with Deia and Dilios extensively and they in turn have spoken with the Union Security Committee. The decision was unanimous.” Martin looked at Saydia in the transmission. “As of ten days ago, the Tasmor people have become interim members of the United Lycavorian Union. Ratification of this will go before the full Union Senate at their next session but Deia and Dilios don’t expect any major issues. Sovereign Regent Daret, the only thing left is for you and the Tasmor Quorum to agree and accept this and it will be done.”

Saydia Daret was utterly stunned into silence as her expression of disbelief showed. This was not something that she had even considered would happen and she was completely shocked beyond belief.

“King... King Leonidas I...” Saydia stammered.

“The Union has few laws Saydia, but those that we do are enforced to the letter. We do not interfere with the internal government policies as long as their goals are the same as the Union’s. Prosperity and peace for everyone. All of our people, no matter their species.” Martin spoke calmly. “The Tasmor people have shown that their values and morals are nearly the same as ours. There are differences yes, just as there are between all of the Lycavorian Union internal governments, but they are not insurmountable, as I think you will agree two of your daughters and two of my sons have already discovered.”

Saydia looked at Emylea and Namiri in the transmission and she nodded her head. “Yes, they have.” She said with a smile. “I believe I can speak for my people when I say that we would be honored King Leonidas.”

Martin smiled and nodded his head. “I was hoping you would say that.” He said. “To further help that along, and to assure the members of your Quorum and your people that we are sincere in our words and deeds, two additional Lycavorian Union URB Carriers will deploy to your homeworld. On them will be four thousand scientists, engineers and technicians that will begin an accelerated training regimen for your own people. Also with them will be four billion metric tons of equipment and supplies that will facilitate the refitting of a good portion of your ships with advanced systems to bring them up to speed with many of our own ships. There will be a lot more with them, engineering and medical personnel and supplies, but this is going to be a huge jump into the future for the Tasmor people. In many different fields.”

“Martin, the Kintaur will...” Saydia began.

Martin shook his head. “The Kintaur are a non-factor now.” He told her. “I took it upon myself to use the information Delnash had about the Kintaur to send their leadership a very pointed message.”

Saydia leaned forward in the chair she sat in. “A message? What message?” She asked.

Martin nodded again. “I told them what was taking place.” He told her. “I told them that all contact with the Tasmor people and Kintaur ceases at once. All past transgressions will be forgiven but not forgotten. All Tasmor and Pralors that they may hold prisoner will be returned at once without further harm or when the ratification of your inclusion into the Lycavorian Union becomes final, I will send enough ships and troops to their little area of space to take them back by force and I will drop kick their ugly asses so hard they won’t recover for a millennium.”

Saydia’s eyes nearly bugged out of her head at this, while many in the room with Martin could not contain their smiles of amusement. “You... you told them this?” Saydia gasped finally.

“I used very nice language though.” Martin said with a smile.

“Nice language my mida.” Anja spat with a huge smile.

Delnash was smiling in his holo transmission and he also leaned forward now as well. “For my part, Sovereign Regent Daret, I offer you the sincerest apologies of my people for what Lorendo has had a hand in doing. To try and make up for unknowingly turning our backs on you and your people, I have equaled the Union’s display and efforts. Once the situation with the Svorag is finished, we will be sending ships and personnel to your homeworld to assist Martin’s people. It is also time for my people to begin reaching out and making friends instead of turning away those who could be allies and friends to us. I would like that to begin with you and the Tasmor.”

“Gods... Martin this is not... this is not what I expected.” Saydia stammered once more.

Martin smiled. “Predictable is boring. I hate boring.” He said. “I hope then, you won’t be adverse to Namiri returning to Union space with Byron.”

“What?” Namiri gasped now from where she sat.

“Father?” Byron spoke as well, a look of surprise on his own face.

Martin met his son’s gaze and nodded his head. “Your mothers and I did not come to this decision lightly keto.” He said.

“I don’t want to go back!” Byron hissed softly.

Martin nodded his head. “I know, but that is what we have decided.”

“Why?” Byron demanded now.

“Because someone of our blood, of Mahanlo-Leonidas blood, must always rule.” For'mya spoke now, her voice calm and measured as it always was.

“You are my youngest son Byron.” Martin spoke again. “If something were to happen to me, to your mothers, to your brother Androcles, then it would fall to you keto. Your brothers and sisters agree.”

“And I ask again... why?!”

“Because you are not like us fervon.” Eliani spoke now, everyone turning to look at her as she turned to face her brother. “This is our path Byron. We have chosen this life we live. You have chosen another path and that is why... that is why we all love you so much.” Byron fell silent and the look of anger that was on his face immediately lessened. “Father and our mothers asked each of us Byron... each of us said it needed to be you without a thought. You are the future of our family fervon, and we don’t want that future to be...”

“We don’t want that future tainted by blood.” Androcles finished the sentence. “You are something that none of us will ever be fervon. You are a scholar. If we are to be known many thousands of years from now, we want them to know that we were a complete family. Not just soldiers and warriors, but scholars and thinkers. You are the beginning of that.”

“Your spot in the Elear Musical Academy is waiting for you.” Martin told him. “Between your classes there, you and Namiri will be studying with your grandfather L’tian and Deia about the intricacies of diplomatic work. I would also like Namiri to take the role as Interim Tasmor Ambassador to the Union.”

“Me?!” Namiri gasped again.

“With your permission, of course Saydia?” Martin finished.

Saydia nodded her head. “I think it is a fine decision.” She said quickly. “One that my daughter would excel at.”

“You are a Leonidas now Namiri...” Martin spoke. “A Mahanlo-Leonidas. As is your sister Emylea. There are other reasons for doing this, but I will cover them with you at another time.”

“Both of you have already been confirmed as Princesses of the Union.” Dysea spoke now. “Bella, Cirith and I made sure of that before leaving Honelze. You will also be our conduit to your brothers Resumar and Arrarn, Byron. They have already agreed to this as well, they look forward to it actually.”

Martin took a deep breath again. “Which leads me into the next thing.” He spoke. “Fedor and Eirene will be returning to Manne for the foreseeable future.” Martin held up his hand as Fedor and Eirene both got to their feet and were about to protest. “Hold on... hear me out.” He told them. “As much as your mothers and I don’t like the idea Eirene, your covert operational skills can not be denied. You proved that on Austrova. Because of this, Anton, Cihera and Las’elh will be moving to Manne to oversee an advanced training regime for you developed by Armetus. There are very few individuals your mothers and I would trust enough to become your primary instructor, Eirene, Armetus is one of them. Anton, Cihera and Las’elh have become his most effective team in the last year and a half and they are family. They won’t hold back so you need to be prepared for that.”

“What about... what about me King Martin?” Miseo asked. “I do not...”

Martin shook his head. “Don’t worry, Miseo... you are going with her.” He said with a smile. “You’ll be assigned to Nedoli’s Command Team to help with the training and disposition of the forces there. None of you will be very far from us so don’t worry.” Martin looked at Fedor. “Kenroe is going to Manne with several of your staania Dynina’s people to set up a school for the technology that they have developed while on Lorenu. Mainly the Portal Drive Generators son. You are going there to learn that.” Martin saw Fedor’s eyes grow wide with excitement. “Syrilth is bringing a dozen of her finest instructors from Dragon Mountain and while you are both on Manne, you will begin to learn what you can do with Kdan and Dnom. Iama...”

“I go where my beloved Fedor goes, Martin.” Iama spoke reaching up to take Fedor’s hand. “I do not question this.”

Martin nodded his head. “I know. Which is why your mother Mani is going to join you on Manne and the two of you are going to take over the healthy eating habits of our people there.”

Iama’s eyes lit up at this news. “Truly?” She gasped.

“It’s a big task...” Anja told her. “Most of the Spartans arriving will eat like this big oaf!” Anja said jerking her thumb towards Martin. “They ingest whatever tastes good regardless of how bad it is for them.”

“And I am as fit as a fiddle.” Martin protested.

“Thanks to Anja and Aricia mostly.” Gorgo muttered under her breath but everyone heard her and they all chuckled softly.

Martin stuck his tongue out at his mother and this brought even more laughter from those in the room. He turned to where Kalis stood behind Serale’s chair. “Mandri... you are going too.” He spoke.

“Tenne I...” Kalis began to protest as well but Martin stopped him with his upraised hand once more.

“You are part of Andro’s team now, Kalis, so you won’t be staying for long.” Martin told him.

“However, Androcles did arrange for Jalersi to take a small trip before things in the Alpha Quadrant spool up anymore. It’s time that your mother saw who you have become. And it’s time to put the past fully behind you.”

“My... my mother?” Kalis gasped as Serale reached for his hand on her shoulder with a wide smile.

“You will leave tonight.” Androcles spoke. “Sadi and Ne’Veha will take you and Serale on the PREMONITION. Sehri and Caliria will be accompanying you to meet with their parents as well. You’ll return in two days.”

“You up for that mandri?” Martin asked him.

Kalis looked at Serale and saw her brilliant smile and then he met his uncle’s eyes. A man who had saved him from the darkness and had been more a father to him than his own. He nodded his head. “I... I am ready.” He said.

“Good. She doesn’t know you’ll be there, so enjoy it.” Martin said. He looked at the holodisc with Nalmos and Saydia in it. “Nalmos...?”

“Things are progressing well here, King Leonidas.” Nalmos answered him. “Far more than I ever thought possible. Tasmor transports are arriving every few days with more of our people who have chosen to return. The Tasmor Captains are pushing hard with the Union escorts allowing them to not worry about Kintaur interference. Many of the Tasmor are also volunteering to remain here on Ventori as well in order to assist us.

The Union and Tasmor engineers have already been able to set up a primary infrastructure for Discovery Base and we have enlarged it by half in just under a week. Most of the systems were already in place, they had just been severed from the city by orbital attacks. If all goes well, they will begin bringing these systems back on line next month. We will then begin tackling the outer section of Jorlari that sustained the least damage beginning next month.”

Doseb rose to his feet now causing everyone to look at him. “Martin... I have spoken with many of the older Alphas who were taken from Ventori. Garget’s parents, Lasun Vesrak’s parents and many others. Irani and I, all of them, we would like to return there to help with the rebuilding. Many of us, Irani and I included, we still consider Ventori to be our home. We did not want to leave, and we would like to go back.”

Martin looked surprised at this and he turned to look at Nalmos. He turned back to Doseb. “Staanio... things are different there now.” He said.

Doseb shook his head. “We do not want to return as Alphas.” He said quickly. “We want to return as Lycavorians and help to rebuild our home. It is truly the only place Irani and I ever really called home. If we would be welcome.”

Nalmos nodded his head almost at once. “Their wisdom and balance would be... it would be most welcome, King Martin, most especially for our younger generations. Word is spreading quickly about how they were taken from us through no fault of their own. They would be... no one here would object in any way to this.”

Martin was positive he saw Doseb breath a sigh of relief and he nodded his head. “Then so be it.” He said.

“Irani and I will allow the others to go first.” Doseb spoke again. “We will join them when... when our other business is concluded.”

This statement did not go unnoticed as Reva’s sphere turned to look at Martin and then back to Doseb. She knew who they were of course, Loras’ parents and descendants of Kelia. She did not know, however, the how or the why they ended up on Ventori, and then here on Jetania, or just how closely related they were to her. She would discover this in time Martin knew, as would Doseb, Irani and Loras and he hoped it gave some measure of happiness for his staania after all of the losses Reva had to suffer in her time within the sphere.

“Ok... on to more mundane things.” Martin announced.

It was Dasha and Gorgo who chortled out their response to this and Dasha leaned close to Jezima as she spoke.

“Do not let him fool you...” She told Jezima who was smiling happily. “Mundane is not a word that exists within this family.”

Gorgo laughed again and nodded her head. “So true. So very true.”

Martin rolled his eyes at this and Jezima laughed at his expression. “Manda... take it away please.”

WARIM SECRET BASE LANDING PLATFORM

Calyb Mahanlo-Leonidas had made his decision the moment that they had arrived at Taris’ cave. Their scents and female auras had been calling to him since the moment he had landed on this planet. Chocolate almonds and sweet daises. Calyb was his father’s son in every way and he could smell that they had been together with each other before his arrival. The way their scents mixed together, and their Etheric resonances pulsed as one, there was no denying this, and it only made the Alpha blood within him burn even hotter for them. Taris and Anoria were ready the instant that they led him into the cave, their Coming of Age fevers far beyond what either of them had ever felt before, their own blood practically on fire within their veins for the handsome young Alpha wolf who would now take them and make them his. There was no doubt within them, no worry and no hesitation in the least. Their fingers were tightly interlaced, and they had quickly stripped out of the clothes they wore and had stood together then, facing one another, their firm female bodies pressing intimately against one another, waiting for their mate to make the first move.

Calyb may have only been seventeen years old and, in wolf years, still considered a child himself, but he had the Mahanlo-Leonidas blood flowing within his veins. The most powerful bloodline of any Lycavorian in the universe and he remembered well what his father and his brothers had told him through the years as he was growing. When you find the right females, the ones meant for you, worship the very ground they walk upon because they will be your future. Hold nothing back from them, and make them experience things that will cause them to cry out your name to the heavens in bliss. With his Bonded brother Endeem watching protectively from the top of the ridge, Calyb Mahanlo-Leonidas did what his blood burned for him to do.

Taris Ranev and Anoria Vesrak knew it was going to be so very different, they knew this the moment that Calyb stood before them as naked as they were, his manhood seemingly huge to their eyes and pulsing with thick desire, but they were not prepared for the utter enormity of what they were going to experience.

Or the world they were going to enter.

For six hours mind boggling hours, the cries of Taris Ranev and Anoria Vesrak echoed within the cave and without, their voices whispering through the timber all around them, as the man both of them had seen in their visions and their dreams claimed their bodies and their souls. The moment his aura touched them, they were ready, but Calyb Mahanlo-Leonidas had other intentions first. Intentions that Taris and Anoria had not predicted nor expected. Intentions that had them both howling out in unimaginable delight within moments. Calyb did not just claim them both, he possessed their very hearts and souls. His touch upon them was like fire, igniting the flames of passion wherever his fingers chose to rest. The immense pleasure they had discovered they could give to each other was quickly washed aside as his lips and tongue explored every curve and contour of their lithe bodies while they clutched each other in orgasmic ecstasy. Calyb left no part of their bodies untouched, his strong hands caressing each of them as only he could, while his tongue made them scream his name to the very heavens indeed. When they thought that it was over, he only began again, and the pleasure cascaded upon them like waves in a storm. He tasted each of them with undisguised relish, their bodies responding to his caresses as they clutched him and each other in staggering release. He had each of them three times in the space of those six hours, each of them singing to the stars above as he took them, filled them with his huge manhood beyond their most exquisite imaginations, and finally holding them as tightly as he could as they erupted together in surreal bliss.

Taris and Anoria were not idle by any means, tasting him and each other as Calyb took them in the throes of their union. None of them noticed as the bloodline crest on Taris and Anoria's left shoulders filled in even more until it stood out just as intensely as it did on Calyb. They did not care as the three of them shaped each other and their future together. He claimed them both in the old way of their people, biting deeply into the flesh of their shoulders as they did the same to him. They felt the burning of the pureness of his blood as it swept through them, molding them, shaping them. Neither Taris nor Anoria hesitated in biting him back during their lovemaking, sealing their union forever, their minds coming together as they shared everything each of them had seen with each other. One mind, then two and finally three became one, and two female voices and one male voice howled to the stars in happiness. His unshielded aura should have had them quivering on the soft blankets before him, willing to do anything he wanted, yet Taris and Anoria kept their minds and their control and they did it all without any prodding. They wanted him just as deeply and forcefully as he wanted them and they held nothing back from Calyb or each other, experiencing passion and desire that would never go away or diminish in the years to come.

The morning sun was just beginning to rise when they could do nothing more because of exhaustion. It was then that Calyb simply wrapped both of them within his embrace and they fell asleep for a short time. They awoke within the hour however, and as they sat completely naked together, Calyb nuzzled them and placed soft kisses across the backs of their necks and shoulders, paying special attention to the bloodline crest that now fully adorned their skin. It was just as detailed and pronounced as it was on him now, and this made him hold them even closer as his heart sang with happiness.

Now Calyb walked slowly up the path towards the entrance of the main base, Endeem already resting in the center of the path. He had carried both Taris and Anoria above him, while Calyb ran in his wolf form below and he enjoyed their squeals of utter delight as they got their first ride on a dragon. They had told him it was something of a ritual among the Mountain Packs here on Jetania and now he watched as Taris's mother and Anoria's mother greeted their daughters with sincere embraces of love and happiness, his own mothers crowded around them as well. Calyb smelled his father before he saw him, but when he rounded the path and came fully up on the platform, he saw his father standing with Garget and Lasun. Calyb took a deep breath, not expecting this, and moved up to where the three men stood.

“Father.” Calyb spoke. He looked at Garget and Lasun respectively. “Sirs.”

“You told us you were going to court our daughters Prince Leonidas.” Lasun spoke.

Calyb shook his head slowly. “Yes, sir... yes, I did.” He responded. “I only did... I only did what my blood called for me to do. I have... I have nothing to offer either of you that would show you that they are all that matters to me. I would hope... I would hope that my solemn word to you that I will love and cherish them more than my own life will make up for this breach in protocol. I...”

Garget reached out and put his hand on Calyb’s left shoulder while Lasun extended his own hand and placed it on his right shoulder. Both men had seen the faces of their daughters when they jumped from the back of the dragon, their faces and eyes filled with more happiness than either of them had ever seen before. They could smell Calyb Leonidas deeply within their blood, his scent and aura swarming around them without pause.

“You have given our daughters... you have given our daughters what Lasun and I could not have provided to them before this day Calyb Mahanlo-Leonidas. You have given them a future.” Garget spoke warmly.

“Swear to us this day...” Lasun spoke now. “Swear to us that they will always come first in your heart Calyb. Swear this to us and we will need nothing else from you to show us your worth.”

Calyb met their eyes without flinching. “That is a vow that I will happily swear to both of you.” He stated without hesitation. “On my very life.”

Garget and Lasun both nodded their heads. “Then to honor the tradition that the Mountain Packs began after coming here, present yourself to their mothers so that they may greet you as a member of our families.”

Calyb looked at his father and could only see pride in his eyes as he nodded his head. He bowed slightly to both Garget and Lasun and then turned to quickly jog over to where Taris and Anoria stood. Garget and Lasun watched as their daughters drew him close, pressing up to either side of him as their mothers reached for him.

“You have raised fine sons, Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas.” Lasun spoke finally as he turned to look at him. “Fine sons. The devotion I see within his eyes for our daughters is...”

“It is absolute.” Garget finished.

Martin nodded his head. “As it should be.” He said softly.

“What now, Martin?” Lasun asked him. “Osrod’s people will begin asking questions and demanding to see him very soon. He has never spent more than a few hours within one of our cities and with your ships in orbit and your Spartans on the ground, they will start to become very nervous.”

Martin nodded his head. “I know.” He spoke. “We... walk with me if you would. We should discuss some things before any decisions are made. And you should know some things that we have discovered from the interrogations of the prisoners.”

“We care not about what happens to them.” Garget hissed.

Martin nodded his head as they turned and began to walk. “You’ll want to hear this though.”

RANEV PACK HIDDEN BASE WARIM

“...Controlling him?” Garget asked stunned as he held the data pad in his hand. “You are joking, of course?”

The large meeting room in the base was considerably smaller than the conference room in the Medical Center which suited Martin just fine. The center table could only fit twelve men and women and right now, Garget, Lasun, Androcles, Danny, Doseb, Irani, Re'lon and Nayeca were the only ones in the room with him.

Martin looked at Nayeca. “Nubian?”

Nayeca nodded and looked at Garget and Lasun from her seat beside Danny. “I’m afraid not.” She told them. “I had it all recorded if you would like to look through the two sessions yourself?”

Garget looked at Martin and shook his head quickly. “No. I... forgive me, I do not mean to sound skeptical but... how can you be so sure?”

Nayeca smiled and shook her head. “I do not take offense, trust me.” She said. “The exact combination of drugs that we use I can’t reveal to you, but...”

Martin leaned forward in his chair. “Garget, these are drugs that Anja put together. You have seen what she can do?”

Garget nodded his head. “Of course, it is... it is miraculous.”

“Trust me when I tell you, they work.” Martin said.

“You do not use...?” Lasun could not finish the sentence but Martin shook his head.

“No. Torture is woefully unreliable.” Martin answered him. “We call them enhanced interrogation techniques. The subject is never really in any life-threatening danger, though if you ask them, they will disagree I guarantee you. Nayeca and Re’lon here are probably two of the finest that we have. They are Drow elves, and as you can see, to those who don’t know them, they can be rather imposing. Re’lon actually teaches a course for our Krypteria. That is what we call our Intelligence Agency. They have had a lot of experience doing what they do and that is why they are so good at it.”

Lasun silently had to agree with that assessment. While neither Nayeca or Re’lon were by any means frightening to look at in appearance, their pure white hair and amber colored eyes alone could make a person tremble. There was just something about each of them that told a person do not nubou with them for they would make your remaining moments of life miserable to experience.

“How?” Lasun finally asked.

“Well, according to this Sama upaee...” Nayeca explained. “It was a combination of very subtle emotional manipulation and very mild doses of a hallucinogenic drug that she would mix with his food or drink at the right time.” Nayeca handed Lasun another data pad. “She called it Edoportrite.”

“Edoportrite?” Doseb spoke now. “That is the sap that comes from the Pyranium tree. Irani uses it as an adhesive and it is very toxic. It can only be found in the Northern Mountains. How did...”

“Her daughter.” Re’lon replied before he could finish his question. “She used her position as High Priestess to the Oracle to access the information from her ship’s computer. Nilantha’s ship has an extensive archive of everything that lives and grows on Jetania. Roeza Arhtai and her mother assassinated the Lycavorian Oracle from Ventori just before Osrod’s grandfather took all the Alpha’s from there. When she arrived here, she eventually maneuvered herself into a position to be chosen by Nilantha as her High Priestess once Nilantha was chased into hiding by Osrod’s father. They have been very patient.”

“She would... she would travel to all of the Mountain Pack settlements.” Garget said with wide eyes. “It would be nothing for her to obtain this material.”

Nayeca nodded her head. “And then she used her skills to lessen the toxicity of the sap and she made the drug into a simple serum and would either send it to her mother by secret courier, one of her cousins, those who took part in the attack at the Atrium. When she was then chosen to be the one to communicate back and forth with Osrod, she would give it to her directly on her trips to Drinda. In minute doses, it would have no damaging effects on the person ingesting it and after a few hours it would be out of their system. Re’lon and I made certain their stories matched and I checked with Anja about the effects before coming here.”

“How long... how long has this been going on?” Lasun asked.

“As near as we can narrow it down...” Nayeca replied. “She started giving him the serum less than a hundred years after they were mated.”

Lasun looked at Garget and Martin saw the look that passed between them. “What?” He asked.

“If what you say is true... this nubous upaee has been manipulating Osrod for over a thousand years!” Lasun spoke. “She may very well be responsible for every decision that he has made since he became King!”

Garget leaned closer to the table. “Many of us knew Osrod was different than his father and grandfather, even before he became King. Some of the decisions he has made while he was King, his father and grandfather would never have made. He reversed many of the restrictions that they had placed on our people. Even before his actions with Loras.”

“You mean claiming her when he knew she was supposed to be married to Warim your brother?” Martin said.

Garget nodded his head. "Yes." He met Martin's gaze. "You are saying that his decisions were his own?"

Nayeca took it up once more. "Well, according to Sama, she was not really concerned about what he did as long as it did not hamper her search for Doseb and Irani and their children. When he was about to do something that would influence that she stepped in."

"Well... he is certainly no prince, that is for sure." Martin said. "And as much as it pains me to say, he may be somewhat of a victim in all of this because of my bloodline. Sama and Roeza Arhtai were here hunting for Doseb and Irani. My bloodline. Osrod Aspion has made some really stupid decisions playing King, but I'm guilty of that as well. We all are. Ultimately, I really think he has been trying to do what is right by everyone. Without interrogating him, which I'm inclined not to do based on what information we have gotten from Sama and her daughter, he's just been listening to the wrong people for a lot of years." Martin sat forward again. "I'm having several pads put together that will give you the full history of what has taken place with our people, even more so than what I showed you earlier via the connection I made with you both. It includes everything that we have discovered since coming out here. Once you have them, I encourage you to show them to all of the Mountain Pack Alphas and have them disseminate them to their people. Chiron and Avi, two of the Avatars that you met, they have finished an orbital scan of Jetania and traced all of your people back to the original Packs that were on Lycavore. All of you should know your true history and lineage as well, not just us."

"What about the attack on mother?" Andro asked turning to look at his father. "This fool told Lazar that he was acting on orders from his father."

Nayeca shook her head. "That was Sama's doing Andro." She told him. "This Sibot character worked for her, not Osrod. He had no idea what she ordered. Sama told Sibot to say that should Lazar ever become too suspicious. Apparently, she got nervous when it was discovered that we had come out here. She saw the reports and assumed that because of our advanced technology, we were members of the Kirek Pack or some offshoot of Lady Dynina's group. She never met with Dynina directly so she did not know her relation to the Mahanlo blood. When she found out Osrod was sending Lazar to investigate us, she gave him his orders."

"Up until the time that Nilantha unwittingly put Roeza with Loras, they had suspected that your brother was part of the King's bloodline, Garget." Re'lon told them. "She ordered his death, not Osrod Aspion. Though her influence over him allowed her to make it appear as if he gave the order, she was actually the one pulling the strings. Roeza Arhtai began to suspect otherwise when Nilantha assigned her to Loras after the assassination attempt. She was very surprised that Loras had survived and with the way Nilantha acted in her regard, Roeza began to see who Loras really was. They had no real proof, but had we not intervened, it's very possible that they would have targeted Loras again within the year."

"Why?" Irani gasped. "They had no proof!"

"That's where this Nitona comes in." Nayeca explained. "She is half Mountain Pack correct?"

Garget nodded his head. "Yes. Nitona's mother refused to disavow the union between herself and the Plains Pack officer that had claimed her. Nitona is their youngest child. She became Osrod's fourth wife a decade ago."

Re'lon looked at Martin. "She discovered what was going on King Martin. Somehow. She began to slip Osrod a counteragent to the serum that Sama was using during their times together. She apparently also fell very much in love with him. And Osrod with her."

Martin nodded his head. "I got that from his surface thoughts. When he thought that I was going to kill him, the only thing he seemed to care about was that he would never be able to see this Nitona again."

"Well, it seems Sama did not appreciate this very much." Nayeca told them. "She was planning to remove this Nitona from the picture within a few weeks."

"You mean kill her?" Irani asked now.

Nayeca nodded her head. "Yes." Nayeca replied. "She feared that her control over Osrod was slipping and that all she had cultivated through these last millennia would come undone. She feared Osrod would find out everything. His other two wives were in on it with Sama as well. They were also planning to somehow usurp Osrod and take over themselves. They hadn't really figured out how just yet, but Sama was definitely tossing ideas around in her head."

"Nice." Martin spoke shaking his head. "Did we pick them up?"

Re'lon nodded now. "I sent a detachment of Durcunusaan to the locations where these women were and Armen teleported them both up to SPARTA'S WRATH. Along with their children and Osrod's children with Sama. This pig Juyno is still confined to the medical facility here in this base."

"I think everyone had begun to see it." Garget spoke now as he sat back in his chair. "He was beginning to spend more and more time with Nitona in public. Going out among the different Plains Packs cities. Sama and the others were pushed to the background. They had already turned his children with them against him in many ways."

"It appears Anja's arrival here changed all that." Nayeca said now.

"Because Roeza detected the blood within her. She could smell it." Doseb spoke now. "And your children and nephew. It was clear and unmasked unlike it was for Irani and I and our children. And Loras' children with Warim."

Martin nodded his head. "Yes. She hid it well at first, but she panicked when she smelled it and didn't know what to do. When she told her mother, they both panicked. They had no idea where they had come from. They didn't realize who we really were until she smelled Andro in the Atrium and her little device was going ape shit."

"Then she knew you are descended from King Daniho and Lord Ashten?" Irani asked.

Martin nodded his head slowly. "Yes."

"They were going to assassinate Loras, Anja, Nilantha and anyone with them at the Atrium." Nayeca spoke again. "Then they were going to come after you and Lady Irani and anyone related to you within the first hour after that attempt, while things were still very much confused." Nayeca looked at Androcles. "They did not count on you arriving mandri. Or your father."

"How old are these women?" Lasun asked.

"Sama Arhtai is roughly four million years old give or take a few centuries." Martin answered looking at Doseb.

He nodded his head. "That is reasonably accurate according to the history Irani and I know." Doseb said.

"Carians!" Lasun gasped.

"Roeza is apparently the sixth child she had with her mate after arriving on Koltar Four." Nayeca told them. "She is two million, six hundred thousand and thirty years old roughly. The rest of Sama's children, four boys and another girl, and her daughter's mate, they were all killed fighting the Kirek and Mahanlo Packs during this attempted purge of your bloodline Martin."

"So, that is why she hates us so much Tenna?" Andro asked.

Nayeca nodded her head. "Yes." She answered. "When it was discovered what this Kesas Pengot had done with you and Irani, Doseb, Sama volunteered to be the one to come after you and try to finish what they started. Roeza with her. And roughly two dozen cousins."

"Wait!" Garget barked. "Two dozen? There were only..."

Martin held up his hand. "The moment Nayeca found this out, she confirmed it with Re'lon, and I had the others taken. There were eight of them and they were guarding a ship that was supposed to take them out of the system where they would meet up with a ship from Koltar Four to take them back."

"She has had contact with her witch mother?" Irani snapped angrily.

Martin shook his head. "No. The communications arrays on the ship are not capable of reaching Koltar Four from here. That is why they needed to be out of the system."

"Once out of the system they could move wherever they needed to in order to contact her mother and then they would come for them." Andro said.

Nayeca and Re'lon nodded. "Yes." Nayeca answered.

"How did Roeza come to believe it was Loras who she was really after?" Irani asked now. "She could not detect the Mahanlo blood within her."

"Nilantha." Martin answered. "When she became High Priestess to the Oracle, Nilantha allowed her to see almost everything that was in the Sanctuary, and then on her ship at the bottom of the ocean."

"All of the Onab prophecies." Andro said looking at his father. "Everything that Dadrien and grandfather Sumar told her."

Martin nodded his head. "Everything but who Loras truly was. She began to get very suspicious as I said, when Nilantha instructed her to look out for Loras after the assassination attempt."

“Then how did she finally discover this?” Doseb asked.

Martin looked at Re'lon and nodded his head and he watched as Re'lon lifted his hand and placed the small, flat surfaced disc on the table. “With this.” Re'lon spoke.

“When Nilantha brought Loras to her ship, Roeza stuck this on her clothes before she left.” Martin said reaching forward and tapping the device. “It’s a very sophisticated tracking and camera device. Definitely not made here on Jetania, so it has to be something that they brought with them. Like her little toy blood detector thing.” Martin picked up the device and turned it over in his fingers. “Nilantha took Loras, Taris and Anoria into a part of the ship that she had never allowed Roeza in. The part that held the history of her true bloodline. The part that showed her what her place is to be in the future.”

“I don’t understand mandri?” Irani spoke. “What future?”

Martin sat back in his chair holding the device. “Nilantha’s ship held pretty much every prophecy that the Onab made before our people left Cerath.” He explained. “It also included a dozen or so prophecies that were made after they left.”

“After?” Doseb said.

Martin nodded his head. “Mostly having to do with staanio Sumar and Dadrien but also the part where Loras would be the wife and mate to an Alpha wolf and that they would be the reunification of our people. She carries Mahanlo blood within her, but also Arhtai and Nenay blood as well.”

Irani gasped. “My mother... my mother was from the Nenay Pack.”

Martin nodded his head. “And your father was a member of the Arhtai Pack.” He said.

“I don’t understand.” Doseb spoke. “How is that possible then?”

Martin looked at Andro and nodded his head once more. “Because the twins that Sadi carries, our children, they bear the blood of the remaining eight original Packs from Lycavore within them.” Andro spoke looking at Doseb and Irani. “Loras is to be the wife and mate to my son Achilles, according to the Onab prophecy. Therefore, they would be uniting all of the Packs that left Cerath after the Zin Sarakoa Vyen IIs.” Andro told them. “And that one day she and my son would be... they would be the King and Queen of our people.”

Irani gasped loudly, her hands going to cover her mouth in stunned shock. “Son vada carians!” She stammered.

“Achilles and Neesia... my children... they are like me.” Androcles said in a soft voice.

“What do you mean, like you, Androcles?” Doseb asked.

Andro met his eyes. “I was born fully aware of everything around me Tenne.” He told them. “Even before I left my mother’s womb I could see with her eyes. With my father’s eyes. I had their memories within me, dating back more years than I can count.”

“I still haven’t figured out many of them.” Martin spoke now. “They come from Sumar and Resumar and even grandfather Daniho. But they are fragmented and not complete.”

“My son and daughter are like me.” Andro continued. “They can speak to us even now. I don’t know how it came to be or why, but it simply is. My brother Dorian and my soul sister Laren were born the same way. It is why our connections to our Bonded dragon brothers and sister are so much more complete than others.”

“Vada Tarivuos rie vada Mard Revik.” Doseb said almost reverently. “It has always been said that you would be different.”

“Yes, well, you’ll forgive me Tenne if I have not enjoyed being so different all of my life and not knowing why until only these last few weeks.” Andro spoke.

Martin reached out with his hand and rested it on Andro’s shoulder and squeezed it hard. “I’m sorry keto.” He said softly, his voice filled with warmth and emotion.

“It isn’t your fault medwan.” Androcles said. “It is no one’s fault. It simply is. It just would have been nice knowing all of this while I was growing.”

Martin nodded his head. “On that I will agree.” He said.

“You have to admit mandri, it wouldn’t have been anywhere near as nubous entertaining though.” Danny spoke for the first time, looking at Andro, his smile wide and infectious as he moved his hands back and forth in front of him like he was weaving a spell. “Shazaam!”

Andro was the first to start laughing, followed quickly by Martin and Nayeca and then Re'lon. It became even more infectious as Doseb and then Irani began to laugh as well. Garget and Lasun could only sit there and stare at them in disbelief.

Lasun looked at Garget. "This is the family that our daughters have chosen to become part of?" He said.

This caused Martin to laugh even harder and lean back in his chair. The chair however was not intended for this type of movement and the back legs snapped almost instantly and Martin hit the floor hard on his back which caused Danny and Androcles to erupt into even more laughter, Doseb Mahanlo wiping the tears from his eyes. He and Irani had not laughed this hard in more millennia than they could count and to Doseb it felt wonderful. Soon Garget and Lasun could not resist the laughter that was now infecting the others and within moments they too were laughing uproariously while trying to remain sitting upright in their own chairs.

The two Durcunusaan soldiers who had opened the door and saw what was taking place simply looked at each other, their King on his back on the floor laughing uncontrollably and then they backed out of the room closing the door behind them.

Both of them had grins on their faces that would not come off for several hours.

"...Know who they are?" Nitona asked as Osrod paced the floor on the room.

Nitona Aspion had been brought here only two hours ago, taken from her bed in the early morning hours by men and women who had appeared like ghosts from a dream. Nitona had never been more frightened of anything in her life as a brilliant flash of light had taken place and then she was on some kind of ship. They had landed here in Warim only a short while later and she had been brought here. Osrod had enveloped her with his aura when she ran to his arms and he crushed her to him. She had calmed quickly knowing that he was alright and that she was with him. He would protect her she knew.

Osrod stopped pacing and looked at her. "I have never smelled Lycavorian blood so pure, Nitona." He told her. "And no, I don't know who they are or where they come from."

"They frighten me, Osrod." Nitona spoke softly. "They appeared in my room like issis tis vada dremsa. And then there was this flash of bright light and we were on some sort of ship. And then I was here." (Phantoms in the night)

Osrod Aspion stared at her sitting there for a long moment. Her sweet pines scent was intoxicating to him even as filled with fear as it now was. With Nitona he could be himself. He did not have to act, and this had always made him feel special in her arms. "Why did you never ask me to be returned to your parents and your Pack?" He finally asked her.

Nitona looked up at him from where she sat. "What do you mean?"

"When I claimed you... I did not give you a choice, Nitona." Osrod said. "Yet you never demanded to be returned to your Pack. Why?"

Nitona rose to her feet now and moved around the table to stand in front of him. She looked up into his dark eyes, towering over her as he did. "Did it ever occur to you that I was where I wanted to be?" She asked him.

"But why?" Osrod pressed her. "Because I was King?"

Nitona's face twisted up angrily but she kept her words measured. "I have never cared that you were King!" She hissed at him. "I do not care about any of that! You could have been a common soldier and it would not have mattered to me!"

"Then why?" Osrod asked her again.

Nitona stepped closer to him and reached up to put her hands on his broad chest while her blue eyes lifted to his face. "Because your scent is the one that tickles my senses far more than any Alpha who has ever pulsed me. Because I could see in here..." She moved her hand over his heart. "And I knew that you were not happy. I give to you all that I am willingly because I want to make you as happy as you have made me. What you make me feel is, I cannot begin to describe it, Osrod. If I could throw all of this away and just escape with you, I would do so in an instant. Just to be wrapped within your aura, to have your children, it would make me the happiest female on all of Jetania. I love you, fool! I have loved you with all of my heart from the first moment your hands touched my body."

This was something that Osrod Aspion had never heard before and he responded to that quickly. Nitona Aspion let out a small whimper of delight when his arms engulfed her and pulled her to him, holding her head to his chest as he lowered his own head and nuzzled her ear and the top of her head as his aura swarmed around her. She wrapped her arms around him as tightly as she was able and basked in his attentions to her.

The door opening interrupted their moment and Osrod turned quickly to see the huge Lycavorian who had struck him enter. He turned to face him fully, pulling Nitona behind his body to protect her as they watched him enter. Osrod recognized Doseb Athltin when he entered but he did not recognize the two females who entered as well. One was a pureblood female Alpha, her scent deeply imbedded within the male's scent and his was within hers. The other female was a species he had never seen before. She was of medium height, with long white hair, almost chocolate colored skin and four-inch-high ears that curved elegantly alongside her head. She was a turned wolf, that much he could determine easily, yet she carried the scent of a powerful Alpha male within her blood, a male that Osrod's blood could not match. The last two Lycavorians who entered were obviously guards of some sort as they took up positions on either side of the door, though their weapons stayed free of their hands, crossing their bodies in the front and hanging from quick release straps of some sort.

Osrod decided to try and take control quickly and he looked at Doseb. "Where are Garget Ranev and Lasun Vesrak?" He snapped. "I am King and you are holding me as a common thug! You hold my Queen and have frightened her terribly! Tell these people to release me Doseb Athltin immediately! Whatever happened between your daughter and I is ancient history! I do not..."

"Ata uvenn Osrod!" Doseb snarled seeing Nitona's eyes go wide at his obvious disrespect to Osrod. "You have no comprehension of what is going on around you do you?"

"Why don't you tell me!" Osrod snapped. "Who are these men and women! Who do they think they are that they can hold me here and threaten my Queen!"

"Your Queen was never in danger." Aricia spoke as she sat down in the chair. "Nor was she ever threatened."

Nitona's eyes went even wider. "You!" She exclaimed. "It was you! I remember your voice and your scent. You were the one giving the orders when they took me from my room!"

Aricia nodded her head. "Yes, I was." She spoke. "And Lycavorian Spartans do not threaten innocents. Ever."

"Spartans?" Osrod barked. "Who are you!? What is going on? You come to my world! You strike me and take my Queen... Secha prisoner!"

Martin detected his hesitation easily enough and he could smell the protective nature he was exuding in order to keep the red-haired woman calm. He was shielding her body with his own, something he had not done with Sama Arhtai, which spoke volumes about who this man really was.

"Sit down, Osrod!" Doseb spat at him. "Sit down or my mandri will hit you harder than he did the first time!"

Martin chuckled softly and looked at Nayeca. "Nubian."

Nayeca moved to the table and set the holo disc on the surface and activated it. The image of Secha and Nayeca appeared in the image as clear as if Osrod was in the same room with them. Secha appeared to be completely subdued, her eyes unfocused and docile. His eyes grew a little wider at this and then he heard the dark-skinned woman speak.

"Please tell me your name?"

"Sama... Sama Arhtai." Secha answered almost immediately.

"So Secha Aspion is not your real name?" Nayeca pressed.

Osrod watched as Secha shook her head. "My name is Sama Arhtai. Secha I took when I came to Ventori. Aspion is the name of the fool male who thinks he is my husband."

Osrod's eyes grew wider at this and Martin saw Nitona look up into his face. He glanced at Nayeca and nodded and she reached down to pause the recording. Martin looked back at Osrod. "This is the first two hours of her interrogation. She is most definitely not who you think she is. This is my wife, mate and Anome, Aricia." Martin said motioning to her beside him as he sat down. "That is my mard fervon's wife and mate, Nayeca." He looked at Doseb. "You know my Tenne Doseb of course..." Martin turned back to look at Osrod. "And my name is Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas. I am the King of the United Lycavorian Union... and we have a lot to discuss, Osrod Aspion. Now we can sit here and talk like civilized alpha wolves, or I could just kill you and your beautiful wife and mate Nitona here and bring your little empire down around your corpse.” Martin sat back in the chair.

“Your choice.”

Osrod felt Nitona grip his arm tightly and he looked at her. He saw the simple nod from her and then he looked back to Martin and reached for the back of the chair in front of him.

Martin nodded his head. “Good choice.” He said.

It lasted far longer than Martin expected, mainly because of the way Osrod Aspion had taken the information. He learned quite a bit about the man in front of him just by his reactions and his body language. He was an Alpha wolf with very pure blood, nowhere near as pure as the Mahanlo bloodline or even the Kirek and Carbula bloodlines, but if he had to guess, Osrod Aspion was descended from the Drarr bloodline. He would confirm it with Chiron since he was already running sensor sweeps from SPARTA'S WRATH to determine the bloodlines of all the wolves on Jetania, but Martin was confident he was correct given what he already knew and had studied on the trip here. According to their history, the Drarr Bloodline was hard working and honorable to a fault. Their support for the Mahanlo bloodline had never wavered once in all of the years that had passed since the Zin Sarakoa Vyen Ils. Osrod's grandfather was the senior Drarr Pack member that had been chosen by the Pralors for their Seed mission here and most of those chosen were young and impressionable wolves at the time. The Pralor people still had not learned enough about the Lycavorian people as a whole to counter and balance the natural instincts of the Alpha wolf and that is what allowed Osrod's grandfather to dominate those that were part of the Seed Mission. It was this lack of knowledge that allowed things to shape how Jetania came to be, and how Osrod's grandfather and then his father ruled with such an iron hand.

Martin had read all of the information that Garget and Lasun had given to him on Osrod Aspion, all of his actions through the years since becoming King, and while he had done many stupid things, he had also done many things that others had not expected. These things are what gave Martin hope that perhaps Osrod Aspion was not a lost cause as he had first thought.

“...It is all true?” Nitona asked softly from where she sat at the table. “Everything that the Oracle has been preaching for thousands of years?”

Aricia nodded from her chair next to Martin. He could tell Aricia had taken a liking to this Nitona female. She was slightly older than Aricia, perhaps a hundred years or so, but she was strong willed and intelligent. And her scent told all of them that she was utterly devoted to Osrod.

“Essentially, yes.” Aricia answered her. “Much of it we did not discover until recently ourselves, and to be honest, had this Sibot worm not taken Anja from us, we very well may not have discovered what we have in these last days.”

“I did not order that!” Osrod barked. “I don't even know who this Sibot person is!”

Aricia didn't flinch and she met his eyes. “And that is the only reason you are still alive Osrod Aspion.” She told him her eyes changing and her dual wolf fangs extending fully so that Nitona let out a small gasp. “Had you anything to do with what took place, your ano would have already joined this Sibot in jorbhe. Anja is not only wife and mate to our Beloved Martin, but she is also so very special to me and my fellow Queens. Had Martin not taken your head from your shoulders, we would certainly have gutted you like a dog and left you to rot in the street.”

Osrod opened his mouth to respond to her but Nitona's hand reached up and took his arm in her hands. “Please Osrod, my love.” She spoke softly. “They know you did not do this. Set aside your pride and listen. For me.”

Martin watched Osrod look at her, the tenseness and anger in his face lifting almost at once. The fact that it was Nitona who discovered what Sama was doing and then played a huge role in reversing what she was doing to him and at great risk to herself made Osrod stare at her for several long moments. The affection and softness Martin had seen in countless Alphas for those females who truly had command over their hearts and souls passed over Osrod's face quickly. Nitona had more of an effect on him than anyone thought and that was a good thing. Young though she may have been, Martin could tell she cared not for titles or power. All she wanted was to feel the embrace of the Alpha that had claimed her. Martin watched as Osrod settled back into the chair beside her, but he kept Nitona's hand in his own, which told Martin all he needed to know. He glanced at his Uncle who had sat quietly at the table for the most part.

[Tenne?] He asked him.

Doseb didn't turn his head, his dark eyes remaining fixed on Osrod. [I know what you are going to say mandri.] Doseb answered, knowing that Aricia was within the conversation with them. [As much as I hate him for what he forced upon my daughter, knowing what I do now, I cannot hold that hate so tightly anymore.]

[Will you question what I do?] Martin asked him.

Doseb looked at him and shook his head. [You have the memories and knowledge of our bloodline within you, Martin. The blood of our grandfathers. Our family. More so than I do. I will never question you in what you do, no matter the years that separate us.]

Martin turned his head and looked at Aricia then as Nitona and Osrod watched them in confusion.

[Saaurano?]

[You know that we will side with you always, Beloved.] Aricia told him. [Why do you even ask? You have seen something, haven't you? Like our son, you can see inside a person, what is in their heart. What do you see?]

[The future.] Martin answered.

[Then act on it, Lover.] Anja's voice broke into their connection since they never shielded from one another. [These are our people, just like Nalmos and those on Ventori. If this Sama upaee has been influencing him all of these years that we know of, how do we know that she wasn't doing the same thing to his father or grandfather?]

[If there is wisdom and temperance in there, Nauta Melme, then bring it out as only you can.] Dysea chimed in now. [The witch can no longer influence him.]

"You are... you are speaking with your minds, aren't you?" Nitona asked causing Martin to look at her. "Just as the Oracle has told us you can."

Osrod looked at Nitona for a moment and then back to Martin. "Is this... is this true?" He asked.

Martin nodded his head. "Yes. It is a skill that all of our people have, but it needs to be nurtured and used all of the time or else, like many things in the past, it will be forgotten and then overshadowed by the instincts of our people." Martin got to his feet and moved to the one medium sized window in the room, staring out through the glass at the tops of the tall timber to the east of the base.

Osrod's eyes followed him and he took a deep breath. "Will you... will you conquer us now?" He asked keeping his voice level. "If this... if this is your plan then allow Nitona to return to her parents. She is innocent in..."

"Osrod, no!" Nitona exclaimed now. "My fate will be yours! I am your wife and mate! I will not..."

Osrod looked at her intently. He reached up slowly and placed his fingers on her cheek. "I wish no harm to come to you, Nitona. You are... you are the single point of brightness in my life and I will not allow my stupidity to take that away."

Nitona shook her head vehemently. "I will not leave your side! I will not! This is where I want to be! With you! If that means death, then I will die with you! Where I belong!"

"Do you fear the unknown, Osrod Aspion?" Martin asked as he turned away from the window and caused Osrod and Nitona both to look at him.

"What do... what do you mean?" Osrod asked.

Martin looked at Aricia and saw her nod. He lifted his arm and tapped the small console on his forearm. "Avi?"

"Standing by."

Osrod watched as the dark-skinned woman got to her feet. "I have another session with this woman Sama before I file a complete report, Martin." Nayeca said. "Re'lon is going to join me on this one."

Martin nodded his head. "Thank you, Nubian." He told her as she walked around in front of him.

Nayeca leaned up and kissed his cheek gently. "Saan bruard hote sali." Nayeca told him.

(Blood before all else)

Martin smiled. "Saan bruard hote sali." He echoed her words and then Nayeca moved for the door.

"Avi... execute!" Martin said.

There were four bright flashes of orange hued light and Martin, Aricia, Osrod and Nitona disappeared from within the confines of the room. Doseb Athltin nodded his head in approval of what his mandri was going to do and he turned and headed out of the room now as well. The two Durcunusaan, both of them temporarily assigned to Doseb until more Hippies Sedla could be deployed from Earth, turned as well and followed their charge out of the room. Their King was no longer taking chances with the lives of the family he was discovering. Doseb and Irani's other five children now had Durcunusaan protection, as well as Loras and her children from Warim Ranev. Irani Athltin now had two Durcunusaan assigned to her wherever she went, though she had a lengthy rant about not wanting any protection.

A rant that fell on Martin's deaf ears.

PAKAR SIX

Kesas Pengot stood in the doorway of the medical center and stared at the broad back of Lylor Kirek.

The strongest and most powerful Alpha among the Kirek Pack, Lylor Kirek was not a man to be trifled with even before he had claimed Kelia Mahanlo and they had become Anomes. He became even fiercer once the Mahanlo blood flowed within him, and his devotion to Kelia was absolute. He had stepped in immediately once his father and mother had been killed during the war with the Iais'Kai. He and Kelia had kept the Kirek Pack on the path his parents had laid for them with their deeds and then their sacrifice. Through the many years of the war with the Iais'Kai, Lylor Kirek came into his own and he was considered one of the foremost warriors and tacticians among their people. Some of the more humorous moments during that dark time had been Daniho and Ashten making fun of their sister and how tiny she was compared to her mate and husband.

Lylor Kirek had lost all of his siblings in the war except for Aryera and she now stood beside him, her eyes red from tears of joy, but now dry as she rested her hand on Lylor's right shoulder. Kesas Pengot stared at the Mahanlo Bloodline Crest that now resided on Lylor's left shoulder, so prominent and bold in what it said. Part of Kesas Pengot still could not believe that it was true, but his eyes were not lying to him. He held the data pads in his hands, even the very latest one which Chiron had sent only this morning. The true descendant of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo wanted to speak with them. Their King. The Mahanlo bloodline on Jetania was finally secure, Sama and Roeza Arhtai were in custody and being interrogated. Much was happening on Jetania and Chiron had sent the last message saying to be prepared for the transmission a few hours after midday. Kesas was still trying to process it all to be honest. The dread he had always felt, fearing that he would wake one day and discover the deaths of Doseb and Irani Mahanlo, this fear was slowing drifting away now. He could almost see the light in the darkness as it was beginning to rise above the horizon.

The Mahanlo bloodline lived.

Kesas Pengot had been accepted into their family without question or doubt. Daniho and Ashten had confided in him nearly all of their secrets and because of this Kesas Pengot had sworn an oath to them that he had held dearest to his heart since that time.

"Kesas?"

Kesas looked up and saw that Lylor had risen to his feet now, his powerful six foot three body towering over his sister beside him. He had partially turned to face him and Kesas moved forward without question. Aryera watched with a smile as the two men embraced tightly. Aryera knew her brother considered Kesas to be like a second father to them. He had always looked out for them and offered his wisdom without hesitation. She watched her brother grip the back of Kesas' head and hold him close. Aryera also knew that it was Kesas Pengot who had saved her brother and what remained of the Mahanlo bloodline by his actions all those years ago. An action that Kesas still bore shame for even though there was none to bear.

Lylor Kirek pulled the older man's head back and stared at him. His blue eyes appeared moist, but no tears fell since the effects of the unusually long cryo sleep were still wearing off.

"You... you look the same old man." Lylor spoke with a smile.

Kesas chuckled and gripped Lylor's shoulders tightly. "I will remind Acki that you said that." He spoke.

"Acki?" Lylor asked looking between him and Aryera. "Who is Acki?"

Kesas nodded his head at Lylor's confusion. "There is much we need to tell you, Lylor Kirek."

“Where... where is Kelia?” Lylor asked now. “Our children? Why are they not here? If you have woken me, then the Arhtai Pack is gone now. You have regained control of...” Lylor stopped talking and looked intently at Kesas. His eyes went to his sister. “Aryera... what is going on?”

“Kesas is right Lylor.” Aryera said. “There is much we need to tell you.”

“The cryo sleep may have distorted my senses but I can tell that you are... that you are frightened.” Lylor spoke. “I can smell that much. Both of you. What is going on?”

Aryera took her brother’s arm. “Sit down fervon.” She spoke. “Reyna.” (Please)

SPARTA'S WRATH

It was almost too much to take in.

Osrod Aspion had never felt so small in all of his life. He had never felt so weak.

The bright, orange hued light had vanished leaving them in what could only be some sort of massive hanger deck. Osrod knew instantly that they were on a ship, he had been aboard enough of them to know, but this ship, it was the most incredible thing he had ever seen in all of his life. As Nitona clutched him in fear, Osrod had seen ships the likes of which he could never have imagined, stretching as far as his eyes could see. He saw hundreds and hundreds of crew members moving back and forth between these ships. He saw species that he had never seen before, some with reptilian skin, some with feathers of some kind all over their bodies, tall, short, without hair, with hair. It was utterly fascinating. Osrod had finally turned to look at Martin with wide eyes.

“This is your ship?” He gasped.

Martin had shaken his head. “This is my son’s ship. My first-born son, Androcles. Pretty impressive huh?”

“Why... why show me this if you are going to kill me?” Osrod had stammered feeling Nitona squeeze him tighter. He saw this Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas smile.

“Osrod Aspion, if I had wanted you dead, trust me you would be dead.” Martin had told him. The way he had spoken those words, so coldly and confidently, it had sent a chill of fear down Osrod’s spine, something that he had never felt before. “I brought you up here to show you some things. To talk. You are quite safe. Nitona can go with Aricia, I give you my word that nothing will happen to her. My Queens will keep her safe.”

Osrod had turned then and watched as three other women had walked up to where they stood. All of them were stunningly beautiful, their scents and female auras more powerful than any female wolf he had ever tasted. One had platinum blond colored hair and the same four-inch-high ears that he had seen on others on the surface. She was not fully wolf, but the wolf blood within her was purer than any he had ever smelled. The same blood as he smelled in the Queen, Aricia. The other two had long, dark hair, one who was only half wolf, the other something he had never smelled before. They greeted this Queen Aricia with deep kisses and hugs that Osrod knew were reserved for lovers and mates. It was then that he realized from their scents that they were just as deeply mingled with each other as they were with this man who had brought him and Nitona here. He watched as they greeted Martin in the same way, and how he nuzzled each of them.

He looked at Martin as the Queen Aricia introduced Nitona to the others, Dysea, Isabella and Cirith.

“Why have... why have you brought us here?” He asked.

Martin motioned with his hand. “Let’s take a walk.” He had told him. “There are some things I want to show you. I think you might find them interesting.”

Interesting.

That was a word Osrod Aspion would not have used to describe what he had seen over the last three hours.

He stood now in some sort of lounge, standing before the spectacular wall-sized view window, staring out at the hundreds of ships that now filled the system, all of them positioned around the Command Station for Coalition forces. Dozens of different species filled the lounge area, some sitting at tables, some at the counter. Some were eating and laughing, others having quiet conversations. Many looked at him oddly, but not one of them looked at him with any sort of hostility in their eyes. What he had seen on this ship was beyond anything he had ever dreamed of for COLS. Beyond anything that his father had ever dreamed or spoken of. They had walked within this ship for three hours and not once had Osrod been disinterested or bored. He had seen men and women training in massive gym areas. Spartans, Martin Leonidas had called them. Some wore strange armor, some in simple clothes, but all of them trained hard and fast. There was no joking nor fooling around that he could see. Whoever these men and women were, they took their training seriously. And without hesitation, Osrod decided that they were the deadliest men and women he had ever seen.

Men took orders from females without question, though he could see no rank worn by anyone. All of them bowed their heads to Martin as he passed, and he even stopped to chat with many of them. He knew many of them by their names. He asked of their families and their children. The one thing he could smell in all of them was the devotion to their duties and to the man he walked with.

The technology was unlike anything Osrod had ever seen before. Martin showed him the position of every COLS ship in the sector and even some that were beyond the planetary system of Jetania. As they walked, he had told him things that were beyond Osrod's comprehension and belief. Wild stories of battles fought and the history of their people dating back to a planet that Osrod had long believed to be a myth and legend. Not once did he speak down to Osrod in any way, and he answered every question Osrod asked of him. What he was seeing was so totally incredible, Osrod did not bother asking questions about ships and power. Those were things he could see for himself. Osrod wanted to know what his father never did; what his grandfather never knew. Each step forward on this ship began to reshape Osrod Aspion in a way that he could never have imagined.

He turned away from the view window when he smelled him come back next to him with two long necked bottles with some kind of liquid in them. Martin held one out to him. "You don't strike me as a Spartan wine type of person." He said as Osrod took the bottle. It was ice cold and Osrod could smell the barley within the liquid. "This is what we call beer. Served the way it should be served, ice cold."

Osrod watched him lift the bottle and take a long pull of the yellowish liquid. He had already decided that his words when they first came on board rang true. If this man had wanted him dead, he would be dead. Nothing Osrod could have done would have prevented that. This man had an Alpha wolf aura of power and confidence that Osrod could never achieve. He lifted the bottle and took a sip of the liquid, his eyes opening wide at the smooth flavor and richness of the liquid. Martin saw his look and smiled.

"Pretty good huh?" Martin said. "My son Androcles had the Brew Master back on Earth make enough for a good six months. We only drink it on special occasions. It's call Corona Lager beer and it came from a country on Earth called Mexico a very long time ago. It's pretty good, isn't it?"

Osrod took another pull from the beer and nodded his head quickly. "I have... I have never tasted such a thing." He spoke.

Martin held out the data pad to him. "I had my people run some tests on you and Nitona when you came onboard." He said. "Our medical equipment allows this type of thing without actually having to touch you."

Osrod looked at the pad and then back to him. "What tests?" He asked. "We are not sick!"

Martin shook his head. "Not those kinds of tests." He replied. "Your bloodline. Aspion may be your Pack name now, but you are descended from the Drarr Pack, just like I thought. You, your father, your grandfather, you are descended directly from one of the original Packs that left our true homeworld and settled on Lycavore." Martin told him. "Nitona appears to be descended from the Olere Pack."

Osrod glanced at the pad once more and then back to Martin. "This is significant?" He asked.

"The information I have says that the Drarr Pack were honorable warriors and in some cases exceptional scholars." Martin told him. "They believed deeply in tradition and culture. They were also naturally drawn to those of the Olere Pack, even on Lycavore. The Olere Pack were made up of mainly of doctors, scientists and researchers. They worked closely with the Domara Pack to improve life for our people. It also explains why you have the feelings you do for Nitona."

"What?" Osrod asked.

"The Drarr and Olere Packs were among the first to begin intermingling when they arrived on Lycavore. They had an affinity for each other according to my information. That is why Nitona tickles your senses far more than any other."

"I thought it was... I thought it was because she was half Mountain Pack." Osrod spoke softly.

Martin nodded his head. "That's true as well. The Alphas, the Mountain Packs as you call them now, those that your grandfather took from Ventori, most of them were from the Drarr and Olere Packs. If I had to guess, I say that is why Nitona's mother would not leave her father once they found each other." Martin looked at him. "You love her, don't you? I mean really, truly love her. You can't really deny it since your scent spikes just as much as hers does when she is in the same room as you."

Osrod turned and looked out the view window. "She is the only one that I chose for... that I wanted for myself." He said softly. "The others were... they were all arranged by my father."

"Except Loras." Martin said.

Osrod glanced at him quickly and then back out the window as he shook his head. "That was me being an igord." He finally said. "She was... she was intoxicating. It was a fool thing to do because it set back relations between the Plains and the Mountain Packs for decades. I only realized it when it was too late."

"And that's why you released her?" Martin asked.

Osrod nodded his head. "It was... it was my way to try and repair what I had done." He said.

"Why take credit for the assassination of Warim Ranev when it was Sama Arhtai who actually ordered it?" Martin asked him.

Osrod looked at him. "I never wanted Warim Ranev killed!" He spoke quickly. "I knew I could actually work with Warim and his brother Garget. They were the most open and forward thinking of the Mountain Packs. When Secha... Sama... whatever she calls herself, when she told me what she had done, I was enraged, but what was I to do? I had to take credit, at least behind the scenes, or I would look weak to our people. It was foolish, but if I had not, that would have caused far more problems in the long run."

"And Lazar? He believed it was you who ordered the assassination. Why let him think this?" Martin said.

Osrod nodded his head. "It was better that he believed this, for Secha did not care for him in the least and she made this very clear. She was a upaee to him whenever she had the chance. She turned all of my children with her, with the others, against me, but with Lazar it was more intense. More focused. Now, I know why it seems."

"Because she knew Loras was still alive." Martin said with a nod. "And she never told you?"

Osrod shook his head. "She never admitted this to me but I began to suspect when things began to change among the Mountain Packs. They came together like no other time in our history. I never had any real proof however, but part of me was... I was happy if that was the case, though I knew she hated me more than anyone." Osrod looked at him. "What does it matter now? I assume you brought me up here for a reason. To show me that I cannot stand against you. You are going to remove me."

Martin took a swig from his beer and shook his head. "No." He said.

Osrod's eyes grew a little wider. "Your ships. Your ground forces. You fight beside sinuovas! Beasts from mythical legend! We can not stand against that! They could sweep aside everything I have in a single day."

"More like twelve hours, but that is not why I brought you up here." Martin told him without emotion. "I would be careful about calling dragons beasts, however. They are sentient life forms and in some cases, they are far smarter than we are. They have a seat on the Union's Senate and take part in the Union just as everyone does."

"Then why did you bring me up here, if not to show me that I am nothing?" Osrod asked. "You could have blotted all we that have from the stars in a matter of hours yet you have not. Why?"

"The future." Martin said.

"The future?" Osrod echoed his words.

Martin nodded his head. "You are not what you want everyone around you to believe Osrod Aspion." He said. "Your treatment of Nitona is the biggest sign of that."

Osrod was silent once more and he turned back to look out the view window. "She is the single point of light in the darkness that surrounds me." He said finally. "Everyone... they all want something from me. Power. Influence. Wealth. Nitona is... she is the only one who wants just me. Nothing else. Just me."

Martin nodded his head. "Yes... I know that feeling well." He said. "You have done some seriously stupid things while you have been playing King." Martin saw Osrod turn to look at him and he held up his hand. "But so, so have I." He finished. Martin moved closer to him. "I am not the conquering type Osrod."

“You... you are the Mard Revik.” Osrod spoke. “I am not so foolish as to not know that now. I have never believed it until this day, I always thought it was just myth and legend, yet everything the Oracle preached is true. It is happening now.”

Martin rolled his eyes. “If you knew how much I hate hearing that, you would probably laugh.”

Osrod turned away again. “I know this feeling as well.” He said softly.

“Why didn’t you?” Martin asked him now. “If what Garget tells me is the truth, and I have no reason to doubt him, you have had plenty of chances just to disappear. Why didn’t you?”

Osrod stared off through the view window for a long moment but Martin didn’t push him. “I wanted... I wanted to fix what my father and grandfather had broken.” Osrod finally replied, the words soft yet firm in conviction. “Because of that yowa upaee and her bewitching of me, I have only succeeded in making it worse. I am hated by so many. Those I wanted to make things better for, they hate me. Those who don’t care, they hate me. Those who want things to remain the same, they hate me.”

Martin nodded his head as he came up to stand beside Osrod. “I will give you that Osrod. Sama Arhtai certainly fucked things up something fierce with her little games. You were a pawn in that game. A game that was being played because of my bloodline. My family. In part, I guess I feel a little responsible because much of what you did was because of her manipulation of you. I don’t think you would have done those things of your own accord.”

Osrod looked at him. “You?!” He gasped. “How do you know it is not what I would have done?”

“Trust me when I tell you that things are a lot more complicated than you think.” Martin told him. “It gives me a colossal head ache just trying to sort it all out. And it’s not over yet, but that is not your concern. And I think the way I do because I have seen you with Nitona. I saw it in your surface thoughts when you thought I was going to kill you. All you were concerned about was her; that you would never see her again. That you would not have the children you have talked of with her. You are not the man that Sama Arhtai has made you believe you are Osrod Aspion.”

Osrod turned to fully face him. “What do you want of me?” He asked.

Martin met his eyes. “I want you to make things right.” He told him.

Osrod shook his head. “That is not... that is not possible.” He said.

“Why?” Martin asked him.

“Word will spread quickly, especially among the Mountain Packs, that you exist.” Osrod said. “That you are here on Jetania. Even many among the Plains Packs have believed in the prophecy inwardly when they did not show it outwardly. I will have no influence after that.”

“You will have the support of Garget and Lasun.” Martin said causing Osrod to look at him wide eyed.

“They would never support me.” He spoke quickly.

“Yes, they would.” Martin told him. “They have already told me as much.”

“But why?” Osrod gasped.

“Because like you, they know that civil war is never the answer.” Martin said softly. “For millions of years our people, Lycavorians, we have fought with each other over some of the stupidest things. Land. Politics. Even women. I am guilty of this just as much as anyone.”

“You?” Osrod gasped.

Martin nodded his head. “Right after I came to know who and what I really was, an enemy of my grandfather thought he would fulfill a blood oath he had against him by taking my Anome. My grandfather hurt his pride way back when, and he took it out on me. On one of the women that holds my heart and soul in their hands. It didn’t end well for him, or the empire he had built.”

“You... you destroyed it?” Osrod asked.

Martin nodded his head. “Right down to the nuts and bolts.” He answered. “Our people saw it as justified, what I did, I just wanted my Queen back and I wanted anyone who hurt her to suffer.” Martin looked at him. “My point is, we should not be fighting ourselves. We are wolves! We believe in our Packs and our families! Our people! We should be united and not squabbling with each other over stupid things like vengeance or oaths. There are far worse things in the universe that want to hurt us. Those are the things we need to focus on as a people. A species.” Martin stepped closer to him. “The Union is made up of over thirty trillion men, women and children...” Martin saw Osrod’s eyes go wide at this information. “We have over nine hundred different species among the Union, over nine hundred capital worlds and I can’t even tell you how many colonies that we have. We are united under the same ideals. The same values. We have been since the Union's birth. There are those who don't like it, sure. They think they can do better, or they want things differently, and they have a voice, but the majority rules. Our people are healthy, happy, and no one wants for anything. There are wealthy men and women, families, but all of them give back to the whole. Well... most of them anyway."

"My Queen, Anja, she is half Hadarian. The healers within the Union. She is also the rightful Queen of her people and we will eventually have to go back and correct that." Martin saw the confusion in Osrod's eyes. "A different species within the Alpha Quadrant, one helped by my brother, they overthrew Anja's rule. They thought to get at me through her. They tried to kill me. They kidnapped my elven Queen For'mya and my brother raped her, thinking he could use the children she gave him to usurp me. It's a very long story, but the essential point is that there will always be someone who wants what you have. The question then comes down to this, what are you willing to do to protect it? To insure that your people, the ones who look to you for guidance, to ensure that they are not enslaved or butchered, what will you do? What will you change?"

"Terit fervon?" Osrod asked after a long moment. (Your brother?)

"Jen ano nuhata tis jorbhe niob." Martin answered. "Onskelmunt el jen ildsiss athvora duan cafna." (His soul resides in hell now. Punishment for his sins against our people.)

"Forn?" Osrod asked.

Martin shook his head. "Aur keto." He said softly. "He did not want me to have the burden of killing my brother, my blood, on my hands. He took steps to make sure this did not happen." Martin shook his head. "This is not about me however, this is about you. You have done some stupid things in the past like I said, but so have I. We all have. Now is your chance to correct those mistakes and make things right. That is how you make people respect you. And if they respect you... then they will follow you. Right to the nubous edge."

"And those that don't?" Osrod asked.

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. "Nubou them. You aren't going to please everyone. You never will. But if it feels right in here..." Martin stabbed him in the chest over his heart with his finger. "Then that is what really matters. If it benefits all of our people, then that is what matters. And if you are good in here..." Martin pushed again on his chest over his heart. "Then when you love that beautiful female you have claimed, it will be that much sweeter and so much better. Because then, then you will have no regrets. And when you have no regrets... then you will be happy."

Osrod turned his head when the door to the lounge opened and he saw a beaming Nitona move through the large doors holding the hands of Aricia and the one he now knew was Dysea. They were laughing about something and her beautiful face turned to see him. She smiled brilliantly and broke away from them to dash across the lounge and nearly leaped into his arms. Osrod Aspion inhaled deeply of her sweet scent and felt his blood surge at the feel of her in his arms.

"Osrod my love, it is amazing what they have shown me!" Nitona gasped. "Things that we could have one day! For our people! For our children!"

Martin watched Osrod take her face in his large hands and kiss her then. He smiled as Aricia and Cirith came up on either side of him and pressed close to him. Dysea and Isabella on either side of them.

"I'm starving." Martin spoke now.

"You are always starving, Martin." Bella spoke with a smile.

Martin nodded his head. "True." He spoke. He looked at Osrod. "My son Fedor's wife and mate Iama, she is the best damn cook on this ship outside of my Queens." He spoke. "She'll be leaving us soon, but I want to get some of her food before she does. You hungry?"

Osrod looked at him and nodded his head. "Yes."

"Then it's settled." Martin spoke. "If my nose is telling the truth, I smell pizza!"

Nitona looked at him basking in the feel of Osrod's aura swarming around her and his arms holding her tight. "What is... what is pizza?"

"What is pizza?" Martin asked feigning shock. "Carians, Lady Nitona, let me tell you about pizza! We had better get the to the Mess Deck quickly though, because once my sons smell pizza, they'll be fighting the entire ship to get slices. Follow us!"

Osrod glanced out the view window one last time before he allowed Nitona to lead him out of the lounge. No regrets... Osrod thought to himself. Happiness. Children with Nitona. These are things that Osrod wanted.

Perhaps the Mard Revik was right.

PAKAR SIX

Lylor Kirek sat in the chair in the command center, visibly shaking in near uncontrollable rage. Aryera sat beside her brother. Only she, Yasha, Caylt, Marda and Tiag were in the room with Kesas and Lylor. Kesas had secretly moved Lylor into the room through an entrance only the most senior wolves among the Kirek Pack knew about. It was common for them to gather in the command center so it would not draw attention to what was happening if they had gathered for a meeting. Kesas knew the Arhtai Pack spies would have seen all of them gathered two days ago, and for that to happen again in so short a time would have drawn attention he did not want. They were using looped feeds in the main areas where they knew Blood Detectors were in order to hide the fact that they had woken Lylor, but no one knew exactly how many of the detectors were scattered over the planet or where they all were. Kesas guessed they had, at most, five days before those who watched the detectors realized that something was very wrong and they were watching the same looped feed over and over.

“You... you allowed this?” Lylor spoke in a voice that was anything but friendly as he finally turned and looked at Kesas where he sat. “You allowed this to happen!”

Aryera leaned back slightly in her chair when she heard the tone of his voice. “Lylor!” She gasped.

“It was the only way to stop the bloodshed.” Kesas answered him softly. “It was the only way to save what is left.”

“What is left!” Lylor roared as he came to his feet now, his dual fangs bursting forth and his eyes changing to those of his wolf persona. Bright white/blue wolf eyes. “My children are dead! My grandchildren are dead! My grandchildren’s grandchildren are dead! My KertaGai is lost to me! A prisoner of those jyl ronnosi who perpetrated this act! You gave them to her!” (Vile bastards)

“You, Pauin, Lient and Amori had already been captured! You had already been placed in cryo stasis!” Kesas hissed back at him. “Kelia, Ariso, Daiph and Delma were taken three years later! I gave them nothing! Kelia surrendered herself thinking she was going to save you Lylor Kirek! Yelma Arhtai threatened to kill all of you if she did not!”

“And you let her do this!” Lylor snarled at him.

“I let her do nothing! You, Daniho, Ashten and Lady Reva were the only ones who she would ever listen to! You know this as well as I!” Kesas answered him. “She and your children snuck from the mountain base we were using in the dark. We did not discover what she had done until that foul upae contacted me and told me. Kelia was beside her. She told me to end the fighting! She told me she could not live knowing you and your children had been killed because of her!”

Aryera looked at her brother. “It wasn’t until after she had Kelia, you and your children in stasis that she gave the order to kill all of us.” She spoke. “That is when the true killing began Lylor. We fought... we fought for centuries but their numbers were too great! We could not protect them all.”

“Ranol Nenay did nothing?” Lylor asked.

Aryera shook her head. “Yelma Arhtai spoke lies to everyone. She convinced them all that whoever had Mahanlo blood was infected with some disease none of us had ever heard of. We all knew it was a lie, and when Ranol and Gara Nenay began to question this, Yelma took their youngest children from them by force and held them hostage. She has kept their silence in the same way she has held us at bay. Under threat of death or worse.” Aryera told him. “Ranol vowed to never side with her against Mahanlo blood while she held his children, or for any reason, but what was he to do? She had taken his four youngest children Lylor! The Nenay Pack did not take part in the Dremsa rie Saan. Those of his pack that joined with the Arhtai Pack for whatever reason, Ranol exiled them instantly. Two of his own sons were among those that he exiled! The Nenay Pack saved many of our own pack mates Lylor! Hiding them, shielding them from Arhtai Death Squads through the many years.”

Lylor shook his head. “I find no solace in your words arande.” He spat viciously. “And less in yours Kesas Pengot! You were sworn to defend Mahanlo blood! To defend Kelia! Yet now my blood is gone and you sit there! Your children live, while ours lie dead!”

“Lylor that is quite enough!” Aryera snarled.

“No!” Lylor shouted. “I will hear no more! I will...” Kesas Pengot rose to his feet, his children following his motion. He trembled with anger and Lylor detected this, facing him fully and moving closer. “Do you wish to face me old man! Does your courage return after you have failed so miserably!”

“Lylor stop this!” Aryera barked now, coming to her feet.

“I will not!” Lylor screamed. “I want blood!”

Aryera stepped in front of her brother knowing he would not hurt her no matter what was happening. “Kesas go!” She said quickly. “Take Yasha and Caylt and go! Now!”

Kesas Pengot looked at Lylor from across the small distance that stood between them. “Since that day when Daniho honored me on Cerath by making me his echan, nothing has been more sacred to me than Mahanlo blood.” Kesas spoke softly. “I have lived my life in service to Mahanlo blood and I will die in service to Mahanlo blood. Nothing you do or say will ever change that.” (Advisor)

Kesas Pengot turned quickly and walked out of the room without uttering another word. Yasha and Caylt followed their father without hesitation.

“Sukla!” Lylor screamed. “Sukla! Go back to Arnela and hide!” (Coward)

Lylor turned back to his sister with wide eyes and that is when she struck him with the open-handed slap. Aryera Kirek was a powerful woman and fearless and the blow snapped Lylor’s head around painfully. His head bounced back quickly and he glared at his sister but was unable to stop the second slap that smashed across his opposite cheek with equal force and viciousness.

“Forn nubous midaeu!” Aryera screamed at him. “Lia raya forn! Lia raya forn!” (How dare you)

Lylor grabbed for her wrists to stop the third slap that he saw coming and Aryera’s fangs burst forth now and her eyes changed. “Do not strike me again sister!” He growled at her.

“What will you do fervon?” She snarled angrily completely unafraid of her much larger brother. “Will you strike your own blood now in your foolish rage!”

“Foolish? I am foolish!?” Lylor shouted pushing her hands away. “My beloved Kelia is...”

“Kelia is alive because of Kesas Pengot!” Aryera screamed at her brother. “Three of your children are alive because of Kesas Pengot Lylor! Mahanlo blood still lives because of that man! The Kirek Pack lives because of Kesas Pengot! In your anger to blame someone for what has taken place you have forgotten everything Kelia taught you! She would be ashamed to look upon you now brother! Our father and mother would be ashamed to look upon you! I am ashamed to look upon you! Daniho and Ashten would be ashamed to look upon you after what you have just done.”

“How can you...?” Lylor gasped. “It was his duty to safeguard Kelia and all Mahanlo blood! It was...”

Aryera slapped her brother once more, rocking his head back again, but this time he did not reach up to try and stop her, he only glared at her.

“Kesas Pengot is the one who planned and executed the mission to retrieve your cryo chambers Lylor! It was a dual mission. Arnela, his remaining four children and almost eighty of our Pack died trying to recover Kelia and your children that were being held with her! You were not in the same location or do you think Nyser Arhtai is so stupid?!” Aryera shouted. “They died trying to recover Kelia! All of them died! Kesas was seriously wounded! He could barely stand but he and his team succeeded. They returned with you! Arnela Pengot killed two of Yelma Arhtai’s foul offspring before they captured her. Then they raped, tortured and killed her like a dog in the street! They did the same to his four children! Kesas Pengot has more reason to hate them than any of us! They took everything from him! Everything!”

Aryera pushed her brother away from her as she turned her back to him to regain control of her own emotions. Marda stood up slowly unsure of what to do or say. “Mother?” She said softly seeing Lylor’s head move around to look at her surprised.

Aryera held up her hand and nodded to her youngest daughter. She turned back to Lylor and motioned to Marda. “Your youngest niece fervon.” She said. “Marda Kirek. She stands here this day because Kesas Pengot saved my life on that stinking nubous nightmare world!” Aryera stepped closer to him once more. “It was Kesas who led us after you and Kelia were taken! We could not risk removing you from stasis because of the Blood detectors that she had placed everywhere on Koltar Four. For nearly half a millennium we fought! His only goal was to keep you and my nieces and nephew alive!” Aryera barked at him. “When Yelma and Nyser Arhtai figured out that they would be unable to keep what was truly happening quiet, she threatened to kill Kelia in her chamber if we did not cease the fighting! Five hundred years he led us, his heart crippled with despair because of what he had lost! He never gave up! Never!” Aryera lashed out once more and slapped her brother in the face even harder. Lylor did nothing this time and simply stood there.

“Yelma Arhtai finally told us that if we left Koltar Four, Kelia and your children would remain unharmed. She told us that if we returned the chambers of you and your three children to her that the Kirek Pack could leave. It took us forty-eight years to gather everyone in a safe area and leave Koltar Four, but we had been planning as well. On the last day as we were leaving, Yelma killed your children in their chambers because she discovered that Kesas Pengot had no intention of returning you and the others. He was actually planning an assault that would free Kelia and your remaining children as we left. Gara Nenay helped to discover this and had given the information to Kesas. When Yelma discovered this, she killed two of their children in their stasis chambers!” Aryera shook her head slowly. “Somehow the Arhtai Pack discovered this plan and Yelma killed your children fervon! Kesas practically went mad! In all my years Lylor, I have never seen that man so filled with unrequited rage.” Aryera stopped talking to reign in her emotions again as Lylor dropped his large body into the chair behind him, his face now a mask of disbelief.

Aryera was facing away from her brother when she began speaking again. “Kesas swore that day that he would see her burn in jobhe for her actions.” Aryera said as she turned back around. “She told us to keep your chambers but that if we ever woke you up, any of you, she would kill Kelia instantly. We were banished to Anlar Prime, but when she exiled the Nenay Pack for not siding with her five hundred years later, we were banished here to Pakar Six. She still holds two of Ranol and Gara’s children, just as she holds Kelia and the others.”

“Others?” Lylor gasped. “You mean...?”

“Do you honestly believe she is that stupid? She needed them!” Aryera said looking at her brother. “Almost two million years we have lived here Lylor! We can only have so many children because of resources, but Kesas Pengot has never let us forget who we are and where we come from and we have survived. And he has never forgotten the treachery of Yelma and Nyser Arhtai. Ever!”

“How...?” Lylor stammered.

“She seeded this world with blood detectors that she had made from the Onab technology we were supposed to destroy. Just like she did on Koltar Four and Anlar Prime.” Aryera told him. “And she has spies among us. Those who are playing the good husbands and mates to our females. We know who they are, all seven of them, only two have good hearts and that is because they have Nenay blood in them. We have learned how to trick the blood detectors for a time, but not entirely. We never had reason to test it before now. We have four days, perhaps five before they discover we have woken you.”

“Why... why have you awakened me then arande?” Lylor asked as he came to his feet again his eyes wide. “If waking me puts Kelia and the others at risk I...”

Aryera shoved the data pad at him. “Read this! We had to be sure.” She told him as he took the pad.

“Sure... sure of what?” Lylor demanded as he looked at the pad and began to read.

“That the Prophecy was coming true.” Aryera told him softly after giving him a moment to begin reading.

Lylor lifted his head and stared at her in disbelief. Aryera nodded her head slowly. “You see now. You are Kelia Mahanlo’s beloved mate fervon, her Anome, and you now bear the Prophesied Rebirth of the Crest of Mahanlo blood on your left shoulder. You bear the dual fangs of their bloodline within you as do your remaining children.”

“This... this cannot be true!” Lylor gasped aloud as he looked up from the pad once more. “Even... even Kelia believed them to be lost. Reva as well. It broke her heart when she could no longer feel them within her.”

“It is true fervon.” Aryera said. “Lady Reva, Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo have gone before us, this is true, but their bloodline continues in their descendants. The descendants of both brothers joined as one, just as the Onab Prophecy foretold it would be. We woke you fervon... we woke you to be sure ourselves.”

Lylor looked up from the pads once more. “Chiron!?” He almost shouted the word. “Chiron is with them?!”

Aryera nodded her head once more. “The Mahanlo Bloodline is returning to us brother. More powerful than it ever was before. The Mard Revik and his Tarivuos are returning to us with their awran. Our awran. The blood of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo! And when they do, the Arhtai Pack will feel the wrath of the Kirek and Mahanlo Packs once more. And we will have justice for the Dremsa rie Saan as only we can.”

JETANIA

“...Demand to speak to someone from my government!” Lorendo shouted at the closed steel door. “You cannot hold me here! I have been taken prisoner by unknown hostile forces and my government will compensate you for my release! Someone answer me damn it! I...”

Lorendo stopped shouting and backed up several paces as he heard the door beep and unlock and then it slid to the side. His eyes grew slightly wider when he saw the two, large men enter the cell, their sidearms trained on him. He backed up as far as he could until his legs came to rest against the crates he had slept on the night before. He watched as the third Lycavorian came into the room, his hands folded behind his back.

“Your constant yapping and mindless rants are becoming quite tedious.” Garget Ranev spoke as he came to a stop in front of him.

“Do you know who I am?!” Lorendo barked. “I am a Senior Elder of the Pralor Elder Convocation! I am a very important leader to my people! I can see to it that you become a very wealthy and powerful man if you release me this instant and give me a ship to leave this place.”

“Vin coi ea nio ronrus coi atle vin coi.” One of Garget’s men spoke, never lowering his weapon. (He is a fat bastard is what he is)

Garget chuckled softly as Lorendo looked at the man who had spoken and then back to Garget. “What did he say?” He demanded.

“He called you a fat bastard.” Garget spoke with a smirk. “And I know exactly who you are Elder Lorendo.”

Lorendo’s eyes grew wider at this. “I have never met you before.” Lorendo gasped.

Garget shook his head. “No, thankfully you have not met me before.” Garget answered his eyes changing and his fangs extending. “I did however, have the chance to have a rather lengthy conversation with Konlar and Edrao.”

Lorendo blinked several times and shifted on his feet. “I don’t know... I don’t know anyone by those names.” He stammered.

Garget smiled again. “Yes, Martin said you would say that. Knowing what you have done Elder Lorendo, if you had met me before this day, you would be nothing but a cooling pile of decomposing flesh right now. Bring him.” Garget ordered.

Lorendo could do nothing as the two Lycavorians swarmed over him, pulling a dark hood over his head and quickly securing his hands behind his back with flexible cuffs. Each of them took an arm as Garget turned and they began to lead him out of the room.

Delnash squeezed Martin’s shoulders in greeting, his face bright, relaxed and happy. “It is truly a pleasure to see you again Martin.” He spoke with a broad smile. “And under far better circumstances.”

Martin smiled and nodded his head. “Better for both our peoples.” He said.

Delnash nodded his head. “Indeed.” Delnash turned and motioned to Avatar 27. “You have never met 27.”

Martin shook his head and looked at the towering Avatar. “Two seven, good to finally meet you.”

Two Seven bowed his head slightly. “King Mahanlo-Leonidas.” He said.

Martin looked surprised and Delnash smiled. "I have shared everything with Two Seven that you have shared with me. Everything." He spoke. "The history... the history between our two peoples that you have discovered is enlightening to say the least."

Martin looked back to him and smiled slightly. "I'd say that is a bit of an understatement sir." He said.

Delnash nodded his head. "Yes, I suppose it is." He said. "Tinra has returned and she is doing segments over the next four evenings to give this information to our people. They have a right to know how tied together our species really are and how long that tie has existed. I will not keep anything from them anymore."

Martin nodded his head in accord. "My people are doing the same. Androcles' Public Relations Officer Dilaen Roan is coordinating it with our Netnews folks back home."

"Are you releasing everything?" Delnash asked.

Martin nodded his head. "As with you, they have a right to know their true history and what has brought us to this time now."

"Yes, they do." Delnash agreed. "Sashan and our senior military people have already transferred over to your ship to begin briefings. This man you left in charge on Honelze, this General Juturi. He is most efficient."

Martin nodded his head. "That he is."

"Where are Murano and Wayonn?" Delnash asked.

"They went to grab Anja and Danny." Martin told him. "They'll be along shortly."

Delnash looked at him. "You have a question then? I can see it in your eyes." He asked.

"Sir, you know about Kesyla." Martin said. "I just wanted you to know..."

Delnash shook his head quickly. "No." Delnash spoke. "In the times that I have spoken to my daughter, both my wife and I have seen the brightness in her eyes. The happiness on her face. That she has found this with your brother and she is now part of your people does not concern me. All I have ever wanted was for her to be happy."

Martin smiled and nodded his head. "They love her to death." He said.

Delnash smiled as well. "I know. That comes out in her voice whenever we speak to her."

"Your son?" Martin asked.

Delnash shook his head. "Daron is... his time with Lorendo corrupted him badly." He replied. "He is confined to a holding cell along with the others we picked up that supported Lorendo and his actions. I don't believe we got them all, but we arrested enough of them that the rest can do no real harm any longer."

"Just keep your guard up sir." Martin told him. "A dedicated fanatic can do a lot with very little."

Delnash nodded his head. "Lorendo showed me that." He replied. "We are taking no chances anymore."

"Good." Martin said. "If you need..."

The door slid aside and they turned as Murano entered with Anja and Wayonn came in with Danny, Nayeca and Re'lon right on his heels. The reunion was brief but very fulfilling for Delnash as he saw the life back in his brother's eyes and body language after so long. Martin watched with pleased eyes as he embraced Danny quickly and thanked him for loving his daughter. He and Wayonn shook hands firmly, the past quickly falling to the wayside where it belonged. Delnash bowed his head to Anja as he handed her the data pad while she tucked herself up against Martin's body.

"We did just as you instructed Anja." Delnash told her. "We used older, plasma based fusion warheads that we had in storage, but it accomplished what we needed them to do."

"Both of them are gone?" Anja asked him.

Delnash nodded his head. "Not even dust remains."

Anja nodded her head. "Good. It's for the best."

"I agree." Delnash spoke. "We will have to confer with Radra and yourself about this station over Hador and how best to eliminate the threat it poses to the planet below, but for now, we are ahead in this game."

"For once, finally." Anja said in agreement.

"Where is Lorendo?" Delnash asked again.

"Just about here." Martin answered. "He's done everything he could think of to bribe his way out of his position, but it hasn't worked."

"This does not surprise me." Delnash said. "What do you... what do you intend to do with him?"

"Me?" Martin asked surprised. "I thought you wanted him?"

Delnash shook his head. "The Elder Convocation met on this matter." Delnash spoke. "His actions have taken the lives of far more of your people than ours. It should be you who decides his fate, not us." He said softly. "And to be honest, I don't believe our system of justice could adequately punish him for what he has done." Delnash reached over to 27 and Martin watched while he held out the data pad to him. Delnash took it and turned back to Martin, holding out the pad. "Which brings me to another issue that we have discussed extensively and are in full agreement on. It is time to step from our past and begin our future, if we are to have one."

Martin took the pad. "What's this?"

Delnash took a deep breath. "The Official Petition of the Pralor people to become full members of the Lycavorian Union."

Martin's eyes nearly bugged out of his head. "What?!" He almost shouted. He detected similar reactions from Murano and Wayonn as well when he looked at them and he turned back to Delnash.

Delnash nodded his head. "It is sudden, I know, but it is what we want as a people." He told him. "Teniri and our Darastrixi brothers and sisters have already requested this, Martin. She asked me to give her a ship to take her personal representatives to Earth and petition your Union Senate on her behalf. I gave her that ship without question."

Martin shook his head. "She never told me. Teniri and the dragons with her are already part of the Union. Does Arzoal know?"

Delnash shook his head. "She wanted it to be a surprise for Arzoal as well." Delnash said with a smile as he looked at Wayonn and Murano now. "I only have to look at Wayonn and my brother to see that our future is deeply entwined with that of your people. All of your people. It is time we began acting like it. We have much to make up for... and I intend to see that we do."

"Delnash, this is not... you don't have to do this." Martin told him. "We would stand with you to defend Honelze and your other planets regardless. Our history is too..." Martin looked at him as he realized what he was going to say.

Delnash smiled and nodded his head. "You see..." He said. "Now you know why we are doing this. Our history together as two species dates back further than either of us ever would have imagined. As it was then, it will be again. And so much more."

"Delnash, we cannot offer you anything that you don't already have." Martin said.

"Yes, you can." Delnash told him. "You already have, Martin my friend." He said with a smile. "You have given us purpose once more. You have given us reason to come out of our self-imposed bubble and face what the galaxy throws at us without regret or worry. As we once did. You should see our people on Artaaya, Martin. Never have I seen them so energized and prepared to face each day without fear. As members of the Union, we can begin to do once more what we cherished as a people so long ago. Exploration and helping others. That is the wondrous gift you have given back to us. It is not something we want to lose ever again."

Martin stared at the pad in his hand for a long moment and he felt Anja squeeze his arm tightly. He looked down into her jade colored eyes and saw her nod her head. Within her he could feel his other Queens in total agreement. Martin didn't hesitate then and he turned back to Delnash. "Chief Elder Delnash, on behalf of the Lycavorian Union and all of her members, I accept. We would be very proud to have you as partners going forward."

Murano had not seen his brother smile so wide in more centuries than he could remember and he felt pride swell within his chest as he stepped up beside him with Wayonn. "For our future, brother." He said.

Delnash nodded his head with that smile still intact. "For our people."

Martin saw Danny reach up and touch his ear implant and he looked at Martin. "They're outside." He said.

Martin nodded his head and looked at Delnash. "Can you get him to talk?" Delnash asked.

Martin grinned broadly. "Oh... he'll talk. He might not remember any of it... but he'll talk."

Delnash smiled as the door opened and the two Lycavorians brought Lorendo into the room. He still wore the hood and they looked at Martin who motioned to the chair at the table. They ushered him forward and basically forced him to sit in the chair.

"I demand to speak to a representative of my people!" Lorendo screamed from under the hood. "Do you have any idea who I am?! I will see all of you pay dearly for this treatment of me. I..."

Danny shook his head as he reached up and yanked the hood off Lorendo's head. He lowered his head to shield himself from the bright light of the room and blinked several times before looking up directly into Delnash's eyes.

"Delnash!" He exclaimed.

"You wished to speak with a representative of our people, Lorendo." Delnash spoke. "Here I am."

Lorendo's eyes darted back and forth between Martin and Murano and Wayonn, and Martin could smell the fear building in him. "You!" Lorendo hissed staring at Martin finally.

"Nice to see you too, amoeba brain." Martin snapped as he crossed his arms over his chest.

"You did this?" Lorendo spat.

"Given your superior asshole attitude, I figured that you wouldn't have dealt with anyone outside of Konlar and Edrao, so I sent along some Spartan assistance to your nightmare palace. Just so you wouldn't recognize anyone by accident." Martin said. "Imagined how delighted I was when they told me you were coming for a visit. I told them to spare no expense in making you feel welcome. They were only too happy to oblige."

"I am an Elder of the Pralor Convocation!" Lorendo shouted. "You cannot..."

Delnash leaned across the table now and spread his hands out in front of him as he glared at him. "No Lorendo, you are not." He spoke menacingly. "Your status as an Elder of our people was stripped the moment your crimes came to light. You were lucky to make it off Artaaya before our people caught you, Lorendo. You would not have enjoyed what they would have done to you."

"Delnash... I can explain everything!" Lorendo gasped. "Everything I have done has been for the good of our people! I..."

"The good of our people!" Delnash snarled loudly as he lashed out and slapped Lorendo savagely across the face, rocking his head back and splitting his bottom lip with the force of the blow. "You have the blood of millions of our people on your hands! Millions of them! You have the blood of millions of Martin's people on your hands Lorendo! Millions! I cannot begin to imagine what other lives you have taken in your quest for power."

"I was trying to make our people strong again!" Lorendo barked out. "So, so that one day we could return and take our empire back from the Scourge!"

Delnash shook his head. "The Pralor Empire died the day our homeworld fell. There is no taking back something that no longer exists, Lorendo. You helped see to that as well."

"Lies!" Lorendo screamed. "Lies perpetrated by this animal!" Lorendo glared at Martin now.

Delnash held out his hand towards 27 once more and had another data pad placed in his palm. Delnash tossed it onto the table in front of him.

"I think not, Lorendo." Delnash spoke. "Do you know what is on this pad, Lorendo?" He asked him as he tapped the pad on the table. "Avatar 27 was most ingenious in discovering how deeply you had buried your sins. Your complicity in ordering false information to be given to Seed Mission 51187! This resulted in the deaths of the entire complements of three city ships and the partial complements of the remaining two! Your actions kept Sumar from training new Praetorians and returning to our people. With them... with them we may have been able to fight the Second Scourge War and save our people. You took that chance away from us with your personal vendetta. Only by the grace of the spirits within the Rift of Time do his grandsons now stand here with us. I will not relay to you all of your sins, Lorendo, for you already know them and it would only make me angrier than I already am."

"I demand a tribunal of our people!" Lorendo shouted.

Delnash shook his head again. "No. As Chief Elder of our people, I have labeled you a War Criminal, Lorendo. Just as Xaxon was a War Criminal. You no longer have any rights of any kind among our people." Martin saw Lorendo's eyes go wide at this information. "I wash my hands of your pathetic person and only have one piece of advice for you. Tell them everything you know, Lorendo. It will only make your death that much more painless."

"Never!" Lorendo screamed. "I will tell you nothing! You can't do this!"

Delnash shook his head as he stood back up. "It is already done." He said firmly. He looked at Martin. "He is yours now."

Martin smiled even wider now and his dual fangs extended to their full length. "I was really hoping you wouldn't cooperate." He spoke. "Red?"

Anja smiled and lifted her hand exposing the old fashion syringe. "I have been waiting a long time to use this." She stated with a wicked grin as her own fangs extended and her eyes changed. "It's been a lot of years since I used a syringe. I hope I don't kill you when I stick you."

"Stay away!" Lorendo screamed. "You can't do this! Stay away you, you crazy bitch!"

Anja laughed at him. "You haven't seen me crazy fatso! You're getting off easy." She spat.

Anja didn't hesitate for an instant and she moved right up next to Lorendo's chair and viciously grabbed a handful of his hair, yanking his head to the side. Lorendo could do nothing as Anja stabbed the needle into the meat of his thick neck and drove her thumb down on the plunger. She was not gentle when she pulled the syringe out and shoved his head away from her.

"Night, night, fat boy." Anja growled.

Delnash saw Lorendo's eyes glaze over almost instantly and he looked at Martin. "How long?" He asked.

Martin turned and looked at Re'lon. "Give us three hours." He spoke.

Nayeca nodded her head. "That will be enough."

Delnash nodded his head. "I would like to meet your children, Martin." Delnash said. "The descendants of Sumar have become quite popular on Artaaya now."

Martin nodded his head and took Anja's hand. "Then if you will follow us."

"King Martin?" Re'lon's voice stopped him and Martin turned to look at him. "How far do Nayeca and I press?"

"Everything, Re'lon." Martin said. "I want to know everything."

Re'lon nodded his head. "It shall be done."

PAKAR SIX COMMAND CENTER

Lylor Kirek moved into the Command center from the private entrance and was at once swarmed by Rothan Luas who embraced him tightly while the others watched. None of them knew Lylor Kirek personally, only by his reputation. Rothan Luas on the other hand, he had fought beside him for centuries. Even before they came to Koltar Four. They watched as the man they all viewed as legend embraced Rothan like a brother.

Lylor was still trying to process all Aryera had told him. A thirty-minute-long hot shower and being able to shave his heavily bearded face had returned much of his former energy and his body was recovering quickly now from the effects of such a long cryo stasis. His heart was very heavy though as he recalled everything that Aryera had told him. He longed for his beloved wife and mate, for only her aura had ever been able to comfort him. He and Kelia had arrived on Koltar Four with their six remaining children, their three oldest children having been killed in the final years of the Zin Sarakoa Vyen Ils. In fulfilment of their solemn promise to Reva, Daniho and Ashten, he and Kelia had set about rebuilding their bloodline. The Mahanlo and Kirek bloodlines had never been shy about their love of children or having them. Kelia had given birth to six more of their children within a hundred years of arriving on Koltar Four. His Kelia's scent was never more sweet to Lylor than when she was carrying his children. Their youngest, a bright blue-eyed daughter they had named Revia, after her staania. All six of their youngest children had taken mates before the Dremsa rie Saan, and like their older siblings, they had begun to have children quickly as well. While most of the marriages had been with the Nenay Pack, Revia, at the tender age of twenty-one, had accepted the courtship of a much older Alpha wolf from the Arhtai Pack. He was the youngest brother of Nyser Arhtai and had fought in the closing years of the war with the Iais'Kai. While Kelia and Lylor both had been very hesitant at first, their ultimate hope had been that this union would begin repairing the rift between their Packs.

Ivore Arhtai was nearly six hundred thousand years Revia's senior in age, but even Lylor had to admit that his devotion to their daughter had been absolute.

At least that is what they had believed.

Aryera could not tell him for certain, but Revia had not been heard from since the end of the Dremsa rie Saan and she was now listed as killed with all of the others of Mahanlo blood during that period. It had shaken him to his core to know that only three of their twelve children had survived. So many lives. So much blood. Grandchildren, Great Grandchildren, nieces and nephews, cousins, all gone now but for three. It had been so overwhelming that Lylor Kirek had broken down in the shower and done something he had never done before in his life.

He had cried his eyes out.

Lylor saw Kesas as he embraced Rothan and he knew what he had to do. He released Rothan after a brief moment and moved over to where Kesas stood. Those he now knew as Caylt and Yasha, Kesas' oldest children with his second wife, began to move forward to defend their father, but Lylor saw Aryera intercept them.

The Kirek Pack was second only to the Mahanlo Pack when it came to pureness of blood and physical size, and Lylor was no exception. His six foot three frame towered over Kesas' leaner five foot eleven body. Lylor looked at him for a long moment, Kesas not even meeting his eyes.

"Kesas?" Lylor finally spoke.

"You have said your piece, Lylor Kirek." Kesas hissed at him softly. "But you will not remove me from my sacred duty to the Mahanlo bloodline. You will have to kill me first."

Lylor shook his head slowly. "Kesas... I'm..." Lylor saw Kesas turn to look at him. "I am sorry, Kesas."

Kesas Pengot stared into those blue eyes for a long moment and in those eyes, he saw the same pain and agony that he himself knew so well. Pain and agony that only Acki had saved him from. Kesas knew Lylor Kirek to be a man of very few words, Kelia usually the one to speak for her husband and mate since they were anomes. He also knew that their love for each other was endless and to know that she was still among their vile enemies was nothing short of horrifying for Lylor. Kesas turned to face Lylor fully and he reached up and grabbed the side of Lylor's head. "You... you acted out of pain and anger, Lylor Kirek. These are emotions that are intimately known to me, young wolf, and I cannot hold them against you." Everyone was young in comparison to Kesas Pengot so Lylor didn't flinch at his words. Kesas reached up and placed his other hand on the opposite side of Lylor's head and he could see the tears forming in Lylor's eyes. He shook his head quickly. "Shed no more tears, Lylor Kirek. Believe me when I tell you I have shed enough tears for all of us that remain. This is not the time for tears, however. We will see justice done, Lylor, and you will have your beloved Kelia back in your arms. I swear this to you on the lives of my children. Now you must be the man you were during the Zin Sarakoa Vyen Ils. Warrior and leader of your Pack."

Lylor looked to the left and right as Caylt and Yasha moved up beside their father. His eyes went back to Kesas.

"My oldest with Acki. Caylt and Yasha." Kesas said.

"My apologies to you both." Lylor spoke softly. "I must..."

The insistent buzzing began from one of the nearby computer consoles and Caylt moved quickly to the station. His hands moved across the console and then he turned to his father with wide eyes.

"Father! Incoming transmission from unknown source!" Caylt barked out as he turned back to the console. "It is similar to the probe transmission in encryption and carrier wave but I cannot pinpoint the source!"

"And you will not be able to trace it unless I wish it." The male voice erupted over the internal speakers within the room.

This caused everyone in the room to look around quickly in disbelief. All but Kesas Pengot as he moved closer to his son. He knew that voice. A voice from a past that he had left behind so many thousands of years ago.

"Chiron?" Kesas gasped out causing all of them to look at him with wide eyes.

"Ah... Kesas Pengot." The voice spoke again and this time all of them could detect an inflection of satisfaction from that voice. "It has been far too long, Kesas. Far too long."

"Chiron where are... how are you able to penetrate our COM channels so easily?" Kesas asked as he moved up beside his son.

“There are many questions that will be asked and answered.” Chiron responded. “Right now, however, are you within a secure location? And is Lylor Kirek with you. We know that you have woken him.”

Kesas looked at Lylor now, whose blue eyes were wide. “We are... we are in our secure Command Center. Yes, Lylor is here with us. So are Aryera Kirek, Rothan Luas and two of my children. Caylt and Yasha. Marda and Tiag Kirek are also present. Who is we, Chiron?”

Caylt shook his head and looked at his sister as she came up beside him. “I do not know how they have bypassed our Communication security protocols, arande. Not even the Arhtai Pack can do that.”

“Kesas Pengot, do you remember what King Daniho told you of the Pralor people?” Chiron asked him. “How they had advanced their Etheric abilities to a point far beyond what our own people had at that time?”

Kesas looked confused. “Chiron, what does that have to do with anything?” He asked. “Yes, I remember. I remember everything.”

“Then I suggest you prepare yourselves. They will use their blood to focus and connect.” Chiron said. There was a pause and then Chiron spoke again. “Martin. Androcles. Whenever you are ready.”

There was a brilliant flash of white light in the center of the room and they heard Lylor Kirek groan in slight pain and reach for his head, his eyes wide in disbelief. All of them stumbled back slightly as the burst of white light grew more intense and larger. Their eyes were also wide as Kesas reached for Lylor, grabbing his shoulders.

“Lylor, what...!?” Kesas stopped talking as it enveloped him as well and his eyes grew even wider.

The white light was twisting and turning as it began to clear and all of them could see three figures begin to take shape in the image. Life sized images of three men. Lylor staggered against Kesas now, reaching for the nearby table with one hand as his mind was flooded with images of places and events he had never seen. He gripped the table tightly, his other hand holding Kesas as the same images flashed through his own mind.

Lylor Kirek lifted his head as the images of the three men began to clear and focus. Lylor was Kelia’s beloved husband and her Anome, and because of her he carried Mahanlo blood within him now. And what Lylor Kirek felt reaching for him now, surrounding him, it was pure Mahanlo blood on a scale the likes of which he had not felt in millions of years. It was so raw and powerful and clear, and so very familiar. He watched as the images came into focus and then standing before all of them were the clear images of three men as if they were standing in the same room with them. Chiron, he recognized instantly, but the other two, they wore armor from head to toe and it hid most of their heads and faces except for thin slots for their eyes and a space for where their mouths were. It was armor that Lylor recognized almost instantly.

Lylor turned when he heard his sister gasp in disbelief. “Aryera?!”

“Fervon... Lylor... he wears... he wears the Arwa rie vada Revik!” Aryera exclaimed in utter incredulity. “The other one... he wears the Arwa rie vada Tarivu!”

“Iadour un jar son aur staanio for Dadrien rie vada Dir.” The larger one spoke now. (Given to us by my grandfather and Dadrien of the Mountain) They all watched as he turned his head slightly and spoke. “Keto.”

Martin and Andro both tilted their heads ever so slightly and they all watched as the armor surrounding their heads began to recede quickly, exposing their faces. It was Rothan Luas who summed up the feelings of everyone in the room as he dropped to his knees in an almost reverent manner.

“By all that we have ever held holy to our hearts!” He gasped out the words.

Lylor cared not that his blue eyes were now flowing with tears and nor did Kesas Pengot. They had gripped each other tightly and Lylor felt his sister come up beside him, taking his arm in her hands and squeezing almost painfully. Before them stood almost exact duplicates of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo.

Chiron stepped forward to the side of Androcles and their eyes focused on him. “Kesas Pengot, Lylor Kirek, I give to you the descendants of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas, the True King of our people, and his first-born son Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas, First Herald of the Mard Revik.”

They watched as both Martin and Andro allowed the change to come over them and dual fangs extended from their upper gums, exposing themselves as one set of yellow/gold eyes and one set of the most fascinating azure blue eyes any of them had ever seen, staring back at them. Aryera Kirek could no longer contain herself and she burst into tears now as well.

“Son vada carians!” Rothan exclaimed as they all saw the massive wings extend from the armor they wore. Glittering wings encased in what could only be Onkmeti Naami, just as the rest of them were.

Martin stepped closer to where Lylor, Kesas and Aryera stood together, holding one another, but his yellow/gold wolf eyes were focused entirely on Lylor Kirek. Those eyes burned with an intensity that none of them had seen since they had been beside Daniho Mahanlo. It was then that all of them saw the single tear rolling down Martin’s tanned cheek. Their eyes grew wide at this and then they saw Androcles’ azure blue eyes and the tears that were streaming from those magnificent orbs of color.

“Oh uncle, if only you knew how I have longed for this day.” Martin spoke softly though all of them could hear his words. “All of my life I have... I have felt you within me. All of you. I have felt the call of my blood and did not know what it truly was. Now I do, Tenne. Now I know everything.”

“Avoi.” All of them heard Androcles speak from just behind his father.

“We are coming, Tenne.” Martin said again. “We have secured our blood here on Jetania. All of them.”

Lylor’s eyes were wide now. “Doseb! Irani!” He gasped.

Martin nodded his head. “They are safe. As are their children and their grandchildren. Your blood, uncle. And the blood of my Tenna.” Martin told him. “You are no longer alone. None of you are. We have Sama and Roeza Arhtai in our custody and we are questioning them even as we speak.” Martin told them as his eyes fell on Aryera for the briefest of moments, seeing her smile at him broadly. He looked back to Lylor then. “We are coming, Tenne. And we will put our family back together. I swear this to you on the blood that flows within my veins.”

“How... how soon can you...” Lylor stammered the words, still unable to believe this was actually happening.

“Three days.” Martin told him confidently.

“Three days!” Kesas gasped. “Jetania is... it took Doseb’s ship nearly six months to reach Ventori from here, even with Onab technology. Jetania is even further away.”

Martin nodded his head with a smile as he reached up and wiped away the tear from his cheek. “Let’s just say that we have discovered quite a bit in this last year. Three days. Right now, however, right now Androcles and I have to ask you some questions, Tenne. And you, Kesas Pengot.”

Kesas looked surprised. “Me, Milord?” He asked.

Martin tilted his head once more and looked at Kesas. “My son and I have a sense of what has happened Kesas Pengot given what we have learned from that upae Sama and her daughter.” Martin said. “I don’t want all of the answers that I have questions to right now, that can wait until we are there among all of you. You... you swore yourself to my grandfather and the Mahanlo bloodline all those many years ago, Kesas Pengot. You did not need to do this, but you did. If what I believe has happened has indeed taken place, then my bloodline survives because of you and the actions of those of the Kirek Pack who still remain. I intend to make things right Uncle. Androcles and I need... we need to know what we will be facing so that we can plan accordingly.” They watched Martin step closer to Lylor in the Etheric transmission.

“Cerath coi bacj niob Tenne. Vada daanth rie toniru coi vinn’ jar.” Martin spoke the words, seeing Lylor’s eyes grow wide. The tenor of his words was something that sent a chill down the spines of everyone in the room with them. (Cerath is gone now Uncle. The Time of Reckoning is upon us)

CHAPTER SEVENTY-TWO

ANLAR PRIME

NENAY PACK COMPOUND

Ranol Nenay was nearing five million years old, yet his outward appearance, as with most Lycavorians, did not show his true age. His dark hair had only a few spots of gray in it, but his full beard and mustache, while somewhat unkempt, was now almost completely gray in color. Gara kept telling him it made him look distinguished and proud. His six foot three frame was still powerful and lean, though he had put on a few pounds in the last ten years or so, which did not seem to bother Gara in the least since their passion in their bed was as intense as ever.

Ranol Nenay had assumed leadership of his Pack when his father and older brother had fallen against the Iais'Kai in the last thousand years of the war. He remembered vividly his father's last words to him... and this had shaped Ranol Nenay's life ever since.

“It falls now to you, Ranol my son. Honor our Pack, our people and our True King. Mahanlo blood has led us from the abyss and with my dying breath, I can see the light ahead for us. Stay strong and follow the path our King lays for us. I will see you in Vada Wayn aur keto. Stay strong for our Pack and our people. Never lose faith, for Mahanlo blood will never fail us as a people.”

Ranol Nenay had honored his father's words after that day. All but one time, and that time had almost destroyed his Pack. He had let his instincts as a father overrule all else, even the vow to his own father, and that had led to the most horrific time of his Pack since Vada zin Sarakoa Vyen Ils.

Vada Dremsa rie Saan.

The Night of Blood.

Ranol Nenay shook his head quickly, shaking those thoughts from his mind as he walked down the corridor holding the data pad in his hand. With his beloved Gara by his side, Ranol had snatched the honor of the Nenay Pack back from the dark abyss before all was lost and he reaffirmed his oath to his father's last request. This had caused Yelma Arhtai to banish his Pack here to Anlar Prime, but it had allowed them to keep their faith and their honor. They had built three great cities here on Anlar Prime and more smaller settlements across the surface of the planet than he could remember. Yelma Arhtai kept most of the Onab technology that they were supposed to destroy, but this suited Ranol just fine. He did not want something that was cursed with the blood of thousands. His Pack were not fools, and what they had built here they had built by sweat, blood, tears hard work just as their King Daniho Mahanlo had taught them so long ago.

Yelma Arhtai thought she was smarter than everyone else, but she did not know of the bond that the Nenay Pack now had with the Kirek Pack, or the spies within her own Pack that had sworn allegiance to Ranol at great danger to themselves. Yelma Arhtai was still holding several of the Mahanlo bloodline and his children prisoner, having killed Kelia Mahanlo long ago, but she was stupidly unaware that Kesas Pengot had given him the means to hide and protect four members of the Mahanlo bloodline that still lived here on Anlar Prime. Three of Kelia and Lylor's great granddaughters and one great grandson were mated to members of the Nenay Pack and had been for many hundreds of years now. Each of them were living full lives with children of their own, but they all held the wish that one day they would be able to free their staanio. They stayed in very close contact with Ranol and Gara through Ranol's own son Radend, who was mated to Taraina Mahanlo and devoted to her as deeply as Ranol was to his Gara. Their physical features had been surgically altered, just like Doseb and Irani Mahanlo and Kesas had given him the means to hide their true bloodline using something given to him by the Onab long ago. Ranol and Gara knew of Doseb and Irani but had been unable to aid Kesas in that plan because of their close proximity to Koltar Four and the many spies that Yelma Arhtai had among the Nenay Pack. He did not know what had come of that mission, but the less he knew, the less he could give to Yelma Arhtai if she ever came for him or his Pack.

Ranol Nenay was no fool, and he knew that she would come for them one day.

Ranol spoke with Aryera Kirek several times a year to exchange information that they had gathered and to give whatever aid that they could in order to ensure the Kirek Pack was able to survive and grow even on Pakar Six. They had also established a very secret and very effective underground network with the Kirek Pack through the years that Yelma Arhtai and her ronnus mate Nyser would never discover.

He had failed his King's bloodline once, but Ranol Nenay would ensure he never did so again. And he would die in order to preserve the Mahanlo bloodline, as sacred as it had become to him and his own Pack since the Vada Dremsa rie Saan.

Ranol turned as his oldest son Taion moved up beside his father as he walked along the upper level of the Nenay Compound. The courtyard below was already beginning to fill with the sounds of his grandchildren and great grandchildren as they began to gather with children of other Pack members for their day's schooling. The main Nenay Compound was where all of the children in the city of Oldiny came for their classes until they were sixteen years of age. It was something that Gara insisted upon. Oldiny was their main city, and the largest in size, and the compound was full nearly every day with the voices and laughter of children. Gara Nenay ran nearly fifty classrooms within the main compound that taught their children the true history of their people well as the fine arts. Gara Nenay did not propagate the many lies that Yelma Arhtai preached from her lavish home on Koltar Four and most of the News channels from Koltar Four were now banned on Anlar Prime. Ranol did not keep his people from watching them, instead he allowed them to be broadcast so that his Pack could see the differences. It took only two hundred years before those News channels were publicly banned by referendum of the people. They were still watched of course, but no one believed the information coming from them anymore. The Nenay Main Family Compound was also the most heavily fortified and defended position in the city, and this is where the young and old would come were they ever to be attacked.

Taion Nenay was nearing three and a half million years of age, but he looked no more than fifty. He was almost an exact duplicate of his father in size and build, his green eyes bright and alert. Taion was his third oldest son, and the one Ranol relied upon most of all now. His two older sons had betrayed their Pack when they chose to side with the Arhtai Pack, and now they were no longer spoken of by name by anyone within their Pack. Taion and his wife and mate had thirteen beautiful children and Saymora remained at home caring for their fourteenth child. Tamore Nenay had joined them two months too early after a fall Saymora had suffered. He was still sickly even after two months, but Taion and Saymora were as devoted to him as they were to any of their children and they would see him grow proud and strong no matter what they had to do.

“Keto...” Ranol spoke. “You look puzzled.”

Taion looked at his father as they fell in beside one another. “I was reviewing the reports last night father. The activities and sensor logs from the Arhtai Command Monitoring Station in the North.” Taion spoke. “I came... I came across something that I found very odd.”

Ranol met his eyes. There were many among the Arhtai Pack who had not agreed with Yelma Arhtai’s actions during the Night of Blood or the years after during the Purge. Ranol knew many of the Arhtai Pack were still loyal to the Mahanlo bloodline in every way and held them in great reverence. They were scattered all over the planet, some of them in positions of great responsibility. They held to their beliefs even while acting differently among those they knew they could not trust. To even mention the Mahanlo bloodline now was cause for instant arrest and interrogation. Many that had been taken through the centuries were never heard from again. Yelma and Nyser Arhtai held power close to themselves, their immediate family and those loyal to them. Only the most senior Alphas among the Arhtai Pack were afforded any kind of real power and influence while the rest were looked down upon even if they were Arhtai Pack blood.

“What is that?”

Taion held out the data pad to his father. “The Northern Command station is the one tasked with monitoring the stasis pods of Lylor Kirek and his children with him. Those on Pakar Six.”

Ranol nodded his head. “Yes.”

“All activity is normal, except for this.” Taion pointed to the single power reading on the small screen that was slightly different than the others.

“What is this?” Ranol asked now as his heart began to beat a little faster.

“A interruption of the secondary power coupling to Lylor Kirek’s stasis pod for sixth tenths of a second, roughly thirty-six hours ago.” Taion told him. “Everything else is showing normal, and his is the only pod that was affected by this fluctuation.”

Ranol looked at his son. “I’m not following Taion? Why is this significant?”

“Look at the power stream father.” Taion told him.

Ranol looked at the pad once more and adjusted the screen. His eyes narrowed slightly as he saw the very subtle differences in the power flow after the interruption. He looked at his son. “The power variances differ by point three.” He said.

Taion nodded his head. “Every since they placed him in stasis, the power variances have never changed on the Main or Secondary Power streams. Not once. Until now.”

“What are you suggesting?” Ranol asked him. “What could cause this?”

Taion shook his head. “Nothing normal father. I checked with sister this morning, before bringing this to you. You know the Onab designed each of the stasis pods to act independently and to switch to the Secondary Power core if the main ever failed, especially while we were in transient from Cerath?”

Ranol nodded his head. “Yes... ok.”

“The power variance of the Secondary Core was never meant to change or fluctuate. It had to remain constant in order to activate should the Main Core ever cease.” Taion told him.

Ranol looked back to the pad. His daughter Liita was perhaps the most knowledgeable and experienced engineer within the Nenay Pack. She was brilliant to be honest, and one of only a handful that could actually labor on the Onab technology and keep it working even after so long. Yelma Arhtai needed her assistance in this and it was another reason why she did not move against the Nenay Pack, though the time was coming when they would no longer need Liita’s help as more and more of the Arhtai Pack became efficient in maintaining the old Onab technology.

“What exactly are you saying keto?” Ranol asked.

“Someone bypassed the main power core of Lylor Kirek’s stasis pod.” Taion told him. “They bypassed it in such a way as to make it so the main power core is no longer the one controlling the pod’s operation, but it still appears to be, to anyone monitoring the controls.”

Ranol looked at him. “And why do this?” He asked.

Taion took the pad from his father. “Liita and I agree that the only reason for doing this is if you intended to open the stasis pod without anyone who was monitoring it knowing it had occurred. At least until a full systems check was done.” He answered. “Father... Kesas Pengot or someone of the Kirek Pack has woken Lylor Kirek.”

Ranol Nenay’s heart began to race out of control now but he stayed outwardly calm and stoic. “You and Liita are certain?” Ranol asked him.

Taion nodded his head. “She conferred with her personal engineering team father. All of them agreed.

“How long... how long before this is detected by Yelma Arhtai’s people Taion?” Ranol asked.

“A full systems check is the only way to determine this.” Taion spoke. “They only do full systems checks on Onab equipment every three months as you know. The Ialdo engineers are limited and they refuse to train more and there is nothing Yelma Arhtai can do about that. Their next check is in four days.”

“And our next contact with Aryera Kirek?” Ranol asked him though he already knew the answer.

“Not for another three months and twelve days.” Taion replied.

Ranol shook his head. “Kesas Pengot would not risk this Taion! He would not risk those of Mahanlo blood that Yelma Arhtai stills holds! Or your siblings! He swore this to me!” Ranol said. “He knows that upae would not hesitate to kill them if she discovered that he had woken Lylor or any of his children!”

“There is something else father.” Taion spoke. “The Blood Detectors she seeded on Pakar Six are the same ones she seeded all over Anlar Prime. Even we do not know where all of them are. None of them have gone into alarm mode.”

“They found a way to disrupt the Blood Detectors!” Ranol gasped.

Taion nodded his head. “We don’t know how or for how long, but it appears that way. Lylor Kirek was Lady Kelia’s mate and Anome. He would carry her blood within him because of this and outside of King Daniho, Lord Ashten and Lady Reva, there is no other blood as pure as Lylor Kirek. If the Blood Detectors have not gone off, then they have found a way to defeat them. At least temporarily.”

Ranol looked at his son his eyes wide. “Gather your mother and meet me in the Secure Communications Bunker Taion.” He spoke. “Kesas Pengot would not risk this unless something is happening! He has never broken a promise to anyone about anything. He swore to me he would do nothing without informing me first. Something has happened that causes him to do this and we must find out what it is.”

“You intend to contact her using the emergency frequency?” Taion asked.

Ranol nodded his head. “We have no choice now.” He spoke. “Quickly now! Retrieve your mother and meet me at the bunker!”

PAKAR SIX COMMAND CENTER

“...Cannot wake Pauin, Lient or Amori.” Kesas spoke as they all sat in the Command Center once more.

When the transmission with Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas and his oldest son had ended, all of them needed time to compose themselves. The Etheric connection, as they now knew it to be called, this alone had taken its toll on all of them in its near four-hour length. Martin had told them the throbbing in their heads would subside quickly, but the connection with him and his son Androcles would still be active in the background now. It would also stimulate the Etheric abilities that they all naturally had to the point that all of them would begin to be able to talk freely with their minds on a much higher level than they ever had before. A level that would enable them to not worry about any Arhtai spies hearing their words. What had shaken them more than anything was Martin and his son. Even Kesas and Lylor, who were closest to the twin brothers on Cerath, even they could not believe how close in looks and mannerisms Martin and his son were to Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo.

The table was now packed with trays of food and drink that they had all taken part of since the Etheric connection drained energy from them that only food could replace. It would not be like this always, Martin had told them, but initially they would need to eat to keep their strength up.

“Why?” Lylor asked looking at Kesas now.

“We built only one Bypass Coupling fervon.” Aryera answered him. “Any more and the Arhtai sraaps who monitor their equipment would detect it right away. One of you we could hide for a time, all of you we could not. And the Mahanlo proteins from the blood of all four of you being awakened at the same time we would not have been able to hide at all. We used the last of the Onab Blood Masking Protein on those that Ranol, Gara and the Nenay Pack guard and protect.”

“Who?” Lylor asked.

“Taraina is the oldest. She is the wife and mate to Ranol’s own son Radend.” Aryera told him. “Shyira, and Aquei are the next oldest and then there is Kabis.”

Lylor looked at his sister. “They are all the children of Sauí Kirek and our daughter Neca.” He said softly. “Neca had... Neca and Sauí had nineteen children! Taraina was their middle child! They had eight grandchildren! Are you saying... none of them...?”

Kesas shook his head slowly now. “No, my friend. They were... they were among the first to fall.”

“Pauin’s wife and mate? Their children?” Lylor pressed. “Amori and her mate had seven children Kesas! Lient and his wife nine children and...” Lylor stopped and took a deep breath as Aryera reached out and took his hand. He squeezed her slim fingers, holding back the rage that threatened to overwhelm him whenever he thought about his and Kelia’s children and grandchildren not being among them. Their great grandchildren. So many that...

“We are coming, Tenne. And we will put our family back together. I swear this to you on the blood that flows within my veins.”

Martin’s voice echoed softly in his head almost like a whisper and Lylor drew strength from this. The blood that flowed within his veins. The blood of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. Lylor knew that the brothers had adored their younger sister almost to the point of perverse devotion and if their blood flowed within Martin, within his own children, then Lylor knew they would have justice for all that had been lost.

Lylor finally turned to his sister. “They are safe?” He asked.

Aryera nodded her head. “They escaped to Anlar Prime with us but chose to remain when Yelma exiled the Kirek Pack here for they had all taken mates.”

“And the Nenay Pack protects them?” Lylor asked.

Kesas leaned forward in his chair now. “Ranol and Gara have shielded them for millennia Lylor.” He said quickly. “They have suffered as well... perhaps not as much as...”

Lylor held up his hand and shook his head just as quickly. “I trust in your word old friend. How could I not?” He said quickly. “And I cannot find fault with Ranol and Gara for being duped by Yelma Arhtai. She did it to all of us, even Kelia and I. And they have protected our blood all of this time.”

“I speak with them several times a year fervon.” Aryera told him. “They are happy and have many children between them. Yours and Kelia’s blood is not gone fervon, it is just... it is scattered.”

“No others?” Lylor asked softly.

Kesas shook his head now as he lowered his eyes to the table. “None that we know of.” He answered softly. “Without the Blood Masking Protein, they would not have been able to survive this long.”

Lylor felt the pulling of his heart and the sorrow and rage that wanted to crush his spirit but he felt Aryera reach out to grasp his arm once more and squeeze tightly. Then he felt Marda and his nephew Tiag do the same thing to him and he took a deep breath and nodded his head.

“You know what they will do when they arrive here don’t you?” Rothan spoke now. “I could almost... I could see it in their eyes.”

Kesas nodded his head as he sat back in his chair once more. “As did I Rothan. As did I. They are the combined blood of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo.” He said softly. “There is no purer blood among our kind anywhere in the universe except for Kelia.”

“The eyes of... their eyes frightened me.” Marda spoke as she settled in the chair beside her Uncle. “So, bright and focused. As if they have seen and experienced even more than you Lord Kesas. Una tor brey ulyees jehar Vada Wayn.” (It was like looking into The Beyond)

“They carry within them the wisdom and experiences of countless lifetimes because of their Lycavorian blood and now this Pralor blood in their veins.” Kesas said softly. Kesas shook his head slowly. “I have believed in the prophecy for so long, but this, I never expected this.”

“Eighteen children with six different Queens.” Rothan spoke shaking his head. “All of them with the blood of Daniho and Ashten within them. And his oldest son has six wives and mates and soon his Anome, this female Alpha Sadi of the Domara Pack, she will give birth to the reunification of our people. It is almost... it is almost too much to have hoped for and yet...”

“It is upon us.” Aryera said softly. She looked at Kesas. “Have you ever heard of one of our kind being born like he... like Androcles told us Kesas. Fully aware of everything around him even before he left his mother’s womb?”

Kesas shook his head. “Never in all my years. Perhaps it has something to do with this Pralor bloodline that is within them, it is the only thing I can think of.”

“Being bound to the Darastrix as they say that they are is almost too much to believe as well.” Rothan spoke again.

“Daniho was the only one of our people to ever be so close to them.” Kesas spoke. “It was almost as if he and Dadrien knew what each other was thinking.”

“The power that they could wield is...” Aryera spoke softly.

“It is immeasurable.” Kesas finished her statement.

“Henes mien vada arwa rie vada Mard Revik for jen Tarivuos.” Aryera spoke. “No one who is not of pure Mahanlo blood and descended from Daniho himself could ever wear this armor. We all know that. That is all the proof I need.” (They wear the armor of the true king and his heralds.)

“Avoi.” Rothan whispered as he nodded his head.

“They are also not telling us everything.” Lylor spoke softly looking up at Kesas.

Aryera looked at her brother. “Fervon? What do you mean?”

“Henes intus nysilis draem bara.” Lylor spoke. “Protecting something that is far more precious to them than anything else.” (They were holding something back)

Kesas Pengot nodded his head in agreement, inwardly thrilled that Lylor Kirek had lost none of the intuition that made him such an inspired leader. “Indeed, they were Lylor.” He agreed.

“A threat?” Rothan ventured. “Do they consider us a threat?”

Lylor shook his head quickly and straightened up in his chair. “No, never. In this... in this Etheric connection that we shared with them, I could feel the... I could feel the happiness and joy within them. I could feel the power of Daniho’s blood within them. Of Ashten’s blood. It was like their... it was like their very anos were crying out in bliss. Even then, they were holding something back though. Protecting something that their blood, something that their blood demanded of them. It was there... I could almost feel it within me... familiar somehow, but then it was gone. Their resonance blocked everything.”

“I felt it too.” Kesas spoke softly looking at Lylor. “It was like a seamless wall of utter blackness came down and it was gone.”

Lylor nodded his head in agreement. “I will have my beloved Kelia back within my arms soon.” He spoke. “And we will have justice for what the Arhtai Pack has done. I have... I have waited for almost two million years. I can wait a few days more until those descended from her brothers come for her. And they will come, just as they have said. I could feel that within them as well. And the...”

“The rage.” Kesas said. “Rage at what they believe has taken place. Did you notice that neither of them asked how many...?”

“Neither of them asked how many had fallen.” Aryera spoke now.

Kesas nodded his head. “They... they fear the answer.” He said softly. “Lylor is correct. They are protecting something, but I could also, I could also sense something else. A sense of Pack and love for our people that I have not felt since the days that I stood beside Daniho and Ashten themselves. It is... it is empowering.” He reached out and tapped one of the data pads that rested on the table. “While we gathered our wits after this Etheric connection that they established with us, I had Caylt and Yasha go over some of the information that Chiron sent to us while we talked with them.” Kesas turned to his son who had sat by his sister and so far, had kept silent. “Caylt?”

Caylt shifted in his chair and reached for the pad that his father was touching and picked it up. “Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas is the King of what they call the United Lycavorian Union.” Caylt spoke. “At last count for them, they had 900 different species, and over thirty-two trillion citizens, of which at least a full quarter are our people. Lycavorians. They are the descendants of the packs that left Cerath with King Daniho and Lord Ashten.”

“Carians.” Aryera gasped. “So many.”

“This United Lycavorian Union is vast and he leads what Chiron calls Spartans.” Caylt continued.

“Spartans?” Rothan asked now.

Caylt nodded his head quickly, obviously very excited about what he was speaking about. “They are named for a group of ancient warriors that the King’s father led while he lived some four thousand years ago. They are fierce, powerful warriors and they are feared for their skill and abilities. Chiron’s data said we would be getting much more detailed information once they arrived, but what he sent, while short on details, is astonishing to say the least.” Caylt spoke. “These Spartans, their training is severe and brutal, their ground forces are massive, as are their fleets of ships. Many of the species within their Union are involved in the military in some way, but only half a dozen or so species do the actual fighting when called upon, though all of them will defend what they have built if pressed to that point. Their logistic and support apparatus is unlike anything Chiron has ever seen before. It is more than triple what our people had at our height on Cerath.”

“Sibfla!” Rothan gasped now.

Caylt smiled at this comment. “That is what I said as well, sir.” He commented. “These Spartans... according to Chiron, there are several different kinds of warriors among them, but most of those with the King now are what they call Durcunusaan.”

Lylor looked at him. “Wolves of the Blood.” He spoke.

Caylt nodded his head. “Not all of them are pure Lycavorians, there appear to be many who are only half Lycavorian, and even other species entirely, but each of them are trained and mentally prepared to eliminate at least twenty of the enemy before they fall. They are also fanatically loyal to the King and his family. Since discovering what they have in the last year, Chiron says they have begun using the name Mahanlo-Leonidas. Leonidas was the name of the King’s father and he is revered among their people much like King Daniho and Lord Ashten. Their people do not yet know all that they have discovered since leaving their homes, but they will soon. Their government is a Republic of sorts. He is the King but they have a Senate and civilian control of most aspects of their society.”

“Most?” Aryera asked.

Caylt nodded his head. “The King commands the military and while they are technically under the control of this Union Senate, they will not act without his word or order. The United Lycavorian Union is very wealthy and has active trading corridors with dozens of other species within the Alpha Quadrant where they are found. They have many allies that are not officially part of this Union, but they also have enemies. None of whom are able to face them in force and win.”

“Truly?” Rothan asked.

“I did not dig too deeply into what details Chiron sent because of time, but according to what I did read, they have had many conflicts in their history. Large and small. None of which they started.”

“But?” Rothan pressed him.

Caylt met his eyes. “They have lost battles, but they have never lost a war. Ever.” He said with an almost perverse glee in his voice that everyone detected. “The King’s oldest son, the one with him in the connection, Androcles, he is considered an almost exact duplicate of his father in every way. It was he who ended their longest war, some fourteen thousand years long given the information in Chiron's report. He ended it in a single day, before coming out here to join with his father."

"A day!?" Rothan gasped. "How do you end a war of that length in a day?!"

Caylt shook his head. "I do not know."

It was Lylor who chuckled softly. "I smell the blood of Daniho." He said.

"No doubt this is all information that Martin told Chiron to give to us while they spoke to us." Kesas said. "He wants us to know who is coming here. He wants us to know who is he."

"He is the staaniketo of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo!" Lylor spoke firmly. "I do not care how many generations separate us! He is the blood of our one true King; the King chosen by all of our people! He is my beloved Kelia's blood! The blood of her beloved brothers! He is the blood of Reva Mahanlo! Matriarch to us all!" Lylor spoke forcefully, his words filled with emotion. "That is all I need to know! They were the hope and saviors of our people once before. And they will be again. The Kirek Pack has always been beside them, and that is where we will be again!"

Aryera reached out and squeezed her brother's hand tightly. "Avoi." She spoke.

"For sy una rayd tur." Rothan agreed nodding his head. (And so it shall be.)

"Niob for innyne." Kesas spoke with a nod. (Now and always)

Caylt's head turned when the COM panel in the center began to chirp loudly and he rose to go over to the large console. He adjusted the controls and his eyes grew wider. He turned quickly to look at his father.

"Father! It is the Nenay Pack Emergency channel!" Caylt hissed.

Kesas looked at Lylor who nodded his head. "Vada Daanth rie Toniru coi vinn' jar." He said. "It is time our allies knew what we know." (The time of reckoning is upon us)

JETANIA

WARIM BASE LANDING PLATFORM

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas stood stoically, his hands clasped behind his back as he stared out at the horizon. He was getting use to the added name of his bloodline now, and it made him feel confident and powerful. His Queens had already begun to refer to themselves in this way as had his children and nearly all of the Durcunusaan now on the surface of Jetania. Martin had no doubts that this knowledge would spread quickly within the fleet and then beyond.

The dawn was just beginning to light the sky in the distance, but Martin could see the tops of the towering timber and the cloud covered mountain tops with his wolf eyes. Vada Arwa rie vada Mard Revik was fully deployed on his body except for his head and it reflected the soft light on the dimly lit platform eerily. Martin didn't turn his head or even blink when he smelled them approach from behind him and Androcles and Danny moved up on either side of him as Torma and Elynth landed gently to the left of him where Dorian, Laren, Ryner and Ladur were already waiting. Miath quickly followed suit, landing beside Torma.

"You sure you don't want to take a detachment Marty?" Danny asked him.

Martin shook his head. "Three keys to unlock the fourth." Martin said softly. "That is what is written on the wall of the Temple on Lorenu fervon. I'm guessing that it applies to this Temple. I guess we'll find out."

"And if it doesn't?" Danny asked.

Martin shrugged his shoulders. "Then we'll figure something else out."

"There is also the dampening field." Androcles said.

"Dampening field?" Danny questioned.

Martin nodded his head. "According to Nilantha, there is some sort of power dampening field around the top of this mountain that will cause any ship that comes close to lose all its systems. Only her transport had the proper frequency to enter and I don't want to waste time going to her ship and getting it. It's unlike anything that Chiron, Armen or Avi have ever seen but Chiron said it is based on Onab technology."

"He knew about it?" Danny asked.

Andro nodded now. "And the location of the other Temples as well. He just never knew about the security measures put in place by the Onab, staanio Sumar and Dadrien."

Danny shook his head. "Man... trying to figure those two out sounds a lot like trying to figure you out fervon." He spoke. "You just don't think normal."

Martin grinned at this and nodded his head. "Lucky me." He said. "Nilantha is also the only one who can open the outer door to this temple according to what Sumar and Dadrien told her. Apparently, that is how the Onab, Dadrien and staanio Sumar set it up. Whatever was in that temple is now on her ship. We can handle the altitude and weather that kept any interested parties away all of these years."

"I wish the Onab were still with us." Andro spoke now. "We could learn so much from them."

Martin nodded his head. "That we could." He said softly. "Staanio Daniho and Staanio Ashten obviously trusted them a lot more than we have been led to believe based on what Kesas told us. They gave him and only him the means to safeguard our bloodline. Not even Tenne Lylor or Tenna Kelia knew of this."

Danny was the only one Martin had told of his and Andro's conversation with Kesas Pengot, Lylor Kirek and the others. He was glad that none of his Queens had questioned him about it because he would not have been able to lie to them. They knew he would tell them when he was ready, as did Lu'ria and Carisia, so they did not question Androcles about it.

"How long do you think this will take?" Danny asked.

"I don't know fervon." Martin answered him. "I know there is something up there. I can feel it within me. All of us can."

"Jainn." Andro echoed his father.

Danny nodded his head without question. He knew that Martin and his mandri could feel and see things that others could not hope to experience. "Armen says the conversions will be done later today on the ARIZONA and they will start on the PREMONITION as soon as Sadi and Ne'Veha get back tonight. We should be ready to roll in two days, tops." Danny told him. "Sa'sur will follow one day later with a hundred ships."

Martin nodded his head. "I want one thousand volunteers with us Danny." Martin told him. "All with at least ten years of service and all with combat experience. And Josie Miller's Brigade of the 82nd. They have been in the shit with us more than the others and they work well with us. Have Sa'sur plot the most expedient course for her to Pakar Six. Go right through Kintaur Space too. I don't give a fuck about those no nut bullies. If they try to stop or harass her, have Sa'sur blow their ugly asses out of the stars and keep going."

Danny grinned. "She'll like that. I don't think she cares for them very much after they scratched the SCIMITAR's paint job."

"No bet there." Andro said with a similar smile.

"Have the rest of the Durcunusaan RD deploy with her. We'll leave the rest of the 82nd here on Jetania for now with the ships that Miranda is leaving behind." Martin said.

"We'll be thin fervon out there." Danny said.

Martin nodded his head. "For what I intend, it will be enough." He answered. "I'm not going to jerk around with these fools. I'm going to get my Aunt back fervon. I'm putting my family back together, our family. And I'm going to make sure they are safe before I do anything else. What we are taking will be enough for a surgical mission to do this."

"Avoi." Andro said softly.

"That is the primary mission. I'll deal with these Arhtai scum and what they have done after we take care of the Svorag. That is the priority." Martin continued.

Danny put his hand on Martin's shoulder. "Just keep that in your head fervon." He said softly. "I can sense what both of you want to do. And when you tell Dorian and Laren, they will want to do the same thing. I already do. All of us will. If we do this, we do it right."

Martin nodded. "For evell gur." Martin said. (And we will)

Danny nodded his head. "Then I won't speak anymore about it." He said. "I'll contact Vistr and have him cut loose the full 1st and 9th CSAFG. With my 2nd CSAFG we'll be good." He said referring to Martin and Andro's primary commands. "They won't get here in time to help against the Svorag, but they can help us put a hurting on these Arhtai pukes."

Martin nodded his head. "Good enough."

"What about Osrod father?" Andro asked.

Martin shook his head. "We don't need to do anything there. He will do it himself." He answered. "I think he might surprise us all, but Garget and Lasun will be keeping an eye on him just in case."

"You know that Retta and Calyb will... they will not want to leave." Androcles told his father.

Martin nodded his head. "I know. I'm going to have to sell your mother on that, but I will not take them away from what they have found or force Lazar, Taris or Anoria to leave the only home they have ever known."

"What if they want to?" Danny asked.

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. "That's different, but we'll cross that bridge when we come to it."

Danny nodded his head in approval. "Red is with Reva's chamber?" Danny asked.

Martin nodded his head. "Miath will carry Nilantha. Dynina, Jezima and my mother will be with Anja and Eliani when it happens so that staania has the support of those who love her. She will need it when we tell her what has happened. Deni and Deion will be there as well." He replied. "Dasha is going to be with Meral, Aricia and Dysea helping to spread out the supplies we are sending down and everyone else is going to be giving crash courses on the crates of Pralor weapons that we are leaving with Garget, Lasun and the Mountain Packs." Martin looked at the only man he had ever called brother. "Touch base with Vengal, Danny. I want as many Hippeis Selda as he can gather and deploy. If they are within a reasonable amount of time from graduating I want them here. We got too many enemies out here right now, and I'm not taking any chances. And have Armetus send me a couple of his best. Anton, Cihera and Las'elh will be too busy with Fedor and Eirene."

"Done." Danny spoke.

They all turned as Sarlana and Nilantha came out of the interior of the base and began making their way across the tarmac. Danny squeezed Martin's arm and pounded Andro on the shoulder. "I'll get to work. Take pictures." He said with his trademark smile as he turned and moved off.

Dorian and Laren moved up to where they stood as Sarlana and Nilantha came up to them.

Nilantha bowed her head to Martin. "My King." She spoke.

Martin looked at her surprised. "Nilantha, I am not your King." He told her. "You are Darastrixi."

Nilantha shook her head. "The moment Dadrien of the Mountain and Lord Sumar gave me this mission, I became one of your people. Darastrixi I may be, but I have been among your people for longer than I have been among my own. I may not have Lycavorian blood within me, but I am Lycavorian in my nature now."

Martin nodded his head. "Then you should know that those I consider family do not refer to me by anything but my name." He told her seeing her eyes go wide.

Sarlana chuckled softly. "I did try to tell her." She spoke. "Like all young ones, she did not listen to me."

Dorian chortled in the twilight sky. "Doraanar, you are not much older than Nilantha." He said.

"Watch yourself young Dahakoan." Sarlana retorted back to him. "I have already been given permission by your mothers to turn you over my knee if I feel the need arises. And I will do just that."

Laren laughed at the look on Dorian's face and she leaned into him gently. Laren had become very close with Sheva and Onera over the last weeks and by virtue of that, Dorian as well. They were rarely apart now.

Martin looked at Nilantha with a smile of his own. "Are you up for this trip?" He asked her.

Nilantha nodded her head quickly. "Anja has said my injuries are fully healed. It will be a few more days until I regain my full health because of the amount of blood I lost, but I am fit enough for this."

Martin looked at Sarlana. "Doraanar?" He asked.

Sarlana nodded her head. "This is something the five of you must do together." She said. "I will remain here. Aviel, Nahko, General Dytin and a hundred of his Sand Striders will be aiding those who are handing out weapons and other equipment to your people here. The interaction will prove to be invaluable for all of us. I have... I have developed something of a friendship with Aricia's mother Dasha and your mother. Your Tenna Meral as well. I will be with them."

Martin nodded his head. "Then we should get this ball rolling." Martin spoke.

Sarlana stepped closer to him, looking up into his eyes as he towered over her and she placed her hand on his arm. "I can sense the emotions within you Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas." She told him softly. "And within Androcles. Do not turn away from who you both are for vengeance. Channel your emotions. Hold them in and let them guide your actions for good."

Martin glanced at Andro and then back to her. “We will.” He told her softly.

Sarlana nodded. “Good. Take care of Nilantha please. She is almost as reckless as the rest of you and that is not normally a trait I associate with our species.”

Martin smiled at her as Nilantha looked at her with wide eyes. “We will.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “Then I will leave you to do what you must.”

Sarlana turned and began to walk back towards the doorway into the base as Miath moved up behind him.

Martin looked at all of them. “Shall we?” He spoke as Torma moved closer.

Miath moved his huge bulk right up to Nilantha. “It will be an honor to carry you on this journey Nilantha.” He spoke to her in his gravelly voice.

Nilantha reached out and stroked the scales on his muzzle. “For me as well.” She said with an excited smile.

Martin climbed into the saddle on Torma’s back as did Andro, Dorian and Laren on Elynth, Ryner and Ladur. He waited until Nilantha had settled on Miath’s back and the Dragon Armor leg bracers had secured her in the saddle.

“Torma, go!” Martin barked and an instant later all of them had taken to the early morning skies.

JETANIA

DIR RIE HAL FOR SAAR

MOUNTAIN OF STONE AND LIGHT

ALTITUDE: 42,679 FEET ABOVE SEA LEVEL

It was the highest point anywhere on the surface of Jetania but only Nilantha had ever been here.

The Onab dampening field which Chiron had detected was unlike anything he had seen before dating back to Cerath. It was a perpetual fog of blurriness that encompassed the entire peak of the mountain as well as the summit. Through the many millennia, dozens of Coalition ships had tried to penetrate the dampening field, only to be turned away before they crashed. They had attempted many times to scale the mountain from below the summit, but quickly discovered that nothing could survive the blistering cold or the nearly three hundred kilometer per hour winds that ravage the mountain from twenty thousand feet and up. After nearly a hundred deaths, conquering the mountain had quickly fallen to the wayside as other things and events took shape, which made it easier for Nilantha to still be vigilant as she protected the Temple on the summit. Most COLS scientists finally agreed that it was some sort of natural phenomenon that they would never discover and it became nothing more than a passing thought to the inhabitants of Jetania.

The altitude was nothing for Martin and the others, their Etheric abilities capable of enhancing their shields to the point that the winds and cold did not effect them in the least. Passing through the dampening field had been odd, all of them feeling a slight electrical surge through their bodies, but one that was not painful or incapacitating in any way. As they broke through the dampening field, they could see the summit and the peak which rose up another thousand meters above the summit. There were two large buildings that matched the material of the Temple on Lorenu in composition, and as they settled to the ground outside the first one, Martin and the others realized that the temperature and weather was very temperate. Inside the dampening field, it was easily in the low seventies with almost no humidity. Though there was some moisture in the air, Martin quickly decided that it was not enough to cause rain to fall on any regular basis, even though the grass and trees that were growing all around looked healthy and very green.

As they stepped down from their saddles, Martin, Andro and the others realized the material was exactly like the Lorenu Temple. Like a white marble with many symbols and writings on the face.

Andro turned and looked out toward the dampening field, seeing the massive storm raging outside the field and then his eyes moving back to gaze at the weather inside the field.

“Ok...” He spoke finally. “That is really...”

“Freaky.” Dorian finished his brother’s statement.

Nilantha nodded her head as she came up to stand beside them. “That is what I said when I first came here.” She told them. “It took me several trips to get used to it actually.”

Martin let his eyes wander over the face of the massive structure in front of them. “How did you know this was here?” He asked finally.

“Your staanio told me.” Nilantha answered him. “I was very surprised as well since the sensors on my ship never picked up anything but the bad weather.”

“Bad weather?” Dorian gasped. “Those winds look like they could peel the skin from your body.” He said.

Nilantha nodded her head again. “When combined with the cold, yes, I would imagine that they could.”

“And you have been inside these two buildings?” Andro asked her.

Nilantha nodded. “Many times, yes, but not since I moved everything. I locked out the computer stations within the Temple with a rotating encryption algorithm that no Coalition expert would have been able to defeat. These two buildings held all of the drawings and paintings made by the Onab as well as several libraries of information. I spent many hundreds of hours here just reading the history within these walls. It took me several years to finally move everything to my ship because I did not want Osrod’s grandfather to find any of the prophecies, even by accident, but I managed.”

Martin looked at her. “They never got close?” He asked her.

Nilantha shook her head. “Perhaps they could have devised something to combat the cold or the winds, but nothing that could do both in order to climb up here from the base. They lost four ships over the course of two decades trying to penetrate the dampening field but those all failed miserably with total loss of life. They gave up finally.”

The area around the first building was filled with rows and rows of flowers and healthy trees as well as many benches and a single fountain just outside the entrance to the Temple. It was very peaceful and quiet to be honest. It was also disconcerting in a way, seeing the beauty within the dampening field but only a few hundred meters away seeing the terrible weather outside of the field.

Nilantha reached for Martin’s arm. “Come... I will take you inside.”

Nilantha led them to the massive set of double doors. Though they were also white in color, the doors were made from Onkmeti Naami, that much Martin could tell easily. They watched as Nilantha went to the side of the double doors and placed her hand over the orb like protrusion on the wall. There was a series of soft clicks and the orb like device began to glow red and then they heard the doors release and begin to slid open inward.

The interior of the Temple was massive to say the least. There were four levels to this building, with a wide promenade on each level that swept around the entire building for each level. They could see four massive elevators, one at every corner, and then the huge skylight ceiling above them. Far across on the opposite side of the Temple was another set of double doors that obviously led into the second, equally enormous building. Nilantha moved in front of them, walking backwards as she swept her hands out to the sides.

“There are twelve libraries, four on each level above this one.” She spoke. “All of them are still intact and locked with a similar encryption code. The first level here has several large rooms for contemplation and reading. Smaller sleeping rooms branch off from the main room here as well on the levels above. There is also a large kitchen facility, but I never used it.”

Martin looked at her. “They meant for this Temple to be used?” Martin asked.

Nilantha nodded her head. “That is what I deduced.” She told him. “By who I don’t know, but it was most definitely designed to be a home of some sort as well as a center of knowledge.”

Their voices echoed somewhat as they walked on the main floor of the Temple towards the second set of doors that led into the second building. All of them could see where paintings and drawings had once been hanging, not to mention the now deactivated holo depictions that had been removed. The second building was equally as large as the first and set up in a similar manner, with four levels and the same wide promenade on each level. As they moved further into the second building it became clear from the size of the buildings and the elevators that this Temple had been built with dragons in mind.

They all whirled around when they heard the skittering of metal like legs across the surface and they saw several Worker Drones moving on the promenade level just above them.

“The Worker Drones are everywhere.” Nilantha said. “They have access to all of the levels and it is they who have maintained the Temple when I was not here.”

“How many?” Dorian asked now.

Nilantha shook her head. “I do not know.” She answered. “I have only seen four or five at any one time.”

“Father?” Andro spoke now causing Martin to look at him. Andro motioned with his head to the far end of the building and Martin turned to see what he was looking at. His eyes grew a little wider when he spied the three intricately carved columns of white Onkmeti Naami that were arranged in front of the fourth column that faced the bare wall. Nilantha watched as all of them moved to the columns and she watched as they spread out to gaze at them, running their hands over the surfaces. Each of them was easily three meters in height and decorated with intricate silver lines and waves.

Martin turned from the column he was in front of and looked at Nilantha. “What’s behind this wall?” He asked.

Nilantha shook her head slowly. “This second Temple backs right up to the mountain.” She answered. “The peak is another thousand meters above us. You saw this as we approached the Temple from the air.”

“You never did an interior scan of the Temples?” Andro asked her now.

“I... I never saw the need. No.” Nilantha replied confused. “Why.”

Martin stared at the wall in front of him now. “There is something on the other side.” He spoke.

Andro ran his hand slowly down the column he was in front of, his eyes gazing at the markings on the column face as well as on the floor. He knelt down on one knee and used his hand to brush away a thin layer of dust, revealing the indented circular platform on the floor. He turned his head back to where his father stood.

“Three keys to unlock the fourth.” He said softly.

“Andro wait!” Martin hissed but his words were too slow as Androcles rose to his full height and stepped onto the circular platform and faced his father and the bare wall in front of them.

There was a loud clicking noise and the top of the column shifted to reveal a glimmering Onkmeti Naami sphere that quickly darted out of the column and descended in front of where Androcles stood. The smallish sphere activated a thin, bluish white beam of light that moved up and down Andro’s body as if it was scanning him and then the mechanical female voice echoed all around them.

-FIRST HERALD RECOGNIZED AND CONFIRMED-
-RELEASING FIRST LOCK-

All of them heard the next clicking sound and at the top of the column that Martin stood beside, one of the three silver rings that wrapped around the column spread out and pushed away from the Onkmeti Naami column with a soft hiss of air.

“Sibfla!” Dorian gasped now.

“Andro my brother?” Elynth’s asked from behind them where she stood with her father, Ryner and Ladur. All four of them were moving closer to them as she spoke.

“I’m fine sister.” Andro told her. “It’s a locking mechanism. Three keys to unlock the fourth. Dori, Laren, go to the other columns.”

Dorian and Laren did not hesitate and stepped in front of the two columns that stood on either side of him. They moved onto the circular platforms and all of them heard the same clicking noises and two more spheres lifted from the tops of their columns and descended in front of them, a similar bluish white beam scanning them now.

-THIRD HERALD RECOGNIZED AND CONFIRMED-
-RELEASING THIRD LOCK-

This came from the sphere that finished scanning Laren.

-SECOND HERALD RECOGNIZED AND CONFIRMED-
-RELEASING SECOND LOCK-

This from the sphere that finished scanning Dorian.

All of them watched as the other two silver rings on top of the column beside Martin expanded and pushed away from the top of the column.

-ACTIVATION OF FOURTH KEY SUCCESSFUL-
-PROCEED WITH ACTIVATION OF FOURTH KEY-

They watched as the three spheres lifted back to the tops of their columns and lowered back into the column themselves. Martin looked at the circular platform in front of his column and then back to Nilantha.

“Biometric locks.” Martin said softly with wide eyes. “No wonder you never discovered this. Nilantha... move back beside Ladur and Ryner.” He told her.

“Martin... is this... is this wise?” Nilantha asked as she stepped toward Ladur.

“Three keys to unlock the fourth.” Martin spoke. “Only one way to find out.” He said as he stepped onto the platform.

Instantly the three silver rings at the top of his column clicked several times and then merged together into a single ring. Once this was complete, the ring closed itself onto the top of the column once more and then all of them heard the deep rumbling sound begin. They turned to watch as the seamless, bare wall in front of them began to part from the center. As the wall parted, it revealed a shimmering bluish Etheric wall that took up the entire space. When the Onkmeti Naami wall fully opened, exposing the Etheric wall completely, it was easily two meters across and three meters tall.

“Carians.” Andro muttered as he stepped slowly off the platform.

“Now that, is very cool.” Dorian commented as he stepped from in front of his column and moved towards the Etheric wall.

Andro reached out and took his arm quickly. “Joa fervon.” He said softly.

Dorian looked at him as Laren moved up beside Andro now. “Andro?” She asked softly.

Androcles looked at his father, his azure eyes bright and focused. “This is... this is something that our father needs to do himself.”

Martin met his son’s eyes now. “Atle alad forn men keto?” He asked. (What do you see son)

Andro shook his head. “Joacle.” Andro told him. (Nothing) “I... I feel something though. It tells me... it tells me that this task is for you father. And you alone.”

“Danger?” Martin asked stepping closer to him.

“Joa.” Laren spoke now reaching out her hand to put it on Andro’s arm. “Pen quov ardet for clodocanus.” (I sense pride and happiness) Laren reached out and held out her hand for Dorian who took it without question. It took only a few seconds but his eyes grew slightly wider and he looked at his father.

“I... I feel it too father.” He said.

Andro stepped away from Laren and Dorian and moved up in front of him. “Our task is complete father. The rest is meant only for you.”

“How can you be so sure?” Martin asked him.

Andro looked at Laren and Dorian and then back to his father and he smiled now. “That is what staanio Daniho is telling us inside here.” He said placing his hand over his heart.

Martin looked at Laren and Dorian standing beside one another and then back to Andro. They were right of course. He could sense no danger around them anywhere. It was a calm and especially serene resonance that echoed all around the Temple and those of them within it and none of his keen senses were in any way telling him that there was danger or even anything that was unknown around them.

Martin reached up and grasped the side of Andro’s head gently. Dorian came up beside him and he did the same with him while Laren pressed close between her Soul Brothers and he lowered his forehead to touch hers. Martin took a deep breath and nodded his head finally.

“Ok... be ready when I get back.” Martin said softly. “Things will begin to happen quickly.”

Andro nodded his head. “We will be waiting.”

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas turned and looked at the Etheric wall. He took one more deep breath and nodded his head. "Never fear the unknown." He spoke softly before stepping through the Etheric barrier without pause.

KOLTAR FOUR TWO HUNDRED KILOMETERS NORTH OF THE CAPITAL CITY OF LEPIRI IAALDO ENGINEER COMPOUND

The compound was utterly massive in its size. It had to be, in order to fully support the nearly two thousand lives that lived within its walls. It was spread out over four kilometers on the valley floor between the three towering mountain peaks that surrounded it. The six-meter-high steel and granite wall that surrounded the entire compound protected it from the harsh elements and the even harsher wildlife that sometimes inhabited this part of Koltar Four. The winter season could be very harsh this far north, but it was not something that any of them had not experienced before and they well how to cope with the snow and cold. There were several landing pads in different parts of the compound to facilitate travel back and forth to the capital and other places, but the only ships allowed to land were from the military branch of the Arhtai Pack.

Yes, this was their home, had been their home for over two million years, but it was still a prison to them.

They were not allowed to come and go as they pleased. They were always escorted to and from whichever area they were going to work in, and they were never allowed to wander off by themselves. While they were left alone within their compound, a full company of five hundred Arhtai military Pack members were garrisoned here in their own smaller complex in order to watch them. There were six guard towers surrounding the compound, each of them holding four guards at any one time. The barracks and living complex of the Arhtai troops was on the far eastern end of the main compound, away from their living areas, which suited the Iaaldo just fine. An interior wall also separated their barracks and small complex from the main compound.

It was Ivore Arhtai's idea to do this in order to keep interaction between them to a bare minimum. When the Dremsa rie Saan had occurred, the Iaaldo Engineers had immediately refused to comply with Yelma and Nyser's directives. They had been willing to die and only his quick action had stopped his brother Nyser Arhtai from ordering their deaths. Slaughtering the only ones who could maintain the Onab equipment that they had kept would serve no purpose and only hurt them in the end. His actions had already infuriated his older brother, for he had already killed two of his own cousins who had tried to kill his beloved Revia. Ivore Arhtai had no intention of allowing anyone to butcher his beautiful wife and mate and their four children, nor would he stand with his brother and his upae mate in dishonoring the vow that they had made before leaving Cerath.

Nyser would not kill his youngest brother and Ivore knew this, so Nyser banished them to this compound. They had already begun to build it and it was here that Nyser and Yelma sent him and those among the Arhtai who felt as he did. Revia, their four children, and perhaps fifty other Arhtai Pack members who had refused to abandon their beliefs and betray the bloodline of their King came here with the Iaaldo. They were banished here forever.

Ivore Arhtai was no fool however, and while his brother and his bitch mate may have thought they were in control, Ivore knew it was they who had the real power. The Iaaldo were the only ones outside of Ranol Nenay's daughter and a few others who could service the Onab equipment and keep it running. Ivore knew that Ranol would never allow his daughter to teach others while Yelma and Nyser held two of his children hostage, so a deal was struck. Nyser and Yelma would do nothing to hinder the Iaaldo and those Arhtai Pack members who had come with him. They could guard them all they wished, but they would not threaten or try to threaten the Iaaldo in any way. Even a threat of death against one of them would result in the Iaaldo as a whole refusing to help them in any way. Then they would have to kill them all. No threats to his beautiful Revia or their children were to be made ever again, and any such attempt would be met with extreme violence. They would make no attempt to force them to live how Nyser and Yelma dictated them to live. They would not become puppets to false rulers as Nyser and Yelma had forced on the rest of their Pack. They would stay in the compound and do the work that was asked of them, but no harm was to come to any of them in any way.

They were to be left alone.

Nyser knew he had no other options because Ivore was correct in everything he said. The Arhtai military garrison was the only exception to the rule but Ivore made it very clear they were not to interfere in their lives in any way.

It had been like this for nearly two million years now. Ivore Arhtai hated his brother with every fiber of his being and if there was a way he could erase the name he carried now he would because of the shame it brought to him. He and Revia had raised their children in the old way, adding eleven more children through the many years since that horrible time. He had thought at first that his beautiful Revia would hate him for what his brother had done, but Ivore was very wrong. His actions, actions that came from within his heart, had only proven to Revia what she had known since the day she had agreed to become his wife and mate.

Ivore Arhtai was different.

He had held his beloved wife and mate in his arms for weeks after it was all over as she cried herself to sleep and clung to him like a lost child. It had taken nearly a hundred years for her to sooth her broken heart, but his love and the love of her children had finally pulled her from the abyss. Revia had not lost any of the bubbly personality that Ivore had fallen in love with, but now she was much more feral in many ways. She was very strict but even more loving, and she had finally grown into an Alpha female that you did not want to have angry at you. She was a taskmaster when it came to the education of the children within the compound and together with several Ialldo elders, the schooling system that they had put together was unlike anything Ivore had ever seen. And they taught the true history of their people and what had taken place up until now.

Revia had given him ten, strong and proud sons and five stunning daughters that they loved more than their own lives. Their six oldest children had taken mates from the others of the Arhtai Pack who had joined with them and now they had thirteen grandchildren and five great grandchildren. Through the many years since the Dremsa rie Saan, others of the Arhtai pack had joined with them, no longer able to tolerate the way that his brother was leading and how they had forsaken everything of their history. Of the three dozen who had done this, Ivore knew that three of them were spies for Yelma Arhtai, but unknown to his brother or his upaee wife, two of them had switched their allegiances long ago once they had come here and discovered all of what had taken place that horrible night. These two men kept their spy façade out of need and to give them any advantage that they could use should his brother or Yelma decide to move against them. The third one was treated equally and without indifference, but this was because they wanted him to feel comfortable. When the time came, Ivore would kill him without doubt or mercy.

While they were not allowed to leave the main compound unless on a work furlong, Ivore had long ago learned how to leave the compound and escape into the mountains surrounding the valley secretly. His people now knew every inch of the mountains all around them, where to go, where not to go, and most importantly, where to hide so that Nyser and Yelma would never find them. The relationship between Ivore, Revia and the Arhtai Pack members with him and the Ialldo engineers had grown to the point of deep family bonds. They looked out for each other no matter the cause and Ivore had beaten down more than one member of the Arhtai military detachment that stayed at the compound for acting inappropriately.

Ivore Arhtai was not a man to take lightly.

His six foot four frame was still all lean muscle and bone. His dark hair was graying at the temples, but there was not an ounce of fat on his body and he was in superb physical condition. This was something that he encouraged all of his children and the others with him to support and even after a million and a half years together, no female wolf could stir his desire like Revia. In Ivore's eyes, Revia was the epitome of perfection in every way, and their love making now was even more intense than when they first fell in love all those years ago. He remembered something that Lylor Kirek had told him during the party they had after he and Revia were mated.

“When a Mahanlo loves Ivore, they love completely and without hesitation.” Lylor had told him. “I can see this is my daughter’s eyes for you. Love her in return Ivore. Completely. Utterly. Hold nothing back, and always honor her.”

“On my honor, Lord Lylor, I will.” Ivore had sworn to him that day.

Ivore Arhtai had kept his word to Lylor Kirek, and he would keep his word until the day he past into The Beyond.

Ivore smelled them approaching from another direction but did not get to his feet just yet. The outdoor café was just beginning to fill with others as the sun rose into the sky and he liked to enjoy his tea as he watched the sun come up. They may have been exiled here, but they had done as much as they could to make it their home and to seem like they were free. Revia had gotten him to start drinking tea many years ago, making him switch from the dark, vile tasting and muddy liquid that he called coffee. Ivore had come to like the taste and it had grown on him so that now all he drank was tea.

“Ivore my friend.” The voice spoke from his left and Ivore got to his feet. “A very good morning to you.”

Ivore smiled as he turned and looked at Ch'eldo Iaaldo. He was the oldest of any within their compound at close to four million years of age, and he was revered among both his people and the Lycavorians here. Ivore glanced up to his face and felt the brief flash of shame touch him as it always did. Nyser had taken Ch'eldo's eyes in a fit of rage when Ch'eldo had refused to help him. Ivore had imposed his body between Ch'eldo and his brother saving his life. Now he wore an intricately designed and detailed cloth strip over both his eyes, but it always seemed to Ivore that Ch'eldo had never really lost his sight. The man was always moving among the compound with his ever-present staff and it did not seem to hamper him in any way.

“And a fine one it is Ch'eldo.” Ivore spoke as he pulled the chair out next to him. He looked at the second man and nodded his head with a smile. “Ra'tel... a good morning to you as well.”

The younger man smiled. “A bit chilly for my tastes, but this has never seemed to bother you or my father Lord Ivore.” He answered.

Ivore chuckled and nodded his head. “My Beloved Revia yells at me often enough for leaving the windows open in the cold.” He said. “Perhaps I will one day listen to her.”

“Ha!” Ch'eldo chortled loudly as he settled into the chair. “That will be a momentous day! Lady Revia will run singing through the streets!”

Ivore laughed warmly now. “No doubt she will.” He said as he returned to his chair and Ra'tel sat on his father's opposite side.

“I trust you have brought an ample supply of Revia's tea?” Ch'eldo spoke as he got comfortable.

Ivore nodded his head as he began to pour two additional cups of the steaming liquid. “When have I ever disappointed you Ch'eldo?”

“Well there was the time that...” Ch'eldo began.

“Father that was not Lord Ivore's fault. That was mine. And it was three hundred and ten thousand years ago.” Ra'tel spoke with a smile.

“But he did promise me Revia's tea.” Ch'eldo pressed.

Ivore moved the first cup between Ch'eldo's hands and watched as he lifted it to his lips and took a long sip. “Then let me make it up to you now.” He spoke as he watched him drink.

Ch'eldo smiled and lowered the cup half way to the table. “Ahhh. Like a gift from the gods themselves.” He spoke as Ra'tel also sipped his tea. He set the cup fully on the table and reached out to place his hand on Ivore's wrist. “So... tell me what has you so befuddled as to call me in the middle of the night and ask to speak with us first thing this morning Ivore. There is not much that rattles you my old friend.”

Ivore nodded his head and reached around to take the data pad from the pouch he wore on his belt. He laid it on the small table in front of Ch'eldo. “This.” He spoke softly.

Ch'eldo let his hands drop to the data pad and he held it up, running his fingers across the small screen slowly. He finally held it out to Ra'tel. “What is this?” He asked finally.

Ivore leaned closer to him at the table. “My foul brother Nyser may have taken your eyes Ch'eldo Iaaldo, but he did not take your sight. In my heart, I know this to be true my friend.”

Ch'eldo turned his head to look at him. “Perhaps.” He said.

Ra'tel's eyes grew wider when he saw what was on the pad and he looked first at Ivore and then to his father. “Father!” He gasped.

Ch'eldo held up his hand. “I know.” He said softly. “Ivore... when did these first start to appear on the shoulders of you, Revia and your children?”

Ivore looked at him with wide eyes. “How did you know...?” He rasped out the words. “You know what it is?”

Ch'eldo nodded his head. “I do.” He answered him. “It is... it is something that I never thought I would ever see.”

“Then what is it?” Ivore asked. “Revia and I have been... we have been beside ourselves because we cannot discover how this has happened. Our children. Our grandchildren. All of them... all of them have this mark on our left shoulders Ch'eldo. For three days now! It... it frightens Revia. She believes it to be a bad omen of things to come.”

Ch'eldo shook his head. “No.” He told him firmly. “This... this is not something that you should be frightened of.”

“What is it?” Ivore asked again. “Is it a curse of some kind?”

“A curse?” Ra'tel gasped. “Lord Ivore... this... this is no curse.”

“Then what is it?” Ivore asked once more.

Ch'eldo grasped Ivore's hand tightly. “Retrieve Revia from the school and meet us in our Sanctuary Ivore.”

“Why?” Ivore asked.

Ch'eldo looked directly at Ivore, and he swore he could see his eyes moving beneath that cloth. “There is something that you must see. Hurry now. If you, Revia and your children have worn this symbol for three days, there is not much time left.”

“Left for what?” Ivore demanded.

“Trust me Ivore.” Ch'eldo told him softly. “Bring your beloved Revia to the sanctuary and you will discover what is happening. Hurry!”

Revia Mahanlo-Arhtai was the personification of goddess like beauty. At least to Ivore. The moment he had smelled her scent he knew that she was the one for him. The one that would complete him. Even now, at over a million and a half years of age, she did not appear to have aged a single day from the moment she had become his beloved wife and mate. Her long, dark hair fell to the middle of her back, untouched by even the slightest hint of gray. She had high cheekbones, moist full lips and wildly exotic light blue eyes like her father. Her figure had not changed in the least except for becoming leaning and more muscular because of the physical training she practiced every day with their daughters. A physical regiment that their sons had put together just for their mother and sisters in order to ensure they could defend themselves from anything. Ivore Arhtai never believed a woman would have such an effect on him, until Revia Mahanlo had entered his life. She was his core, and had been since that first time. He would do anything within his power to see that she was protected and never came to harm. He would burn whole planets if he had too. No female Alpha could ever entice him away from his beloved Revia. Not only did her scent rule his soul, but her physical charms now were just as lush and delicious as they were so many years ago. Revia was never shy in their bed, and their lovemaking was as intense and erotic as it had ever been.

Revia loved Ivore Arhtai without thought. His touch could ignite her female Alpha wolf passions with a simple caress, yet he was also one of the most compassionate men Revia had ever met. He could be just as content making her shout his name to the heavens as they took each other in passion and desire as he was simply holding her naked in his arms tightly as they drifted off to sleep. He was so very different from his brother and the others of his Pack as she quickly discovered in their first years together. This was information that she had easily told her mother and father with true happiness and it had pleased them to no end. Ivore became one of the few among the Arhtai Pack that her father trusted completely.

Not for one instant had Revia blamed him for the actions of his brother and his Pack on that night. Ivore had fought wildly and viciously to protect her and their children, even clashing with his older brother violently. He believed deeply in the Onab prophecies and the power of the Mahanlo bloodline and this had always set him apart from the others of his Pack. The rage she had seen and felt within him on the Dremsa rie Saan had been of the purest form, and he would have slaughtered anyone who tried to harm her or their children without question.

It had taken her many years to pull him from the blanket of shame he had shrouded himself in because of the actions of his Pack, but Revia had never doubted he would come back to her.

Their life had not been easy, but they remained resolute in their love for one another and their people. Faith had been the one thing that kept them moving forward. Revia trusted her beloved husband more than anything in her life and it had been his love and faith for her that allowed her to still be strong for them and their children.

Revia clung to his arm tightly as they entered the Sanctuary, outwardly calm to anyone who saw her, but inwardly frightened and unsure. Touching Ivore in some manner had always been able to put her at ease and feel safe and today was no different. Their children often teased them about not being able to go more than a few minutes without touching one another in some manner, but this trait they had also passed to them and it pleased Revia and Ivore more than their children would ever know.

Ch'eldo greeted Revia with a smile and a hug the moment the doors to the courtyard outside closed. He could sense the apprehension in her but said nothing as he held her at arms length while Ra'tel made sure the door was secure. Ch'eldo knew they were always being watched, but through the many years they had devised ways to avoid the many cameras and spies that always seemed to be around their compound. The Sanctuary was the one place that they could speak freely without the worry of being seen and heard. Both of their peoples came here at least once a week in a huge gathering to pray and be together. The Sanctuary was built on top of a large magnetic plate that distorted most sensors and listening devices naturally and after many years the Artai watchers had simply stopped trying to devise a way to listen and see what was going on within the Sanctuary.

Revia turned to the woman beside Ch'eldo and hugged her tightly. "Ki'cha, you are looking as beautiful as ever." She spoke as they embraced.

Ch'eldo's wife chuckled softly. "And so are you." She answered holding her at arms length now. "Almost as if you..." Her eyes grew wider. "You carry another child don't you Revia my dear?"

Revia looked slightly embarrassed and she smiled and nodded her head. "Yes." She spoke happily looking at Ivore who wore the same proud expression he did whenever she was with child. "My husband cannot seem to keep his hands to himself." She spoke with a brilliant smile.

Ki'cha laughed at this and hugged her once more. "As if you fight him off at every turn." She exclaimed holding her tight.

Revia smiled. "Where would the fun in that be?" She asked as she began to get more relaxed.

Ki'cha smiled and touched her face. "You are so much like your mother." She said softly. "It is refreshing."

Revia matched her smile as she looked at Ch'eldo. "Ivore... Ivore tells me that you know what is happening Ch'eldo." She said softly. "Why this symbol is..."

Ch'eldo held up his hand stopping her words. "May I see it?" He asked her.

Revia looked at Ivore quickly and saw him nod his head. She turned slightly to the side and grasped the edge of her shirt by the shoulder as Ivore turned as well and pulled down the collar of the shirt he wore. Both of them heard Ki'cha gasp as Ch'eldo moved closer to them and reached out to trace the edges of the very prominent tattoo on their left shoulders. He kept his emotions in check while he did this, but Ch'eldo could feel the immense swell of happiness and hope beginning to rise in his chest.

"Ch'eldo!" Ki'cha exclaimed softly to her husband and he nodded his head.

"Yes, Ki'cha my precious." Ch'eldo spoke softly.

Revia and Ivore turned back to face them fully. "Ch'eldo...?" Ivore began but he held up his hand once more and they watched him turn to Ra'tel. Ra'tel handed him the ancient looking book and Ch'eldo turned back to Ivore and Revia.

"Sit down... both of you. Please." He said as he moved to the bench.

Ivore quickly pulled two chairs from the side and positioned one for Revia as he sat in the other. Revia's eyes rested on the book he held in his hands and she looked at Ch'eldo carefully. "I have never seen that book Ch'eldo." She said softly.

Ch'eldo nodded his head. Revia was a voracious reader and always had been. She had read all of the texts within the Sanctuary at least once and the fantastic thing about it was that she managed to remember nearly everything that she read.

"I have... I have kept this text hidden all of these years." Ch'eldo told them.

“Why?” Revia asked.

Ch'eldo met her eyes evenly. “Within its pages are four prophecies that are known only to a small few. One of which that even I never imagined would come true. Not after the Dremsa Rie Saan and what came later” He told them. “When we came here... when we came here, I buried it in the floor of our home. I had lost optimism that it would ever be realized and I did not want to give anyone false hope.” He looked at Ivore. “Until this morning.”

“I don’t understand.” Ivore told him.

“This symbol... this tattoo?” Ch'eldo asked them. “It has appeared on all of your bloodline?”

Revia nodded her head. “Even our seventh-generation grandchild.” She answered as she reached out and took Ivore’s hand in her own. “She is only four months old Ch'eldo. Please tell me this is not...”

Ch'eldo shook his head quickly. “No.” He said firmly reaching out to place his hand on her arm and squeezing gently. “This is... this is a moment of... hope has returned to us Revia. To all of us. Hope and a future that we had thought lost so long ago.”

Revia glanced at Ivore once more and squeezed his hand tighter. “What... what do you mean?”

Ch'eldo opened the ancient book by unlatching the three leather bindings that wrapped around the volume. “There are four prophecies in this volume Revia. Four prophecies that only four individuals have ever seen. Two of my people, one Darastrixi and Kesas Pengot.”

Ivore’s eyes grew wide. “Kesas?” He gasped. “How is that... how is that possible? And how could a Darastrixi know our prophecies?”

“The how of it is a bit difficult to explain and I will tell you as much as I am able, for even I do not know all of it.” Ch'eldo told him. “Your Uncles Daniho and Ashten were utterly brilliant Revia my child. They laid plans within plans within plans, but they also held this knowledge close to their hearts.”

“Tenne Daniho and Ashten?” Revia gasped. “But they... Ch'eldo they have gone to Vada Wayn. My mother herself told me this when she could no longer feel them within her. Staanian Reva as well. Many thousands of years ago.”

Ch'eldo nodded his head. “They have, yes.” He told her. “But their plans have lived on through the many millennia that have passed and it seems that they have finally born fruit.”

“I don’t understand.” Revia said.

Ch'eldo opened the book slowly, the many pages of drawings fragile due to their age but otherwise in pristine condition. He finally opened it to one page and turned it in his lap, holding it up for them to see. Revia’s eyes went wide and her hands went to cover her mouth in shock at what she saw. Ivore reached for the book with shaking hands and gently took it from Ch'eldo’s steady grip, his own eyes staring at the image in stunned silence. The image on the pages of the ancient book was of the tattoo that now adorned his and Revia’s left shoulders. All of their many children, all of their children’s husbands and wives and children no matter their Pack. The massive head of the huge black wolf, with piercing yellow/gold eyes and vicious dual fangs unique to only one bloodline of Lycavorians in the entire universe. Ivore slowly lifted one hand and allowed his own dual fangs to extend slightly, his fingers running over the tips of those fangs. The same fangs all of his children and many grandchildren had, passed down to all of them from his beloved Revia, and a trait that all of them had honored throughout their lives.

Ivore finally looked at Ch'eldo. “What is this my friend?” He asked still somewhat shaken by seeing the image in front of him.

“Daniho and Ashten refused to view these prophecies.” Ch'eldo told him reaching out and taking the book back from him. “When the Seers transferred them from their original drawings and brought them to him, he would not view them. Nor would Ashten. They did not want to see the future anymore. They had only one question.”

Revia looked at him now, her lower lip quivering. “What... what question?”

“All they wanted to know was if their bloodline survived.” Ch'eldo answered. “I told them that it did. And they would be far more powerful than anything we had ever seen. They were... they were content in this knowledge.”

“You?” Ivore gasped as he came to his feet now.

Ch'eldo nodded his head slowly. “Yes.”

“You! You are... you are a Seer!” Ivore almost shouted in disbelief.

Ch'eldo nodded his head once more. "I was once... long ago." He said. "When I left Cerath with the Kirek Pack, I became again what I started out as. An engineer of my people. A Seer's ability to see future events was somehow tied to our planet Ivore, not some special ability of our people as so many thought it was. There was something about the core of Cerath that granted us these visions and images. Daniho, Ashten and Kesas were the only ones who ever knew this. We did not even tell your mother dear Revia. Two books of the last four prophecies of my people were made from the original drawings and drafts. One was given to Kesas Pengot by your Tenne Daniho on the day that we left Cerath. I have had the other with me all of this time."

Ivore dropped to his knees now, his eyes flooding with tears and he bowed his head to Ch'eldo in shame, his hands reaching out to grip the ancient book in Ch'eldo's hands with a vise like grasp that no one would have ever been able to break. "All of these... all of these years and I... I never knew." He stammered.

Ch'eldo placed his hand on Ivore's head. "This is the way King Daniho and Lord Ashten wanted it." He said. "Plans within plans within plans."

"My brother!" Ivore almost yelled. "He... I let him..."

"Never!" Ch'eldo roared now, grabbing Ivore's head tighter. "You will bear no shame where there is none to bear Ivore Mahanlo-Arhtai! Never!"

"I could have stopped him!" Ivore sobbed.

Ch'eldo shook his head. "And you would have been killed just as quickly the moment you raised your hand." Ch'eldo said. "What happened that night was meant to happen. Your presence was what stopped him. Your presence is what kept all of us alive in that darkest hour. Just as the prophecy foretold."

Ivore looked at him. "What?" He gasped.

Ch'eldo nodded his head. "We are here because of you Ivore. Just as it was supposed to happen. And what is coming... it is happening just as it was foretold, even though I myself had lost hope so long ago."

"Ch'eldo... you are not... I don't understand?" Revia said.

Ch'eldo squeezed Ivore's shoulder. "Sit beside your beloved wife Ivore Mahanlo-Arhtai. You bow to no one young man. And one day soon, your King will tell you this himself."

"King?!" Ivore stammered the words as he got back into the chair next to Revia.

Ch'eldo opened the ancient volume once more to that page, sliding his hand slowly across the image of the black wolf. "Do you remember what I told your brother that night he took my eyes Ivore?" Ch'eldo asked looking at him.

"I... I will never forget it." Ivore answered. "I will carry it with me until the day I pass into Vada Wayn."

Ch'eldo nodded his head.

"They will come, from distant stars, they will come. From age to age they have been forged. They will feel the call. They are mirrors of light, with the memories of future dreams. They will ride the sky, keeping the fires bright. You will not know their names. You will not know their faces. But there will be no victory for you. Past and present will collide. Black and Crimson will descend upon you. They fight for honor, for family and for King. For Mahanlo blood shows no remorse

There will come a time when the snow on Cerath will have melted and is no more
And then, the Time of Reckoning will be upon you."

Ivore shook his head. "But what... what does this have to do with the symbol Ch'eldo?" Ivore asked.

Ch'eldo met his eyes. "Your actions on the Dremsa Rie Saan are the third Prophecy in this book Ivore Mahanlo-Arhtai. Your actions that night helped to pave the way for the future to take place."

"Ch'eldo..." Revia began but he held up his hand stopping her words and then rested it back on the book over the image of the wolf.

"This symbol... this Saanigaro Lecoa that you now wear, that all who bear your blood within them wear. This is the Lecoa of the Rebirth of the Mahanlo Saanigaro." Ch'eldo told them. "This is the sign!" (Bloodline Crest)

"What sign?" Revia asked as she reached for her husband once more and took his arm.

"Whoever bears this symbol on their left shoulder will know the truth of it." Ch'eldo told them. "The descendants of King Daniho Mahanlo and his beloved twin brother Ashten are not dead as so many of our people believe. They are very much alive. And they... they are coming for those that are their family. In six days.”

“Six days?” Ivore asked now as he gripped Revia even closer now.

Ch'eldo nodded his head. “The prophecy tells us that six days after this Saanigaro Lecoa begins to appear on their family, they will come for them.” He said reverently. “Just as I told Nyser. From age to age they will have been forged and they will feel the call. The call of their bloodline, the call of their Nathos. Past and present will collide and Mahanlo blood will show no remorse. There will come a time when the snow on Cerath will have melted and is no more. And then, the Time of Reckoning will be upon us.” Ch'eldo looked at Ivore. “All of this is true, however, I did not finish the full phrase of the prophecy that night with your brother Ivore.”

“There... there was more?” He gasped.

Ch'eldo nodded his head again. “Cerath is gone Ivore.” He said softly seeing Ivore and Revia’s eyes go wide. “Destroyed by the Iais’Kai almost fifty thousand years ago. We saw this as well, but in order for the prophecy to be fulfilled it had to be. I felt our planet die, as did all of those among my people. We knew this and we accepted it. Many of us believe it is the reason King Daniho and Lord Ashten did not want to view the four prophecies held within this book. It was too hard for them to know what needed to happen. What had to be endured for our people, yours and mine, for us to reach our full potential. We do not know what took place to have delayed the prophecy for so long, nor did we see the Dremsa rie Saan and what your brother and Yelma would succeed in doing. All we knew was that events would happen that would force these four prophecies to take place.”

“What... what did you not tell my brother that night Ch'eldo?” Ivore asked softly.

“Vada Dremsa rie Saan gur, heuhly, tis vada falyne inachia mihar.” Ch'eldo spoke the words gently, in almost a whisper. “For terit Saanigaro gur tur joa cova.” (The Night of Blood will, finally, in the future twilight sleep. And your bloodline will be no more.)

“Carians.” Revia gasped softly.

Ch'eldo nodded his head. “Indeed.” He said. “The Prophecy states that the descendants of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo will be unlike any Lycavorians that we have ever seen before. Pure. Wild. Raw. Focused and clear.”

“Vada Mard Revik for jen Tarivuos.” Ra'tel spoke softly from behind his father.

“They will come for their family.” Ch'eldo said as he nodded in agreement with his son’s words. “For their blood. And anything that stands in their way will feel their justice and their wrath.”

“Avoi.” Ki’cha spoke now.

Ch'eldo looked at Revia. “It is no doubt the reason that Kesas Pengot has woken your father Revia my child.”

“My father!?” Revia gasped. “My father... my father is awake now!?”

Ch'eldo nodded his head. “To confirm what I have just told you. I felt Lylor’s resonance the moment he woke, the briefest of moments and then it was hidden again. If they have woken him, it is only to confirm what Kesas Pengot must suspect is happening now. And to prepare.”

“But how?” Ivore gasped.

Ch'eldo shook his head. “How they have hidden this from your brother and Yelma I do not know Ivore.” He told them quickly. “They do not know that you and Revia live, or your children and blood. Both of you are listed as being killed on the Dremsa rie Saan. We have been unable to communicate with anyone from the Kirek Pack since that night and the barriers around this compound prevent us from signaling off the planet even if we were able. I have no proof to back up my belief, but I think Ranol Nenay has contact with Aryera Kirek and Kesas, in some form, at least. Yelma Arhtai still holds two of his children and that is how she has kept his silence for all of these years. Most believe your mother to be dead Revia, but we all know the truth of that. Yelma Arhtai is a master manipulator, and even Nyser won’t defy his wife and mate. That is the power she holds over Kesas and the others of the Kirek Pack.” Ch'eldo rose to his feet and began to pace in front of them slowly. “Kesas Pengot is no fool however, and he spent far more time around your uncles than most people thought. He became just like them in many respects. Kesas has the only other copy of this book child. He knows what is within it and what it means. It is the only reason that Kesas Pengot would wake your father Revia. Somehow, he knows or has discovered that the reborn Mahanlo bloodline is coming here and that they mean to retrieve their family.” Ch'eldo stopped pacing in front of her and he pulled Revia to her feet in front of him, holding her hands curled inward against his chest. “You will be reunited with your mother and father soon Revia Mahanlo.” He said seeing the tears flood her eyes. “And all of those who are of yours and Ivore’s blood. Your family will know you by your scent alone Revia, and you will know them the moment you see them. The moment you smell them. You must be strong now. Stronger than either of you has ever been. Both of you.”

“Ch'eldo... what... what do we do?” Ivore gasped as he rose to his feet now.

“We prepare.” He answered confidently looking at him. “It is clear to me now that your brother and Yelma do not know that Lylor Kirek has been woken or they would have already been here to arrest everyone. We cannot worry about those out of our reach right now. We must prepare everyone within our compound to be ready to move at a moment’s notice. And we must initiate our own plans as well.”

“Move?” Ivore asked. “Move where?”

“Wherever the Mard Revik decides that we will call home as a people once more.” Ch'eldo said.

JETANIA WARIM BASE

He watched as the sun rose above the tree line and the cool morning breeze caressed his tanned skin. The single mug on the floor held a now cold half full cup of very strong coffee. His upper body was bare, a pair of shorts the only thing covering his lean, muscular form. His small quarters on the base were barren for the most part, as he never spent much time here, but it was one of only a handful of private quarters that had a balcony overlooking the valley below.

Laon Kavar was many things, but he was certainly no fool. Things were different now, so very different now, because of the new wolf blood that swirled within him. And Laon Kavar embraced the difference completely. His wolf senses were far more acute than they had ever been before. He felt more energized and more physically powerful. His mind had expanded in a way unlike anything Laon had ever imagined. Things he would never have believed could exist were like second nature to him now. Technology and Tactics. Education, Engineering, and even the Advanced Aeronautical equations were nothing for him now. These things filled his mind as easily as if he had learned them himself. Laon Kavar had always been considered one of the brightest and most intelligent Engineers anywhere within the COLS military branch, but his Mountain Pack upbringing and loyalty to Lazar had held him back according to others. A fact that gave others fits Laon knew and he loved every bit of it.

Now... now Laon Kavar was something far more than he had ever imagined. And as the sweet smells of coco and mint and delicious raspberry fruit filled his nose completely, he knew why. He turned his head slightly to the side and looked over his right shoulder at the two utterly captivating reasons. Whatever had happened, whatever he had become now, Laon Kavar would never forsake what the gods had brought to him.

Nara and Jacina stood behind him, Nara wearing only one of his dark tank top undershirts while Jacina had the white sheet from the bed wrapped partially around her lush, tanned and very naked form. Their heads were pressed together, Nara’s raven colored locks and Jacina’s dark red hair mingling as one as they gazed at him. Laon Kavar knew many Alpha females that were equal in attractiveness to Nara and Jacina, he was close friends with several, but none of them had the raw, almost feral, and utterly devastating beauty that Nara and Jacina possessed. A natural beauty that caused their skin to shine and their scents to tickle his nose and his other senses in just the right way. He now knew all about what had happened with Jacina and it did not matter to him in the least. They were his now, and he intended to love them both until they could not stand it. He had always hoped to find a single Alpha female who he could share all of himself with, his hopes and dreams, and now he had two. Laon Kavar knew that they loved and wanted each other equally as much as they loved and wanted him and that did not faze him in the least. They truly were of one mind and heart and that is how Laon saw them. What was equally as easy for him to see and feel was that they loved and desired him in a way that filled his being. As silly as it may have sounded to others, he truly did belong to them in every way.

The large, animal skin rug covered much of the concrete and steel floor of the balcony and Laon held out his hand for them to join him.

Nara took his hand without hesitation and he pulled them around in front of him where they settled to the floor beside him and snuggled their bodies close to either side of his lean form. The previous night had been unlike anything that Laon had ever imagined it could be, their bodies and minds were completely attuned to each other in every way. They had never been together before, yet it seemed each of them knew exactly what to do to each other to make their voices sing to the night sky in blissful pleasure. Each of them had let go completely of whatever inhibitions they may have had and surrendered to each other. They had done things to each other that were fierce, demanding and passionate, just as their wolf nature dictated and then they had done things that had been slow and loving and utterly captivating. Laon nuzzled Nara's head and cheek as she snuggled close to him, and then turned his head and did the same to Jacina hearing both of them whimper softly in happiness and delight.

Nara had been the one to turn Jacina, a night of divine pleasure that she would never forget, but when Laon had claimed them both in the old way of their people, their combined blood had been the catalyst for the future and had shattered all of Jacina's remaining reservations about her life. Finding first Nara and then Laon had been the turning point in Jacina's life. She could not put into words what she felt now and like Nara, she simply surrendered herself to the feelings and emotions that swarmed through her. Like Laon and Nara, last night had surpassed anything in her wildest imagination, and Jacina knew without question this is where she now belonged. His very touch upon their bodies had set them on fire and for nearly five hours they had done nothing but pleasure each other in every way that they could think of. And Jacina knew it would continue now for the rest of her life. All the horrors she had endured had been washed away forever her first night with Nara, and now, Laon had shown her what her future held. It was a future that Jacina looked forward to with every beat of her heart.

It was no different for Nara in many ways.

Like her brothers, her blood was the purest of any of the Leonidas children, and it now called for Laon and Jacina in a way she would never be able to explain to someone outside her family. Her mothers would understand she knew, and Sadi and the others, but Nara didn't care what others thought. To Nara, Laon Kavar was the perfect specimen of a man in every way, and Jacina was a complete goddess, and she belonged to both of them now. When he had bitten her, Nara's world had erupted in blissful delight, and when they both had bitten Jacina, that world had become pure heaven. Nara did not know what the future held for them, but she knew that as long as they were together they could face anything without fear.

As his powerful arms pulled her and Jacina close to his warm body, Nara looked into his handsome face.

"We wondered what had taken our beautiful husband from the warmth of our bed." Nara said softly.

Laon smiled affectionately and kissed her deeply, quickly turning his head and doing the same to Jacina, his hands stroking their long hair and the curve of their spines as he held them. He nuzzled them both again intensely and felt their lush bodies call out to him as they sighed in happiness. While Jacina was still learning to control and focus her female wolf aura, Nara was teaching her quickly how to use it and Laon knew no other female would ever be able to do to him what they could. Nara may have been a few hundred years younger than him, but after she had bit him and he had seen what swirled within her mind Laon knew she was far more wise and intelligent than any young female he had ever known.

"I wanted to watch the sun rise one more time." He said finally. "I will miss Jetania, but it was never truly my home I suppose."

Nara looked at him oddly. "You will miss it?" She asked him. "Where... where are you going?"

"Wherever the two of you go." He told her with a smile. "My place now is with you and Jacina. I don't care where that takes us as long as we are together."

"Jainn." Jacina said blissfully. She was easily picking up the Lycavorian language due to her Etheric connection and bond with Nara and now with Laon as well. Rolling off her tongue as they did, the words of the ancient language sounded like music to them both.

Nara turned her head slightly and looked at the Mahanlo crest that now adorned his left shoulder and it made her shudder in bliss. Laon may not have been as physically defined as her father and brothers and other Spartans that she knew, but that would change quickly, and she did not care either way. His scent and his touch were like a drug to her now, and to Jacina and they would never get enough of him.

"Do they... do they all know now?" Laon asked softly.

Nara turned her head back to meet his eyes and she smiled knowingly. “Yes. I could not keep what you make us feel from them, even if I wanted too. And I didn’t want too. Deo and Andro would have detected it first, but everyone would have known within a few hours.” She told him. “We were not exactly quiet last night either.” She finished with a seductive smile.

Laon and Jacina laughed softly at this. “No, we certainly were not.” Jacina echoed Nara’s words. “So much for the demure and conservative daughter my parents hoped I would be.”

“Does that frighten you Laon?” Nara asked him.

Laon thought about that for a second and then shook his head. “No.” He answered finally. “I thought that it might at first, after what took place on Ventori.”

Nara rolled her eyes. “Deion and Andro had no right to do that.” She said quickly. “He is my twin I know but...”

Laon shook his head. “They are your brothers Nara.” He spoke. “I would have done the same thing. Hell... I have done the same thing, in a manner of speaking, with my own sisters.” His arms tightened around them now. “I will never fear your family Nara my love. Not after what you and Jacina showed me last night. This Etheric power is...”

“It will become easier as time passes Laon.” Nara said. “Jacina and I can help you easily enough.”

Laon nodded his head. “I know.” He told her. “You are... both of you are certain this is what you want?”

“Did we not show you this last night?” Jacina asked with a sultry voice as she used her hand to caress his bare chest.

“We can show you more if you wish.” Nara echoed her words as her hand dipped lower to his thigh.

Laon smiled at this. “I just don’t... I don’t want this to end.” He said softly.

“It won’t.” Jacina told him. “Nara turned me, yes. But I have always been different if you ask my parents. When Nara made me like you both, I could see all I ever wanted in my mind. Some of my people may say that because Nara turned me it influenced me, but this is not true. It opened my eyes and my mind to so many new things. I have what I have always wanted now. I have you and I have Nara. That is all I will ever need.”

“Avoi.” Nara said softly.

“And both of you are all I will ever need.” Laon spoke as he leaned over and kissed her deeply.

Nara was smiling as she watched them and she reached over to the cup of coffee beside Laon. She brought it to her lips and sipped it, her face instantly changing to one of disgust as she spit out the liquid.

“Carians!” She gasped as she put the mug back down. “We definitely need to improve your eating and drinking habits our husband!” She exclaimed. “This is... this is absolutely vile! You call this coffee Laon our love?!”

“Most of the time, yes.” Laon answered. “Other times we use it to kill weeds and take rust from metal.”

She turned her head and saw them looking at her with bright eyes and happy faces and she began to laugh. Laughter that they quickly joined in on as Laon dropped to his back on the rug and pulled them even closer. Their heads lowered to his chest and they wrapped their bodies around his in blissful contentment.

JETANIA MOUNTAIN OF STONE AND LIGHT

It was like walking through a doorway into another world.

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas stepped from the Etheric wall into bright sunshine and a cool morning pine breeze washed across his senses instantly. He was on some sort of trail and his eyes took in everything around him as he moved several paces from where the Etheric wall pulsed. There were spotty clouds in the bright blue sky above him and he quickly detected the familiar scent of pines and flowers all around him. He blinked suddenly and he was in front of a closed doorway. He turned quickly when he heard the smattering of hundreds of voices, and in the distance, he could see the ancient buildings all around him. He could see men, women and children moving among the streets all around him, talking with one another, interacting with the many vendor stalls that lined the streets that were selling items of one kind or another. Martin's eyes grew wider when he realized where he was and what he was seeing.

"This is... this is old Sparta!" He gasped.

"Yes." The deep male voice echoed all around him.

Martin's head snapped around to stare at the now open doorway where the voice had come from. He had heard that voice before as it thundered in his head. He had heard that voice on the night that he had discovered who he really was so many years ago.

A lifetime ago.

And he had heard that same voice many times in his dreams since.

"Fa... father?" Martin spoke softly.

"You have come so far my son." The voice spoke again. "And you have so much further to go."

Martin stepped through the doorway without hesitation now and his eyes grew even wider when he saw the tall figure of the man standing beside the small fire pit oven. He was dressed in a white and crimson chiton that wrapped around his broad, muscular figure and calf high leather boots. He held a mug in his hand and Martin's eyes grew even wider when he saw the near identical bearded face staring back at him.

The man smiled at him as he entered, his dark brown eyes smiling in the light from the sun pouring into the interior from the ceiling opening.

Leonidas. The first True King of the Lycavorian people and the most revered King in Sparta's ancient and storied history.

"No, my son." Leonidas spoke. "You are the one Mard Revik. Just as it was always meant to be."

Martin watched his father set the mug on the table and move with confident steps around the side to stop only a foot away from him. It was like looking into a mirror and seeing himself. This was not an Etheric projection of him like when he saw him at Thermopylae all those years ago, however, this was something... it couldn't be. Martin watched his father smile at him.

"Why can it not be Martin?" Leonidas asked him as if hearing the question in his son's mind. "There is so much that we will never understand about the universe my son. We spend years, decades, even lifetimes trying to fully understand what the universe and the gods that fill that universe do not want us to understand. It simply is my son. And that is how we must view it." Leonidas held out his hand. "Take it my son."

Martin looked at his father, his eyes wide. "Father... you..."

Leonidas stepped closer. "You have held one desire in your heart above all others. Even those who you hold dearest to your heart of hearts, even your Queens, they know nothing of it. My grandson may suspect, for Androcles is more like you than even you want to admit. I know this desire Martin, for it is the same one that has filled my being since the moment you entered this world. You have put others before yourself all of your life my son, yet this desire has never changed or altered in all of that time." Leonidas held his hand out even further. "Whatever the reason behind it my son, the powers that be, the gods who look down on us, whatever it is, they have granted us this."

Martin looked at his father's hand, his heart racing out of control now. He glanced back up into his face as he held out his own hand now, and he closed his eyes as he reached for that weathered hand.

His dark eyes flew open when he felt flesh. Warm, firm, living flesh. He looked up into his father's face, saw his dark brown eyes smiling with love and he reached up with his other hand to grasp him as well. His hand was shaking horribly as he rested it on his father's forearm, but it was the same. Not an Etheric projection, not some holo graphic image, but a powerful arm pulsing with life and blood.

"Fa... father?" Martin gasped now.

Leonidas smiled now and he held his other arm out as if asking for an embrace. The one embrace that neither of them had ever had the opportunity to share. "My son." He said.

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas could feel the heat of their hands, he could smell his father's scent, feel his aura pulsing all around him. He stepped forward slowly, hoping beyond hope that this was not some sick dream or vile trick on his mind. He felt his father's arms encircle his back and begin to pull him close and then Martin closed his eyes and wrapped his arms around the shoulders of the man who had guided his life even when he did not know who he truly was. As Leonidas pulled him close and lifted his hand to take Martin's head in his grasp, it was then that Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas felt the wracking sobs consume him and even his tightly shut eyes could not stem the flow of tears that poured down his cheeks. He could feel the powerful beat of his father's heart against his own chest, the power in his limbs as he held him, and his knees gave out somewhat as emotion swarmed across his mind and body and everything he had held in for years came rushing out.

King Leonidas the First grasped his son, easily holding him up in his arms as his son's own arms crushed him in an embrace that would probably have killed a lesser man. Real tears flooded his own eyes as he was granted the one wish that he had craved since the moment he felt Martin's life stir within Gorgo's womb all those nights ago.

King Leonidas of Sparta, had a purpose this day, he knew. The reasons behind why he had been given this sacred moment to share with his only son so long after his duty had taken it away from him were not for him to question. The gods above, the powers that watched over the universe, whoever or whatever they were, they had given him this chance. He would fulfill the purpose... but right now...

Right now, however, right now, he just wanted to hold his son in his arms as he should have been able to do, before fate, destiny and his duty to his people took him away all those years ago.

A father and son, who had known each other only in their dreams, were allowed to hold and embrace one another for the first time in nearly four thousand years.

And, both of them knew without doubt, the last.

JETANIA

It did not matter where they were in Warim, or what they were doing, they all felt it when it happened. Hundreds of Lycavorians, both from the Mountain Packs and from the Union, they all saw it but they would never understand it. The Durcunusaan thought at first that something had taken place with their King. All of them knew he had gone off with Androcles, Dorian and Laren, and their first thought was that something had gone terribly wrong.

That was until they saw the smiles through the tears that were falling.

His Queens. His children. His family. His blood. They all felt the emotions within him, and the fulfilment of an impossible dream that none of them had ever known he possessed. His wives, his sons and daughters, his brother, no matter where they were, they stopped and held one another close as the tears poured shamelessly from their own eyes at the enormous love and happiness within the man that they all loved beyond words.

It was a moment in time that none of them would ever forget or let go of no matter how many years passed from this day forward.

It was the moment that the man they loved more than they could put into words, finally and forever was reborn into the man he was always meant to be.

Their father. Their husband and mate.

Their Mard Revik.

"...Much did you know?" Martin asked the question softly. "At the end?"

Father and son stood on the edge of the cliff overlooking the emerald green sea that stretched before them as far as the eye could see. The smell of the ocean blew gently across their faces, carrying with it a myriad of different but familiar scents to both of them. The backdrop all around them, the smells, it all reminded Martin of parts of Sparta and Gytheio together. Vada Arwa rie vada Revik was not deployed, leaving Martin in a pair of dark gray fatigue pants and top. Father and son were very nearly equal in size and physical proportions, both as men and as wolves. They had run here in their wolf forms, Martin marveling at his father's size, not realizing that he matched him in every way. Though he would never really believe it, Martin and his father were the largest Lycavorians in wolf form to have ever lived in their complete history. Only Androcles came close to them and even he was slightly smaller than his father and grandfather, though not by very much Martin knew. Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo were not as large or muscular, but Martin knew that there was not much known about their father and Reva's husband and mate. It didn't matter to him, for watching as his father ran was mesmerizing.

For Martin, he did not realize the passage of time. It seemed like they had been speaking for hours already when they arrived at this bluff, but he also could feel their time together was coming to an end.

Leonidas looked at his son. "Everything." He answered him. "In those last moments, they all came to me. Resumar, Sumar, Daniho and Ashten. Even Dadrien. Our blood. They shared everything with me. I knew Reva would be watching over you. Even after your mother took you away from earth to protect you... Reva watched over you. They all did. I know that you have struggled with everything these last months and weeks. Discovering so much that you did not know. That you could not imagine."

Martin smiled slightly. "That would be the understatement of the millennia medwan." He said. "Any millennia."

Leonidas smiled as well now. "Indeed."

"You must retrieve our blood my son." Leonidas told him. "I know that you and my grandson Androcles can sense what has taken place, just not on what scale. They are what is most important now."

Martin looked at his father. "It's as bad as we think it is, isn't it father?"

Leonidas turned and looked out over the ocean below them. "Yes."

"How bad?" Martin pressed him.

Leonidas shook his head slowly. "I will leave this for you to discover Martin." He said softly in response. "Just make sure to keep Canth's words to you on that foul planet foremost in your mind. Not everything is as it seems my son. Trust in your instincts Martin my son, for they have never led you astray and they will not fail you going forward."

"You are trying to tell me something without actually telling me." Martin said.

Leonidas looked at him and smiled. "Your insight is your greatest gift keto." He said. "The answers you seek will come, you must be patient. The future is not set Martin aur keto. Androcles changed everything when he looked inside himself and altered the path of the High Coven and brought us together. The Onab prophecies are nearly complete, and then, then you will truly be stepping into the unknown."

"You are talking about the Iais'Kai aren't you?" Martin asked.

Leonidas nodded his head and reached out with his hand to take Martin's arm just above his elbow. "Reva, Kelia, Dynina, Jezima, Gorgo and Anja must be protected at all costs Martin. Each of them have a vital role to play in the future of our people. I don't know what that role is, but that is what I feel strongly. What we all feel."

"Anja?" Martin asked softly.

Leonidas smiled at his son. "Your mother and staania Reva are right you know?" He said quickly. "Forn wen osmosa." (You are dense)

"Ha, ha. Very funny medwan." Martin snapped.

"Aricia may be your ano aur keto, but Anja... Anja is your gai. Everyone knows that my son! You know that! She always has been, and she always will be Martin." Leonidas spoke the words almost forcefully now. "Your other Queens know this as well and they do not care in the least. They love her even more for it; for she is their heart as well as yours. Your Queens... they are as intelligent as they are devastatingly beautiful Martin my boy. They feel it within them, all of them and they embrace it completely."

"Father..."

"You are the Mard Revik my son." Leonidas told him. "You are the King that destiny and fate have prepared for. You are ready."

"Really? No pressure here." Martin hissed softly shaking his head. "Carians sometimes I hate those words."

Leonidas chuckled softly. "Yes, I do know the feeling." He said softly. "Our time grows short my son." He said finally. "Trust your instincts Martin. Trust your son's instincts. At times, they are even more attuned than yours because of his Dahakoan blood. Vin cedaur kimay forn un vada letha rie jorbhe for bara. They all would. You know this." (He will follow you to the gates of hell and back)

"That doesn't mean I have to like it." Martin said.

Leonidas nodded his head. "Perhaps not, but it is what it is." He replied. "Androcles is one of the finest Spartan warriors to have ever lived my son. In some ways, even more so than you. Achilles will be even greater. They are of our bloodline Martin. Our family, my son. Your teachings are what fill them. Your values. Your morals. Achilles will be the reunification of our people and Neesia will follow in her brother's footsteps. Eliani, Dorian, Retta and Calyb, all of my grandchildren will do the same. Even those who have yet to be born.” Martin looked at his father with wide eyes when he said that and he saw the sly smile on his face. “Your Queens have already made this known to you, so don’t look so surprised.” He said. “I would not want to cross one of them, let alone all six of them.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed then and finally he shook his head with a smile. “True.” He said finally.

Leonidas squeezed his arm and gently prodded him to turn around. Martin did and his eyes grew wide when he saw the alter like obelisk behind them. It had not been there when they arrived here, but Martin had long decided that there was more to this place than met the eye. His father stepped up to the obelisk and motioned him forward to gaze at the crimson and silver hilt that rested on the blood red cloth atop the white obelisk alter. Martin’s eyes grew slightly wider when he saw that it had the shoulders and neck of an obsidian colored dragon adorned across the front end of the hilt.

“Vada saan rie duan cafna. Vada Endvor rie duan cafna. Vada Endvor rie vada Mard Revik.” His father spoke the words almost reverently. “The weapon that our ancestor Daniho Mahanlo wielded in defense of our people. A weapon known to all of our people no matter where they might be. They will feel it within themselves and know what it signifies. It is your weapon now Martin aur keto. Hidden here on Vada Dir rie Hal for Saar for nearly three million years, waiting for you to claim it.” (The blood of our people) (The Blade of our people)

Martin lifted his eyes from the sword hilt to his father. “I will never see... I will never see you again will I father?” Martin asked softly.

Leonidas shook his head slowly. “Like this... no my son.” He answered, his voice filled with sadness. “However, however all this came to be, it has allowed us to fulfill the one dream that both of us had my son. We will always be here Martin. All you need do is walk through the Etheric portal. How it works, I do not know, but they will join me here soon. The rest of our bloodline. When you take Vada Endvor rie duan cafna from its place, the barrier that keeps ships from fully approaching will dissipate and allow access to the Temple itself, but only someone of enough etheric ability will be able to access the portal and come here. Right now, that number is very limited, only someone of our bloodline will be able to pass through the portal, but as the years pass it will grow. Osrod Aspion and his bloodline to come will be its Kerta Sehises.” (Eternal Guardians)

“Osrod?” Martin gasped.

Leonidas smiled and nodded his head. “Your insight, remember?” He said. “Why do you think his bloodline found its way here? You sensed it within him when you first met him and that is why you spared him when you could have killed him.” Leonidas stepped closer to his son and reached up to take both sides of his head in his weathered hands. Martin felt the warmth of his skin and inhaled deeply of his father’s rich mint scent. “When you take Vada saan rie duan cafna from its place, this will also return staania Reva’s essence to her body. And then your final journey will have begun.”

“My final journey?”

Leonidas nodded his head. “One thing remains for you to do once you have reunited our people. Something left for you by staanio Sumar.”

“What is that?” Martin asked.

Leonidas shook his head. “That I do not know. Androcles, Dorian and Laren carry the map within them and they will discover it when the time is right. They will bring that map to you and then you will know.”

“Seems like an awful lot of effort for a weapon or something.” Martin said.

“When is something that is worth it, ever easy my son?” Leonidas asked.

“Never.” Martin answered.

Leonidas nodded his head. “Never.”

“Father...?”

Leonidas pulled Martin into a powerful embrace, an embrace that Martin returned with equal power. Martin felt tears in his eyes once more and he tried to pull his father even closer to him, hoping that the tighter he held him the less chance there was of him disappearing.

“I will always be with you my son.” Leonidas whispered in his ear. “I will always be with you.”

Martin Leonidas stood there even as he felt his father’s physical form melt from his grasp until there was nothing. He lowered his arms, staring at the ground in front of him, memorizing the smell of him before it drifted away, searing it into his brain. He lifted his hand and drew it across his face, wiping away the tears that stained his cheeks as he turned his head and looked out over the emerald ocean that extended far into the distance. He took several deep breaths to calm his racing heart, suddenly grateful for the fulfillment of what he once thought a dream that would never come true. Martin looked into the clear blue sky above the ocean and nodded his head slowly. Perhaps there were gods, or some higher power up there looking down upon him from the heavens. As he lifted his face and closed his eyes to feel the ocean breeze on his skin he nodded his head one last time in thanks to them.

“Thank you.” Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas whispered the words.

Martin turned to face the obelisk alter and he reached out his hand to circle his fingers around the hilt of Vada Endvor rie duan cafna. He concentrated for an instant and the Onkmeti Naami blade burst forth from the Etheric realm. It was truly a masterful piece of workmanship, easily surpassing the skill of the Weapons Master Nehtes. The blade glimmered in the sunlight, with an intricately carved image of what could only be Torma on either side, his obsidian scales and golden eyes easily discernible.

Martin nodded his head once more and squeezed the hilt harder as he lifted it further from the surface of the alter. He blinked when the obelisk alter suddenly vanished in a soft flash of yellowish light and then he was alone on the bluff. He turned his head one last time to look out over the edge of the bluff and nodded.

“Time to go to work.” He said softly.

CHAPTER SEVENTY-THREE

JETANIA

WARIM MEDICAL CENTER

They stared at each other from across the small recovery room in silence, still unsure if it was all really happening.

As was her nature, Anja Mahanlo-Leonidas had prepared meticulously for the moment when it would happen and they had been talking amongst themselves in the medical room when Reva’s sphere suddenly twitched once and then dropped to the floor heavily and lay still. Anja knew what was happening instantly and she directed everyone else as they sprang into action. Denali and Deion were on either side of the bed where Reva’s body rested peacefully and both of them were ready when her lungs took in a massive breath of pure, un-recycled air for the first time in nearly three and a half million years. Her upper body rose off the bed as it fought the sensations and Denali and Deion gently placed their hands over her abdomen and held her down on the bed as Anja and Eliani began to work their healing magic from either side of the bed.

They really did not have to do anything except monitor as Anja’s medical regime for the last two days had already been preparing Reva’s body to begin moving once more on its own. Small injections of natural steroids through her muscles and protein enzymes that flooded her bones and joints. The chamber had kept her internal organs in superb condition, just as they had been when she entered the chamber all those years ago, and Anja and Eliani simply used their healing power as an extra source of growth stimulation. Dynina and Gorgo stood on either side of the bed, each of them holding one of Reva’s hands tightly within their own while Jezima stood at the head of the bed and rested her hands on her temples. More than anything, they wanted her to feel the love of her family all around her. That is what mattered most of all.

And feel them Reva Mahanlo did.

Their scents filled her senses instantly as she took her first deep breath, so powerful and sweet. It was Mahanlo blood. The sweetest scent of all to her. Then their Etheric resonances reached for her in a way that Reva had never truly experienced. Her family, her blood had always been more powerful within the Etheric realm, but this was so much different. This swept her up in it and caused her to feel like she was flying on the clouds. She saw so much, felt so much that it caused her to gasp aloud in shock, her dual wolf fangs springing forth from her gums and her dark eyes changing to the wolf within her as she felt it. The dedication to her. The boundless love. It was the most natural thing in the world to them. The sense of devotion to family that Daniho, Ashten and Kelia had begun and cultivated all the years ago, and it reigned supreme within all of them. Added to that was the Pralor sense of family and devotion and Reva could not help but feel humbled at the emotions that flooded through her without any doubt or hesitation.

It moved quickly because of the preparations that Anja had taken and soon Reva was sitting up in the bed as her bloodline flooded the small room to see her. To feel her touch upon them and smell her scent. Reva Mahanlo was the beginning of their bloodline. She was where it had all begun and even Gorgo and Dynina were truly honored to be in her presence, though in the months to come, Gorgo, Dynina, Dasha and Jezima would learn just how much Reva Mahanlo regarded them as her fellow Matriarchs of their family. There were tears aplenty to be sure, especially when Reva held Calyb, Retta, Zarah and Nara in her arms and felt the joy of new found love and devotion within them. Reva Mahanlo's bloodline was growing right in front of her eyes and this is what fought back the horror of what had taken place through the years and the losses she had to suffer as she watched so many of her bloodline die.

This is what held the pain in check.

The pain she felt within him and his oldest son. It was clear to her now, perhaps not to those that loved them, not just yet, but to her, to the Blood Matriarch of the Mahanlo bloodline, it was so very clear.

The room became silent when he entered with Androcles, Dorian and Laren. All of them could sense the difference in their father, their brothers and soul sister Laren. It was a palpable thing to them and all of them wondered what had taken place on that mountaintop Temple.

The Mountain of Stone and Light.

Their eyes locked from across the room and the tears began before Reva had time to blink. Before her stood the physical incarnations of her precious sons Daniho and Ashten. To her wolf eyes Martin was a twin to them both in every way. He had the same set to his jaw, the same skin coloring, the same angle to his eyes. His forehead and cheekbones were all Sumar she knew, strong and proud Pralor features, but he carried all of them within him. Reva did not have time to reach out her arms to him for Martin covered the ten steps to her bed in two blinks of the eye and then he was kneeling beside her bed, burying his face in her lap and weeping. Reva Mahanlo lost it herself then, lifting her head skyward as her arms wrapped around his broad shoulders and baring her dual fangs once more, she let loose with a howl of happiness that shook the entire building and was heard by every wolf for nearly five kilometers in every direction.

It only grew in intensity as her family, her blood, closed in around her and joined her howl in a chorus of rebirth and happiness. It was something that the Lycavorian wolves on Jetania would speak of for many millennia to come. For generations to come, to small children across the planet, it would be told how the Royal bloodline of the Lycavorian people once more reunited on Jetania after millennia apart. It would be spoken of as a momentous day. A day of hope and rebirth to all of their people and those on Jetania would hold that close to their hearts.

Martin sat on the edge of the bed, Reva's hand within both of his, as it had been for the last hour and a half. He was unwilling to release her hand and Reva was unwilling to let his go either, for fear that all of this would be some sort of cruel dream. As more time passed she came to realize that it wasn't. It was a blessing of the highest nature.

The past, the present and the future of Mahanlo blood existed in this room right now. Her family. Her bloodline. All around her.

All of them were crammed into the much larger private room now. Anja had Reva moved to a larger room within the hospital, the Mountain Pack Staff so very happy to accommodate this knowing who was among them, and now Reva Mahanlo was very nearly overwhelmed with the scents of her bloodline that were crowded into the room. Martin and Androcles had spent the last hour and a half telling their family everything that they had discovered in the last days thanks to Chiron's help. Reva had not believed it at first, her eyes awash with tears of sorrow as she clutched Dynina, Jezima and Gorgo, but she smelled the truth coming from her grandsons and she could feel it within her heart now.

Her beloved daughter Kelia was alive yes, but so many of her blood now lived with her precious sons in The Beyond simply because of their bloodline.

This was not something Reva Mahanlo had ever envisioned, being among those she had watched from afar for so long. Simply being able to touch them and smell them. It was so much like her sons to make these plans for her and not tell her. Reva realized that Daniho and Ashten had always known what they were going to do when it came to their mother; when it was time for Martin to take his rightful place among their people. They had always planned for this to take place. To return their beloved mother to her body in order that she could shepherd and guide the future of their bloodline. Chiron had planned equally as well and kept this information from her, always faithfully following the last orders given to him by Daniho.

All of Martin's six Queens stood together now, and Reva was simply awed by their physical beauty as well as the devotion and unabashed love she could smell in all of them for her grandson. It was no different than Androcles' two wives who were with him at the moment, though Reva could feel the love within the Etheric realm from Sadi and the others not here. The exquisitely beautiful vampire female Carisia and the exotic Drow female Lu'ria were able to channel their fellow Princesses. Deion, Mari and Emylea; Denali, Lisisa and Arduri; Eliani, Brendi and Jomann; Calyb, Anoria and Taris; Zarah, Lucia and Dutkne; Retta and Lazar. As with her bloodline that was not present here now, they all loved without question or doubt. She could smell the devoutness to each other and to their family. Even those like Lazar and his mother Loras; Doseb and Irani; Mari and Arduri; and those who had married into the Mahanlo-Leonidas family and had been turned, even their loyalty was absolute, as was their love. It made Reva's heart sing in utter happiness knowing this and she knew without doubt that she would be complete once she was able to hold her daughter in her arms once more.

This was something that she never questioned would happen for she could feel it within Martin and Androcles. They would stop at nothing to retrieve Kelia and all those who bore the blood of their family within them. They would be methodic in their actions, completely without mercy or remorse she knew, but they also would not do anything to risk harm to any of their bloodline.

"Beloved we... we must do something." Aricia finally broke the silence in the room, all of them turning to look at their mother. "This... this cannot be left... it cannot go..."

"Unpunished!" Anja hissed softly now as she stood beside Aricia, her jade green eyes alive with anger. Isabella stood on Aricia's other side with For'mya beside her and Dysea and Cirith standing to Anja's left.

Martin turned his head and looked at the six women who held his heart and soul in their hands. He could see the set of their jaws, the determination in their eyes, and the way they stood proudly pressed against one another in complete unity. Even his beautiful For'mya, perhaps the calmest and most level headed of his Queens, even she had simmering anger in her beautiful deep brown eyes. Even she wanted justice. Reva stayed silent listening and felt the pride swell within her as all of them began to speak their minds after their mothers.

"They have... they have taken the lives of our blood! Even those who were innocent of anything! Simply because our blood flowed in their veins!" Denali rasped angrily as Lisisa and Arduri clung to either side of his body and nodded their heads in agreement. "They were killed for power! For control! Father... we cannot let that stand!"

"We did not know how many..." Doseb began to speak now as all eyes turned to him and saw that his own dark eyes were moist. "...How many had been killed when we left. Kesas Pengot never revealed this to us."

"He did that for a reason." Martin spoke looking at him. "He needed you two focused on one thing. Your survival."

"How many Martin?" Irani asked softly.

Martin shook his head slowly. "I don't know exact numbers Irani... and I did not ask Kesas that question when Andro and I spoke to him and Lylor."

"It is bad though, isn't it father?" Deion asked him.

Martin nodded his head slowly now as he looked at his pureblood son. "Probably, yes Keto. Probably much worse than any of us can imagine." He answered. "The numbers Chiron has shown us tell us that, but we don't know exactly."

"They were... they are our blood alvva!" Nara snarled angrily now. She was standing beside Jacina, both of them leaning almost casually against Laon's taller form, but leaving no doubt as to who had claimed them both so completely. Laon Kavar's scent spoke of total and utter worship for both of them and that was all Nara's family needed to see and smell to know where Laon stood in status within their family. "They must be avenged!"

"Jainn. Pen areto!" Deion instantly agreed with his twin. (Yes. I agree.)

"Sy alad pen." Eliani was next to speak. (So do I)

"Una coi atle coi niob isquer." Jomann agreed standing just behind Eliani. (It is what is now required.)

“I know that... I do not know as much as everyone here...” Lazar spoke now, stepping slightly ahead of Retta but still holding her hand tightly as she looked on proudly at him. “This is... it is all new to me...”

“You have the blood of our family swirling within you Lazar. The blood of our beginning and our future.” Aricia spoke again. “As do your mother and your siblings. That makes all of you equal in this.”

“Avoi.” Gorgo spoke softly from where she sat at the head of the bed beside Reva with Dynina and Jezima around her.

“I am still learning.” Lazar continued. “But I feel it within me now, the power of the blood that flows within me.”

Loras stepped up to her son and took his hand as well as Retta’s. “As do I.” She said with confidence. “I feel... I feel the rage and vengeance within me. This thing that has taken place... it cannot be left unanswered.”

Lazar shook his head. “No.” He agreed.

Doseb and Irani stepped close to their daughter and grandson. “We agree.” Doseb spoke as Irani nodded her head.

“Alvva... you know we speak the truth.” Normya spoke now looking at her father. “This is how you and our mothers raised all of us to be. Blood before all else father.”

“Yes, we did.” Martin said softly.

“Normya is correct. We all feel it within us father, for we all have your blood within us. Mahanlo-Leonidas blood. Staania Reva has been... by a blessed gift from the gods and our ancestors themselves, she has been given back to us. The connection that all of us have felt to our history father; to the very origins of the bloodline we all carry within us. She is here among us now!” Zarah spoke after her Normya causing Martin to turn his head once more and look at Zarah with love in his eyes. “What has been done... no matter how terrible it may turn out to be... it is our duty as a family to see that justice is done.”

Martin looked at Reva quickly, saw the support in her eyes and then turned back to his daughter. “Not everyone we face or come in contact with will have had a role in what has taken place fenneennum.” He said softly. “You know this.”

Zarah nodded her head. “Yes, I know alvva.” She replied. “We...”

“Zarah is right no matter how it is calculated father!” Deion spoke again, more forcefully now. “They think... they think that they have ended our bloodline. They hold our tenna Kelia prisoner father! A tool to use against our own people! To keep them oppressed! I say it is time to show them that our bloodline is not dead! It is time to save our tenna and show them that our bloodline flourishes, and we do not accept the deaths of so many of our family so casually at their hands! We do not accept it and we will have our justice!”

Nara stepped up beside her twin and took his hand. “Avoi.” She spoke firmly.

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas looked at each of his children and those they called beloved mate as they all stepped forward in support and complete agreement with Deion’s words. Even Taris and Anoria, the newest members of their family, stood on either side of Calyb proudly and without doubt in their beautiful faces. Martin turned to look at his mother now, seeing the set of her jaw and that of Dynina and Jezima and even Dasha who stood beside Jezima. His mother’s jaw was set in stone, this he knew and he also knew nothing would change his mother’s mind now that it was made up. He turned his head once more to look at his queens and in their eyes, he saw the fiercest look of passion that he had ever seen before and total commitment to him and to their family.

Their bloodline.

“If we do this...” Androcles’ voice echoed softly in the room now, causing everyone to turn and look at him. His voice, like their father’s, was the only voice that could move their entire family to action or inaction.

Androcles had dropped to one knee between Carisia and Lu’ria, their hands going to rest lovingly on his shoulders, but channeling the love of Sadi, Ne’Veha, Caliria and Sehri within them as well. “If we do this... if we all agree on this course of action... we do this as a family. We do this as a bloodline. We target only those men and women who are... who took part in these heinous deeds and those who we know would have supported them. We do not target those who are innocent or those who know nothing of what has been done. We must be certain in our actions, for these are our people as well. There has not been a sworn Saan Tinate among our people since the false one Chetak swore against our grandfather, nearly twenty thousand years ago. We all know how that ended.”

Reva shook her head from the bed. “That was not the first Androcles.” She spoke. “The first true Saan Tinate was sworn against Daniho and Ashten. It never really ended until your father brought it to a close. I don’t believe those with Kelia and the Kesas have any idea what a Saan Tinate is.”

“Then it is up to us to educate them.” Androcles spoke firmly and Reva saw his brothers and sisters nod their collective heads in agreement. “If we do this, and I believe deeply that we must; my blood calls for it, even the Dahakoan blood within me.” (Blood Oath)

Laren stepped forward now beside Dorian, Sheva and Onera, all of them holding hands as they reached for Androcles, Carisia and Lu’ria. “As does ours.” Laren spoke.

Androcles looked around at his family. “If we do this, then we make it known who we hold responsible and why. We rescue our Tenna Kelia first, and any who these people hold against their will. That must be our priority. If we do this... then we must show no mercy, no remorse and no quarter and we make certain justice is done. And when it is finished, we leave it behind us and move forward into the future, for we have much larger concerns in the days to come ahead.”

“Mard astia.” Martin said softly with a nod. He looked around the room slowly, touching everyone’s eyes for a few seconds. “Then this is what we have decided as a family?” He asked them. “We must all be certain and all of us must agree. Your mothers and I will speak with your siblings on Manne. We will speak with Deia, and your aunts Tarifa and Aihola. We will make contact with Resumar and Arrarn in the next few hours, but all of us must agree. This is a decision that all of those we regard as family must have a say in; everyone who now bears the mark of our family. It will affect them as well.” Martin touched everyone’s eyes in the room, and not one set of eyes held doubt or hesitation in them on their course of action. Martin turned to look at Reva last. Her dark eyes were equally as bright as everyone’s and he knew where he got the color of his eyes from. Reva was still holding his hand and she lifted it within her grasp and placed her other hand around his where she squeezed tightly.

“Promise me one thing. All of you.” She stammered looking around the room.

Martin nodded his head. “Name it Staania.”

“When it... when it is done Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas...” Reva spoke softly looking back to him. “... When it is done, you do what your ancestors intended for you to do. You bring our people together and make us whole once again. You make it so that nothing will ever tear us apart again.”

Martin stared at her for a long moment and then nodded his head. “That is a promise I intend to keep to you. And to them.”

Reva nodded as tears slowly rolled down her cheeks. “Then let it begin.” She spoke firmly. “The Time of Reckoning is upon us my family. My blood. Let it begin.”

Martin rose to his feet and look around the room once more slowly. “I doubt Deia or your siblings will disagree, or your aunts, but we will ask them anyway.” He spoke softly. “Prepare yourselves family. The Saan Tinate has been declared. The Mahanlo-Leonidas family is going to war. Again.”

JETANIA

“... Let me do this father.” Androcles told his father as he watched him walk around the large table on SPARTA’S WRATH. The Port Briefing room closest to Andro’s quarters was now locked down due to so many of the Royal Family either in the room or close by. His father and mothers would return to MJOLNIR’S HAND when the ship finally caught up to them, it was his father’s Flagship after all, and the only ship in the vast fleet where their quarters were built for all seven of them to be together comfortably. Andro’s team had already returned to the ship in order to prepare for the trip. Andro had not spoken to Kalis just yet, but he walked with a new purpose and step in his gait that exuded love for his family and Serale. Sehri had gotten to see her parents and brother Kelelm once more which was always pleasing to her.

Denali Mahanlo-Leonidas, while still a member of Andro’s Team, now commanded the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser ARCH DEMON and that would not change going into the future. The massive warship and its many crew had come to accept Denali’s command and his relationship with the Captain of the ARCH DEMON was a perfect match. They were very much alike in their mannerisms and this was well documented over the past months, especially during the Vanari conflict, where the older and younger man worked together like a finely tuned and well-oiled machine. Through the years to come, like his older brother Androcles, his father and Uncle Danny, Denali Leonidas' command, and his brother Resumar's command would become two very sought after postings by all members of the Union Fleet.

Deion, Mari and Emylea now called SPARTA'S WRATH their home, as did Nara, Jacina and Laon. This would not change for the foreseeable future for both of them knew they needed much training and skill that only being with their brother and Elynth could provide. Mari and Emylea had already started to become a fixture on the ship as Prince Deion's wives and mates and they were very popular. Jacina and Nara would help Laon adjust, but this is what he wanted more than anything. To see and learn and use the technology on this ship was a dream come true for him. Laon would not push his will upon either Nara or Jacina, they were both too head strong and independent for that to succeed, but Laon didn't want too. His father was not pleased at the turn of events, but his mother understood and loved her oldest son more for his actions. Laon's father would come around in time as Nara and Jacina began to honor Laon's family as only they could.

Dorian and Laren were the other two Tarivuos to their father and they would not stray very far from Androcles no matter what, and neither would Ryner and Ladur. SPARTA'S WRATH was now their home as well, which pleased Sheva and Onera to no end. Laren's parents had already begun to settle in on the ship, as had Aviel and his wife Nahko. Dalis was working closely with General Dytin and others to set up a working relationship with the Union fleet and its ground forces for the Darastrixi Sand Striders that occupied the ships above Jetania. In the month's ahead many of them would come to call Jetania their new home going into the future, and would find trusted and loyal friends and allies in the Lycavorian people under Osrod Aspion's guidance.

Martin looked at his oldest son. "Why?" Martin demanded. "This is not something that could happen without me saying so. Everyone will know that. You've been the bad guy enough times covering for my sorry ass!"

"Which is why Androcles should take the lead." Reva spoke from the chair she sat in.

Her recovery was moving very fast thanks to the incredible physical regime Anja and Aricia had devised for her and Anja's tremendous healing skill. The Queen smallest in physical stature Anja may have been Reva thought to herself many times in recent hours, but without question she had the drive and purpose of a full blooded Lycavorian and did not take sibfla from anyone. Reva began to understand why Aricia, Dysea and For'mya and her other fellow Queens loved her intensely and without question. Aricia and Gorgo sat on either side of Reva at the table, Jezima and Dynina sitting to Gorgo's left. Ever since they had been on the planet below, it was as if the five women had become inseparable, the only one not with them right now being Dasha since she had other duties that she was attending too. "You... you are the Mard Revik Martin. That fact will not be open for debate when others see or smell you in any way, shape or form. When they smell our blood Martin, they will know that things have finally changed. Hopefully, they will think for the better."

"Medwan Reva is very correct my King." Lylor spoke from within the highly secure QCR transmission. Along with him were Kesas, Aryera, Caylt and Rothan. They could not risk everyone being present for every transmission since it would draw attention to them and allow the Arhtai Pack spies to begin to suspect something. "They will know who you are the moment they smell your blood. They will know who your son Androcles in the same manner. He is also one of the three Tarivuos spoken of in the Onab prophecies. They will know that the Tarivuos and any who serve you operate with your will."

Reva barely held in her gasp of love and delight at Lylor's words. He had begun calling her mother on Cerath many millennia ago in order to honor her and it appeared even after all of this time, he had not changed in the least. Reva also knew that Lylor loved her daughter Kelia without doubt or question and that he would move the stars and planets themselves to get her back. It was her command to him to keep his anger in check and work with their bloodline that kept Lylor Kirek from running off and trying to free Kelia on his own. Something which over half of the Kirek Pack would have gone with him to do.

Martin shook his head. "Tenne, they don't serve me!" Martin protested.

Lylor shook his head. "You may think like that Martin... but our people will not." He answered. "You still do not grasp the love and devotion our people had for your ancestors. For Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. For my beloved Kelia. They would have thrown themselves into a super nova in order to protect them if that is what it took. That devotion will have automatically transferred to their descendants. To you. To Androcles. To all of you.”

“I don’t want that!” Martin snapped.

“Yet that is what you have Martin.” Kesas answered now. “By virtue of the blood you have flowing within your veins. As will all of your children, your wives and mates, your siblings or those you call sibling. It will not matter to our people. Do you wish to tell us that is not the way it is among those of your Union?”

“Yes.” Gorgo spoke softly.

“Mother!” Martin complained.

Gorgo looked at him. “You can not deny it keto!” Gorgo hissed. “No matter how much you wish it wasn’t so.”

“You and others don’t have to encourage it!” Martin protested. “I have told you that before!”

“That is something we can deal with at a later time.” Dynina spoke now. “Let us focus on what is important right now.”

Reva smiled and reached for her hand. “The voice of calm and reason.” She said.

Dynina shook her head with a smirk. “Not really...” She answered. “I just do not want my family caged for one moment longer than necessary.”

Reva smiled and nodded her head. “Avoi.” She spoke.

Martin turned and looked at Kesas in the transmission. “You are certain they cannot detect this transmission Kesas?”

Kesas nodded his head. “It is based on Pralor technology my King. Only Lord Daniho, Lord Ashten and myself knew of its existence. Even if they could detect the localized power streams, they would have no idea what it is.”

Marti nodded his head. “Good. We’ll use this from now on then. And we’ll bring portable gear for your ships and personnel when we arrive in two days.”

“We only have short range transports my King.” Kesas spoke quickly. “Better than what the Arhtai Pack could field yes, but unarmed and very closely monitored by their military.”

Andro leaned forward at the table now. “What of their military Lord Kesas? What more can you tell us?” He asked.

Kesas shook his head quickly. “I am no Lord Prince Androcles. I...”

“You and everyone there who has held our people together and fought against the Arhtai Pack and its hold on power are Lords.” Martin hissed. “Do not diminish what any of you have done in all this time. Lord does not mean much as a title within the Union, it is more a meaning of respect and honor for you, and do not ask us to not use it.”

Reva smiled inwardly at Martin’s comment and could only nod to herself in a sort of perverse pride. That was exactly the reason why men and women would follow her sons to the Letha rie Jorbhe and back and now that same mentality permeated their descendants and their children to the extreme.

Kesas bowed his head slowly in response and looked at Androcles. “Apart from what Lylor and I have already spoken to you and your father about, not much I’m afraid Androcles. They would not give up the Onab technology that was part of the agreement when we arrived on Koltar Four. This was a major part that led to the Arhtai pushing for power. What they do have however is very old and barely kept in working order.”

“By who?” Martin asked.

Kesas shrugged. “We never knew. The Onab did train some of our people to maintain their technology before we left Cerath, but aside from those few, I can only assume that is why their technology is degraded to such a level.” He answered. “I know Ranol’s oldest daughter is a wizard with the Onab technology that remains, but she refuses to teach any of the Arhtai Pack these skills and they cannot force her without causing serious issues. Many must have learned just by trail and error through the years I assume, there is no other way to explain how they have been able to maintain it to the standards they have, but I refuse to believe Ranol or any of his people would help the Arhtai Pack after what they have done.”

“They have, however, developed their own technology based on what they have been able to learn from the Onab Technology...” Aryera spoke now. “But nothing even remotely as advanced as what we arrived on when we came here.”

Rothan shook his head in agreement. “Aryera is correct. The ships they do have are more advanced than anything we have, but they are smaller than what the Onab built and they are few in number. Our ships and pilots are better trained without a doubt, even with their technological disadvantage. That is why I say we are better.”

“How few?” Martin asked.

Rothan shrugged his shoulders. “A few dozen.” He answered. “Just enough to patrol the system and keep us in check.”

“And they knew the risk of patrolling the system with Onab technology?” Martin asked nodding his head in appreciation of Rothan’s knowledge and confidence. “Even after what they knew had happened in the past and why my grandfathers did what they did?”

Rothan nodded his head. “Yes, my King.”

“So no matter the odds of it happening, that the Iais’Kai could possibly find them, they were more concerned with their power grab than they were in keeping our people safe.” Martin muttered to no one in particular.

Rothan nodded his head once more. “Yes.”

Martin turned his head slightly to another holo transmission. This one held Miranda and Sa’sur in it. “Manda?” Martin asked. “Sa’sur? Talk to me.”

“Without actually being able to scan what their abilities are King Leonidas...” Sa’sur replied first. “I would recommend caution until we are in system and can make a full sensor sweep.”

“Manda?” Martin asked.

Miranda nodded. “I recommend the same.” She answered, not surprising Martin in the least. Miranda Lawson was known as reckless and brash, but she was not stupid by any means, and ever since Sa’sur had arrived out here with them the two women had not disagreed on anything. “And since we will be working down the advantage until the SCIMITAR and other ships arrive a day later, I suggest a recon and wait approach.”

“Concur.” Sa’sur echoed her words.

“They have my Kelia and others!” Lylor hissed softly.

Manda nodded her head. “Yes, sir, they do.” She answered him. “But they’ve had her and those same others for more years than most of us coming there have been alive and another few days will not make a difference. At least until we get there and we can properly beat their asses into the ground for what they have done.”

Lylor blinked several times in surprise at her response. He looked at Martin once more. “This is how all of your commanders think and speak?” He asked.

Martin grinned. “Pretty much.”

Lylor nodded his head in anticipation. “Then I will wait patiently.” He said not seeing Reva smile in happiness.

“Armen and Alpha Nine inform me that the alterations to the PREMONITION will be complete in ten hours.” Androcles spoke. “They are moving faster than expected. Let me take her and my team ahead of you father. We can do much in the twelve hours before you arrive.”

Kesas sat forward. “If you do this my King, we will have to deal with those Arhtai Pack spies here on Pakar Six the moment you arrive.”

Martin looked at him. “You said there are five of them?” He asked.

“Six, sire.” Kesas answered. “But only five maintain their ties to the Arhtai Pack. The sixth is husband and mate to one of Rothan’s daughters and he is fully on our side now. They have thirteen children together. The Arhtai Pack does not know this, but he came to Rothan before we ever discovered him.”

Martin nodded his head. “That says a lot.” He said.

“He is a fine young Alpha my King.” Rothan spoke. “And I will support him fully.”

“And your daughter?” Martin asked him.

Rothan took a deep breath. “If he has managed to fool her and all of us these years then she will kill him herself. As will his children.”

Martin nodded his head. “Very well.” Martin looked at Andro. “Take the others out of circulation son.” He told him. “But don’t kill them unless they do something stupid.”

Andro nodded his head. “Done.”

“I want a proper military scan of the planet.” Martin told him. “Hardened facilities, bases, garrisons, the whole enchilada son.”

Andro nodded his head. “Of course.” He spoke.

“Put them together with whatever Kesas and Tenne Lylor have, and anything the Nenay Pack can provide.” Martin said as he began to pace. “Kesas... you contact this Ranol. Can he and his senior people get to Pakar Six without being detected?”

Kesas nodded his head slowly. “We have established an underground network so to speak.” He answered. “Getting them here will not be a problem. Getting them back without being detected by the Arhtai will be the trick.”

Martin shook his head. “No, it won’t.” He answered. “By the time the Arhtai Pack and their leaders figure out what is going on I’m going to be so far up their shit they won’t know whether to scratch it or scream in pain. The Nenay Pack will be able to walk right by them and they won’t even know it.”

Andro and the others at the table and Sa'sur and Miranda burst out in small laughter while Kesas, Lylor and the others on Pakar Six looked on bewildered.

“KISS baby!” Danny spoke for the first time, occupying the chair two down from Aricia.

Miranda nodded her head from the ARIZONA. “Keep It Simple Stupid.” She spoke with a large smile.

“What... what does this phrase mean Mandri?” Lylor asked from Pakar Six. “This... this Keep It Simple Stupid.”

“Sa'sur?” Martin spoke looking at her in the transmission.

Sa'sur shook her head with a smile and looked at Lylor Kirek in the transmission. “What it means Lord Lylor Kirek is that we are going to run so many circles around the Arhtai Pack and cause so much aggravation for them, that they won’t know whether to shit or get off the pot.”

Martin was grinning as he looked at Lylor and Kesas with Rothan. “Essentially we are going to drive them nubous malda and make it so they can’t do squat without knowing if it is the right thing to do. Which it won’t be.”

The smile on Lylor’s face grew wider first and then Rothan and Kesas began to grin and then finally Aryera as they all began to understand what Martin was saying.

SPARTA'S WRATH JETANIA

“...Don’t tell them what we have planned son.” Martin told him as he stood by the large chart table in the room. Aricia had stayed with Martin and Isabella had joined them once the transmission was over. The QCR transmission had completed almost an hour ago, but Danny had stayed with Martin in the briefing room along with Chiron, Avi and Armen. Miranda and Sa'sur’s transmissions were also still active from the ARIZONA and the SCIMITAR. When the others had left, Elynth and Torma had come into the massive room via another entrance with Jomann, Sadi and Carisia. “If they have these spies openly among the Kirek Pack and these so-called blood detectors then you can damn well bet that they have others hidden among the populace that are not what they seem. It’s them we need to find.”

Androcles nodded his head. “Agreed.”

“No bet here.” Danny chimed in,

Chiron looked up at Martin confused while Avi and Armen remained silent. They knew how Martin and those with him thought, while Chiron was still learning.

“You do not believe Kesas Pengot and Lylor Kirek?” He asked.

Martin shook his head quickly. “I believe everything they are saying.” Martin answered him. “I just don’t think they know everything. If you are going to control an enemy, or force them to do what you want them to do in this case, you will release small tidbits of information that will make its way back to this enemy. You use that information to control what they will do.”

Chiron looked at Martin intently. “The spies that they think they know about are not the ones we need to be concerned with?” He asked.

Martin shook his head. “There are other fucking spies among the Kirek Pack. I’d bet my ridiculous Union salary on it.”

Isabella chuckled at this and bumped her hip against his while the others laughed softly. “You don’t receive a salary husband.” She said.

Martin grinned. “Yeah... but they don’t know that, and I’ve always wanted to say that.”

Aricia couldn’t contain her sharp gasp of laughter and Isabella took her hands as they laughed and Martin stood there smiling.

Chiron was looking at the large board. “How do we... how do we draw them out then? Make them expose themselves?”

“That’s easy actually.” Danny said in reply. “Take out these blood detectors first thing when you get on the surface mandri.” Danny spoke pointing to the points on the map where Kesas had told them he was sure the detectors were active. “Once you have taken them out, kill or incapacitate those that we know about and it will send the others into a panic. Snag them as they try to save their own asses, which they will most definitely do.”

“Those are the ones we keep alive.” Martin continued with a nod of his head at Danny’s words. “They’ll provide the best intelligence.”

“And if they have families?” Chiron asked.

Andro shook his head. “They won’t.” He replied. “A family would be a distraction that they would not make. If they have been there as long as we believe, then you can damn well bet they are single and have devised a way to evacuate the planet quickly in order to get whatever information that they have back to their bosses.”

Chiron blinked several times as he processed this information and then he nodded his head. “Interesting.” He said.

“Kesas has assured me that they will not be able to detect our Shroud Drives, but to be on the safe side, we’ll be moving fast and quick.” Martin spoke further. “Torma?”

Torma moved his massive head closer to the table between Martin and Danny’s shoulders while Elynth did the same between Androcles and Sadi. “Elynth, Anthar, Majeir, Jeth, Tharua, Marux, Ryner, Ladur and Aradace will exit the PREMONITION in a star burst formation and move at their top speeds on their plots.” He spoke. “It will still be dark and they will be high enough to avoid any sightings from the ground and low enough to avoid any possible ship sightings.”

“One point six hours Elynth.” Martin spoke as he traced the board in front of all of them. “All of you need to be back in one point six hours no questions. The portable sensor arrays you will be carrying will detect everything out to a hundred kilometers from your location. Do not veer from your plots. The plots we have you on will cover the entire area around their main city and four hundred clicks in every direction, which is where Kesas is certain they are keeping Tenna Kelia. One point six hours or we lose the darkness and they could spot you from the ground visually.”

Elynth nodded her head. “We understand.” She spoke now. “No one is going to be a hero King Martin. At least not yet.”

Martin grinned and looked at Torma over his shoulder. “She’s certainly your daughter.” He said.

Torma snorted loudly. “As if your daughters are not like you!” He spat to his bonded brother.

“Why use Marux, Elynth?” Aricia asked now. “His... his bond with Sehri continues to grow but he is not the most experienced in this sort of operation.”

Elynth nodded her head. “Andro and I agreed that this mission is perfect for him Aricia.” She answered. “Marux is very fast, behind only Tharua and myself he is probably the fastest among us, and he will complete his cycle before the rest of us. As will Tharua. If any of us need assistance, Tharua and Marux can get to us far faster and still under cover of darkness. Jeth and Anthar will have the largest portable arrays attached to them because of their size and they have the longer plots to run because of their stamina. Trust me... Tharua and I do not like having our mates going right to the edge of the city, but it gives us comfort knowing that Marux and Tharua will be helping us to back them up. His bond with Sehri has made him powerful and singularly vicious in his protectiveness of her and the rest of us. We all know how Eliani will act if the need arises. We welcome that.”

Aricia nodded her head then. “Very well.” She spoke. “I will trust in those who know him.” She replied.

Chiron looked at Martin intently. “Androcles told Kesas and the others that the refit of the PREMONITION would be complete in ten hours.” He said. “That is not true, is it?”

Martin met his eyes and shook his head. “No. You should know by now that I don’t like to broadcast what I’m going to do Chiron.”

Chiron nodded. “Indeed.” He answered.

“The refits will be done in one hour.” Martin said. “The Worker Drones are far more skilled than we let anyone really know Chiron. No offense meant.”

“And none taken King Martin.” Chiron spoke.

Andro looked at Chiron. “My team has put together everything we will need Chiron.” He told him. “Mari and Brendi have set up a station for you to monitor us while we are airborne.”

Chiron blinked. “Me?”

Andro smiled broadly. “You are going with us Chiron.” He said.

Avi looked across the chart table at Chiron. “Armen and I are still learning the trivial things as everyone says Chiron. You are a First-Generation Avatar and you have been dealing with the unknown for far longer than Armen and I have existed. You can adapt much faster than we can and you have first hand knowledge of nearly everyone we will see. It’s only logical.”

“In the brief time that I have been among you and the others of your family and those you associate with, I have found that logical is not something that you adhere to on a regular basis. Why am I really going?” Chiron asked.

Martin smiled and looked at Andro. “I told you.” He said.

Andro shrugged. “It was worth a shot.” He said.

Martin turned back to Chiron and folded his arms across his chest. “Kesas and Lylor are keeping something from us.” Martin said. “They are not telling us something and it has to do with what is on that planet.”

“Koltar Four?” Chiron spoke.

Martin nodded his head. “Something is there. And they are doing their best to hide it from everyone, even us. That may be because of Tenna Kelia, or for some other very important reason, but whatever it is, there is something on that planet they don’t want us to find. At least not yet. I don’t like being in the dark.” Martin looked at Chiron with a smile. “That is why we told them ten hours to complete the refits.”

“You intend to find out what it is before going to Pakar Six.” Chiron said.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes. The PREMONITION is going to pass Pakar Six and we are going to use our teleporter to transfer Kesas and Lylor to Andro’s ship as they pass it, and probably anyone else who is close to them at the time as well.”

“I was not aware the PREMONITION was equipped with a Teleporter.” Chiron said. “Very interesting.”

“A small eight-person pad.” Andro replied.

“If Kesas and Lylor are indeed not telling you something, then they will be forced to reveal this information sooner than they wanted too if they are on your ship while you are scanning the planet.” Chiron nodded. “An excellent plan.” He said. “What do you wish me to do?”

“You are not going to question that?” Androcles asked him. “Lylor Kirek is... he is our Tenne. Our blood.”

“You forget Androcles, since the day Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten asked me to remain with their mother, my entire purpose has been the preservation of the Mahanlo bloodline. Lady Reva’s bloodline. Your bloodline.” Chiron spoke evenly. “Now that has become the Mahanlo-Leonidas bloodline. That is my part of my core programming King Martin. It always has been. It always shall be. This is what you would consider my sacred vow to Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten if you will. Lord Lylor may be husband and mate to Kelia Mahanlo, but if he is a threat to her or to your family, if Kesas Pengot is a threat, then I will not hesitate to remove that threat no matter who or what it is.”

“But you are sentient Chiron.” Andro said. “Just as Armen and Avi are. You have grown into this just by virtue of evolving events. It has happened to Alpha Nine and others among the Worker Drones. You can make your own choices now.”

Chiron nodded his head. “And I choose to abide by the programming that was initially entered into my core matrix. I choose this. Just as Armen and Avi have chosen this. Just as Alpha Nine and others within the Worker Drone Corp have chosen. The Onab people knew this would one day take place Androcles. They welcomed it.”

“As do we all.” Isabella spoke softly. “As do we all.”

Chiron rose to his feet. “I will find Lady Mari and Lady Brendi and we can devise a course of action together. I must admit they are downright brilliant when it comes to running variable rotating algorithms.”

Martin nodded his head. “Thank you, Chiron.”

Chiron shook his head. “It is I who should thank you King Martin.” He spoke. “You are the direct descendant of the two men who nurtured and embraced this way of thinking and it allowed me to evolve. You have continued this and so many others have evolved as well. No... thank you King Martin. Thank you.”

Chiron turned and moved quickly to the door and exited the room. It was silent in the room for a long moment before Martin looked at his son. “Sometimes he just flat out creeps me out.” Martin said.

Andro chuckled and nodded his head. “I was going to say the same thing.” He said.

Martin shook his head quickly and then looked at the chart board. “Let’s go over this one more time.” He said.

“...You don’t believe it is something bad do you son?” Martin asked as he and Androcles walked the massive hanger deck of SPARTA’S WRATH side by side. Torma walked on Martin’s opposite side while Elynth walked alongside Andro’s opposite side. They avoided the APOC Drones that were parked along the side, many of them being worked on by both engineers and the Spider like Worker Drones. Many of the crew had seen Androcles do this with his father on the SCIMITAR and at other places and they paid them no mind, going about their business.

Andro shook his head slowly. “Dorian, Laren and I agree.” He said, his hands behind his back as they walked. They were headed to where the PREMONITION was parked, walking at their own pace, which was to say they were hashing out last minute details that only they would know. “It’s important to be sure, but we can only sense the desire to protect whatever it is.”

“And it’s just Kesas and Lylor?” Martin asked.

Andro nodded his head this time. “There are others on the peripheral that we can sense, but Kesas and Tenne Lylor and the focus.”

“They know something that they are not sharing with the others. Or only sharing bits of it.” Martin said. “And for them to keep it from us it must be very important. And if they want to protect it then it can’t be dangerous.”

“I don’t think it has to do with Tenna Kelia father.” Andro said looking at him.

“Then what?” Martin asked. “Our people?”

Andro shook his head. “Our Dahakoan senses do not allow us to be more specific than that I’m sorry, and we have tried. We don’t envy flying into a trap.”

“We wouldn’t know about it at all if not for this sense. Don’t apologize keto.” Martin told him. Martin looked at Elynth who had remained silent up until now. “Elynth?”

Elynth shook her huge head. “Andro is right King Martin.” She answered. “And the six of us have tried to focus more intently, but it just fades into blackness.”

“Then they are protecting it and don’t even know it.” Martin commented.

Elynth nodded her head this time. “That is what we believe as well.”

“Their surface thoughts give you nothing hianag?” Torma asked. (Daughter)

“Thric.” Elynth answered. (No)

“Astahii shilta los wer xoa?” Martin asked her. Martin and Androcles were the only two Bonded Riders who had any knowledge of the pure dragon language and both of them could speak it fluently because of their status as Talon Guardians. They were still trying to form the language into spoken words that others could learn but the complexity of the language made it slow going. (They can block the attempts?)

“Thric.” Andro answered. “Astahii canotak vucot astahii re tirir coi.” (They don’t know they are doing it.)

“Interesting.” Torma echoed now. “That would imply that someone gave them this ability without their knowledge.”

“Anyone want to take a bet?” Martin asked with a grin.

“Dadrien.” Elynth said softly.

“Now why doesn’t that surprise me in the least.” Martin commented as they walked.

Androcles stopped walking however, his azure colored eyes growing slightly wider. It was Elynth who noticed this and she stopped and turned to look at him. “Andro?” She asked causing Torma and his father to stop now as well and turn.

Andro looked at his father. “What if it does not have to do with our family or our people at all father?” He spoke.

Martin stepped closer to him, the hairs on the back of his neck rising. “What do you mean son?”

“Exactly what I am saying.” Andro continued as he focused his gaze on his father’s dark eyes. “Perhaps what they are unconsciously protecting has nothing to do with our family or our people.”

“That would imply something of equal or greater importance.” Martin said as he moved closer still to his son.

“It would also answer questions that none of us can answer.” Androcles said. “Like how they are able to keep the Onab technology they have working after it should have broken down so long ago according to Kesas Pengot.”

Martin’s eyes grew wider now as he realized what Androcles was saying. “That is... that’s a reach son.” Martin said finally. “Chiron says the Onab have been extinct since the supernova destroyed their planet fifty thousand years ago. None of them left Cerath.”

“That is what he says, yes, but that could be what he truly believes when it is not fact. Are they truly extinct father?” Andro asked. “Or is it something that everyone would want us to believe, expect us to believe with the information that we have, at least until they know they can trust us.”

“You think they do not trust us?” Torma asked now shifting his massive body around until the four of them had formed a tight circle.

“Wait father... I see where Androcles is going with this.” Elynth spoke now. “How do we know that Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten did not send Onab with their sister Lady Kelia? They were the ones going further away from Cerath. They would be safer with her.”

“Why wouldn’t Chiron tell us that?” Martin asked.

“Perhaps Chiron does not know father.” Andro replied. “Perhaps no one knows but Tenne Lylor, Kesas Pengot and Tenna Kelia. You and I both have shared things with Armen and Avi that no one else knows. And we have shared things with Torma and Elynth that Armen and Avi do not know. That no one knows but us. That would certainly explain why we sense what we do from them.”

“That would mean they are not doing it subconsciously though.” Martin said. “It would mean they are doing it purposefully.”

Torma nodded his massive head. “Agreed.” He spoke. “Which makes what we are going to do even more dangerous because they are not being forthright with us.” Torma’s voice sounded angry now.

Martin reached out and put his hand on Torma’s shoulder and shook his head. “We would do the same brother.” He said softly. “We would do the same.”

Torma looked at Martin and nodded his massive head slowly. “Yes, we would.”

“Wouldn’t the Onab, if they were alive, wouldn’t they help the Arhtai Pack?” Androcles asked. “Wouldn’t they help whoever was in charge?”

“No.” The female voice spoke from nearby causing all of them to whirl around.

They had been so caught up in what they were talking about that they did not notice that Reva had made her way across the hanger deck without anyone with her or detecting her true scent. Only those of her bloodline could have detected her true scent at this time because of the many chemicals used in the cryo freezing process. It would be several days before her true scent fully came back to the point that anyone could detect it. Martin’s eyes grew wide as he looked at her.

“Staanial!” He gasped. “What are you... where is your security detail?” He demanded.

Reva smiled as she moved closer to them, lifting her hand and running it along Torma’s smooth scales as she walked up alongside him. She did this without an iota of fear in her actions or her face until she stopped in front of Martin. Her gait was measured and careful, for she still had not regained the sense of walking and running fully, though she was loving the sensations of having to relearn it.

“I am nearly four million years old staaniaketo.” She told him with much affection in her voice. “I have learned to move around quite well without letting others know where I am. And I was losing the security that my sons put on me for far longer than you have known I existed.”

“Your sons did not have us Lady Reva.” The second unknown female voice spoke and even Reva turned her head surprised as the shadows shimmered and revealed the two figures. One was a pure vampire female from Isabella’s personal security detail that was well over five hundred years old, and the second was a male Drow elf who was first generation vampire and Drow elf. They were also husband and wife, one of a hundred and five husband and wife teams that did their Queen’s bidding.

Reva could not help but smile as she turned back to Martin. “Touché.” She said.

“My King?” The female vampire asked looking at Martin. “Queen Isabella said we were to stay hidden but follow Lady Reva and protect her wherever she goes.”

Martin nodded his head. “It’s ok.” Martin said.

“Perhaps then, you should tell them to secure a place on my grandson’s ship.” Reva told Martin. “I am going with him.”

“What?” Martin gasped. “No way! That ain’t happening! You...!”

“Are going!” Reva cut him off once more, her voice more forceful. “Your daughter Eliani will be with us, as will Serale and Caliria. Anja has been praising them ever since I regained my ability to walk, along with her friend Duewa and others. I will be in excellent company. My scent will not return to normal for a few more days according to Anja, so they will not know who I am if I keep my face covered.”

“Your scent will still be familiar to them staania.” Androcles spoke.

Reva nodded in agreement. “Perhaps... but we will discover what we need to discover before they figure it out.”

“Does that include Tenne Lylor?” Martin asked. “He has our blood within him.”

“I adored Lylor because his love for Kelia was unquestioned and without hesitation.” Reva told them warmly and with a great amount of pride. “He can also be very emotional at times as you saw in the transmission and Kelia was his anchor. He will suspect something but he will say nothing because he will not believe it could be possible. None of them will if they suspect. It will be enough time to do what we must.”

“What do you believe staania?” Andro asked as he stepped closer to her.

Reva smiled and shook her head slowly as she reached for his hand and took it along with Martin’s. “After these last few days and discovering all I have about my sons and what they were capable of, I believe they would have done anything in order to protect our people, the Onab and the Darastrixi. Even I would never have imagined the things they are apparently responsible for.”

Martin gave her a half grin. “Well... Sumar and Dadrien are innocent in that regard either.” He said.

Reva matched his smile and nodded. “True. Sending a contingent of Onab with Kelia and Lylor is exactly what they would have done if they thought it would preserve the Onab and their works. And they would have told no one but Kelia, Lylor and Kesas. It also explains why the Arhtai Pack cannot maintain the Onab technology better than they have.”

“What do you mean?” Martin asked her.

“The Onab were devoted to Daniho.” Reva told them. “To our family. We did not want it to be this way Martin and it did not start out this way, but this is how it was at the end.”

Martin looked at Androcles and shook his head. “We know that feeling well.” He said.

Reva nodded her head. “Yes... you do.” She agreed with him. “The Onab would have done anything that we asked of them. If Daniho and Ashten told them they wanted to send a contingent of their people with Kelia they would not have refused. To the Onab, our bloodline was supreme. Royalty. Almost... almost godlike. Given what we know the Arhtai Pack has done, the Onab would never willingly have assisted them.”

“Even under threat of death?” Martin asked.

Reva shook her head quickly. “No. Not for any reason.” She replied without hesitation. “I suspect that Yelma Arhtai somehow discovered that the Onab had come with them and she used them as a bargaining tool against Kelia and Lylor. The Onab would have only supported their technology if it was used for the good of our people. Which explains why the Arhtai Pack had to develop their own tech. The Onab would only service what the Arhtai Pack controlled if it was being used for our people and they would not create more.”

“Because not all of the Packs were benefiting from it?” Andro echoed.

Reva nodded her head. “Yes.” She looked at Martin. “Chiron and I are the only ones who know what Onab life signs look like Martin. You have to let me go. I would not be leaving the ship, and I could not be safer than with the three Tarivuos of the Mard Revik.”

Martin rolled his eyes as he looked at her. “Enough of that.” He hissed softly.

Reva stepped closer to him and took his hand in both of hers. “I refuse to allow you to smother me staaniaketo.” She said with much affection. “My sons and daughter learned this through the years and I do not wish to have to teach you this lesson as well.”

“You are... you are our history staania. Our past, our present and our future.” Martin spoke softly.

Reva nodded her head. “But I am not dead Martin.” She told him. “I am Matriarch of this family, of this bloodline, and I will not be coddled and protected and hidden away.”

Martin stared into her eyes for a long moment and he finally nodded his head. “You will have security staania.” He said. “No matter where you go. And you must promise me that you will not try to lose them to prove a point.”

Reva nodded her head. “I give you my word.”

Martin turned his head and looked at the vampire female and her husband. “Eilisf?”

“My King?”

“You and Tro’man secure a bed for our staania on Andro’s ship. She is going with him. As are you.” Martin said.

“Eilisf... tale Eliani’s quarters. It is large enough for all three of you and Eli will insist anyway.” Andro spoke.

The vampire female nodded her head. “As you wish.” She spoke.

Reva moved between her grandsons and slipped each of her arms around theirs as she started them walking towards the PREMONITION once more. “Now... both of you... Aricia and Anja have told me what the two of you develop in your sadistic minds on these little walks you take. Tell me what it is you are going to do and how can I help? I am done with others bringing harm to my family and my blood.”

JETANIA

DRINDA

“...Cannot tell you what to do.” Martin spoke to those sitting at the massive table in the Coalition Administration Building. “I can only tell you what I will do.”

The room was utterly massive, the table taking up only a small portion but allowing for at least forty men and women to occupy it. At the moment, the chairs around the table were filled with roughly eighteen men and women, none of them from the Union. These were men and women from Jetania, from the many different Packs across the planet, while there were at least a dozen Durcunusaan standing near where Martin stood beside Danny. Aricia, Anja, Anuk and Nayeca stood with their husband and mates.

“And if we go against you?” An older Plains Alpha spoke from his chair.

Martin shrugged his shoulders. “That is your right and your decision.” He answered. “If you choose to remain tethered to the past that you have known, then you will receive no help from me or the Union. Warim will be the one and only place where we will reside on Jetania. This is your planet and it must be your choices and decisions that guide you forward. We would love to help and guide you but ultimately it needs to be you. The Mountain Packs are tied to me and my family more tightly by no fault of your actions. It is just the way events have worked out.”

“And you will side with them?” Another Alpha asked.

“It isn’t a matter of siding with one or the other.” Martin spoke. “It’s a matter of what is best for everyone. For all of our people. Can you all agree on that?” There was silence for a long moment and then Martin saw the men and women nod their heads in agreement with his words. “Now, you build on that.”

“How?” Another asked.

Osrod Aspion stood up from his chair at the end of the table where most of them were bunched. “We rule together.” He spoke looking at Nitona and holding out his hand for her to take with an adoring smile. He looked back to the others. “We are all Lycavorian. We abolish the Plains and the Mountain Packs and we rule together based on what is best for all of us. We all have a say in what we decide. My father and grandfather were tempted and overcome with their desire for power. I was as well...” Osrod looked at Nitona once more. “Until I saw that there was a better way. I will step down immediately and we can hold...”

“No!” Garget barked as he came to his feet now.

Lasun rose to his feet from the chair beside Garget and nodded his head. “That is not the way.”

Osrod looked at them surprised. “But how?” He gasped. “The knowledge that the True King exists has already spread far and wide. Places of worship that have been shut down for centuries are being reopened and...”

“You are our leader Osrod!” Garget spoke firmly surprising the many Plains Pack Alphas in the room. “Martin has shown you things that he has not shown us. Now is not the time to just toss aside everything we know. You have already admitted to Lasun and myself that what your father and grandfather were doing was wrong... do you still hold to that?”

Osrod nodded his head. “Yes.” He stated instantly. “And I fell into the same trap at first Garget. You and Lasun know this.”

Garget nodded his head. “But you have done something that they were unable to do.” Garget said. “You have realized what you were doing was the wrong way to lead us and you are willing to change. Everyone here knows what Secha and the others have been doing to you for centuries. This does not completely forgive all of your sins, but now that you are free of her vile influence, your true self can come out. Lasun and I know it is different from your father and grandfather for we have seen it already, with your actions regarding Nitona.”

Osrod looked at him for a long moment and then glanced to Nitona who continued to stare at him with loving eyes. He finally turned and looked at Martin. “You will say nothing?” He asked.

“What do you want me to say Osrod?” Martin asked him. “I am not some all knowing supreme being. Man, that would suck for sure.” He muttered causing most of those in the room to laugh softly in genuine humor. “The work never ends. You’ll want to take Nitona and disappear many times believe me. I have felt that way.”

“You?” Osrod gasped.

Martin nodded his head. “You won’t... because the core of yourself wants our people to succeed and grow and prosper. That upae Secha may have messed with your mind but she could not take away who you are in your heart. That is what I saw. That is what Nitona sees. That is what our people will see if you show them.”

“And the future?” Osrod asked.

“The future can be whatever you want it to be.” Martin told him as his eyes touched everyone in the room. “We are Lycavorian. Our history... our true history is there in Warim for anyone to learn about. Nilantha, the Oracle will be overjoyed to teach it to anyone. All of you should know it.”

“And the technology you possess?” A Plains Alpha asked.

Martin nodded his head. “It will be yours one day. All of you. But as the leader of your Pack you must know what the influx of so much advanced technology will do to a society? All of you must know this.”

The man was silent for a moment but he nodded his head. “It will... it will corrupt from within.” He said.

“It must be presented slowly, blended into society as we grow.” Martin told them. “I will refuse no one medical care, no matter what.” Martin motioned to where Anja stood. “My Queen would never allow this. Everyone will be treated. Anja tells me that you are still dealing with conditions that we in the Union beat millennia ago. That changes now. No one will be denied care, ever.” Martin said. “And no one will be denied knowledge if they are willing to learn. So many things need to change, but together you can do it. And we will support you every step of the way if our people are the focus of your decisions. As leaders that is... that should be our only goal.”

“We must make amends with those we have wronged in the past as well.” Osrod spoke once more.

“Concentrate on our people first and the rest will come in time.” Martin said. “But know this...” He looked around the table once more. “Any attempt, by anyone, to grasp power for themselves, to control by force... this will not be allowed.” He told them. “Warim will be our location, our embassy. But make no mistake, anyone who steps outside the decisions made here today by all of you, they will face us. There will be those who think that they should possess technology and power over others. That they should rule because they are somehow better than others. They are not. You are the leaders of the largest Packs on the planet, Plains and Mountain Packs together. Bring the others in and explain to them. Build a council. Build a true coalition and nothing will be able to defeat you. We will stand with you and help you at every turn. Trade with the Union will flood Jetania with items that you have never seen and it can make you a very wealthy planet. And if your planet is wealthy, your people are wealthy and happy. And proud.”

Osrod looked at Martin as something came to his mind quickly. “I will lead this coalition for two years.” He stated as everyone turned to look at him now. “I will begin to repair what my ancestors and I had a part in hurting. After that two years, we will hold elections. There will be a King no longer. An elected leader will rule. A Prime Minister or President or whatever our people wish to call it.”

Garget nodded his head after looking at Lasun and seeing him nod. “We agree.” He said. “It can begin with all of us. We can lay aside past differences and work for the change we all desire. The Mountain Packs will abide by this arrangement as long as the individual elected has only one goal. The enrichment of our people. All of our people together.”

The first Plains Alpha who had spoken nodded his head in agreement. “Agreed!”

Martin watched as everyone present began to nod and answer in the affirmative and he looked at Anja and Aricia who smiled in return. He turned back when Osrod directed his next question at him.

“What of Secha?” He asked. “Or whatever she calls herself. And her daughter.”

“Their crimes date back long before any of us in this room were ever born.” Martin answered. “And they were focused against my bloodline.”

“She has hurt others in that twisted goal King Martin.” Osrod spoke. “That I know for sure.”

Martin met his eyes. “I’m sure she has.” He said softly. “I ask now if you will trust me to see that whatever her punishment is, it will be appropriate to her actions against all of our people?”

“You... you are King!” Osrod gasped in shock.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes. And I’m asking you to trust me. She will not escape justice and neither will her daughter.”

Osrod turned to Nitona then and looked into her beautiful blue eyes. Nitona had more reason to hate Secha than anyone given that she was going to have her killed, but Nitona nodded her head to him. Osrod turned back to Martin.

“I care not for what she did to me.” Osrod spoke. “I only care that she answers for her crimes against Nitona and our people.”

Martin nodded his head. “And she will.”

Osrod nodded his head too. “Then it is decided.” He said. He looked around the room at those sitting at the table. “Is this what we have decided?” He asked. “Can we do this?”

“Together!” Garget spoke.

“United together.” Lasun echoed his words.

“...What about fatso?” Anja questioned Martin as they all sat at the huge table now.

Osrod and the others had left, leaving Martin and his people in the huge room while they went to discuss how to best divide the tasks they needed to accomplish between the Packs to begin the future that all of them wanted.

Martin looked at his fiery, red haired Queen where she sat between Aricia and For'mya after she spoke now. All of them loathed Lorendo for what he was responsible for, but Anja had a special hatred in her heart for him because of what he had done and Martin knew that would not change going into the future.

“Re'lon and Nayeca got every tidbit of info out of him that they could Red.” Martin said. “Right down to the color underwear he wore a thousand years ago.” He spoke trying to keep the conversation light. “Skid marks and all.”

“Well... that is a positively revolting picture.” Cirith commented quickly and shivered in an exaggerated fashion to accent her words. Dysea and Isabella chuckled in response, as did Aricia and For'mya.

That comment served its purpose and Anja finally laughed softly as well. None of them would ever deny that Martin could put them at ease with the simplest words or silly joke, and this was part of why they loved him so much.

“Delnash took him back to Artaaya for now.” Martin told them as he looked around the table at the others. “Danny sent a DSD (Durcunusaan Security Detachment) with them and they will be the ones keeping toad face under wraps. Teniri has also assigned four dragons to help guard him around the clock. He isn't going anywhere Red.”

“And the Intel that Nubian and Re'lon got from him?” Anja asked.

Danny leaned forward now. “Already being acted on Red.” He replied. “Delnash has sent a ship to each location Lorendo revealed. With them is a combination of his people and ours that Anuk put together in order to destroy the facilities and if they are lucky take any additional information that they find. She is the coordinator for the ships Anja and they are following your guidelines for the other facilities that we have found. If they can't do anything within those boundaries, they are going to nuke the sites from orbit.”

“I don't want them anywhere near a location that shows active or even recent signs of Svorag presence Danny.” Anja said.

Danny nodded his head. “She knows.”

Anja took a deep breath and nodded her head. “I know.” She said. “I just don't trust that fat little fucking worm of a man or anything he says or does. Even under the influence of our drugs.”

Danny looked at Anja for a long moment and then nodded his head. “Yeah... that calls for a check in and reminder to be on her toes.” He spoke as he got to his feet.

Martin nodded his head. “Go!” Danny left the room quickly and Martin looked back to Anja. “Better?”

Anja nodded. “Thank you, Lover.”

“The timetable for Honelze is unchanged according too Yuriko.” Martin said now. “I'm not going to jerk around with these Arhtai Pack fools just so all of you know. We're going to take back Tenna Kelia and whoever else they are holding and put a very large crimp in their ability to do anything off Koltar Four. Then we are going to turn our full attention to Honelze and the Svorag.”

“I spoke to General Koguth before coming here...” Dysea told them. “Plans are still proceeding just as we worked them out. The outer city defenses will be done within three days and they will start on finishing the inner-city defenses then. At least something that we have planned is going as we had hoped.”

“Avoi.” For'mya echoed.

“It certainly helps that they built the city with an entire mountain range at its back. It does make defending it somewhat easier.” Cirith commented.

Dysea nodded. “Yes, it does.” She looked at Martin. “You did not tell us you were going to allow Staania Reva to go with Androcles Naute Melme.”

Martin nodded his head. “That wasn't the original plan.” He told them. “And somehow even if I had said no, I get the feeling she would have found a way regardless.”

Aricia nodded her head in agreement. “That seems likely.” She said with a smile.

“Andro and our children will let nothing happen to her.” For'mya stated. “And in a way, she does deserve to be there.”

“Doesn't mean I have to like it.” Martin said.

“Stop complaining you big baby.” Anja quipped. “You just wanted to go yourself and we all know that.” Martin smiled sheepishly and nodded his head. “Guilty.”

“So, what are we going to do with Sama and Roeza Arhtai Beloved?” Aricia asked.

Martin sat back in his chair and lifted his arms, putting his hands behind his head and shrugging his broad shoulders. “I have no nubous idea.” He said in reply.

“Sama... Secha... whatever the hell her name is, she is responsible for the deaths of several Lycavorians here on Jetania Lover.” Anja spoke leaning forward at the table now. “All of them young women who got in her way.”

“We may need her for leverage Red.” Martin said thoughtfully. “She is Yelma Arhtai's only remaining daughter, or so we are led to believe.”

“I know.” Anja answered.

Martin looked at her intently now. “What’s up Red?” He asked her. “Something else is on your mind. Spit it out.”

Anja took a deep breath and looked at him. “I am... I am concerned that Retta and Calyb have chosen to remain here on Jetania.” She said softly.

“We are concerned.” Aricia quickly chimed in.

Martin leaned back in his chair now. “Spill it.” He said firmly. “All of you.”

Isabella sat forward now. Martin Leonidas knew that his queens spoke with one voice and were almost always of the same mind about everything. If one of them had a problem then it was a sure bet that all of them had the same problem. This time was no different now and Isabella looked at Martin and took the lead.

“Nilantha and Loras believe her influence might go deeper than what we know.” Bella spoke. “We tend to agree.”

“You think they will be in danger?” Martin asked.

“Anything is possible Du’ased M’ranndii.” Isabella stated. “Lazar will protect Retta with his life, of that we have no doubt. Taris and Anoria will do the same for Calyb. It is not anyone among the Mountain Packs that we do not trust. It is those that Sama may have corrupted while she was here.”

Martin Leonidas did not need to hear anymore than what he had. He trusted the senses of his six Queens more than he trusted his own at times and this was one of those times. He took his P1 from his belt and set it on the table, tapping on the small screen several times. All of them heard the soft beeping and then Miranda’s face and upper body appeared. Her features looked surprised that he was contacting her, but she took it in stride. She really did not believe just how much she was considered part of their family even though E'dira had tried to tell her on many occasions.

“Martin?” She spoke. “NEXUS protocols? I gather this is rather important then?”

“It is Manda.” Martin told her. All of them could see her tapping on her P1 and then she nodded. “I’m secure.”

“Manda... I want one of your ships detailed to stay behind; a VANGUARD Mark III preferably.” Martin said. “With them I want a platoon of the 82nd detached to her. Have Josie Miller decide which one. Andro trusts her decisions completely.”

Manda nodded her head in the transmission. “Consider it done.” She spoke. “Their task?”

Martin didn’t blink. “I want Retta and Calyb monitored 24/7. No interference Manda... just watch them whenever they are out and about. They’ll have Mara and Endeem with them but I am...”

“The political environment is unstable right now.” Manda said.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes.”

“Actionable conditions?” Manda asked.

“Any sign of imminent danger to Retta, Lazar, Calyb, Taris or Anoria, and they are to be evacuated immediately.” Martin spoke. “Priority One NEXUS condition Manda.” Martin told her and all of them saw her eyes go a little wider. Priority One NEXUS condition called for the extraction of all listed targets at any cost, regardless of civilian risk.

“Martin maybe...” Anja began but Martin held up his hand stopping her words.

“Secondary Priority One NEXUS condition targets are Loras and the rest of my family. Then Garget Ranev, Lasun and his mate and Osrod and Nitona Aspion.” Martin spoke. “If they come after Retta and Calyb then you can damn well bet they’ll be coming after them too.”

Manda nodded her head without hesitation. “Insurance Martin?” She asked.

Martin nodded his head in return. “Insurance Manda.”

“I’ll see to it.” Manda spoke. “Additional orders to the Captain?”

Martin paused for a long moment and then rose to his feet. He finally turned back to Miranda. “Tell him he is authorized to use any means necessary to get the NEXUS Targets off planet. Once that is done, he is to shift to Hunter Mode and coordinate with Mountain Pack leaders on the ground determined by Garget and Lasun. If an incident is started, whoever begins it cannot be allowed to take control Manda.” Martin looked at her. “Tell him that he is to stop that under any circumstances.”

Miranda nodded her head. “Done.” She said.

“Get that taken care of before we leave in the morning Manda.” Martin said. “I want it in place before anyone really has a chance to find out. And they are to remain Shrouded at all times.”

“I’ll see to it Martin.” Miranda told him.

“Thank you, Manda.” Martin said just before tapping the screen of the P1 once more and ending the transmission.

Anja rose from her seat and moved around the table to come up in front of him. She wasted no time in pressing her body against his intimately, wrapping her arms around his waist and placing her head against his chest. Aricia, For'mya, Isabella, Dysea and Cirith followed suit and soon they were all hugging one another tightly, all of them touching Martin and each other in some manner.

“Thank you, Lover.” Anja said softly.

“You don’t have to thank me Red. I will protect our children from any danger.” Martin whispered. “All of our children. From anything.”

“Avoi.” Aricia whispered, her face buried in Dysea’s shoulder and platinum blond hair.

PREMONITION

The Cargo Bay was certainly crowded, but not unreasonably so to anyone. They were accustomed to far more enclosed and tight spaces. Most of the extra equipment had been moved to smaller storage compartments under the deck plates to make room for the dragons that now occupied the lower level of the cargo bay. Denali, Aradace, Lisisa and Jeth would not normally be on the PREMONITION now because of his command of the ARCH DEMON. Caydren and Cinol had broken the stall meant for Jeth and Tharua into two different ones for them and Tharua took a much smaller stall. Caydren and Cinol had come to almost revere Jeth and his history with Lisisa and they quickly took down the wall between their stalls so that he and Tharua could remain together until they returned to their own ship. Anthar and Elynth rested on the deck beside each other with Majeir beside Elynth and Marux beside Anthar. Tharua rested beside Jeth, while Ryner, Ladur and Aradace rested next to one another. Each of their saddles were now equipped with sophisticated portable sensor arrays. They had been used during the Evolli War to find Evolli positions and even to mark targets for orbital bombardments. They were not very heavy, but they were slightly bulky and added resistance to their turns and straight line flying.

Sehri was very excited standing between Carisia and Lu'ria and decked out in her flying armor and Lu'ria finishing up putting her long blond hair in braids. Andro was standing in front of her as everyone else was talking between themselves.

Reva stood on the elevated walkway that extended slightly over the lower level of the cargo bay and could watch with nothing but awe and love in her eyes and filling her heart and body. This was a position that she had never dreamed would take place but thanks to her long dead sons, their last orders for her had been fulfilled. She was once more herself and she was with her blood. Her family. This is where she belonged without question, and while she knew they would do everything in their power to protect her, it was Reva Mahanlo-Leonidas who would do everything within her power to protect them.

Off to the side of the cargo bay Reva saw Kalis, Daio, Ridor and Cowen checking their weapons and other equipment. While only Kalis was of her bloodline, Reva could not deny these young men and women were a family to each other as well. Aricia, Dysea and Isabella had told her of the bond that Martin shared with his personal team, how they were a family as well as friends and forged in the fires of combat. Something that would never be broken. Andro had his own team now and they were the same. Sherice, Serale and Cvea conversed easily a few meters from the men that they loved, Cvea’s long Kavalian tail casually flipping back and forth in contentment. Caliria she knew was in the small medical bay with Brendi preparing it in case it was needed. Jomann Kirek stood with Eliani, his own dragon Soren talking with Anthar and Marux. Reva could not think of him as anything else but family given his Kirek blood and that he was Eliani’s husband and mate. Reva Mahanlo-Leonidas could tell he was a good man who absolutely worshipped both Eliani and Brendi and would do anything for either of them. That was something that was inbred in his bloodline Reva knew. They switched easily between open voice and Etheric conversation as the dragons were still trying to learn the many nuances of spoken words. Reva turned her head when the lean form of Chiron appeared next to her.

“Lady Reva.” Chiron spoke.

“Chiron.” Reva spoke.

“I believe... I believe I owe you an apology Lady Reva.” Chiron spoke.

“An apology for what Chiron?” Reva asked him.

“For misleading you all of these years.” Chiron answered. “For not telling you of Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten’s plans. For not telling you of Lady Kelia.”

Reva shook her head slowly. “No Chiron.” She told him. “You did exactly what you should have done. You knew what my reaction would be, knowing that Kelia still lived. You may have even saved her life.”

“I don’t see how.” Chiron said.

Reva turned her head back and looked down on those that were her family. “If you had told me I would have done everything within my power to get Kesas to act.” Reva said softly. “I would have risked Kelia’s life. Lylor and my grandchildren. You not telling me has brought us to this point. Kelia will be free soon enough and I will lose no more of my bloodline in the process.”

Chiron followed her gaze and saw them preparing below them. “You realize that nothing will deter them.” He said. “I have had a small glimpse into your staaniaketo’s mind Lady Reva. Both of them. Androcles is no different than his father. They are not... they are not like Daniho and Ashten, but yet they are.”

Reva nodded her head. “I know Chiron.” She said. “They are more... they are more feral. More instinctive. It is this Spartan nature that they have grown up in and embraced with such passion and completeness.”

“This does not... it does not frighten you?” Chiron asked.

Reva shook her head. “Many years ago, it would have, but after watching them evolve; watching them embrace the Spartan nature within all of them, channel it, control it... no, it does not frighten me. For I intend to embrace it as well, as all of our people will in time.”

Chiron looked at her once more. “You do realize that if it stands between them and Lady Kelia, it will not survive. No matter who or what it is.”

Reva nodded her head. “Then I suggest whoever or whatever is between us and our blood gets out of the way. We will not hold back.”

Both of them heard the loud beep from the internal speakers and then Sadi’s voice was speaking.

“Androcles... we have engaged the Portal Drive and we are now three minutes from reversion.” She stated.

Andro looked up from where he was holding Sehri’s face in his hands. “I thought it was instantaneous KertaGai?” He questioned.

“It is... but we can also adjust reversion time.” Sadi replied.

“This is new to all of us Saradasaar.” Ne’Veha’s voice echoed right behind Sadi’s. “Sadi and I agreed to do it this way the first time just to be safe.”

Andro nodded his head without hesitation. He didn’t doubt Sadi or Ne’Veha. “Very well, I will join you shortly.” He turned his head to look up at where Reva and Chiron stood knowing they were there. “Chiron... would you take your station. We will need you to transfer lifesign coordinates to Chief Ranor and greet them when they arrive.”

Chiron nodded his head. “On my way.”

[Staania...] Andro spoke in the shielded connection.

[My hood is ready.] She answered him. [Allon coi hote yer veesden brey. It is utanayng.]

(This is all very spy like. It is exciting)

Andro couldn’t help the smile that split his lips. [Reyna alad ter neval medwan lon.] (Please do not tell father that)

[Never!] Reva hissed. [He would never allow me to do something like this again.]

Reva watched with barely a flinch as Androcles easily leaped the three meters up to the level she was on and she took his arm as they headed for the cockpit. [Do not hold your Uncle’s actions against him Androcles.]

Andro shook his head quickly. [I don't stanaia. He is protecting what he loves, but given who he knows that we are, he should have told us about whatever it is they are hiding. We will discover what it is without his help regardless.]

Reva nodded her head. [I know Androcles, and that is what confuses me.] She told him as they moved into the small elevator lift.

PREMONITION

“Reversion!” Sadi announced and the PREMONITION quite stealthily arrived into another sector of space that the Lycavorian Union had never been to before, and probably would have remained quite ignorant of had their history not already been written long before many of those on the ship had been born.

“Pakar Six dead ahead!” Meka called out. “Ugh... that is one ugly planet.”

Androcles was standing behind Sadi, Reva behind Ne'Veha and Andro nodded his head. “I would tend to very much agree Meka.” He spoke. “SirsanGai?”

“Two minutes until teleport range.” Ne'Veha said quickly.

“Chiron?” Andro said turning his head back into the ship even though he could not see where the Avatar sat.

“I am detecting all targeted lifesigns Androcles, however Kesas and Lylor are in the company of additional lifesigns that I have no data on. They are within the three-meter radius of the teleport circle.” Chiron answered.

“Chief?!” Andro barked quickly.

“No way to avoid it Boss.” Master Chief Joe Ranor answered from the controls of the small teleport pad two decks below him. “We didn't have time to focus the deflector dish for the teleport array. That requires a lot more time and we need to be in space dock for that.”

“So, what does that mean Chief?” Andro asked.

“Pretty much anyone who is within three meters of our target will be teleported as well.” Rano answered. “It's only an eight-person pad, but that applies mainly to outgoing teleportation and not incoming.”

“Sibfla!” Andro swore.

“I couldn't get any tighter Boss, sorry.” Rano spoke. “I got Kalis and Ridor to move down to the teleport pad just in case.”

Andro looked at Sadi and Ne'Veha, who were staring back at him. “Very well Rano.” Andro said. “And good call with Kalis and Ridor. Chiron... do you have everyone locked?”

“Affirmative.” Chiron answered.

“Would you meet Kalis and Ridor by the teleport pad?” Andro said. “I think it might be better if they see someone they know when they are brought aboard.”

“Understood.” Chiron answered.

“Thirty seconds!” Ne'Veha called out.

Androcles smiled. “This is going to be interesting.”

“Breath deeply as you walk.” Chiron was telling their new quests as they walked down the narrow corridor. “The effects of teleportation are not permanent and they will wear off in moments but the first one is always the worst so I am told. You will grow accustomed to them over time and they will not bother you after several teleports.”

Kesas and Lylor looked at each other as they each held someone else. Yasha was held in her father's arms, while Lylor held his sister Aryera. Caylt and two of his security detail were moving behind them with Marda and Tiag Kirek who had been with their mother and uncle in the small quarters.

Kesas had been the only one to break down when he saw Chiron standing there as he was on his knees, his body reacting to the effects of having his molecules dismantled and then put back together. Kesas had actually risen to his feet and wrapped his arms around Chiron as the Avatar continued to smile happily. An Avatar he may have been, but Chiron was also sentient, and being in close proximity to Martin and the others was advancing his experience with emotions more than anything ever could. He was genuinely very happy to see Kesas and Lylor and he could remember a very young Aryera Kirek. The others he did not know, but they were of no matter now as he walked down the corridor with Kesas and Lylor on either side of him.

“What... what happened?” Lylor gasped. “I was... we were in the...”

Chiron nodded his head. “I know... and I apologize. Our arrival caught all of you while you were still waking. I did not have time to adjust for what you were doing.”

“Where are we?” Kesas stammered. “A ship?”

Chiron nodded his head once more. “You are on board the ULU PREMONITION. It is the personal combat ship of Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas. You have spoken to him and his father. Two of his beloved wives and mates are the pilots and the ship is a marvel even by my standards.”

“You said... you said your ships would not be ready for another ten hours!” Lylor gasped still holding his sister gently in his arms as they moved slowly.

Chiron nodded his head. “Forgive our vagueness.” He replied.

“You lied!” Kesas gasped aloud.

Chiron shook his head. “Not at all Lord Pengot.” He replied. “I just did not provide all of the facts.”

“Why a ship?” Kesas asked. “Where... where are, where are we going?”

“We are already there.” He replied quickly. “The moment we teleported all of you aboard we conducted a second Portal Jump directly into orbit of Koltar Four.” Chiron lifted his head slightly. “We are now descending in to the atmosphere approximately twenty-two point five kilometers from the capital city where we will hold position and then release our dragons and their riders.”

“A Portal Jump!?” Caylt declared moving closer. “You have Portal Drive Technology? How is that possible? It... it died with the Onab.”

Chiron nodded his head. “That is what everyone was led to believe.” He spoke looking at Caylt. “That was not the case however.” Chiron looked at Kesas. “He bears the DNA markers of your bloodline Kesas Pengot. As does the young woman.”

“My... my oldest children with my second wife and mate.” Kesas told him.

Chiron was silent for a moment. “The Night of Blood?” He asked softly.

Kesas nodded his head slowly. “My first mate and my children with her.” He answered equally as reverently.

Chiron stopped in the corridor and turned fully to look at him. “My condolences Lord Pengot.” He said. “The Night of Blood will not go unpunished I assure you.”

“Everyone will miss us!” Lylor stated. “Chiron, you...”

Chiron shook his head. “A message was sent to Rothan the moment we began to teleport all of you up here. He was instructed to remain calm and prepare for our return. We will need to deal with the spies among your population when we return.”

Kesas looked at him oddly. “Chiron, you are... you are different somehow.”

Chiron nodded his head. “We have not seen each other in a very long time Lord Pengot. It is... it is very good to see you again. And you Lord Lylor.”

“Chiron, you said Darastrixi!” Kesas spoke. “You have Darastrixi on board this ship?”

Chiron nodded his head as he began walking again only to come to the short, six stair downward stairwell break in the corridor. “You will find that our fate is intricately woven with the Darastrixi and have been since the day Daniho and Dadrien first came together.” He raised his arm and motioned down the corridor. “Please... Androcles has a few questions before we disembark the dragons and we can get you some food and drink. Princess Caliria is also ready to give all of you booster shots and short but thorough medical scans.”

Chiron led them another thirty odd meters before they went through another door that opened in to the expanse of the cargo bay. Aryera Kirek, though quickly recovering from the teleportation effects gripped her brother’s arm once more as they saw the back of the ship open to the night sky, a kinetic barrier field in place to keep out the wind and roar of the atmosphere.

Lylor’s eyes were like everyone else’s, open wider than they had ever been as they all saw the eleven dragons in the lower level below them, all of them wearing some strange sort of armor and bearing saddles on their backs that were now occupied by both men and women in unique body armor that none of them had ever seen before obviously.

“Son vada carians!” Aryera gasped. “How high... how high are we?”

“Sadi is holding our position at sixty-five thousand feet.” Chiron answered almost casually. “That is the highest that Marux can exit because he and Sehri are still bonding. It is quite enough for our purposes. If it was just Androcles and Elynth, they could go out closer to ninety thousand feet like their fathers.”

“Ninety thousand!” Yasha gasped.

“They will see us!” Lylor almost yelled. “Chiron, we must leave! The Arhtai Pack will see us!”

Chiron shook his head. “Highly unlikely.” He spoke. “The technology in use by the Arhtai Pack will not be able to detect this ship. We are Shrouded as King Martin’s people call it. Completely hidden from all known sensors and visual reference. It is a very reliable source of technology that the Onab never thought to design. The only time we will be able to be seen is when we recover the dragons, for we will be at twenty-two thousand feet and the Shroud does not extend out far enough to cover the landing ramp the dragons will use. Their scales reflect all known sensors however, so it should not be an issue.”

“Why are we here?” Lylor demanded. “We should depart now before they see us even by accident.”

“They will not see us as Chiron has already told you Tenne.” The voice spoke causing Kesas and Lylor to turn and see Androcles come up the short flight of stairs in to the lower bay.

“This is a risk we should not be taking!” Kesas echoed Lylor. “If the Arhtai Pack, if Yelma Arhtai discovers you are here she will...”

“Why are you here?” Lylor demanded. “You did not tell us you would be doing this. That you would come without telling us. We could have prepared.”

Andro nodded his head. “Which is exactly why we did not tell you.” He told them. “And we needed first hand intelligence”

“You do not believe what we tell you?” Lylor demanded again.

“We do not take anything for granted Tenne.” Andro said, but his face showed that he was confused as to Lylor’s reaction. “And you cannot give us the intelligence that we seek.”

“We have told you all that there is to tell you!” Kesas again chimed in.

“I am sure that is what you believe, yes.” Andro answered. “My father and I have other ideas however and...”

“Twenty seconds Andro!” Ne’Veha’s voice echoed over the internal speakers.

Andro held up his hand. “One moment please.” He said before turning to look into the lower level. “Deni!” He called out. “Line them up fervon!”

“Androcles you do not need to do this. It is an unnecessary risk for you and the others.” Kesas said now. “We have all of the intelligence that you need. And Ranol Nenay is bringing more.”

Andro nodded his head. “And this sensor run will only confirm what you have I’m sure.” He spoke. “It is something that my father wanted to do however, as I said. So, we will do it.” he held up his hand before they could protest more. “I’m sorry Tenne, Kesas Pengot... Chiron will take you to the observation area now because we are about to depart. We will see you in one point seven hours and then we can talk more as we return to Pakar Six. My father will be arriving in the morning and then things will really begin to happen. I must go now.”

“You are going with them?” Yasha gasped.

Androcles smiled. “I would never miss a chance to fly with my Bonded Sister.” He answered before placing his hand on the railing and launching himself over the edge. The moment he leaped, Androcles called etherically for the Arwa rie vada Tarivuos to deploy and before he had even landed the three meters below, the armor had fully deployed around his entire body.

“Carians!” Yasha gasped aloud. “Lon coi vada Arwa rie vada Tarivuos!” (That is the Armor of the Heralds)

“There!” Tiag spoke for the first time pointing to the gathering of dragons and riders below. “There are the other two! Gods!” He hissed as he pointed to where Dorian and Laren were climbing onto Ryner and Ladur.

“Mother?” Marda gasped as she moved closer to her mother.

Aryera looked at her. “Remain calm.” She said. “Lylor? What is wrong fervon?”

“Too late.” Kesas hissed softly.

They heard the order barked out and they turned to see Sehri and Marux swiftly exit the PREMONITION, followed in quick succession by Denali and Aradace, Lisisa and Jeth, Eliani and Tharua, Dorian and Ryner, Laren and Ladur, Lu'ria and Majeir, Carisia and Anthar and then finally Androcles and Elynth. In less than ten seconds the cargo bay beneath them was empty and they saw the ramp door beginning to close.

“By our ancestors!” Aryera gasped aloud, her eyes wide in shock.

Chiron turned to look at them now. “Quite exhilarating don’t you think?” He spoke. “I will take you to the observation area and you can get some food and drink and monitor their progress.”

Chiron did not blink as he motioned and began to lead them back into the heart of the ship. None of them noticed that Jomann, Kalis and Ridor were watching them intently.

[Daio... you with us?] Jomann asked.

[Caydren, Cinol and I are preparing the party poppers for when we get back.] Daio answered instantly.

[Andro was right.] Jomann told him.

[We cannot burn family Jomann.] Caydren spoke.

[We won’t have to Caydren. Just stick to the plan we put together.] Jomann said. [Daio?]

[I got Meka, Sadi and the others.] Daio answered instantly. [Watch your assess.]

[We will.] Jomann spoke.

Out of all nine of them it was definitely more exhilarating for Sehri and Marux.

Sehri’s eyes were wide under her helmet but she remembered every bit of her training from Androcles, Carisia and Lu'ria. She remained low in the saddle, her head very close to Marux’s shoulders, but high enough to take everything in around her. Her wolf eyes could see almost everything on the ground once Marux had dropped to ten thousand feet, but she allowed him to fly them. He had far more experience than her, and his confidence was also growing by the day. Being free from Dante Moran and his darkness had opened a whole new world for Marux and finding Sehri had been his salvation. He was stronger now, more confident and more dedicated. He and Sehri grew in talent and skill by the week, and like Elynth had told Aricia, he was one of the fastest of them in every way. Protecting Sehri and becoming one of the finest Bonded Pairs in the Union is what now motivated Marux.

“Carians Marux, allon coi orleen!” Sehri gasped aloud, her voice captured on the COM unit of her helmet unwittingly and everyone heard her. (This is glorious)

[The sensor array sister.] Marux spoke now in the shielded conversation. They did not know if anyone on Koltar Four could communicate at this high a level within the Etheric realm, but they were taking no chances. [Get ready to turn it on.]

[Ready.] Sehri answered.

[Now!]

Sehri reached down to the side along his muscular scales until she felt the small control panel for the sensor array and she quickly depressed the large button on the control panel. She was only slightly startled when the sensor array came to life with a low hum, but she and Marux had been prepared for that.

[Array is active.] Sehri spoke more confidently now. [Begin your sweep my beautiful brother.]

[Here we go!] Marux stated just before he rolled over and dove closer to the ground by three thousand feet.

PREMONITION COCKPIT

“All of them are in their lanes and active.” Ne'Veha reported as her hands moved over her controls.

“Gods, so fast?” Reva asked from where she sat beside Meka in the large Secondary Engineer’s Chair. She wore the long cape and the full headed cowl was up hiding her head and all but her lower jaw from view as she watched the camera view from Androcles’ helmet TAP camera.

Sadi nodded with a smile. “All of them are very fast.” She said. “Elynth and Tharua most of all, but all of them are fast.”

“Getting the sensor feeds from all of the arrays.” Meka spoke now. “Signals are clear and clean. Nice pictures and superior data flows. Sadi, we really should back this data up to our ship cores. This is... this is really useful data.”

Sadi nodded her head. “Do it Meka, we may not get a second chance at being so close like this. Encrypt it as well.” Sadi turned her head and flipped a switch on her small side panel. “Mari, are you and Brendi getting anything?”

“We are monitoring all non-secure data feeds and Command Channels.” Marti’s voice answered. “They do not take security very seriously. It was child’s play to tap their data feeds Sadi.”

“Just stay alert and if you detect any sign that they might be on to you, sever the link.” Sadi directed her. “Andro and Martin were adamant that they not discover we hacked them.”

“Brendi and I have our hands on the terminate feed buttons don’t worry.” Mari answered.

[Sadi, Chiron is bringing three of them to the cockpit. The older ones.] Caliria’s voice broke into Sadi’s head in the shielded communication, but one that included everyone on the ship to include Reva. Chiron did not offer up the information on who Caliria was, and neither did she. While still undergoing the change that Andro’s bite had caused within her, they would be able to tell that she had been turned, but not by who. Caliria hid her dual fangs from them as well, something she hated doing because she had begun leaving them exposed almost all of the time now because she liked how they made her look more ferocious. [The ones called Kesas and Lylor are somewhat restless. Aside from being slightly under nourished however, they are all in good health.]

[Thank you Inamarno.] Sadi told her with love in her voice. Sadi turned her head and looked at Reva. [Staania?]

Reva nodded from her chair beside Meka. [I will be silent Sadi, don’t worry child.] Reva told her with some humor in her voice. [And this cloak that you had Lasun give to me is quite remarkable. It completely hides my scent.]

[When he discovered that we needed to hide you and why, he gave it to Martin.] Ne’Veha answered her. [It is all very natural, but it masks your scent completely according to Lasun. They will not know it is you.]

“SirsanGai?” Sadi asked turning back to her instruments with a smile.

“Fifty-two minutes.” Ne’Veha answered.

[What is happening?] Reva asked quickly.

“Deni and Aradace will be the first to end their sweep and turn around. In exactly eleven minutes they will turn around and head back here. Lisisa, Jeth, Enylarcopri and Anthar will complete their sweeps and turn back in approximately twenty-three and twenty-five minutes.”

“DuanGai?” Sadi asked referring to Sehri.

“Twelve minutes exactly for Marux and Tharua, and then they both turn around and head back.” Ne’Veha answered.

[Androcles?] Reva asked both Ne’Veha and Sadi.

[He and Elynth will be last staania.] Sadi answered. [That is just how he is.]

Kameka had been spending many hours practicing her Etheric skills. Being around so many High Tier Etheric users, including her beautiful husband Daio, made it much easier. It wasn’t long before Meka had risen into the realm of the very few who could speak within the Etheric realm on the same level as a member of the Mahanlo-Leonidas family. She did not do so often, by choice and by suggestion from Daio and Androcles, because it gave her an element of surprise that no one knew she possessed. She used it now however.

[Company] Meka called out as she saw Chiron entering the cockpit with Lylor, Kesas and Aryera behind him.

“As you can see, this is the cockpit of the ship.” Chiron spoke to Lylor, Kesas and Aryera, all of whom had expressions of wonder at the sophistication of the cockpit and the equipment they saw all around them. Reva Mahanlo-Leonidas had the hardest time holding in her emotions when she saw them, and quite unlike herself, she had to reach out and draw on Sadi and Ne’Veha’s strength within the Etheric realm to calm her racing heart and the happiness that threatened to overwhelm her. Kesas looked older than when she had last seen him, but not terribly so, and Lylor looked no different in the least, so powerful and proud.

Aryera Kirek was truly fascinated by the technology she saw in front of her. It was equal to the brand new Onab technology she had seen rolled out when she was just a child and the Ten Thousand Year War had just begun. She saw the huge screen in front of the exotic looking female with the tail who sat in front of the screen. The tail was slightly longer than the female they had seen in what they called their medical bay. It had been a small room, really no bigger than a large bedroom, but the blue skinned female and the blond-haired woman with a similar tail maneuvered around the room with ease.

“What... what is that?” Aryera asked with wonder finally as she looked at the screen Kameka was using to monitor the progress of all the riders.

Meka glanced forward to look at Sadi and she nodded her head. “It’s ok Meka.” She said.

Kameka motioned to the huge screen. “We are tracking all the dragons and riders.” She told Aryera. “The pattern sweep that Androcles developed has several of them turning around on their return tract in a couple of minutes.”

Aryera looked at her. “So soon?” She gasped.

Kameka nodded her head. “Some of them are faster than others.” She answered.

Aryera Kirek saw what could only be Arhtai Pack sensor array beacons all along the large sensor screen she was looking at, and not one of them was active. All of them were in a passive mode and she knew that for certain. She had sat and watched them on Pakar Six for hours on end at times. “They... they truly cannot see you?” She stammered as she leaned closer and looked at the screen.

Meka shook her head proudly. “They could be pointing a sensor array right at us and they still wouldn’t see us.” She boasted. “And dragon scales have a natural resistance to all types of sensor arrays. They can’t be seen by any of them.”

“Gods!” Aryera stammered clearly fascinated by all of it. “How... how are you seeing them?”

Meka smiled. “We have trackers in their saddles. Without them we wouldn’t be able to see them either.” She replied. “It allows us to follow them and assist in case they run into trouble.”

Lylor stared at the large screen for a long moment and then looked at Kesas silently. He half shook his head and Kesas understood completely. “These tracks you have laid out here?” Lylor asked. “Your... your people will not deviate from them?”

Sadi shook her head as she turned and looked at him. “No.” She answered.

“And the range on these sensor arrays your Darastrixi carry?” Lylor pressed.

“A hundred kilometers, why?” Sadi answered not liking the tone of his voice when he asked, almost as if he considered the Darastrixi beneath him. “The Darastrixi are not pets! They do not belong to us! They are our family and dearest friends in many cases!”

“He meant no offense.” Kesas quickly spoke up as Lylor was looking at the screen intently.

“Then perhaps he should watch the tone of his voice before speaking!” Sadi snapped at Kesas surprising him with the force of her words. She did not give him a chance to answer as she turned her head back to the front of the ship.

“Hold on!” Meka called out as she leaned slightly forward in her seat. “Androcles and Elynth have deviated from the track.”

“What?” Ne’Veha hissed. “Why? He was the one that ordered the others not to change course.”

“They have altered their course twenty-three degrees west of their original track.” Meka told them. And they have increased speed.”

“He senses something!” Sadi spoke now looking at Ne’Veha.

“To get him to change course KertaGai?” Ne’Veha said with worry in her voice. “It must be very important.”

“Important enough to risk himself SirsanGai.” Sadi echoed her words. “I don’t like that.”

“Nor do I.” Ne’Veha echoed. “Nor do I.”

It was always relaxing when they got to fly like this.

Just the two of them in the dark sky, only their senses and eye sight really doing any work. They could let their minds free when they flew like this, everything so instinctive to them that in truth they could have been sleeping. Many times, they did not even talk to one another, letting their minds mingle and roam like they did when they were smaller. The sensor array was active and humming, Androcles simply letting his senses reach out to check his siblings and Sehri every few minutes. His youngest wife and mate was utterly thrilled and Andro could also feel Marux's equally exuberant attitude. Sehri was learning and growing fast thanks to Sadi and the others. Like Carisia and Lu'ria she was utterly fearless, and like Sadi, Ne'Veha and Caliria, she was equally as thoughtful and dedicated. There were times when Andro asked the same questions as his father when it came to his wives and mates. How could all six of them love him as they did; how could he love each of them as he did. These thoughts usually lasted only a few moments, because like his father Androcles finally came to the conclusion that it was fate. And you couldn't change fate, could you?

Androcles felt it like a fleeting brush against his Etheric shields, but it was strong enough to make him sit up straight in the saddle and place his hands flat against Elynth's cool scales as he felt her head turn.

You felt it too? He asked her.

Yes. Faint... like a whisper, but strong enough that it rippled my shields.

It felt so familiar Elynth. Like it was from the same chorus of my family. Andro paused for a long moment. Sister that is... Andro began to speak.

Yes. Someone of your bloodline that does not know their own strength within the Etheric realm. Elynth agreed with him.

How can... how can that be? Andro answered. It can't be Tenna Kelia. She is in cryo and her mind would not be able to project such power from within cryo sleep.

It is someone else Androcles. Elynth told him. Someone else of your bloodline that is just as strong as your tenna and very much awake and active. It has to be.

Here? Andro gasped. On this world?

There is no other explanation my Bonded Brother. Elynth continued. When have we ever not trusted our instincts Andro?

Never. Androcles answered her. He closed his eyes under his helmet for a long moment and then opened them once more. Twenty-three-degree course change west sister. And a little more speed is called for as well.

More speed it is. Elynth spoke confidently as she shifted her huge wings from cruise mode to flying mode.

With three, short but powerful bursts from her wings she had increased their speed by nearly a hundred kilometers an hour and they rocketed over the terrain beneath them in the early morning darkness.

KOLTAR FOUR

TWO HUNDRED KILOMETERS NORTH OF THE CAPITAL CITY OF LEPIRI IAALDO ENGINEER COMPOUND

Revia stepped out onto the roof of the building they called home, holding the full sheet around her naked body. She and Ivore occupied the entire top floor of the building, and had for as long as they had been here. Ivore had turned it into somewhat of a sanctuary for his beautiful wife and mate, adding a large kitchen so Revia could cook for their family, and then a massive table and chairs for all of them to sit and eat together which they did once a week. Revia also recalled that six of their children had been conceived on this very rooftop. The privacy and clear air on certain nights could make both her and Ivore very amorous and neither of them were shy about their love for each other.

Revia moved up to the railing and let her hands drop to her abdomen. While she had not yet begun to show her pregnancy, Revia could easily feel the life within her womb growing. She was certain it was going to be another girl and she smiled to herself slightly for she knew how Ivore was about his daughters. By the time Revia had given him his first daughter they already had five sons and between her brothers and her father, their first daughter had a struggle finding a mate of her own, but she adored her father and brothers for protecting her.

"Revia...?" Ivore's soft voice carried to her ears and Revia smiled as he came up behind her and slid his powerful arms around her waist. He pulled her close to him and leaned over to nuzzle her ear and cheek as he knew she so loved. "Something woke you my wife." Ivore spoke as his hands moved to her abdomen and covered her own.

Revia smiled and nodded her head as his lips grazed the side of her neck. "I don't know what it was." She spoke in reply. "I could... it was like I could feel a presence nearby husband." She explained. "It was... it was unique."

"Unique how?" Ivore asked her.

"Powerful and pure." Revia answered. "Raw and untamed."

Ivore chuckled. "Perhaps a dream lover." He said as he nuzzled the bottom of her ear gently and Revia gasped in bliss.

"No, you pervert!" She gasped in delight. She turned her face to his, reaching up and placing her hand against his cheek and the stubbly growth of hair on his face. He was growing back the beard she so adored on him. "It was... it was like... it felt like family calling out to me my love."

Ivore reached up and caressed her cheek. "That is not possible Revia." He said. "Not yet anyway. We would know the moment family came for us. Mahanlo blood would hold nothing back and it would be broadcast across the whole planet and..."

Revia nodded her head. "I know my love. I just..."

The strong gust of wind staggered both of them slightly as it passed overhead, Ivore pulling Revia tightly to him to steady them both. This was not something that was normal and Ivore felt his threat senses come alive.

"Ivore!" Revia gasped aloud as she squeezed his arms. "Do you feel it husband!" Her eyes were wide as she turned to face him. "Ivore do you feel it?!"

Ivore's own eyes were wide but he was not looking at Revia, he was staring off to the side and Revia followed where his eyes were focused and she almost screamed out in fear, her hands going to her mouth stopping herself.

"Carians!" She almost yelled.

Ivore slowly pulled her to the side of his body in order to protect her as they watched the lone figure slowly rise from the squatting position in the nearby corner of the roof to its full height. Even in the darkness, they could see whatever the figure was wearing conformed to the powerfully built body like a second skin. It was obsidian and gold in color, with what could only be described as large wings that extended from its back and shoulders. A cowl covered its head, hiding most of the face but leaving the lower portion of jaw just barely visible along with odd metal like surfaces as well. What caught and held their attention were the two azure colored orbs that beamed from under that cowl like beacons on a dark night.

"Revia get behind me!" Ivore demanded as he prepared to defend his beloved wife and mate even though he was not armed and barely had clothes on.

"Revia?" The figure rasped out the word causing both of them to look at it with wide eyes.

"Stay back!" Ivore almost shouted as he held Revia close to his side. "I will kill you if you come closer!"

They heard the soft chuckle from the tall, powerful figure and that voice reached for them once more. "Your state of dress aside Tenne Ivore, your words are not needed." They watched as that figure lifted his hands and drew back the cowl around its head revealing the form fitting helmet and multicolored plume that extended from the top. Revia gasped loudly, her hands once more going to her mouth as she saw the lower jaw and what protruded from the gums there. "I could no more harm my own family than I could harm myself." They watched as the face of the young man lifted his hands once more and grasped the sides of the helmet he wore.

Androcles then lifted his helmet off of his head in one smooth motion, opening his mouth slightly so that they could see the dual fangs of his bloodline clearly and focusing his eyes on Revia. He dropped to one knee slowly and lowered his head.

"Tenna Revia. Tenne Ivore. I... I know your names without knowing you." Andro spoke softly. "I am... I am Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas. I am... I am your mandri. And I am so very happy to make your acquaintance."

"Mahanlo?!" Revia gasped. "Son vada carians you are..."

Androcles looked at her and slowly he smiled as recognition washed over Revia's face. "I am Tenna." He said softly.

“Forn wen vada Fera Tarivu un Mard Revik!” Revia gasped as she moved around Ivore slightly even though his arm was still wrapped securely around her waist. (You are the First Herald to the True King)

Androcles nodded his head. “Aur medwan. Jainn.” He told her.

“How did you... how did you know we were here?” Ivore stammered the question.

“I felt... I felt it in my blood.” Androcles told him softly. “I felt both of you. I felt... I felt all of them. And something else.”

Revia’s eyes were clouded by tears and she gripped Ivore’s arm tightly. “What... what are you?” She gasped aloud as she gazed at those incredible azure blue orbs.

“By our ancestors!” Ivore almost yelled as they witnessed Elynth descend out of the dark sky and land easily on the edge of the roof, her talons gripping the steel and concrete wall. They watched Androcles smile and lift his arm to curl it under Elynth’s massive head as much as he was able. She lowered that head to within centimeters of his cheek and her golden eyes stayed on Ivore and Revia with an almost reverent look.

“What am I Tenna?” Androcles said. “What are we?” They watched him rise to his feet once more, easily over six foot tall Ivore estimated. “Evell Tenna Revia... evell wen vada Chanvor rie vada Saan.” (We Aunt... we are Children of the Blood)

Revia gasped aloud as her eyes went wide at his words. “How... my... my mother said that to me when I was only two years old! How do you know that?”

They saw his head tilt slightly skyward, as if listening to something they could not hear, and then those azure eyes focused completely on Revia.

“It is what my father has told me and each of my siblings on the birthing day of our second year of life.” Androcles spoke now and Revia could almost hear the slight inflection of his voice. “Evell wen Chanvor rie vada Saan Tenna.” Andro spoke as he rose to his full height. “My name is Androcles and I will return Tenna. Tenne Ivore. I will return for all of you very soon. Your family has come for you. All of you.”

Revia could not answer as the tears were pouring from her eyes and Ivore was holding her tightly to his body. She watched him turn quickly, his head lifting skyward once more and then she and Ivore saw him hold out his hand into the darkness. They both heard a muffled grunt and then they saw the body of the Arhtai Pack guard appear hurtling from the darkness and come to an abrupt halt directly in front of Androcles, his hand closed around the man’s throat.

“Sibfla!” Ivore gasped in disbelief.

“He has been watching you.” Androcles told them. “You... you come up here often and he...” Andro snarled savagely then, bringing the surprised young man’s face close to his and seeing his eyes go wide as those thick, dual fangs became fully extended in a ferocious snarl of anger. “Pafocha!” (Pervert)

Ivore and Revia knew instantly what Androcles was saying to them and their anger far outweighed whatever modesty they may have felt in front of a member of their family, no matter how new he may have been. To deny what their senses and their very hearts were telling them with such conviction would have made them utter fools.

Ivore and Revia were far from being fools.

“Will his absence be missed?” Androcles asked.

Ivore shook his head quickly. “He is new here and it is not uncommon for new soldiers to desert. They hate being assigned here.”

“Then I will drop his body from twenty thousand feet far from here and they will never find him.” Andro spoke as his azure blue eyes flared in obvious anger right into the face of the Arhtai Pack soldier.

“No!” Revia sounded.

Ivore looked at her. “He must die Revia my love. If he reveals what he has seen... he will...”

Revia stepped closer to Androcles now. “Remove him from this place but do not kill him mandri.” She said. There was no denying it for Revia. She could smell the absolute pureness of Androcles’ blood easily each time she took a breath. It was different from her mother’s blood yes, but still the same and Revia would recognize it anywhere. As would anyone born with Mahanlo blood within them. “He does not deserve to die Androcles; he is younger than you and he is ignorant to history, as are all of those of your age among the Arhtai Pack.”

Androcles looked at his Aunt and then back into the face of the Arhtai Pack soldier. His eyes were still wide in horrific fear as the young man gazed up at Androcles, his dual fangs and the head of the massive dragon not six inches from him.

“Be thankful my Tenna is more forgiving than I saric!” Androcles snarled at him. It was a simple Etheric assisted straight punch that Andro hit him with, right on the edge of his jaw. The young Arhtai Pack member dropped instantly into unconsciousness and Andro then turned to Elynth where he threw the young man’s body over his saddle. (Scum)

“What will you do with him?” Revia asked.

“I will return with him to my ship.” Andro answered her. “He will remain detained until such time as we have retrieved our family and the Onab from this profane world and then I will set him free.”

Ivore stepped forward quickly now. “How do you know...”

Androcles smiled then. “My father and I suspected that Tenne Lylor and Kesas Pengot were hiding something from us. Protecting some knowledge that they felt compelled to protect. It is the Onab isn’t it?”

Andro asked. “They are not dead as we have been told by so many.”

“My father!” Revia hissed as she reached for Ivore’s arm in happiness.

Androcles nodded. “He is on my ship as we speak Tenna Revia. Still protecting what he believes he must.”

“My... my mother?” Revia gasped now.

“She will be free within hours.” Androcles told her. “When my father arrives with the rest of our family, we will retrieve her. And all of you. Including Ch’eldo Iaaldo and all of the Onab who survive.”

“You know his name!” Ivore gasped now. “How!”

Androcles smiled now and he met his gaze. “He... he told my Bonded Sister and I.” He said.

Revia and Ivore heard the female chuckle and their eyes grew even wider as Elynth lowered her head until it was right beside Androcles’ once more. “And he was quite loud in doing so.” She commented.

“Carians!” Revia gasped as they heard her speak normally.

Androcles lifted his head slightly once more as he felt Sadi reach for him urgently. She had things under control but he needed to return quickly. He turned back to Revia and Ivore. “Tenna... does your father know you live?” He asked.

Revia shook her head. “No one does.” She answered. “We were brought here before the Night of Blood was done. No one knows we are here.”

“I must go.” Androcles told her. “I must go now.”

“Wait!” Revia gasped. “What should we...”

Androcles looked at her and Ivore. “My father arrives in a few hours Tenna Revia.” He told her. “I will tell him what is happening when he arrives. By this time in two days you will be free of this foul place! I give you my father’s word as his oldest son, as well as my own. Be prepared for when I return Tenna. It will be very fast and very violent.”

Revia and Ivore Arhtai watched Androcles leap onto the back of the huge, obsidian colored dragon and then that same creature spread its massive wings and launched itself into the ever-growing dawn sky.

[Chanvor rie vada Saan Tenna.] The confident words burst into Revia’s head as she gripped Ivore’s arm tightly and tears poured down her cheeks. [That is what we are. Always and forever.]

PREMONITION

Taig Kirek’s head was jammed against the bulkhead with the Pralor Particle Magnum pressed tightly to his left temple. Kalis was swiftly running his free hand over Taig’s body for weapons while Serale and Sherice kept PPM5s trained on Marda Kirek and one of Caylt’s security personnel. The PPM5s were the cut down version of the Pralor Particle Magnum just like the KM12. It was perfect for hiding and for male and females who had smaller hands. Ridor, Cvea and Caliria were covering Yasha, Caylt and his second security team member, all of them on their knees in the forward part of the lower cargo bay. None of them were even thinking of moving for now the cargo bay was full of six dragons, as well as six very stern looking members of Mahanlo-Leonidas bloodline.

The rear of the PREMONITION was open to the brightening dawn even more now than during takeoff. It was still dark enough at their altitude but that was changing quickly as the sun was rising. They heard a slight chirp and then they watched for a seventh and eighth time as Anthar and Jeth came into the rear of the ship via the long ramp, one right behind the other as they had done on countless times in the past.

Carisia and Lisisa looked at Marda and Taig and the others on their knees in front of them as they sat up in their saddles fully.

Lisisa looked at her sister as she lifted her helmet off her head. "This should be a happy story."

Carisia smiled at her older half sister and nodded. "Indeed."

Lisisa looked down as Denali and Arduri approached quickly, Deni's hands reaching up to remove the sensor array from Jeth's side as Arduri ran her hands over his massive head that he had lowered in front of her.

"They tried to take the ship." Denali told her as he lowered the sensor array and dropped it lightly to the floor with a bunch of others.

Lisisa and Carisia were looking at him with wide, disbelieving eyes. "Deni, you are joking, right?" Lisisa exclaimed.

"I wish I was." Denali answered as he reached for Lisisa. "Daio and Cowen are bringing the others from the cockpit."

"Staanian?" Lisisa gasped with her hands on his powerful arms.

Deni shook his head. "Still hidden... but Sadi says she was livid and wanted to act."

"Sadi, Ne'Veha and Meka?" Carisia asked him quickly.

"They were never in danger." He replied quickly to Carisia, knowing the relationship his brother's wives and mates had.

"Why? Why attempt such a thing?" Carisia gasped.

Deni shook his head. "I don't know. Sadi says they went loony when Andro and Elynth altered their track. Andro told her he felt..."

"What Deni?" Lisisa pressed him.

"Andro told Sadi he felt family." Denali told her. "Then he and Elynth went dark and silent. He's on his way back now, but they have been off the grid for almost twenty minutes and we are running out of time to get out of here."

Carisia turned her head to look out the back of the ship as Sehri and Lu'ria came up beside her. She sent out a pulse of inquiry and love to Androcles and instantly felt him answer her with an even more powerful pulse of love that extended to Lu'ria, Sehri, Caliria, Sadi and Ne'Veha equally. It almost took their breath's away and Lisisa noticed the reaction of her sister.

"Carisia?" She asked.

Carisia shook her head quickly. "He is almost... he is almost here. He is so... Lisisa he has found something and he is so happy."

"Found something?" Lisisa asked looking at Deni.

Denali shook his head. "Our sensor arrays picked up nothing out the normal."

"I demand you let us up!" Caylt's voice echoed over the cargo bay.

Ridor leaned over slightly from where he was standing above him and he prodded Caylt with the barrel of the PAR7. The PAR7, Particle Assault Rifle, was the cut down version of the larger one being massed produced on Manne and the Pralor homeworld now. Most the many Durcunusaan troops from the Union with them out here preferred the shorter weapon because of its size and mission flexibility. Andro's team had every type of weapon on board but they all had their favorites, and the PAR7 was Ridor's favorite.

"You demand?" Ridor commented. "Sport... you are lucky you and your friends are even alive after what you tried. Trying to hijack Androcles' ship has got to rank up there with the top one or two stupidest things to do in the universe."

As if on cue, Daio and Cowen prodded Lylor, Kesas and Aryera through the corridor and into the upper level of the cargo bay. They then prodded them down the stairs as Reva followed them and remained above on the upper level.

"I demand to speak to Androcles!" Lylor barked.

As the second oldest of the brothers her eon the ship and most often the voice of Andro when he was not here Denali stepped up to his uncle. “You demand nothing Tenne!” He spat. “Why have you done this? Tried to take Andro’s ship! You dared to threaten his Anome and his SirsanGai!”

Lylor looked at him. “I did no such thing boy!” He snarled turning his back to the ramp and looking at Denali. “And you would do well to recognize your elders!”

“My elders would not do what you have done!” Deni barked. “And even attempting what you have is threatening two of the women my fervon worship’s most in this life! You attempted to take his ship by force and put them at risk!”

“You know nothing boy!” Lylor hissed loudly. “You...”

“Knows far more than you could possibly imagine Uncle.” Andro’s voice carried to them and everyone whirled around now to see Elynth settling to the deck as her wings folded into her body. The doors to the ramp were closing silently and Andro stood beside Elynth for a moment before reaching up and throwing back his cowl and removing his helmet. He touched something on his forearm and all of them heard the internal speakers in the ship come alive.

“KertaGai... Elynth and I are back on board and the ramp doors are closing.” He spoke. “Engage the Shroud and take us out of here if you would.”

“On our way.” Sadi’s voice answered.

“You and SirsanGai are unhurt?” Androcles asked.

“We are fine duan enyla.” Ne’Veha replied now. “Meka as well. They were not very inventive in their actions and were subdued quickly.”

Androcles turned his head and looked at where his uncle and Kesas stood as he nodded his head. “Very well.” He answered.

Androcles moved over to stand in front of his Uncle while Reva moved closer on the stairway. He motioned with his head to Cowen and Ridor. “Release them please. All of them.”

Cowen and Ridor removed the flexible cuffs from Lylor and Kesas and then stepped back from them while Kalis and Daio removed the flexible cuffs from the others. They crowded around behind Lylor and Kesas, all of them staring at Androcles.

Andro looked at Lylor and Kesas. “You know what I found down there don’t you Tenne? Kesas Pengot?” He said calmly as he looked at them. “Or will you deny it even now?”

“You do not know what it is you speak of boy!” Lylor hissed at him. “You are but a child among our people because of your age! You know nothing of what we have been through in our lives! What we have had to fight! Where is the respect you showed us when you were beside your father speaking with us? We are your elders and you should show us the respect we have earned!”

“The respect I showed you when we were speaking with you before is still there Tenne.” Andro told him. “However, I am choosing to hold back on it for the moment because you lied to us. Both of you lied to us. To my father and to me.”

Lylor Kirek then made perhaps the very first serious mistake he had made in his entire lifetime. In his attempt to protect what he thought only he and Kesas knew about, Lylor stepped over the line of family and blood. He snarled viciously, barred his dual wolf fangs and then slapped Androcles hard across the face. His face showed his surprise when Andro’s head barely moved, but a small trickle of blood began to leak from the corner of Andro’s mouth. Lylor had struck him almost as hard as he could but the blow barely caused Androcles to flinch so Lylor began a verbal assault to compensate for what he thought was a badly landed slap.

“Your father should have taught you better manners boy!” Lylor snarled angrily at him. “I do not answer to...”

Lylor saw Androcles’ azure eyes flare brightly for the briefest of seconds and then he saw Andro’s lips curl back to reveal his own dual fangs. Longer, thicker and even more ferocious looking than Lylor Kirek’s and that is what stopped Lylor’s words. With a howl of anger Andro drove his closed fist into Lylor’s upper chest. Once more he encased his fist in an Etheric fuel cocoon, but he pulled back most of his full power for he would not break the bones of family. The less than half power blow doubled Lylor Kirek over instantly, his hands going to his chest as his eyes went wide and he struggled to breath in air.

“Lylor!” Aryera screamed from where she was standing to the side.

Marda and Taig also moved to help him but were blocked by Daio, Sherice and Cowen who lifted their weapons and leveled them at Aryera, her daughter and Taig.

“I wouldn’t.” Daio spoke laconically. “It won’t end well for any of you.”

They could do nothing but watch as with another scream of rage Andro held out his hand and the body of the Arhtai Pack soldier he had knocked unconscious flew from the deck where Elynth had dropped his body and into Andro’s left hand. He dangled the large Arhtai Pack troop from his left hand as if he weighed nothing at all even though it was obvious he was well over two hundred pounds.

“You know what I found down there Uncle!” Androcles screamed. “You and Kesas Pengot know! Respect is earned where we come from Uncle! It is earned and not given freely to those who think they deserve it for some reason!” Andro dropped the body of the Arhtai troop at Lylor’s feet. “I also found him.” Androcles growled savagely. “I found him and more like him guarding over two hundred of our blood that I could smell! Your blood Tenne! And the blood of my Tenna Kelia! Your descendants! And nearly two thousand Onab! That is what I found Uncle!”

“Onab!” Aryera Kirek gasped aloud with wide eyes. “That is not possible! There cannot be Onab down there. The Onab never...”

“Almost two thousand Onab from what Ch'eldo Iaaldo told me.” Androcles snarled. Andro stepped forward quickly and snatched Lylor up by the front of his shirt and lifted him off the deck to the astonished gasps of everyone present. Lylor was taller than Androcles by three inches, but assisted by his Etheric power Andro suspended his Uncle a good four inches off the deck.

“You accuse me of disrespect when you lie right to the face of my father!” Androcles spat vehemently. “You accuse me of disrespect when you act to take over my ship and put my wives and mates in harm’s way. My Anome! My SirsanGai! Sadi carries my children Uncle!” Androcles screamed at him, bringing his face closer to Lylor’s and the spittle splashing on Lylor’s cheeks.

“Androcles!” The female voice spoke firmly from behind him.

Kesas Pengot’s eyes nearly bugged out of his head when he heard that voice and Lylor’s eyes grew equally as wide. There was no mistaking that voice. It belonged to only one person that either of them had ever known. So distinct and full of life and confidence and authority. Only one voice had ever sounded like that.

“It... it cannot be!” Kesas stammered the words.

“In my long life I have come to discover that anything is possible Kesas Pengot.” Reva spoke as she stepped up behind Androcles now. She threw back the cowl that hid her face and held out her hand and placed it on her grandson’s shoulder.

“Ah Lylor Kirek, my Kelia’s beautiful husband and mate.” Reva spoke as she moved closer still and looked up into his disbelieving face. “Your nephew Androcles is the First Herald of the True King Lylor. Do you have any idea how many ways he could kill or cripple you and not even break a sweat in doing so? His father would do much worse if he was here Lylor, trust me when I tell you that.”

Reva looked at Androcles from the side. “Put him down staaniaketo.” She said. “Or do you wish to explain to your Tenna why the man she loves more than her own life has bruises all over his face.”

Andro met her gaze quickly and his near glowing azure colored eyes returned to their normal wolf persona. He released Lylor from his grasp, lowering him back to the deck gently and turned quickly to where Deion and Denali stood ready to act to defend their brother.

“Deni, Deo, take this scum...” Andro motioned to the still unconscious Arhtai Pack trooper on the deck. “Have Rano fashion a small portable cell and restraints and secure this midaeu before we return to Pakar Six. Father will want him interrogated extensively the moment he arrives.” Androcles turned back to Lylor Kirek, his anger still active but much subdued now as he stared at his Uncle. “I will return to this world soon and I will free the Onab and our blood Uncle. Your blood. The bloodline of your youngest daughter Revia.”

“Revia!” Lylor shouted. “My... she lives! Where? She is down there? Tell me!”

Reva took Androcles’ arms in her hands turning him to face her as Lylor continued to yell. [Go to Sadi and Ne'Veha staaniaketo.] Reva told him. [He would never have hurt them. you know this Androcles.]

[Do we staania?] Andro asked her. [They lied to father about the Onab. They lied even as they looked right at us. He will not be happy. You know this. We are family! We are blood!]

Reva nodded as she squeezed his arms. [Something that I will remind them about.] She spoke as she lifted her hand and rested it against his cheek. [We have found that which we thought lost forever Androcles. This... it needs to be a time of happiness.]

Androcles took a deep breath and nodded his head. [I must tell my father what we have discovered.] He said.

[Then go.] Reva told him. [I will take care of Lylor and Kesas and the others.]

Reva watched him nod his head and then he headed for the stairwell to the upper deck. The others had quickly gone about other duties when they saw Androcles depart without so much as a request for security. None of them were really concerned. Skilled though Lylor's people may have been, none of them were as well trained as Androcles' team and they knew it.

Reva turned to look at Lylor and Kesas who were kneeling on the deck staring at her in utter disbelief. Reva recognized Aryera, who was also staring at her with utter shock, but the others she did not know. She turned her dark eyes to Lylor and shook her head with a huge smile of relief and love as the tears began to pour from her eyes.

"Which one of you two dilcons came up with the terrible idea to try and steal this ship?" Reva asked them before losing it completely and wrapping her arms around Lylor's head just as he buried his face in her abdomen and let loose with a long wail of happiness that echoed across the cargo bay for many minutes. (Pinheads)

CHAPTER SEVENTY-FOUR

PREMONITION

ORBIT OF PAKAR SIX

"...Been like that all of this time?" Lylor gasped in disbelief as he stared at her from the bench beside her.

They had not left the cargo bay of the ship, Aryera, Taig, Marda, Caylt and Yasha and the few others crowding around Reva as they realized just who she truly was. To say Reva Mahanlo was a legend among the Kirek Pack, among any of the original Lycavorian Packs, would have been a colossal understatement of epic proportions. Lylor Kirek had not released her for nearly fifteen minutes as he wept into her abdomen and Reva held his head and allowed the tears to come once again. Accepting that she was indeed alive and then actually seeing her in her true form brought more tears. Yasha and Caylt had not seen their father ever act in such a way, his eyes tear filled and still happy. Though they never really knew Lylor Kirek, they had heard he was a man of little emotion, a statement that was not correct from what they could see.

Reuniting with her blood was becoming a mentally taxing event but until she held her daughter in her arms once more, it would not be complete for Reva. Now adding dear friends that she had not seen for equally as long made Reva move to the small bench along the wall, everyone crowding around her and trying to not let the fact that they were surrounded by eleven dragons bother them. Lylor and Kesas sat on either side of her, Reva holding both their hands tightly. Chiron had returned to the computer station that had been made for him between Mari and Brendi and the three of them were going through all of the data that had been collected. A single Portal Jump had put them back in orbit of Pakar Six, where they were holding station now, though no one on the surface was yet aware they had returned.

Reva nodded her head to Lylor's question as she once more wiped the tears away from her eyes. "Martin's wife and mate, her name is Anja, she is a blessed healer and with the help of others she returned me to my true body only a few days ago." She answered. "I'm still getting used to what was once muscle memory to me. In some ways, it is frustrating, but it is also so very enlightening. It is like being reborn. You knew what I agreed to Lylor."

Lylor nodded his head. "Yes, but I never saw you like that and Kelia would not tell me what the process was. It was too painful for her to recall and I did not wish to push her given what we were going through."

Reva nodded her head. "You did the right thing. I was not nearly as beautiful as I am now." She answered her dark eyes going wider as she realized what she had just said. Kesas, Lylor and the others began to laugh softly at her humor and Reva realized just then that the laconic sense of dry humor that Martin, Androcles and all of their family had was beginning to rapidly rub off on her and she welcomed it with open arms as she smiled brilliantly at her own joke.

"That is why we did not smell you at first." Kesas spoke now as his laughter died. "The cryo process alters a natural scent and as long as your body was affected by the chemicals involved, they would..."

Reva nodded once more. "Yes. My true scent won't fully return for at least another two days, but I grow stronger every hour. Anja is truly a magical healer."

"And she is one of his wives and mates?" Lylor asked.

"She is the one that developed the process to remove me from cryo so quickly and not suffer any side effects." Reva answered. "She is doing the same for Kelia and whoever else we may find. She is a tiny thing but her medical knowledge and skill surpasses even that of the Onab."

Kesas shook his head. "We should have realized that he would have detected that we were not telling him everything." He said in disgust. "He is the Mard Revik. He is the last direct descendant of Daniho and Ashten. A perfect combination of them both as Chiron told us. He would have the memories of both Daniho and Ashten within him."

"It was Androcles that sensed you were holding something back." Reva told them with another smile. "He is the first and most powerful of the three Tarivuos, but all of them are so much alike, so much more. The dragon blood within them, it allows them to see and sense things that others cannot. It... it can be very unnerving at times, but it is a gift. This is what Androcles told his father."

"And he made this decision based on just that?" Lylor asked.

Reva nodded her head. "There is much you need to discover about Martin, his story is so very unique, but even he has not fully been able to comprehend the memories left to him by those who have come before him. Nor has Androcles. They are the two most powerful wolves that I have felt since my sons lived, and they are frighteningly similar in what they do. They are even larger and stronger than my mate and husband in wolf form and all of you remember him. And their auras will make you shudder."

Lylor looked at her oddly as Kesas looked at Reva with wide eyes. "Temokah was... he was awe inspiring." Kesas spoke softly.

"Yes, he was." Reva spoke lovingly as she thought back on her mate for the first time in more years that she could remember. Perhaps now would be the time to bring his memory back to the forefront and allow her family to see him for who he was. Yes, perhaps it was time.

Lylor shook his head slowly. "But I felt nothing like what you speak of like this from him mother." He told her respectfully. "Powerful yes, but he was no more than a normal young Alpha. All of them. They are family yes, but..."

Reva nodded her head with a smile. "All of them have learned to shield their wolf auras Lylor. Shield it to the point that this is what anyone would feel unless they wished it." Reva told them. "A gift taught to them by their father and their mothers from the moment they came into this world. Do not let what you do not feel trick you." She told them. "Many of them are only half Lycavorian, but it is Martin's blood within their veins. My blood. Mahanlo blood. Any of them is more than a match for any of you and your people, but do not take that as an insult." Reva turned her head and looked at Aryera and the others. "All of them have trained in the ways of combat from the time that they could walk. So many different ways of fighting that it would boggle your minds. It is the Spartan way of life that they all now follow and embrace with their hearts so tightly. Where we once considered wolves of their age simply children, among those who followed Daniho and Ashten this changed long ago. It has reached its apex now with our people. This Spartan mentality is embedded deeply within the fabric of their society and the societies of many who are not even Lycavorian. They embrace it; they live it; they breath it every day. Especially Androcles and his brothers, sometimes more so than their own father. It is who they are." Reva reached out and placed her hand flat on Lylor's cheek as she smiled at him lovingly.

"Androcles... he would not have permanently injured you Lylor Kirek, you are his Tenna Kelia's handsome love, and his honored Tenne, but you would not have been able to defeat him and it would have been a very painful message for you to receive. I stopped him, but all of you must realize and take this into account in the future. You are family to them. All of you. The moment they came to know that you all lived, you became family. You became their focus.”

“As it once was with us on Cerath, family is more precious to them than their own lives and they will protect you, most viciously if they have to. They are younger than you, but they have fought in wars that would make all of you shudder. Martin and Androcles most of all. In battles that were equally as horrific as ours were against the Iais’Kai, and they all bear the scars of these battles, physical and mental. I have witnessed many of them from afar and if you do not believe anything, believe what I tell you. They are not children, and our people must not treat them as such. They will have no remorse for what has taken place. What our blood has had to endure. Especially Martin and Androcles. They are the two most rooted in this Spartan way of life that they follow. Deion and his brothers follow next and then Martin’s daughters. Do not let their beauty fool you, they are just as lethal as their brothers.”

Lylor looked at her. “It felt... it felt like I had been hit by a falling tree.” He said. “And my chest burned.”

Reva nodded her head. “And he was holding his anger in check.” She told him. “He is like his father. Like all of our people now who left with Daniho and Ashten as I said. They have embraced their full emotions Lylor, the feral nature of our people. They embraced it and learned how to control it. Channel it. I watched through the millennia as they became powerful because of it. Even more so when the Pralor bloodline of Sumar joined ours and gave us the one thing that we had not yet discovered. Purpose. They follow a code now, much like we once did. The Spartan code that I speak of. It is a powerful code; a rigid code of honor and respect and justice. They call themselves Spartans. I have watched through the millennia as they became feared by all who knew them and were their enemy; and they are loved by all who are their allies and friends.”

Lylor shook his head just as Kesas had. “We were fools.” He gasped.

Reva shook her head. “No. You were doing what both of you swore to my sons. You were protecting the Onab, and there can be no fault applied here.” Reva said softly. “I cannot believe some of them survived. How many Lylor?”

“Five hundred initially.” Lylor answered her without hesitation. “They will have grown since we departed. Most that came with us were young couples. Engineers and Scientists. They will have had children. I do not know now because Nyser and Yelma trapped me in cryo and...” He lowered his head almost as if he was shamed.

“I knew the Arhtai Pack would not have killed them.” Kesas continued right after Lylor. “They needed them. And since the Onab technology the Arhtai Pack kept continued to work, I knew they were still alive. Ranol Nenay’s oldest daughter and the few she taught could not have maintained all of the Onab technology, so I knew that Ch’eldo and the others had to be alive. I hoped beyond hope anyway.”

“Ch’eldo?” Reva spoke softly.

“A few... a few dozen were executed by the Arhtai Pack during the Dremsa rie Saan, but Nyser Arhtai quickly halted this.” Kesas said.

Reva looked at him. “Nyser Arhtai knew of the devotion to Daniho, and our bloodline that the Onab held.” She spoke. “He knew that they would not bow to them.”

Kesas nodded his head. “Yes.” He said. “We did not know where they had taken them. We could never find them after the Dremsa rie Saan. And we had no idea that Revia was alive.”

Reva turned back to Lylor. “Is all this... all this hate and death... is it because of their children during the war?” Reva asked. “We all lost so much...”

Kesas nodded his head. “That was part of it in the beginning yes. I think it came down to envy in the end. Yelma and Nyser Arhtai envied what the Mahanlo bloodline had.”

Reva met Kesas’ eyes. “They will regret that until death them.” She snarled.

Lylor looked at Reva quickly and with great emotion in his eyes. “Revia is our youngest mother.” He told her with pride in his voice. “A perfect image of her mother. We named her after you. She was the favorite of her siblings. She was mated to an Arhtai Pack Alpha. Nyser’s youngest brother Ivore!” He hissed in anger. “He swore to me he would honor us and... he lied to me and...”

Reva put her hand on his shoulder and shook her head. “Hold no anger for him Lylor. Be proud of him.” She said quickly. “Androcles told me through the Etheric realm what he has done. What he and Revia have done. He saw them both. It is because of him that Ch’eldo and the others survive and their bloodline continues.

If what Androcles also tells me is true, Ivore Arhtai loves your daughter Revia blindly. They have at least fourteen children and Revia is carrying another in her womb even as we speak. Ivore teaches them the history of our bloodline and our people on Cerath. In many ways, he is just like you.”

“The young Prince told you all of this?” Kesas gasped aloud.

Reva nodded her head. “This Etheric realm that exists among our people, it is so much larger than we ever believed. When Sumar’s bloodline joined ours, became part of our pure bloodline, this is when we truly began to understand and use the Etheric realm as it was meant to be used. Martin, Androcles, their wives and mates, their children, their skills cannot truly be measured and they use these abilities in many ways. Our people, some of them can advance these abilities higher than others, but it allows all of us to use this skill and therefore imprint on our children even more than we were able to in our time.”

“No... no daughter of Kelia and I would have ever willingly given herself to any Arhtai Pack member after the Dremsa rie Saan!” Lylor spat. He looked at Reva and a small smile then creased his face as he realized something. “He kept his honor and his word to me.” Lylor said. “Ivore Arhtai kept his honor and his word to me and to Kelia! The day he took Revia as his wife and mate he swore to us to always honor her and our family.”

Reva nodded her head. “Well... if what Androcles saw and felt is correct... this Ivore Arhtai has done just that.” Reva took a deep breath. “Our operational plans will change now. Androcles will be already planning a way to rescue them while Martin and the others find and rescue Kelia and any with her.”

“How soon before Martin comes?” Lylor asked.

Reva met his eyes. “Six hours, no more. His plan is to attack the Arhtai Pack at first light tomorrow.”

“So soon?” Kesas gasped. “Is that even possible?”

Reva chuckled softly. “He called it Shock and Awe.” She told them. “And yes, with Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas anything is possible. His mind is an absolute twisted realm of brutal military thinking and nothing he does is ever normal. I have watched him ever since he came out of cryo himself and he has driven his enemies to the brink of insanity and beyond with his actions. No one has ever been able to predict what he will do. And that is why they always fail against him.”

“He was... he was in cryo?” Kesas asked her. “But why?”

Reva nodded her head. “It is a very long story and one you will no doubt discover within a few weeks. It is a very interesting story to say the least. And very painful for Martin. It is why he lost his father forever, and his mother for nearly three thousand years.”

“Carians!” Lylor spoke.

Reva nodded his head. “This is where his drive and love of family comes from.” She told them. “And this is what he has passed to his children. He will not tolerate threats to his blood. Any kind of threat. And he will severely punish any who does his blood harm.”

“The Arhtai Pack?” Lylor asked softly.

Reva rose to her feet and stepped away from them, all of them watching her as she crossed the small four-meter distance to where Caydren and Cinol sat on the deck beside Jeth and Anthar. Their eyes went wide when she fearlessly ran her hand over Caydren’s snout and his head leaned close to her chest against her breasts in obvious reverence. Caydren motioned his twin closer to him with his head and soon Reva was stroking Cinol’s snout as well. Reva turned back to Kesas and Lylor and the others.

“He will not punish the entire Arhtai Pack... that is not his way” Reva said softly. “After tomorrow, however, any who took part in or supported the vile acts of the Dremsa rie Saan will be marked for death. If they do not die by the end of tomorrow, and many will not, then the Mahanlo-Leonidas bloodline will hunt them down for eternity until all of them reside within the walls of jorbhe. That is what Martin has sworn to me, and Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas has never broken a promise.”

“Renal and the Nenay Pack will arrive just after him if you are correct.” Kesas spoke after a very long pause as her words sank in to everyone there in the cargo bay. “They will have additional intelligence with them. Ranol has already sworn to me that they will help us in any way they are able.”

“You trust them Kesas?” Reva asked after she kissed Caydren and Cinol’s snouts softly and began walking back towards them.

“Three of Lylor and Kelia’s children have been members of the Nenay pack since the Dremsa rie Saan.” Kesas told her. “They have taken wives and husbands from the Nenay Pack and have many children and grandchildren among them. Renaol and his Pack have protected them ferociously all of this time.”

Lylor smiled slightly and Reva saw his eyes become moist. "I have spoken with them." He told her. "Our children. When I finally got them to stop crying, they told me all of it."

"Will they be coming to Pakar Six?" Reva asked.

Lylor nodded his head. "Yes."

"Ranol is bringing his entire family." Kesas said. "He plans to..."

Reva looked at him. "What?"

"He plans to beg Martin for forgiveness." Kesas said.

"Carians... forgiveness for what?" Reva asked.

"For allowing this to happen." Kesas spoke. "He swore to Daniho and Ashten that he would always honor them by looking after their sister and their royal family."

"And he feels as if he failed them." Reva said softly, nodding her head. She shook her head quickly right after though as she returned to the bench between them. "It will not matter to Martin. Once he discovers that the Nenay Pack has shielded our blood, protected them, and have made them family... whatever perceived sins that Ranol Nenay thinks that he carries will be no more. Of that I can assure you."

"What... what is Martin really like Lady Reva?" Kesas asked.

Reva shook her head. "No... now Lylor Kirek... you need to go to Androcles and make amends for your actions. Words carry much weight within our family once more and you owe him an apology for putting Sadi and Ne'Veha at risk, even a little, with your silly plan to take his ship from him. Sadi is his Anome and she carries his children in her womb. He has loved her with all that he is since he was eight months old. Ne'Veha is his SirsanGai, his beloved Elven heart."

"Lady Reva we..." Aryera began to speak.

Lylor shook his head. "No, sister." He said firmly. "Mother Reva is correct. This is my task. It was my decision and I will make amends for being so foolish." He rose to his feet confidently and looked at Reva who stared back at him with pride and love in her dark eyes.

"He is with the others helping to store their equipment. This ship is still very new to them in some ways and they are storing equipment in its proper place. They are on the deck above us in the large warehouse like room twenty meters down the corridor from the elevator." Reva told him. "Hold nothing back Lylor. With Androcles or his father."

"I won't any longer." Lylor spoke. "Not anymore."

Reva canted her head. "Go then!" She told him. "I wish to speak with Taig and Marda and Kesas' young children." She said. She chuckled lightly. "Though I dare say young is not a word I should use."

Lylor Kirek found the large warehouse like room one deck above them easily enough, all he had to do was follow the noise. There was music playing in the background of the room, a type of music that he had never heard before but one that apparently, all of those before him had. All of the young men were shirtless now as they were muscling large crates around the room, pushing them against the walls tightly, or lowering them into large cache containers in the floor. Cache containers that Lylor took note could hold quite a bit of supplies and whatever else they needed it to hold. Lylor's eyes settled on where Androcles stood beside the slightly taller young man who reeked of Kirek Pack blood, and the much shorter red haired female who was Androcles' sister. She was only half Lycavorian, that Lylor could tell easily, but as Reva had told them, the wolf blood within her was powerful and pure. As Lylor moved closer, his eyes settled on Androcles' back and he winced slightly when he saw the long, jagged scar that extended almost entirely down the right side of his back. He also saw the three large spots where it appeared as if he had been shot with a large caliber weapon. Three times in the chest area. His upper body was dotted with additional scars, but once more Reva had been correct. These were not people who hid behind desks and titles. Lylor could also tell right away that the taller Kirek Alpha had claimed the red-haired female who was Androcles' sister. He could sense the powerful connection of love and commitment between the two of them. The total devotion to each other and to... another woman. This knowledge did not surprise Lylor as much as he thought it would. The scent of Androcles' sister was firmly imbedded in the blood of the taller Kirek Alpha as she stood leaning up against his side casually. This second woman's scent was imbedded in both of their scents and Lylor's eyes grew a little wider when he realized that this Kirek Pack Alpha and Androcles' sister were anomes. Lylor had never heard of such a thing before and the truth of it was right before him so he could not deny it. A non-pureblood Anome union. He never heard of such a thing let alone seen one, but now before him was exactly that. It was almost too much to realize.

"You don't have to be afraid Tenne." The female voice echoed softly from behind him and Lylor whirled around quickly. Nara's azure blue eyes gazed upon her uncle with love and respect.

"Tenne?" Lylor stammered the words but quickly realized why she spoke as she had.

Nara smiled at him. "I am your mandra." She said. "Andro's sister. Well... one of his sisters." She said with a smile. "We are all your family Tenne." Nara moved closer to him and took his arm in her hands. Lylor looked at her as she smiled at him and the azure blue color of her eyes reflected the light of the cargo room. Lylor was slightly taken aback as he realized by her scent just how old she was. This female Alpha pureblood could not have been more than eighteen years old, yet her scent already indicated that she was mated to not only a powerful Alpha male but another female as well. She was also one of the most powerful Alpha females that Lylor had ever felt outside of his Kelia. He could easily smell the Mahanlo-Leonidas blood within her and the power it brought to her, but there was also something very different about her. Something confident and powerful.

"Come." Nara spoke drawing him towards where Androcles was standing.

Eliani was typing on her P1 quickly, her fingers moving like they were in a musical concerto. Her hair was still in the long braid that they used when flying but she had removed the upper portion of her body armor and was now just wearing a t-shirt over her ample chest. Her face was concentrating as she stood between her brother and Jomann and she finally looked up at them. They had been muscling the equipment crates all around trying to find the right set up and Eliani was pretty sure they had it now.

"If we keep it like it is, we can squeeze in four hundred fervon." She told Andro.

"That's all?" Andro asked.

Eliani shrugged her shoulders. "Sadi and Ne'Veha didn't design her to be a transport Andro." Eliani said. "We try to take anymore and we risk not even getting off the surface."

Andro nodded his head. "I know. Anse!"

"We can strip three KADENs Andro." Jomann offered up the suggestion. "Right down to their rivets. We've done it before. They are small enough to get into the clearing you described and we can get everyone in one load. The PREMONITION and three KADENs."

"Eli?" Andro asked her.

Eliani nodded her head. "It will be tight, very tight, but once we get back to SPARTA'S WRATH we can spread everyone out so that they are more comfortable. Mother will not release Tenna Kelia or any others from the ship until she is sure everyone is checked anyway."

"Everyone goes in one trip." Andro spoke. "Father and his team will have the bulk of the Durcunusaan force that we are bringing backing him up. We leave no one behind. No one."

"Avoi." Eliani whispered.

"Fervon?" Nara's voice interrupted them and Androcles turned slowly. He had smelled his uncle well before he had entered the storeroom, but no one would do or say anything to him unless Andro first did. Except Nara of course. Eliani grinned at her younger sister knowing that Nara had always felt she held something over all her other siblings because her eye coloring matched that of Androcles' and their mother Aricia.

Andro turned slowly and looked at his uncle and then his sister. Nara grinned at the look in his eye and leaned up beside him, kissing her brother's cheek before patting her hand on his chest. Eliani chuckled softly when Andro leaned over quickly and nuzzled Nara's cheek with a brother's affection. All of them knew Andro could never stay mad at his siblings for very long. He loved all of them too much.

Andro turned to Lylor then as Nara held his arm and looked at her sister. "Tenne." He said calmly.

Lylor looked around the large room. "You are... you are trying to decide how many you can carry?" He finally said.

Androcles nodded his head. "Yes. If we had had this information before, then this would not need to be done. Now we must improvise. I don't like to improvise."

Lylor looked at him. "Pen brol sorgur mandri." Lylor finally stated firmly and without any doubt. How could there be any doubt within him when all he could smell was Mahanlo-Leonidas blood all around him in some shape or form. (I am sorry nephew)

Andro stepped closer to him. "If there is not trust Uncle..." Andro spoke softly.

Lylor nodded his head. "Then there can be nothing." He echoed the words. "My actions were ill-advised and piegn."

Andro nodded his head. "Yes, they were." He said. "And you would not have succeeded. You should have seen that right away tenne."

Lylor bristled only slightly at the dress down from the much younger wolf, because Lylor Kirek knew that Androcles was correct. He knew that Androcles could have continued berating his tactics, but Androcles waved his hand dismissively, ending that portion of the discussion with honor and care.

"Given what information you and Lord Pengot have carried within you all of these years, I may have reacted the same in your shoes. It is behind us." Andro said. "Now we have to figure out the best way to get our blood and the Onab off this world. We first thought we had only one target, and now we have two. We have to adjust. Adapt." Andro motioned to Eliani and Jomann now. "My sister Eliani and Captain Jomann... my Durcunusaan First and my sister's husband and mate."

Lylor was slightly taken aback when Eliani leaned up on her tip toes just as Nara had done and kissed his weathered cheek. "Una coi ea alinnyng Tenne." Eliani told him. (It is a blessing Uncle)

Lylor looked at Eliani and the smiling twinkle in her dark green eyes. He turned his gaze to Jomann now as Eliani once more leaned up against his side and his arm pulled her close to him. Eliani and Brendi had tossed aside all matters of decorum when it came to Jomann. If they were with their husband and mate, they were touching him in some manner. Their interactions on SPARTA'S WRATH had become almost as legendary as Andro, Sadi and the others.

"How..." Lylor looked at Jomann. "How is it that a Kirek Pack Alpha is among you? I was under the impression all of the Kirek Pack came with me and Kelia."

Jomann nodded his head. "Lady Reva believes it was something that Lord Daniho and Lord Ashten did without telling anyone." Jomann answered. "Even Chiron was unable to discover the how of it. Or when."

"It is becoming more and more apparent that they did this quite a bit. Daniho and Ashten were masters of subterfuge and guile." Lylor spoke and all of them heard the tone of respect and awe in his voice.

"So, it would seem." Androcles agreed. "As was our staanio Sumar."

Lylor looked at him. "The one of... the one who carried Pralor blood within him?"

Androcles nodded his head. "There is so much that we need to share with one another Tenne Lylor. And we will. But right now, now we must focus on recovering Tenna Kelia and whoever else bears our blood."

Lylor looked at him and nodded his head. "Agreed." He spoke confidently. "What can I do?"

Androcles looked at him. "You can give whatever information that you have on the cryo pods that hold our chroray to Eliani here." Androcles told him. "It is the same type of cryo chamber as you were in correct?"

Lylor nodded his head. "Yes, why?"

Androcles smiled at him. "Because in approximately one hour, we are going to return to Pakar Six Uncle and we are going to remove the Arhtai's Pack influence over the Kirek Pack. No more blood scanners or spies. Now they will face us directly and answer for what they have done."

PREMONITION

ORBIT OF PAKAR SIX

They may have been separated by several thousand light years at least, but there was no denying that Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas was livid with rage. Rage that was directed solely at Lylor and Kesas and rightfully so. His communication had not been expected, Androcles telling Lylor and Kesas that his father must have felt the spike of emotions in him when he saw and spoke with Revia and Ch'eldo. He took his father's transmission, telling Lylor that if he didn't, then his father would know something was wrong and more than likely arrive in orbit blasting everything in sight.

"The Onab?" Martin spoke looking at his son in the transmission. He was leaning over the table with his hands spread out in front of him, desperately trying to maintain his temper, but it was becoming increasingly harder to do so the more Andro told him what had taken place. Andro could tell that they were at least back on Jetania which was a good thing since they didn't need his father losing his temper on a ship in orbit.

"The Onab?" Martin said again, his voice carrying his frustration and worry. It was easy enough to detect for Aricia and For'mya and his other wives and mates who sat closest to him at the table, for like him, they were just as angry that their children had been put in danger because Lylor and Kesas had not told them of the Onab. "The same Onab who are supposed to have been dead for the last fifty thousand years." Martin snarled angrily. "Those Onab!"

Andro knew his father wasn't mad at him or any of his children so he tried to mitigate his anger as best he could, knowing that it would not help. "Yes." Andro replied quickly. "They have become lax father and whatever security they have guarding the Onab is unprepared."

"Unprepared." Martin said nodding his head. "And what if they weren't unprepared keto?" Martin growled. "What if they were waiting for you?"

"Martin... perhaps..." Reva began to intercede but even she stopped when she saw his dark brown eyes, normally so bright and intelligent and full of life, shift to the yellow gold of his wolf persona.

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas was the only wolf alive with yellow gold eyes, no Lycavorian came even remotely close to him in that regard. His eyes were part of the mysticism about him. Many people said his wolf eyes could look right through your skin and into your soul, or that he could kill you with a simple glance. Though she knew these were all stories, while in her sphere form, Reva had witnessed several times where poor souls had been on the receiving end of Martin's wrath through the years. It had not been pleasant to watch, even from afar, and she doubted it was any better up close.

"Perhaps staania..." Martin spoke, his voice tempered and even which made his eyes even that much more terrifying. "Perhaps my uncle and those with him can explain to me why they put my family at risk." Martin asked her.

"There was truly no risk." Kesas made the mistake of answering, not realizing just how angry Martin was. "We are pledged with the protection of the Onab and we..."

"Put my children at risk!" Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas screamed now causing Kesas' eyes to explode open at the vitriol with which the words came across. "You put my grandchildren at risk! My grandchildren!" Martin's yellow gold eyes were wide now and his dual wolf fangs, normally quite menacing and terrifying to behold, were now fully extended to their complete and full two and a quarter inches in length and they were absolutely chilling to gaze upon. "Aur nathos!"

"Kelia is my wife and mate!" Lylor shouted the words, though his heart was not really in it. He knew he and Kesas had been wrong in what they had attempted.

"For via coi aur nathos!" Martin roared once more. "We will move stars and burn planets to return her to her family! But not at the risk of others of our family! Would she have approved of you putting her unborn blood in harm's way?" (And she is my family)

"We did not know if we could trust you!" Kesas barked out. "We..."

Martin called forth his Shi Viska in a fit of rage and with a howl of anger none of them had ever heard from an Alpha wolf ever before, he swung the Shi Viska against the corner of the large granite table. The table was six inches thick and polished to perfection but it could not stand against the Shi Viska in Martin's hand and he completely severed the corner of the table in his anger and those in the transmission could only stare at him in unabashed distress.

"Someone shut that fool up before I put my size eleven boot so far up his ass he will be spitting shoelaces for a fucking year!" Martin roared.

Lylor stood up now and took Kesas' arm, motioning with his head at his surprised face. They had not expected such a reaction and neither of them truly knew how to respond. In all his many years, Lylor Kirek had seen only one wolf as savagely angry as Martin now was; but it was long ago in a time long forgotten. A time that Lylor had thought was long forgotten, along with the ideals and values of that time. Looking at Martin in the transmission... perhaps... perhaps he had been wrong.

"If you wish to place blame... then blame me!" Lylor snapped at him finally. "It was my decision and..."

"I don't wish to place blame on anyone!" Martin spat angrily. "I want my family to start acting like my family and start believing again!"

“Martin, you don’t know what we have had...” Lylor began to speak but he saw Martin shake his head.

“No!” Martin barked loudly silencing his words. “You forget Tenne Lylor... I have the memories of my grandfathers! All of them! I may not be able to understand many of them right now, but I have seen with my own eyes what they endured! What all of you endured in that time! Androcles has seen this as well. What you and the Kirek Pack has endured since then is probably equally horrific if not more so... but they never let this overwhelm them. They never let this put family at risk.”

Lylor met Martin’s wolf eyes in the transmission now, his own light blue eyes changing to the wolf within him as he felt pride swell within his chest. “No.” Lylor spoke firmly. “They never allowed us to give up. Ever.”

“Just as I will never give up.” Martin spoke with a nod. “Not me, nor my children nor the women that hold my heart and soul in their hands. Our family does not give up.”

Lylor looked at Reva sitting at the table and he saw the tears streaking down her cheeks and he turned back to the transmission. “No, we do not.”

All of them watched Martin take a deep breath and then he looked at Lylor as his eyes returned to normal. “I need to ask Tenne. Rescuing my Aunt, all those with her, any who still help us, this will happen. On that you have my oath, but...” He spoke now. “I need to know... I can’t hold this in any longer.”

Lylor looked at Kesas, who moved up beside him now, both of them knowing to what Martin was referring. “My King... perhaps...”

“Kesas you know, don’t you?” Martin asked him.

Kesas paused for a long moment before nodding his head. “Yes.” He answered finally.

“Then tell me.” Martin asked him.

“Martin, we...” Kesas tried one last time.

“Tell me!” Martin almost shouted the order.

Kesas looked quickly at Reva and saw her staring at him. Androcles’ gaze was focused on him as were the other sets of eyes at the small table. He turned back to Martin and took a deep breath.

“There were two thousand and forty-three members of the Mahanlo bloodline that had survived when we departed Cerath.” Kesas spoke looking at Reva. “Most were what remained of Temokah’s younger sisters and brothers.”

“Temokah?” Martin asked now looking at Reva in the transmission. “Staania... this was grandfather’s name?”

Reva nodded her head as she looked at him. “Yes, Martin. I remember all of them... so strong and brave.”

Kesas turned back to Martin. “When the Dremsa rie Saan fell upon us, all of those who were not mated among the Mahanlo bloodline had found wives and husbands among the Kirek Pack. None of them trusted the other Packs and would not even associate with the Nenay and Arhtai Packs.”

Martin nodded his head. “Kesas... you are avoiding the answer.”

Kesas shook his head. “No, Milord King... I am... I am trying not to remember.” He said honestly. “When the Dremsa rie Saan came, there were fifteen thousand four hundred and two who bore the bloodline of Mahanlo within them. Young and old. Not just Lylor and Kelia’s children, but hundreds of children from the others as well. So many proud and strong...” Kesas looked at Martin. “They butchered all of them Milord King... thousands of them... even those who could not lift a hand to defend themselves.” Kesas saw Martin stagger in the transmission, Aricia and For'mya reaching for him even as Anja, Dysea and the others broke into horrified tears.

“Among those... among those they killed during the Dremsa rie Saan were almost five... almost five hundred children who were barely a year old. The parents... they were slaughtered as they tried to protect their children.”

The agonizing and mournful howl that followed, none of them would ever forget for as many years as they had left. It was a howl of sorrow that cut right through their blood and deep into their souls, echoing off the walls of their own hearts as Lylor, Kesas, Aryera and the others could only watch. They felt it too, it was hard not to feel the sorrow, but in that sorrow, deep within the heart of the beast they felt it. A brightness that started as a swirl of light and began to spin faster and faster until it was lighting up their hearts as well.

The light of retribution.

KOLTAR FOUR
CAPITAL CITY OF LEPIRI
ARHTAI PACK COMPOUND AND MILITARY HEADQUARTERS LEVEL FOUR SYSTEMS MONITORING

It was the main nerve center for the entire Arhtai Pack military apparatus across the entire system.

The Arhtai Pack Compound itself was nearly ten square miles and was centered directly in the main portion of the capital city of Lepiri. The compound was broken into four different districts with the main living structure making up the centerpiece of the ten-square mile area. Everything was completely open to the public and thousands upon thousands of citizens walked across the compound's total area every day, however, at the issuance of one word, the entire ten square mile area of the compound could be cut off from the rest of the city and turned into an utter fortress.

The compound was broken into four command districts, North, South, East and West.

The Northern Command Monitoring Station was the facility that supervised all types of sensor and communications logs that were routinely checked. It was also home to the vast and illegal network of communications taps and illicit sensor logs that were taken every day from across Koltar Four, Anlar Prime and even Pakar Six. The men and women who worked in this facility had some of the highest security clearances known to exist within the Arhtai Pack. The Alpha who was in charge of all of this was Yelma Arhtai's oldest brother and probably one of the most hated men anywhere on Koltar Four. Kanal Arhtai had many sick perversions that his position allowed him to get away with and Yelma always looked the other way when it came to his activities because he was brutally efficient and completely loyal to her. While many did not like working for Kanal Arhtai, they certainly enjoyed the many perks that came along with that job.

His name was Comelo and he had been working this job for nearly a thousand years. Day in and day out it was the same, just as it had been for the man who held the job before him for close to ten thousand years. He did not have much to do, check several sensor feeds when he first came on duty, transfer the data to storage cores and then monitor the same four computer screens for ten hours until his relief came. It was uneventful, just as he liked it, and his position allowed him the extra credits needed to enjoy different events within the capital with different female wolves of questionable stature.

Comelo's life was about to take a very unpleasant left hand turn.

Comelo inserted his security badge into the wall mounted server unit and brought up the first of nineteen Blood Scanner and Video units in place on Pakar Six. They were divided between the three major thoroughfares of the base where most everyone had to pass through nearly everyday. They were ingeniously hidden, or so they thought, within normal computer data terminals that were used for simple information gathering or directions. While the Kirek Pack had probably discovered most of them after so many years, they could not risk tampering with them or shutting them down for reasons Comelo did not know or understand. All he knew was that no one had ever tried to damage or interrupt the hidden sensor arrays.

Until today.

Comelo had to blink quickly several times as he watched the short data log. It was only thirteen seconds long, but it was very clear and obviously showed a young woman who had blazing azure blue colored eyes, long, raven black hair and wicked looking dual wolf fangs. Comelo watched as the last five seconds was the young woman physically pulling the sensor array from inside the data terminal it had been hidden in, snarling savagely right in front of the camera and then smashing the sensor array to the ground ending the transmission. Comelo was not a stupid man, he had heard many rumors in his lifetime and his years working here about what many referred to as the Dremsa Rie Saan.

The Night of Blood.

The night the Mahanlo bloodline had been declared enemies of the people because of some disease they would not allow Arhtai Pack doctors to treat. On that night, thousands had been killed. Mainly Mahanlo Pack members, but many Kirek Pack members and at least several hundred Arhtai Pack members. All of them had been declared traitors to their people and were ordered arrested or executed on sight. Comelo had been born long after this night and his father and mother never spoke of it to him or his brothers and sisters. It was almost as if it shamed them in some way. There had not been a wolf with the dual fangs of Mahanlo blood seen or sighted anywhere in nearly two million years. There were rumors of course, stories told by parents wanting to scare their children into submission. Stories that Kelia Mahanlo and her Kirek Pack husband and mate Lylor still lived. Mahanlo blood was still widely recognized as the most powerful Lycavorian bloodline to have ever existed. No other bloodline could come close to it in any way and this caused obvious envy among the other packs, but none were ever strong enough to stand against them.

The Mahanlo bloodline and their past had been wiped from the history books by order of Yelma Arhtai, and to even speak their name by accident now caused men and women both to disappear never to be seen again.

Comelo quickly entered the code for the next sensor array with shaking hands and his eyes grew wider still when he saw a young woman who was clearly Lycavorian, but she was also something else. He saw a flash of dark colored cobalt blue eyes and silky black hair that was rich and thick. Then he saw what was unmistakable, just as they had been on the first young female. He saw thick, lethal looking dual wolf fangs that were fully exposed and very distinctive.

“Sibfla!” Comelo gasped aloud as his hands were shaking so badly he almost dropped his card key.

He punched in the code for the next sensor and felt fear grip his lower abdomen as he was able to watch the tall, extremely well built young wolf tear at the data terminal with his bare hands. He was adorned in obsidian and gold armor of some kind that conformed to his body like a second skin, revealing a muscular build that Comelo would never have. He had short, raven black hair with a immaculately trimmed goatee and just like the first young female, amazingly bright and expressive azure colored blue eyes that appeared as if they were glowing. He could make out the black pupil and wolf nature of his eyes, but they were unlike any wolf eyes he had ever seen before.

Comelo watched as the young man, obviously, an Alpha from the looks of him, brought the now revealed sensor gathering camera closer to his face. The helmet he wore hid most of his features except for his eyes, but there was a long cut in the helmet that exposed his lips and part of his cheeks and jawline. And staring at him in the transmission were ferocious looking dual wolf fangs unlike anything Comelo had ever imagined.

“Evell wen chevshs!” He growled in to the small sensor array. “Iada terit pascius fas terit carians, toer hel el isarna, el evell gur sey joana.” (We are coming) (Make peace with your gods, ask them for mercy, for we will have none.)

Comelo actually yelped loudly, drawing the attention from half a dozen others when the young wolf snapped forward with his head and actually ripped into the small sensor terminal with those dual fangs. They made short work of the small terminal and then the picture was gone.

“Nubou!” Comelo barked out loudly as he whirled around and broke into a run for his supervisor’s office.

“...Is this?” Kanal Arhtai snarled angrily as he tossed the data scroll onto the top of his desk.

He was not happy at having been disturbed to say the very least. His six foot three body had once been muscle and bone but was now nothing more than flesh and saggy skin. Too many years of neglecting what he was and not doing anything for himself had turned him into a vile creature of a man. He used his position as Arhtai Chief of Internal Security to threaten and cajole young females to entertain him whenever he found one that struck his fancy. He had been forcing himself on a young female wolf when his senior aide had come rushing to his quarters to inform him that his attention was needed at once.

He had tried to keep up his physical appearances, but once his clothes came off no female wolf found him attractive. His lone mate was long dead and the children he had with her were almost no better than him with the exception of his youngest daughter. She alone avoided her father at all costs wanting nothing to do with him or her nine siblings, almost as if she knew something that they did not. It was Kanal Arhtai’s one weak spot, his youngest daughter, but she had never used his name or his position to gain anything. Unlike her father, she was very well respected and highly thought of among the many in her field of Astrometric Anomalies.

“You need to see this Kanal.” The man stammered. He had been Kanal’s senior aide for as long as he could remember and was perhaps the only one outside of his sister and brother-in-law that could speak how they wanted to Kanal. He reached out and took the data spike from the desk and moved to the wall directly behind Kanal’s desk and plugged it in.

“You should have seen her Alaki.” Kanal boasted to his friend. “She was young and firm and…” Kanal stopped talking when he saw the monitor come alive with the brief images of intelligence data terminals being destroyed. “What is this?” Kanal barked looking at the young wolf he did not know.

“These are the images of all nineteen Blood Scanner and Data Collection devices on Pakar Six being torn from inside their protective shells and destroyed.” Alaki answered him. “This is Third Lieutenant Comelo. He discovered it this morning upon arriving for his tour of duty and brought it to his shift supervisor immediately.”

“All nineteen?” Kanal asked him. “I was under the impression they had only found thirteen of the devices and our data comes mainly from the five they have yet to discover.”

Alaki nodded his head. “That is what we have believed, but apparently, that has not been the case for many years.” He replied quickly. “The five that we supposedly thought were still hidden…” Alaki touched the controls for the monitor and Kanal’s eyes grew wide when he saw the images of the two females and three males ripping the data gathering nodes from their protective shells and either smashing them to the floor or…

“Evell wen chevshs! Iada terit pascius fas terit carians, toer hel el isarna, el evell gur sey joana.” The young alpha wolf with azure colored eyes spoke those words just before he utterly destroyed the device with what could only be savage looking dual wolf fangs.

“Nubou lae!” Kanal gasped aloud for he had not seen a set of dual wolf fangs in more years that he could remember. Kanal looked at Alaki. “This is… it must be some kind of joke.” Kanal hissed. “There are safeguards in place if even one of the devices is destroyed or tampered with.”

Alaki nodded his head and looked at Comelo. “Tell him.” He said.

“Tell me what?” Kanal snarled.

“I followed established protocols and immediately downloaded all nineteen sensor cores per the instructions if something like this were to ever take place General.” Comelo spoke as he began to sweat profusely in fear. “The images and recordings are all similar in nature, yet the failsafe codes were not entered automatically like they should have been. And the… the current data streams are active and normal.”

Kanal blinked his eyes rapidly. “Active and normal?” He barked. “How can that be when we just watched all nineteen devices ripped from their housings and destroyed.”

Comelo shook his head. “That is what I do not understand General.”

“What do you understand?” Kanal growled at the younger man savagely.

Alaki stepped closer to Comelo knowing his friend’s penchant for hurting those who displeased him. “It means Kanal, that someone has manipulated the data stream and made it appear like this is happening.”

Kanal looked at him. “What?” He gasped. “Why?”

“The answer is obvious old friend.” Alaki told him. “Kesas Pengot and the Kirek Pack dogs are up to something. Playing games.”

Kanal came to his feet. “To what end?” Kanal hissed. “They are hardly in a position to challenge my sister or the Arhtai Pack. No one will follow them. Not even those lapdogs the Nenay.”

Alaki looked at Comelo. “How can we determine if this is actually something that is taking place or if it is ruse?”

“A ruse?” Comelo stammered.

“If someone is playing a trick on us?!” Alaki snapped now.

“Only a full systems diagnostic can do that.” Comelo answered quickly.

“Can you do that?” Kanal demanded.

“Yes, General, but I do not have the necessary security access levels to initiate a full system check.” Comelo stated quickly. “I am only an analyst and programmer.”

“But you can do it?” Kanal asked once more.

“Yes.” Comelo answered. “I’m trying to say I don’t need to.”

“What? Why damn it?” Kanal shouted.

“A full systems check was conducted yesterday morning and has already been filed into the data cores.” Comelo told him. “All you would need to do is call up the results of that check and read the data.”

Kanal reached out and pulled Comelo over to his desk, shoving him into the chair. “Start the process. I will give you the passwords as needed. Quickly now!”

Alaki looked at him. “Kanal...?”

“Inform my sister I need to see her.” Kanal growled. “How long boy?”

Comelo looked up from the desk. “Three hours. No more.”

“Tell her I need to see her in four hours Alaki.” Kanal told him. “And put our security forces on stand by. We may need to take a trip to Pakar Six.”

Alaki nodded his head. “Understood.”

PAKAR SIX MAIN TRANSPORT BAY

It had been a simple matter for Ne'Veha to bring the PREMONITION into the large transport bay under Shroud while members of the Kirek Pack raced back and forth trying to determine where the ship was. They didn't realize how large the PREMONITION really was until Sadi lowered the Shroud once she was fully inside the bay. Sadi would openly admit to anyone that asked that Ne'Veha was the much better close quarters pilot because of her natural Elven skills and her background in Ground Support. It truly seemed like Ne'Veha and the ship became one mind when she had the controls in tight flight situations. As crew members in the Transport Bay stared on in awe, Ne'Veha lowered the ship to the deck as gently as a newborn baby once their Shroud was down.

Rothan Luas was waiting as Lylor and Kesas led everyone off the ship. Aryera Kirek was barking instructions to Marda and Taig as Kalis, Denali and several others broke off with them. Alarms had begun to sound all over the base due to the unregistered entry of the ship into the transport bay and the detection of Mahanlo blood within the base. No one had ever heard the alarms before and it was sending men and women into a panic. The Arhtai Pack spies would know something was up in moments, and Lylor and Androcles did not want to wait to strike.

Caylt and Yasha moved with Mari, Brendi, Deion, Jomann, Ridor and Daio with them as they made for the Command Center quickly and efficiently. Androcles, Nara, Lisisa, Normya, Tir'ut, and Eliani made short work of the sensors that the Arhtai Pack thought they did not know about. There had really been only two that Aryera and Kesas' children Caylt and Yasha had not detected through the years, but Chiron quickly found all five of them and it was these that Androcles, the huge bone faced young man and his sisters shattered into oblivion.

Things were coming together far faster than Lylor and Kesas had ever hoped or imagined they would. Chiron's message to them had been so very true. There were not men and women who played at war. They were decisive and action oriented and they did not hesitate in the least.

The Transport Bay quickly became the center of attention on Pakar Six as the Kirek Pack began acting instead of reacting as they had for so many years. Lylor was leading Kesas and Aryera back into the Transport Bay and he was impressed with how his sister had kept their small force trained and equipped even with the restrictions placed on them. With Androcles' brother and cousin among their number, Lylor had watched on monitors as they chased down and captured four Arhtai Pack spies that they had known nothing about. These three men and one woman had witnessed the brutal deaths of those that were known Arhtai plants and after so long hidden they immediately lost all sense of professionalism just as Martin had suspected they would. Never having dealt with anything like the savageness and ferociousness of the attack that Denali and Kalis led, the four seasoned spies broke in an attempt to escape from Pakar Six and inform their superiors that the Kirek Pack was rebelling once more. They made it only half way to the Secondary Transport Bay to steal a ship before running into Marda, Taig, and the others who had been sent after them. Lylor looked at their bloody faces where they now knelt on the deck a short distance away. Marda and Taig were watching them like hungry predators, with Androcles' cousin Kalis and his pureblood brother Denali with them. The four of them stood together now, Marda and Taig armed with what Andro called the new Pralor Particle Weapons. Marda and Taig were thrilled about this new equipment and had quickly passed the four crates of the new weapons out among their security force.

Lylor looked at the now covered bodies of the dead spies that they had killed within a few minutes of exiting the ship. Lylor had been surprised at how accurate and sensitive the blood detectors were, but it would be Chiron who would explain in the coming weeks that it was not the sophistication of the detectors but the massive influx of pure Mahanlo blood into the base because of Androcles and his siblings. Rothan had wasted no time and acted instantly the moment the alarms began to sound. He saw the young Alpha that Rothan said was working with him, his hands secured in front of him and now standing with Rothan. He didn't look very happy and Lylor and Kesas made straight for where he stood.

"Rothan?" Lylor spoke.

"This is not what we agreed too Lylor." Rothan hissed angrily. "Uvae has been helping us since he came here. Kesas you know this!"

Lylor looked at the Arhtai Alpha wolf who stood there stoically. The man had no fear in his eyes and he stood tall and proud. This was not a man who was a spy in any way. Lylor could tell just by his demeanor that he had left the Arhtai Pack behind long ago. He motioned with his hand, "Come with me."

Lylor led them to where Androcles was sitting on the bench and they saw Eliani kneeling in front of her brother, drawing her hand slowly across his lower jaw, a soft white glow coming from her fingertips. Lylor now knew he had many nieces and nephews and it was going to take some time for him to learn all of their names. His niece Eliani was the easiest of them all since she was the most outspoken and rebellious of her siblings from what he could tell. She was also the wife, mate and Anome to the tall Kirek Pack Alpha known as Jomann. Lylor knew Jomann would become very popular on Pakar Six for he was the only Kirek Pack Alpha known to exist outside of this planet and it was becoming known that he was the husband and mate to the Mard Revik's breathtakingly beautiful daughter and an equally stunning female that was, herself, rapidly turning out to be a powerful turned wolf.

Eliani lowered her hand from Andro's jaw and looked at him and all of them watched stunned as she quickly slapped him across the cheek. What was even more stunning was the smile that curled Androcles' lips as he looked at her.

"Next time, don't try to eat the camera ryn mida." Eliani spat as she pointed her finger at him. (Dumb ass)

"I wasn't trying to eat the camera." Andro stated.

"That's not what Lisisa said." Eli quipped right back. "And I believe her over you."

Andro saw his uncle move up and he quickly snapped his head forward, nuzzling Eliani on her cheek furiously in brotherly affection. She giggled as his aura washed over her and she pushed him away. Andro rose to his feet then and looked at his Uncle, Rothan and the others looking at him surprised.

"Tenne?" He asked.

Eliani caught him off guard as she usually did, reaching up to slap him lightly in the back of the head before moving away. "Ryn mida." She called out as she walked away.

"Pomai!" Andro hissed back at her while half turning his head. (Slut)

Eliani laughed at his words. "El Jomann for Brendi innyne." She yelled after him. (For Jomann and Brendi always)

Andro looked back to Lylor. "My apologies Tenne, Eliani can be unruly at times."

Rothan looked at Androcles. "Our... our language flows so easily from the lips of your siblings and those with you aur Indalfrid." He spoke formally.

Andro shook his head. "My name is Androcles." He said quickly. "Or Andro. Whichever you prefer."

Rothan looked at him with wide eyes as did others. "For wen... forn wen vada Orwara Indalfrid. Vada fera Tarivu rie vada Mard Revik." (You are the Crown Prince. The First Herald of the True King.)

Andro nodded his head. "And there are days when I hate that title." He spoke much to their shock as he stepped forward and looked at the man with steel flexi cuffs on his wrists. "Why are you still wearing the bindings?"

Uvae lifted his hands. "I think perhaps things moved more quickly than we thought and I was forgotten my Prince." He answered honestly.

It happened far more quickly than most of them were able to follow. Andro lifted his right hand, called forth his right Glaive from its spot on the side of his armor and he slashed it down across the bindings. The steel flexi cuffs were meant to hold the strongest Lycavorians easily and were pretty much indestructible.

Unless cut by a blade coated in Dragon Armor.

Andro reseated his Glaive in that return motion as the pieces of the bindings dropped to the deck and then bowed his head to the older man. "My thanks to you sir. We would not have discovered the others so easily without your help."

Uvae bowed his head in return. "With your blessing my Prince, I will return to my wife and children. She was worried about me during this time."

Androcles nodded his head. "My thanks to you again." He said. "My father will wish to meet you after things have settled. You and your family."

Uvae nodded his head. "We would be honored sire."

Andro smiled as the man quickly made for the door and then he looked at Lylor. "My apologies Tenne, Lord Luas, I did not know he had not been released."

Rothan shook his head. "It is done." He spoke. "I will have someone watch him for a time but..."

Androcles shook his head. "No need." He spoke motioning with his head towards the door. All of them turned to see Uvae catch the woman in his arms as she jumped the last few feet and then the seven children crowding around the man they called father. "He is a man of his word." Andro spoke softly.

"Avoi." Lylor echoed.

"What about our guests?" Andro asked now.

"We will lock them down in a sealed room below the command center." Rothan spoke. "They will be going nowhere. How did... how did you know there were others? Even after all this time we never suspected the four that we caught. Ever."

Andro shrugged his shoulders. "My father tends to think out of the box, sir." Andro said in reply. "It just seemed like a clever idea to implement and he ended up being right. Now we just have to get what information we need out of them before someone tries to contact them and get a report."

Kesas motioned with his hand. "Then come this way. Caylt, Yasha and your people have set up in the command center. We won't be able to hide the destruction of the blood scanners for long, but long enough for your father to arrive and for us to act."

Andro nodded his head as he began to follow Kesas. Lylor and Rothan fell in just behind him but quickly made room for the two young and exceptionally beautiful women who raced up behind them. Carisia and Lu'ria took up places on either side of Androcles as they walked, each of them taking one of his hands in theirs. Rothan and Lylor looked at each other quickly as they walked, never having seen an elf before, let alone a Drow elf. That she was a turned wolf was obvious enough, but from what Lylor and Rothan could smell, Androcles had been the one to turn her and her blood carried the purest form of Lycavorian DNA anywhere.

As with his Anome Sadi, Andro's lavender and pines scent was deeply imbedded in this young, dark skinned woman's blood. Sadi they knew was a pureblood female of substantial influence all her own because of her own bloodline, and when you mixed Sadi's blood with Androcles', the aura and influence was off the charts. Turned though she may have been, this ebony skinned female elf had nearly as powerful a female aura as Sadi did simply because Androcles was the one to have turned her. What surprised them both was that they could detect the scent of Sadi and the others deeply in her blood as well. Almost as if... Rothan and Lylor looked at each other with wide eyes but quickly moved their eyes forward as they realized what this meant. And apparently, none of these women cared in the least who knew this fact.

The small exotic looking female they did not know what to make of. They had never met anyone of her species, but then again, they had never met an elf before three hours ago either. It was obvious to them that Andro had bitten her, and she had bitten him in return, but there was something strangely unique about what they smelled within Carisia as opposed to Sadi and Lu'ria. They would have to question Lady Reva when they had the chance for Lylor did not want to offend his mandri after being so stupid upon their first meeting and nearly ruining everything.

The trip to the command center was quick as others got out of their way in the corridors and finally they were entering the room where they caught the tail end of Mari speaking to the others.

“...Tap is complete but we won't be able to hold it for long before someone knows something is up.” Mari spoke from the chair she occupied between Brendi and Yasha. Caylt was standing at the large chart table with Chiron.

Caylt nodded his head. “But we just need to hold it until early morning.” He told them. “Sixteen hours tops. After that it will not matter.”

“True enough.” Mari agreed with a smile.

Kesas looked at his son as they moved around the chart table. “Caylt, Yasha?” He asked.

Caylt moved to the small computer console on the chart table and began typing. “We were able to initiate the code hack successfully father, just as Prince Androcles suggested.” He spoke excitedly.

Andro shook his head. “Don't look at me.” He said raising his hand. “That was all my fervon Deion and his lovely wife and mate Mari.” He spoke. “They are the computer gurus.”

Lylor looked at Kesas and then back to Androcles. “What is this... this guru?”

Andro smiled and shook his head. “I'll explain some other time Tenne.” He answered. “Mari?”

Mari moved up beside the taller Caylt and pointed to the console. Caylt nodded and typed quickly, bringing up a blueprint type schematic on the table in front of them. “Essentially what Brendi and I did is find and access an undefended computer port in their planetary mainframe on Koltar Four while Androcles and the others were running their plots.”

“Wait?!” Kesas gasped. “You were able to access their planetary mainframe from your ship?”

Mari nodded her head. “Yes. Onab computer code is very similar in design to Pralor code and I designed a program a few years ago to integrate the two.”

Kesas looked at Androcles quickly and then back to Mari. “How old are you again child?” He asked.

“Twenty-four.” Mari answered instantly. “Why?”

Andro shook his head again. “Never mind about that.” He spoke. “Mari... keep going.”

Mari motioned with her hand as Caylt enlarged the blueprint. “The planetary mainframe is extensive.” She told them. “Caylt already had most of it mapped with his reverse inversion pulses, but we got the really good stuff while we hung out in orbit.” She traced what appeared to be a long string of corridors but in truth no one but Mari, Caylt and Brendi knew what they were. “Brendi found this at twenty-three minutes in.”

“And this is?” Androcles asked.

“This was our way in.” Mari spoke with a smile as Caylt adjusted the screen and what they were viewing. “Think of it as a blue print Andro.” She said. “It pretty much led us to this bright spot here. A low encryption code spike that was being used to block access into the mainframe from outside sources. Only it was very well hidden.”

“Come again?” Carisia asked.

“This was left here for someone to find.” Mari said with a smile. “I think the Onab left it for us Andro. Or for someone like us.”

“Why do you say that?” Aryera asked now.

“Because it was a back door into every lower sub system on the mainframe. Including the Security Network” Mari answered her. “It's why we were able to do a reverse tap of recorded material and reroute it to the mainframe through secondary power conduits.”

Lylor shook his head. “I am lost.” He spoke.

“I was lost many words ago.” Rothan echoed.

“Mari...” Andro spoke with a smile. “English please... for those of us who do not speak computer.”

Mari blushed and brought her hand to her mouth in shock. “Sibfla!” She exclaimed. “I'm sorry!” She stepped closer to the table and used her hands to point to several different things on the blueprint Caylt had pulled up. “What we did is make a recording of no activity on the blood detectors from previous recordings that Caylt had on file. Using those, we were able to tap into the Planetary Mainframe and reverse feed those taps into the main converters. The scanners would have recorded as we took out the blood detectors, especially the one Andro bit, but their computers will tell them that all of the blood detectors are intact and detecting nothing out of the ordinary.”

“You are tricking them?” Lylor almost shouted.

Mari nodded her head. “Yes.”

Kesas couldn't help but smile. "They see the recordings but their equipment is telling them nothing is wrong." He said. "Ingenious!"

"It was Caylt's idea." Mari said. "Brendi and I just implemented the computer hack."

Kesas looked at his son. "Well done Keto!" He said. "Well done."

"What does this mean for us?" Rothan asked now.

Yasha moved forward now. "It means we have two options to think about." She spoke. "Option one is that they think it is a computer mishap and treat it as such. They will try to find out electronically if the equipment is functioning correctly. The tap is for sixteen hours, so no matter what they do, for the next sixteen hours they won't know what is happening here unless the person that have checking the systems is very good at their job."

"They have people like that?" Kesas asked now.

"They do." Yasha answered. "Few, because they don't want to let the reins of control loosen too much, but they have some."

"And the other option?" Lylor asked.

"They will try to contact their agents here directly." Yasha said. "Though we now know who they are, and we have them in custody or they are dead, finding their equipment will be harder. The Arhtai Pack will have protocols to follow if they can not contact their agents within a certain amount of time. Especially the ones we did not know about. It is not known how much they will go for this idea since it would have exposed one, if not all of those that we already captured and didn't know about."

"That means coming here." Kesas said. "Which they have not done in nearly a million years. They wouldn't be foolish enough to do that."

"They would if they believe that Lylor or any of his children have been woken Kesas." Aryera said. "You know that."

"How long to implement if they go with option two?" Androcles asked.

Yasha shrugged her shoulders. "It would depend on what kind of day that upae Yelma Arhtai is having I suppose." She answered him. "If they did it quickly, they could be here with several hundred troops in roughly six hours."

"And what are the chances of her doing it quickly if they go with choice two and think that Mahanlo blood is once more active on the planet?" Andro asked her.

Yasha smiled at what he was implying. "Slim to none." She replied.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. "My instincts tell me that they will treat this as some sort of computer failure. At least until they have a better idea that it is not."

"The risk to Kelia is..." Lylor began to speak but stopped himself.

"How many people actually know that she is still alive Tenne?" Andro asked him.

Kesas met his gaze as his eyes opened wider. "The most senior members of her family of course, but outside of that... so much time has passed that..."

Andro nodded his head. "My father believes that those guarding her don't even know who she is." He said. "Everyone thinks she is dead."

"And they have not rebuked these rumors." Kesas said agreeing with him and looking at Lylor.

"Which means she cannot go public with this information." Aryera said now as she began to understand. "There are many, even among the Arhtai Pack, who believe that Mahanlo blood is still royalty. That it still is our best chance for the future."

"And she will have to confirm that you are awake Uncle." Andro said. "Before she does anything."

Lylor met his nephew's eyes. "And that requires her to send someone here. And that takes time."

Andro nodded his head. "Right now, time is our ally." He said. "In sixteen hours that will change, but by then we will have succeeded or we will all be dead."

Mari looked across the table at Androcles. "Ummm... just food for thought Andro..." She spoke. "I'm not really liking the dead part. It doesn't do it for me and dead doesn't work for Deion and Emylea either."

Andro smiled as he looked at her. "Don't worry Mari... it doesn't work for us either."

"Whew! That's good to know." She said. "Wait a minute... us? Who is us?"

Androcles' smile grew even wider as he took his P1 from his belt and set it on the chart table and activated it.

“Father?” Andro spoke.

“Is it done?” Martin’s voice boomed from the P1 as it activated and his small holographic image expanded from the sophisticated personal computer. “Andro... are we good? I’m getting tired of waiting here keto. Give me something.”

“Father, we are set.” Andro told him. “We have the hidden Arhtai agents and all of the blood detectors are deactivated.”

“Casualties son?” Martin asked.

“Just those Arhtai Pack members who resisted.” Andro replied. “You brought Re'lon and Tenna Nayeca I hope?”

Martin chuckled aloud. “Does a bear shit in the woods boy?” Martin said with a grin.

“We have sixteen hours father.” Andro told him.

“We won’t need sixteen hours.” Martin replied confidently. “Manda and Sa'sur will be here in twelve hours. They are making their last jump right into orbit of Koltar Four, exactly two minutes before we hit them. It will wake them up so abruptly and scare them right out of their fucking shorts, no matter how big their balls are!”

“Martin, we...” Lylor began to speak but Martin held up his hand.

“Hold that thought Tenne.” He told him turning to look at. “Andro... your mothers are already loaded on the TYPE TWO. Anja wants to wake up your cousins and Danny snagged two dozen crates of Pralor weapons for the Kirek Pack and whoever else is going with us. Thoti and Duewa arrived from Ventori just before we left and they’ll handle showing everyone how to use the new gear. We...”

“Wait!” Lylor exclaimed as he looked at Androcles quickly and saw him smile and then he turned back to Martin’s image. “You speak... you speak as if you are already here Martin.”

“Here?” Martin hissed. “Hell, yes I am here! I’ve been busting a gut cause my son takes too damn long to do shit sometimes! Make room for us in that transport bay keto, we’re inbound in nine minutes. SPARTA'S WRATH will remain Shrouded until its time to say hello to Koltar Four.”

“You are here?” Kesas exclaimed now as he realized what Martin was saying.

“I’ll see you all in nine minutes.” Martin spoke before he ended the transmission and Androcles recovered his P1.

“I suggest we go to the transport bay.” He told them. “Things will move quickly once father arrives. He doesn’t like to beat around the bush so to speak.”

“He has been here all of this time and you said nothing?!” Lylor snapped at Androcles.

Andro secured his P1 on his belt and nodded his head. “That is correct.” He spoke.

“Don’t you think that you owe us an explanation for that?” Lylor snapped again but much less forcefully.

Androcles shook his head. “No.” He answered bluntly before turning and heading for the door of the command center and into the corridor.

Lylor looked at Kesas with wide, angry eyes and saw that he was looking back at him with something akin to a smile on his face.

“You think this is funny?” He rasped out the question.

Kesas nodded his head slowly. “Yes.”

“How can you think this is funny?” Lylor demanded.

“I have come to the realization that...” Kesas looked at Lylor. “We... we are not dealing with normal Lycavorians Lylor. We are dealing with direct descendants of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. Martin, his oldest son Androcles and all of his children are those descendants. Never were there two more confounding men alive. You could never predict what they would do next and you know this. They are the same. We are dealing with Kelia’s bloodline Lylor Kirek. You are Kelia’s beloved mate, yes, but you are not of their bloodline. You do not have Mahanlo blood flowing within your veins as they do. All of them are much younger than us, yet their combat skills surpass anything that we have. Anything that your sister, Taig and Yasha have been able to train our people in. Can you stand there and deny that to me?”

Lylor looked quickly at Aryera who had remained silent until now. “Kesas is correct Lylor.” She told him.

Lylor turned back to Kesas. “Then what do you suggest Kesas?” He snapped. “I will not stand by while my Kelia is a prisoner of that foul women! I will not!”

Kesas shook his head. “And I don’t expect you too Lylor my friend. I don’t believe your family expects you too. What I do suggest is this. All of us... we have lived in this bubble out here for so long that we have forgotten that events have spun right along without us outside of this bubble we are in. You heard what Lady Reva told us on that ship. He has been King for less than thirty years and he has united our people unlike at any other time in our history according to her. Who but someone with the blood of Daniho and Ashten could do such a thing. And he has finally discovered us out here and he intends to see his family reunited. No matter who he has to crush in order to do that. All of them do. You can see it in their eyes. In their movement as they walk. They are not here to play games Lylor.”

Aryera reached out and placed her hand on her brother’s arm. “Kesas speaks truth fervon and we should listen to him. I love Kelia as I would any sister that I ever had Lylor, but Kesas is correct. Martin, Androcles, even Lady Reva, they are her blood Lylor. This is her nathos. They have come for her and they do not intend to fail. We are family to them but we are not their blood.”

“They would not... they would not leave us!” Lylor hissed softly.

Aryera shook her head. “No... they don’t intend to leave us.” She spoke. “But you have seen what they can do fervon! Their equipment. Their ship. They fight beside sinuovas Lylor! Who among us can say that?”

“Then what do we do?!” Lylor asked. “Tell me!”

“I suggest we grab our boots and jump onto the ship and let them pull us along.” Kesas told him. “I have a sense that Martin will not dismiss us by any stretch of the imagination. And what we can learn is more than anything we could ever hope for.”

Lylor looked at him. “You trust him that much?” He asked. “You trust them?”

Kesas smiled at him. “I trust the Mahanlo blood that flows in their veins.” He answered.

Lylor looked at the chart table as everyone in the room stared at him. Mari and Brendi had remained silent during the exchange but like everyone else they were now staring at Lylor. All of them saw him nod his head after several moments.

“My heart... my heart tells me the same thing.” He said finally looking at Kesas.

Kesas nodded with a smile and gripped his arm. “Every day for more years than I can remember Lylor, I have asked for a sign. Anything that would tell me that all was not lost, that hope had not abandoned us. I said this prayer while standing beside your cryo chamber Lylor my friend. Every day! That sign is now here... and it is the brightest point of light that these old eyes have ever seen. I intend to be there when that light shines upon the Arhtai Pack and their vile deeds. You know how passionate Daniho Mahanlo was Lylor... and how cruel he could be if he felt someone had wronged his blood.”

Kesas looked at Lylor for a long moment, his eyes moving to Aryera and then back to Lylor.

“I see that in Martin’s eyes Lylor.” Kesas spoke softly. “And it makes me shiver in horror knowing that but by the grace of Daniho Mahanlo, I would be working beside Yelma Arhtai right now. Just as she asked me the day Daniho became our King.”

“What?” Lylor gasped aloud with wide eyes.

Kesas nodded his head. “She asked me to come work for the Arhtai as an advisor the day Daniho was named King. The next morning, Daniho came to me and asked me to stand with him and help him to learn.”

Kesas smiled. “You know what my decision was.”

“Kesas I... we never knew that!” Lylor gasped.

Kesas shook his head. “Nor did Daniho.” He said. “Which is why I have honored my vow to him with such devotion. Now his descendants are here... and I intend to help them put their family back together because I believe! I believe now, just like I believed back then!”

“Avoi!” Aryera’s voice carried across the room then and finished any talk.

They all knew what needed to be done.

The word had spread quickly throughout the base on Pakar Six about who was landing in the main Transport Bay and they would have been hard pressed to keep everyone who had crowded into the bay out. That pure Mahanlo blood had returned to them was rapidly making its way among the Kirek Pack and everyone wanted to get a glimpse of them. That is was pure Mahanlo bloodline descended from Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo themselves was only just beginning to make its way among the people. Already stories of Androcles and his siblings taking down the blood detectors and Arhtai Pack spies was running rampant among the Kirek Pack.

For'mya and Endith brought the TYPE TWO into the Transport Bay right beside the PREMONITION and set the hundred and sixty-meter ship down with equally as much skill as Ne'Veha had done. These were ships that the Kirek Pack had never seen before and they were sleek looking and powerful. Everyone watched as the massive ramp in the rear undercarriage of the ship began to lower and they waited while holding their breaths to see who would depart this new ship. All of them could smell the pureness of Mahanlo blood in the Transport Bay, it was unmistakable with Lady Reva, Androcles and his siblings all in the Bay now. The moment the ramp touched down however, the scent of pure Mahanlo blood washed through the entire Transport Bay like a wave of clean, pure mountain air. Everyone who had been able to cram inside the Bay could smell it and it filtered across their senses like a jolt of energy.

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas was the first one down the ramp obviously and the slow building of astonished murmurs quickly swept through the bay. There was not a member of the Kirek Pack alive today who had not seen hundreds of images of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo in their studies as they grew. What they saw exit this strange ship was the near duplicate image of both men meshed together in one perfect form. Voices swept forward even from the back of the huge bay and as if with one mind, men, women and children began dropping to one knee in utter reverence. Martin reached the bottom of the ramp, his dark eyes searching for one person and he found him quickly, Reva standing between him and Androcles. Martin moved over in front of Lylor who stared at him in astonishment. Even what Reva had told them did not prepare Lylor Kirek for the image of the man he now was gazing at. He could see both Daniho and Ashten in this man, like the two brothers had somehow merged themselves into one entity.

And he now stood before him.

"Son vada carians." Lylor muttered finally, his voice carrying to those standing nearby. Rothan, Aryera, Kesas, all of them were looking at Martin with unabashed shock. They had seen him in the transmissions yes, but actually seeing him in person was more than any of them could take. Aryera Kirek quickly reached for Kesas' arm for support as she began to openly weep when Martin did what none of them ever expected.

Martin pulled Lylor Kirek into an embrace that made his ribs crack in protest but Lylor did not care as Martin's deep pines scent filtered to his nose. Martin held him at arm's length for a moment as Reva clutched Androcles arm tighter, trying to keep from losing her balance as she wept.

Martin's eyes were moist now as he looked at his uncle, and then in an action that would be remembered by everyone in that Transport Bay for the rest of their lives, Martin Leonidas lifted his uncle into his arms with a wail of happiness and broke down into tears while crushing his body to his own and spinning around and around. It did not take long for the emotion to overwhelm Lylor and soon he was joining his nephew in the emotion filled greeting.

Whatever anyone thought before coming to the Transport Bay this day, what was very clear to the Kirek Pack at what they saw happening before them, was that things were going to be very different going forward. The bloodline of their beloved King had returned and soon it would be time to free themselves and others from the oppression of the Arhtai Pack.

Anja was not known for wasting time and as soon as the greetings in the Transport Bay were over, she was moving for the room where Lylor's three children still resided in the cryo pods. With Duewa, Eliani, Serale, Caliria, Cvea and Anuk assisting, Anja quickly brought Lient, Pauin and Amori out of the cryo freezing process while Lylor looked on with worry in his face. Martin and Reva stood on either side of him as they observed, careful not to interrupt Anja in any form. Anja had this down pat now, and it moved quickly. Pauin, Lient or Amori were lifted from the pods by members of the Kirek Pack and quickly moved to beds while Anja oversaw the injections of the natural enzymes to stimulate muscle growth and energy. The two brothers and their sister were awake, but their senses were still confused and only the smell of pure Mahanlo blood in the room and their father's blood kept them reasonably calm.

In all it took Anja only two hours to pull all three of them from their pods and get them into beds and then into the base medical facility. The three of them watched as Anja moved from between the beds and came across the large room to where they stood.

"It's done." She spoke confidently.

"Truly?!" Lylor gasped.

Anja nodded her head. "They won't be winning any marathons in the next few days, but all of their medical signs are strong and steady. Their eye sight will take a few hours to return fully, that is something unfortunately that I can't help because of the process of cryo freezing. They can smell our blood all around them and I think that is why they are staying so calm, but they keep asking for you."

Lylor looked at her. "I can... I can touch them?"

Anja smiled and nodded her head. "Of course." She told him. "Go... they are waiting for you."

Lylor didn't hesitate and moved across the room, his children perking up when they smelled him so close and then he was reaching for Amori's hand since she was the closest to him. Pauin and Lient were sitting up in their beds when they heard their father's voice and the tears came.

Reva reached for Anja and took her arms. "They will be fine?" She asked.

Anja detected the worry in her voice and she nodded once more as she gripped Reva's arms in return. "They will be more than fine." She told her. "You should go to them. They are your grandchildren."

Reva looked at Martin and saw him nod to her. "Cui staania." He said quickly. Reva didn't waste another moment and she moved across the room as Martin pulled Anja close to him and watched. When she reached where Lylor sat on the bed Martin looked down at Anja's head. He reached out to her in the heavily shielded connection that he shared with all of his wives and mates. [Talk to me Red.] He spoke feeling Aricia, Dysea, For'mya, Isabella and Cirith perking up, listening in.

Anja knew Martin would detect her demeanor and tone of voice and know something was up and she was not disappointed. She lifted her hand and took his hand before rolling the three small items into the palm of his hand.

[What's this?] Martin asked her.

[Their insurance policy.] Anja told him. [Small explosive charges placed at the juncture of the second and third vertebrae. Strong enough to sever their spines and inflict tremendous damage to the base of their brains. It would leave them brain dead even if they were able to survive the injuries the explosives caused. Anuk deactivated them before I removed them. They are rudimentary in design, but very efficient. They are injected in liquid form through the back of the skull where they take up residence between the vertebrae and become solid.]

Martin looked at the small devices in the palm of his hand. [Lylor?]

Anja looked at him as she leaned up against his body. [How do you think I found out about these?] She asked. [Kesas and Aryera, Lylor's sister, they removed it before fully waking him. They did not tell him because he would have gone berserk according to his sister.]

[Then we must assume that Kelia has this in her head as well.] Martin spoke softly.

[It's a safe bet.] Anja agreed.

[The more we discover about this Yelma woman Beloved, the more my ability to forgive lessens.] Aricia's voice spoke now.

[For me as well.] Dysea echoed in.

[Ditto.] Anja said softly.

[We can hate this woman... but we must remember she does not speak for the rest of her pack. That has been made obvious to us by what we have read since Kesas sent us the reports. We must keep that in mind.] For'mya's voice spoke now and Martin felt Anja nod her head against his chest.

[We will act accordingly.] Martin said and all of them could tell by the tone of his voice that this conversation was over. [They will be ok Red?] He asked.

Anja nodded her head again. [Oh yeah.] She replied.

[Then we stick to the plan we decided upon for her.] Martin said. [Aricia, you, For'mya, Bella, Melda Min and Cirith meet me in their command center. Just follow Andro's scent to it. We have final plans to make and we need to readjust for discovery of the Onab and Lylor's daughter at this other facility on the surface.]
[On our way.] Aricia spoke.

Martin looked at Anja and she leaned up and kissed him deeply. "I'll watch them and send Lylor along." She said. "Go."

Martin nodded and turned quickly to move out of the room.

KOLTAR FOUR

ARHTAI PACK MAIN HOME

LEPIRI

The main Arhtai Pack home was secured in the center of the compound, surrounded by thousands of soldiers and the most sophisticated defenses that existed. The three story mansion was incredibly opulent all around, from the lavish decorations inside to the exacting nature of the beautiful grounds all around the home.

It was late evening now and Yelma Arhtai was not in a particularly good mood. Even at her age, Yelma was still an exceptionally good looking woman. Her physical attributes were still lush and firm and kept her husband and mate Nyser very happy. Which in turn meant very satisfying evenings for her when they were together. She was still wolf after all, and pleasure was one thing that all wolves strived for with their chosen mate. Yelma was the Matriarch of the Arhtai Pack and while she left most of the running of the established government to those who were politicians, nothing went forward or was implemented without her approval. Many of the policies she had implemented throughout the years were designed specifically to keep her Pack in charge of what was happening. There were no free and open elections and the Arhtai Pack, at least Yelma's family and close relatives had absolute control. While nearly all of those who lived on Koltar Four were Arhtai Pack in some manner, most could not claim a closeness to Yelma Arhtai or her inner circle of children and siblings. They were the ones who held the true power and they had for nearly two million years. Any who had openly opposed or disagreed with Yelma Arhtai or her policies through the years usually ending up disappearing, never to be seen again.

Yelma moved along the massive main corridor within their home, the opulence very much on display with ancient and priceless paintings and art decorating the walls and mantles of nearly every room in the three-story mansion. She wore a loose-fitting wrap around dress and held the steaming mug of tea in her hands as she watched her brother storm into the huge home through the front door, shoving aside the door guards and greeter. His Second officer Alaki was with him which meant this was probably another problem that Kanal could not figure out for himself because he was the cause. Yelma loved her brother, but there were times when he was as dumb as a rock.

"Yelma!" Kanal bellowed.

"I am right here fervon." Yelma answered him as he came around the pillar and saw her walking towards them down the main corridor. "Please do not yell in my home. Your voice has a tendency to wake my grandchildren."

Kanal moved up to her quickly and bowed his head. "My apologies." He said before leaning forward and kissing her cheek with brotherly affection.

Yelma smiled and squeezed his arm as she looked at him. "Nyser is waiting for us in his primary office." She spoke. "He is not happy it is so late brother, and neither am I. What is so important that it could not wait until tomorrow?"

Kanal held up the three data scrolls in his hand. "I will show you." He spoke. "Then we need to act."

Yelma slipped her arm through the curl of his elbow and nodded. "Very well. Come." She spoke as she guided him. "You are looking well Colonel Alaki."

Alaki bowed his head as they began to walk. "Thank you, Lady Arhtai."

Yelma led them through the lower level of the main house, the rooms expansive and fully equipped with the finest furniture made anywhere on Koltar Four. Yelma Arhtai and her husband and mate were of the mind that as the leaders of this pack they deserved the finest of everything to accommodate their needs. When they saw something that they wanted, they took it. Seven of their nine children born here on Koltar Four chose to live in the mansion here and they also took what they wanted. The other two, a daughter and son, chose to live away from the main capital of Lepiri. They had their differences with their mother and father, mainly about who they had chosen to take as their husbands and wives, but Yelma and Nyser still loved them.

Yelma led them into the huge office like room with blazing fireplace, and the enormous glass window wall that faced the main part of Lepiri. The office was furnished just like the house, the best of everything, and Nyser Arhtai turned from the desk he was sitting at and rose to his feet. His six foot four frame was still chiseled muscle, though he did sport somewhat of a small stomach from all of the excellent quality food they ate. He exercised constantly in order to keep it from overwhelming him and so far, it had worked.

Nyser Arhtai was not a foolish man by any means. He had chosen Yelma long ago to be his wife and mate because he saw the cunning intelligence in her. She was smarter than him and Nyser was not ashamed of that fact. He had his skills and Yelma did as well. He treated her like a Queen and allowed her to run things among their Pack when she became his wife and mate and so far, everything had worked out well for them. Nyser Arhtai had wanted to be King, and he had encouraged many of their people to vote for him back on Cerath. He had been young then, and was newly christened as the Alpha of the Arhtai Pack after his father's death. Many did not trust him as they thought him brash and willing to do anything to gain more power. The Lycavorian people had elected Daniho Mahanlo as King over him and Nyser had never forgiven that perceived slight. He also never forgave Daniho Mahanlo for allowing his children to die in battle with the Iais'Kai while they fought somewhere else. He hated Mahanlo blood with a fervor bordering on the unhealthy. This was why he had no qualms at all about agreeing with his wife and mate Yelma when she suggested they turn on Kelia and Lylor Kirek the moment they had the right opportunity and seize power for themselves. They had not predicted the opposition to that, nor the years of battle and civil strife that would follow, but once they had captured Kelia Mahanlo and Lylor Kirek, things began to fall under their control. Nyser was dressed casually and he lifted the glass of wine as he rose from his desk.

"Kanal. Colonel Alaki." He spoke as he moved around the desk and came up beside Yelma. "You said it was important." He motioned to the velvet couches that surrounded the massive knee high granite table in front of the blazing fireplace. Nights on Koltar Four could be frigid, especially at this time of the year here in Lepiri, and the house staff always kept a fire going in the fireplace.

Kanal didn't waste any time as Nyser, Yelma and Alaki took seats on opposite couches. He held up the first of the three data scrolls. "We have a serious problem." He spoke as he bent next to the table and inserted the data scroll into the slot and all of them watched as the video came alive with the images of the wolves destroying the blood scanners. Kanal waited until the one with the azure eyed young man was active and then he froze it just as he opened his mouth fully, exposing the thick, and lethal looking dual wolf fangs and those blazing wolf eyes under the odd-looking helmet.

"Nubou lae!" Nyser muttered. "Who... who is that? Where is this?" He demanded.

"Scanner B159." Kanal answered him. "One of the five we were certain that the Kirek Pack had not found." He spoke. "Apparently, we were not so lucky."

"How is this possible?" Yelma rasped the question. "They cannot destroy the Blood Detectors without setting off alarms linked directly to our Main Frame. We would all know about that within moments."

"Somehow they are hiding it." Kanal spoke in reply.

"What do you mean hiding it?" Yelma snapped. "How could they hide it?"

"I had the technician who discovered and brought this to me check something that I thought of. This happened one day after the Onab ran a full network system check." Kanal spoke wanting to make himself appear smarter than he actually was. "I had him compare these files with those done when the entire network was certified only yesterday."

"And?" Nyser demanded.

"They are identical sister." Kanal spoke. "Somehow... they have found a way to enter our system and access our network."

Yelma shook her head instantly. "That is not possible." She told him.

“The system is telling us that all of the Blood Detectors are operating without issue, yet we have these recordings saying otherwise.” Kanal hissed. “Clearly... someone has discovered a way to access our network and alter data.”

“The scan your tech did and the one done on the system’s check match?” Nyser asked him.

Kanal nodded his head. “Yes.” He replied. “Perfectly.”

Nyser looked at him intently. “Then it is obviously a glitch of some kind that needs to be addressed. What are you suggesting Kanal?” He asked.

“You can see for yourself Nyser!” Kanal almost yelled pointing to the frozen image of the young wolf. “Dual fangs! Only one bloodline in all of our history has had dual fangs. It is the signature of Mahanlo blood!”

Yelma rose to her feet now. “Only four... only four remain alive with Mahanlo blood in them.” She said. “Lylor Kirek and his three children on Pakar Six, which we control indirectly. And Kelia Mahanlo, which we control directly. There are no others fervon.”

“Do we know this to be true?” Kanal asked her.

“Kanal... someone obviously tapped into our low-level security network, which is not entirely that hard to do.” Nyser spoke. “The minor systems can be accessed across the city. Someone made this recording and then uploaded it so that it would be found. They are playing a game on you, old friend.”

Kanal looked at him and then to the image on the data scroll that was showing. He turned back to Yelma. “I have two other scrolls to show you sister.” He spoke. “I had the tech check several different systems.”

“And they all say the same thing?” Yelma asked.

Kanal nodded his head. “Yes.”

Yelma nodded and rose to her feet with a smile. “As always, you are being thorough fervon.” She told him. “But no one has the skills to break through the security the Onab have in place on our Mainframe. No one has been able to do this in all of the years since we have been here, have they?”

Kanal met her gaze and slowly shook her head. “No.”

“Then I suggest you concentrate on finding who made this ridiculous recording and then managed to upload it onto the unsecured security network.” Yelma told him. “We can’t have this kind of seditious activity happening.”

Kanal shook his head. “No, we cannot.” He said. He breathed an obvious sigh of relief and began reaching for the data scrolls. Yelma reached out and shook her head.

“You can leave them fervon.” She said. “Nyser and I will review them fully and then return them to you.”

Kanal nodded his head. “Of course.”

Nyser stood up. “This technician that you used Kanal?” He asked. “Where is he now?”

“I had him followed after he left my office.” Kanal replied. “He went straight home and has not left his residence.”

Nyser nodded his head in approval. “We should probably pick him up when he returns to work in the morning. Just to insure he is not the one who actually did this.”

Kanal nodded. “Of course.” He said.

“As always... you have done well brother.” Yelma told him with warmth and a smile.

Kanal smiled at her. “I know that we disturbed you. Alaki and I will find our own way out.” He said.

“I can walk you.” Yelma told him.

Kanal shook his head. “No. We have taken enough of your time. Remain here and when we are gone you can go back to what it was you were doing.” He said as Alaki rose and they both bowed their heads to them and then headed for the entrance into the office.

Nyser looked at Yelma as they left his office and he returned to the couch looking at the still frozen image of the dual fanged Alpha with azure colored eyes. “Yelma?” He spoke softly.

Yelma turned back to look at him. “I know.” She spoke as she came over beside him and sat down.

“Are we certain that Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo were taken care of?” Nyser asked her.

Yelma nodded her head. “The last contact we had with the Ekela Pack confirmed that they were dead. They said that only one of their descendants had survived and they were hours from removing him as well.”

“That was the last message?” Nyser asked.

Yelma nodded as she looked at her husband. “Yes. No contact was made after that last message. Just over two million years ago. And we did try to reach them Nyser, you know that. We agreed that when they killed the last descendant it must have triggered a war of some kind between the remaining Packs and that is why we have had no contact with them in all of this time. Certainly, if they had failed and Mahanlo blood survived they would have come here before now.”

“Who sent it?” Nyser asked.

“Anven Ekela.” Yelma answered.

Nyser nodded his head. “Anven would not have sent that message unless it was true.” He said. He motioned with his hand to the image leaning closer. “That is not someone of Kelia Mahanlo and Lylor Kirek’s blood Yelma. It can’t be.” He said thoughtfully. “The jaw is too wide and the neck is too thick even for a son of Lylor Kirek. And the fangs...”

Yelma nodded her head. “I know.” She said softly. “They are too thick and too long. It has to be someone playing a game on us Nyser.”

Nyser nodded his head as he reached for the small computer console on the granite table. “To what purpose though Yelma my wife and mate? No one can challenge us.” He said as he activated the COM panel.

The face of the young man appeared on the screen. “COM Officer, RENDITION Station. State your request.” The young man looked up and his eyes grew wide. “Lord Nyser! Sibfla!” He exclaimed. “My... my apologies.”

“On my order... first thing tomorrow morning I want my son Fomir to take a detachment to the Sanctuary.” Nyser spoke. “They are to return to my office with Ch'eldo and his senior technician. If Ch'eldo refuses, execute his oldest son. If he continues to refuse, kill his family starting with his wife until he complies.”

The young man was typing furiously and he nodded his head. “Understood Lord Nyser!” He almost yelled. “Do you wish me to inform Lord Fomir now?”

Nyser shook his head. “Nothing can be done tonight, but he is to do that when he arrives in the morning. That is his priority.”

“As you order.” He stammered. “I will see to it. Please forgive...”

Nyser ended the communication and looked at Yelma. She tilted her head slightly. “You suspect Ch'eldo and his people?” She asked.

Nyser shook his head. “No. But if anyone can find out how they were able to do this, the Onab can.” He said. “And we need to know if something is actually happening on Pakar Six.”

“Contact one of our people?” Yelma asked him.

Nyser shook his head with a small smile. Yelma was very intelligent and cunning, but she still could not make sense of military logic. “We can’t do that without the risk of exposing them all.” He said. “Not yet. Not until we know something for sure.”

Yelma rose to her feet and stared at the image for a long moment before reaching down and deactivating it. “At least we know for certain that those fools have not woken Lylor Kirek or any of his foul children.” She said looking at her husband and mate. “The Cryo Pod fail safes would have activated the alarms here in our home instantly. That is how we designed them.”

Nyser nodded his head. “If this person is real then it has to be someone who survived the purge. What we do not need right now is someone with Mahanlo blood making trouble for us.” He said as he too stood up now. “I’m going to check the location.”

Yelma looked at him. “You have concerns?” She asked.

“No... but I’d like to be safe.” Nyser answered her honestly. “Almost a million and a half years we have held in her cryo Yelma.” He said. “The only one who knows who she is anymore is the Senior Guardsman. The rest of the detail has no idea. They think she is some sort of sick person from centuries ago that we are keeping alive until our doctors find a cure for whatever infects her.”

“Better that it stays that way.” Yelma said.

Nyser nodded his head. “I agree. Which is why I’m going to go check. Just to be safe.”

Yelma nodded her head and moved closer to him. “Do not take long husband.” She told him in a seductive voice. “This talk of Mahanlo blood stirs my passion to make more children of our own knowing that Mahanlo blood will never see the light of day again.”

Nyser smiled and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek and neck. “I shall be quick.” He said. “Very quick.”

LEPIRI WESTERN ENTERTAINMENT QUAD

Comelo moved quickly through the double doors into the large club, the music raucous and making it impossible for anyone to overhear any conversation being conducted without aid of filters. Comelo however, he did not stay in the main room of the club and quickly made his way through a set of double steel doors and into back room where he stopped in front of the burly Lycavorian Bouncer. He was not the same Comelo that he was this morning. He was far more confident and sure of himself.

“Anlak.” Comelo spoke as he lifted his arms and the man stepped forward.

“Glad to see you again Comelo.” The man spoke. “You lost them I take it?”

Comelo nodded his head. “Of course.” He answered as Anlak patted him down loosely. He did not put much effort into it, more because it was what he was used to doing than anything else. Comelo was trusted completely among their circle and had been for more than six decades. “Your training paying off again my friend.”

Anlak nodded his head as he motioned him through the door he stood in front of. “Good to hear.” He spoke. “She’s downstairs, station three.”

Comelo nodded and moved through the single steel door into a long stairwell. He made his way down the stairwell easily, his wolf eyes able to guide him through the dimly lit area. At the bottom, he turned right and moved into the large room where he saw nearly a dozen men and women sitting at different computer setups. Comelo wasted no time and moved to station three where the face of the much older Lycavorian woman turned to face him in her chair.

No one knew exactly how old she was, her scent put her at close to three and a half million years in age, but because she used powerful scent maskers most of the time, even that was suspect. She knew things about history that others did not, things that only someone who had lived through events on Cerath could have known, and this provided her an incredible amount of respect and honor.

“Comelo.” She spoke with a genuine smile and warmth in her voice.

Comelo bowed his head to her out of reverence and respect. “Nystai.”

The older woman dismissed his actions with a wave of her hand and a smile. “Stop that young wolf.” She told him. “I am not a god.”

Comelo met her eyes and smiled. “Some would debate that with you given everything that you know.” He said.

“Probably. And they would lose.” Nystai answered with a smile. “I’m am just an old woman who watches and takes everything in. And an old woman who remembers.”

Comelo held out the small, portable computer drive. “I covered my tracks well.” He told her.

Nystai took the drive from his fingers and then looked at him. “You are certain about what you saw and what you found?” She asked.

Comelo nodded his head. “You will see for yourself Nystai. Go to 23.6 on the video and you will see.” He spoke as she plugged in the drive to the computer platform she sat in front of, one of the most sophisticated that Comelo had ever seen. It was an Onab computer system to be sure, but it was larger than most he had ever seen, and definitely able to do much more. Nystai was a master computer programmer and designer and she could manipulate the Onab system like no one he had ever seen.

Nystai did as he told her and suddenly she was staring at the azure eyes and dual fangs of the Alpha Lycavorian. Her body stiffened and her head felt light as she gripped the edges of her computer station.

“Son hote pen sey covi nysilir saoi.” Nystai muttered loud enough to catch the attention of those others near her. As Comelo watched they all saw the image of the Alpha wolf, dual fangs fully extended and azure eyes like two glowing stars in the dark of space. Murmurs began to sweep the room and he looked at Nystai. (By all I have ever held holy)

“Nystai... what is wrong?” He gasped as he reached for her and took her arms to support her. Comelo didn’t know it, but he was one of only three individuals that Nystai ever allowed to touch her and this gave him an added mystique among those who worked in this room.

Nystai looked at him as she gripped his forearms. “You discovered this Comelo?” She gasped. “This was not... this was not made?”

“Made?” Comelo asked. “Made by who?” He spoke. “I came into work this morning and began checking the recordings as my duties require. I discovered this Alpha and four other Alpha wolves with dual fangs destroying the Blood Detectors on Pakar Six. Two females and two other males. They were all unmistakable as Alphas Nystai. The recordings were all made at the same time, or within minutes of each other. One of the females had eyes like this one, and the other had pointed ears Nystai. Pointed ears! I have never seen anything like it in my life.”

“Jen cahs Nystai!” A young woman gasped from Comelo’s right and he turned to see her standing close by, having left her computer station. (His eyes)

Nystai nodded her head as she squeezed Comelo’s arms in support. “Jainn.” She spoke.

Comelo looked at Nystai as she inched herself back into her chair. “Atle hay jen cahs?” He asked. (What about his eyes)

Nystai looked at him. “Vada Fera Tarivu rie vada Mard Revik.” Nystai spoke. “The First Herald of the True King is prophesized to have Azure blue eyes.” She said. “What color are his eyes Comelo?”

Comelo looked at the screen. “Azure blue.” He answered.

Nystai nodded her head. “There is something else. The First and Second Heralds of the true King... they are said to be the oldest and youngest of the King’s sons at the time he returns to his people. The Third Herald is his soul daughter. A female of staggering beauty who is both Darastrixi and Lycavorian.”

Comelo looked at her. “Nystai, I have read the prophecies. Lord Pengot made sure to disseminate them widely in those first years after the Dremsa rie Saan and when they were banished to Pakar Six.” He said. “Are you...” His eyes grew wide then and he stepped back from her. “Nystai... the Fera Tarivu is... the Mard Revik is... they are...”

She nodded her head. “Yes. They are the direct descendants of our beloved King Daniho. The purest form of Lycavorian blood to exist anywhere among the stars. And the only bloodline in Lycavorian history with dual fangs.” She said as she reached out to touch the screen almost reverently.

Comelo stared at her with wide eyes. “They have come!” He almost yelled the words. “Mahanlo blood has returned!”

Nystai held up her hand. “Tell me what you found.” She told him. “Kanal must have ordered you to do a reset, or to check the systems. After seeing this they would not have been idle.”

Comelo nodded his head vigorously. “The recordings are all authentic.” He told her. “In the data line however, I found a very sophisticated code that had rewritten the initial code. It was returning normal signals during an inquiry even though the recordings showed a different story.”

“Something overwrote the code?” Nystai asked.

Comelo nodded his head. “I was shocked as well. I’ve never known anyone who could overwrite Onab code.”

Nystai nodded her head. “Neither have I.” She said. “Liita Nenay is the only one skilled enough with Onab code to do this. Ch'eldo and the other Onab trained her themselves, but she would not do this without telling me.”

“We have not seen Ch'eldo and the others in millennia Nystai.” The young woman who had come from her station spoke now. “We have always feared Nyser Arhtai executed all of them after the Dremsa rie Saan.”

“What if he did not Taarie?” Nystai said slowly. “We have always thought those who service the Onab equipment on the station and here on the surface were those who Ch'eldo was forced to train. What if it is them? They are blanketed with security and do not stay in the open for very long.”

“That is a big if Nystai.” The woman said.

“There is something else Nystai.” Comelo spoke now. “A full systems check was done yesterday, as usual, but as I was running the diagnostic I discovered a back door into the Main Frame.”

Nystai nodded her head. “Into the low-level sub systems.” She told him. “Yes... I had Liita put that there many years ago. She...”

Comelo shook his head. “No. It was a low grade, backdoor encryption spike into the entire Main Frame. All inconsequential sub systems and all primary systems as well, if one knows how to use it. Security among them. And it was put there recently. Whoever altered the network to make it appear that the system is operating normally, was able to infiltrate through that encryption spike. They knew the code to bypass the spike.”

“Were you able to trace the source?” Nystai asked.

Comelo shook his head. “They were in and out before the system even knew it.”

Taarie looked at Nystai. “No one is that fast Nystai.” She said. “Not even you.”

Nystai looked at her. “Well, someone is.” She said. “And they left no trace of their presence.” She turned back to Comelo and stared at him for a long moment. “You say Kanal took this to his vile sister?”

Comelo nodded his head. “Yes.”

Nystai glanced at Taarie and then back to Comelo. “You are done Comelo.” She told him. “Taarie will find a place for you. If you go back, they will take you and we will never hear from you again.”

Comelo nodded his head. “I assumed as much.” He told her. “I’m sorry Nystai.”

“Carians do not be sorry!” Nystai announced. “You have given us information and hope that we did not have before this night! Find a terminal and help us to locate any more of these low-grade encryption spikes that may exist. Whoever infiltrated the Planetary Mainframe did it using one of those; let’s see if we can do the same thing.”

“It’s risky Nystai.” Taarie said.

Nystai nodded her head. “Risks must be taken some time.” She said. “Now, now I believe it is time. Make sure everyone is prepared to purge their drives and move if we need too. I will try and make contact with Liita, and someone tell Anlak we are not to be disturbed for the rest of the evening.”

PAKAR SIX COMMAND CENTER

There had never been this many men and women jammed into the Command Center in all the time they had been on Pakar Six. They couldn’t chance the Arhtai Pack thinking that they were plotting something. It was different now, all of them could sense it in the air, and they were ready. They had been ready for thousands of years.

Kesas, his children, Rothan, Aryera, Marda, Taig and all seven commanders of the Kirek Security Force. All of them were now equipped with Pralor Particle Weapons and Mark Six ArmorPly. Thoti was a Colonel of the Durcunusaan, a position not easily obtained thanks to the standards that Vengal had put in place. It was his duty to command the detail that had readily volunteered to come on this mission, having to beat back thousands of others who had wanted to go. This is what Thoti was meant for and Duewa knew that now. This was his life and where he was the happiest and proudest. She would never take that away from him, but she also got promises out of him that he would not be as reckless as if he was single. They had a life now and Duewa wanted them together to experience that. That was a promise Thoti made with great honor and respect to Duewa.

Thoti selected only the most experienced Durcunusaan soldiers out here with them, and those who had fought with Martin or Androcles before. This was going to be a very fast and very brutal operation he knew. He had already spread the word among the Durcunusaan of what the Arhtai Pack had done and what they were responsible for. As Thoti knew they would, the Durcunusaan now wanted vengeance for their King. The Mahanlo-Leonidas family was revered within the Union, perhaps not by everyone, you can never please everyone, but their family was respected and greatly loved by the vast majority of the citizens.

Thoti did not have any issues from among the Kirek Pack members that were going to accompany them. Every one of them, down to the youngest one, who was several thousand years older than the oldest among the Union forces, looked to Thoti and the others with an almost holy like appraisal. The Kirek Pack looked upon Martin, his wives and mates, and his children as almost godlike figures. Androcles, Dorian and even Laren were held in an even higher regard because of what they were. The Heralds of the True King. They were the royal descendants of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. They were royalty in every sense of the word as far as the Kirek Pack was concerned. They had been raised to believe in them and what they represented and so far from what they could see now, that dedication and devotion had not been wrongly placed. Thoti was obviously a veteran military commander within the hierarchy of what they called the Lycavorian Union. This is what their people called themselves and what Mahanlo blood now led across the stars. This is what the Kirek Pack had now become part of.

The Kirek Pack members were finding that the Durcunusaan were not so very different from them in many respects, just trained in ways they had never seen before. Ways that they were eagerly absorbing as they saw something new. They were also learning much of what their King and his children and others around him had done through the years. The battles that they had fought, and the ones where they had shown mercy and ended the fighting before they had begun. The history of their King and his family was coming to them through the eyes of the men and women who followed them without question. That is what solidified the honor and respect of the Kirek Pack more than anything ever could, even millions of years after they had already committed themselves to the survival and honor of the Mahanlo bloodline. Now, that honor and respect had found its way to hundreds of generations in the future and they would get that chance once again to serve their King and his bloodline. There was no mistaking Martin or who he was, who any of his children or wives were, their auras were beyond what any wolf they had ever felt could generate. Their scents and bloodline were beyond anything they had seen or felt, and then there was the most prominent item, the dual wolf fangs that only one bloodline in their entire history as a people had ever carried.

That was the deciding factor for most of them.

Over the next weeks and months, they would come to see and understand what the many Durcunusaan already knew and the reasons why they followed Martin and his family without question. Now... now however, they were ready to begin retribution for the Dremsa rie Saan.

“... Is going to be what we call quick, violent and dirty.” Danny was speaking to those who were gathered around the chart table and crammed into the room. Martin stood just behind Danny, Julie beside him as she always was as his COM officer. Colin, Pablo and Kenny were standing behind him listening, while Tony and T'lolt leaned against the wall behind them. Both of them were getting frowning glances in their direction simply because of their size.

“Regardless of what the Arhtai Pack is responsible for, and believe me we all know what they have done and what they continue to do, but right now we must remain focused on our mission objectives.” Danny spoke.

“Kelia Mahanlo.” Rothan spoke softly.

Danny nodded his head. “Mari, Caylt...” He spoke turning his head slightly. Mari nodded and she had Caylt began typing on the two consoles on either end of the table. Danny stabbed down into the center of the table. “This is our primary objective.” He spoke pointing to a large underground bunker that appeared to be buried under a main thoroughfare of the capital city of Lepiri. “This is the main Arhtai Compound. Their home. It seems Yelma Arhtai is a sadistic upaee because she has a view of exactly where our ship is going to land. I hope she enjoys the show.”

“Your ship?” Aryera asked now.

Danny nodded his head. “For'mya, Endith and Tina are Martin's flight team. They are going to take the ship we came in on, we call it a TYPE TWO Dragon transport, and land it right here. Right in the open above the secret bunker that is holding Kelia.” Danny said stabbing his finger on the table. Aryera, Rothan, Kesas and most of the others in the room dismissed the fact that Danny referred to Martin by his given name. All of them were well aware that Daniel Simpson was the Mard Fervon of their King. He was the man that Martin considered his one and only true brother. As Reva had told them just before Danny arrived...

“Treat this man as you would treat Martin. Treat those with him as you would treat me and Kelia and Lylor. They are his anos nathos. His Soul Family. He considers each of them his brothers and sister. And Daniel is his Mard Fervon. They have walked through the crucible of fire and death together and emerged on the other side forged as one.”

“Why there?” Rothan asked. “You will be completely exposed General.”

Danny nodded his head. “Exposed yes, but never alone.” Danny told them. “We'll have SPARTA'S WRATH and the ARIZONA in high orbit above us. Between the two of these ships they could turn Koltar Four to dust in a few hours if we wanted and there wouldn't be a damn thing anyone could do. They will be directing what we call STRIKER ATs, or Attack Transports. They will be loaded with the bulk of our Durcunusaan forces and the three hundred Kirek Pack members that are coming with us. They will be covering the outer perimeter that we set up once the TYPE TWO sets down.”

“Why here?” Aryera asked.

Danny smiled, flashing his brilliant white teeth. “Funny you should ask that question.” He said. “We...”

A loud alarm sounded three times and Caylt turned from his station and looked at the monitor. He turned back to his father. “Ranol Nenay has arrived father. Secondary Transport Bay. Lord Lylor has already begun meeting them. Ranol Nenay brought several of his grandchildren.”

Martin looked at Kesas now and met his eyes. “The Nenay have several long-range transports that they are allowed to operate. They use them to transfer supplies and crews to several mining operations that they operate on asteroid fields in the system. The Arhtai Pack knows of them but refuse to do the work themselves. The Nenay Pack has always been hard working and they volunteered to do the mining for concessions.”

“Stay out of their business?” Martin asked.

Kesas nodded his head. “That is one of them, yes.” He answered. “One of the mining sites is very near to Pakar Six’s fourth moon. It is a simple matter for them to move here then, staying hidden behind the moon.”

Martin nodded his head. “That’s why he won’t be able to go back?”

Kesas nodded his head. “The ships normally only go out once a day to the closer sites and then they return. The Arhtai orbital sensors lose contact with the ships, but they know when they are supposed to return and if they don’t...”

“Then they get nosey.” Martin said.

“Yes, Milord.” Kesas spoke. “He has sacrificed much to come here Milord.”

Martin nodded his head. “And he will sacrifice no more. How long has this been going on?” Martin asked.

“It was Ranol who set it up Milord.” Rothan spoke now in reply. “He has been doing it for nearly a million years now and they have never missed a contact.”

“Every few months the transports go to all of their mining operations to transfer major supplies to the crews and they are gone for a week and several days at least.” Kesas said. “This allows us to plan in a trip here to Pakar Six to exchange information and even supplies that we do not have here.”

Martin held up his hand. “I believe you.” He said. “Let’s go meet them then, shall we?” He looked at Caylt. “Have them move to the main Transport Bay with their people. Androcles is briefing his team there.”

Kesas nodded his head and motioned to Caylt, who then sent the message.

Martin looked at Danny and reached out to place his hand on his shoulder. “Continue the briefing fervon. We are cutting it close and I want everyone on the same page within the next three hours. We’re leaving in five.”

“Early bird gets the worm.” Danny said with his trademark grin.

Martin chuckled. “I’m going to wake them up so abruptly that they are going to shit in their pants and leave skid marks all over.”

Danny wasn’t the only one who laugh at that as Martin turned and headed out of the Command Center with Kesas.

The Kirek Pack security that had met them in the Secondary Transport Bay escorted them to the Primary Bay when they were stunned at the two ships that now occupied the huge bay. Gara clutched her husband and mate’s hand tightly as Taion and Saymora moved along behind them with their four of their fourteen children, Saymora holding the small child Tamore tightly in her arms. Radend and Taraina Mahanlo had accompanied them as well as her brother and sisters. Three sisters and one brother who were now swarming around their grandfather with tears pouring from the eyes of nearly everyone that had arrived on the ship as they walked. Lylor Kirek was happy, very happy and it showed in his gait as he walked with Taraina in one arm and his great grandson Tocin in the other. Their sisters, Eia and Veri walked beside them with tears in their eyes, clutching their siblings as they held Lylor close. For all of them, the smell of Mahanlo blood was getting stronger then they had ever experienced before as they entered the Transport Bay and when they came around the end of the huge ship they discovered why. Sitting by the rear of the lower ramp were men and women that they had never seen before in their lives, but they knew without hesitation that this was their blood. This was their family.

Androcles and his siblings had smelled them the moment they exited their ship in the other Transport Bay, but they also smelled their uncle was there to greet them. Let Lylor have his time with them first and he would bring them here eventually. Androcles rose to his feet now, Sadi and Carisia rising from between his legs as he nudged them gently, Lu'ria, Caliria, Sehri and Ne'Veha standing all around him. Eliani and Brendi stood in front of Jomann, while Normya leaned against Tir'ut's side. There were so many of them who reeked of Mahanlo blood and they stood there before them proudly and without fear. Watching all of them rise to their feet slowly had Taraina and her siblings standing there gawking in disbelief. The pureness of Mahanlo blood struck all of them right down to their core, none of them having smelled anything so pure except for their grandmother Kelia. This scent was slightly different than Kelia, more raw and pungent, and it exuded power and confidence.

Taraina had always been the brave one of the four of them and it was she who looked at Lylor quickly and saw him nod. She moved forward hesitantly, and watched as the male with blazing azure colored eyes stepped forward as well.

Taraina stared at Androcles' face as he towered over her. Radend stood just a little distance away, always looking to defend his beloved wife and mate, but there really was no need. He could sense without really trying that those here in this bay would defend his beloved wife and mate to the death if it came to that. They would defend their family and blood to the end of time if need be. She reached up and used her fingers to trace the line of his jaw and cheek, her index finger softly tracing the scar that extended slightly above and below his right eye. Taraina could smell the Mahanlo blood unlike at any other time of her life, so powerful and pure. She glanced up into Andro's face and saw him smile, those blue eyes moist.

"Naltai chrora." Androcles spoke softly. "Una coi yer alda un heuhly elore forn." (Hello cousin. It is very good to finally meet you.)

His voice and those words were all that Taraina Mahanlo needed and she burst into more tears and with a scream of delight she threw herself into her cousin's arms. It was at that very moment that Tocin, Eia and Veri followed their sister without question. Lylor held back his own emotion as they were swarmed by Androcles and his siblings.

Ranol and Gara were watching as well with smiles on their faces when they heard the next voice behind them.

"Hell of a thing, reunions." Martin spoke. "Especially when you did not know that your blood existed a few weeks ago."

Ranol and everyone else whirled around and were suddenly bathed in the overwhelming aura of an Alpha wolf unlike anything they had ever felt. Well for Ranol's family anyway, for Ranol Nenay had felt an aura like this before. He and his beloved Gara had experienced this aura openly and without shame. The aura of their King. Daniho Mahanlo wasn't into pomp or circumstance or anything like that. He was especially down to earth, as was Ashten Mahanlo, and Ranol had experienced this first hand. He had sat with both of them casually in the field as they fought the Iais'Kai all of those many years ago.

Standing before them now, Ranol could see both men in the eyes and face of the Alpha before them. So pure and powerful and untamed, just as the brothers had been all those many years ago. There was no question who this Alpha was, nor those of his children who stood so close around them all. There was no question of the pureness of the bloodline that permeated the air around them and it humbled Ranol Nenay unlike anything had before this day. Ranol was very nearly overwhelmed himself, and surprising everyone he quickly dropped to one knee in front of Martin and bowed his head.

"I cannot be forgiven for my actions my King." Ranol began. "I have failed Mahanlo blood in a way that can never be forgiven. I failed and the Dremsa rie Saan was the result. I cannot be forgiven. I can sense who you are. Smell that you are pure Mahanlo blood. Only the descendants of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo could project what you project without thinking. I offer... I offer my life to you in payment for my failures. All I ask is that my Pack does not bear the stain on my honor."

"Ranol! No!" Gara screamed out as she stepped forward towards her husband.

Taion grabbed her arms then, holding her back. His father had confided in him alone about what he would do to try and restore the honor of their Pack fully. He did not agree with him but he would not go against his father's wishes.

Martin was taken aback by this show and it was obvious on his face as he stood beside Kesas, who had an equally stunned expression on his face.

FATHER NO! The female voice echoed within the Etheric realm and brought all of them to attention. Even those of the Nenay pack who, at most, were able to use Mindvoice at a Tier Two level heard the words.

Androcles turned his head quickly as Sadi's hands went to her abdomen in surprise. She would begin to show in a few more weeks but right now you could not tell she carried twins. Achilles and Neesia had been silent for the last few days, resting and nurturing themselves in their mother's womb. They also knew there was much going on that they could not help with and they remained silent as they watched and learned.

"Neesia!" Sadi gasped aloud.

Androcles stepped away from Taraina and right up to Sadi, his hand resting on her abdomen as Sadi reached out and placed her hand on his shoulder, gripping his shoulder tightly. Carisa, Ne'Veha, Sehri, Lu'ria and Caliria placed their hand on her abdomen as well, moving closer to Sadi and basically showing everyone in the bay who they were.

[Neesia?] Andro reached for his twin daughter, including his wives and mates naturally.

[I feel him papa.] Neesia spoke softly. [I can feel him within me. So strong and proud of who he is.]

[Feel who?] Androcles asked her, looking into Sadi's jungle green eyes confused.

[The one who will claim me and make me his.] Neesia answered her father proudly.

This pronouncement caused Androcles to bristle and his azure eyes flared and changed to his wolf persona and his armor and wings exploded into existence with a white flash of Etheric power. Those who were not family members, most of the Nenay Pack present actually, they all dropped to one knee for they recognized what Androcles wore.

"Vada arwa rie vada Tarivuos!" Several of Ranol and Gara's children gasped together in astonishment. (The armor of the Heralds)

Andro's azure eyes fell upon those gathered in front of his father and he could see their confusion as they had been speaking on an Etheric level that no one present could touch except his wives and mates.

[Neesia are you certain?] Sadi asked now as she rubbed her abdomen.

[I am certain mother.] Neesia answered instantly. [His mind is so free and open to me. He is reaching for me. He hurts because his mother fell when she was working and hit her stomach. His head hurts sometimes. His mother holds him even now.]

Andro turned as everyone was still watching them confused and he looked at his father. "Andro?" Martin asked him.

Andro ignored him. [Guide me Neesia.] He spoke.

[He rests within his mother's arm papa.] Neesia answered. [It is him father.]

[She speaks the truth father.] Achilles chimed in now.

Andro made his way forward while everyone watched. His wings extended upwards, causing men and women alike to get out of his way as he moved forward. His eyes focused on Saymora then and he felt Neesia pulse him within the Etheric realm. She held a small three-month-old boy child in her arms who was kicking his feet and hands in the air and she was trying to comfort him thinking he was in pain. It wasn't pain that he was feeling however, as Androcles reached out ever further and touched the tendrils of Etheric power that radiated from the small boy. He stopped in front of Saymora, her eyes wide in fear as she looked at him and hugged Tamore closer, and that is when Taion stepped in front of his wife and mate. Taion Nenay snarled in a defensive manner, his fangs extending and his eyes changing, one Alpha warning another to keep his distance.

"Taion!" Gara Nenay cried out in warning for her son.

Androcles snarled even louder, his own dual fangs extending fully and his eyes changing, but to his credit Taion flinched only slightly for Androcles' snarl was not one of challenge for Saymora and it confused him.

Andro turned quickly and held out his hand for Sadi. "KertaGai. Carisia. All of you." He called gently.

Sadi and the others moved right up to where Andro stood while Taion and Saymora looked on confused. Saymora could feel Tamore becoming more fidgety in her arms and she looked down at his face and she gasped. His eyes had changed to the wolf within him, ice blue like his father, but so much brighter and focused. His eyes had never changed since his birthing day, the doctors saying he was unable to do so because of the damage to his brain from her fall. Taion looked at his son and his eyes grew wide as well. Tamore was stretching out his tiny hand towards Sadi's abdomen now and he wasn't going to be denied.

"It's ok." Sadi exclaimed as she looked at Saymora. "It's ok." She stepped closer to Saymora as everyone watched and finally his tiny hands were able to reach her abdomen. Sadi gasped in delight when she felt Neesia begin to sing happily within her womb, as the Etheric tendrils from Tamore and her own met and mingled lightly together. It was in this moment that Neesia and Tamore shared everything with their parents, both Saymora and Taion stunned at what they were experiencing for the first time and feeling humbled by it.

Andro turned his head quickly and looked at Eliani. "Eli." Eliani didn't hesitate and moved up beside her brother. Andro waited until she was beside him. "Lady Saymora fell a short time ago while working in her yard. She struck her abdomen and it apparently also injured Tamore."

Eliani looked at Saymora and lifted her hand. "May I?" She asked.

"No!" Taion hissed.

Andro looked at him. "My sister Eliani is a healer Taion Nenay." He told him. "Let her work her skills."

"Taion, yes." Saymora spoke.

Taion looked at his wife and mate and saw her nod to him. He glanced at Eliani once more and nodded his head. Eliani placed her hand on Tamore's small chest and smiled as she felt him wiggle.

He says it tickles Tenna Eli. Neesia reached out openly now and even Ranol and Gara were astonished at the power and clarity of what they heard in their heads.

Eliani closed her eyes briefly as she held her hand over Tamore. "You struck the right lower quadrant of your abdomen in your fall." Eliani said. "The fall caused sufficient damage to the wall of your uterus that Tamore's skull was impacted and did not form fully."

Saymora gasped in shock, for it took a full two-hour exam by the doctors to tell her that. "How... how... it took our doctors two hours and several tests to tell me that."

Eliani smiled and all of them saw her hand flare a soft white color and extend outward over Tamore's small head. He was giggling now, his hands and feet kicking back and forth and all of them could hear Neesia laughing in the Etheric connection.

He says it really tickles now! Neesia told them.

It took only ten seconds and then Eliani drew her hand back with a nod of approval. "All done." She spoke proudly looking at Saymora. "I repaired the damaged to his outer skull bone and it will grow naturally now. Give him some extra amounts of calcium for a few weeks to reinvigorate his bone growth but he will be fine."

"But he..." Saymora gasped in disbelief. "How?"

Eliani smiled. "I do good work. Just like my mother." She said proudly.

Neesia? Ne'Veha asked now as she moved closer.

He is so happy medwan! Neesia answered her. I want... I want to touch him papa. I want to touch him with my mind. He wants this as well.

Androcles looked at Taion who was looking at him with wide eyes for he had heard everything Neesia had said. "How can you... how can you talk to her even now?" Taion gasped aloud.

"That would take a bit more of an explanation." Andro answered him.

"What... what does she mean?" Saymora asked now. "She wants to touch him? How can she do that?"

"With her mind." Sadi answered. "Much the same way that Androcles touched me when I first met him. He was only eight months old then but we knew even at that moment we were meant for each other."

Saymora's eyes grew wide. "This is what... this is what my son... our son feels as well?" Saymora asked.

Sadi nodded her head. "We can feel it within him, yes. His Etheric abilities are not powerful enough for him to put them to words that you would understand, but we can feel it within him. If Neesia touches him like she wants, like he wants... then he will..."

"Would we... would we be able to talk to him if..." Taion asked.

Androcles nodded his head. "Yes." He replied to the question without hesitation. "We would be tied together as... well... as family." He looked at Taion intently. "Your son and my daughter are meant for one another by higher powers that guide us and our actions day by day. I have learned through the years to not question them anymore.”

“They have... they have guided you?” Taion said.

Androcles nodded again. “They guided us here. To all of you. To our blood. And to those who are our friends.”

Taion looked at his beloved wife and mate. He could not imagine his life without Saymora in it and she had always been the strong one. “Aur valiath?” He asked.

Saymora didn’t hesitate in the least. She could feel the power and confidence in Sadi and the other women who this Neesia would call mother. Her bloodline was the purest of any that Tamore could marry into. Filled with honor and love and devotion just as she could feel from all those that stood around her.

“Jainn.” Saymora spoke in reply, her eyes on Sadi.

Sadi smiled brightly now and took her hand. “Come, we will go someplace quiet and forge our futures.” She spoke.

Taion watched as Sadi, Ne'Veha, Carisia, Sehri, Lu'ria and Caliria pulled Saymora away with them, his wife and mate smiling brilliantly. He looked back to Androcles now and saw those azure eyes focused on him. “I suppose our children have given us a day to plan in the future.” Andro said.

Taion Nenay smiled now and nodded his head. “I... I suppose they have.” He answered.

Andro looked at his father now. “I believe you have your answer to give to Lord Ranol Nenay when it comes to his request father.” Andro spoke.

Martin nodded his head with a huge smile as well. “Shame we have to wait for that party.” He spoke as Ranol and Gara looked at him. “That is going to be a doozy for sure. At least twenty years in the making.” He looked at Ranol now and moved closer to him. “Your Pack has protected members of my family for more years than I have been alive. You have done this without regard for yourselves or the danger it put you or your Pack in. You can take your request and stick it where the sun don’t shine Ranol Nenay. I have a better suggestion... you have two sons that that upaee Yelma Arhtai is holding with my Tenna Kelia correct?”

Ranol looked quickly to Gara and then back to him. “Yes Milord.”

Martin nodded his head. “What say you and I get to kicking some serious Arhtai ass and get our family back.” Martin told him. “I’d much rather do that.”

Ranol Nenay stared at Martin with a look of shock that quickly turned to one of immense pleasure. “You intend to retrieve them don’t you Milord?” He said.

Martin nodded his head. “Every single one of them. It might be a good thing if your boys woke up and their father was there to greet them don’t you think?”

Ranol nodded his head. “I do sire.” Ranol answered.

Martin moved even closer and put his arm around Ranol’s shoulder much to his stunned amazement and he took Gara’s hand in his as well. “Lady Gara... let me introduce you to my wives and mates Anja and Dysea. They will be leading the ground force into the bunker that holds our family members.”

“What... what will you be doing Milord?” Gara stammered.

Martin grinned at her as he began to walk with them out of the transport bay. “What will I be doing Lady Gara?” He asked. “In a little over five hours I’m going to become a very large problem for the Arhtai Pack. I’m going to be like a really bad nightmare that just will not go away. They’re going to love me, you watch.”

CHAPTER SEVENTY-FIVE

SPARTA'S WRATH PORT LANDING BAY DELTA PREMONITION

“...Is incredible!” Liita Nenay stammered as she sat in the chair beside Mari. “This... this equipment is just as sophisticated as the Onab technology. And it is very similar!”

Mari smiled as she nodded her head. “There are some differences, but I designed the crossover program with my husband Deion to allow seamless interaction between the two types. It allows Onab and Pralor computer systems to talk to one another without a hint of programming interference.” Mari glanced up with a brilliant smile to where Deion stood behind her.

Liita looked at her with wide eyes. “You designed this?” She gasped.

Mari nodded. “My mate and I.” She answered.

“Then this is how you found the encryption spike?” Liita asked.

Mari nodded once more and typed on her console. “We detected the odd signal it was emanating and from there we discovered the backdoor into the Arhtai Main Frame that it was protecting.” She motioned to the monitor over her head and pointed to the position where they had found the spike.

Liita reached up and traced the large screen in front of her with her finger. Her eyebrows narrowed slightly. “This is not the bypass I put into the system four hundred years ago.” She stated confidently. “I was asked by a friend, someone better than me with Onab technology, to put a backdoor into the low-level systems so that they could be monitored. This is not even in the same grid network where I put my backdoor. This is something different.”

“You put a backdoor into the Main Frame because someone asked you too?” Deion asked from where he stood behind Mari.

Liita nodded her head quickly. “The woman who asked me to do this was one of the original twelve Technicians who were chosen when they left Cerath to learn the Onab systems. Nystai is her name.”

“And she is the one who told you to put this in?” Deion asked.

Liita nodded her head again. “Yes... but this is not the one I built into the system, like I said. This is something else. Something much more sophisticated.” Liita looked at Mari. “May I?”

Mari leaned back and lifted her hands away from the computer console. “Of course.”

Liita typed quickly and they all watched as the screen changed and focused into a much smaller area of the Main Frame network until they were looking at a dull red light that was blinking every twenty seconds. “This is mine.” She told them. “It’s in a completely different grid sector as I said. And it looks identical to a network code pulse, which is common in Onab systems.”

“Then who put the one we found in place?” Mari asked her.

Liita shrugged her shoulders. “Nystai would not have been able to do that kind of work.” She said. “If I had to guess... I would say an Onab put that there.”

“Someone from this Ch'eldo’s group then?” Deion asked.

Liita nodded her head. “Now that we know they are still alive, yes, I would have to say yes.” She said.

Deion nodded his head. “Somehow they knew we were coming.” He spoke softly.

Brendi leaned over from her computer station. “I’m curious... this Nystai you speak of... do you think she would be monitoring the Main Frame?”

Liita nodded her head instantly. “It is what she does.” Liita answered just as quickly. “She has safe houses across Koltar Four where she has people monitoring the entire Main Frame Network. At least the unsecured parts. I don’t know what she uses the information for but...”

Deion lifted his hand and tapped his jaw implant. “I do.” He said softly. “Andro?”

“Go fervon.” Andro’s voice replied instantly from his location in the cargo bay.

All of them had decided to stick with normal COMS unless it was absolutely necessary in order to put the Kirek Pack and Nenay Pack members going with them at ease. They had been given Union implants and could hear everything now and this action solidified the trust and respect between the three packs more than anything could.

“Lord Ranol’s daughter Liita says that she added another secure breach point into the Arhtai Main Frame that is accessible by someone named Nystai. Apparently, she is one of the original twelve techs who were chosen when they left Cerath to train on Onab tech.” Deion explained quickly.

“Nystai still lives Liita?” Ranol’s voice broke in and asked his daughter from the TYPE TWO he was on with Martin. His voice was very surprised.

Liita awkwardly tapped the COM implant on her jaw. “Yes alvva, as far as I know.” She replied. “I installed an active security bypass into the low-level sub systems of the Main Frame nearly half a millennium ago. It is still active and being used.”

“What does this bypass allow her to do Liita Nenay?” Martin’s voice asked now.

Liita sat up a little straighter when she heard the commanding voice. It could not be mistaken by any Lycavorian alive. “She would... she would be able to monitor and direct the flow of unsecured traffic across the Main Frame, sire.”

“And this Main Frame is central to all computer systems on the planet correct?” Martin pressed.

“The Arhtai Main Frame controls nearly everything.” Liita answered. “That is why it is so heavily defended physically and with spy bots.”

“And this woman Nystai, Liita? Tell me about her.” Martin asked.

“She is very old my King.” Liita stammered. “Nearly as old as... as my father, sire. She hates the Arhtai Pack. They took something from her during the Dremsa rie Saan, I don’t know what, but she has never forgiven them. She has been working against them ever since, as only she can. In the shadows and dark alleys. She controls a vast underground black market among our people that looks after those who the Arhtai Pack hunt. She helps them to disappear. She also helps others to acquire things that they would not normally be able to get. Items that the Arhtai Pack have forbidden or control tightly. Medicines. Learning tools. All sorts of things. Yelma Arhtai and her Pack have hunted Nystai for thousands of years but she has always remained one step ahead of them.”

“And she has access to the Main Frame?” Martin asked again.

“Into everything but the most secure networks, yes.” Liita answered. She looked up at Deion behind her with a confused face.

“Deion... what are you thinking keto?” Martin asked knowing how his son’s mind would be working.

“We use her father.” Deion answered. “We get Liita to contact her and then we use her. If she is as well connected as Liita says she is, having her within the Network causing havoc is perfect.”

“Liita...” Martin spoke once more. “Can we... can we trust her?”

Liita didn’t hesitate for a moment. “Yes, my King.” She answered. “You cannot fake the hate she has for the Arhtai Pack, at least those parts of the Arhtai Pack that are in control. But she is also compassionate to all those who deserve it sire. She has never wavered from this.”

“You have nineteen minutes Deo.” Martin said. “We jump into orbit in nineteen minutes keto and I’m not delaying it. For anything.”

Deion nodded his head. “Understood father.” Deion touched Mari’s arm. “Mari... let Liita sit down and...”

Liita shook her head. “No! I can direct you Mari. It will be faster than trying to learn new system keys!” Deion nodded his head again. “Do it.”

PREMONITION

CARGO BAY

SIXTEEN MINUTES UNTIL JUMP

Music in background

Dire Straits, Ride across the River

It was decided that Kesas Pengot would go with Androcles because of his familiarity with Ch'eldo and the Onab people. They had been good friends before leaving Cerath, which is one of the reasons that Ch'eldo and his family had been chosen to lead those Onab selected to leave with the Kirek Pack. Kesas tried to remain out of the way for the most part, knowing that the battles to come were now for the young. He was still armed with a Pralor Pulse Magnum and a Pralor Assault Rifle, but he most likely would not have use for them, but Kesas Pengot would not turn away from his duty. Lylor would be traveling on the King’s ship in order to retrieve his beloved Kelia, Reva Mahanlo with them as well. She was not about to be left behind and Martin was not going to argue with her. He simply told her she was confined to the TYPE TWO and he would have his Queen For'mya’s dragon sit on her if she attempted to leave. It had actually been quite humorous to watch that exchange, the King of their people towering over his staania by a foot at least, his fangs fully extended and his yellow gold eyes very prominent. Reva Mahanlo had stood there stoically, her own dual fangs fully extended, staring into his yellow gold eyes and telling him exactly what she was going to do. Martin finally won out with his statement and Reva had nodded.

Kesas and Lylor had nearly broken into laughter as they watched, even given their situation, and many of the hundreds who had witnessed the showdown in the transport bay on Pakar Six looking at them in utter shock. It brought back memories for both of them of the exact same thing happening in another time and another place.

As he made his way into the main cargo bay, one story above the floor of the bay, his eyes detected that everyone was preparing. Some were adjusting equipment, some were discussing with each other what they would do, but no one was idle. Kesas lifted his head slightly as he heard the music filtering through the internal ship's speakers. At least he thought it was music. He had never heard such sounds before but they were smooth and the sounds blended incredibly well to his Lycavorian senses. Kesas stood on the upper level and just watched for a moment. The charge in the air was a palpable thing, even he could sense that, but there was also a calm unlike anything he had ever felt before. He moved to the small monitor that showed him the smaller cargo hold one deck up that would hold those Onab that they rescued. The upper cargo area was connected to the main cargo bay by an interior staircase he had discovered, and all the Onab would have to do is walk up the ramp into the main cargo bay and keep moving back until they came to the stairwell. Now he could see Tiag, his daughter Yasha and his son Caylt standing with Marda and a dozen or so Kirek Pack members as they listened intently to six of Androcles' team members. He knew them now by name, Daio, Ridor, Jomann and the half breed Mahanlo-Leonidas Prince Kalis. The fifth one was the huge fur covered man called Cowen and then the female half Lycavorian and half elf who was called Sherice. It was obvious that she was wife to the huge, fur covered man Cowen, and Daio was husband to the Kavalian female Kameka who was in the cockpit with the Crown Princesses. The mix of men and women was incredible Kesas thought to himself. So many distinct species and only a few of them were represented here among Martin's people. He had to almost chuckle to himself as he remembered what Chiron had told him only a few hours ago. Elves were the second largest in population in the Union and all of them were astonishingly beautiful. Even the male elves were beautiful to an extent. Female elves were many times drawn to the Lycavorian men because of their prowess and strength and they were cherished as wives and mates because of their beauty and intelligence. Many Lycavorians, Alpha, Beta and Gamma, took female elves as their mates. Chiron had told him to insure that the young Alphas of the Kirek Pack were very careful about approaching a female elf they saw among these men and women. Many of them were already mated and even those that were not, they had lived among Lycavorians for much of their lives and they knew what was appropriate and what was not from a Lycavorian male. It would not be a good thing to cause tension because a young Alpha followed his instincts more than his brains, especially with these men and women from the Union. Kesas smiled a little wider as he remembered Rothan making his way away from them after the conversation to pass the word. Throughout the rest of the cargo bay, Kesas saw Kirek Pack members sitting with these men and women that were called Durcunusaan. Wolves of the Blood. They were speaking in soft whispers and most of them were running through firing point procedures for their new weapons.

Kesas turned his head away from the monitor and stepped to the railing before he looked directly into the main cargo bay below. He saw three of Martin's daughters standing together on the deck below. Lisisa, Eliani and Nara he knew their names to be. Nara, Kesas now knew, was the twin to the son Deion, and both of them were like burning points of bright light within the Etheric realm because of their Pralor abilities. This was another note that Chiron had told all of them over the course of the last hours. The Praetorian Gene it was called. It gave those who carried the active gene the ability to be so much more.

Kesas had felt it within Martin and Androcles, so powerful and pure. Being around such men and women had already begun to stimulate the normally minor Etheric abilities within the Lycavorians on Pakar Six and many were now beginning to sense this different power within their King and his bloodline easily enough.

Lisisa and Eliani were far less than Nara in this regard, at least in the Etheric power that they radiated, but both of them were off the charts compared to others from what Kesas could tell. Far more than any among the Kirek Pack could ever hope to achieve unless they married into the Mahanlo-Leonidas bloodline. Their brother Denali was like his brothers and sister, the pure Lycavorian blood within their bodies being more of a stable conduit for this active Etheric power and the abilities it could give someone. It appeared that all of Martin's children with his Anome and pureblood Queen Aricia carried the active gene like him. He also detected this active gene from Eliani's husband and mate Jomann as well but according to Chiron, that is where the active gene stopped. At least with those out here with Martin. There were others back within the Union that were intent on finding more with this Praetorian Gene and bringing them into the fold.

It was still almost too much to really take in for Kesas Pengot, and it was happening so fast. Acki had been the one to focus him, as she always had, just before he boarded this ship and they departed to rendezvous with the hidden monstrosity in orbit above the planet. All of them had tried to steal a glimpse of this ship as they approached and Kesas had been one of the lucky ones standing in the cockpit as he had been. While the size of the ship was not surprising to him, the fact that this was a warship and not a huge transport like he would have first thought is what stunned him. This SPARTA'S WRATH equaled the size of the Onab ships they had come to Koltar Four on, but he had never seen so many gun turrets on a single ship before and it was frightening just to look at the ship even for the brief moment he had seen it from the outside.

Kesas' eyes finally came to rest on the three that sat lotus style near the ramp that could open the rear of the ship into oblivion. Androcles, Dorian and Laren sat in a triangle on the deck of the ship, Elynth, Ryner and Ladur behind them. They ignored the activity all around them and Kesas saw that no one moved to interrupt them in any way. Even the other dragons that were below were calm and quiet. Jeth and Tharua rested on the deck beside one another, Jeth quietly caressing Tharua's wings with his large snout. Aradace, Marux, Jeru, Mayla and Majeir were speaking to one another openly, further advancing their voice ability skills. Anthar rested with Caydren and Cinol, actively instructing the twins on their duties. While still growing and nowhere near their full size, Caydren and Cinol were the perfect dimensions for protecting the ship when it was on the surface. While they were just learning how to carry Sadi and Ne'Veha in flight, the brothers were already very well skilled in ground combat from their father Vollenth and the Elder Mother's instructors at Dragon Mountain.

The power he could feel coming from Androcles and the others was unlike anything he had ever felt before and Kesas was quite sure that he was nowhere near skilled enough to truly sense what they could do. While he knew Androcles and Dorian were Martin's sons, the young woman, Laren Ti'shara, was quite the exotic beauty. Her long, raven black hair surrounded an enchanting face that her soft, scale like outer skin only enhanced to ravishing proportions. Her normal skin, closer to the center of her beautiful face was deeply tanned. Her eyes he found unique as one was cobalt blue and the other azure blue. Her petite body was lush and firm and Kesas knew that many young Alphas would not hesitate to pursue this elivonth ber woman for her beauty alone. Kesas doubted it would be that simple since she was considered a daughter to Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas and a beloved sister to the Mahanlo-Leonidas children. She was also never far from Androcles or Dorian and her dragon always seemed to be beside her. Whoever chose to court this young woman, Kesas hoped he had large nor, for he would need them.

Kesas took this time to let his eyes linger on the Arwa rie vada Tarivuos that each of them wore. The cowls were not fully up around their heads, but Kesas easily remembered the day that he saw the four sets of armor so long ago. No one knew why the Onab built the armor, for Daniho Mahanlo was not skilled enough within the Etheric realm to even wear the armor at that time. Looking back, Kesas now believed that Daniho and Ashten knew exactly who the Onab had built it for. They had known even back then what was coming, perhaps not everything or how it would happen through the many thousands of years, but they knew their descendants would need this armor.

Kesas didn't know why he picked it up right at that moment but the words of the music playing all around him reached out to him for some reason and he lifted his eyes above him to stare at the ceiling of the ship for a moment.

*I'm a soldier of freedom in the army of man
We are the chosen, we're the partisan
The cause it is noble and the cause it is just
We are ready to pay with our lives if we must*

Kesas Pengot brought his eyes back down and focused them first on where Androcles and the others sat, then they moved around the interior of the cargo bay slowly, touching everyone who was present as they went about their duties. Finally, he turned and looked at the monitor that showed the others in the attached cargo bay. That is when Kesas realized there was no doubt or hesitation in their movements or their actions. They were here to get their family and their blood back and nothing else mattered. And with this intense focus came clarity the likes of which Kesas had never felt. And this clarity spread, even to those from the Kirek Pack among them. It was a natural osmosis that was occurring, reinforcing everything that the Kirek Pack had taught through the years to all of their children from the day they were born. This is what naturally brought the Kirek and Mahanlo Packs so tightly together and even after all of these millennia that had passed, it was still there. The same closeness and values that had their Packs so tightly woven together for millennia was still very much present and he would even dare say, far more powerful than it had ever been given how much they accepted and merged with each other, despite knowing one another for only a few hours.

Kesas blinked several times as he felt the rush of air to his side and then he saw Deion's body hurtling the railing into the lower cargo bay, his young wife and mate right behind them, and then Kesas' eyes grew wide when he saw Liita Nenay right behind them.

"Fervon!" Deion barked as he hit the deck below with barely any effort and only a slight bending of his knees.

Androcles opened his eyes and turned to look at his brother as he began getting to his feet. "Deo?" He asked him.

Deion held out Mari's portable P9 to his brother. "Andro... I give you Lady Nystai Arhtai. Youngest sister to Yelma Arhtai."

Andro's azure eyes were wide as he took hold of the computer and looked at the face of the much older woman on the screen. There were tears rolling down her cheeks and she wore a smile that Andro doubted could have been removed by explosive.

"My Lord... Orwara Indalfrid Andro." Nystai stammered the words. "Una coi... cyn vada carians forn sey heuhly chevsh." (Crown Prince) (It is, thank the gods you have finally come.)

"Nystai!" Kesas gasped when he heard the name, and quite unlike himself and much to the surprise of the younger members of the Kirek Pack present, Kesas leaped the short six-meter drop to the deck beneath him and was beside Androcles in an instant. "Nystai Arhtai! How can that be? She was listed as killed on the Dremsa rie Saan!" Androcles was looking at him and shifted the computer slightly when he came up beside him. Kesas' eyes grew wider as he saw the woman on the monitor. "Vada carians silice lae!"

"It has... it has been a very long time Lord Pengot." Nystai spoke with measured words.

KOLTAR FOUR EASTERN SECTOR LIPIRI

"...Can't stop it! It's some sort of computer worm!" Taarie almost shouted as she worked feverishly on her computer. "It is brute forcing its way into our system!"

Comelo was also at a similar computer station beside Taarie, his hands flying over his own computer console. "I've never seen anything like it Nystai! No matter what we do, it just bulls its way through! The code simply reconfigures on the fly and pushes further!"

"Source!?" Nystai shouted from her own, much larger computer station.

"I can't be sure but... it appears as if it came through the System Bypass that Liita installed for us." Taarie exclaimed aloud causing Nystai's head to come up at this information. "Someone else must have found it. No one from Internal Security has this kind of skill! No one!"

"Liita would not have betrayed us!" Nystai barked. "Not for anything!"

"Taarie, try a rotating frequency variable!" Comelo barked now.

Taarie shook her head within seconds. "It's not working! It will breach our network security in seconds! It will..."

Before she could finish her statement, the huge monitor that resided on the wall behind them came alive with the faces of three individuals. Foremost among them was Liita Nenay who Nystai recognized instantly.

“Liita!” Nystai hissed softly in stunned shock.

Liita’s face resided next to the features of the exquisitely beautiful young woman who sat in the chair. Her brownish red hair was tied back in a long, tight braid and her eyes were bright and focused.

“Lady Nystai...” Liita began quickly. “Forgive me for... for breeching your security systems as we did. I...”

“How?” Nystai stammered.

Liita smiled slightly and motioned with her head to Mari. “It was actually Lady Mari here.” She said. “Nystai we... we are coming! We need you to do something in order to make this easier.”

“You are coming?” Nystai looked confused. “What do you mean child?”

“We are coming there Nystai. To Koltar Four. We are going to retrieve Lady Kelia and my brothers. We need you to send false alerts all over the Network in order to confuse them.” Liita told her.

“Liita that is insane child!” Nystai gasped. “You cannot! Who has convinced you of this? My bitch sister will kill everyone if you do this!”

That is when Deion knelt down on the opposite side of Mari and positioned his face beside hers. “That would be my father.” He spoke.

Nystai drew back when she saw him, her hand going to her mouth in disbelief when she saw the resemblance. “By the gods!” She stammered. “You...”

Deion smiled gently as he looked at her, his eyes changing to his wolf persona and his long, thick dual wolf fangs extending fully. “My father and brother get that reaction more than I do, but I am honored nonetheless.”

“Nystai?” Taarie gasped aloud. “What is it? Who is this? He has... he has...”

“He has dual fangs!” Comelo almost yelled. “He has... he has Mahanlo blood in him! Just like the other one. He...”

“You said... you said your sister!” Deion spoke to Nystai. “What did you mean?”

Nystai lifted her head slowly. “I am Nystai Arhtai. Youngest daughter to Begal and Freia Arhtai, and sister to that vile witch Yelma Arhtai.”

Comelo and Taarie stared at Nystai in unabashed shock upon learning this but it also caused the young Alpha wolf in the transmission to move quickly.

Deion lifted his hand. “Hold that thought...” He spoke as he reached for something in the transmission. “Mari my love, Liita, come with me.” And then Nystai saw the image on the screen shifted wildly as he lifted the computer and began moving.

PREMONITION

CARGO BAY

TWELVE MINUTES BEFORE JUMP

“It has... it has been a very long time Lord Pengot.” Nystai spoke with measured words now.

“Son vada carians! Nystai!” Kesas gasped as Androcles and the others watched.

Andro saw her eyes come to rest on him and he watched her carefully as she stared at him. “Kesas says you are listed as having been killed on the Dremsa rie Saan.” Andro spoke.

Nystai nodded her head slowly. “I was... I did die on that night Orwara Indalfrid Andro. I... it is the night that my sister Yelma took from me all I had ever wanted in my life.”

Andro looked at Kesas. “Nystai... Nystai was the wife and mate to Tamal Kirek.” He answered. “They were mated shortly after we arrived on Koltar Four.”

Nystai nodded her head. “We were... we were so happy.” She spoke softly. “We...” She took a deep breath and focused her gaze on Androcles. “Two days before the Dremsa rie Saan I discovered I carried Tamal’s children within me. Twins. Strong and healthy boys. When they came for my beloved Tamal that night, I tried to protect him, I did. They shot me as well and... I could not protect...”

“Carians!” Liita muttered softly as she stood beside Mari and Deion.

“My babies... they did not survive.” Nystai continued. “My sister said it was for the best. That they would have only been trouble if they were born. I have... I have hated her with every breath I take since then.”

“Nine minutes until jump.” Sadi’s voice echoed over the ship’s internal speakers.

“She does not know you live?” Kesas asked now.

Nystai shook her head. “No. One year later I faked my own death. Yelma listed me as killed with Tamal. A traitor to our family. I have been... I have been doing this ever since.”

“You know who I am?” Androcles asked. “Who my brother is?”

Nystai smiled slightly as she nodded her head. “You... you are the Fera Tarivuos.” She spoke with an almost perverse joy. “You and your brother are sons to the Mard Revik. Mahanlo blood descended directly from our revered King Daniho and his brother Ashten. You are here to retrieve your bloodline and free our people from the oppression of my sister and those who follow her.”

“We need your help Lady Nystai.” Androcles said.

“Command us aur Orwara Indalfrid.” She spoke firmly.

“How many... how many in your group?” Androcles asked her.

Nystai waved her hand around her. “This is my core gathering.” She said. “Nineteen men and women who control our entire network. Many of them have their families here with them, so perhaps a hundred and thirty men, women and children. We... we live ready to move on a moment’s notice.”

“Lady Nystai... in just over eight minutes we are going to jump directly into orbit of Koltar Four.” Androcles said. “We need you and your people to flood the Arhtai Mainframe with false sightings and reports from all over the planet in order to assist us in our missions. Can you do that?”

Nystai nodded her head. “We can Milord. On one condition.”

“Nystai!” Kesas gasped in horror.

Andro held up his hand. “And what is that?”

“What you ask will cause us to compromise our position here.” Nystai spoke. “They will be able to find us. You must come for everyone here sire. You must get them off the surface and to safety. I care not for myself but...”

“Nystai, no!” Taarie exclaimed.

“Done.” Andro spoke without hesitation.

“Then we will do what you ask happily.” Nystai spoke. “And they will not know from where you will appear.”

SPARTA'S WRATH
PORT SIDE LANDING BAY 4
TYPE TWO DRAGON TRANSPORT
RETAGGED AS SPARTAN ONE

“...Trust her son?” Martin asked Andro’s face on the monitor.

Andro nodded his head. “Yes.” He answered without hesitation.

“I agree with Andro father.” Deion spoke from beside his brother. “We need to do this.”

“It’s a significant risk.” Martin said.

“This whole operation is a significant risk medwan.” Andro said. “So much is at stake and we cannot fail. You know that. I am sending Deion, Mari and a third of our ground force. Normya and Tir’ut will fly the second TYPE TWO. They have already left the PREMONITION and are prepping the ship.”

“Their current location puts them nineteen clicks from where you and mothers will be setting down father. On the other side of the city.” Deion spoke. “You will be drawing all of the attention. It should be a simple snatch and grab.”

“Nothing is ever simple for us son.” Martin hissed. “You know that.”

“I gave her my word father.” Androcles said finally. “I will not...”

Martin held up his hand stopping Andro’s statement. “I would not order that keto, you know that.” He said. “I can chop a few platoons to you and...”

Andro shook his head. “No. We will make due with our numbers now.” He spoke. “You will need yours. Deion will be successful and when he is, we can use Lady Nystai to send the Arhtai Pack into chaos. She says she has information that Vada Yowa does not know about. Information of her plotting to execute the Dremsa rie Saan for decades father. Even dating back to when our people left Cerath.”

Martin’s eyes grew wider. “Seriously?” He snarled angrily.

“That is what she says.” Androcles answered. “And given her skills in computers, I don’t question she could have done this.”

Martin finally turned his head to look at Lylor, who stood next to him with Aryera and Rothan. “Tenne? Your thoughts?”

“It is not something we can dismiss.” Lylor replied. “Androcles is correct.”

“Then it is settled.” Andro spoke from the PREMONITION. “We will adjust our mission goals and see you back on SPARTA’S WRATH when we are finished. PREMONITION is clear.”

“Androcles wait!” Martin snapped but it was too late and his image had already faded. “Sibfla!”

Aryera looked at him. “You have doubts he can do both, don’t you?” She asked.

Martin looked at her and shook his head quickly. “No. If he says he can do both, he will.” He replied.

“Then what?” Rothan asked confused.

“My son... Andro is far less forgiving than me.” Martin spoke. “Where he might have spared Arhtai lives with the forces he had to free Revia, Ivore and the Onab, now he will not give them the chance. If they attempt to fight him, he will kill them, without hesitation or remorse.”

“After what they are responsible for, do they deserve any less?” Lylor hissed.

Martin met his eyes and shook his head. “No Tenne, they do not.” He replied. “But they are still our people and I must try. To honor my grandfathers and my promise to them, I must try.”

Lylor looked at him for a long moment and finally nodded his head. “In the end, you will do what you must mandri.” Lylor told him. “I have faith in you.”

Martin chuckled at this. “Sometimes, people have more faith in me than I do myself.” He stated.

“Attention! Attention! SPARTA’S WRATH is preparing for Combat Jump! Two minutes! Two minutes until Combat Jump! All personnel take your combat stations! All personnel take your combat stations. This is not a drill!” The female voice echoed across the internal speakers on the ship, coming from the bridge of SPARTA’S WRATH.

KOLTAR FOUR

RENDITION STATION

0445

Third Shift on a ship was, notoriously, both hated and loved depending on what type of person you were. It was no different on the massive station that orbited Koltar Four. The space station was the Command Hub for all Security and Military matters of the Arhtai Pack. Yelma Arhtai may not have had much knowledge in this regard but Nyser Arhtai did, and he had a sizeable force of soldiers within the Internal Security Department. Both the Arhtai and Nenay Packs had their own militia force, or military, and they were expected to respond when Nyser Arhtai called for them, but for the most part, the military on Koltar Four was made up entirely of Arhtai Pack members.

Nyser Arhtai did not allow any Nenay Pack members to work on RENDITION Station because he feared they were not loyal to the Arhtai Pack. He was right of course, but there was not a whole lot that anyone could do about it. Through the years there had been thirteen new Packs that had been formed after breaking with the Arhtai and Nenay Packs because of their size. Ranol Nenay welcomed them and treated them with respect, even the ones that stayed on Koltar Four, while Nyser treated them all with mistrust and condescension. Of the thirteen new Packs, all branched from the Nenay and Arhtai Packs, four remained on Koltar Four. It had been the practical move for them, even though they were treated as if their Pack members had the plague. Most were barely surviving, due in no small part to the fact that the Arhtai Pack made their lives very hard. This did not deter most of them, and they struggled through every day.

RENDITION Station allowed the Arhtai Pack Internal Security to keep track of all those they thought were aligned in some way against them, including the different Packs that had formed through the years. The space station was also the pivotal point from which all smaller transport craft arrived and departed from. Almost all the traffic was from the surface, bringing mine workers to the station, who then branched out to the many daily Ore mining points within the system. Personnel traffic on the station was just beginning to pick up because of the time of day and Arhtai Internal Security was just finishing its change of shift. There were four security checkpoints on the station that everyone had to pass through to get into the terminal portions of the station. Each of these stations was manned by no less than six Arhtai Internal Security soldiers, or AIS, as everyone now referred to them. Each of the entry points had sophisticated sensors built into the Archway checkpoint that everyone had to walk through in order to reach the interior of the station. These sensors were designed to pick up weapons, explosives and even detect blood. As had been the case for longer than most of the AIS soldiers had been alive, the sensors were meant to detect anyone with Mahanlo blood in them, and they hadn't been triggered in well over a million years.

The Command and Control Center for the station was at the very top of the facility itself. The circular center was incredibly large, with both men and women sitting at different computer stations all around the huge spherical interior. The men and women in the CCC could gaze out three hundred and sixty degrees around the space station and look into the stars. They could see Koltar Four far beneath them, as well as the many satellites that now resided in orbit. The view all around was incredible to say the least.

After today, it would never be the same again.

Banaz Arhtai was the fourth son of Nyser and Yelma Arhtai born after the Dremsa rie Saan. He and his five brothers and three sisters were all born after the Night of Blood and all of them held major roles within the AIS, his role was the day shift commander of RENDITION Station. Banaz and all of his siblings had been brought up to hate everything having to do with Mahanlo blood. Yelma and Nyser had preached to Banaz and his siblings how Mahanlo blood and all those linked to them were the ones responsible for the deaths of their family members and siblings. None of them had ever lost this hate or even questioned it.

Banaz was known for his intelligence and calm demeanor, which granted him a status slightly above his other brothers who were essentially nothing but brutes. Banaz treated those under his command with some semblance of respect, but he still clung to the superiority of his bloodline, though not to the extent of his siblings. While this granted him some respect in return, very few Lycavorians outside of his family trusted or liked him. He was still arrogant and regarded himself as above everyone else, but he was nowhere near as violent or quick to anger as his brothers. Banaz was sitting in the Command Chair of the station, positioned to allow him to gaze in any direction he wanted and smoothly move to any portion of the CCC on the chair's small rail system. He was going over the reports from the previous shift and his head came up when he heard the female voice.

"Atle vada jorbhe." The female voice spoke softly from across the CCC. (What the hell)

Banaz directed his gaze to the young, blond-haired female who had only recently joined the day shift. She seemed very competent and was the granddaughter of his oldest sister Gisule, but her instructors had given excellent recommendations in regard to her skills.

"Something Junior Lieutenant Issdra?" Banaz asked openly.

The young woman turned to look at him and then back to the two monitors and computer console in front of her. "I... I don't know sir." She stammered. "I am... I am detecting strange readings."

Banaz engaged his chair and the command interface on the arm of the chair allowed him to slide easily across the bridge to a position nearly right behind her. "Strange in what way?" He asked her.

"Sir... Quantum Particles in and around the station just soared to over four hundred and thirty percent." She told him.

Banaz smiled slightly, intent on giving Issdra a fair evaluation and opportunity. And he would not embarrass his blood. "Is your equipment calibrated properly Junior Lieutenant?" Banaz asked. "The techs sometimes do not calibrate correctly after doing maintenance."

Issdra shook her head. "No, sir. All my equipment is operating at peak efficiency."

"Issdra, a spike that large means that there is either several dozen ships powered by Quantum Drives or one very large ship out there." Banaz spoke. "No other species that we are aware of within this quadrant of space has Quantum based power as we do."

“I’m just stating what my instruments are saying sir.” Issdra told him. “We... sir, are we certain that we are the only species with Quantum power sir? We have not exploded the entire quadrant.”

“And we don’t need to in order...” Banaz started to reply when he saw another officer, this one more senior and experienced, turn quickly to his instruments with wide eyes as he detected something.

“Sir!” The man called out now. “I just detected a narrow beam, Quantum based power fluctuation surge in Section nine, deck three, near Security Checkpoint Two.”

“What kind of surge?” Banaz demanded.

“Unknown sir.” The man answered. “I have never seen anything like it before.”

“Origin?” Banaz asked.

“Tracing!” The man answered. “That... that can’t be right!” He hissed.

“Talach?” Banaz barked.

“Sir, my instruments are telling me point of origin is three hundred and fourteen thousand meters off our starboard beam.” Talach answered.

Banaz turned his head to look out into the space all around RENDITION station and he saw nothing. “Talach... there is nothing there!” He snapped.

“Sir, I am only telling you what my equipment is telling me.” Talach answered.

“Send a detachment of Internal Security to that location.” Banaz ordered. “And begin diagnostics on all equipment! All our systems are not having issues at the same time! It is something the Onab did to them. Has my father’s order gone out to my brother?”

Talach nodded his head. “Yes, sir. Nine minutes ago.”

Banaz nodded. “Good. Inform him of the problems we are having and have him bring one of the engineering teams here on his return. They will fix this.”

“Understood sir.” Talach spoke. He turned to his station and began to start to issue the orders when the shrill alarm that began sounding across the CCC and within the breadth of the entire station.

“What... what is that?” Issdra stammered never having heard the alarm before.

“It can’t be!” Banaz snarled as he came to his feet now. “That is... that is the Blood Sensor alarm! That would only go off if it detected Mahanlo blood!”

“Mahanlo... I thought Mahanlo blood was dead?” Issdra questioned Banaz.

“Sir! We have lost contact with Checkpoint Two! Weapons fire is being reported by roving patrol teams! They report we have been boarded by unknown troops.” Talach barked.

“Dispatch additional Security Ready Teams to Checkpoint Two!” Banaz shouted. “Do it now! And get me a line to my father on the surface! Now! Now!”

Issdra heard her console begin beeping insistently and she turned back to it, her dark eyes growing wide in disbelief. “Sir!” She almost screamed. “Sir, quantum particle readings just soared to over three thousand percent!”

“That’s impossible!” Banaz barked.

“All COM channels are down!” Another voice chimed in from across the CCC. “All COMS are being jammed sir! It’s a powerful signal and I can’t tell where it is coming from!”

“Who could jam our transmissions?!” Banaz roared.

“Quantum Particle dispersion is now at four thousand percent above normal sir!” Issdra exclaimed. “We have to...!!”

“Son vada carians!” The male voice rose above all others now. “Ships! Ships appearing all around us! Saoi sibfla! I count one hundred and nine unknown ships! Detecting quantum power cores on all of them! Nubou!!! Their weapons are powering!! Starboard beam! Starboard beam! Nubou lae! Unknown configuration! Over twenty thousand meters long! It’s powering weapons!!”

Banaz’s eyes were wide in disbelief as he saw ships begin appearing as if by magic all around the station. Some were massive in size, others were of medium size and then there was the monstrosity that was now parked off their starboard beam. A gigantic ship unlike any he had ever seen before, even in their history books.

“Shields! Shields!” He finally screamed. “Bring all weapons online and prepare to fire!”

“Sir! I am detecting six ships separating from the huge one! Smaller size, estimate at least heavy transports!” A man announced to everyone in the CCC. “Configuration unknown! They are... they are descending rapidly into the atmosphere! Their trajectory puts them on course for Lepiri!”

“Track them with station weapons and fire!” Banaz barked the order. “Do it now!”

The internal COM channel of RENDITION station came alive then, causing all heads to lift as the voice of the woman none of them had met came through the channel very clearly and confidently.

“I am sorry... but I cannot allow you to fire your weapons.” The voice spoke calmly. “You will discover that I have jammed all of your communications and rerouted all of your command controls to a different location. One which I now control. The men at your Security checkpoint chose to fight... they are now dead.”

Banaz looked at Talach, who was trying to access his console. Banaz watched as he pounded on the computer console and then moved to the next console beside him, shoving the operator away. He pounded on that computer console a few times and then angrily slammed his hands down before looking back at Banaz and shaking his head.

Banaz turned to his weapons officer who was punching buttons at his own consoles to no avail. He finally looked up and shook his head.

Banaz looked up at the ceiling. “Who are you?” He demanded.

“I would think that is painfully obvious to you.” The female voice spoke calmly. “You can obviously hear the alarms sounding all over your station.

“That is not possible!” Banaz snarled loudly. “Anyone with Mahanlo blood is dead! The Mahanlo bloodline has been dead for over a million years!”

“Unfortunately for you... that is not the case, Commander Banaz is it?” The woman’s voice answered him. “My name is Aricia Mahanlo-Leonidas and I am the Anome and one of six Queens to Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas. The direct descendant of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. We have come for our family and friends that you hold against their will. And we will not be deterred from our task. Whether you survive this day or not is entirely up to you.”

RENDITION STATION SEVEN MINUTES EARLIER

Taion Nenay staggered slightly when they reappeared but he felt the hand reach for him and steady him. He turned and looked at the face of the tall, chiseled Lycavorian he now knew as Atropos. He was the Spartan Captain of the red-haired Queen and sister to the Queen that now stood calmly on his opposite side. The Lycavorian Spartan Atropos smiled broadly at him.

“The first time is always the worst. It will pass in a few seconds.” Atropos told him.

He turned his head to the eight other Durcunusaan who had accompanied them. All of them were ready to move, standing just behind where Zarah, Lucia, Radem, Julie, Colin and Pablo circled Aricia. Four of Taion’s own Nenay Pack troops were mixed in with the others and looking just as green around the lips as he was from their very first teleport.

Taion shook his head quickly and dropped his portable computer into place just as Julie had already done. “The Checkpoint is fifty-three meters from our location.” He spoke somewhat awed by the exactness of the teleport. “Down this corridor twenty-seven meters, then we turn right and walk right into it.”

“Confirmed Aricia.” Julie spoke now. “Lot of contacts between us and the checkpoint.”

Taion nodded his head. “Shift workers my Queen. They are no threat to us. Most are barely able to provide for their families because the Arhtai Pack hoards so much.”

“Mother?” Zarah questioned softly.

Aricia nodded her head quickly. “Zarah... you and Lucia on point with Radem. Move to the checkpoint but remain in the shadows daughter and do not reveal yourself until we are upon you. Go!”

Zarah only nodded her head, both she and Lucia gripping one of Radem’s hands in theirs and then wrapping the shadows around all of them and moving out.

“Sibfla!” Taion gasped as he watched it.

Aricia smiled as she pulled up the cowl and dropped it around her head. “Yes. It can be very disconcerting at times. Luckily... it will not be you who she appears next to.” Aricia looked at her brother from under the hood. “Fervon?”

Atropos nodded his head. “We are ready.”

“Taion... if you would lead us out?” Aricia said.

Taion nodded his head and took a deep breath. Everything that had transpired in the last few hours had been almost too much to take in but Taion Nenay could and did adapt easily. When they arrived on Pakar Six, Taion had no idea that his three-month-old son would forge their future for them, yet he and Saymora could not have been happier.

“Come! We must move quickly! They will have detected the teleport beam by now and the moment you or your daughter moves in front of a Blood Detector Queen Aricia, we will be discovered.” Taion said.

Aricia nodded her head. “Very well.”

Taion moved quickly and efficiently down the corridor. He did not worry about being interfered with in this secondary corridor, it was mainly empty at this time of the day. The eight Durcunusaan soldiers were moving like skilled veterans of hundreds of battles, which he would later learn, they all were. All of them wore the floor length cape and cowls in order to cover their weapons. Taion had told them this was common, especially among the many miners that transited the station. The dark-skinned female stayed beside Queen Aricia as they moved, always watching her computer, and with the PPR gripped in one hand. The other man, Taion didn't really know what he was, but he moved like a wolf in many ways. He knew his name was Colin and he remained on Queen Aricia's opposite side and Taion knew his goal was singular. He was there to protect the Queen and the dark-skinned female like him. They all carried the shortened version of the Pralor PPR, most had begun calling it the PPR4 as Taion learned when the huge Lycavorian Atropos had given it to him.

They made the turn into the main corridor smoothly, blending into the masses of men and women who were going to work. This main corridor would take them right to Checkpoint Two.

Six at the Checkpoint Mother.

Zarah's voice spoke to all of them within the Etheric realm. It surprised Taion at first, but thanks to the brief experience on Pakar Six, he did not flinch. It seemed his son and the unborn daughter of the Crown Prince binding themselves to each other as they had done gave him and his wife Saymora a different status among the others. Androcles had blessed both his wife and himself with Etheric abilities that they would not normally have been able to obtain. They would now be classified as high-level Tier Six Etheric users back with this Union that had been created.

Do they appear agitated? Taion broke in still new to this and shouting within the Etheric realm.

To her credit, Zarah Mahanlo-Leonidas only chuckled softly. You do not need to shout Lord Taion. She answered him. And yes, they seem rather excitable now. They must have received some sort of communications just before we arrived.

Taion looked at Aricia's covered head as they continued down the corridor. They detected the Teleport Beam. The power surge caused by it anyway.

It would appear so. She answered. Taion, do we know if these Blood Sensors even work anymore? It has been centuries since they were installed.

I do not know my Queen. Taion answered. We have never...

I understand. Aricia spoke not allowing him to finish his statement. She knew what he was going to say and she did not want him to feel awkward. I guess we will find out shortly. This is the checkpoint I take it?

Everyone passes through the archway into the interior of the station. Taion told them. Just move normally and we may get lucky.

There were dozens of men and women both in front of them and behind, moving through the security archway. Zarah, Lucia and Radem could easily bypass the archway hidden in the shadows as they were. Though they knew it could happen, only Aricia knew that Martin had planned for this very thing to take place. It was why he wanted the station taken instead of destroyed. He wanted Aricia to trigger the blood detectors, for it would signal to hundreds of others that Mahanlo blood had returned. As his Anome, and with the dormant Praetorian gene within her, Aricia's blood would be nearly as pure as his and the four children she had given him. Between her and Zarah, they would trip the alarms on the station without even trying.

And this is exactly what took place the instant that Aricia Mahanlo-Leonidas stepped into the Security Archway. The shrill alarm began to sound the instant she stepped under the archway. Aricia stopped moving as dozens of men and women began looking all around them for the source of the alarm. Four of the six AIS guards moved around in front of the archway and brought weapons out, leveling them at the many people in front of them.

“What is it?” The Senior AIS officer spat. Even he had never heard this alarm before. “Is someone carrying weapons?”

“It’s not... it’s not the weapons detector. It’s the blood sensor!” The man at the controls hissed softly. “It’s detecting Mahanlo blood! Huge spikes!”

“That’s not possible!” The Senior AIS officer spat. “You are reading it wrong!”

“I’m telling you! Mahanlo blood readings are off the charts!” The second man barked right back.

“Your man speaks the truth.” Aricia spoke from under her cowl causing heads to turn towards her at the words. Aricia reached up and grasped the edges of the cowl and tossed it back casually. Men and women both gasp aloud all around her as they saw first her amazing azure colored eyes and then the dual wolf fangs as she smiled widely. Dual Lycavorian fangs that had only ever existed within one bloodline of their people. A bloodline all of them thought long dead. “I will only ask once. Place your weapons on the deck, surrender to me and you will live out this day.”

“Our systems are correct!” The guard at the station yelled. “She has Mahanlo blood in her! Pure, unbroken Mahanlo blood! How is that possible?!”

“It doesn’t matter! Kill her! Kill her now!!” The AIS officer snarled as he lifted his sidearm to level it at Aricia’s head.

Only Aricia wasn’t there anymore.

“Zarah! Now! Aricia screamed out as she sidestepped and was beside the officer in a single blink of an eye. His own eyes went wide at this for he had never seen anyone move so fast, but then it didn’t matter as Aricia buried the Shukar she had drawn from under the cape completely into the man’s chest. His eyes bugged out of his head in agony even as Atropos, Colin and Taion moved as well.

Zarah and Lucia appeared from the shadows behind the two men at the controls of the checkpoint, Radem between them. They struck without hesitation or mercy. Radem drove his poisoned blade into the lower back of one of the Lycavorians, his left hand reaching across his face and grabbed his jaw, where Radem used every bit of his strength to savagely jerk his head to the side. While it is a move he would have been able to carry out against a Union trained Lycavorian, Radem rightly assumed these Lycavorians were unprepared and poorly skilled in the arts of war. He was right as the man’s head jerked viciously to the side and the bones in his neck snapped completely. Zarah and Lucia brought the second man down with their R4 fighting knives, Zarah stabbing him in the side of his neck severing two of his arteries while Lucia drove her blade under his armpit and into the top of his heart, where she twisted the blade and tore open the top of his heart within his chest.

Aricia stared calmly at the eyes of the AIS officer as the life left him, and her wolf eyes shimmered in the light of the fixtures above them embedded into the ceiling. Atropos, Colin and Taion move quickly and pummeled the last three guards into submission. Atropos was not a small man by any means and he had been raised a Spartan all of his life. He simply stepped into the first guard and smashed his PPR4 into his face like a club. The man’s large nose crumbled instantly and blood erupted all over as he screamed in pain and reached for his face. Atropos hit him again in the face with the butt of his PPR4, this time catching his right hand as well as the blow crushed his right cheekbone and the bones in his right hand and then dropped the man into unconsciousness.

Colin and Taion were not as forceful, but equally as successful.

Colin flipped the second Lycavorian over his hip while wrenching his sidearm out of his hand and breaking four of his fingers as he did so. While the man yelled in hot pain and hit the deck hard, Colin drove stiffened fingers into his throat, silencing his screams and crushing his larynx. The man began to choke on his own blood as Colin pushed him further to the deck and out of them way. Taion Nenay was a good sized Lycavorian and well built. He had also spent the better part of the last three million years of his life learning everything he could from his father and other members of the Nenay Pack who had fought the Iais’Kai. He stepped close to the last guard and snatched his arm and shoulder before spinning him around and sending him careening through the thick glass partition that surrounded the checkpoint. As the plate glass shattered, one piece of shattered glass turned awkwardly and punctured the man's eye, driving completely through the eye socket and into his brain. When he hit the deck, he was already dead and did not move.

Julie wasted no time and stepped up to the security checkpoint, unceremoniously shoving aside the body of the man Radem had killed. She instantly plugged her P9 into the station and began typing hastily.

Aricia let the body of the AIS officer drop slowly to the floor and she turned to look at Julie. "Jules?" She asked as she squatted down and wiped the blade of her Shukar on the man's chest.

"Almost!" Julie hissed softly. "Got it! We're in! Rerouting all command functions to my P9!" She exclaimed.

"Can you tap into the command center?" Aricia asked.

"Standby!" Julie told her. "There!"

Unknown voices began to erupt through the internal station COMs in this area and at the checkpoint.

"Track them with station weapons and fire!" The male voice barked the order. "Do it now!"

Aricia saw the nod from Julie and began speaking. "I am sorry... but I cannot allow you to fire your weapons." She spoke calmly. "You will discover that I have jammed all of your communications and rerouted all of your command controls to a different location. One which I now control. The men at your Security checkpoint chose to fight... they are now dead."

"Who are you?" He demanded.

Taion moved up beside her quickly. "Banaz." He hissed softly. "Commander Banaz! He is a son to Yelma and Nyser Arhtai."

"I would think that is painfully obvious to you." Aricia continued to speak calmly while nodding her head to Taion. "You can obviously hear the alarms sounding all over your station.

"That is not possible!" Banaz snarled loudly. "Anyone with Mahanlo blood is dead! The Mahanlo bloodline has been dead for over a million years!"

"Unfortunately for you... that is not the case, Commander Banaz is it?" Aricia answered him. "My name is Aricia Mahanlo-Leonidas and I am the Anome and one of six recognized Queens to Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas, the direct descendant of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. We have come for our family and friends that you and your family hold against their will. And we will not be deterred from our task. Whether you survive this day or not is entirely up to you."

Aricia looked around at the murmurs and whispers that were sweeping through the men and women who cowered all around them. All of them had heard what she had just said.

"This is my station upaee!" Banaz shouted now. "You cannot have it!"

Aricia shook her head slowly. "Mahanlo blood already controls this station Commander. I have troops boarding the station using teleportation technology that you do not possess. They can appear anywhere I need them. Your security forces will be outnumbered shortly and then they will die. As you will die Commander. I have control of this station in my hands." Aricia looked at Julie and pointed at her. "I am not without mercy however Commander. You are too young to have taken part in the Dremsa rie Saan. Surrender and you may yet continue to live."

"Nubou forn!" Banaz snarled at her.

Aricia's eyes narrowed and she nodded at Julie. "I hope those in the CCC agree with you Commander, because you just killed all of them, as well as yourself. You will notice that I have ordered life support disengaged from the CCC. Now all of you will die a very agonizing death and their blood will be on your hands."

Julie cut the internal feed with one touch of her hand. "Mute." She spoke.

"How soon until life support drops them all into unconsciousness Jules?" Aricia asked her.

"Your people are tough to kill Aricia." Julie answered. "I'd give it fifteen minutes at least. But we will need to move fast."

Aricia nodded her head. "Inform Armen! I want the CCC tapped into and someone watching it. Once the last person is down, have a team breach and secure the CCC immediately. I do not want to kill more than we need too in order to succeed."

Julie nodded her head as she was typing. "Armen confirms."

Aricia looked at Pablo where he stood next to Atropos. "Pablo, take Taion and three others to the main computer relays. We need to get this Nystai woman plugged into the system as soon as possible."

“You’re going to have incoming Rica.” Pablo spoke using the nickname all of Martin’s team referred to her by,

Aricia nodded her head. “Our follow-on team is sixty seconds out. We will be fine. Move quickly Pablo, and do not engage unless you have to.”

Julie tossed the smaller P1 to Pablo when he looked at her and she nodded. “It’s all set up. Just plug it in and she will be able to access the system.”

“Thanks Jules.” Pablo commented before he turned and pointed to three others and Taion. “Time to roll.”

Pablo and Taion didn’t see the flare of orangish white light as a dozen Spartans appeared all around the checkpoint fully armed and ready to work. Aricia smiled to herself. Their follow-on forces were arriving sooner than she had expected. Within another eight minutes this station would be flooded with experienced Spartan soldiers from SPARTA’S WRATH. They were not the Durcunusaan, but they were part of Androcles’ 9th CSAFG and superbly trained. Four hundred of them had been permanently assigned to the ship to provide security and assistance where needed and now they would be doing what they were trained for.

Aricia turned to Zarah and Julie now. “I want that Banaz character alive.” Aricia told them. “Zarah, you Radem and Lucia see to it.”

Zarah nodded. “We will mother, but why?” She asked. “He is Arhtai Pack.”

“And he is too young to have taken part in the Dremsa rie Saan.” Aricia told her. “You know what we decided. Any who are too young to have taken part in that night will be given a choice. Stand with their Pack or renounce their actions.”

Zarah moved up in front of her Lycavorian mother. “Sometimes father and Andro are too compassionate mother.”

Aricia reached up and placed her armored hand on Zarah’s cheek. “I agree with you fenneennum.” She said. “But they are still our people, and we can’t blame all of them for the deeds of a few can we?”

Zarah shook her head slowly. “No.” She said softly.

Aricia leaned forward and nuzzled Zarah’s cheek and Zarah smiled happily as her motherly aura filtered over her. “Go now. But do not get yourself hurt. If anything happens to you we will not be able to hold your brother back and you know it.”

Zarah smiled and gripped Lucia’s hand once more and then they both took Radem’s hands. “You will send Dutkne to us when he gets here?” She said.

Aricia nodded her head. “Of course.” She answered. “He will arrive with the second echelon. He is our point contact with your brother. Now go.”

Zarah and Lucia nodded and wrapped the shadows around themselves and Radem once more to the astonished gasps of the men and women now sitting on the floor all around them and staring at them, still murmuring to themselves.

Atropos stepped up to his younger sister. “They will try to take back this checkpoint sister.” He said. “We are already detecting movement on the upper and lower decks.”

Aricia looked at him and nodded as another group of Spartans appeared in the orange white flare of light from the teleporter. “Then let’s make sure that they do not.” She said. She looked at the professional Spartans who were beginning to dig in around the checkpoint without even asking and then her eyes lifted to the dozens of civilians that were staring at her in open mouthed disbelief. “We must move these civilians to a safe area fervon. Get them out of the open corridors. Put them in the side rooms and get them out of the crossfire that will surely come. Quickly!”

Half a dozen Spartans sprang into action instantly and began to usher the civilians out of the main corridor and into several side rooms.

Aricia took the PPR4 from Atropos as he removed it from his shoulder and held it out to her. “We are here to confuse and misdirect!” Aricia spoke to the Spartans who all turned their heads to look at their Queen. “We are... we are here to retrieve those who are our family and punish those members of the Arhtai Pack who took part in the Dremsa rie Saan! You and so many like you volunteered to help us conduct this sacred mission to retrieve our family. We are only a small part of the overall operation, but no less important than the many others. We are Lycavorian Spartans and we do not kill indiscriminately. This has never been our way and it has not changed no matter where among the stars we are. If they have a weapon, then they are the enemy, otherwise they are still our people and we do not kill our own people.” Aricia saw the many heads of the Spartans nod in agreement with her words. “Then let us prepare.”

TYPE TWO

DESIGNATION: SPARTAN ONE

“We are in the glide!” Endith called out.

“PREMONITION and KADENS have broken from formation and we are six minutes out from target!” For'mya announced.

“Confirmed!” Tina echoed her words.

For'mya touched the large computer console on her right side. “Martin... we are six minutes out.” She told him.

“Chatter on their Com channels is picking up quick Boss!” Tina broke in. “I think word is getting out that Rica is there messing up their perfect day.”

“Good. Stand by.” Martin’s voice answered them calmly.

For'mya turned her head slightly to stare the rear of the TYPE TWO when she heard his voice. It may have seemed calm to most, but to those who knew Martin Leonidas as For'mya and the two women in this cockpit did, he was anything but calm.

Endith turned to look at her. “He’s ready to explode For'mya.” Endith said.

For'mya turned her head back and looked at her. “Yes. Every since we discovered how many were actually killed it, has been growing in both Martin and Androcles.”

“Jesus!” Tina gasped. “That ain’t good.” Her head turned quickly when she heard the soft beep. “There it is! There is the signal! Cirith... are you getting this?”

Cirith’s voice replied instantly. “I have it Tina.” She replied. “Activating main monitor and intercept.”

Martin wore simple dark gray fatigues now and he stared at the face of the much older woman in the transmission on the main monitor in the rear of the TYPE TWO. Anja, Cirith, Isabella and Dysea stood just behind him, Kenny, Cody, Tony, T'lolt and Murano behind them checking their personal gear. Kasdan was working at another computer station on the deck of the rear of the TYPE TWO, Torma, Aurith, Isheeni, Iriral, Miath and Arzoal resting on the deck of the ship, and behind them, spread out all over were a hundred and twenty Durcunusaan crammed into every section of the ship. Double the TYPE TWO's normal configuration, but rules were made to be broken and if Star Commander Endith O'Connor couldn't do it, then no one could.

Martin looked at the face of the woman as she bowed her head deeply to him. “My... Milord King.” She gasped aloud and with great reverence. Martin saw several others standing behind her bow their heads just as deeply.

“You know who I am?” Martin asked.

Nystai looked at him and nodded. “You are the Mard Revik of our people.” She stated with much confidence. “Descended from Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. The greatest of us. There can be no mistaking that.”

Martin looked at Cirith when she said that and then back to Nystai. “I need you to do something for me.” He spoke.

“We are already acting upon the Crown Prince’s instructions my King.” Nystai told him. “As of ninety seconds ago, we are initiating false security alarms all over the Capital City. With the hidden breach into the Mainframe that Ch'eldo and the others left for you to find, we can monitor everything from our location here. At least for a time. Arhtai Internal Security is just waking up, but they will begin to respond soon enough. I am sending them to the far edges of the city and as far away from you as possible.” She stepped closer to the monitor on her end. “It is our understanding that RENDITION station is under the control of your people as well. I did not suspect you would take the station Milord.”

“Predictable is boring.” Martin spoke with a half grin.

“Indeed.” Nystai said in reply.

“I need something else Nystai Arhtai.” Martin spoke firmly. “I... my son showed me what you told him. About your mate, your children. She is your sister Nystai Arhtai, and I need to know if you can do this? I intend to see that justice is done.”

Nystai met his eyes without flinching. “She stopped meaning anything to me the moment she ordered the death of Tamal Kirek, the Alpha that I loved with all that I was, and the twins that I carried that were our future together.”

Martin considered her eyes in the transmission and slowly nodded his head. “I need to you tap into the internal feed in their home.” Martin spoke. “I want to talk to them.”

Nystai looked taken aback at this request. “Talk to... but why Milord?”

“I also want the transmission going planet wide.” Martin told her. “Every monitor, every channel, everything that can carry a signal. Can you do that?”

“We can sire... but why?” Nystai asked. “My vile sister deserves no sympathy and no reprieve from justice. She cannot be allowed...”

“Your sister’s fate is already sealed Nystai Arhtai.” Martin spoke firmly. “As is the fate of everyone who took part in the Dremsa rie Saan. There will be no leniency, no reprieve and no forgiveness.”

“Then why must you...”

“How many right now were not even alive when the Dremsa rie Saan took place Nystai Arhtai?” Martin asked. “I will have my vengeance... but I will not strike down those who were not even born. I will give them a choice. A very simple choice. Fight me and die, or surrender and live.”

“How do I...”

Martin stepped closer to the monitor on his end. “Fifteen thousand, four hundred and two Nystai Arhtai.” Martin spoke to her. “That is how many of my bloodline Yelma and Nyser Arhtai ordered butchered. That is how many voices scream out to me in my mind and in my heart for vengeance Nystai. Five hundred of them were less than a year old. Five hundred of them. Sixty-three just as your twins were, waiting to come into this world and make a name for themselves and do wonderful things. Do I appear to you as someone who will just let that go unpunished?”

Nystai shook her head without hesitation. “No, Milord.” She answered firmly.

“Do as I ask you Nystai.” Martin spoke. “And then prepare for my sons to keep their word to you and pick up you and your people.”

Nystai turned her head. “Taarie! Make the connection child! Quickly!”

KOLTAR FOUR

ARHTAI PACK COMPOUND

LEPIRI

Yelma Arhtai walked into what was her husband and mate’s central office in their home sipping a mug of tea and she saw the half dozen military men standing around where he sat at his desk.

“...Don’t care what it takes!” Nyser almost screamed the words. “You re-establish contact with the station and my son!”

“All signals are being jammed Nyser.” The man spoke calling him by his given name only because he was Nyser’s oldest living brother. “Nothing is going in or out. It is a type of jamming our people have never seen before!”

Nyser got to his feet. “I have Fomir on his way to the Sanctuary now to bring back Ch'eldo and his engineers. They can break through this jamming.”

“And the ships brother?”

Yelma’s ears perked up now. “Ships? What ships?”

Nyser looked at his brother and nodded his head. “Tell her.”

“Seven minutes ago, over a hundred ships jumped directly into orbit above us.” Conron Arhtai spoke. “Unknown ships that are all power by Quantum Power Drives. One of the ships is over twenty thousand meters long. Within three minutes we lost contact with RENDITION station and everyone on it. All of our COM signals are being jammed by an unknown carrier wave that we cannot break through.”

Yelma was looking at him with wide eyes now. “What... what are we doing about it?” She demanded.

Nyser moved around his brother and looked at Yelma. “I have Fomir moving to bring Ch'eldo here.” He said. “The Onab will be able to break this jamming easily. AIS personnel are boarding transports as we speak to move to the station to reestablish contact and respond to these alerts.”

“What alerts?” Yelma demanded.

“Twenty-six so far Lady Arhtai.” Another of the men in the room answered. “All over the city. Security breaches of some kind at outlying facilities that do not have continuous security assigned to them. Mostly archives and data centers, but we have men responding to them all.”

“Nyser?” Yelma asked turning to look at him. “What is going on? Is this an attack of some kind by rebels? By that ronnus orato!” (Bastard Devil)

“We don't know if Vada Orato is responsible Lady Arhtai.” The same man spoke again. “We have never really been able to confirm that they exist.”

“Have our ships respond!” Yelma hissed.

Conron shook his head quickly. “Our ships are transports Yelma.” He spoke now. “We have no dedicated warships and even if we did, ground sensors are telling us that every ship in orbit above us is a warship of some kind, and they are all heavily armed. They vary in size, but they are all warships, the smallest being nearly a thousand meters in size. Six transport sized ships began descending through the atmosphere several minutes ago, but we have not yet been able to determine their destinations and...”

“Wait!” Yelma gasped. “They are coming down from orbit?!”

All of them turned when the large monitor on the wall began beeping loudly. Nyser moved for it. “This is probably Banaz. He will have a report for us and...” His voice died as he touched the panel beside the monitor and it came alive with a face that none of them had ever thought they would see again in their lifetimes.

“Nubou lae!” Conron gasped aloud.

“Aur carian!” Another rasped out the words.

“Una bjarter tur!” ((It cannot be)

“Esulo!” Yelma stammered.

“Impossible?” The image of Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas spoke. “Not hardly. Nothing is impossible, it just might take a little longer. Though from your reactions, I get the sense you are far more surprised than you should be. I wonder why that is?”

“Who are you?!” The youngest among them barked. He was Conron Arhtai's third oldest son and the most militarily efficient, which is why he spent most of his time with his father or Uncle.

Martin shook his head slowly in the transmission. “Who am I?” He spoke. “That's pretty sad really. Kesas Pengot told me that you were trying to erase us from history, and I guess he was correct. Too bad that ends today.”

“Kesas Pengot is a traitor to our people!” Conron snapped. “He...”

“Ata vada nubou uvenn guckly!” Martin snarled loudly cutting off his words. “I ain't talking to you.” (Shut the fuck up ugly) Conron looked utterly stupefied at being talked to in such a way and his eyes showed it. “They know who I am... and they know why I am here.” Martin barked pointing at Nyser and Yelma.

“You lie!” Yelma spat now.

Martin chuckled softly and shook his head. “Being way out here didn't make it so easy to talk to your traitor friends back in the Alpha Quadrant, did it?” He spoke now. He saw Nyser and Yelma look at one another and then back to him. “Yes, I figured it out a few weeks ago to be honest. You just confirmed it for me. Thank you.”

“You have no idea of what you speak!” Yelma barked out.

“Don't I?” Martin continued. “They are gone you know. All of them. The Utane, Ormck, Ekela and Taild Packs no longer exist. They were banished for their roles in the assassinations of Mahanlo blood. Eventually the survivors died out. The Chetak Pack has only one survivor and he will rebuild his Pack with his wives and mates into something to be proud of once more. He is doing an excellent job of it so far. Tell me... how did you get them to go along with you? They risked their Packs to turn against Mahanlo blood. Why? What did you promise them?”

“Power!” Yelma hissed angrily. “And revenge!”

“Revenge?!” Martin gasped. “Mahanlo blood suffered just as much, if not more than the rest of the Packs. Why is your sacrifice any more significant than what anyone else suffered?” Martin shook his head. “Four Packs were wiped out by their own betrayal because they followed you and your lies! The fifth Pack lives only because of one man and his honor and they are now tied to Mahanlo blood more tightly than they ever were before. You have no idea what happened do you? After you lost contact with them? You only assumed that they had succeeded and then you acted out yourselves.”

“Our children!” Yelma screamed. “My parents! So many of our pack dead in your war!”

“Mahanlo blood had nothing to do with the Iais’Kai and their...” Martin began to speak.

“Silence!” Yelma barked. “You were not alive back then! You know nothing of what we endured! We control what is left of our people now! It is Arhtai blood that now commands all Lycavorians no matter where they may be! We will...”

“You will do nothing!” Martin roared savagely, cutting off her words. “The remaining eight Packs have built something great in the Alpha Quadrant! A Union of species and worlds that your feeble little minds could not begin to imagine! I am Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas! I am the eighth-generation grandson of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo and I am King based on the First Cerath Accords. Yes, I know about that! I have the memories of five lifetimes within me Yelma Arhtai, and I remember! You cannot... you will not go against the will of the people! I have come for my blood! We have come for our blood!”

“You have no idea what you are saying!” Yelma snapped.

“Do not toy with me Yelma Arhtai.” Martin growled at her. “You hold my Tenna Kelia Mahanlo prisoner in cryo sleep! I have already woken my Tenne Lylor, her husband and mate, and three of their remaining children. You hold the sons of Ranol Nenay and his mate Gara. And you hold prisoner countless Onab who accompanied you freely when you left Cerath and now you hold them as slaves.”

“Kelias Mahanlo is dead!” Yelma barked loudly. “She died over a million years ago from a disease that we still have not found a cure for! We... we tried to save her but were unable to do so.”

“Did you think you could hide her from her own blood?” Martin snarled at her. “You had to have known that we would come for her! You cannot hide her from me. I can feel her Etheric resonance even now, the closer we get to the surface. I will give you one chance...” Martin moved closer to the monitor now. “Release my Tenna to me. Release Ranol’s sons to me, and release the Onab to me. I will not allow them to be treated as slaves by you and your Pack any longer. All those who took part in the Dremsa rie Saan will be handed over to Mahanlo blood for punishment. All those who killed our children, they will answer to us. All those who took the lives of Kirek Pack children will answer to us. That includes you and your foul husband and mate Yelma Arhtai. I already have your daughter Sama and your granddaughter Roeza, and for their crimes, they will answer to the Lycavorians they have wronged.”

Yelma’s eyes were wide now as she gazed at the man’s face in the transmission. “They... Sama... they live!” She gasped aloud.

Martin nodded his head. “For the moment.” He spoke. “Their crimes are great, and they will answer for them.”

“You will return them to me immediately!” Yelma screamed. “Return them to me or I will kill Kelias and Ranol’s sons!”

“By your own words... you just told me that my Tenna Kelias was dead.” Martin spoke knowing that he had caught her in her own lie. “That she died because of some mystery disease that you and your people made up. Now you are telling me this is not true?”

Nyser turned when the door to the room opened and the younger wolf burst in. He went right to where Nyser was standing and whispered in to his ear. Nyser’s eyes grew wide and he turned to look at Yelma.

“What is it?” She demanded as she looked at him.

“He is... he is broadcasting on an open channel Yelma.” Nyser exclaimed. “It is being broadcast all over the system!”

Yelma’s own eyes went wide and she looked back to Martin in the transmission. She moved closer to the screen now. “I hope that... I hope that we can come to some sort of arrangement that will benefit both of us.”

TYPE TWO
DESIGNATION SPARTAN ONE

“You hope?” Martin gasped aloud as he stared wide eyed at Yelma and Nyser Arhtai in the transmission.

It was almost too much for Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas to reign in his horrific rage as he stared at the two people most responsible for the deaths of so many of the family and blood he never had a chance to know.

Innocents and children.

Yelma Arhtai shuddered in fear when the roar erupted from Martin and she gripped her husband’s arm tightly in the transmission as they watched the Vada Arwa rie Vada Revik deploy instantly from Etheric space, wrapping around Martin’s body and head as the massive wings took shape and expanded fully to the sides. Dysea and Bella pulled Cirith back as those wings stretched across almost the entire cargo bay deck. Yelma and Nyser Arhtai could only watch from the surface as that helmeted head finally turned to stare at them in the transmission, the yellow gold eyes almost surreal to look at as they gazed upon them. They could see the multicolored plume that fell from the helmet’s top and the dull silver armor that surrounded Martin’s face and cheeks. His dual fangs were fully extended now, terrifying to behold, and those eyes turned finally to them.

And when those chilling, yellow gold eyes focused on them he spoke, the tenor of his words cutting through them both, ripping whatever confidence they may have had from their hearts and crushing it beneath his power.

“Mahanlo blood has returned!” Martin growled savagely. “We are the direct descendants of both Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo! I carry both of their sacred bloodlines within me, as do my children and my blood! We have Reva Mahanlo among us, grandmother to us all and Matriarch to the Mahanlo Pack! I am the rightful heir to Daniho Ashten and it is I who will carry that title and honor into the future. You are not worthy to lead a parade, let alone our people. We have come for our family that you wrongly hold Yelma Arhtai! We have come for our friends that you wrongly hold! Mahanlo blood has now returned and we are the nightmare that will plague your waking dreams!” Martin turned to face them fully, his wings drawing closer to his body and lifting near his shoulders.

“Come to us Yelma Arhtai, deep down in the dark where the monsters be, in the maw with the jaws and the razor teeth. Come to us where the brimstone burns and the angels weep, for that is where we reside. You may call to your gods if we cross your path, because your hope Yelma Arhtai... your hope is a moment that is now long past.” Martin snarled viciously.

“For you... the shadow of death is the one that we will cast for all those who took part in the Dremsa rie Saan. Mahanlo-Leonidas blood follows the Spartan law and code, taught to us by those who came before us! For those of the Arhtai Pack listening to me now, know this, if you have no blood on your hands then you have nothing to fear from us. But if you choose to fight us... to follow the ones that have lied to you for so long... then you will die. Mahanlo blood has returned, and now... now we will have our retribution!”

Martin stepped closer to the monitor in the rear of Spartan One and barred his vicious looking fangs into the transmission, his yellow gold eyes flaring in anger.

“If you will not release my family to me willingly upae... I will fucking take them, and the blood of anyone who stands in our way will be on your hands.” Martin snarled savagely. “Stick that in your pipe and fucking smoke it midaeus!” Martin slammed his hand down on the console and ended the transmission.

KOLTAR FOUR
ARHTAI PACK COMPOUND
LEPIRI

Nyser whirled around after the transmission ended. "Call out all of the garrisons, planet wide!" He barked. "I want the Research facility reinforced with additional troops within thirty minutes! I want all critical locations reinforced with added AIS forces! Someone get me a COM channel to RENDITION Station and someone find out where my son Fomir is!"

The same young wolf who had burst into the room only a few moments ago returned with a data pad in his hand. "General Nyser!" He stammered. "Planetary Air Defenses are offline sir! All civilian COM channels are being flooded with random information, overloading the system. All Military channels are being jammed by the ships in orbit! They must have several dedicated to jamming all our frequencies! The moment we switch, they find us within seconds! The six ships that were inbound to the surface have broken apart sir!"

Nyser stepped closer to him. "Where are they headed?"

"Four have altered course north but have fallen off our planetary sensor grids!" The young wolf spoke excitedly. "Their ships were fast General. Very fast."

"They are going to the Onab facility." Nyser spoke looking at Conron. "Find a way to contact the garrison there... I don't care how. We must warn them. Use the buried land lines if you have to."

Conron nodded his head and bolted from the room. Nyser looked at the young wolf. "And the others?"

"The others sir?"

"The other ships!" Nyser hissed. "Where are they going?"

"One is projected to be over the market sector in just under three minutes. The other is... the other is headed directly here, sir." The young wolf spoke.

"Here?" Nyser gasped.

"Their course puts them over the Constellation Monument in four minutes!" The young wolf said.

Nyser turned his head and glared at Yelma. "He knows where she is Yelma!" He almost yelled. "He knows where she is! How could he know where she is?!"

Yelma stepped close to her husband and mate. "You must stop him Nyser." She spoke. "It is the only way now! His transmission went out over a public channel. Our people will know everything now and if they don't, they will know shortly. The only way to save this is to kill him."

"Fuck!" Nyser Arhtai snarled. He leaned over quickly and nuzzled Yelma before looking at the other men in the room with him. "All of you with me. Call out the standing garrison in the compound and muster them on the north platform! Send half of the men to the Research Facility under the Monument. They are to stop anyone from gaining entrance to the underground tunnel network connecting the Research Facility and the Parliament building. We will take the rest and meet them by the Monument! They must think they can somehow gain entrance from above it! They are wrong and we will show them that they are wrong!"

Yelma watched as the men ran from the room following her husband but then she moved to the large monitor and activated the private COM channel. She waited as it powered up and then the face of the young woman appeared.

"Lady Arhtai!" She gasped.

"Are they there yet Kitali?" Yelma asked.

"They have just started to arrived Lady Arhtai." The young woman answered. "Lord Robal and Lady Nuvia."

"Let me speak to Robal." Yelma spoke. She watched as the young woman motioned frantically to someone and then within seconds the burly face and shoulders of the young man appeared.

"Mother!" Robal Arhtai spoke. "Mother what is going on? Where is father?"

"Listen to me Robal." Yelma said. "You must get everyone to the emergency transports and wait for your father and I to get there. They should already be powering up and standing by for us to arrive."

"Mother what is happening?" Robal spoke. "AIS came to my house last night and said we needed to move to the emergency site."

"Some things are happening Robal." Yelma told him. "Make sure you and your sisters reach the transports once they all arrive."

"I should be with you and father. With Fomir and Banaz."

Yelma shook her head. "You are still too young my son." She told him. "Do as I ask you. Now it is you who are in charge until we are all together again. Do you understand?"

Robal nodded his head. "Yes, mother."

“The minute that Ereri and Taniua arrive, all of you move to the emergency site and wait for us.” Yelma said.

“I understand mother.” Robal said.

“Do not fail your father and I Robal. Look after your sisters.” Yelma told him.

“I will mother.”

Yelma nodded and ended the transmission. She looked out the large window and could see the city of Lepiri as it began to wake up, the sun rising over the horizon.

“Gods help us.” She muttered softly before moving from the room.

SPARTAN ONE

Only two men and one woman in the entire universe had the courage to approach Martin Leonidas when he was like this. He was pacing back and forth in the cargo bay like a pent-up animal, his emotions exposed for all to see. He was angry, saddened, in pain and he needed to release. Only Danny and Andro had ever seen him like this before, for this is a part of himself that Martin rarely showed to anyone. Helen knew what he was capable of because she was his Praetorian Mage, but even she had never seen it like this. The wolf aura he was radiating was one that no one wanted to be on the receiving end of in any way. Lylor had felt something like this only one other time before and that is during the last battles with the Iais'Kai on Cerath.

Danny finally took matters into his own hands and leaped the railing from the upper deck, landing on the lower floor with a heavy thud as heads turned to look at him, Reva, Lylor and Ranol watching this unfold. Martin turned quickly to look at Danny and without an iota of fear Danny reached out and grabbed Martin's head, pulling him close. Reva was among the many who were seeing it, and she gasped when they felt the surge in his aura and then the calm that just as quickly enveloped him. Martin's large hands went to Danny's shoulders and he squeezed them tightly as everyone saw Danny whispering to him in a way that no one would ever hear what he was saying. They all watched Martin's head come up and he stared at Danny intently. Torma rose to his four muscular legs now because he was the only one who had heard Danny's words.

Danny released Martin's head and stepped to the side of the cargo bay. When he reached the interior wall, he slammed his hand down on the ramp controls for the TYPE TWO and all of them heard the screaming of the air as it began to race through the interior of the ship.

“GO!” Danny screamed at Martin above the roaring of the air. “GO NOW! I will see you on the ground! Go!”

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas didn't hesitate and he considered the opening of the ramp for a split second before he sprinted off the end of the ramp without looking back. Torma followed him a millisecond later and they both disappeared from view, as the sun was beginning to break the horizon and bathed the rear of the TYPE TWO in sunlight and warmth.

Danny slammed his hand down on the ramp controls once more and then lifted his armored hand to the side of his head where he touched the implant on his jaw.

“How long For'mya?!” He barked out.

“Three minutes Daniel!” For'mya's voice filled the interior of the ship through the COM speakers.

Danny nodded his head and looked around at those who were now staring at him. “Three minutes people!” He barked. “Three minutes and we are in the shit! Let's do this!”

Reva moved up beside Anja as Dysea, Isabella and Cirith came over to her. “What... what did he say to him?” Reva asked them.

It was Helen who answered for all of them and they turned to look at her petite form standing beside Arzoal. “Whatever it was Reva Mahanlo, believe me, we probably don't want to know.”

RENDITION STATION CCC

Banaz Arhtai groaned softly and rolled over on the deck where he had fallen. It had taken place quickly, life-support being cut off and everyone in CCC succumbing to the results of that. In a matter of only two minutes, no matter what they had tried, everyone had been rendered unconscious and the CCC had fallen.

Banaz had caught only the briefest of glimpses of the strangely armored men and women rushing into the CCC before a sharp blow to his temple had dropped him completely into utter blackness. It had not lasted long as he woke a brief time later to find his hands secured behind his back and he was face down on the deck. He rolled over and saw Talach beside him, along with Issdra and several others, all of them now regaining consciousness slowly. He jerked his head around and saw several men and women in the strange armored uniforms sitting at four different command stations in the CCC working the controls. Banaz snarled angrily and began getting to his feet even though his hands were secured behind his back.

He groaned when he felt the powerful hand drop onto his shoulder and squeeze hard, pushing him back into a kneeling position.

“No one told you to get up.” The male voice growled at him.

Banaz turned his head quickly and he saw and smelled the large Alpha right behind him. “You have no idea what you have done!” Banaz barked at him. “Do you know who I am?”

“You seem to be of the mind that I care.” Atropos answered him and he saw his sister come up to him while he was looking at Banaz.

“I am Banaz Arhtai and right now I am your only hope for staying alive once we retake this station.” Banaz hissed.

“Retake the station huh?” Atropos said with a smile. “That might be a tad harder than you think since we now have over three hundred troops on your precious station.”

Banaz was unable to keep the surprise out of his eyes at this pronouncement. “You... you lie!” He snarled.

“My brother does not need to lie!” Aricia spoke calmly from in front of him and Banaz’s head jerked around when he heard her. Her sweet lavender and coco scent hit him full in the face, but it was mingled tightly with a mixture of other soft female scents and a single male scent that was dominant in every way. “Your space station is now ours.” Aricia told him as she squatted down in front of him. “And I do so thank you for confirming who you are for us. It saved a lot of work. Thankfully for you, your age kept my daughter from killing you outright.”

Banaz blinked rapidly and his eyes filled with shock and even a little fear when Zarah unwrapped the shadows from around her body right next to Aricia.

“The rest of your Command crew has been taken to a central location, but we will keep the three of you here with us for now.” Aricia spoke as she got back to her feet. Banaz stared at her as she turned to look at what could only be a soldier of some kind as he stepped up to her.

“We have secured all but three decks my Queen.” The Colonel from the 9th CSAFG had taken charge of securing the station. “Five groups chose to fight us. None of them survived. I have three wounded but none seriously. Their energy weapons appear to be solely defensive in nature. At least those they were armed with.”

“Police?” Aricia asked him.

The man nodded his head. “It would appear so Queen Aricia. Not very well trained if they were soldiers, so I have to assume they were some sort of police force.”

“The rest of them?” Aricia asked.

“We have secured them in four separate locations at the bottom of the station in the cargo bays.” The Colonel answered. “If necessary, we can vent them to space.”

Aricia nodded her head. “Let’s hope that isn’t necessary.” She spoke. “Pull your men into the remaining sensitive areas when they finish clearing the last three decks Colonel. The transmission from Martin was broadcast all over the planet and here on the station. Now it is just a matter of wait and see.”

“Permission to send another two teams here to you my Queen.” The Colonel asked her. “Prince Androcles will never forgive me if I let anything happen to his mother.”

Aricia grinned and nodded her head. “Very well. Have them report to my brother when they arrived but I want you established in the secondary command post that we set up at this checkpoint.”

The Colonel nodded his head. “I’ll make it happen.” He said before turning and jogging out of the CCC. Aricia looked at her brother. “Now we wait fervon.” She said.

Atropos nodded his head. “We had the easy part in of all this.” He spoke calmly. “Martin and Androcles have the hard parts.”

“They are torn fervon. I can sense their emotions even from here.” Aricia said softly.

Atropos nodded his head. “I don’t doubt it, but they will do what they must. They always do.”

“What is going on?” Banaz demanded. “I demand that you tell me who you are and why you are here!”

Aricia turned back to look at him and it was then that she allowed her dual fangs to extend fully even as her eyes shifted to that of her wolf persona. The thick black ring around her azure colored eyes and her dual fangs caused Banaz to gasp.

“I have already told you who I am fool.” Aricia snapped as she leaned close to him. “The blood of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo has returned for their awran. And we will not be denied.”

KOLTAR FOUR

TWO HUNDRED KILOMETERS NORTH OF THE CAPITAL CITY OF LEPIRI

IAALDO ENGINEER COMPOUND

Ivore Arhtai stood in the center of the compound staring up into the brightening sky as the sun continued to rise. He had woken early this day, earlier than normal, for he felt odd. He had left Revia’s sleeping warmth because he felt as if something was going to happen today but he could not put his finger on it. His eyes were focused on the sky above them, the mug of strong tea in his hand forgotten. He did not even smell Ch'eldo and Ra'tel approach him quickly, Ra'tel holding his father’s arm.

“Ivore we...” Ch'eldo Iaaldo began to speak when they were close enough but he stopped abruptly when he sensed what Ivore was feeling. “Ivore...?”

Ivore shook his head slowly. “Something is... something is wrong.” He said softly. “There are... there are dozens of ships in orbit above us.”

“Ivore!?” Ch'eldo hissed as he gripped his son’s arm. This caused Ivore’s head to whip around until he was looking at him.

“Ch'eldo what...”

“It is beginning my friend.” Ch'eldo spoke clearly. “We must make ready.”

“What? What do you mean?” Ivore stammered.

Ra'tel held out the data scroll to him. “We know that you and Revia met him the other night.” He spoke. “Father could feel him. He spoke with him.”

“Androcles?” Ivore gasped. “You...”

Ch'eldo nodded his head. “Yes, my friend.” He answered. “He could sense me when he was on the roof with you and Revia. I felt him reach for me and...”

Ivore shook his head and placed his hands gently on Ch'eldo’s shoulders. “You do not need to explain it to me Ch'eldo my friend.”

Ch'eldo gripped his arms. “It has begun Ivore. Mahanlo blood has arrived in orbit and they have already begun to act.”

“How do you...?” Ivore shook his head stopping his own words. “It doesn’t matter. What do you know?”

“RENDITION Station has already fallen.” Ra'tel told him seeing Ivore’s eyes go wide at this knowledge. “Our contacts within the Lepiri Underground informed us of this only moments ago. Over a hundred ships are in orbit now, one of them is massive, over twenty thousand meters long.”

“Ch'eldo... can you feel Androcles?” Ivore asked.

Ch'eldo shook his head quickly. “No... but I sense... I sense something growing closer Ivore. Something powerful and so very pure, and it is coming here. It can only be the Tarivuos Ivore. Only they could echo within the Etheric realm like this. I sense something else as well, something even more powerful yet distinct, but it is much further away.”

Ivore looked around quickly and his wolf eyes detected something off in the distance by the garrison building. “Something is happening at the garrison.” He said quickly. “They must be realizing what is taking place.”

“Ivore we need to...” Ch'eldo began but Ivore nodded his head.

“I know.” Ivore said. “Return to your villas and ensure everyone is awake and moving.” He spoke. “I will do the same with Revia and our family. We will meet in the center courtyard. Keep everyone together and make certain they do not bring anything they cannot carry easily. Hurry Ra'tel... Ch'eldo... if it has already started, then this thing is going to happen very fast. Androcles promised he would come for all of us, and a Mahanlo never goes back on his word.”

Ch'eldo nodded his head in agreement. “Protect your beautiful Revia, Ivore my friend.” He spoke firmly. “If anything were to happen to her at the hands of these fools, nothing will be able to stand before the Heralds and live out this day. And if the Tarivuos are here...”

Ivore nodded his head. “Then the Mard Revik is here. And Revia’s father.” He squeezed Ra'tel’s arm. “Take care of your father Ra'tel... and move quickly. Go!”

Ivore Arhtai turned and began the sprint back to his and Revia’s home. No, not their home, their cage, but after this day, a home they would begin to make. A home for the future back with their family.

It would have been a sight to see if anyone had been around to see it besides the beasts that inhabited the wilderness below. Of course, there really wasn’t anything to actually see.

The PREMONITION had dropped to barely a hundred feet off the ground, the three KADEN transports keeping pace with her in a diamond formation and all of them under full Shroud. They were blazing across the surface of Koltar Four, using nape of the earth terrain following sensors, their engines blasting the tops of trees as they passed by at three hundred KPH. The three KADEN transports being used were specially designed to operate for the military and be used on different covert missions by the Durcunusaan and other Special Operations Units within the Union military. For this mission, they had all been stripped of nearly everything on the interior in order to carry as many men and women as possible. Normya was supposed to fly the lead KADEN, but Androcles had switched her and Tir'ut to the second TYPE TWO in order to retrieve Nystai Arhtai and those with her. The normal flight crew was now back in charge and doing an outstanding imitation of Normya Leonidas.

Sadi was monitoring the instruments that surrounded her body in the pilot’s seat while Ne'Veha’s hands caressed the controls of the PREMONITION. Ne'Veha was the better close quarters pilot and Sadi knew this so, Ne'Veha did all of the close quarters flying while Sadi handled the rest of the equipment as she did now.

“Coming up on twenty-three kilometers, prepare to slow SirsanGai.” Sadi spoke quickly. “And... hold!”

“Onab Flight... hold!” Ne'Veha barked into her headset mic as she caressed her controls and brought the PREMONITION to a complete stop in two point three seconds.

“Onab Flight is holding.” The pilot of the lead KADEN announced as all three KADEN transports stopped on a dime and came into formation with the PREMONITION.

“Smooth!” Meka spoke from her chair surrounded by her three consoles. She was monitoring all of their ships on her sensors.

Sadi turned her head slightly to the monitor on her left side and saw the image from the cargo area of the ship. “Andro... we are in position.” She spoke.

Sadi saw Androcles’ head turn towards her voice and he nodded. “Thank you KertaGai. Ramp coming open.” She saw his hand extend out and touch the side of the bulkhead.

“Cui fas vada carians duan Saradasaar.” Sadi spoke the words. (Go with the gods our beacon of light)

“Pen sey hote rie forn caburyng lae.” Andro answered. (I have all of you guiding me.)

“Nirr ea urt gur forn!” Eliani’s voice echoed now. (Get a room will you)

This brought laughter from all of them and the tension that was building was lessened just enough.

“Just as we discussed nathos, the six of us will go in first! The rest of you one minute behind us in order for us to assess. Lisisa, Jeth, Carisia and Anthar on the command center at the top of the wall left side. Denali, Aradace, Lu'ria and Majeir on the missile pod launch control room opposite the command center. Right side.

Eliani, Tharua, Sehri and Marux straight up the gut and over the wall to mark for KertaGai.” Androcles spoke. “Kalis... once I open the wall chrora, you, Daio and Ridor bring them! Bring them all!”

“We will not hesitate Andro.” Kalsi answered.

“Then we go!” Andro hissed.

Kesas and the others watched as Androcles, Dorian and Laren extended their own wings from the Arwa rie vada Tarivuos and just dropped off the rear of the ramp without even a pause. Seconds later they could be seen rising above the tree tops using their wings to climb into the air. Elynth, Ryner and Ladur followed a split second after and then they were gone as well. Almost instantly Kesas saw them rise above the trees and become specs in the morning sky as they joined with their riders and were gone.

“Gods!” Kesas muttered to no one in particular as he saw Lisisa leap up onto Jeth’s back followed by Carisia onto Anthar and everyone else until there were six more mounted riders on the backs of dragons. Kesas Pengot had not spent much time around Dadrien back then, or his species, the sinuovas eliciting fear within even the stoutest Lycavorian warrior. This would wane in the years before they left Cerath but in the beginning, it was very prevalent. Now... now no such fear existed and once more his people and the sinuovas would fight side by side. Perhaps history was repeating itself once more, but whatever the reason, Kesas Pengot knew they would succeed this day. “Such fearlessness. Such commitment.”

Kesas looked out the rear of the PREMONITION and just before Lisisa and Denali led the rest of them out he whisper the words he had heard in that song not so long ago on this very ship.

*I'm a soldier of freedom in the army of man
We are the chosen, we're the partisan
The cause it is noble and the cause it is just
We are ready to pay with our lives if we must*

For the second time in his lifetime of over four million years, Kesas Pengot was joining Mahanlo blood as they moved into battle. No hesitation, no doubt. To rescue and protect. If ever there was a bloodline that deserved to rule, it was Mahanlo blood. And that is why so many of their people had sworn allegiance to them all those millions of years ago, and Kesas knew why they would once more. There was no back down in Mahanlo blood, no quit. They would not allow their people to fail for any reason and that is why they had made it this far.

Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas and his sons, his nathos, they would make it so once more.

CHAPTER SEVENTY-SIX

KOLTAR FOUR CAPITAL OF LEPIRI CONSTELLATION MONUMENT

It was built as a symbol of the space that they had travelled from Cerath to arrive here. A massive circular monument that showed many of the Star Constellations that they had passed through in their exodus. It was huge really, fully a hundred and ten feet tall and an easy four and a half meters in diameter. The sun was just breaking the horizon now as Martin stood in front of the monument, staring up at it with his yellow gold eyes, his dual fangs fully extended and very prominent. His wings were drawn close to his body, but still spread out a full meter on either side of his body even in their relaxed state. The Arwa rie Vada Revik was also very prominent in the rising sun, the bright glare beginning to reflect off the dull silver armor. Martin wore his Spartan helmet, the multicolored plume falling well down his back and standing for the hair color of each of his beloved Queens. Martin didn’t know how, but the Onkmeti Naami armor for his head had taken the shape of his Spartan Helm and Martin had simply moved the plume to his new headgear. The Spartan Helm he now wore was like the ancient Spartan Helm worn by his father so long ago. It protected his cheeks bridge of his nose, and left a single long opening for his lips and mouth and a smaller one for his eyes, while shielding everything else.

When he needed to, Martin could call forth more parts of the armor from Etheric space and effectively seal it completely. It was no different than the Arwa rie vada Tarivuos, though Martin didn't like to close himself up entirely in the armor.

Torma rested on the grassy ground only four meters away, his huge bulk not hard to spot from anywhere really, as he too gazed at the monument and contemplated the significance of it. All around the monument Martin could see dozens of well kept vendor stalls which were only just starting to come alive. This must have been an area of gathering for the Lycavorians here, to shop and visit with friends or even sit outside and view the beauty of the area all around them as the day passed. He could detect at least three outdoor cafés that were beginning to stir, and the number of people beginning to move around the area was increasing as the sun rose higher. It was quite stunning, and even though Martin could detect that at least four people had seen them by now, no one had begun to move to investigate Torma's massive bulk sitting right in the open, or Martin standing there with his Onkmeti Naami wings extended.

Martin had smelled him easily enough long ago as he approached him and knew he was no threat to him or Torma so he simply turned his head slowly and looked down at the young boy who was staring up at him with some awe in his fearless blue eyes as he finally came up to him.

"Alda suno." Martin said in a gentle voice. (Good morning)

"Wen reull isight? Coi vin isight?" The young boy asked excitedly pointing to Martin's wings and then to where Torma sat now looking at him. (Are those real? He is real?)

Martin scented the boy at no more than perhaps eight years old, still young enough to believe in magical things and still very much impressionable. When Martin spoke, it caused his dual fangs to be much more visible and ferocious looking, something that didn't faze this little man it seemed.

"Atle coi terit sha haro?" Martin spoke as he turned partially to look at the young boy. (What is your name boy?)

"Lykin!" The boy answered proudly. "I'm eight!"

Martin's lip turned up slowly into a smile at this and he glanced at Torma quickly behind him. "Fearless my brother." He spoke.

"Indeed." Torma answered aloud causing the little boy's eyes to grow even wider.

"It... it speaks!" Lykin gasped aloud.

Martin knelt slowly in front of the boy, his wings shifting ever so slightly as he did. "His name is Torma and he is just as smart as you and me Lykin." Martin said. "Never assume that because someone is different than you, that they are not as smart as you."

Lykin looked properly chastised and he lowered his head slightly. "That is what my medwan and medwaw say all the time."

Martin nodded his head. "Your mother and father are wise." He said. Martin brought his right wing closer to Lykin. "Go ahead and touch it." He said.

Lykin reached out with an expression of wonder and ran his fingers slowly down the front edge of the wing. "It... it is metal!" He gasped in disbelief. "But it is so soft."

Martin nodded his head. "Yes, it is. Made for me with a very special metal. Where are your parents Lykin?" Martin asked him.

Lykin motioned behind him in the distance where a small building stood, one of the cafés no doubt Martin decided by the size of the building and the tables and chairs surrounding the outside. "They are opening the shop." Lykin offered up the information. "I come here every morning to the monument and look at the stars on it."

"Why?" Martin asked.

"My medwan says that one day the prophecy will come true." Lykin said.

"What prophecy is that?" Martin pressed him.

"About the Mard Revik silly." He answered. "My alvva says that the Mard Revik will come from far away stars one day to save us all. That he will have justice for those taken from him and he will free all of us. That he will have dual fangs and yellow gold eyes and he will command a great army and..." Lykin looked at Martin now as if seeing him for the very first time. His blue eyes grew wider as he realized that Martin had dual wolf fangs and yellow gold eyes. "You!" He yelled. "You are him!"

Martin smiled under his helmet and brought his hand up to the young boy's shoulder and he squeezed softly. "That would be me, yes." Martin told him. "My name is Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas."

Lykin looked up when he heard the roar of ship engines and his eyes grew even wider as he saw the huge ship beginning to descend right over the top of his head. There was no hiding it now and Martin knew things were going to kick off very quickly.

"Lykin." Martin said lifting his hand and bringing the boy's face back to his. He lifted the small obsidian jewel and Lykin's eyes grew stunned at the shiny object and how it reflected the light. It was something that Pablo had made for Martin after they had discovered the Bloodline Crest of his family in Chiron's database. Pablo Gutierrez was one of those that Martin had turned all those years ago and now he would always be part of Martin's family no matter what took place in the future. Pablo was also Martin's artist, and not only was he a Master Tattoo Artist, he was a superb craftsman. He had used a large obsidian jewel to carve the Bloodline Crest into several dozen smaller coin like pieces within hours of discovering the symbol. Lykin lifted his hand to take it but Martin pulled it back. "I need you to do something for me Lykin." He said. "Can you do that?"

Lykin nodded his head. "Yes! My medwaw says I'm a big boy!"

"I'm sure." Martin said. "I need you to take this to your father. Show it to him and tell him that he needs to get everyone away from here."

Lykin looked at him. "Why?"

Martin touched the ground beneath him. "Someone put aur tenna under this monument. It was very mean. I am going to get her back."

"They buried her?" Lykin gasped.

"She is alive. She is in a building under this monument." Martin said. "I need to free her and return her to her family. To her blood. You understand that, right?"

Lykin nodded his head quickly. "Aur alvva says blood always come first. Unless it is bad, and then we do not acknowledge them. Your tenna, is she good?"

Martin smiled and nodded his head. "Yes, she is." He answered. "I have never met her before, because I am too young, but I have her mother and her mate and husband and they would like her back. As King, as King I must do this Lykin."

Lykin nodded quickly as he looked once more at the ship that was lowering over them. "Are they going to land on top of us?" He asked his voice holding fear for the first time.

Martin shook his head and gripped his arms gently. "They are with me Lykin." He said. "And they won't land on top of us." Martin asked him, holding out the obsidian coin.

Lykin looked at it once more and then he reached out to take it. He began to turn it over in his small hands. "The Prophecy says that the Mard Revik will have a mark. An obsidian jewel with the head of his family on it." Lykin took the jewel and turned it fully over in his hands and his eyes nearly exploded out of his head as he saw the likeness of the massive wolf carved into the coin medallion.

Martin covered his small hands with his armored fists. "Take this coin Lykin." Martin said. "Take it to your father. Tell him he needs to get everyone away from here. Very far away. There is going to be fighting here and I do not want you here to see it."

"My mother says fighting is bad." Lykin said.

Martin nodded his head. "Your mother is right, but sometimes, sometimes we are forced to fight for what we believe in. I must do that now. I need you to go Lykin. I need you to tell your father and get everyone away from here."

Lykin nodded his head energetically. "I can do that."

"Good boy! When this is over Lykin, you have your father bring you and your family to the station in orbit. You know it?"

"We use it all the time to go visit our nathos." Lykin spoke.

"Good... you show this to any one of my people, you will know them if you see them, and they will make sure you and your family are safe. I promise." Martin said. "Now go! Go!"

Lykin turned quickly and began to sprint across the immaculately kept grass and flower beds as fast as his eight-year-old legs would carry him. Martin rose back to his full height and looked up once more as Endith brought the TYPE TWO closer to the surface. Martin lowered his head and looked at Torma.

"We are going to have all the attention very soon my brother." Martin said.

Torma's wings lifted and shuddered slightly, a dragon shrugging his shoulders. "When has this ever stopped us before?" He asked.

Martin smiled under his helmet. "True enough." He said. "True enough."

Martin turned toward the monument and shook his head. "A pity." He said softly. "It is a beautiful piece of work."

"And we can rebuild it." Torma spoke.

Martin nodded his head. "Yes, we can."

Martin lifted his hands and directed them at the monument. The low rumbling began and the cracking of concrete and granite could be heard, the tearing of metal anchors and bolts, loud enough to begin to turn heads in their direction. Eyes began to go wide in disbelief and men and women both were beginning to cry out at what was happening and then Martin was lifting the massive Constellation Monument within the grasp of his Etheric power as it tore free of its roots in the ground and rose a full four meters into the air. Martin turned his body as he held the four-hundred-ton monument above the ground and then he moved under it as he directed it to the side of the grassy area. By now dozens of men and women all around the massive monument were witnessing what was taking place. With an almost casual flip of his powerful arms, the Constellation Monument went careening end over end, across the perfect grass, until it struck the wide, manmade lake and rolled into the water slowly, causing a huge wave to spread outward and ripple to the other sides of the shallow water.

Martin looked up at the belly of the TYPE TWO now. "Right here, Endy!" Martin spoke loudly. "I have marked the points with dye! Cut me a way through!"

"We got it boss!" Endith's voice echoed in his implant as she brought the ship within a hundred feet of where Martin stood.

Martin nodded his head and looked at Torma. "Brother, why don't we go and raise some hell so the others can work without interruption."

Torma chuckled and rose to his four, powerful legs. "Now that is the best news I have heard all day." He said as Martin leaped the several meters towards him and settled into the saddle.

Lykin ran as fast as his legs would carry him and when he reached the outside of the café, his father was staring at the ship lowering slowly to the ground and the Star Constellation monument now half submerged in the manmade lake a short distance away.

"Alvva! Alvva!" Lykin shouted as he skidded to a halt beside his father.

Hatim turned his head quickly and gathered his youngest son into his arms protectively. "Lykin... where have you been?!" He demanded. "I have told you about wandering off keto!"

"Papa look!" Lykin spoke clearly as he held out the obsidian coin to his father.

Hatim looked at the obsidian coin in his hand and took it from his son, turning it over in his hand. His eyes grew wide when he saw the carved image of the wolf. "Lykin... who... who gave this to you son?"

"The Mard Revik alvva." Lykin answered.

The female Lycavorian exited the interior of the café now carrying a large tray in her hands. "Lykin I have told you about making up such things!" Adcha spoke sternly to her child as she came out and for the first time began to take note of what was happening all around.

"I am not making it up mother!" Lykin hissed. "The Mard Revik gave it to me! He told me to tell papa that he needed to get everyone away from here. That there would be fighting soon and that he needed to get his tenna back."

Adcha took notice of the large strange ship that was hovering over where the Star Constellation Monument should have been and it was getting closer to the ground. "Hatim... Hatim, the monument is... it is in the lake!" She gasped aloud.

"Look! Look!" Lykin shouted as his finger pointed to the figure of the man on the back of the huge sinuova as it was pulling away from the area rapidly. Torma's wingspan was enormous and made it very easy to see him in the morning sky. "That is him!"

Hatim's eyes were huge as he watched this, Adcha coming up beside her husband and mate quickly. "Carians!" Adcha gasped.

“Lykin?” Hatim looked at his son in his arms. “Did this... did this man tell you a name?” Hatim asked his son.

“He had yellow and gold eyes Papa! And dual fangs! They were very scary looking but he was very nice to me.” Lykin stated.

“Did he tell you a name keto?” Hatim asked.

“He said his name was... it was Mahanlo-Leonidas.” Lykin answered. “He... he gave me this Papa! He said to tell you to get everyone out of the area and that we should go to the station and show this to one of his men. And then we would be safe forever!”

Adcha gripped her husband’s arm tightly. “Mahanlo... Hatim. Mahanlo!”

Hatim nodded his head. “Adcha... take Lykin! Go home and gather the rest of our family. I will meet you at the Transport Hub! Go now!”

“Hatim what are you... what are you going to do?” Adcha gasped as she collected Lykin into her arms from his.

“Exactly what our King told me to do!” Hatim replied. “Now go! I will meet you there!”

Adcha watched as Hatim broke into a run towards the nearest building like their own. Lykin turned to look at his mother. “What is happening momma?” He asked.

Adcha looked at her son and smiled. “The... the future has arrived my son.” She told him. “The future has arrived. Come... we must get your brothers and sisters and your staania and staanio.”

SPARTAN ONE

“...Tracing it perfectly!” Tina called out. “Deploying the lasers!”

Endith turned and looked at For'mya across from her. “For'mya did you...”

For'mya met her eyes and nodded her head. “Yes.”

“That monument has got to be... and he just tossed it aside!” Endith gasped.

“His skills have grown.” For'mya told her with a grin.

“Grown my ass!” Endith spat as she looked back to her instruments. “Man, I am so glad he is on our side!”

For'mya laughed softly. “Yes... so are we.”

“Got it!” Tina barked. “Lasers are locked in! Seventy-three percent power to cut through the Shale and Diorite!” Tina’s hands were flying over the three consoles that encircled her body on all sides. “The Dacite and Mudstone won’t be able to hold the weight once we cut and it will collapse onto the tunnel beneath.”

“Your certain?” For'mya asked turning her head.

Tina nodded her head. “Trust me... we are going to open up an opening big enough to stick the nose of our TYPE TWO into it!”

“We will avoid that of course!” Endy declared.

For'mya lifted her hand and tapped her jaw implant so that her voice would carry through the entire ship. “Anja! Daniel! We are cutting now! Prepare to deploy! We’ll set down right over the collapsed part when the lasers breach!”

“Now those are three words that I love!” Danny’s voice bellowed. “Spartans! Prepare to deploy!”

The interior of the TYPE TWO had been stripped of nearly everything that gave any kind of comfort and since only two dragons had accompanied them on this trip, nearly four hundred Durcunusaan had crammed into the rear of the TYPE TWO, well over the normal one hundred and thirty that the ship could comfortably carry. Aurith would act as close rear guard for the TYPE TWO with Bella and Cirith while it was on the ground in case anyone got too curious. Anja would lead Dysea, Lylor, Ranol, Duewa, Thoti and the others into the underground facility to retrieve Kelia and Ranol’s sons. For'mya and the others heard the near deafening shouts of the Durcunusaan when Danny gave them their command and For'mya turned her head as Reva and Bella made their way into the cockpit.

Reva's eyes were wide in wonder. She had seen such loyalty and commitment when she occupied the sphere, many times through the millennia, but to truly see it and smell it and feel it all around her now, it was almost overwhelming.

Bella gripped Reva's arms as she held to her tightly. "Such... such passion Bella!" Reva gasped aloud looking at her. "I... I saw it while in the sphere but never have I... never have I felt it like it is now!"

Isabella smiled and held her tightly. "They are Spartans! They refuse to fail!" She spoke. "You will get used to it!"

"Activating lasers!" Tina barked out.

BACKGROUND MUSIC

TWO STEPS FROM HELL: CHILDREN OF THE SUN

KOLTAR FOUR

TWO HUNDRED KILOMETERS NORTH OF THE CAPITAL CITY OF LEPIRI

IAALDO ENGINEER COMPOUND

"...Have not been able to raise RENDITION Station sir!" The Colonel spoke as he walked beside Fomir Arhtai. The landing pad was behind them a hundred meters and Fomir Arhtai had brought his best men with him. Two dozen of the best trained and meanest members of his personal detachment of men. All utterly loyal to him and his father and their family. "Even your brother's personal COM signal is being jammed."

Fomir Arhtai nodded as he walked quickly. "I have lost contact with my father and mother as well." He told the man. "Something is jamming their signals from the capital."

"Sir, we heard briefly, before the signal was jammed, that ships had appeared in orbit and that RENDITION station had been boarded." The Colonel said. "Is this true?"

Fomir shook his head. "I don't know." He replied. "Like you, I am unable to reach my brother Banaz by COM." He stopped just as they were about to enter the command building. "Where are Ch'eldo and his engineers?" He demanded. "I requested that they be standing by here so that we can return quickly."

"I have a team moving to their location to collect them." The Colonel answered. "For some reason, they have moved everyone to the far end of the compound. Away from the main Gates and the garrison building."

"Why?" Fomir asked. "I thought most of their living areas were closer to the garrison and landing pad to make it easier for them to board the daily transports."

The Colonel nodded his head. "Yes, sir." He answered. "They only moved everyone in the last fifteen minutes. All your Uncle's family as well. They can be very efficient when they want to be."

"He is not my Uncle!" Fomir hissed loudly. "He is a traitor to his own Pack and he fornicates openly with a corrupted bloodline. Why my father ever let him live is beyond me, and to keep that Mahanlo upaee alive as well is almost too much!" He shook his head in disgust before turning to a younger Lycavorian. "Take the men and collect Ch'eldo and the others." He told him. "If they resist, followed my father's orders. Start with his wife and then his children until he complies!"

The Lycavorian nodded his head. "Understood sir."

Fomir and the Colonel watched as the two dozen men moved off quickly. Fomir looked at the Colonel. "Take me to your Command Center. We need to find out what is going on!"

"This way." The Colonel spoke as he led him inside the building.

"How many in your garrison?" Fomir asked.

"Six hundred total Lord Arhtai, but only four hundred and fifty are on duty at any one time." The Colonel answered. "I have it broken into four rotations to keep my men from becoming too comfortable. The fourth rotation is the one where my men return to the capital or their homes to see their families and have down time."

"Three weeks active, one off?" Fomir asked.

"Yes, sir!" The Colonel answered as they moved to the open-air elevator and stepped onto the lift.

It was a twenty second ride up the four floors to the Command Center level and the Colonel pressed a card to the console on the wall and the double doors slid open easily enough. Inside activity was great and even the Colonel seemed surprised at what was happening.

“Report!” He bellowed.

“Colonel, we have three unidentified individuals outside the main gate!” A male voice barked out.

“They have... they have...”

“Spit it out man!” The Colonel shouted.

“Colonel they have Sinuovas with them!” The man answered.

“Put it up on the main screen!” The Colonel ordered harshly. “Quickly man!”

The single large monitor was suspended from the ceiling and took up a good part of the wall to the front. On either side of the monitor were large windows that overlooked the outside of the compound.

“Carians!” The Colonel muttered as his eyes took in the three individuals standing almost nonchalantly, three massive dragon beasts behind them.

“That’s not possible!” Fomir gasped aloud. “My parents... they said the sinuovas died out after leaving Cerath.”

“Zoom in!” The Colonel barked.

A young wolf adjusted the controls in front of him and everyone watched as the image tightened on the three figures and the three dragons that rested on the ground behind them. One was obviously female given how the armor conformed to her lithe figure, the other two well built males to be sure.

“Lon coi ter sulo!” A singular male voice spoke in the Command Center and it clapped almost like thunder as silent as the Command Center had become. (That is not possible)

“What?!” The Colonel screamed.

“Henes... henes mien vada arwa rie vada Tarivuos.” The young Alpha spoke turning to look at his commander. “Vada Tarivuos rie vada Mard Revik!” (They wear the armor of the Heralds. The Heralds of the True King.)

“The Armor of the Heralds is a myth!” Fomir barked. “It doesn’t exist!”

“It does exist!” The young Alpha hissed. “I saw pictures of it in the archives when I was growing! The Onab built it, but it was lost before the Exodus from Cerath. No one could ever find it!”

“Enough!” The Colonel barked. Mancha knew that Fomir Arhtai was quick to anger and could be very brutal in his actions. He did not want any of his men to have to deal with that. “Close in on their faces!” Mancha ordered. “Especially that big nubous ronnus in the center! Do it now!”

Everyone watched as the camera made several more adjustments and then it was focused on the face of the helmeted young man. None of them had ever seen a helmet such as the one he wore, armored portions extending down both cheeks and a single armor strip over the bridge of his nose. The multicolored plume rose from the top of the helmet and extended down over his shoulders and down his back. There were two armored slits for his eyes, azure colored blue eyes that were amazing to look at and it appeared as if, even though they were changed to wolf eyes, they appeared to be that same blue color all throughout the cornea and surrounding area. As the cameras had tightened, they noticed that this was the case for all of three of them. The blue color of their eyes, while different for each of them, extended throughout their entire cornea and pupil area. It was something that none of them had ever seen before.

It was also then that they saw those azure colored eyes focus directly at the camera and even Mancha took a startled breath as he saw the figure speaking and the thick, dual wolf fangs became especially prominent.

“Sibfla!” He gasped aloud.

Heads came up as the internal COM speakers clicked twice and then the deep, male voice echoed in the room.

“My name is Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas. I am the ninth generation, direct descendant of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. I am the First of Three Heralds of my father, the True King of our people. Behind these walls you hold Revia Mahanlo-Arhtai, youngest daughter to my Tenna Kelia Mahanlo and my Tenne Lylor Kirek. You hold pure Mahanlo blood against their will, and this is something I will not allow. Behind these walls you hold what remains of the Onab people as slaves and this is also something I will not allow. As Orwara Indalfrid of our people and Fera Tarivu to my father, I will give you one chance to end this now with no bloodshed. I do not wish to kill my own people, but the oppression of the Arhtai Pack cannot be allowed to persist. This will be your only warning. If you fight me, you will die. Respond to this transmission at once.

IAALDO ENGINEER COMPOUND MAIN GATE

“...Extensive minefield to this side fervon. You were right.” Dorian spoke as his keen eyes swept across the ground all around them.

“I have the same here as well.” Laren spoke.

We appear to have landed on the main access road Andro. Lucky for us. Elynth spoke now. We are also detecting mines all around us. Ivore gave us excellent information. Who would do such a thing?

Andro lifted his head slightly and stared at the Command Center on top of the wall to his left. “They are watching us.” He said calmly.

“Andro... Armen reports that a transport ship landed just before we moved into location.” Sadi’s voice echoed in his COM implant as it did in everyone else’s. “A single intercepted transmission from the ship to the station indicates that it is carrying Fomir Arhtai. Nystai was able to pull it off the military grid before your mother shut the station down. He is the oldest son of Nyser and Yelma Arhtai and according to Nystai, he is the enforcer and...”

“I understand.” Andro spoke not letting her finish. “I can sense his resonance now KertaGai. He was coming here to hurt the Onab and whoever got in his way. Orders of some kind from his father.”

“Then make sure he fails duan enyla.” Sadi answered him matter-of-factly. (Our Love)

“Brendi... can you tap into their local COM channel?” Andro asked.

“Andro... please!” Brendi’s voice responded as if she was insulted. Since it was an open COM channel, everyone heard Eliani and Jomann chuckle softly on the channel. A few more seconds passed and then Brendi spoke again. “Done!”

Andro lifted his eyes once more, focusing on the Command Center windows which were tinted so he could not see inside them. It didn’t matter as far as he was concerned.

“My name is Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas.” He began speaking into his helmet COM. “I am the ninth generation, direct descendant of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. I am the First of Three Heralds of my father, the True King of our people. Behind these walls you hold Revia Mahanlo-Arhtai, youngest daughter to my Tenna Kelia Mahanlo and my Tenne Lylor Kirek. You hold pure Mahanlo blood against their will, and this is something I will not allow. Behind these walls you hold what remains of the Onab people as slaves and this is also something I will not allow. As Orwara Indalfrid of our people and Fera Tarivu to my father, I will give you one chance to end this now, with no bloodshed. I do not wish to kill my own people, but the vile and sick oppression of the Arhtai Pack will not be allowed to persist any longer. This will be your only warning. If you fight me, you will die. Respond to this transmission at once.”

Andro tilted his head slightly and looked at Dorian beside him. “Nice speech, fervon.” Dorian said. “You know it won’t matter.”

“I know...” Androcles said in reply. “I had to try though.”

“ABOVE US!” Laren’s voice screamed out even as she commanded the Herald armor to fully deploy, the cowl wrapping around her head.

Andro looked up just as one of the wall mounted missile launchers twisted around and swung in their direction. His azure eyes watched as two missiles left the launcher and he could almost imagine where they were both pointed. In that split second Andro pulsed his father within the Etheric realm and instantly felt his response.

Hold nothing back keto! Nothing!

Andro dropped to one knee as his Onkmeti Naomi armor finished deploying and his wings engulfed his body. He heard Sadi and other voices screaming over the COM before the missiles struck and then there was no more sound.

IAALDO ENGINEER COMPOUND COMMAND CENTER

“My name is Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas.” The voice echoed within the Command Center. “I am the ninth generation, direct descendant of Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo. I am the First of Three Heralds of my father, the True King of our people. Behind these walls you hold Revia Mahanlo-Arhtai, youngest daughter to my Tenna Kelia Mahanlo and my Tenne Lylor Kirek. You hold pure Mahanlo blood against their will, and this is something I will not allow. Behind these walls you hold what remains of the Onab people as slaves and this is also something I will not allow. As Orwara Indalfrid of our people and Fera Tarivu to my father, I will give you one chance to end this now, with no bloodshed. I do not wish to kill my own people, but the vile and sick oppression of the Arhtai Pack will not be allowed to persist any longer. This will be your only warning. If you fight me, you will die. Respond to this transmission at once.”

“Mahanlo Blood!” Mancha hissed. “That is not... it isn’t possible. They all died during the Dremsa rie Saan!”

“Prepare to fire missiles!” Fomir barked out shocking everyone out of their confusion. “Two missiles! Anti-personnel! Directly on top of them!”

“They are within danger range of the main gate sir!” A voice yelled out.

“Two missiles damn it!” Fomir screamed once more. “Fire them now!”

Mancha stepped closer to Fomir. “Is it true?” He snarled. “Could he... could he be Mahanlo blood!?”

Fomir turned his head and looked at him. “It doesn’t matter!” Fomir barked right back. “In three seconds, he will be dead!”

“Missiles away!” A voice barked out.

“NO!” Mancha screamed as he turned.

Androcles our love! Carisia screamed out within the Etheric realm from Anthar’s back even as Sadi, Ne’Veha, Lu’ria, Sehri and Caliria’s voices joined her own in desperation. She was circling the area with Lisisa and Jeth and the others a half mile back and they had seen it all take place.

The two explosions were not very large, the missiles being of the anti-personnel kind and filled with much smaller bomblets as opposed to large explosive charges. They did, however, cover a sizeable part of the area on both sides of the access road and the entire part was now blanketed with thick, white and brown smoke as the first hundred yards all around Androcles, Dorian and Laren blew apart. The Onab must have known, or had an idea from the beginning of what their King and his Heralds would face in the future and they had built the Onkmeti Naami armor accordingly.

Androcles could hear nothing over the devastating course of explosions from the two missiles and then the several hundred mines that exploded all around them. His wings were wrapped tightly around his body and they were deflecting everything, but the noise was almost too much to bear as it echoed like a thunderstorm inside of a metal building. He could easily feel Elynth and Dorian and Laren all around him, Ryner and Ladur as well as they remained in place. They were facing exactly what he was, but except for Elynth, their hearts were racing almost out of control in both fear and excitement. He and Elynth had faced such a thing in the past and they easily reached for each of them, projecting calm and resolve and Andro felt their hearts begin to slow and become steady. His own ears may have been ringing something fierce, but his Etheric abilities were untouched and he was able to keep his wits about himself. The anti-personnel missiles and mines were powerful yes, but they were not exceptionally large explosions and therefore the concussive force of the multiple of shockwaves was manageable and absorbed by his wings and his armor.

And then Androcles became angry.

PREMONITION

His wives and mates were the first to feel it within him. Sadi, Carisia, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria, Caliria and Sehri were the center of his universe, just as his mothers were to his father. It was like this for all his siblings, their wives and mates were their center, and therefore would feel any intense emotion before others.

It hit all of them at the exact same instant and it made them gasp briefly in terror at what they felt their beloved Androcles was about to unleash. It was Sadi Mahanlo-Leonidas who took command however, once more displaying the skills that had so many of their people comparing her to Gorgo during her days as Queen of Sparta. Carisia's scream was a natural reaction, but all of them recovered instantly when they felt their beloved Androcles pulsing them. Sadi only had to glance at Ne'Veha once and she began to bark orders.

"Carisia! Lisisa! Change of plans! Leave the Command Center and support Deni and Lu'ria as they hit the missile batteries! Once they are destroyed, all of you hit the garrison on ground level!" Sadi barked. "Eli... you and Sehri roll in right now!"

"Sadi the Command center is still active!" Eliani declared over the COM. "They can target us!"

"The Command Center will not exist in ten seconds Eli!" Sadi answered her. "Androcles will take care of that! Trust in your brother Eliani."

Eliani Leonidas didn't hesitate for even a millisecond. "Innyne!" She barked out. "We're rolling in now!"

"Tenna Revia and Tenne Ivore are even now ushering everyone to the main courtyard within the compound! I can feel their urgency!" Sadi exclaimed to everyone. "Eli... you and Sehri must visually target our contact points for the shield stanchions or it will not work!"

"We're on it!" Eliani answered.

Sadi looked at Ne'Veha. "Onab Flight this is Lead! We are moving in thirty seconds! Jomann, Kalis, Daio, prepare to engage as soon as we touch down outside the main gate!"

"Sadi... the minefield!" Jomann barked from the rear.

"There will be no minefield in ten seconds Jomann!" Sadi hissed with some vehemence in her voice. Jomann took it for what it was, for he felt it burning within him as well.

Anger. Pure, unrefined anger.

"Dorian and Laren will see to that!"

Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas was truly his father's son.

Despite his reputation to the contrary, some of which was deservedly earned, Androcles had far more compassion and understanding within himself than most people knew. Like his father, he could tolerate quite a bit before his emotions took over, and he let loose. He had given them the warning. He had told them what would happen if they did not listen to him. What did they expect him to do, leave his blood within the walls of this prison and do nothing? Now, they had done the one thing that hardened Andro to what he must do.

And Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas would not hesitate.

As the last of the explosions echoed into nothing, Andro rose to his feet slowly, his wings dropping only slightly, exposing his azure eyes. He could not see through the clouds of dust and smoke, but the breeze from the west was pushing the clouds away quickly. He waited patiently, sensing Dorian and Laren on either side of him rising to their feet now as well, but keeping their wings tightly around their bodies. Elynth, Ryner and Ladur had also risen to their feet, their armor covered in dust and dirt but they were unharmed. As the clouds of dust and dirt all around them began to disperse quickly, Androcles heard the rustle of wings at altitude and lifted his head to where the Command Center was. He could see Denali and Lu'ria about to descend onto the missile batteries, Lisisa and Carisia ready to aid them. He could feel those in the Command Center watching him from behind their shielded glass. Andro could sense this Fomir person even more clearly now, filled with anger that was not his; hatred that did not belong to him, yet those false emotions would be his ruin.

"Nubou lae!" Dorian snarled angrily as he unfurled his wings, trembling in rage. "Now... now I am really pissed!"

"As am I." Androcles added.

"I concur!" Laren growled, equally as angry and her hand clenching her Nehtes. Her wings were fully extended and twitching in the manner of a dragon that was extremely agitated and upset.

Androcles had never heard such emotion from his Soul Sister before and it only seemed to reinforce what needed to be done.

“Dori, Laren, make this pitiful minefield go away!” Andro told them turning his head to look at each of them. “And then unlock the cage that holds our nathos so that we may take them from this place!”

“Aden!” Dorian and Laren answered as one. (Done)

Androcles turned back to lift his head at the Command Center. “Sister?”

“Let us end this Androcles!” Elynth snarled. “Now!”

Andro didn’t look away from the Command Center as he unfurled his wings and spread them wide to either side of his body. Andro bent his knees slightly and then exploded off the ground as if shot from a gun, Elynth directly behind him. As his huge wings carried him away, almost faster than the eye could follow, Dorian and Laren spun their Nehtes in the air above their heads with powerful emotion and exacting control. In a single motion, they brought those Nehtes down into the ground and sent an Etheric explosion in either direction away from the access road.

It easily served the purpose that they had intended.

The minefield extended for a full kilometer away from the access road, up to the main gate on either side, and it was fully half a kilometer deep. It had taken nearly two months to lay the minefield with the precision it had been laid in. Interconnecting mines and levels that made it impossible to even try to get through the field. Pressure mines; proximity mines, every kind of mine known to exist was used. One mine going off would not set off the others around it except for instance like the one that just occurred with the missiles. It was a masterful accomplishment really.

Dorian and Laren made it look like child’s play as they took it down.

And then, the doors to hell opened wide.

IAALDO ENGINEER COMPOUND COMMAND CENTER

“What have you done!” Mancha screamed as he moved forward and shoved Fomir away from the control console.

“I acted decisively!” Fomir snarled back.

“You attacked Mahanlo blood!” Mancha barked right back. “Royal blood! We were told everyone with Mahanlo blood died on the Dremsa rie Saan! Is what he said true?” Mancha growled as his men were now all looking at him. “Do we hold Kelia Mahanlo prisoner? Is she alive?”

“I don’t know and I don’t care!” Fomir spat. “Mahanlo blood is traitor blood! My mother and father lead our people now!”

“Your mother and father cannot just dismiss royal blood!” Mancha barked. “That is what our people chose!”

“You were alive during the Dremsa rie Saan!” Fomir barked. “Why do you care about them? They are traitors!”

“Colonel Mancha!” The voice shouted over the top of all of them and Mancha turned to look at his junior officer with wide, angry eyes.

“What?” He screamed.

The young man looked at his instruments and then at the wide glass like window. “The missiles... they didn’t kill them.” He spoke.

“Impossible!” Fomir snarled as he pushed forward and shoved the man aside and looked out of the window down at the access road. His eyes grew wide when he saw the armored forms rising to their feet and their wings unfurling. And then Fomir saw six more dragons set against the rising sun, all of them with riders on their backs and all of them heading right for the very compound they were in. “They... they still live!” Fomir gasped in disbelief.

“You don’t just arbitrarily kill Mahanlo blood fool boy!” Mancha growled savagely as he moved forward and shoved him back once more. “Have you never read history!” Mancha’s eyes grew wide when he saw the armored figure in the center completely unfurl those magical wings and then he exploded into the air right for them. Mancha turned to look at Fomir's disbelieving and terrified face now.

"You have killed us boy!" He snarled loudly. "You have killed us all with your fool actions!"

Fomir was watching with wide eyes as the armored figure hurtled through the huge glass window, shattering the material into tiny pieces and ripping gaping sections of concrete and granite aside as the wings and armored form came directly through where no man had ever been designed to come through. Fomir ducked as large pieces of glass and concrete whistled by his head, nearly removing it from his shoulders, before he lowered his posture enough to protect himself. Fomir Arhtai had time to blink only once before the armored boot smashed, with the disgusting sound of breaking bones, directly into Colonel Mancha's chest. The power of the blow sent his large, six-foot three-inch body careening across the Command Center with such force that his frame smashed through the wall and glass of the other side of the Center and was launched into the clear air within the exposed interior of the Compound. The many bones in his body could be heard shattering as they impacted the granite interior wall and glass, paused for a brief moment as the kinetic force of the Etheric kick caught up with his body and then used his physical body for something it was never designed for. It pulverized granite, glass and concrete and then was gone from sight through the huge hole it had just created.

Fomir turned just in time to see that face under the helmet and the savage snarl of rage combined with the look of utter contempt in those azure eyes. He could see the ferocious dual fangs that were now exposed for all to see, fully barred as they were in the vicious and cruel snarl. Time seemed to stand still for Fomir Arhtai as the rest of the Command Center crew began to draw out their hand weapons and fire at the armored figure. For some odd reason that his mind would not be able to contemplate in the remaining seconds of his life, Fomir Arhtai could not figure out why this was happening. His eyes grew wide when the figure lifted his hand, and it held an oddly shaped bladed weapon of some kind. Fomir could only watch as he casually flipped it off to the side and behind him and then the screaming began.

Fomir's wide eyes shifted only slightly when the entire corner wall and ceiling of the Command Center by the entrance was ripped from its place by the angry sinuova and bright light from the rising sun came rushing in. He heard the savage trumpet of hatred and then he watched in horror as the upper body, head and neck of the armored, obsidian colored sinuova smashed its way into the interior. One front leg simply crushed a technician under its weight for he was too slow to get out of the way and its talons stabbed completely through the man's body, and then the head snapped forward and another technician disappeared into that vicious maw of razor like teeth and those jaws bit him completely in half.

Fomir Arhtai looked back at those azure blue eyes and took notice that they were now focused on him. He began to back peddle rapidly, clawing his sidearm out of the holster he wore and leveling it at the wild looking beast in front of him and pulling the trigger. Fomir Arhtai had no idea that it would not matter in the least.

Elynth let out another trumpet of rage as the pieces of the body fell away from her mouth and she covered two others with the blood and bits of fleshy remains as she exhaled. She had not really known her own strength until now, as she saw her beloved Bonded Brother Androcles plow right through the glass and concrete and into the interior and she landed on the outside. She had dug her talons into the crevices she saw in the building material and in an act of strength that would have made her father and brother Jeth so very proud of her, Elynth simply tore away the entire corner of the Command Center, opening it to the cool morning air.

Elynth lifted her head then and saw Androcles and her golden eyes shone with love and admiration. He was moving with a speed, power and grace that even she had never seen from him, his body and wings moving in perfect unison. She and Androcles had long ago embraced what they were, and now it was coming out for them both. Sweeping her right talon forward, Elynth caught three technicians and several computer stations and their screams were pleasing to her ears as she swept them aside, smashing even more of the exterior wall to the Command Center outward and sending those men and their equipment falling to the ground far below, where the large computers and huge chunks of concrete and granite went ahead and crushed them to death.

A huge explosion drew her attention and she pulled her head and upper body from the interior of the Command Center only to see the flames and smoke from where the Missile Launchers had been. She could see her brother Jeth and her sister Aradace making short work of the physical launchers while Majeir and Elynth's own beautiful mate Anthar tore up the computer systems along the top of the wall. Denali, Carisia, Lu'ria and Lisisa were physically destroying every piece of equipment on top of the wall. In a flash of swiftness, she saw Tharua and Marux sail over the top of the wall at high speed and then dip down into the interior of the compound. Elynth didn't hesitate and lowered her head back down and shoved her upper body into the interior of the Command Center.

"Andro, the missile systems are down! Eli and Sehri are inside and marking for the shield!" She screamed out.

"They will be deploying from the garrison below us, sister!" Androcles shouted back as he caught one of his Glaives in his armored hand without looking at her and then turned to face her. Almost on cue, Elynth could hear the alarm beginning to sound below them. "Keep them from the shield stanchions Elynth! Burn them all if you have too! I will join you in a moment!"

Elynth didn't hesitate and pulled her bulk back and then her body was lifting off the top of the wall and diving into the interior of the compound with a trumpet of direction to those who were listening. Elynth did not fear for the well being of her Bonded Brother, she feared for those left alive in the Command Center, for their ends would not be pleasant.

Androcles barely felt it when he exploded directly through the glass and concrete that made up the wall of the Command Center. The Onkmeti Naami had been built to protect them from the Iais'Kai and their weapons, not the glass and concrete of a building. Even as his wings spread out completely, slicing through the frame of computer stations and computers, Androcles struck the thickly muscled Lycavorian directly in the center of his chest with the front kick. The devastating kick sent the man careening out of control, crushing his bones and internal organs as he smashed through the opposite wall of the Command Center and then disappeared. Almost as if by magic, and knowing full protection was not needed, the cowl of the Onkmeti Naami retracted, leaving just his Spartan helmet showing, which revealed a small part of his features. Andro glanced briefly at the young wolf in front of him before he began to register the impacts of projectiles against his armor. Andro reached down with his right hand, activated his right Glaive and waited for it to fully deploy before throwing it back behind him. He did not register the screams in his mind or the destruction of the exterior wall where Elynth practically ripped it open. He heard her roar of rage, felt her as she reached into the Command Center and swept aside five bodies, but Andro's eyes never wavered. His Glaive was whipping around the interior of the Center slicing deeply through hands and necks as his eyes returned to the young wolf in front of him. His mind flashed quickly through the dossier of Arhtai Pack members that Kesas and Aryera Kirek had provided to him and then Androcles knew who he was facing. He reached out with his hand and caught the Glaive and Elynth screamed to him from across the small distance.

"Andro, the missiles are down! Eli and Sehri are inside and marking for the shield!" She screamed out.

"They will be deploying from the garrison below us, sister!" Androcles shouted back as he turned to face her. Andro could now hear an alarm blaring from far below and knew what was happening. "Keep them from the shield stanchions Elynth! Burn them all if you have too! I will join you in a moment!"

Andro didn't need to watch his Bonded Sister pull back out of the shattered remains of the Command Center and he turned his eyes back to Fomir Arhtai. He briefly saw the hand weapon in his right hand and he was frantically trying to reload. Andro reacted far faster than Fomir Arhtai could have predicted. The Glaive flashed forward and Fomir felt a biting pain in his wrist and then agony as his brain told him that he no longer had a hand. He began to scream as Andro reached out with his left hand and snatched him up by the throat as his now severed hand and weapon hit the floor with a sickly thud. His scream of horrifying pain was cut off as Andro hauled his powerful body off the floor of the Command Center as easily as one would lift a new born child.

Fomir saw those wings extend to the sides of the monster before him as if they had a mind of their own. He was clawing at the hand that held his throat with the only hand he had remaining, the stump of his wrist continuing to expel blood at an explosive rate, hanging useless by his side.

“I first asked politely for the freedom of my nathos and the Onab.” Androcles growled savagely as he drew Fomir Arhtai’s body closer to him, staring into his face. “You chose to attack me. Your parents have killed you Fomir Arhtai, I am only the instrument of their stupid actions.” Fomir’s eyes were beginning to bug out of his eyes as Androcles’ hand tightened on his throat. “They knew Mahanlo blood would return. Deep within their hearts they knew we would come for our family one day. That day is now upon you. Had you simply given my nathos to me, you would have survived this day. Now, now you will suffer the same fate of every member of your pack that has taken Mahanlo blood. Your father and mother will join you in jobbhe very soon Fomir Arhtai. They have succeeded in unleashing the one force in this universe that should have stayed locked away forever. Now... now they will answer to my father for their crimes.”

Androcles stepped to the side and lifted Fomir’s body slightly higher into the air. “Krius forn voss tis jobbhe el vada Mahanlo ens terit nathos kirs unuris.” (May you rot in hell for the Mahanlo lives your family has stolen)

Androcles pushed back and Fomir Arhtai’s eyes grew even wider in pain as he felt the sliver of steel penetrate his back. It was part of one of the destroyed computer stations that Colonel Mancha’s body had wrecked and the protrusion of metal now served as his executioner. He could not do anything but whimper because of Androcles’ hand on his throat, but his eyes were wide in terrific agony as the sliver of metal finally burst through his chest and he watched as it came out soaked in his blood. His blood began to flow explosively from the wound and even after Andro had removed his hand from his throat, Fomir could not even scream because the pain was so severe.

Androcles stared at Fomir’s face as he was dying. “As my father’s words spoke to your parents, I speak to you now in your death. Hope is a moment for you that is now long past Fomir Arhtai.” Andro spoke evenly. “Know that you die today for the greed and the power mongering of your mother and father. I hope it was worth it to you.”

With a howl of rage that echoed within the confines of the now shattered Command Center, and with five surviving pairs of eyes watching in utter shock and horror, Androcles drove his armored fist down onto Fomir Arhtai’s upper body, driving the sliver of metal even deeper into his back and severing his spine in three spots as blood exploded from between his lips and his eyes glazed over in death.

Androcles immediately turned and looked at the survivors, all of them without weapons and by no means a danger to him or anyone. He stepped to the gaping opening that Elynth had left in the side wall and his wings extended fully.

“Remain out of the way and you will not be harmed.” Androcles told them. “Fight us and you will die. It is your choice.”

Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas leaped from the opening and disappeared.

Dorian watched with fascination as his Etheric pulse into the hard dirt set off every mine in the ground all around them. He watched with satisfaction as the minefield began to detonate by row, each one deeper than the first and spreading out to encompass the whole field. He turned his head quickly and saw the same thing on Laren’s side, a cloud of exploding dirt and white cloud moving away from her. Their Herald Armor protected them from any pieces of mine that may have found them, several ricochets taking place, until the minefield was too far away from them and still being detonated.

Dorian turned to face the now exposed wall. He could just make out his siblings on top of the wall tearing through the missile batteries and Androcles inside the Command Center. His eyes gazed upon the wall for a long moment and then he looked at Laren.

“Androcles did say to unlock the cage that holds our nathos, my Soul Sister” Dorian said with a dazzling smile.

Laren met his eyes and nodded. “Then let us do that my Soul Brother.” She said quite confidently.

Dorian and Laren reached out with their hands together and the fingers of their Etheric power intertwined and grew together within the Etheric realm. Individually they were not as powerful as Androcles, but together they very nearly matched their soul brother in sheer will and power. They put that to effective use now.

The main gate into the compound was one meter shorter than the wall surrounding it, and made up of two massive steel doors each half a meter thick. It really would not have mattered in the least no matter how thick they were. Dorian and Laren simply grabbed one massive door within the grips of their Etheric power, wrapped their power around themselves as Sarlana and Murano had instructed them, and then simply tore the door from its steel moorings. The sounds of tearing metal and steel was deafening but Dorian and Laren did not pause and they sent the massive steel door hurtling into the cloud of dirt and smoke to the side and then they stood there and looked at the huge gaping entrance they had just created. The second door was twisted and leaning slightly to the outside but essentially it was now jammed open.

“It was sloppy!” Laren protested.

“Yeah...” Dorian agreed. “But whatever works, right?” Dorian hissed happily.

Laren turned her head and smiled up at his armored face. “Indeed.” Laren looked up to the top of the wall and saw Lisisa and Carisia looking down on them with huge smiles, several trails of smoke rising behind them. Then they saw Denali and Lu'ria step up to the edge and Denali sent them some thumbs up with his trademark smile.

Dorian smiled, tapped his helmet and activated his COM unit.

“Sadi! We have breached the wall!” Dorian told her.

“How large an opening Dorian?” Sadi shouted back over the COM.

Dorian looked at Laren briefly and then back to where the huge door had once stood. “Ah... pretty big!”

“And the minefield?”

Laren touched her own COM implant now. “The minefield is no more Sadi.”

“Very well!” Sadi spoke once more. “Rotating and setting down! Join Andro inside the compound! Eliani and Sehri are just about to mark the corners!”

“On our way!” Dorian barked and then grabbed Laren’s hand and lifted her into his arms before blurring toward the opening they had just created.

“I have two corners Eli!” Sehri barked into her COM unit from Marux’s back as he kept them level with wide, sweeping motions of his wings.

“I have the other two!” Eliani announced in almost the same position as Sehri from far across the compound. “Sadi... we have the points lit! Fire now! They are beginning to exit the garrison and they don’t look happy!”

“Firing!” Sadi replied instantly.

Ivore was gripping Revia’s hand tightly as they moved, her other arm filled with one of their grandchildren. All their children and grandchildren were moving along behind them, each of them surrounding the nearly two thousand Onab that were moving with them. All their lives they had been raised and taught by their parents to treasure and protect the Onab and while Ch'eldo did not care for this mentality, not one of Revia and Ivore’s children would ever go against their parents. They had come too far together to begin to question their place now. While many of them still did not know what was happening, they didn’t question their parents when told they needed to get themselves and the Onab to the courtyard.

Revia almost slammed into her husband when he skidded to a halt and looked into the distance as the echo of four deep booms drifted across the morning horizon.

“Ivore!?” Revia gasped. “What is it my love!?”

Ivore shook his head. “I... I don’t know! I’ve never heard something like it before. It sounded like... like artillery of some kind, but no artillery that I have ever heard.”

Ch'eldo and Ra'tel came up beside Ivore now.

“Lord Ivore we must move!” Ra'tel hissed. “We are in the open here and they will start bombing us!”

Ivore shook his head. “This is where Androcles told us to gather! Here in the courtyard!”

“In the open?” Ra'tel gasped. “That is insane! We must move!”

“He sent us here for a reason!” Revia snapped now. “We...!!”

All of them heard the heavy thud only a hundred meters away and it turned their heads. They saw the huge, cylindrical black object spinning itself into the ground at the northeast corner of the courtyard. Another heavy thud and an identical black object landed between the many planters at the northwest corner. Two more, in the southwest and southeast corners. The black objects were all spinning as they sank into the ground beneath them, pulverizing the granite walkways and thousand-year-old paths into oblivion.

And then they heard it once more.

Like the hum of a powerful generator activating, and their eyes grew wide in disbelief as from all four of the stanchions, a bluish/white shield rose into existence and began to spread out above them.

“Son vada carians!” Ivore muttered in genuine disbelief.

The sound of tearing steel and shattering concrete reached them just in time for them to see one side of the double doors of the main gate ripped away as if by some angry god and the massive door went whistling into the distance and out of sight.

“My god!” Ra'tel gasped aloud.

“A shield of some sort! I can smell the energy!” Ch'eldo shouted as his covered eyes rose and he seemed to watch the bluish/white shield complete its deployment above them. “A protective shield! That is why he wanted us all here in the open!”

“Look!” Ra'tel shouted as he pointed his finger to the top of the wall in the distance. “Sinuovas! At least five of them!” He was also the first to see the inert body only a few dozen meters away. It was nearly hidden in the planters that held the beautiful purple and white flowers. “Lord Ivore!” He gasped.

Ivore saw where he was pointing and immediately moved to where the body was, Ra'tel leading his father and Revia over behind him. Ivore knelt beside the body, taking note of the blood all around it and the twisted way that the body was laying on the ground. His eyes turned to look at the top of the wall where the Command center once stood and then back to the man's body.

“It is Mancha.” Ivore spoke as he reached out and turned the body over onto its back.

Revia turned her head away in horror and hid the face of her granddaughter from the broken remains of the powerful man who once commanded this facility. She felt no remorse for him or what he had been part of these long years, but that did not mean she had to view his fate. Ivore heard the sharp intake of air and looked down at the body.

“He's alive!” Ivore gasped as he bent closer to the body.

“Leave him my husband!” Revia spat without shame or remorse.

“How did... how did he get all the way out here?” Ra'tel asked softly. “He would have been in the Command Center.”

Ch'eldo gripped his son's arm tightly. “Androcles did this.” He said softly. “I can... I can almost feel what has happened! I can... I can see it. Fomir... Fomir Arhtai is dead!”

Revia cut her eyes to him. “That monster was here?” She gasped. “Why?”

“He was coming for me.” Ch'eldo spoke.

Ivore leaned his head closer to Mancha, listen for a second and then spoke several words in a whisper and then lifted his head quickly and rose to his feet. Ch'eldo looked at his back. “What did... what did he say Ivore?” He asked.

Ivore looked at him with a hardened face. “He asked... he asked for mercy.”

Ra'tel looked at him now. “What did you tell him?”

Ivore turned to his beautiful Revia and reached for her hand once more, which she took without hesitation. “I told him that today there will be no mercy. Mahanlo blood has returned, and they will not be denied their justice. Or their retribution.”

“Father!” The male voice shouted as the Lycavorian came running up. “Father!”

Ivore looked at his and Revia's oldest son. “Tinad? What...”

“Look!”

All of them turned to where he was pointing and they saw the two armored females as they entered the shield wall through the opening, with two very large sinuovas following them almost casually, their heads constantly moving back and forth. The red haired one lifted her hand once they were inside the shield and she drew something away from the bluish/white field and the opening then closed as quickly as it had opened.

Eliani and Sehri made their way slowly across the expanse of the shield cover and the ground it now protected. The Shield Cover had been designed by some very talented human engineers on EDEN Base about ten years ago. Using portable Cold Fusion power cores, a Cover Shield like this could protect a small encampment from even the harshest of environments on any known planet as well as orbital bombardments from light warships. This Cover Shield however, this shield was now powered by Pralor T9 Particle Cores thanks to Mari and it could withstand a full bombardment even by multiple capital ships. Eliani did not want to startle anyone by running across the area to her Aunt, Uncle and cousins so she and Sehri maintain a steady but confident gait towards where they were all gathered. The shield now stretched across an area two hundred meters by two hundred meters, almost the complete courtyard area of the compound. Revia quickly handed their granddaughter to Ivore as the Onab and their families began to part to allow Eliani and Sehri to move through their ranks. All of them were staring with awe at the two dragons, nearly all of them having only heard about sinuovas in stories and history books.

Revia Mahanlo-Arhtai did not need to know who they were, she could smell them as clearly as she looked at them now. It was raw and pure Mahanlo blood, so much like she remembered with her mother. It was slightly different because of who they were, but Revia already knew that and now she knew what the rest of her bloodline smelled like. In the brief moments that Androcles was connected to her and Ivore, he had told them all about his siblings and his wives and mates. Revia had tears flowing from her eyes when Eliani and Sehri stopped in front of her and it took Eliani by surprise when Revia was embracing her without question.

“Vada carians alinn lae, pen magar theenar allon jur cedaur chevsh.” (The gods bless me, I never believed this day would come.) Revia stammered unable to hold back the tears that were flowing. She released Eliani with both hands and quickly embraced Sehri who was also teary eyed. Revia couldn't really contain herself and she pulled back in her excitement, holding each of their hands. “Eliani!” She gasped in delight. “Sehri!”

“You... you know us?” Eliani asked in surprise.

Revia smiled and nodded her head. “Oh, yes.” She said with a fast nod. “Your brother, Androcles, he told us all about you. Each of you!”

Ivore stepped forward now, handing off his granddaughter to her uncle Tinad. “You are Eliani? The sister who watches out for him. Where is... where is your brother Eliani?” He questioned.

Eliani could only grin now and she glanced at Sehri who wore a huge smile before she turned and motioned outside the shield wall. “I do believe he is fixing to take out the trash.” She said.

“Sadi! We have breached the wall!” Dorian's voice filled her COM unit in the cockpit.

“How large an opening Dorian?” Sadi almost shouted back over the COM.

“Ah... pretty big!”

“And the minefield?” Sadi questioned.

“The minefield is no more Sadi.” Laren answered this time.

“Very well!” Sadi spoke once more. “Rotating and setting down! Join Andro inside the compound! Eliani and Sehri have marked the corners and the shield has deployed, but their garrison is deploying!”

“On our way!” Dorian barked.

Sadi didn't need to check that, she knew without question how all his siblings felt for their brother and they would allow nothing to stand in their way to get to him. Sadi looked quickly to Ne'Veha in the pilot's seat.

“SirsanGai?” She asked.

“Ready!”

Sadi didn't pause then. “Onab Flight this is lead! Rotate! Rotate!”

Ne'Veha slid her fingers along her consoles and the PREMONITION's bulk turned in a very fast and very powerful one-hundred-and-eighty-degree maneuver. Now the ship and the KADAN transports were facing away from the main gate, their powerful engines sending up storms of dust and dirt all around them.

“Here's hoping they got all the mines!” Ne'Veha spoke flippantly before she engaged her engines and the PREMONITION began to move backwards. If any mines had survived, the heavier armor on the PREMONITION would protected the ship and not exposed the KADENs to damage. The four ships moved backwards for an added two hundred meters and then Ne'Veha disengaged her engines. "In position!"

"Onab Flight is in position!" Sadi barked. "Onab Flight is in position! Setting down and preparing to take passengers!" Sadi looked at her lover and fellow Crown Princess. "SirsanGai, as gently as you can, our love."

"Touching down!" Ne'Veha answered without looking at Sadi, but she knew Sadi could see her smile.

"Meka!" Sadi barked.

"Engaging Defensive Systems!" Kameka spoke before Sadi could even get the full order out. "Sending the signal to SPARTA'S WRATH. Anything that enters our airspace now, I will track and kill it Sadi!"

"Kalis! Ridor! Daio! Go!" Sadi shouted. "Go!"

Sadi felt like she could almost hear the deafening shout that erupted from the rear of the PREMONITION and as she looked down onto her console she saw the monitor of the cargo bay. The mass of bodies was exiting the ship far too quickly to keep track of and as she twisted her head around almost painfully and directed her gaze to the right side of the ship she could see an equal number of Spartans rushing from the cargo hold of the KADEN beside them, and then from the KADEN directly in front of them.

Lycavorian, Elven and even some vampire Durcunusaan thrown into the mix and they were sprinting full out, with the members of the Kirek Pack right beside them, and going into battle without so much as a single doubt. Sadi Mahanlo-Leonidas did not fully understand the significance of this event because so much of their true history had not yet been discovered, but Reva Mahanlo would mark it as such however, as would Kesas Pengot, Lylor and every member of the Kirek Pack who had lived and fought in those days so long ago. It was the first time in nearly four million years that the Mahanlo and Kirek Packs had raced into battle side by side. Without doubt or question, they had forged ahead intent on their tasks.

And once more, they would do so again and keep the history of their Packs alive.

ONAB COMPOUND INTERIOR

Four hundred and fifty Arhtai soldiers stared across the ten-meter gap at the two hundred and sixty men and women who made up the Durcunusaan and the Kirek Pack members that had accompanied Androcles and his siblings. Not knowing what they would be facing, Androcles had released most of their ground troops to Deion in case they got into trouble in the bowels of the Capital City looking for Nystai and her people. Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas also knew full well what his siblings could do if it needed to happen and he was not concerned in the least giving his younger brother additional support. Ten fully grown dragons and their riders were an exceptionally formidable force all on their own, but these dragons and their riders were all part of the same family and they were far more dangerous than any others of their kind.

The cover shield was active behind these new soldiers and it was encompassing all the Onab and the Lycavorians that had been prisoners here. The shield was unlike anything any of them had ever seen before and the humming sound coming from the Shield Stanchions made many of them uneasy. Inside the shield they could also just make out the two female figures as well as two additional dragons standing behind Ivore and Revia Arhtai. The Lycavorians and the Onab inside the cover of the protective shield were all watching them, but not with any sort of urgency. Most of the Arhtai Security Forces knew who Revia was, but not her true bloodline and nature. Most thought she was a disgraced former member of the Kirek Pack and that is why Ivore Arhtai had almost killed his own brother to keep her alive. The ongoing joke was that she was an incredible female Alpha wolf between the sheets and Ivore Arhtai did not want to lose that. This was not the case as many of the Security Forces saw quickly through the years. There was something far different about the woman and even as many times as different soldiers had asked, no one had ever given a definitive answer as to who she truly was.

This information was now very much out in the open for all of them had seen the decree by Androcles just before Fomir Arhtai attacked them. Dozens of their comrades were now dead because of that and they had seen them die when Androcles and the huge dragon attacked the command center. None of the new soldiers before them looked particularly concerned that they were heavily outnumbered, but the Arhtai forces had not heard from Colonel Mancha or any of their senior officers in the Command Center either. A quick glance upwards toward the wall told the Arhtai troops all they needed to know really, as the missile batteries were burning and there were gaping holes in the sides of the Command Center where there shouldn't have been holes.

Androcles stood in front of them all, Denali on one side with Lisisa and Arduri on either side of him. Dorian, Laren, Lu'ria and Carisia were on the other side of Androcles, none of them holding any weapon now. Androcles, Dorian and Laren had allowed their wings to extend fully, but kept them relatively close to their bodies to use them as shields if needed. Everyone else with them was fully outfitted in Mark VII ArmorPly, white and crimson in color, and the very newest in design, having only just been distributed a month earlier. Kalis, Daio, Ridor and Cowan stood in front of the two hundred and sixty men and women, Caylt, Yasha, Marda and Taig right behind them and ready to lead the charge.

The Arhtai Pack soldier who was now senior among the forces present kept looking around when no one moved, but his eyes always returned to Androcles and the other two Heralds. His name was Aso Nyryn and he was the middle of six sons of his father and mother. The moment that his immediate family had grown large enough, Aso's father and his two uncles had asked for and received permission to break from the Arhtai Pack with half a dozen other young Alpha members of the Arhtai Pack. They had forged the Nyryn Pack, which was now, numbers wise, the second largest Pack to have broken from the Arhtai. Though they were treated the same as any Pack that had broken away, which was to say like second class individuals, Aso's father and uncles had remained loyal to the Arhtai Pack. Even after all they had been made to suffer, they never broke faith.

This day Aso would discover why that was.

Aso would know the Arwa rie vada Tarivuos anywhere. As with the Arwa rie vada Revik, any knowledge about them was forbidden to everyone who did not have the means to read forbidden data scrolls. His parents had the means and they made certain that he and all his siblings knew the history of their people right back to the very beginning on Cerath.

Aso Nyryn really had no clue as to what he was supposed to do.

He did not know what took place on the Dremsa Rie Saan. Only his father, uncles and aunts and mother knew what took place that night and they would never talk of it very much. They were on the far side of the planet when the butchering had begun and took no part in the crimes committed that night, but even to this day Aso could almost swear that it shamed them to even speak of it.

"You... you will surrender your weapons!" Aso finally blurted out the order when he saw no one else would take charge. "Lay down your weapons and you will... none of you will be harmed!"

"Seriously?" Denali spat aloud, his own dual fangs fully extended and so very prominent. "You didn't just ask us to surrender, did you?"

Those Durcunusaan and Kirek Pack members in the first few ranks behind where Denali stood could not help but laugh at his sarcastic comment and this caused many of the Arhtai Security Forces to snarl back in response, their hands tightening on their weapons.

Androcles focused his azure eyes on the young soldier as he stood there uncertain of what to do. "I have already made clear what is going to take place here." Androcles spoke now. "I will not repeat myself."

Andro watched another Lycavorian step closer to the first one. He was older by several hundred years given his scent, but he was also much more arrogant based on his body language as he shoved a different trooper aside to move up beside the one who was so far doing the talking.

"We outnumber them Aso!" He hissed. "What are we waiting for!"

"Outnumbering them didn't work so well for those in the Command Center! They are all dead Lerund! The missile batteries are destroyed and someone took one of the Gate doors and somehow snapped it completely off!" Aso snapped back at him. "They snapped off a hundred-ton Neutronium Steel door! Who can rip aside such a door?!"

Dorian lifted his hand now and motioned to Laren beside him. "Ah... that was us." He said matter-of-factly his dual fangs fully exposed, as were Laren's. "Sorry... next time we'll rip them both off so it doesn't look nubous silly."

Laren's wings lifted slightly and curled inward around her shoulders as she chuckled and this caused the front row of Arhtai soldiers to shift backwards somewhat, their weapons coming up slightly.

"They mock us!" Lerund snapped as he brought his weapon up higher and leveled it at Andro's head.

“SHIELDS!” Ridor’s voice screamed out the one-word command and within the beat of two heartbeats, two hundred and twenty-four Shi Viskas were deployed and now humming ominously in the cool morning air. Kalis had refused his Shi Viska because he had wanted to be awarded the Spartan Shield for his actions and not for his name, but that did not stop Daio and another Durcunusaan troop from stepping close to him and shielding his body as well as their own with their shields. This was done without thought for the three dozen Elves and Vampires who could not wear the Shields and if the shooting began, the Vampires would disappear into the shadows with their elven comrades and reappear to wreak havoc behind the enemy.

The deployment of the Shi Viskas took all the Arhtai troops by surprise, none of them having ever seen anything like it before. Even those standing in the line with the Heralds all had the strange shields on their arms now. Aso’s eyes were wide at what had just taken place and he sensed Lerund move closer to him.

“We must attack now!” Lerund almost yelled. “We have the advantage of numbers and...”

“Forn vesa un lozen vada Tarivuos rie vada Mard Revik!” Aso almost screamed. “Vada saan rie vada Mard Revik!?” (You wish to attack the Heralds of the True King!? The blood of the true King!?)

“We don’t know who they are!” Lerund barked. “Even if they are Mahanlo blood, they are traitors to our people! They...”

Lerund never got to finish his sentence as all those around him watched as his body suddenly was slammed viciously into the hard pack earth beneath his feet, guided by some unseen hand.

“...Must do something Eliani!” Ivore exclaimed. “They waver between the two men and they have numbers on their side!”

Eliani looked at her Tenne and smiled warmly. “Numbers don’t mean much when facing Spartans Uncle.” She spoke respectfully.

Sehri stepped closer to Revia and took her hand within her own as Revia met her gaze. “What are you... what are you thinking Tenna Revia?” Sehri asked her in that sweet, honey like voice.

Revia grasped Sehri’s hand with both of hers now, staring into Sehri’s eyes. “Something that Androcles said to us the other night. Something that has echoed within me ever since.”

Sehri smiled and squeezed her hands. “Then tell him Tenna Revia. You don’t need me to do that. Tell him.”

Revia turned quickly and looked at Androcles’ back on the other side of the huge Cover Shield. Androcles? She spoke openly, not really knowing how to shield her words. This caused nearly all heads outside the shield to turn and look at her.

Tenna? Andro answered her instantly.

Evellsey wen... evellsey wen vada Chanvor rie vada Saan Androcles. Vada Chanvor rie vada Saan.

Eliani looked at Ivore.

“It’s over now Tenne.” She said softly.

Ivore turned his head just in time to see Androcles lift his hand towards the one called Lerund and then it began.

Mercifully, the first impact with the ground killed Lerund, though none of the others knew that except Androcles. His head struck the hard-packed stone with such force it broke his neck in half a dozen spots. Androcles continued however, for he needed to make a point. Lifting his body up into the air he slammed Lerund three times into the ground with savage force as he stepped closer to Aso and the ranks of Arhtai soldiers. Additional bones could be heard openly snapping in the calm, quiet air all around them as they watched in horror. These young wolves were not stupid however, and most of them had been given the history of their people and what the Mahanlo bloodline meant. The history after Cerath had been twisted yes, but the history of the war with the Iais’Kai and what the Mahanlo bloodline had done during that time could never be truly erased.

Mahanlo blood was the purest of all Lycavorian blood to exist in the universe. There was no other stronger, faster or purer bloodline anywhere. Ever. Now, that blood had returned for those who were their family, and nothing was going to stand in their way.

Androcles smashed Lerund's inert form into the ground brutally one last time, the sickly sound from the impact carrying over the field like a shot from a weapon. He stood now directly in front of Aso, the Arwa rie vada Tarivuos fully deployed except for the cowl. His dual fangs were fully expose for all to see and his azure colored eyes were nearly glowing as the azure color had blocked out even the black pupils. Andro stood there for a moment as he kept his emotions in check using skills taught to him by Murano and Sarlana both, and he turned his head to look at Aso.

"I am Androcles Mahanlo-Leonidas!" He snarled. "I am First-born son to the True King of our people! Whether you recognize him as such or not means nothing to me! The thirty-one trillion plus men and women who recognize him as their King mean more to me than you ever will! You have my family bloodline imprisoned here! Do not try and deny this, I can smell them as surely as I smell your piss and shit right now! I have come for them and I will now take them from this foul place just as I promised. No one cages Mahanlo blood! No one! Ever! I have also come for the honored Onab people who you hold prisoner here as well. They will not suffer your imprisonment a moment longer. Stand against us, and you will end up like this fool." Androcles motioned to Lerund's broken and bloody body. "Raise a weapon against us and I will order my brothers and sisters, our dragons and those who follow us to end your lives where you stand. You will not succeed. You will not even come close. You will only die where you are standing. I have killed enough of my people this day, more will still die today but I wish to kill no one else. Return my bloodline to me willingly, release the Onab to me, and you will live out this day. Refuse me and no one will even remember that you existed.

"I will give you five seconds to decide. Your time starts now!"

Aso Nyryn was the first to drop to one knee and roll his weapon forward off his arms and watch it as it clattered to the ground in front of him. Andro watched as the first rank of Arhtai Pack soldiers followed suit, then the second and third and finally all the way to the last rank of men who had stood before them seconds ago.

"Deni?" Andro barked out.

Denali moved up beside his brother without question. "Fervon?"

"Take their weapons and stack them across the courtyard Deni." Andro said. "They are to remain here. If even one of them so much as lifts a finger to stop what we are about to do, kill them all fervon."

Denali nodded his head. "And it will be done." He stated openly.

CHAPTER SEVENTY-SEVEN

KOLTAR FOUR CAPITAL OF LEPIRI SPARTAN ONE

Reva, Lylor, Aryera, Rothan and several other Kirek Pack members were standing off to the side of the ramp near the wall, their eyes watching Danny's six-foot five body leaning over the edge of the ramp with what looked to be not a care in the world. And to top it off he did not wear a safety harness. All of them had wide eyes, for even with all their years and their combat experience, none of them had ever seen such precision before. Reva had tried to tell them; tried to prepare them for it, because of them all, only Reva had ever actually seen what they could do because of the time spent within her sphere form.

There were four different columns of Lycavorians, a mix of the Durcunusaan and Kirek Pack soldiers that now made ready to exit the ship once it set down. These men and women did not question what their orders were. For the Durcunusaan it was simple, nearly all of them had fought with their King, Androcles or some part of the Royal Family for the last decade or more and they would have it no other way. The Kirek Pack members fed off that emotion, causing Lylor, Rothan and Aryera to feel it most of all. The internal ship's speakers were all connected to the Communication Implants they all now wore and they could hear everything that was happening. There seemed to be different voices coming from everywhere but no one appeared to be flustered or confused by this as they all listened.

“Northeast down and secure!”

“Southeast down and secure!”

“Northwest down and secure!”

“Southwest down and secure!”

“All Ground Sticks, move to your Primary Positions and hold!” Miranda Lorian’s voice echoed on the COM. “Scar Flight!?”

Steven’s voice echoed on the COM channel now and this caused Lylor and many of the Kirek Pack to look at one another.

“Scar Actual to all flights! Jolly Roger and Grim Reapers have TAC Ground Support!” Steven’s calm voice echoed once again. “Black Widow and Death Jester have High Altitude Support of Spartan One. APOC Drones fourteen through seventeen have dropped into cover position on Spartan One. They got clean up. Anything gets close to Spartan One, kill it! No questions.”

“Black Widow Lead, Affirmative!”

“Death Jester Lead, Roger that Scar Actual!”

“Fly Free...!” Steven’s voice barked over the COM.

“Die well!!” Countless pilot voices chimed in right after his.

“Five Seconds!” Tina’s voice overpowered everyone else’s on the COM.

Danny’s eyes had not left the status of the drill as Tina guided it around along the dye path that Martin had left for them. Endith had held the ship as steady as a rock in a windstorm which was nothing new to any of them. Danny had lifted his gaze several times and saw perhaps half a dozen men running along the ground beneath them waving madly at others to clear the area. None came close to the position under the TYPE TWO so Danny did not bother with them.

“Through!” Tina screamed. “We’re through!”

Danny’s brow furrowed and he turned his head back toward the cockpit. “Tina, nothing is happening!” He barked.

“Wait for it big boy!!” Tina barked back without malice. All of them were excited and running on pure adrenalin.

Danny’s keen wolf ears heard it first, even above the roar of the engines. A low pitched, grumbling roar that rose in a smooth crescendo and then Danny’s head snapped back around and he saw the earth beneath him just collapse right down. He heard the scream of tortured and now overtaxed metal as it gave way and his eyes grew wide as the ground seemed to swallow up everything beneath their ship, drop for fifteen meters and then stop as the weight of now unsupported earth crushed the tunnel beneath it like so much paper, opening one end and blocking the other.

“Fucking A Baby!” Danny shouted out the words. “Turn and drop Endy! Turn and drop sister!”

Endith looked at For'mya with her trademark smile. “Here we go!” She exclaimed before throwing SPARTAN ONE into a gut wrenching turn that spun them around one hundred and eighty degrees in the opposite direction in two seconds flat. As Danny held the side of the open ramp and they dropped to just above the ground he could look dozens of meters into the part of the tunnel that had not been crushed.

Danny didn’t hesitate. “Assault One! Go! Assault One! Go!”

With shouts of approval, and before SPARTAN ONE had even settled fully to the ground, four columns of Lycavorians lifted their weapons and charged off the ship in four different directions. Endith had set them down only five meters from the edge of the now gaping hole in the ground. The collapsed part had formed a perfect ground ramp down into the once hidden underground facility while crushing the main tunnel coming from the garrison a kilometer away from their location. No one watched as Isabella and Cirith practically leaped into the two Heavy Particle Turrets that had been added for this mission and were now extending outward on hastily constructed arms on either side of the extended ramp. One moved straight out and the other began to curl upwards so that it extended over the top of the ship and could cover the front.

This is where Isabella took over as she plugged into the headset that dropped from the railing above.

“Assault One! Overwatch One and Two locked and cocked! All sticks announce when in position and prepare to repel! They’ll be coming at us hot and heavy no doubt! Spartan Six and Seven have the guns! Call out your support when needed!”

“Assault One confirms!”

Danny turned from where his eyes had been focused down into the tunnel in front of them. “Assault Two! Thirty seconds!”

On either side of Danny’s body three Spartans took up positions and their Shi Viskas flared into existence making the spear of the phalanx with Danny the point. Anja, Dysea and Duewa moved into position directly behind Danny, Anuk and Nayeca between them with their PPRs at the ready and Thoti directly behind them, forming the middle. Kesyla would be helping to watch the situation in a makeshift command seat station on the edge of the cockpit. Lylor, Ranol, Aryera and Rothan moved in behind Anja, Dysea and Duewa and they watched as another two dozen Spartans closed in around them all, their Shi Viskas out and humming on their arms. Lylor’s eyes were wide as he looked back quickly and saw four more Spartans move in behind them and effectively seal them into an impregnable formation the likes of which he had never seen before. Thoti towered over Anja, Dysea and Duewa, his own Shi Viska giving cover for the two most senior and important medical personnel anywhere in this quadrant, as well as two Queens of the Union. Martin had protested at first, sending two of his Queens into the fray along with Duewa and Anuk did not sit well with him. Anja, Duewa and Anuk were the most experienced and knowledgeable medical people they had anywhere and he hated putting all of them at risk, but he relented in the end, knowing it was for the best. Anja would always want Dysea beside her in a situation like this because her calm demeanor and voice could put even the devil at ease and Martin knew the faster they were in and out, the less loss of life there would be, and those four women could work miracles together.

Thoti turned quickly and looked at Lylor, Ranol, Rothan and Aryera. “Turn when we do! Stay below the lips of our shields unless we say so! Keep your PPRs ready but do not try to fire above us unless we direct you to! This is our way of battle! You are along for the ride right now, so let us get you where you need to go! Maintain your spacing and your footing at all cost! Do not try to push ahead or we will trample you down!”

Lylor nodded his head and slammed his hand down on Thoti’s arm twice. “As you say!” He barked. “As you say!”

Thoti nodded his head at Lylor, knowing, sensing that they would listen to everything they were told.

“Assault Two!” Danny’s voice rose above the din of the engines and everything else that was happening. “Deploy! Deploy! Deploy!”

KOLTAR FOUR ARHTAI PACK COMPOUND COMMAND AND CONTROL CENTER ARHTAI PACK COMPOUND CAPITAL OF LEPIRI

Nyser Arhtai stormed into the Command and Control Center for all Koltar Four and saw what could only be described as mass confusion to the untrained eye. Male and female Pack technicians were scrambling all over their equipment and nearly yelling at one another across their consoles. Nyser’s security detail fell to the side as he stopped beside the tall Lycavorian and Nyser grabbed his brother’s arm.

Yeren Arhtai looked at his older brother briefly and Nyser saw the expression of disgust on his face. Though ten years Nyser’s junior, Yeren Arhtai was a skilled tactical officer and had never failed his brother. Yeren had not agreed with their actions on the Dremsa Rie Saan and had made his reasoning known. Of them all, only he seemed to fear that the other Packs had failed in their part of the agreement by removing Daniho and Ashten Mahanlo and any of their blood. He had warned them all that if any Mahanlo blood descended from Daniho and Ashten survived, they would one day come for their vengeance. And it would not be pleasant for any of them. Yelma had laughed at him, but Nyser had taken his brother’s words to heart and did everything within his power to confirm with the other Packs that they had succeeded. He had failed in that and now his brother’s warnings were coming true.

“Yeren?” Nyser gasped. “Talk to me fervon?”

Yeren looked at his older brother and shook his head. “We have completely lost contact with RENDITION Station. All normal channels across the planet are being jammed by this signal we cannot identify or counteract. Nothing we do has any effect on it. The very last audio signal we got from the station was a report from the lower sections that they were being overrun and more troops were landing using some magical transporter lights or something like that.”

“Teleport technology?!” Nyser gasped.

Yeren nodded his head. “It has to be fervon. Troops appearing out of solid beams of light? What would you call that? The last actual report we had before we lost contact said that there were hundreds of troops on the station and they took down everything at once. The only way to get that many troops onboard is teleportation technology.”

“Carians!” Nyser gasped aloud. “We dismissed Teleportation Technology as too inefficient to use on a large scale!”

Yeren looked at his brother. “Whoever these people are, they are not backwards fervon!” He barked at him. “They are moving surgically! Removing threats to them as they go! Our sensors can’t penetrate the hulls of their ships! All of them are using a power source unlike anything we have ever seen!” He gripped his brother’s arm. “There is something else. Two of the ships... two of them are using Onab Portal Generators.”

Nyser looked at him as if he had gone insane. “Yeren, tell me you are joking!”

Yeren shook his head. “I wish I was. The large one that moved north with the other three and that monstrosity in orbit. Both have active Onab Portal Generators.”

“How?!” Nyser gasped. “The Onab shut that project down before the war even began! It was unstable! It is what brought the Iais’Kai down on us!”

Yeren shook his head. “Well not anymore! Whoever they are, they managed to fix whatever problems there were.”

“Iais’Kai?” Nyser gasped aloud once more.

Yeren shook his head. “Negative. Our people would not side with those vile creatures no matter who they were. Our sensor sweeps just after they were detected on the station showed Lycavorian life signs and an abundance of secondary species we have never seen, but our people were dominant. And there were...”

“What?” Nyser demanded.

“There were half breeds among them.” Yeren answered.

“We must warn Fomir.” Nyser spoke. “I want that ship.”

Yeren shook his head. “We have also lost contact with the entire Iaaldo Engineering Compound.” Yeren told him. “They are not responding, even via the emergency channels. Nothing from Fomir nor his team either. Their transport is offline and we cannot even pick up their Transponder signal.”

Nyser looked at him. “Destroyed?” He asked.

Yeren shook his head. “I don’t think so. I think it has been deactivated somehow.”

“Nubou!” Nyser snarled loudly.

“Four of their ships did split from the rest and move in that direction once they entered the atmosphere including this one with the Portal Generator.” Yeren told him. “We lost them when they dropped below sensor coverage, but these ships must be exceptionally fast, Nyser. Faster than we first thought and much faster than anything that we have to have made it that far so quickly.”

“We didn’t...” Nyser stammered.

“Fervon what is going on here?” Yeren asked him. “The ships above us match nothing in our known databases! Nothing! Certainly nothing in this quadrant of space or dating back many millennia. Our sensors cannot penetrate their hulls, and they are using a power source of some kind that is unknown to us. Now we have detected traces of Onab Portal Generators within two of the ships, but I don’t know how Nyser.” Yeren moved closer to his brother. “What is going on brother?”

“Yeren we...” Nyser stammered once more.

“Teleportation Technology, brother!” Yeren snapped loudly. “They used Teleportation Technology to capture RENDITION Station before we even knew what was happening. This is Technology even we have not been able to develop with the Onab helping us! These... these ships appeared out of nowhere, Nyser! Most of them jumped directly into the planetary system from somewhere other than Pakar Six! You know the technology it takes to plan and execute in-system jumps! They have Portal Generator technology! An Onab technology that should not even exist! What is going on fervon? You know who these people are!”

“I must speak with...” Nyser began to speak.

Yeren motioned to the system all around them. “You can speak to no one! Every channel we have is either jammed by a signal we cannot touch or broadcasting on a frequency that we cannot override!”

“Broadcasting?” Nyser asked looking at his brother. “What are they broadcasting?”

Yeren motioned him a nearby computer console and tapped the console several times. The female voice began speaking in the middle of a sentence but Nyser quickly deduced what was happening.

“... Urge all of you to remain calm and stay within your homes where it is safe. If you are in the open, please find someplace where you will be safe and remain there. The Mahanlo bloodline has returned for their nathos, and they will not be denied, but they will harm no one who does not resist them. Listen to me... everyone...”

Yelma and Nyser Arhtai have been lying to all of us for so many millennia. Kelia Mahanlo is alive, as is her beloved husband and mate Lylor Kirek and three of their children. The Dremsa Rie Saan is not what you have been led to believe and been told for so long. No disease infected Mahanlo blood. The Arhtai Pack leaders lied to you. The Dremsa rie Saan is the night that the Arhtai Pack betrayed those who our people chose to lead us forever, those that our people christened royalty long before we ever left Cerath. There was never a medical emergency concerning the Mahanlo bloodline. That was just a story to tell everyone so that they could usurp the rightful leaders of our people. The Dremsa rie Saan was nothing but a power grab and a slaughter. Over fifteen thousand members of Mahanlo blood died that night. They were butchered in their sleep, gunned down in the streets or captured, tortured and brutally murdered. All because Yelma and Nyser Arhtai felt that they deserved to be in charge. But now the descendants of our King and his brother have returned, and they seek retribution and above all else, justice. If you have no blood on your hands, then you have nothing to fear from the Mard Revik, jen Tarivuos or his people.

Stay away from the areas surrounding Constellation Monument and points nearby. Do not go near any facility that may have Arhtai Pack members inside. To the Arhtai Pack they say this through me...

“If you have no blood on your hands then you are not the enemy. If you believe, as many of us still do, that Mahanlo blood is the rightful ruling bloodline of our people, chosen by our people, then stay safe and do not interfere. Mahanlo blood knows who they hunt and unlike those that they hunt, they will not harm innocents.”

Nyser looked at his brother. “That... I’ve heard that voice before Yeren.” He said.

Yeren nodded his head. “All of us have fervon.” He told him, once more tapping the screen as the message began to repeat. Nyser saw the image of the woman appear on the screen and his eyes grew wider.

“Nystai!” He almost yelled.

Yeren nodded his head. “Yelma’s sister. The one that was mated to Tamal Kirek. Yelma ordered him executed and the fools she sent to kill him injured Nystai as well. She lost the children she carried. Twins I believe.”

“She was killed in a transport accident less than a year later.” Nyser said.

Yeren shook his head. “No... apparently she was not.” He said. “The signals match up. It is the same one we have tried to trace in the past. We have never been able to unscramble the frequency she uses until now. I just can’t figure out why now?”

“She thinks they will protect her.” Nyser spoke softly.

“Protect her?” Yeren said. “What do you mean? She has never exposed herself like this. We tracked her within minutes.”

Nyser looked at him. “What? Are you saying she is Vada Ronnus Orato? She is the one who has been working against us all these years?”

Yeren nodded his head. “Yes... but we’ve just never been able to find her because she has hidden herself too well. For some reason now though, she is transmitting in the clear, and we have her location.”

Nyser nodded his head. “She thinks they will protect her, as I said. She is so wrong.”

“I’ve already dispatched an entire Company to her location.” Yeren said. “Who is supposed to protect her?”

“Take her alive, Yeren!” Nyser snarled. “She has much to answer for fervon.” He turned and looked at the huge holographic plot of the city suspended over the massive table. “What do we know?” He asked.

Yeren shifted the view to a wide shot of Constellation Monument. “They may have taken RENDITION Station out of the equation but we still have other means.” He said. “Our satellites are still functioning and you can see that they have landed all of their troops so far in and around Constellation Monument. An inner and outer layer on all four corners with this ship at the Monument site as the pivot point.” Yeren looked at him.

“How many?” Nyser asked.

“Best guess is roughly two or three thousand. We are operating off visual sightings only since our ground sensor readings are somehow being scrambled enough to make them useless.” Yeren answered. “This doesn’t make sense brother. There is nothing there. Why deploy in this manner?”

Nyser looked at his brother and decided that it was now time he knew it all. He reached across the star chart and dropped his finger directly on top of the point where the monument stood. “There is a secret underground science facility built beneath Constellation Monument Yeren. Only three dozen people and the troops that staff it know that it even exists. Inside this facility is Kelia Mahanlo, two of her children and two of Ranol Nenay’s sons, all of them suspended in Cryo sleep.” He said watching as his brother’s eyes went wide. “They obviously knew that the only way to gain entrance was through the main garrison, something that they apparently are not equipped for.” Nyser Arhtai wrongly assumed in the first of his three major mistakes this day. “They decided to breach the tunnel between the main estate and the facility and make their own entrance.”

“Nyser!?” Yeren gasped. “Fervon, are you saying the broadcast that she is using is... it is correct?”

Nyser met his brother’s eyes. “Yes.” He answered. “Kelias Mahanlo, her children and Ranol Nenay’s sons are in this facility in Cryo Freeze. We had three more children of hers and Lylor Kirek. The oldest three if memory serves. We executed them during the Civil War. The children in cryo Freeze now are ones that she carried within her womb when she was captured. No one even knew that they existed when we first took her. We kept her awake until they were born and then put all of them into Cryo sleep. No one knows they live.”

Yeren stared at his brother in shock. “Nyser you...”

“You knew this is what we planned for fervon.” Nyser spoke quickly.

Yeren met his gaze now. “The other Packs were supposed to eliminate the King and his bloodline!” He snarled. “You were supposed to maintain communication with them! To insure that they completed their tasks before we moved against Kelias Mahanlo and Lylor Kirek!”

“The last message we... the last message we got from them was that they had removed most of their bloodline and were moving in on the last ones that had survived.” Nyser told him. “We... we never got a confirmation.”

“You never got a confirmation and yet you and Yelma ordered that we move against her and the Kirek Pack?” Yeren snarled.

“We waited as long as we could!” Nyser almost shouted. “If we had waited any longer we would have lost the element of surprise and they would have discovered that something was coming at them.”

Yeren snarled angrily. “That is why the Blood Detectors on the station went off just before the station went dark!” He barked loudly. “We thought it was a malfunction of some kind but it wasn’t. They went off because they detected Mahanlo blood!” Yeren looked at him. “And given the locations they went off in, they detected more than one or two of them!”

“We don’t know!” Nyser snapped.

“We don’t know?” Yeren almost screamed at his brother drawing the odd looks of many within the Command Center. “The Mahanlo blood that traveled with Kelias and Lylor Kirek were the oldest of their bloodline. Those who were done having children for the most part! Only a few dozen pairs had children after arriving here, and those that weren’t mated before leaving Cerath mostly became mated to Kirek Pack members! The only true Mahanlo blood that would have given us a problem was that of Kelias Mahanlo and her children! Most of the young and healthy breeders in the Pack went with King Daniho, Ashten Mahanlo and their remaining children!”

“I know all that Yeren!” Nyser snapped.

“Then you know what will happen next!” Yeren barked.

“Not if we kill them first!” Nyser growled at him.

Yeren looked at his brother as if he had gone mad. “If this... if this is truly Mahanlo blood that has come for their family, you and I both know that none of us will live out this day fervon.”

“I intend to fight!” Nyser barked. “You can either help me or leave! It is up to you!”

Yeren shook his head. “I have no other choice but to fight.” He said softly. “You saw to that.”

“Then help me!” Nyser snarled.

Yeren shook his head and moved to the Plot Board. “Alarms from within this facility seem to indicate that it has been breached. Given what you just told me, it appears as if they collapsed part of the tunnel from the main compound to the facility and made their own entrance to avoid attacking the garrison.”

“Which means they do not have many troops.” Nyser said.

Yeren nodded his head. “That could be one of many reasons.” He said quickly. “They have already put nearly three thousand troops on the ground in and around the Constellation Monument, they have taken RENDITION Station down and we have lost contact with the Iaaldo Engineering Compound. We don’t know how many troops they have at the other two locations. Maybe they didn’t think they needed them given how quickly our men have fallen!” Yeren spoke sarcastically.

Nyser looked at him harshly but the look bounced off his younger brother. “What about our gunships?”

Yeren looked at him. “They are on alert but in standby mode.” He answered. “They are the only source of Onab military technology that we have Nyser!”

Nyser stabbed down on the board once more. “We must break this main force here.” He snapped. “We need to take out this ship at the Constellation Monument and the surrounding troops. The only way to do that is with the gunships. Have them conduct one or two passes and then our troops will roll in and sweep up the survivors.”

“Nyser... they have layered air support all over the city!” Yeren exclaimed.

“Order our gunships to remain below the horizon and within the buildings.” Nyser said. “Our pilots have trained for that and I’m betting these new ones have not.”

“And if you are wrong?” Yeren snapped.

Nyser looked at him. “I’m not wrong! Now give the order and I will lead my personal detachment to the southwest corner here and attack in force while the other commanders hit the other three corners. We press in together, break their backs and then remove the threat!”

“What about the Iaaldo Engineering Compound?” Yeren asked.

“Send a complement of gunships there as well, fully loaded with troops.” Nyser spoke. “I want as many Onab re-taken alive as possible but securing the compound is their mission. Take as many Mahanlo prisoners as they are able, but do not risk re-taking the compound.”

“This is madness!” Yeren gasped. “We have no information on what is out there fervon. We don’t even know what they had on those four ships! Or if all four of those ships attacked! Fomir could very well be dead!”

“Then we will find out!” Nyser growled before turning and heading out of the Center. “And whoever killed my son will answer to me!” His voice echoed in the corridor.

KOLTAR FOUR
CAPITAL OF LEPIRI
EASTERN SECTOR
FINAL POSITION FOR NYSTAI AND HER PEOPLE

“...Done!” Taarie declared from her computer station. “Once Prince Deion arrives we can activate the connection and Princess Mari will have full control with Liita!”

Nystai nodded her head from her own station. “Excellent! Insure all lock outs are up and active Taarie. We do not want anyone from my sister’s staff to use our own back doors against us.”

Comelo turned from his console. “Nystai! They have deployed a full company here to arrest us! We have perhaps twenty minutes before they arrive.”

Nystai looked at him. “They are not coming to arrest us.” She said calmly. “Activate the defenses within the underground tunnels Comelo, and pull all of our families and friends into the Bastion itself! Taarie, burst Prince Deion an update and prepare to upload the package that was prepared for us!”

“What is this package Nystai?” Taarie asked as her hands flew over her controls.

Nystai shook her head. “They did not tell me, only that it was part of history. The King’s history. Our history.” She replied to the question. “I suspect we will discover it as the rest of our people do.”

“Ready!”

“Begin upload!” Nystai snapped out. “Have our security prep to receive our families and friends. Everyone else man your stations until Prince Deion arrives! And all of you... believe!”

KOLTAR FOUR

LEPIRI

INTERNAL MINISTRY BUILDING

1.7 KILOMETERS SOUTHWEST FROM CONSTELLATION MONUMENT

...Station is fully ours Beloved. Aricia’s voice filled Martin’s head as it and the voices of his other Queens always did. A musical concerto of soft sounds on the winds. Thirty-four dead from the Arhtai Pack forces. A few minor injuries among our people. We have secured the remaining Arhtai Pack troops in the lower levels. They went submissively. And we have one Banaz Arhtai. A son of Nyser and Yelma apparently.

Martin nodded his head slowly, his yellow/gold wolf eyes never leaving the distant image of SPARTAN ONE as she was now resting on the ground and Danny had headed underground. His troops were in place and Martin could feel that the shit was about to hit the fan, but he had no doubts that they would succeed. The Durcunusaan chosen to come here with them were among the finest anywhere in the Union. They were the most senior and knowledgeable of the Durcunusaan in the Echo quadrant and all of them had fought with him, Danny, Androcles or one of his Queens and they knew how each of them operated. There was not a doubting soul out there on that field and Martin knew it. Whoever turned to face his Spartans on the four corners of the area around SPARTAN ONE would discover just how badly they were outgunned in a short while.

Androcles killed the one called Fomir. He did not die quickly or well. Martin told her softly. The hate within him was not his own, but it was too deeply seated. And his hands had the blood of many Onab on them, as well as a few of Revia’s bloodline.

There was a pause and Aricia responded. It was then that Martin could feel his other Queens pulsing her and him both within the Etheric realm even as they went about their part of the mission. The six of them had developed this uncanny knack to be able to do this with each other through the years and it had brought them far closer than any of them truly realized.

We are not here to rehabilitate or speak, Beloved. Our sons, Laren and yourself, you know and feel that more than any of us. We are here for our nathos. Our blood. They may be our people, but they have wronged our bloodline in a way that even Spartans could not have imagined. We will not harm innocents Martin, that has never been our way, but we will free our family, and those who have taken our blood from us will be punished. Aricia told him, causing Martin to take a deep breath as he felt the huge surge from his other Queens within the Etheric realm.

We will. Martin spoke firmly. Martin’s keen eyes caught movement on the southwest corner of their box and he stared intently. Saaurano... I have detected some movement near Danny’s flank. This is going to kick off very soon down here.

Then do what you must and we will see you when it is over. Aricia’s voice ended their talk with a huge combination pulse of love and devotion from her and his other Queens.

Martin didn’t turn his head, since he had felt them land quietly on the rooftop with them, keeping his eyes focused on that spot in the southwest corner. He felt her approach him slowly from behind because even though she knew that he could smell her, Helen did not take foolish chances with an Alpha wolf, and most especially not an Alpha Wolf with the skills of Martin Mahanlo-Leonidas.

“I thought you were going to remain on the ship?” Martin asked before turning his head and watching as Arzoal lowered her huge body onto the roof beside Torma and Helen continued a few strides further to stand in front of him as he turned fully.