"This!" Anja snapped before she cocked her hands back with the computer in them and then let fly the blow with perhaps half of her wolf strength directly into Lorendo's sneering face. She didn't want to kill him after all. Dysea had moved up beside her and did nothing because she felt Anja was in full control of what she was doing.

Given the beating he had taken at Martin's hands, one would have thought Lorendo had perhaps learned to be more wary. Unfortunately for him, he still considered himself superior to everyone they had met. The edge of the computer impacted his jaw and snapped his head to the side with tremendous force, causing shooting pain to lance through his neck and shoulders. It also carried enough force to spin him completely around and drop him to his knees. Delnash, Sashan and most of the Pralor Security force gawked in astonishment at this display of strength from a woman who was easily half Lorendo's size and weight.

"You motherfucker!" Anja screamed tossing the computer to the side where Avi's large hand snapped out with blinding speed and caught it before it could shatter on the floor. Anja stepped closer to Lorendo and grabbed his full head of hair with her left hand and slapped him viciously across the face with her right. The stinging pop resounded within the vehicle bay like the pop of a firecracker driving his head back down into the floor of the vehicle bay. "Those were my patients!" She screamed at him. "My patients and you killed them!"

Anja kned Lorendo powerfully in the chest and sent him sprawling across the floor where she pounced on him like she a female wolf going for the kill. Anja began to pummel him with her small fists, not bothering to try and aim the blows because of the speed and strength with which she was throwing them. Five foot three and only a hundred and fifteen pounds soaking wet when not in wolf form, Anja Leonidas's body was ripped in the fashion that female wolves half her age envied her for. Years of training and fighting beside the man she so adored had honed her petite frame into a deadly machine and this was something that no one expected from the foremost Hadarian Healer in all the Alpha Quadrant.

Stunned, Lorendo brought up his hands and arms, trying to fend off the extremely painful blows that were hitting his face and head with lightening like quickness. Helen was the first to react, though the Spartan woman in her wanted to let Anja kill him for what he had done, and she stepped forward.

"Dysea! For'mya! Stop her!" She barked out coming up beside Wayonn.

Cirith had already been moving, more for the purpose of protecting Anja than saving Lorendo. She gripped Anja's right hand as she prepared to smash another blow into his head and held it tight.

"Anja... enough!" Cirith gasped as Dysea and For'mya appeared next to her and took Anja's arms.

"Melyanna... no more." Dysea rasped out as they struggled to pull Anja off Lorendo's inert form.

Anja may have been the smallest of Martin's Queens... but she was nearly an equal to Aricia in strength and it was a struggle even for the three of them to pull her off Lorendo as enraged as she was.

"Fucking cockroach!" Anja screamed as she let fly with her right leg before they got her far enough away from him and her booted foot smashed into Lorendo's face, splitting his lips and sending blood spraying across the deck. "Murderer!"

Delnash and Sashan went to Lorendo when they had pulled Anja off him and gotten her far enough back. Delnash held Lorendo's arm as he looked back at them with wide eyes. "What is the meaning of this attack?" He bellowed. "You... this only proves how violent and uncontrollable you and your people are!"

Anja's jade green eyes fell on him now. "Violent and..." She barked beginning to rush towards him but Cirith and Dysea gripped her tightly. "Why don't you ask your friend there who is violent and uncontrollable? He just murdered over three hundred of your people! Men and women who we were attempting to save!"

Delnash looked at Lorendo with wide eyes. "Lorendo... what is she talking about?"

Lorendo drew his arm across his bloody mouth. "I did what needed to be done to protect us." He snarled cruelly.

"You butchered three hundred defenseless men and women!" Anja screamed at him.

Radra came forward now equally as angry at Lorendo's actions but not able to express herself in the manner Anja just had. "The cryo chambers were flooded with Norpellian gas Delnash." She stated unable to keep the tinge of anger and contempt from her own voice. "They... they are all dead."

Delnash stood back from Lorendo as he got to his feet. "You... you killed them?" He asked in horror.

“I initiated established security protocols!” Lorendo barked. “Our people were infected with the Svorag virus. They were beyond help.”

“We could have saved them!” Anja barked out.

Lorendo glared at her. “You could have done nothing!” He snarled at her. “You do not have the intelligence. We have been working on a cure for centuries and have...”

“You nubous obtuse, dull witted, small dicked arrogant cockroach of a fucking man!” Anja screamed causing Lorendo’s eyes to go wide at the slur to his intelligence and manhood. “We had a cure! We had the cure! All we needed to do was deliver it!”

“Impossible!” Lorendo barked. “You do not know the first...”

Radra cut him off immediately. “Anja is correct!” She barked moving up beside where Dysea and Cirith were holding Anja while For'mya tried to calm her by taking her face in her hands. “I saw the formula myself! We had the cure in front of us Delnash! And you killed them Lorendo!”

Delnash looked back and forth between them, finally settling on Radra. “Radra?”

“Anja and Duewa had already devised a viable formula to cure those in stasis!” Radra snapped loudly. “They began it on their ship and finished it when they arrived here! All we had to do was determine the best form of delivery to the patients and that is what we were working on when you murdered them!”

“Impossible!” Lorendo snapped angrily. “Primitives couldn’t possibly have devised a cure!”

“Why?” Anja shouted looking around For'mya’s shoulder. “Is it too much of a blow to your fat ego that there may actually be people smarter than you!” She stepped around For'mya and closer to him... Dysea and Cirith keeping their hands on her but not holding her back. “My thirteen year old daughter has more intelligence than you igord!” Anja shouted. “You are as stupid as a fucking rock!”

“You know nothing!” Lorendo snapped at her.

“I know you just murdered three hundred and four innocent men and women!” Anja barked at him. “Men and women we could have saved! I know there are logs missing from this station’s medical data banks and given that you were able to bypass our lock outs with your little toy, I’d say you know what’s in those logs! I also know that whatever you were working on here... it for damn sure was no cure!”

“You do not know what you are talking about!” Lorendo barked. “I was protecting all of us! If the Svorag virus infects anyone of us we are all...”

“Those men and women were secure!” Wayonn snarled now. “There was no reason to murder them!”

“I put them out of their misery!” Lorendo snapped.

“You murdered them!” Radra barked. “Just as Anja has said! We have a cure for them and you just went ahead and butchered them!”

“I didn’t know that!” Lorendo shouted.

“Perhaps if you were not so full of your fat self you might have asked first!” Helen barked at him. “I have had enough of this grandfather!” She snarled. “When Martin returns we are leaving these foolish people to kill themselves!”

Wayonn crossed his arms over his chest. “I have no qualms about that.” He stated.

“You cannot leave!” Delnash exclaimed.

“Watch us.” Helen sneered.

“Cody... take fatso here and search him!” Anja ordered. “Take everything that is not clothes covering his disgusting body. If he resists... shoot him!”

Cody moved forward. “With pleasure.” He spoke.

-Alert. Incoming emergency COM from King Leonidas- Avi’s voice interrupted them.

“Avi... what is it?” Wayonn asked.

The Avatar did not answer him and moved to the main terminal in the vehicle bay. His hands flew across the controls, there was a burst of static and then Martin and Danny’s voice echoed in the bay quite loudly.

“Fuck! They’re all over!” Danny screamed as weapons fire could be heard in the background.
“Coming from north and east!”

“Pull back to the entrance!” Martin’s order thundered. “Shit! This isn’t good! Shit! Shit!”

“Our people Martin!” Isabella’s voice echoed.

“We can’t save them now!” Martin screamed back. “Take the two woman we found and go Bella! We’ll cover!”

“They are infected Martin!” Aricia’s voice sounded.

“Red can fix them!” Martin answered instantly. “It’s not fully complete yet but she was close to figuring out how to fix them! Now take them and go Saaurano!”

The sound of T'lolt’s chain gun firing could be heard in the background. “There are too many!” His voice carried over the noise, though it remained strangely calm considering what was obviously happening. Strange to the Pralors who were listening anyway. “We should probably leave quickly Martin!”

“Move! Move! Move!” Martin shouted as A4s firing around him erupted from the speakers. “Time to cut our losses and go! Take them and go Aricia! Endy! Endy can you hear me?”

All of them heard Endith’s slightly high pitched voice answer instantly. “We’re here Skipper!”

“Prep a Bunker Buster and lock onto the entrance of this cave Short Stuff! We have to bring it down or these fucking things will be all over us like stink on shit!” Martin barked the order. “We’re falling back to the entrance. Three minutes Endith! Then prepare for dust-off!”

“On our way!”

Wayonn was the one who stabbed down on the button. “Martin! What is your situation?”

“Wayonn! Shit... we’re running like the Hounds of Hell are after us! Can’t you tell?” Martin answered and everyone could tell this by his breathing. “There’s a whole nubous nest of these lizard fuckers down here! Thousands of them! Practically right under the fucking station!”

“Nubou lae!” Wayonn hissed.

“Yeah... that’s about the... SHIT!”

They heard what could only be Martin’s sword bursting from Flatspace with a sizzle and then the sloppy noise of flesh being struck. That was followed by a burst from the energy cell in the pommel of his sword.

“Faster!” Murano’s voice echoed. “Move faster! All of them are waking up now!”

“Uncle!” Mari exclaimed in a terrified voice as she moved closer.

“Wayonn... have Avi seal every exterior vent entrance to the station!” Martin barked out. “Then pull Delnash and his people in with ours! I won’t let them face this outside! They’ll be overrun and won’t know how to deal with it! Have Arzoal and the other dragons move to high ground somewhere! We... fervon! Danny down!”

The transmission died and Wayonn stabbed the control panel. “Martin! Martin!”

-The composition of the cave they are moving in is blocking the signal now Wayonn- Avi reported as he scanned the instruments. –I have tapped into the sensors on Endith’s STRIKER and I am tracking them. The entire team is present plus two additional lifesigns. Moving very fast-

Delnash watched in awe as Anja, Dysea and Cirith sprung into action with barely a thought.

“Duewa!” Anja barked. “Secure all our medical supplies and get them here!”

Radra gripped Anja’s arm. “They are bringing back two infected females Anja! We must finish an injection system! We can save them!”

Anja didn’t hesitate and her entire demeanor changed instantly to one of doctor and researcher as she took Radra’s arm. “We need to compensate for the release of...” She began speaking as they began moving back into the station.

Dysea looked at where Fedor stood. “Fedor... release the weapons back to the Pralor Security forces! Form defensive positions around the vehicle just as your father and uncle taught you! Hurry!”

“Cody... with me!” Cirith snapped as she snatched an A4 from a Durcunusaan troop. “Up on the roof to provide cover!”

“On it!” Cody barked.

Helen was also moving and she came right up to Delnash with For'mya and Wayonn. “You and the other Elders must get inside! Go to the Command Center with Avi! You are out of your element here!”

“We... we can fight!” Delnash hissed suddenly.

Helen looked at him but it was Wayonn who turned and spoke to him. “You are the Chief Elder of the Pralor people! I don’t care what happens to that nubous fool...” He spoke pointing at Lorendo. “...But you need to be protected! Those are the orders given to me!”

“Orders?” Delnash gasped. “Who gave you such orders?”

Wayonn took his arm. “The man you consider to be an animal.” He stated. “Trust me... if it is as bad as I hear in Martin’s voice... you will not wish to see why he is feared throughout the entire Alpha Quadrant by every species known to exist. Inside! All of you! For'mya?”

For'mya took Delnash’s other arm and then Sashan’s arm in her other hand. “No time for arguments!” She barked. “Now it’s time for action!” She stated as she and Wayonn began to lead them quickly into the station.

Helen turned to a Durcunusaan officer. “Secure that ronnus and watch him!” She snarled pointing at Lorendo. “If he farts wrong... spread his brains over the wall!”

The Durcunusaan nodded and grabbed Lorendo’s arm. “With pleasure Feravomir.” He stated and yanked the still bleeding Lorendo along with him.

ONTEROM

SVORAG CAVE

FIFTEEN MINUTES EARLIER

“...be cooler in here?” Aricia spoke softly as they moved down the passage, her head turning to look at Kasdan.

They had been moving on a gradual downward slope of perhaps ten degrees as they traversed the winding path. There were no side passages, which made things easier for them in terms of security, but they were moving further and further from the surface.

Kasdan met her eyes in surprise. “You... you are asking me?” He asked.

Aricia smiled at him which shocked Kasdan because even in the low light of the cave the smile took the hard edge off her face that he had seen up until now and allowed her exquisite beauty to shine through. “You are a scientist yes?” She asked.

“Yes... yes.” Kasdan stammered. “But my field is Hyper Spacial Anomalies and Phased Quantum Engineering. Not Geology.”

Aricia waited until those in front had called for a stop and then she looked fully at the Pralor Kasdan, Isabella beside her. “You must have some idea.” She pressed him. “The cave walls seem to be radiating heat when they should be cool to the touch. I am not a scientist Kasdan, and nether is Bella. We are fighters and pilots and we freely admit when we are out of our league.”

Kasdan glanced between her and Isabella quickly. “I am... I am considered a junior level scientist as Assistant Director of the Science Convention. Much of my... my ideas and theories are not often well received.”

“They will be well received with us.” Isabella stated plainly. “You seem to be the only one of genuine heart within your group. You are honest and forthright. We trust you.”

“You trust me?” Kasdan gasped.

Aricia smiled at him. “Kasdan... Martin would not have allowed you to accompany us if he did not trust you.” She said. “You do not adhere to the same principles as the others. You do not share their arrogance.”

“To assume we are better than others simply because of our technology is foolish.” Kasdan spoke softly. “It is one of the reasons our fall as a people came at the hands of a species that was technologically inferior to us initially. We abused that and they learned from it and then turned on us.”

“Your honesty is refreshing.” Isabella told him. “Our husband does not deal well with the arrogance that people cling to.”

Kasdan nodded. “Yes... I noticed that.” He said. “I am... I am not from Lorendo’s generation and many of the scientists working today do not adhere to the same ideals.”

“Then perhaps there is hope for your people in the future.” Aricia told him.

Kasdan glanced in front of them and saw Martin kneeling with Murano and the dark skinned man whispering among themselves. “Is he always so severe?” Kasdan asked.

Aricia smiled. “No.” She said. “But he is a Lycavorian and he takes the safety of his loved ones and friends very seriously.”

“He is the king of your people but he does... he does not act like a king.” Kasdan said. “He is... he wears his passion... his emotions on his sleeve. He leads... he leads into battle when he should be commanding from the rear.”

Aricia turned her head and looked at Martin’s back with loving eyes and then she turned back to Kasdan. “Martin... our husband and mate... he is not like other men.” She said softly. “He knows only one way to lead... and that is by example.”

“And that is why we love him so.” Isabella answered.

Kasdan nodded his head in understanding and looked around. “I don’t know why the conditions are not indicative of a normal cave.” He answered Aricia’s initial question. “We are not near the geothermal core of the planet to my knowledge, so that means some sort of external source of the heat. And it is getting hotter the further into the caves that we go.”

“External source?” Aricia asked as the hairs on the back of her neck began to stand up.

Kasdan nodded his head. “It would need to be massive in order to generate this kind of heat.”

Aricia met his eyes and motioned him forward. “Come with me.” She said taking his hand.

Martin looked at Danny and Murano as they knelt on the ground. Kenny and Pablo were five meters in front of them, watching the passage.

“...can’t pick up their scents?” Murano was asking.

Martin shook his head. “The stench is too thick.” He answered with a grimace. “It smells like...”

“Smells like shit on a shingle!” Danny spat. “My taste buds are gonna be shot for a month.”

Martin grinned and nodded his head. “It’s too heavy.” Martin said looking at Murano. “All around us... overriding even my sense of smell.”

Danny nodded and looked at Murano. “And ugly here has the strongest sense of smell in the entire Union. He followed Aricia and the others across an entire planet just by their scent. He pissed them off and they had to get away from him. That’s why his nose is so big.” He said with a grin.

Murano smiled as well. “I’m glad that you found them.” He said. “What... may I ask what it was about? They don’t seem the type to just...”

Martin shook his head. “It’s a long story.” Martin answered. “But there was lots of body worshipping when I did find them.” He said with a large grin. “Normya and Zarah were the result of that little trip!”

Murano chuckled softly at the laconic nature of Martin. It was a virtue of everyone with him it seemed. They pushed aside their fear and anxiety with humor and crude jokes but it worked for them and made them appear fearless to those who did not know the truth. They all turned as Aricia settled beside Martin leading Kasdan.

“Beloved... Kasdan may have a reason that it is getting hotter within these tunnels.” Aricia told him.

Martin’s dark eyes looked at Kasdan. “Let’s hear it.” He spoke. “It has to be better than my excuse that I have a fever.”

Kasdan looked briefly at Murano and then looked at Martin. “I do not know for sure the reason but...”

Martin held up his hand stopping his words before he could speak them. “I told you outside that I trusted your guesses more than that fat ronnus Lorendo’s facts!” He spoke. “You got something to say Kasdan... don’t hesitate to fill me in.”

Kasdan found himself liking Martin a great deal, worlds apart though they may have been in terms of culture. He most certainly was no primitive animal as Lorendo claimed. He was in fact a very intelligent man from what Kasdan saw in his eyes.

“We are too far from the core of the planet for the heat to be like it is.” Kasdan spoke. “There has to be an external source somewhere within these tunnels.”

“An external source?” Martin asked. “You mean like a volcano or something like that?”

Kasdan shook his head. “There are no seismic mountains on this planet.” He said. “No... by external source I mean something is generating the heat. Something very large and not really natural.”

“Kasdan... why do I not like the way you say something external and not really natural.” Murano asked him.

“Yeah... no shit.” Danny grunted.

“I’m sorry Praetorian Murano.” Kasdan spoke. “It is the only reasonable explanation though.”

Martin turned and looked down the tunnel. “Ok... there’s only ten of them and we got more firepower.” He spoke. “Let’s just find our people and get the hell out of here. This place gives me the creeps.”

“No argument here.” Danny said. He hissed softly and drew Kenny’s attention. He motioned with his hand and Kenny nodded nudging Pablo. They rose to their feet and began to move forward once more, T'lolt falling in behind them silently with his MKW 30 Hades Chain Gun. A devastating piece of Union engineering that only the strongest Lycavorians could wield. A three barreled 20mm kinetic weapon that could hurl rounds downrange at a terrible rate. T'lolt carried the weapon and the 2000 round square drum on his back as if it was a toy. The entire unit was connected and the linkless feed ran under T'lolt’s right arm by a caseless two inch wide feed tube. One hit on the quick release and he could jettison the entire unit and not get tangled up. It was a designed based loosely on those from ancient Earth but improved on by Union Weapons Engineers.

“Kasdan... stick close.” Murano spoke as he lifted his Saber Staff in one hand and the KM12 in the other.

They had gone no more than fifty meters when Kenny and Pablo immediately dropped to one knee in a combat posture at what appeared to be a bend in the tunnel. Martin held up a clenched fist and everyone froze in their tracks. Aricia gripped Kasdan’s arm and shook her head quickly so that he wouldn’t talk. Martin remained in a combat crouch and he, Murano and Danny moved silently forward until they came up behind Kenny and Pablo.

Kenny looked sideways as Martin came up behind him and touched his shoulder.

Movement Skipper. Kenny reached out within Mindvoice. Didn’t see how many but we caught the shadows.

Where the tunnel starts to curve. Pablo added. Looks like it branches off and if my sense of direction is any good... right back towards the relative location of the station Skipper.

Oh... that ain’t good. Martin spoke. We’re moving blind here and I don’t like it.

I got a bad feeling Skipper. Kenny said.

Pablo nodded. For once I agree with him and his bad feelings.

Me too. Danny spoke.

Martin reached behind him and withdrew a tubular cylinder from his vest pouch in the back. He quickly attached it to the barrel of his KM12 and let his A4 drop to dangle on the quick release straps, Kenny and Pablo seeing this and doing the same. Martin nodded his head forward and they began to inch ahead. Martin turned back to the others. Stay put for a moment. We’ll scout ahead. Mindvoice from here on out everyone.

Watch your ass! Danny hissed.

Martin nodded his head and moved to follow Kenny and Pablo with Murano taking Danny’s KM12, now rigged for silence, and moving beside Martin. Danny twirled his finger in a circle signaling everyone to rally on him and he watched as they all moved up with T'lolt turning to face their rear with Garan’s two men. The Pralor Security troops seemed to find T'lolt fascinating and had not moved more than a meter from his side since entering the cavern. Danny knew what it was and he grinned inwardly at Julie as she settled next to him on the dirt. Garan’s men were learning even as they moved with them, taking their clues from the enormous Immortal who had obviously seen far more combat than both of them combined. Garan came up beside his brother and Aricia and looked at her bright azure eyes.

Forgive... forgive me for asking... but these men and women. Garan asked her. Your husband is a Praetorian... a King. Yet they are... they speak to him with such informal tones. And he does not seem to care.

Aricia glanced at Isabella and then back to him. They have been with him for a very long time Garan. She replied. He has led them in battle on hundreds of occasions and that fact alone gives them the right to refer to him as they do. He would not have it any other way. I suspect we are very different from what you know of Kings and Queens.

Our history shows that this form of governing does not last for very long. Garan said honestly. The Monarchs become... they become out of touch.

Aricia nodded. Most do... but we haven't done such a bad job for the last twenty-five plus years and the Union survived long before that ruled by Martin's grandfather. We have a democratic system if you wish to call it that. A Prime Minister and Senate. We do not have absolute power as most monarchs in history had. That is why we are different.

A Senate? Kasdan asked now. You mean representatives of the people?

Isabella nodded. Yes. The people of the Union determine what direction the Union goes for the most part. The Senate is their voice. And they are listened too.

Aricia saw the looks on their faces and smiled at them warmly. Not the sort of thing you would expect from primitives and savages is it?

I would like to see this Senate at work. Garan spoke with eyes that showed true interest.

As would I. Kasdan echoed.

Aricia gripped her A4 tighter. Perhaps that could be possible. Martin still has hope that we can come to an arrangement. I think we all do. Now is not the time to discuss such things however. We must remain focused and alert now. This cave... there is something that is not right.

Kasdan couldn't help but nod his head. On that we agree completely. He said. It is like... there is... something here.

Aricia nodded. Evil

They hugged the walls of the cave tunnel, Murano and Pablo on one side, Martin and Kenny on the other as they came to the juncture in the tunnel. The branching tunnel became much more obvious to them from their current position and they saw it actually went in two different directions as well as moving on directly to their front.

Which direction? Martin asked.

Kenny motioned slightly with his KM12 to the east tunnel. That way.

We could get all confused in here if we start splitting up Martin. Murano spoke.

Martin nodded. Yeah. His head tilted slightly and his eyes narrowed. Listen. He spoke. You hear that?

All of them focused and Kenny heard it first. Sounds like humming of some kind.

Machinery? Pablo spoke.

Or a generator. Murano said.

Same direction as our friends. Martin spoke.

Yep. Pablo agreed.

Martin withdrew the Dragon Armor forged Hador fighting knife from the sheath on his thigh and softly scrapped an arrow in the rock of the tunnel pointing back in the direction they had come. He turned as he replaced the knife. Aricia... bring the others and follow five meters back. Martin watched as she nodded and then he turned and looked at Kenny. Move.

Kenny lifted his KM12 and began to move forward in a crouch. He had gone three steps when the very terrified and shrill feminine voice reached their ears easily.

“No! Stay back! No more! Stay away! No... stop... ughh!”

The female voice was cut off as if something had stopped her screams. Whether it was the wolf within their blood that was so very protective of females, or the Spartan values that they all clung to so furiously now, Murano would never know the answer to that question as he watched Martin, Kenny and Pablo all surge forward within milliseconds of each other. He followed three steps behind them. The sprint last fifteen meters and they all skidded to a halt as the tunnel opened into a large room and stopped. In that room were all sorts of mechanical machinery, much of which Murano recognized with barely a glance. They also saw two of the Svorag in the process of raping a dark haired Pralor female, her body already covered in copious amounts of their excrement and sandwiched between them. Her eyes were glazed over and unresponsive as they used her body. Another Svorag was on top of the Pralor female who had obviously shouted, its long tongue almost fully seated in her throat and preparing to attach itself to the inside of her throat. She was gagging horribly and slamming her fists against the Svorag's side trying to fight it, but she was obviously not up to the task. She was equally as naked as the first woman and it appeared as if she had been raped as well given the liquid and excrement that was visible on her skin. Two others were waiting, their bodies already aroused and weaving back and forth in anticipation of their conquest.

A conquest they would never experience.

Kenny and Pablo broke left by some unspoken order, their KM12s spitting silent death as they moved. The two Svorag never knew what hit them as both Kenny and Pablo fired twice in quick succession. All four kinetic projectile rounds struck true and their heads blew open with hideous splashing sounds. The cave wall and most of the woman's upper body were suddenly coated in their blood and brain matter, though the woman was completely out of it and had no idea what was happening. Pablo caught the woman before she fell from between the now dead Svorag, her body already beginning to change from what Pablo could see, her skin beginning to turn a greenish color and begin to harden. He lowered her to the floor of the cave quickly, but then he and Kenny kept their weapons trained on her.

Martin and Murano broke to their right in the same instant, Murano watching with wide eyes as Martin swung his left arm forward while bringing his right hand up filled with KM12. Murano watched as Martin's Shi Viska burst from Flatspace and the shield launched from his arm an eye blink later. Just as Martin was pulling the trigger the Shi Viska cleaved one of the waiting Svorag completely in half. The second waiting Svorag's eyes grew wide when he saw Martin, but by then the two 12.7mm kinetic projectiles were punching through his forehead and blowing his brains onto the floor behind him. Martin had given the order to retool most of their standard sidearms with the Kavalian 12.7mm projectile. The kinetic round carried more weight and punch in it and when chambered to be fired from the KM12 or KM14, it was devastating at close range. Murano watched as Martin stepped up to the remaining Svorag, his Hador then appearing in his hand as if by magic, and he slashed viciously downward severing the Svorag's tongue while it was still trying to fully sink into the struggling woman's throat. Martin then placed the barrel of his KM12 against the temple of the Svorag.

"Eat this motherfucker!" Martin snarled as he pulled the trigger.

The 12.7 mm projectile took off the upper two thirds of the Svorag's head, physically launching the body off the young woman who immediately rolled to her side, clawing at the still wiggling tongue in her throat before she got her hands around it and yanked it free as she gagged. The Svorag's body landed two meters away, slamming into the cave wall with a sickening thud before slamming to the cave floor.

"Clear!" Kenny hissed softly.

"Clear here!" Martin popped as he turned and watched Murano move to the woman's side.

The young Pralor female looked up into Murano's face as he settled to one knee beside her. Her light blue eyes looked confused for a moment as she felt his Etheric essence flood her as only a Praetorian could. Her eyes cut to Martin because she felt the same thing coming from him if not even stronger.

"Prae... Praetorian?" She stammered.

Murano nodded his head as he began to pull at his body armor in order to cover her nakedness. "Yes child." He spoke calmly.

"Murano no!" Martin snapped.

"Martin we have to cover her!" Murano protested.

"Leave your armor on!" Martin hissed at him. "Kenny... find me something to cover them!"

"On it!" Kenny spoke.

"We have it Kenny." Aricia's voice spoke and they turned to see Aricia and Danny leading the others into the small dead end cave. She and Isabella rushed forward pulling light weight polymer blankets from their small combat butt packs. Isabella moved to the dark haired woman while Aricia settled next to Murano and spread the blanket over her.

"Garan!" Martin hissed sharply. He waited until Garan looked at him. "Security."

Garan nodded and motioned to his men and watched as they took up positions and T'lolt situated himself behind them in a covering mode with the Hades chain cannon. Murano helped Aricia to tuck the blanket around the young woman, her eyes moving between him and Martin almost nonstop.

"They... the Praetorians." She managed to gasp. "They... they all... they were killed in the last war!"

Murano gave her a small smile. "No... not all of us." He told her. "Who are you child? You did not come to Onterom with our group."

"Your group?" She asked. "I came with the... with the station's crew. Who... where did you come from?"

“The station’s crew?” Aricia asked softly looking at Murano.

“What is your name?” Murano asked her.

“Ja... Jacina.” She stammered. “How...”

“You were part of this station’s crew Jacina?” Murano asked.

The young woman nodded. “Geina as well.” She spoke motioning to the other woman with her head.

“What do you remember last Jacina?” Aricia asked her.

Jacina looked at the woman with the strange luminous blue eyes. “Who... who are you?” She asked.

“You are not... you are not Pralor. Not fully.”

Murano reached out and used two fingers to draw her face back to his. “Jacina... what do you last remember?” He asked again.

“The... the attack Praetorian.” She answered immediately. “We were trying to escape and destroy our research. The Svorag... they breached the defenses from underneath. They...” Her eyes grew wide. “...I remember being hit from behind and then being dragged. And then... then nothing!” She looked at Murano. “How long has it been? We did not expect a ship for several days! We were escaping in the transports and were going to wait in orbit. Where are the others?”

“Wait a minute.” Martin said moving between Murano and Aricia. “Others? What others?”

“I was... we were the last group to leave.” Jacina explained. “We were told to destroy our research and then move to the transport bay to be taken to our ships. When we got there... no one... no one was waiting. We...” She looked around now and seemed to take in where she was. “Where am... where am I?”

Martin looked at Aricia. “Others?” He said. “That’s just wonderful!”

Full realization must have struck Jacina then for she began screaming and trying to push herself away from them. “NO! By the spirits no! They... they used me! Raped me! I will... I will become like them! I am infected now! No! Spirits preserve me no! I beg you!”

Aricia gripped her tightly and pulled Jacina close to her. As a woman who had been taken against her will, Aricia knew what was flashing through her mind right now, and she needed to have rock like support in order to survive this ordeal. “I have you!” She spoke softly. “I have you!”

“I don’t want to be like them!” Jacina sobbed as she buried her face in Aricia’s chest. “Kill me! Kill me please!”

Martin looked at Kenny. Kenny. You and Pablo find me others. No more than 200 meters out! Then haul ass back here. He told them within Mindvoice.

They nodded and headed down the tunnel. Murano looked at him. Her screams will not draw attention. He spoke.

We hope. Martin spoke.

It apparently is something that is common from their actions in bringing them here. Murano said.

[Murano... she doesn’t know they never got off this world.] Martin said. [She thinks it’s only a few hours after the assault began. It’s been over nine hundred years. I may not know much about your people... but I know what my nose is telling me... and it is telling me she is roughly twenty-seven or twenty-eight years old and not a day older.]

Murano nodded. [Her Etheric resonance also tells me the same thing.]

[So my next questions are... how is that possible? How is she just now realizing this and where are our people? The ones we came into this place for.] Martin hissed.

Murano shook his head. [I do not know. Something tells me we are not going to like the answers we find.]

[You think?] Martin snapped. He turned back to where Aricia and Isabella were looking over the two females with Julie. He moved over to kneel beside Isabella and saw Jacina’s eyes turn to look at him. “Bella?” Martin whispered.

Isabella shook her head. “I am no doctor Du’ased m’ranndii but if Anja is correct in what she has learned, this one is already starting to change. Her skin is altering and she is completely out of it. Unconscious right now.”

“You must... you must kill us!” Jacina hissed through her tears. “We will change and become like them! I do not... I don’t wish that!”

Martin looked at her. "I have no intention of killing you." Martin hissed. "My wife and mate... she has a cure. We just need to get you back to the station."

"There is no cure and the station is overrun!" Jacina gasped. "We can't go back there!" Martin looked at Aricia and then back to her. "They... they came through the vents in the floor near the core!" She continued. "They were all over before we could act! We can not go back!"

"Jacina... things aren't exactly as you remember." Martin spoke gently. "Who do you think we are?"

Jacina blinked. "You... you are a Praetorian! He is as well." Jacina said as Murano came up behind Martin. "We... we thought the Praetorians were all lost in the war. How... you came from the ship yes? The one that was coming to get us?"

"Ahh... no." Martin answered. "Jacina... I am not fully Pralor."

Jacina's blue eyes blinked rapidly. "Not fully... but I... I can feel your Etheric resonance. Both of you. No one but... no one but a Praetorian could be felt so strongly within the Etheric realm. You are... you are stronger than him... but..." Her eyes narrowed as she stared at Martin in confusion. She glanced at Aricia and then Isabella and then back to Martin. "You... you did not expect to find me?" She finally stammered.

Martin shook his head. "No. We entered this cave looking for our people. Ten individuals that we lost."

"Cave?" Jacina asked. "There area around the station was catacomb with tunnels." She spoke quickly. "I... I came down with the senior engineers once to establish a secondary power coupling bypass. They... they used the tunnels and caves!"

Martin nodded. "Yeah... we figured that out already." He said.

Murano reached out and took her hand. "Jacina... when did you send the distress call?" He asked.

"Six days ago!" Jacina exclaimed. "When we discovered that somehow the Svorag had begun to breed. A handful of them escaped from the holding pen into the area around the station three weeks ago. We searched for them but could not find them. The Commander said they would die of malnutrition in days and we would stumble across their remains months later. We did not think they... that they would breed."

Murano looked at Martin quickly and then back to Jacina. "You were not here to find a cure for the infection?" He asked.

Jacina nodded. "Yes. I was... I was with the medical research team. We were trying to discover a cure but the others..."

"The others?" Aricia asked her.

Jacina nodded quickly. "They had the entire lower portion of the station. The secured area. Only the Station Commander could enter. We... we did not think it anything when we requested a specimen and it was delivered to us. Our job... our job was to find a cure. I don't know what they were doing in the lower levels but there were genetic scientists as well as bio-molecular specialists and DNA splicing researchers. We did not... we did not mix with them very much. They were... they were very odd."

"Odd how?" Murano asked.

"They did not seem to be interested in a cure." Jacina said. "No one... no one knows what they were working on, but it certainly was no cure. We were told not to question them or try to enter the secured areas of the station. They worked directly for the Science Convention."

Martin looked at Murano. "Wow... that's surprising." He said sarcastically.

Murano looked at Jacina. "Jacina... there is much you don't know child." He spoke softly to her. "The time is not the same as you think."

"The time?" Jacina asked looking at him and then her eyes darted between all of them before settling back on Murano. "I... I don't understand Praetorian. What... what is going on?"

"Jacina... this station was sealed and abandoned over nine hundred years ago." Murano told her. "You... your colleague... all of you were declared dead at that time."

Jacina shook her head quickly. "That is not possible!" She gasped. "There were only three hundred and nine cryo chambers here. They were already full of our people that had been infected. Their lab was sealed when the attacks started. We were to destroy our work and then run to the transports! They..."

Skipper! Kenny's voice interrupted her words and he sounded very anxious.

Go! Martin hissed.

Ah... Martin... you might want to see this. Kenny spoke again.

You find our people? Martin asked him, his eyes going to Aricia. Kenny never used his name unless they were in big trouble and Aricia and the others knew it.

Shit! Danny muttered. Things just got worse.

I don't think we are going to find our people Skipper. You better see this. Come back down the tunnel. Take the other turn and fifty meters ahead you'll find us on a ledge. Beat feat Skipper. Kenny said.

Martin met Aricia's eyes. "Stay put. Danny, Murano, Kasdan... you're with me."

"Hurry Beloved." Aricia said. "We must get them back to Melyanna."

Martin nodded his head. "Be ready to move." He said before turning and beginning to move off down the tunnel with the others in tow.

Jacina squeezed her arms. "What is happening?" She stammered.

Aricia looked at her and then cut her eyes to Isabella. She looked back to Jacina. "You are safe now." She said. "That is all that matters."

"Fuucckkkkk me!" Martin hissed in a whisper.

The ledge overlooked what could only be described as a massive chamber. In the center of the chamber on the ground some hundred and fifty meters below them appeared to be a massive generator of some kind put together with parts and conduits of an incredible assortment and made to work together. Nothing looked uniform or like it belonged together. The generator was pulsing with power however and thousands upon thousands of individual organic like cables crisscrossed the floor of the massive cavity running to what appeared to be organic cryo type chambers of some kind.

Each one appearing to contain a Svorag.

"By the ancestors." Murano gasped in awe.

"I'm just guessing here..." Danny spoke softly. "But this is probably not a good thing... right?"

"Not if you're us." Pablo echoed softly.

Martin dropped back beneath the natural rock wall that slanted downward to their front and blocked them from view for the most part. "Kasdan!" Martin whispered. "Tell me what you see? I'm guessing this is your power source."

Kasdan did not truly want to be here but he listened to Martin regardless. The very presence of Murano and this man inspired him. He crawled slowly on his belly until he was at the edge of the natural wall and slowly peeked his eyes around the edge. They grew wider as he took more in.

"Oh... my. By the Blessings of our people!" Kasdan whispered. He quickly got hold of his emotions however and took a careful look at what he saw. "They appear to be some sort of cryo chambers. The... the power source looks like a crude fusion reactor of some sort. The cables are feeding power to the chambers and keeping their environments intact." His eyes drifted slowly over the area below. "There seems to be a main computer core scavenged from other systems off to the side of the core that is maintaining the stasis of the chambers."

Martin looked at him. "I thought these things operated off basic instincts?" Martin asked.

Kasdan inched back and looked at him. "I... I have not worked on any project related to the Svorag, but that is what the general premise is... yes."

"So much for the idea they can't breed huh?" Danny spat.

Murano nodded. "Yes... I believe we can answer that question easily." He spoke. "I would estimate several thousand of these pods."

"We have seen only those five from the cave." Kasdan spoke. "Guards of some sort?" He asked.

Martin nodded. "That would be my guess." He stated. "Which means there are probably more of them."

"Martin... we must gather our people and go." Murano spoke urgently. "The more time we spend within these tunnels the more chance of us being discovered. The Svorag know these tunnels and we do not."

"I won't leave our people!" Martin hissed.

"He's right fervon." Danny whispered to him. "As much as it tears at my gut too, we have no choice. We'll never find our people in this maze. We risk everyone by staying here."

"Fuck!" Martin snarled softly.

Kenny leaned over and glanced down, his eyes immediately detecting the movement of four Svorag that were now within the main chamber and looking directly at where they were hiding. One of them appeared to be wearing what was left of one of their uniforms. “Ah... Skipper... I don’t think we have much of a choice.” He stated quickly moving back behind the wall. “These things inherit the talents of whoever they absorb... right?”

Murano nodded his head. “To some degree yes. That is the general hypothesis. I do not wish to test that theory however.”

“Yeah... well I think one of our people just made us.” He stated without looking at him. “They were...”

The horrible screeching noise caused all of them to cringe as it echoed off the walls of the main chamber. Martin quickly glanced around the edge of the wall and saw the Svorag Kenny had been talking about, one who definitely wore the tattered remains of a Union uniform, his malformed jaw and mouth now fully open as he was unleashing the insidious screeching howl while looking directly at them. He had moved closer to their position, moving up what appeared to be a natural sloped stairwell that wound all the way up to where they were.

“Fuck!” Martin hissed bringing his KM12 up in a single, smooth motion and unleashing one silenced round. The kinetic projectile covered the eighty downward meters between them in a blink and punched through the Svorag’s screeching mouth. His body flipped backwards, ending his screeching and scattering his skull over the three others who were with him. “Go with the gods!” Martin whispered softly.

The other three Svorag quickly took up the horrible screeching and Martin saw two more appear from a side tunnel on the bottom and move to the makeshift computer core and begin manipulating the controls. Instantly the noise in the massive chamber changed and all of them took note that many of the chambers were now beginning to power down.

“Ah fuck!” Martin hissed. “They’re waking up their friends! Time to go!” The others were already moving as Martin rolled back behind cover and sprang to his feet. “Go! Go!” He barked. Aricia! Meet us at the intersection! He barked out within Mindvoice. We need to go! Now!

On our way!

Martin holstered his silenced KM12 as he ran, dropping his hands to pick up the A4 which was bouncing around from the quick release straps. It took them moments to cover the distance back to the intersection where Martin had scrapped the wall only to see Aricia and Isabella leading the others to them. Julie was helping Garan to support the nearly comatose woman, while T’lolt brought up the rear, the Pralor Jacina between him and Julie and Garan.

Martin didn’t hesitate before barking out the orders. “Out!” He snapped. “Now! Back to the entrance!” No one questioned him in the least as Kenny and Pablo rushed forward to take the lead as they always did.

Martin activated his emergency COM beacon and was about to begin speaking when the Svorag arrived. He brought his A4 up and began to chop out rounds in their direction as Danny and Murano moved up beside him, his COM unit still broadcasting.

“Fuck! They’re all over!” Danny screamed as he used controlled bursts to take down Svorag advancing on them with speed and agility. His head turned and he saw them burst clean through a wall of soft dirt camouflaged as a normal solid wall and begin to pour out. “Shit... trap doors! Coming from north and east!”

“Pull back to the entrance!” Martin’s order thundered. “Shit! This isn’t good! Shit! Shit!”

“Our people Martin!” Isabella’s screamed out.

“We can’t save them now!” Martin screamed back. “Take the two woman we found and go Bella! We’ll cover!”

“They are infected Martin!” Aricia’s snapped but with no vitriol in her voice.

“Red can fix them!” Martin answered instantly. “It’s not fully complete yet but she was close to figuring out how to fix them! Now take them and go Saaurano!”

T’lolt’s chain gun firing could be heard from in front of them and Martin whirled around. “There are too many!” His voice carried over the noise, though it remained strangely calm considering what was obviously happening. “They have these hidden tunnels all over! We should probably leave quickly Martin!”

“Move! Move! Move!” Martin shouted as A4s firing around him erupted from everyone. “Time to cut our losses and go! Take them and go Aricia! Endy! Endy can you hear me?”

All of them heard Endith’s slightly high pitched voice answer instantly. “We’re here Skipper!”

“Prep a Bunker Buster and lock onto the entrance of this cave Short Stuff! We have to bring it down or these fucking things will be all over us like stink on shit!” Martin barked the order. “We’re falling back to the entrance. Three minutes Endith! Then prepare for dust-off!”

“On our way!”

Wayonn’s voice broke into Martin’s COM unit. “Martin! What is your situation?”

“Wayonn! Shit... we’re running like the Hounds of Hell are after us! Can’t you tell?” Martin answered. “There’s a whole nubous nest of these lizard fuckers down here! Thousands of them! Practically right under the fucking station!”

“Nubou lae!” Wayonn hissed.

“Yeah... that’s about the... SHIT!” Martin barked as he saw a Svorag burst from the soft dirt of the wall right behind Danny and begin to open its mouth and raise its clawed hands. Martin stepped toward the only man he had ever considered a brother, his right hand going to his sword pommel instinctively. As his fist closed around it and yanked it free from the Velcro he called the blade from Flatspace with a sizzle and with a flick of his wrist he snapped out with the blade. The Dragon Armor forged blade removed the Svorag’s head in a smooth motion with no resistance. Danny spun around as he felt the wisp of wind from the strike against the back of his neck and he saw the Svorag’s body fall with a sloppy sound. He looked at Martin as he aimed the pommel and pressed the trigger on the handle. A single blast from the energy cell in the pommel hilt hit another Svorag center mass of his chest and blew a large section of his torso away. Danny looked at Martin, saw him flash a smile and Danny grinned. His brother would never desert him.

“Faster!” Murano’s voice echoed. “Move faster! All of them are waking up now!”

“Wayonn... have Avi seal every exterior vent entrance to the station!” Martin barked out as he continued to half run and half walk behind the others as he covered them. “Then pull Delnash and his people in with ours! I won’t let them face this outside! They’ll be overrun and won’t know how to deal with it! Have Arzoal and the other dragons move to high ground somewhere!” He looked around at Danny and his eyes went wide. “We... fervon! Danny down!”

Danny didn’t hesitate and ducked as Martin’s A4 thundered. A single three round burst shredded the brains of another Svorag as Danny spun while on his knees and unleashed a sustained burst down the tunnel behind them, dropping at least six of the advancing Svorag. He heard Martin cuss.

“Fuck! Lost COMs!” Martin snarled. He glanced up, saw a row of Svorag come tearing around the corner, several of them running practically on all fours. Martin dropped his A4 to dangle and lifted his hands in front of him. He called forth the Etheric power at his command and using his hands as the conduit he sent a crushing wave of Etheric power rushing outward that encompassed the entire tunnel width.

Murano saw this move and with barely a thought he stepped behind that wave of power Martin had sent hurtling down the tunnel and drove his fist into the ground just as Martin had done earlier when fighting the Pralor Security troops. Murano altered the surge of Etheric power through the ground differently than Martin had, sending a lethal concussive force as opposed to Martin just knocking over the Pralor Security Forces. As Martin’s shattering wave of Etheric power lifted every Svorag in the tunnel up and carried them back with horrific force, Murano’s lances of Etheric power struck like bolts of lightening through the tunnel floor and caused bones to shatter and internal organs to implode. He needn’t have bothered he realized a instant later, for the wave of Etheric power that Martin had sent out was far more deadly than he had first thought. Having been caught up in the full force of that wave of psychic energy from Martin had instantly crushed cells and bones and caused internal blood vessels to implode even as it tossed Svorag bodies back like simple dolls. Murano should have known that Martin would have used lethal force to protect those with him. The combination of two such devastating attacks right on the heels of each other gave them the break they needed however and Murano turned to Martin and Danny as T'lolt moved up behind them.

“I believe we have worn out our welcome... if ever we had one to begin with.” Murano spoke. “Leaving would be very advisable.”

“No shit! You think!” Danny snarled at him with no malice.

“I fucking hate caves!” Martin screamed as he yanked a plasma grenade from his combat harness, depressed the detonator and hurled it down the tunnel with all of his strength. “Go! Go! Go!” He rasped out, grabbing Danny and T'lolt with his hands as Murano raced in front of them.

“...come on Marty!” Endith nearly shouted. “Come on!”

Tina’s eyes were locked on the large sensor screen she sat in front of behind Endith while Eirene occupied the seat her mother would normally be in. “Ten meters!” Tina barked. “Fuck there are a lot of contacts! Motion sensors are off the chart!”

“Eirene!” Endith barked as she held the STRIKER steady in hover mode a hundred meters off the ground and only sixty meters from the entrance of the cave.

“Missile is ready!” Eirene snapped the worry in her voice very evident.

“There!” Tina screamed. “Aricia and the others just broke out!”

“The Skipper?” Endith shouted.

“Moving faster than I have ever seen him and Danny moving before!” Tina snapped back. “They must be dragging T’lolt and Murano!”

“They are too close to medwan and the others!” Eirene barked.

Endith snapped her head forward and saw the targeting shield drop over her right eye. “Not for long.” She growled viciously. “Charging Kinetic Cannon!”

“Three meters! Two! One!” Tina barked out. “Endy now!” Tina screamed knowing what her elf lover was thinking.

Endith mashed her index finger down on the trigger of her throttle control before Tina had even finished yelling. The nose of the STRIKER Mk II roared to life as the imbedded Kinetic Pulse Cannon, a weapon made to fire in space, erupted. A white flame like tongue reached out and the front of the cave became a no man’s land as kinetic projectiles began to strike everything within a three meter cone of fire. A smaller version of the Type Two series generator powered the cannon and allowed it to toss out kinetic rounds at a horrific rate. The front of the cave disintegrated into rock and dust and Svorag flesh. When she saw Martin and the others clear that dust cloud she gave the order.

“Now Eirene!” She screamed.

Eirene’s finger was moving already and she stabbed down on the control panel and the concussion missile sizzled away from the right launcher under the short wing and raced into that cloud. There was perhaps a four second delay where everything appeared to stop and then the explosion hit. And an explosion it was. The entire mouth of the cave and the portion of the mountain above it heaved upward and then came crashing down in a cloud of dirt and debris that had been pulverized by the force of the missile’s warhead.

“Holy fuck!” Tina exclaimed as she watched it on the monitor in front of her. “Eirene?” She gasped.

Eirene Leonidas didn’t turn her head from watching the scene below her. “They were trying to kill my father and two of my mothers!” She snarled angrily. “I don’t like it when people try to kill my father and mothers!”

A small split Tina’s face. “You don’t say!” She barked out. “Couldn’t tell it from here! Just like your mother... yes sir!”

“Fucking A!” Endith shouted with glee.

Aricia’s coughing voice filled the internal COM. “Endith... land quickly!” She ordered. “We must get our passengers back to Anja immediately!”

“Coming down Aricia!” Endith barked as she yanked her controls over and the STRIKER Mk II darted to the right over the trees and began to settle to the ground in the clearing.

Murano looked back at the entrance to the cave as he spit dirt from his mouth and slowly got to his feet as they heard the STRIKER’s engines change their tone as it began to land. He turned back to Martin. “Your... your pilot seems rather protective of you Martin my boy!” He barked loudly trying to shake the ringing from his ears.

Martin’s eyes were wide as well as he coughed to get the dirt out of his mouth. “Jesus... I guess so!” He spat.

The cloud of dust and smoke was beginning to drift away on the breeze coming through the trees and they stood looking at what could only be described as a portion of the mountain having been dropped on the entrance.

“Fuck me!” Danny exclaimed. “I’m buying her a brew! She must have buried a couple hundred of them with that shot!”

Martin grabbed T'lolt’s arm as he rose to his full height. “T'lolt?”

Cha'talla’s brother looked down at Martin with a grin a mile wide. “Cha'talla told me working with you would be exciting!” He bellowed. “He had no idea how wrong he was! I haven’t had this much fun in three millennia!”

“I don’t usually drop mountains on my enemies!” Martin shouted over the ringing in his own ears.

“But what a glorious event it was!” T'lolt barked happily. “We must do it again soon!”

Martin stood there and watched in shock as T'lolt gripped his Hades tighter and headed for the clearing. He looked at Danny and Murano. Danny held up a finger and shook his head. “You brought him.” He spoke as he began to walk toward the clearing. “And here I thought you were the only certifiable lunatic in our group!” Danny muttered under his breath but loud enough that they could hear his words echo in his surface thoughts. “Now we have two! And one of them has bones sticking out of his face! Man... Anuk and Nubian will never believe this!”

Murano gripped Martin’s arm. “I must say... dropping the mountain on them would not have been my first choice. It was very effective however!”

Martin looked at him. “They came through the sub levels of the station before and we have to expect they will again.” Martin said. “It’s time we left this fucking planet behind. All of us.”

Murano nodded. “I couldn’t agree more.”

“First... first we get answers.” Martin snarled as he turned and headed for the clearing. He and Murano sprinted to where the STRIKER was resting, its engines still churning and aching to get back into the sky. As he came up the ramp he saw Aricia holding Jacina close to her, speaking soft soothing words. The second Pralor female was stretched out on the web bench with Isabella seeing to her as well as she could medically. Kenny was sitting with her just in case anything happened that they were unprepared for. Martin moved quickly to the cockpit as the ramp began to come up and he took the four stairs in one stride. He looked at Tina as he passed and leaned over to kiss her cheek before moving up behind Endith’s chair. “Next time you think you could warn me you wanted to drop the mountain on them.” He spoke leaning over beside her helmeted head and planting a kiss on her cheek.

Endith chuckled softly. She had been Martin’s pilot for nearly thirty years with Tina and For'mya, practically a member of his family as far as he and the others were concerned. She turned her head as she began to lift the ship into the air. “It wasn’t me boss man.” She stated as she motioned with her head. “Talk to your daughter. She has a mean streak in her like her mother.”

Martin turned and looked at Eirene who only gazed at him sheepishly. “They were trying to hurt you medwan.” She stated evenly.

Martin laughed and leaned over to rub his bearded face against her cheek and he touched her with a small bit of fatherly aura. Eirene giggled and relished in the attention as he drew back. “Endy... turn and burn back to the station.” Martin spoke. “These Svorag are becoming a much bigger problem than we first thought.”

“Yeah... no shit.” Tina spat. “Ugly bastards.”

“Let Anja know we are coming in with two patients for her.” Martin said. “The interior of the cave messed up our implants. Jules will have to re-sync them when we get back.”

Endith nodded as her hands flew across the controls in front of her. “On our way.” She said. “I’m guessing our Pralor friends didn’t tell us everything.” She spoke looking at Martin.

Martin shook his head. “Kasdan and Garan and those with us were just as surprised as we were.” He answered. “But you can bet some other asshole has answers. And I intend to get them.”

“Oh... take pictures!” Tina exclaimed.

All of them laughed as Martin turned and headed into the back of the STRIKER.

“...insane!” Lorendo nearly shouted as he was pushed out of the way and the two hover beds were moved past him. He turned to Delnash. “The station is secure and they bring two Svorag inside! Delnash you...”

Delnash looked at him. “Radra said they have a cure!” He spat. “I will give them the chance to prove it!”

“Delnash this is a risk that we should not take!” Lorendo snarled.

“They are our people!” Delnash braked at him. “The only survivors of this base thanks to you! I intend to find out what happen here and make sure they are cared for properly!”

“That savage female could not care...” Lorendo began but Delnash cut him off as he stepped closer.

“That savage female as you call her has done what you and all of your researchers could not do!”

Delnash snarled angrily at him. “If she has developed a cure then I intend to give her the opportunity to use it. She has already beat your ass once Lorendo... do you wish to have her do so again if we interfere?”

“She got lucky!” Lorendo growled.

Delnash laughed at him. “Lucky? You were the lucky one Lorendo... because you still breath. Your actions since all of this began is beginning to make me question many things Lorendo. Things that I don’t like. We will allow Anja Leonidas to treat these two females. She has shown more concern for them than you have.”

“Delnash you...” Lorendo began to speak but saw Delnash’s eyes cut to something behind him and he turned quickly to see Martin, Danny and Murano moving down the corridor towards them. Right behind them were Kasdan and Garan.

Delnash looked at Martin Leonidas and found himself feeling relieved that he was alive and unharmed. This surprised him somewhat, but not as much as he thought it would. Seeing his brother also made him feel relieved and happy that he too was unhurt, but he knew what his brother was capable of and this didn’t surprise him. These Svorag did not appear as capable as the Scourge and he had seen his brother hold back a Scourge attack of soldiers and several Holy Elites with devastating results.

“Uncle Murano!” Mari’s voice echoed and Delnash’s eyes narrowed as Mari burst from an adjoining corridor and ran to embrace Murano tightly, throwing her arms around his waist. Kesyla followed her and reached out to grip her uncle’s arms as Murano hugged Mari with one hand. Delnash watched as Daron moved over next to him shaking his head at his sister’s display toward their uncle.

Martin stopped in front of Delnash, his dark brown eyes boring into the man. “I think we need to have a talk Chief Elder.” Martin stated calmly.

Delnash nodded his head without pause. “Yes... I believe we do.” He stated.

“We have nothing to discuss with this...” Lorendo began to speak but Martin’s hand was suddenly wrapped around his throat and squeezing ever so gently. He pushed Lorendo back against the bulkhead wall firmly while maintaining eye contact with Delnash who did not appear upset in the least about his action.

Martin turned his eyes on Lorendo now and leaned closer to him. “Five more of my people are dead. Or turned into these fucking monsters which is the same damn thing!” Martin growled. “Five of your people as well. I will have answers to my questions about what your people were doing here!” Martin’s eyes changed and his fangs burst forth now, Lorendo’s eyes going wide. “We found a fucking nest of these creatures! Thousands of them! We found cryo chambers! Computers! All of which they had built!”

“Impossible!” Lorendo exclaimed his hands holding onto Martin’s wrist.

“Really?” Martin said. “Why don’t I take you down into those tunnels and show you?” He spat. “They came in from vent openings in the station... so I’m sure we could find one they used and toss your fat ass down it.”

Delnash looked at Kasdan and Murano. “You found these things?” He gasped.

Murano nodded his head, one arm curled around Mari’s waist. “And much more brother.”

“I was able to see some of their set up before they discovered us Chief Elder.” Kasdan spoke now. “It was crude by our standards... but it was working very well.”

Martin squeezed Lorendo’s throat a little harder. “And you are going to tell us.” Martin snarled at him.

“I don’t know...”

“If you know what was going on here you will tell us!” Delnash barked angrily. “I will know why you killed our people here and...”

“What?” Murano gasped. “What do you mean?”

Martin released Lorendo and looked at him. “Anja touched me on the way back. Lorendo here pumped lethal gas into all of the chambers holding your people. They’re dead.”

Murano’s eyes went wide. “You murdered them?” He growled menacingly stepping closer to him.

“I followed established security protocols!” Lorendo shouted as he rubbed his throat. “Something no one here is willing to do!”

“You murdered them.” Martin spoke evenly.

Delnash looked at Martin. “There is a large conference room on the third level of the station. We can go there.” He stated.

“Chief Elder... you are going to allow this?” Lorendo exclaimed. “You are going to let these primitive savages tell you what to do?”

Delnash looked at him. “At the moment... given what has happened in the last few hours... the only person I see acting savagely is you Elder Lorendo. You killed our people without my knowledge and I suspect you are withholding information about what was going on here. I want to know what it is these men and women were doing here! And I want to know how there is now a Svorag nest of several thousand strong on this planet using equipment and materials they should not be able to use.”

Martin looked at Danny. “Fervon... get our people down into the lower levels and make sure any vent shaft that Avi sealed that could lead into the ground below us is sealed shut from the outside.”

Danny nodded. “We’re on it.” He said.

Garan moved forward. “We will help you.” He stated.

Danny nodded. “Let’s move.”

“Fervon... once that is done... start packing our shit and loading the ships.” Martin said. “We’re done here and I’m not staying a moment longer than necessary.”

Danny nodded his head. “That fucking works for me too.”

Martin looked at Delnash who was gazing at him with wide eyes. “I want to know what this asshole has to say in case we run into these Svorag on our way back.” Martin told him. “You people can have your arrogant little gathering and superior attitude all you want.” Martin snatched Lorendo’s arm in his hand. “I will not be party to it. Let’s go igord. You got some talking to do.” Martin said. “Keep in mind if you don’t tell me what I want to know... I’m going to give you to those ugly lizard fuckers and do so with smile on my face.”

Delnash watched as Martin moved past him pulling Lorendo along. He turned to look at Murano as he came up. “Murano?” He gasped.

“I love you brother.” Murano said softly. “But Lorendo has been playing you for a fool for far too long.”

“He would not lie to me!” Delnash spat. “He... he has not told me everything... but he would not lie to me! He is an Elder on the Convention!”

“That is part of the problem Delnash.” Murano spoke evenly. “Perhaps now would be a good time to pull your head out of the sand and begin leading our people instead of letting fools like Lorendo lead you along like a dog on a leash.”

“How dare you!” Daron hissed angrily as he came up beside his father. “You can not speak to him like that!”

“I will speak to my brother however I deem nephew!” Murano spat. “Do not presume to tell me what I can or cannot do. You know nothing Daron. You care for nothing except your next female conquest!” Daron’s eyes grew a little wider and Murano chuckled. “What... do you think your activities go unnoticed? They do not. You should spend less time trying to bed every woman who crosses your path and more time trying to help your father see the truth!”

“Murano enough!” Delnash snapped.

Murano looked at him. “Heed my words to you now brother.” He spoke. “If our people fall again it will not be because of the Scourge or the Svorag. It will be because of you and Lorendo and the others like you who are so set on one path you can not see that... you can not see that path leads to nothing but darkness and death.”

“You have no right to say that!” Delnash hissed.

“As a Praetorian I have every right!” Murano hissed back. “Unlike you and the other Elders... I am not going to dismiss the Pralor blood that swirls within all of these Lycavorian people and the hope that could provide to our people. I will not dismiss it as you have. They are not primitive Delnash. Compared to them... we are the primitive ones.”

Murano pushed past him, Mari staying attached to her uncle like glue, her face beaming with pride at his words.

Radra watched as Anja finished injecting the vial of serum they had thrown together in under an hour into Jacina's arm. The injection was a crude form of introducing it into her body, but it was the best they could come up with given the time and condition of the medical bay. When Anja stepped back she turned and looked at the medical bio-scanner over the bed and adjusted the monitor.

Jacina looked at Aricia who sat on the edge of the bed and held her opposite hand. "I... I don't want to be like them." She said softly with moistness in her eyes.

Aricia squeezed her hand tightly, feeling a strength within this young woman that she did not show at the moment. "You will not." She said in reply. "Be strong Jacina... you will not end up like them. I trust Anja with my very life and breath. You will live many more years to come."

Dysea had come into the medical bay and she stepped up behind Aricia and placed her hand on Aricia's shoulder. She blinked quickly as visions flashed through her mind, images of affection and love and two others wound together tightly within Mindvoice with this young woman on the bed. She shook her head quickly to keep Anja and Aricia from noticing and she pressed against Aricia's side and looked at Jacina while Aricia stroked her hand.

Anja moved up beside Radra and they both looked at the screen now. "If we determined the correct variables of the MEV, we should see results almost instantly." She said.

Radra nodded her head. "They were correct." She said confidently. She ran her finger along the monitor. "Her infection was not as advanced as the other woman. She..." She tapped the monitor and smiled. "It's working! Her cells are reverting!"

Anja gripped her arm happily and her face lit up. "It works!" She exclaimed. "Carians thank you!" She hissed happily.

Radra was smiling as well as she adjusted the monitor with other readouts. "Her base DNA is overwriting the mutation enzyme! Spirits... it's eating up the infection! Making her cells more powerful!"

"That effects should only last until the serum runs its course." Anja said adjusting the screen. "It will add base cells that will enhance her natural immunity then. The effects are not permanent. I hope."

Radra shook her head. "It doesn't matter. Using the core cells means they carry the Lycavorian healing gene in them. It will boost her system to levels not normally associated with Pralors. If it takes hold permanently, it will only benefit her in the long run."

"Will the rest of your people see it that way?" Anja asked her.

Radra met her eyes. "I have no intention of telling them." She stated flatly. "They would fiddle and debate for decades. This is a viable cure Anja!"

Anja nodded. "Yes... but we should still tell them." She said. "If the core cells remain it will alter anyone injected with them serum. At least on a very small scale."

Radra nodded. "You are right." She said. "Perhaps there is a way to modify them so they burn themselves out after a fashion."

Anja nodded. "That is a solution and not so hard to accomplish either." She said. "We can work on that later I suppose... but we won't be staying here Radra. We..."

Radra shook her head. "No child... you won't be staying here. And neither will I. I have found people with a passion for medical science that matches my own in you and Duewa. I intend to come with you and discover all I can. I believe we could do great things working together."

Anja looked at her surprised but she remained silent. "Delnash might not like that." She said softly. "Though Duewa and I certainly would."

Radra grinned. "We'll discuss it more later. I think we'll have to adjust the serum to a higher level for it to work on the second female. She has already begun to change which means they were using her for longer." She spoke with disgust in her voice. "If she... I do not know how she will react if we can stop the process and she reverts back to normal. The infection has set in deeply and if all of our data is accurate that means they have been raping her for several days at least."

“We’ll cross that bridge when we come to it.” Anja said. “Right now let’s get to work on saving her.”

Martin paced back and forth in front of Avi, Murano, Helen and Wayonn sitting at one end of the table with Mari standing off to the side about mid way along the length of the table with Kesyla and Daron. Isabella, For’mya and Cirith sat on Wayonn’s left side while Delnash sat at the far end with Valael and Lorendo on either side of him, Kasdan and Garan standing behind them. Radra had not joined them yet as she was still in the medical bay. Martin turned as Danny entered the room and moved up to him.

“We found four vents that were still unsealed.” Danny reported. “Looks like they jammed the emergency gates open with something. Once Avi gave us the all clear we welded them shut. They ain’t getting through that way.”

Martin turned to Avi. “None of them made it into the station through these openings Avi?” He asked.

-My internal sensors can detect no lifesigns other than our people and the Pralors that accompanied Chief Elder Delnash- Avi answered him. -Reviewing the logs from Endith’s STRIKER I have determined that the entrance you collapsed was the only geological surface entrance to the tunnels below within forty kilometers of this station. We have bought ourselves time. I can not estimate how much however-

“Can you detect them if they begin to get close?” Martin asked. “You can damn sure bet they will be coming for us.”

-Arzoal and Torma have devised a rotating schedule to keep dragons in the sky at all times- Avi answered him. -I should be able to detect them if they come within ten kilometers. I can not guarantee that however-

Martin nodded. “Good enough.” He said turning back to Danny. “Stand them down for now fervon. We’ll begin loading in the morning and get gone from here.”

Danny nodded. “Will do.” He spoke.

Martin waited until Danny had turned and headed for the door before he looked across the table at Delnash and Lorendo. “I came here... I came here hoping to find answers to questions I have had for the better part of my life after I was pulled from my sleep chamber. I wanted to discover about my grandfathers Sumar and Resumar. Once Wayonn discovered that the Pralors had survived the Scourge, it was really all that occupied my thoughts. His thoughts. All of us really... for the vast majority of my people have Pralor blood within them even on a miniscule scale. I certainly did not expect to find what I have. The contempt. The revulsion. The arrogance. For a species that is supposed to be seeders of life... you really have no concern for those you use in that purpose. My son Androcles was right. You consider yourselves better than everyone around you... and those you used for these seed missions no better than tools for you to use to inflate your already overblown egos.”

Murano leaned forward. “Martin... this does not apply to all of our people.” He said. “You have seen this yourself.”

Martin nodded. “Yes I have.” He answered. “But the men and women in power among the Pralor people appear to have a very large hold over the rest of your people. That begs the question how much? How many will share the same misguided views Murano? How many will view us as they do?” He pointed at the other end of the table.

“Your actions so far have only proven what we all know to be true.” Lorendo snapped.

“Be silent Lorendo!” Delnash hissed harshly.

“Why?” Lorendo barked. “Why are we even sitting here discussing anything with them?”

“I want to know what you were doing here?” Martin asked.

“I do not answer to you!” Lorendo bellowed coming to his feet. “You are... you are nothing more than the primitive savage I know your people to be! You...”

“You don’t know jack shit about my people!” Martin snapped cutting off his words. “You don’t know a hell of a lot from what I have seen.”

“You may not answer to him... but you do answer to me.” Delnash spoke now. “And you will tell us what research was being conducted here at this station Lorendo. It has already cost us over three hundred lives because you were trying to hide it. You will answer for that... but I want to know what it is you were doing that allowed you to sacrifice so many of our people without care?”

Lorendo looked at him. “Everyone here was a volunteer!” He snapped. “They knew the risks!”

“The medical researchers had no idea what you were doing in the lower levels!” Valael barked. “That is what the young girl Jacina told them!”

“And you believe them?” Lorendo gasped. “I wish to question her myself! I...”

“You won’t set foot within ten meters of her!” Anja’s voice growled and everyone turned to see her walk in with Dysea and Radra.

“Red?” Martin asked.

Anja moved up in front of him and placed her hand on his chest affectionately. “We did it Lover.” She told him with bright jade colored eyes. “Jacina is completely free of the infection and the other one, Recia is her name, the treatment is slowly purging her body of the infection as well.”

“Aricia and Melda Min?” Martin asked.

Anja gripped his hand. “Jacina has... it’s odd... they have developed sort of a connection with each other in so short a time. Aricia didn’t want to leave her and Dysea wanted to stay with them as well.”

Delnash came to his feet his face stunned. “Radra... Radra is this true?” He asked.

Radra looked at him. “It’s very true.” She answered him. “We have synthesized a variable serum that will work on all but those who are fully changed Delnash. And with further work we can turn it into a vaccine to inoculate the rest of our people.”

“How is... how is that possible Radra?” Delnash asked.

Radra looked at Anja with a smile. “Anja and Duewa did the vast majority of the work prior to coming here. The last pieces fell into place when they were able to access the medical database that our people had here.” She turned back to Delnash. “Both Jacina and Recia will make complete physical recoveries. Their emotional state however... that will need time to heal and repair. If it ever does.”

“You are sure?” Delnash asked.

“Anja and Duewa’s medical knowledge matches my own Delnash.” Radra spoke. “In some ways it exceeds what I know because they do not limit themselves to certain ways of thinking.”

“This is nonsense!” Lorendo declared. “You have become taken with these people that is all! They could not have developed a serum so quickly when...”

“Why not?” Anja popped. “All you were concerned with here is turning the infection into a weapon! Isn’t that right?”

“You do not know of what you speak!” Lorendo snarled.

“I know that Duewa and I are smarter than you fat man!” Anja snarled right back. “Whatever medical research you supposedly had going here was only to cover your efforts at turning this infection into a weapon! We figured that out within a day of looking through what was still within the database and what wasn’t. Where are those missing logs fat man?”

“Lorendo... what is she saying?” Valael asked.

“Fine! Since you think yourself so smart!” Lorendo spat. “We were studying what affect the infection had in certain environments!” He barked. “We were doing different chemical tests and any results we discovered were cross referenced medically to try and find a cure!”

“Rensibfla!” Anja snapped. “You were trying to develop a bio weapon!”

Delnash looked at him. “Is this true Lorendo?”

Lorendo looked at him. “We were trying to find a way to destroy them!” He snapped. “We have always been trying to do that! They have been a thorn in our side since they were discovered over twenty thousand years ago! They are nothing more than instinctual monsters. Driven only by the need to attack and turn others into themselves in the vilest means possible.”

“They are breeding.” Isabella hissed.

“Impossible!” Lorendo snapped. “Again... you know nothing of what you speak! Extensive studies have shown they can not breed among themselves!”

“It’s true Lorendo!” Kasdan spoke stepping forward. “They are breeding. Simply because they infect and change a fertile female does not take away their ability to have offspring! And they are absorbing the memories and knowledge of those they infect and turn.”

Lorendo turned and looked at him with wide eyes. “They are nothing more than primitive creatures!” He shouted. “They could not do this! What you speak of is outrageous!”

“Then how do you explain the thousands of pods we saw in the caverns?” Kasdan barked right back. “How do you explain that they built the machine we saw? A crude fusion reactor that was powering several thousand stasis pods of some sort? How do you explain that?”

“They are using weapons too.” Martin spoke. “The ones we encountered on Twelve Alpha were using older kinetic type projectile weapons. Not as advanced as ours... but still able to kill you just as easily! And they were using some form of advanced water transport as well.”

“None of this is possible!” Lorendo shouted.

Martin leaned on the table and glared at Lorendo. “Then how bout I take your fat ass and drop you into the tunnels to fend for yourself mister arrogant! I’m quite sure they would just love infecting your stinky ass!”

“I have looked at the star charts Wayonn showed me...” Valael spoke now. “The planet that Martin Leonidas refers to is not one of the planets where we knew Svorag colonies to be. How did they get there?”

“Ask Mister know it all!” Martin barked. “He seems to be all knowing about all things. The rest of us are too stupid to tie our own shoes!”

“Lorendo?” Delnash asked.

Lorendo shook his head. “These things they say... it can not be possible.” He said.

“Why?” For’mya barked. “Because you say so!”

“Lorendo?” Delnash hissed again more forcefully this time.

“I would need to... I would need to consult with my people on Artaaya.” He said finally. “The men and women who have made their life’s work studying the Svorag and ways to counter them.”

“Why would you need to counter them?” Martin asked quickly. “If they can do none of the things as you say... why would you need to counter what they do?”

Delnash came to his feet now. “Lorendo... answer the question?” He snapped.

“We... we have never been able to prove any of it!” Lorendo exclaimed finally. “Are you happy now? We have feared they were adapting... but we never had any proof! Do you feel like you have accomplished something now?” He snarled at Martin.

Delnash looked at him with wide eyes. “You have known this?” He gasped. “For how long?”

“Delnash...”

“How long damn you!” Delnash demanded.

Lorendo looked at him. “For nearly two thousand years!” Lorendo answered. “It is why I sent the Science Convention team here. To try and determine if any of what we thought was true.”

“So you brought them here?” Murano gasped. “You brought them here to experiment on them?”

“We brought twenty specimens!” Lorendo barked at him. “My team followed all of the proper protocols! I do not know how they escaped containment!”

“That’s why he erased the logs.” Cirith spoke now. “So no one would ever know what really happened here.”

“I ordered the logs erased because they were a threat!” Lorendo barked. “The information contained on them could have been severely dangerous in the wrong hands!”

“You sent them here suspecting what you did?” Valael shook his head. “You sent them to their deaths!”

“They volunteered!” Lorendo growled. “All of them! They knew the risks and they were willing to come in the hopes of protecting our people!”

“What a load of bullshit!” Anja snapped again. “You did not tell them how dangerous these lizard bastards are. Or had become. You did not tell them everything!”

“They were given enough knowledge to conduct their duties and no more.” Lorendo hissed at her.

“So they had no idea how dangerous you thought these Svorag had become.” Martin spoke.

“We did not know for sure.” Lorendo barked. “Why give them information they did not need or know was true.”

Martin shook his head slowly. “Man... you are one sleazy motherfucker.” He growled.

“I will examine the two females.” Lorendo spoke. “We can learn from them. Probe their minds to see how the Svorag were able to do all these things.”

“No.” Anja spoke firmly.

“Do not tell me what I can or can not do!” Lorendo snarled at her.

“Jacina and Recia are in my care now.” Anja told him. “You will not go near them. You will not turn them into lab rats to fuel your sick ego. And when we leave... they are going with us.”

Lorendo’s eyes went wide and he looked at Delnash. “They must not be allowed to take our people!” He barked. “They can not care for them!”

“I will care for them far better than you could on your best fucking day.” Anja snapped. “You go near them now and the beating I gave you will pale in comparison to the one I will give you if you so much as breath near them.”

“Chief Elder... you can not allow them to kidnap our people!” Lorendo exclaimed. “They need to remain with us so that we can learn what we can from them!”

“You mean so you can use them as experiments.” Martin snapped.

Lorendo dismissed him with a wave of his hand. “You are a primitive.” He snorted. “You know nothing but how to...”

Lorendo’s words were cut off as his body was suddenly lifted into the air and sailing across the room to slam into the wall. The impact against the wall was not painful, but it did end Lorendo’s words and then Martin was in front of him, his hand up and swirling with Etheric energy all around it as he held Lorendo in place against the bulkhead.

“You are beginning to give me a serious case of the monumental red ass fatso!” Martin snarled at him.

Murano and Wayonn looked at Helen instantly and she quickly shook her head. Their Etheric connection pulsed with power and influence and as Martin’s Praetorian Oracle she could feel it within him easily. He was angry yes... but he was holding that anger in by force of will alone. This wasn't like when he attacked in the vehicle bay, this was calm and focused. She lifted her hand from the table only slightly and shook her head once more indicating they should do nothing. They obeyed cautiously, but Helen knew Martin far better than either of them and she knew Martin was in full control of his actions.

“I came here hoping to find my history.” Martin said softly as he stared into Lorendo’s eyes. “I came here hoping maybe... just maybe to find my ancestors. So I could learn about my past and what it means. Instead I came here and found you. Eight of my men and women are now dead because of you Elder Lorendo. You almost killed my son. You have no idea how truly lucky you are right now. My son Androcles has appointed himself protector of his brothers and sisters and for hurting Fedor in the manner you did... you would already be decaying somewhere out in the forest. For striking his mother like you did he would have disemboweled you and left you to rot. For taking part in the killing of our men he would have broken every bone in your body and then given you to these Svorag assholes so you couldn’t fight back! Andro is... he is far less forgiving and tolerant than I am. It’s a trait I have been trying to work with him on... he doesn’t seem to want to learn it though. Go figure.

“It was a mistake coming out here.” Martin said as he lowered his hand but kept Lorendo pinned against the wall. “But it is a mistake I am going to rectify by leaving in the morning and not looking back on you sorry assholes.”

“We will not allow you to leave!” Lorendo hissed.

“Oh really...” Martin asked him. “How do you plan on stopping me tough guy?”

“We will destroy your ship before it leaves orbit!” Lorendo spat.

“Lorendo!” Delnash shouted aghast at this suggestion.

Martin chuckled. “So you would kill nearly ten thousand innocent men and women to sooth your bruised ego huh?” He said. “Wow... so much for that Pralor calmness and sense of peace. You’re nothing but a war mongering fool who got your ass handed to you by a woman not even half your size! If I really wanted to be a jerk... I’d let Anja have at you now for what you have done. She gets a mite testy when assholes kill her patients you know. And I'm not as stupid as you seem to think I am mister high and mighty Elder of the Pralor people. Avi?"

-The main system bypasses are in place Martin- Avi spoke as he came forward. -I have been communicating with Avatar 27 since the Pralor's arrival in the system-

Lorendo's eyes grew wide as did Delnash and Valael's. "What is this?" Delnash exclaimed. "What he is talking about?"

"Tell them Avi." Martin said his gaze never leaving Lorendo.

-A single command from me and I will initiate a ship wide power failure aboard your vessel- Avi answered. -All systems will be affected and you will have neither weapons, shields or propulsion for twenty-four hours. This will provide us sufficient time to make several jumps so that you can not track us-

"You are bluffing!" Lorendo snarled. "You could not possibly have gained access to the TALISMAN's Avatar!"

"I didn't." Martin said. "I asked Avi too. You see... unlike how you treat the Avatars you have, Avi is capable of making his own decisions now. It's how Sumar altered his programming when they were together. He is fully cognizant of his decisions and their ramifications. He has learned. Hell... he's almost human in nature."

-Please Martin...- Avi spoke. -Let's not exaggerate the extent of my progression. I am human like is a better definition-

Martin grinned. "Human like." He said looking at Lorendo. "Which means his distaste for you hasn't changed for nearly forty thousand years it seems. And we won't go into the reasons for that right now will be Lorendo my boy?" Lorendo's eyes darted to where Wayonn sat and then back to Martin. "Yeah... he wants to get you alone too."

Martin pushed away from Lorendo and turned to face Delnash. "We will go our separate ways tomorrow Chief Elder." He spoke respectfully which surprised Delnash. "I will not subject my people to more abuse at the hands of you and the arrogance of your people. I will take whoever is open minded enough and wishes to come with us... but I believe you already know Murano is returning with us. We are taking Jacina and Recia with us. I no more trust them in your care than I would one of my own children... not after what has happened and Lorendo's own words. Avi...?" He turned and held out his hand. Avi stepped forward and placed the small data disc in it. Martin turned back and moved up to Delnash and held it out. "This is for you Chief Elder. A little reading material. Do with it what you will." He looked at Delnash as he turned it over in his hand. "I had hoped to come out here and find answers and allies." He continued seeing Delnash look up at him. "I found arrogance, apathy and death. We will leave tomorrow morning... and we won't leave as friends or allies or enemies. But something in between. Once we do leave I will not look back. And whatever happens will be of your own doing. These Svorag are your problem... not mine. You can keep the cure Anja and Duewa developed with Elder Radra. I have no right to hold that back from you." Martin turned and walked back to where Anja stood. She wrapped her arms around his waist as he stopped next to her. "Know this however..." Martin spoke as he turned back around. "Your actions have guided my course and my decisions... and they will guide future decisions as well. Do not come after us thinking to take from us what we have built and now consider as part of us. If you do... you will find us not so easy to roll over. Your big ships will not matter in the least. I have ten times more ships than you do and I will not hesitate to use them. And I will unleash every weapon at our disposal against you in order to send you back to whatever hole you came from. And that includes my son and the dragons who fight with us. Trust me... you don't want my son Andro on your bad side... it's not real healthy."

"Martin you..." Wayonn began to speak but Helen and Murano both took his arms.

“No.” Helen said softly. “It needs to be this way.” She said. “No matter how much we wish it wasn’t so grandfather.”

“Teniri will return with you and put forth what she has discovered to the Dragon Elder Council on Artaaya.” Martin spoke. “If that council determines it is in the best interests of the dragons there to be reunited with their own kind within the Alpha Quadrant you will not interfere with that.” Martin spoke. “Teniri will contact me and I will send ships for them.”

“You think to remove the dragons from Artaaya?” Lorendo snarled.

“I won’t be removing them.” Martin answered. “I will be listening to what they want. You can not force them to remain and you risk a conflict with them if you do. As a Talon Guardian I am bound to their protection and their continued survival. If you fight them... you fight me.”

“Chief Elder...!” Lorendo gasped.

Delnash never took his eyes off Martin. “Lorendo... I demand your silence!” He snapped at him. “Enough damage has been caused by you!”

“You can have your power cells back and return to your ship tonight if you wish.” Martin said. “But any attempt to take Jacina or Recia from the medical bay and I will have my men shoot every one involved dead as shit.” He looked at Lorendo. “And a lot of them are just itching for the chance to blow your brains all over a wall somewhere fatso!”

“We... we will remain for the night.” Delnash spoke. “There is strength in numbers.”

Martin nodded his head. “Then there is nothing more to say.” He said. He reached for For’mya, Isabella and Cirith and they rose and moved over to take his and Anja’s hands. Martin Leonidas left the room without another word and Murano and the others filed out behind him without so much as a glance leaving only the Pralor people within the room.

Lorendo immediately began to complain but Delnash did not give him the chance. As Lorendo stepped up to him Delnash did something he had not done in millennia. He reared back with his fist and punched Lorendo squarely in the mouth. Lorendo staggered back more in shock than pain from the blow but Delnash did not relent.

“This is your fault!” Delnash snarled at him viciously. “I listened to you and this is the result! Hundreds of our people dead! Eight of his people dead! Men and women you care nothing for! I do not know fully what you were doing here Lorendo but when we return to Artaaya I intend to find out!”

“I am protecting our people!” Lorendo hissed.

“By killing them when we could have saved them?” Radra snapped. “Do you have any concept what we could learn from a friendship with these men and women? Do you know what it would mean to have them as allies?”

“We do not need them!” Lorendo snarled. “They are animals! Sumar bred with them and look what it produced! Lycavorians who are even more dangerous than they were before!”

“What I have seen are dedicated men and women.” Valael spoke now. “And the existence of another Praetorian besides Delnash’s brother. And the possibility of many more among these men and women. Praetorians Lorendo! Do you know what that could mean for our people? Do you even care?”

“We do not need the Praetorians!” Lorendo barked. “They have been dead for millennia and we have survived! Why do we need them now? Especially when they are hybrid animals!”

“We can not hide our people from the universe any longer.” Valael spoke. “We can not face the Scourge alone and I for one do not wish to die because we were too proud to reach out and learn from others! To befriend others!”

“Enough!” Delnash barked. “I suggest all of us try and get some rest. I will direct Sashan to install the power cells in our ships and we will leave in the morning.”

“You... you are going to let them just leave?” Lorendo gasped.

“That is exactly what I am going to do.” Delnash spoke. “This venture has cost us far too much as it is. And unlike you... I believe he will do exactly as he says he will if we try to stop him. Which I do not intend to do.”

“Delnash you...” Lorendo rasped.

“I’m done listening right now.” Delnash spoke. “I need to think and I can’t do that with you whining in my ears! We will talk when we return to our ship. I am going to try and get some sleep.”

“Sleep?” Lorendo gasped.

“Yes Lorendo... sleep.” Delnash spoke. “If I listen to you rant any longer my head will explode.”

Lorendo watched in shock as Delnash turned and exited the conference room at a brisk walk. His eyes cut to Valael and Radra who only looked at him with contempt before turning and following Delnash out.

This was not going as he planned. No... not at all.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

SCIMITAR ORBITING SOLMAR

Tonight he will make you ours Sehri.

Sadi's soft words filled her mind as her ragged breathing began to return to something resembling normal and she basked gloriously in the divine sensations of Andro's staggering aura swarming all around her. She rested atop his powerful body, her skin flush and glistening with sweat, her head resting just below his chin. She could feel the rise and fall of his broad chest against her firm breasts, her nipples still hard nubs pressed against his flesh. Sehri tried not to move in order to avoid the exquisite feelings of having his incredible cock buried in her completely and exploding once more. She could feel the last of his passion leaking into her depths and then his hands came up slowly to stroke the skin of her arms. Sehri cooed in utter delight when she felt his fingers on her flesh, gliding down her arms and across her bare skin as he used his powerful arms to push them towards the head of the huge bed and he then arranged himself so that he was sitting up almost fully, his back against the headboard. His hands reached around then and filled with the extremely firm cheeks of her ass and he shifted her onto him even more until she was leaning against his chest but still impaled upon his cock.

Rothryn you may be... but you are also Lycavorian. You have the same needs as we do; your people have just suppressed many of them. Let them fill you now. He will cause your head to spin and your heart to race and you will never be satisfied by another again.

Sadi's words rang so very true Sehri thought as she laid upon his sculpted body and his lips began to dance across the front and tops of her shoulders. Nothing her mother had told her, nothing her sisters had often spoken of experiencing, none of it had matched what she had felt this night. Her entire body still hummed in blissful and contented delight from the last eight hours, the small marks from his long, dual fangs near the juncture of her neck and shoulder now almost completely healed. Sehri was sure she could feel the virus within his powerful blood racing through her body, charging her own. He had bitten her their very first time together at her fever induced urging, the last remnants of her Coming of Age fever burning away as she was claimed by a Lycavorian Alpha wolf more powerful than any Rothryn male could ever hope to equal. The instincts buried and suppressed within her people for millennia came surging forth within her then, the burning of her blood fading only slightly and then growing as it changed from willing female to that of a claimed female who desired her mate more than anything in the universe. Sehri had lost count of the number of explosive orgasms she had experienced, or how many times he had filled her with his passion. Each time had been more exquisite than the last, each time Sehri growing more confident in herself. It became more mutually fulfilling and it succeeded in drawing them closer and closer together. She swam within his mind now, with Sadi and the others, experiencing all that he was. All that they were together as a whole. Sadi had been so right. Whatever fate and destiny intended, they were meant to be together, all of them, as they faced it.

Sehri had not been docile after the first few times she remembered with a smile. What he had caused her to feel with his manhood was superb in every way and left her craving more. He was so large and hot and pulsing and he could make her cry out in delight with just the slightest movement when he was fully inside her. She didn't fear his size even the first time and she had been the dominant one on more than a single occasion through the evening. Now though, their minds were willing, but their bodies were all but expended of energy. As Sehri felt him pull on her hips, she could feel his delicious manhood press deeper into her tight depths. She sighed heavenly as his aura wrapped around her and she reached out with her own developing female aura and let it entwine and mingle with his. His lips found and caressed the skin of the hollow of her throat as she lifted her head, his tongue dragging along her hot flesh sending delightful shivers through her. His nose then dipped under her right ear to nuzzle the scent glands there, which caused her to groan softly in want.

“Still... still with me?” His voice whispered against her ear and Sehri smiled dreamily.

Her arms lifted to encircle his broad shoulders, the nipples of her firm breasts pressed hard against his upper chest as he held her. She groaned softly again and then rotated her hips down on his breath stealing cock as she pulled his head to her breasts and let her cheek fall to the side of his head..

“I’m still here.” She spoke softly into his ear. “I want... I want to call Sadi and the others and stay naked in bed with all of you for the rest of my life!”

Andro chuckled softly. “Now that... that is a very good idea.” He stated.

Sehri turned her head slightly as his nose returned and he nuzzled the bottom of her ear. She gasped in unabashed delight at the sensations this caused and she leaned into his nuzzle with a groan. “What happens... what happens now Androcles?” She asked again softly.

“What do you mean?” He asked pulling his head back until they were gazing at each other.

“You... you claimed me on the last day of my Coming of Age fever. Does that... am I... am I your wife and mate now?” Sehri asked.

“I think you know the answer to that and exactly how I feel Sehri.” Andro said. “Sadi and SirsanGai as well. All of us.” He told her. “I don’t know how well that will go over with your people though. I followed what your law states according to your mother and what our laws say must be done because this was your first fever, but I don’t know how your father will react. You know he has supposedly promised your hand to a young Rothryn man from one of your noble families.”

“That fool!” Sehri gasped loudly. “I suspected this but never confronted my father about it. I know who you speak of. He is an arrogant fool who will do anything his father wants. He is nothing more than a puppet! A handsome puppet...” She stuck the jab to him with a smile of complete affection. “But still a puppet.”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders with a smile of his own at her teasing. “I really don’t care as long as I know being with us is what you want Sehri.”

“Andro it is!” She gasped loudly. “You... by the Ancients you know it is!” Sehri grabbed his face with her hands and held it tightly. She gazed at him and those beautiful azure eyes and felt a shudder of adoring love pass through her. She lowered her forehead to his, dropping her hands until her fingers were drawing small lines in the skin of his powerful abdomen, tracing the beautifully detailed tattoo of the flaming black bird there as she snuggled as close as she was physically able considering she was still fully seated upon his softened but still heated cock. “And I don’t care what they say either! I...”

Andro drew his fingers along her lower back and up her spine as he stared at her face. “What Sehri?” He asked.

“You do not need to be afraid of me. Ever. You are a Princess now. My Princess!”

“There... there is something I should tell you.” Sehri said finally. “You probably won’t... you probably won’t like it”

Andro smiled. “Sehri... just tell me.” He said lowering his lips and nibbling on the skin of the side of her neck.

“Shaman Master Harira... she will not be... she will not be happy. In fact... she will probably be very angry.”

Sehri spoke. She grinned a second later. “Not that it bothers me... I never did like her very much.”

Andro chuckled. “Ok... care to fill me in?” He asked.

Sehri met his eyes. “When they... when the Shamans saw how advanced my Etheric abilities were, they pulled me willingly into the Circle of Shamans when I was very young. My mother and father did not want to give me to the Rothryn Science Academy and this was their way of insuring I kept myself. The Science Academy is... they are not very... they do not treat Etheric users very well.” Sehri looked at him. “When I entered into the Circle and then turned sixteen I was given my apprentice role. I also... I also swore a... I swore a vow of celibacy to the Circle.”

Andro looked at her with bright azure eyes and then he smiled. Sehri saw his smile grow larger and then he was laughing. Her own eyes grew wide and she slapped his shoulder. “It’s not... it’s not funny!” She exclaimed.

Andro grinned up at her and flexed his lower abdomen, including his cock, deep within Sehri. Her eyes grew wide for a split second and she groaned lustily before grabbing his face in her hands once more. “Ohhh... stop that you beast!” She stammered.

“Celibacy huh?” He asked her with a smile. “If I recall correctly... you were quite the she wolf the past few hours! That is not exactly something I would expect from someone sworn to celibacy.”

Sehri squeezed his face. “Please Andro... stop it! I... ohhhh!” She gasped feeling him flex his organ deep inside her once more, her head falling back and her eyes rolling into the back of her skull in blissful and electric sensations. She felt his arms curl around her lower back and pull her tightly against his body.

“You are my wife and mate now Sehri.” Andro said seeing her face lower to look at him and her apple and walnut scent swirling around his head. “You are Sehri Leonidas and you answer to no one but yourself.”

Sehri’s hands came up and took his face once more with a dreamy smile of an expression. “You... you are not angry?” She asked.

Andro nibbled on her chin. “How could I be mad at someone so kinky?” He said.

Sehri laughed now and kissed him hard, holding his face in her hands as she became very excited and began to rotate her hips upon his thickening cock. She could feel him beginning to harden once more and her body began to feel recharged. Her eyes flew open when she felt a pair of soft lips on the back of her neck and her head whipped around to see Sadi joining them on the bed completely naked and pressing right up against her back. Her large, firm breasts pressed tightly against Sehri’s shoulders and Sehri gasped in delight. Her head turned at the small noise and she saw Carisia’s mane of black hair and Ne'Veha’s billowing dark brown hair draped over Andro’s shoulders, their lips planting soft butterfly kisses on his skin, their naked bodies pressed against his back.

“We... we couldn’t wait Sehri.” Sadi spoke softly in her ear as she reached around under her armpits and took Sehri’s now very excited breasts in her hands. “We... we desire you too much.”

“Oh carians... yes!” Sehri screamed just before Lu'ria’s lips claimed hers in a sizzling kiss of discovery and passion.

Sehri groaned happily as they began again. And she was so very willing.

NEBONESE

SECTOR NINE MERCHANTS MARKET

Yuri looked out over the broad expanse of the Merchants Market of Haglos, the capital city of Nebonese. She could see almost every species known to exist moving about the market area and she also knew that out there somewhere, someone was hiring pirates to kill her and Pa'cour. Yuri’s dark eyes glittered in the light however, for she knew killing them now, that would be a very hard thing to do. Yuri was far more focused and clear minded than she was just a year ago and her love for Pa'cour made her even stronger. There were very few who would be able to get the drop on her or her Blessed Immortal husband now and most of those individuals were members of the Union military. They would not be coming after her.

“So I was able to acquire almost everything you requested.” The gravelly voice spoke from behind her and she turned to look at the Kochab. Quellian was far more civilized than others of his species and it was this trait that had caught her eye more than a decade ago. He had a knack for obtaining materials that others could not, even when the Overseers of The Wilds were in charge. He was fair and honest and now he had become a trustworthy ally. She watched as he held out the glass of Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos to Ma'dur. The Immortal bowed his head and took the glass and then Quellian moved the final meter up to her and offered her a glass as well. Yuri took it without questioned and sipped the delicious fruity tasting cloned blood in a show of trust and simply because she liked the replacement for real blood. Ma'dur watched her and then he too sipped from his glass. “They were easy to obtain. Your people are settling in I take it?”

Yuri nodded. “Our facility was barren when we first got there and I told them we would secure as much as possible to make it more comfortable for them.”

Quellian nodded as he motioned her to the plush couch and waited respectfully for her to sit first before joining her in the chair across from the couch. He was aware of Ma'dur behind him, but since Quellian had always been forthcoming and respectful of Yuri, he knew Ma'dur did not consider him a threat.

“Well... Pa'cour is overseeing the loading of the smaller items... and I believe he will set up the transfer of the larger purchases as we have done before. One of my ships will meet with one of your frigates and transfer the material.” Quellian told her. “A location chosen by you of course.”

Yuri looked at him and smiled. “Quellian... relax my friend.” She told him calmly. “I told you in our transmission that your friendship is valued and that I trust you. Do not think otherwise.”

Quellian smiled exposing the teeth within his lamprey like mouth and he nodded his head. “I am glad Yuri.” He said. “I do not envy those who wish to be your enemies. Especially now. I do not know the reasons that the Lycavorian Prince withdrew the contract on your head, but I know for him to do such a thing, something had to have changed between you. Something if not positive, then at least neutral in association. And for him to imply that it would not be in the interest of anyone to attempt to complete the contract afterwards... well...”

Yuri nodded her head. “Androcles Leonidas and I have... we are not friends... but we are no longer enemies either. At least by most definitions of enemy.”

Quellian nodded. “And that is a healthy thing to be.” He stated with another smile. He reached into his deep pocket on the jumpsuit he wore and withdrew the data pad. He held it out to Yuri across the knee high table. “This is all the information I was able to obtain about those here on Nebonese asking questions about you or Pa'cour. Several purebloods who I can be reasonably accurate in saying work for your former husband... not too bright really... but still dangerous. The more interesting collection however is a small pirate group made up of Immortals. They work out of the South docks.”

“Interesting why?” Yuri asked as she scanned the pad and sat back on the couch.

“They appear to be former associates of the Immortal mercenary Phy'iad.” Quellian told her. “About twenty of them.”

“Immortals?” Ma'dur asked moving closer.

Quellian nodded. “Not very nice Immortals either.” He answered. “They maintain a low profile for the most part. They usually only deal with the different vampire or Lycavorian mercenary groups.”

Yuri looked at him. “Lycavorian mercenary groups?” She asked. “That... that is very out of character for them.”

Quellian nodded. “Indeed.” He said. “I was not able to obtain a whole lot of information on them... but I do know that they take their orders from someone else. They are not what they appear to be on the outside at first glance.”

“What do you mean?” Yuri asked.

“They act like any other mercenary group on the outside... a ruse really. Anyone who has crossed them in any way usually ends up very dead and in particularly gruesome fashion. They are very specific in the jobs they take... most of them jobs no one else will touch. You and Pa'cour for instance.” Quellian told her. “If I had to guess they are some sort of offshoot of the government.”

Yuri leaned forward. “The government?” She asked.

Quellian nodded. “They are very well equipped Yuri. State of the art. Weapons, armor, you name it. All of it Union equipment. Are you so sure that Androcles is not behind them in some manner? They are extremely well funded for a group without powerful connections.”

Yuri shook her head immediately. “No.” She stated. “If Androcles Leonidas wanted me dead he would not do it this way. He would come after me personally. This is something else entirely.”

Quellian nodded to her. “They have a Kiosk in the southern market where they sell ridiculous items that no one will buy. My people saw them meeting with this Immortal group and another vampire group as well. On several different occasions.” He waved his clawed hand in a dismissive way. “The Immortal group does not appear to be interested in anything other than obtaining elven slaves to quell their sick perversions and accumulating as much wealth as possible. The vampire group and the Lycavorian group however... they have different goals.”

“I would not be surprised if the purebloods are Robert's doing.” She spoke as she sipped the Nau'shindcal d'Vlos. “He is an extremely competent warrior... though his skill at special operations is not as pronounced as some think given his background. We questioned the ones who said you had referred them and they confessed to working for Robert. They broke rather easily.”

Quellian chuckled. "That does not surprise me in the least." He said.

Yuri shook her head. "I am not concerned about the Immortals or the vampire group." She stated evenly. "This Lycavorian group however, they are a different matter."

"I could have one of my people probe a little deeper." Quellian said. "I have several elven females who work for me and they are very good at getting information."

Yuri looked at him. "Slaves Quellian?" She asked.

Quellian hissed. "Bah!" He snorted. "Slavery is an abomination that I do not take part in." He rasped. "They came to me for protection about five years ago. I gave it to them and they have stayed on in my employ since. Two of them are the best pilots I have and the other three run most of my interests in the markets. I pay them well... and they are very loyal. I've taken them under my wing so to speak. Their families as well."

"You are one of the few Kochab who do your species proud Quellian." Yuri told him.

Quellian laughed. "Hah... don't I know it! Now if I could only get others to see it that way!"

"Everyone can change Quellian." Yuri said softly. "If I have learned nothing these last months... it's that everyone can change their path their lives are on."

Quellian nodded and rose to his feet. "No doubt you want to get back to Pa'cour and your daughter." He said. "The item you requested is at my jewels Kiosk on the main floor. You know where it is?"

Yuri nodded as she rose. "Yes... thank you." She said handing the data pad to him. "Full payment as agreed upon." She stated. "Another ten percent if you could simply keep your eyes and ears open."

Quellian took the pad but shook his head. "You do not need to pay me for that Yuri." He stated evenly. "I meant it when I said I like this new you... and if helping you benefits me in other ways... then so be it."

Yuri smiled at him and nodded. "Then I will take my leave of you Quellian." She said. "No sense in making you a target by having me overstay my welcome."

Quellian bowed his head to her. "It is never a burden Princess. I enjoy your company. I'll let the clerk know you will be coming over to pick up your gift for Onera."

Yuri nodded and motioned with her hand for Ma'dur to lead her out. "I will contact you just before we leave Quellian. Stay safe my friend."

Quellian nodded and watched as she turned to leave. When she exited the door and it had closed he moved to his desk along the large window and touched the COM panel. "Tenata... she is coming down to retrieve her order. Show her every respect and take fifteen percent off the price."

"Fifteen percent Quellian?" The female voice spoke. "That is quite a bit."

"Yes... but her business with us is very important and extremely profitable. She does not skimp or bat an eye at what we have to charge her because she knows the rules we have to work with. A small discount is something we can do easily." Quellian told her. "She is a powerful friend to have and I intend to do what I can to make sure it stays that way."

"I'll take care of it." The female spoke. "Just so you are aware... I think the vampires and the Immortals are going to have a disagreement over something. There is an awful lot of activity by their kiosk and people are avoiding it."

"Good... more business for us." Quellian spoke. "Keep an eye on it and advise me if it affects our customers."

"Very well." The woman spoke.

Quellian looked out the large window and stared at the merchant floor below him. He lifted his glass of wine as his eyes scanned the area. Things were good for him yes, but keeping Yuri as a friend and ally would pay great dividends in the future. She had changed significantly in the last months and Quellian definitely liked this Yuri more than the last one. He would do what it took to keep her as a friend. Something was going to happen in the future and Quellian had every intention of being on the right side of things.

It was not uncommon to see individuals wearing long cloaks with voluminous hoods pulled over their heads here on Nebonese. There were many who wanted to remain unseen and unknown. Yuri and Ma'dur moved among the many species dressed in this manner to avoid being noticed. Ma'dur because he was an Immortal who had taken the serum to return his outward features to their original state, and Yuri for obvious reasons. With Xaxon's vile essence gone from her, her features were far softer and much brighter and at first glance anyone would be hard pressed to recognize her. However with intense study, her features would quickly become apparent and that is not something Yuri wanted to worry about. Surprisingly, she enjoyed being anonymous. Yuri felt Ma'dur stiffen slightly when he heard the raised voice and they saw the activity by the vampire kiosk only thirty meters away. An Immortal was shouting and it was easy to see he was not happy.

“Not our concern Ma'dur.” Yuri spoke softly to him.

Ma'dur nodded his head. “I know.” He answered. “Seeing my people act as bloodthirsty scum burns my blood though.”

Yuri nodded. “Yes... I imagine it would.” She whispered as she stepped up to the kiosk and looked at the elf female. She held out the small disc. “I’m here for my order.”

Quellian’s elf employee took the disc, glanced at it and then at the hooded Yuri and she nodded. “Yes... I have it.”

There was more shouting and Yuri turned to see one Immortal towering over the vampire at the kiosk in angry repose. She turned back to the female elf. “What is going on?” She asked.

Tenata shook her head. “I’m not entirely sure. Something to do with an order that was not complete but fully paid for.” She answered. “Ral’dene... the commander of the Immortals is not happy. He’s demanding compensation of some sort.”

Yuri turned back to the female elf and she took note of the long dark blond hair and the flawless features of her face. She blinked rapidly a few times surprised at the thoughts that flashed through her mind. She was admiring the elf’s natural beauty and the way her jumpsuit conformed to her figure. Yuri shook her head quickly, for this had never happened to her before and she did not know what to make of it. Tenata looked up with a smile and held out the small metal container. “Quellian insisted on a price reduction Mistress.” Tenata spoke softly. “It is a beautiful piece if I do say so. A gift?”

Yuri smiled and nodded her head as she took the box and slid open the cover to reveal the glittering cobalt blue gem on a solid titanium and silver coated chain. “For my daughter.” She said softly in reply.

The voices rose to a crescendo at the vampire kiosk and then there was the female voice of protest. Yuri turned now to watch as one of the Immortals grabbed the female elf’s arm and yanked her close to him with a savage smile. His deep voice carried over the smattering of conversation among the others as everyone became quiet.

“We’ll take the elf bitch as payment then!” He barked at the obviously humbled vampire.

“No!” She screamed trying to struggle against the Immortal’s grip. Her white blond hair was long and lustrous and her violet colored dress fit her like a second skin. Her features were frozen in fear now however, Yuri catching only glimpses of her as she tried to break the grip of the Immortal through the crowd. “Stop! Help me please! Someone help me!”

“Bastards!” Tenata snarled softly and Yuri looked at her.

“What is happening?” She asked.

“Morew gave Nameia to them as payment!” Tenata exclaimed in a harsh whisper. “She... Morew captured her only a few months ago from a settlement somewhere here in The Wilds. He liked the taste of her blood!” Tenata spoke the words contemptuously. “Whatever he defaulted on with Ral’dene, it must have been expensive if he is using Nameia to pay him! The fucking bastard! They’ll... they’ll use her. Break her like they have the others in their harem!”

“No one will do anything?” Yuri asked softly. “I... I did not think slavery was as prominent as it once was.”

Tenata shook her head quickly. “It is still very prominent out here. This far away from the Lycavorian border they can get away with it and not worry about Union forces stopping them. No one will cross Ral’dene and his organization!” She said quickly. “They are brutal killers. Nameia is so independent, but she is still young and naïve to the way things work out here. She will... she will not survive being broken to the will of an Immortal. Having to service one for the rest of her life to survive? It will destroy her.”

“She has not tried to escape?” Yuri asked.

Tenata shook her head slowly. “And go where? No one will help an escaped slave out here. And Morew implanted her with an explosive chip somewhere in her body. All he has to do is activate it and she dies.”

Yuri glanced over once more as the Immortals began to move away. It was then that she caught the terrified gaze of those incredible soft blue/grey eyes as the Immortals began dragging her away. Yuri’s dark brown eyes grew slightly larger under her cowl as she felt a powerful emotion tug at her stomach when she looked at the elf female. An emotion she had never felt before. It was an attraction. A very powerful attraction that drew her in quickly. An attraction that went against everything Yuri had been raised to believe, but now one of the many things that was now in question in her new world. Her head tilted slightly as Yuri watched the elf female vainly struggle to break the Immortal's grip on her arm. It was then that Yuri acted without thinking about it. She made a decision without knowing why. She tucked the necklace for Onera into her belt pouch and looked at Tenata. "Thank Quellian for me if you would." She stated.

Tenata nodded. "Of course."

"Where are they going?" Yuri asked.

Tenata looked surprised. "I would... I assume back to their compound. Ral'dene will want to break her quickly." Tenata pointed at the elevator lifts near the far end of the merchant promenade. "Those lifts will take you to them. Why?"

"So that I go in the other direction." Yuri lied already set on her path.

"Ah..." Tenata answered almost as if she was disappointed.

"Thank you again." Yuri said before turning and beginning to move away in the opposite direction, Ma'dur maintaining his pace beside her.

"Princess?" He whispered as they moved. "What...?"

"Return to the landing bay Ma'dur." Yuri spoke as she adjusted something under her cloak. "Tell Pa'cour I will be along shortly."

"Princess?"

Yuri stopped as they moved out of the main crowd. "I wish to check on something." She told him. "Now do as I ask please. I will be along quickly. I saw something in one of the kiosks that we past. A gift for... a gift for my Blessed Husband. It would not... it would not do for you to see it."

Ma'dur met her eyes and slowly nodded his head. He could not go against her wishes. He had sworn to Pa'cour to obey and protect her and that was his duty. He could only assumed it was some matter of clothing that she would only wear for her husband and she was right, it would not be appropriate for him to see her looking at it or purchasing it. "Remember to be wary Princess." He spoke. He knew full well that Yuri was capable of taking care of herself but there was no reason to take chances. "I do not wish the General to remove my head for allowing you to put yourself in danger."

Yuri smiled at him from under her cloak. She reached out and squeezed his arm. "I would never allow that Ma'dur." She said. "Go... I'll be along shortly."

Ma'dur nodded and Yuri watched him turn to head back to where their G9 Runner was docked. The High Coven Long Range version of the G9 was a common sight within The Wilds now. Her mother had authorized its sale on the commercial market to bring in new credits. While their G9 looked like all the others, the ship was definitely not the standard model with its advanced weapons and engines and shroud. Yuri waited until Ma'dur had blended into the crowd and then she turned to look at the lifts on the far end of the promenade. She stepped closer to a wall that was relatively free of people moving back and forth and as she moved into the corners of the wall she wrapped the shadows around herself and disappeared.

Morew was shaking his head in disgust at what had just happened as he moved into the rear area of his Kiosk. He threw down the data pad he held and went to the counter that held several bottles of Nau'shindcal d'Vlos. He quickly poured himself a glass and was lifting it to his lips when the shadows unwrapped beside him and a very sharp blade was pressed to his throat. Morew was no fool. Whoever this person was, they were skilled enough with the shadows to bypass his rear security and enter the back of his kiosk. That meant they were not someone to be trifled with.

"Answer my questions and you may yet live through this day." The female voice spoke.

Morew looked down slightly and saw the bluish color of the combat blade. It looked to be very expensive and if he was any judge, crafted by a master weapons dealer. The color marked the blade as being forged from the metals on Paravin he knew and next to the wondrous metal the Union kept so secret, the bladed weapons forged from Paravin metal were the finest in the whole Universe. And hideously expensive. "Put the glass down slowly and do not attempt to do anything stupid. Your pathetic skills are no match for mine and I will leave you on the floor bleeding like a misbegotten pig if you think otherwise."

Morew did as he was told, slowly lowering the glass back to the counter. "Stealing from me is not a wise move." He spoke trying to sound imposing.

He heard the female chuckle softly. "If I wanted to steal from you... you would never know until I was gone." Yuri spoke keeping her eyes focused on Morew from under her cowl. It covered her entire head and draped down over her face halfway, shielding all but her lower jaw and lips from view. "Where are they taking the elf girl?" She asked.

"The elf..." Morew tried to turn his head but the blade pressed tighter and he froze.

"Do not turn." Yuri snarled softly. "Do not breathe; do not blink in my direction." She growled. "Answer my question while you still have the ability to talk."

"Probably back to their compound!" Morew answered. "Ral'dene will... he will want to break her will quickly."

"You peddle in flesh often do you?" Yuri asked him.

"Hey! I didn't want to do that!" Morew snapped. "I liked the elf bitch!"

"So that is all she was to you?" Yuri rasped. "A bitch to be used at your whim?"

"I took her!" Morew snapped. "Lost a good amount of blood having to fight her damned father and brother in order to get her! Ral'dene had me! I had no choice!"

"What right did you have to take her to begin with?" Yuri hissed at him.

"Who are you?" Morew asked now. "What do you want with me? You're good to have gotten in here without being seen. Real good. I could use someone of your skills."

"The Immortal compound?" Yuri asked. "How many men?"

"I don't know!" Morew snapped. "Thirty! Maybe forty!" He turned his head towards Yuri and she blurred before he could look at her, moving behind him and yanking on his hair while driving a booted foot into the back of his knee and dropping him to the floor. He grunted as she yanked back on his head and pressed her blade tighter to his skin.

"I told you not to look towards me!" Yuri snarled. "You don't listen very well!"

"Fucking bitch!" Morew snarled.

Yuri laughed at him. "Oh... you don't know the half of it." She stated. "Have you been inside the compound?"

"What? Yes!" Morew barked as Yuri yanked softly on his hair, exposing more of his neck and throat.

"Where inside will they take her?" Yuri demanded. "And if you lie to me, know that I will get out and I will come for you."

"There is a side entrance!" Morew almost yelled. "Maintenance entrance! Go in there and turn right down the secondary corridor. You'll come up to the room she will be in from behind the main entrance! The others are in the next room! Six of them!"

"How do I know you are telling me the truth?" Yuri snarled.

"Because you are a crazy bitch and you are scaring me!" Morew popped.

Yuri laughed. "Now that is a truthful statement." She said. "Unfortunately... it will not change the outcome."

"What?" Morew barked.

"I find myself looking at you and being disgusted." Yuri snarled softly. "We were such a proud race once. Our leaders took us down the wrong path. A path of conquest and they turned us into you! A mercenary! A traitor! A piece of shit!"

"You don't know me!" Morew snarled.

"You are right." Yuri said.

"Who the fuck do you think you are?" Morew barked at her.

Yuri yanked on his head even harder, leaning close to the side of his face. "I... I am the harbinger of the doom of your kind!" Yuri snarled viciously. "My sister Narice... she will be the Blessed Instrument of your demise!"

"Na... Narice!" Morew hissed as his eyes went wide. "Fuck! Princess Yuri!" He almost shouted. "You... you're suppose to be dead!"

"So I have been told." Yuri stated before bringing the blade of her knife cleanly across Morew's throat. Yuri shoved him forward, his head impacting off the counter as he gagged horribly on the blood spurting from his severed arteries. Yuri stepped back quickly, avoiding the spray of blood and cleaning her blade on an errant rag she had scooped up. She waited as Morew clawed the floor, unable to stem to flow of his blood from leaving him and it was over within seconds because of the depth of her cut and catching both arteries. She tossed the rag onto his body and once more wrapped the shadows around her, leaving as she had come.

An angel of death.

Onera studied the data pad as two of her father's men carried the last crate onto the G9 containing all of the smaller articles they were picking up. The rest of their cargo would meet with their BLOODRUNNER Heavy Frigate at prearranged coordinates outside the prying eyes of those on Nebonese. Her body armor consisted of an earlier version of the Union ArmorPly, which had been stored at the facility. The scientists with her mother and father had improved significantly on the version, bringing it up to better standards of protection. It was lightweight and very flexible, which suited her fighting style. Her father called her the perfect combination of speed and power, able to use her mother's vampire abilities to get close to the enemy, but then when she was close she could resort to the strength of her Immortal blood and pummel her enemy to death quickly. It was something Onera was very proud of.

Onera was also the perfect combination of her mother and father. There was no mistaking who her parents were and Onera wore that knowledge like a badge of pride. She had the skin tone of her father and the exotic features of her mother. Her bone spurs were less prominent on her than a pure Akruxian female, but they were a healthy white color and as far as Onera was concerned, they only added to her beauty. She didn't know how many Immortals and vampire males alike thought the same. Her beauty and intelligence was not something that made her arrogant or superior to others, it just made her proud that her parents were who they were, no matter their pasts. Onera was the beginning of the good they would do now and Onera knew her mother desperately wanted other children with her father. Part of her redemption would be to raise and school her children with Pa'cour as she hadn't done with Onera's half sisters and lone brother. Someday she hoped to meet her sisters and Aunt but Onera had no desire to discover who Dante had become. If ever she was confronted with him, Onera would kill him if she could or run away from him if she couldn't. Onera trusted her mother implicitly, having no fear that the darkness that was Xaxon still resided somewhere inside her. Onera would know if it did, as would her father.

No... her mother was completely free of that evil and now only her true self existed. Her mother was an individual now who held more respect and honor than she ever had, though Yuri probably didn't know it.

Onera looked up at her father's tall figure as he came down the ramp and moved over to her. "That's everything that we are picking up here father." Onera spoke.

Pa'cour nodded. "Good. The sooner we are gone from here the better." He answered looking around the cargo bay. "This particular trip has been nagging at me since we left."

Onera looked at her father. He was a thorough man, leaving nothing to chance, but now she could tell he was also worried about something. "What is wrong papa?" She asked softly.

Pa'cour looked at her. "I don't know really. A feeling mostly. About your mother and something else. It has been with me since we arrived here."

"Mother is in danger?" Onera asked.

Pa'cour shook his head. "That is part of it... but not the focus of it." He answered her knowing that Onera would understand him. "There are very few who could stand against your mother on this misbegotten mercenary world. There is something else however... different... I can't explain it fully."

Onera reached out instinctively within Mindvoice for her mother and encountered a solid wall of black. Her mother's shields were at their highest, and she was letting no one in. She glanced up at her father. "Papa..."

Pa'cour nodded. "Yes... she is blocking me as well." He told her. "We must..." Pa'cour stopped talking when he saw Ma'dur enter the secure landing bay at a quick trot. He was moving directly for them and he waited with dread filling his stomach until the younger Immortal was in front of them. "Ma'dur... where... where is Yuri?" He asked.

"Forgive me General..." Ma'dur spoke quickly out of breath. "The Princess... she said she wanted to buy something... something for you and that I could not be present. She told me to return here. I began to... but then I realized she had tricked me. I went back to the edge of the promenade but she was gone. Pa'cour please..."

Pa'cour held up his hand to the younger man. "No!" He hissed softly. "You are not to blame. Yuri is different now, in more ways than even I know. She is no longer predictable and she will follow her emotions more now. Where did you leave her last?"

"Near Quellian's jewelry booth." Ma'dur answered.

Pa'cour nodded. "We must find her." He spoke urgently. "If it is discovered she is on Nebonese... some fool will think to collect a bounty on her."

"Bounty?" Onera asked in shock. "Papa... I thought you said the Lycavorian Prince removed the bounty!"

Pa'cour nodded. "He did... and he implied it would not be healthy to pursue it. That will not stop others with more guts than brains from trying to capture her and ransom her off to whoever wishes. There are still many who are too stupid to fear Androcles Leonidas." He looked at Ma'dur. "Show us where you left her Ma'dur! Quickly!"

It was child's play really for Yuri to get close to the secondary maintenance hatch into the Immortal compound. She looked at the cooling body of the Immortal who had been standing guard inside the doorway. He had never known what hit him as the Tears of Heaven had struck without remorse and nearly severed his head from his shoulders. Yuri knew she was skilled with dual blades, but until she had begun using Vonis's gift to her, she never realized just how skilled she was. Training with Pa'cour had only improved upon those skills, something Moran had never wanted to do. Yuri doubted she would ever reach the advanced skill of Narice or her daughter Carisia considering the training they had received, but she was more than capable of doing some serious damage. One day... if fate ever allowed it of her... she would embrace her brother and thank her for the gift which had helped her to begin down this path.

Yuri moved quickly, wrapping the shadows around her once more and blurring in motion down the corridor. While Narice and Carisia may have been better with dual blades, like her half sister Isabella, Yuri was a true master of the shadows. Even the slightest shadow within a room would allow her to use them to her advantage, and this she did now. She followed the now dead Morew's direction and turn down the first corridor she came to. That is when the female cries reached her ears and she felt her blood begin to boil in anger. She gripped Tears of Heaven in her hands and quickened her pace.

Ral'dene stepped back from the struggling elf female with a savage grin. She was naked now, her clothes having been stripped from her when she was brought in. Her hands were tied above her head to the top of the prisoner rack, her ankles secured at the two bottom corners. Her long, white/blond hair was unique with dark streaks in it. Her face was flawless in its beauty as were all elf females, her body even firmer than those elves they already had prisoner here. He dropped the remains of her jumpsuit on the floor amongst the scattered blankets and clothes already there and looked at her. This is where they broke their elf females and sometimes used them. There were blankets and mats all over the floor. "I am going to enjoy this one." He said as the two men in the room with him grinned.

Nameia glared at him with hate filled blue eyes. "You... you may break my will... but I will never submit to you!" She screamed.

Ral'dene laughed. "Bitch... when I get done with you... you'll be begging to suck my cock and serve under me!" He snarled. "If you don't... you'll go insane and die!"

"I would rather die!" Nameia hissed back at him.

"We'll see." Ral'dene spoke as he began to unbuckle his pants.

He turned when a single Immortal rushed into the room. "Commander!" He barked out the word. "Norev is outside! He is demanding to speak with you."

"I'm busy." Ral'dene answered still looking at Nameia.

"Commander... they found Morew's body inside his kiosk." The young Immortal spoke. "He is dead. Norev is demanding to know why we killed him even after taking the elf female."

Ral'dene turned quickly. "Dead?" He spat. "We did not kill the fool vampire."

“I tried to tell Norev this.” The man said. “He demands to speak with you.”

“Fuck!” Ral'dene snarled. He turned to one of his men. “You remain here.” He ordered. “Do not touch her! You... come with me!” He said to the other.

The room emptied quickly leaving Nameia with the lone Immortal who gawked at her naked form with cruel eyes. She struggled with the bindings holding her hands and ankles but was unable to break them. Tears began to fill her eyes as she realized what was going to happen to her. Tolerating Morew and his filthy touch was one thing, but having to serve an Immortal sexually for the rest of her life like some whore was too much. This Ral'dene beast would break her will and she would become addicted to his foul essence. She would need it nearly everyday to survive. His touch alone made her skin crawl and Nameia could not imagine having to endure that every day.

Nameia heard the gurgling sound and her head snapped around as she saw the lone Immortal suddenly reach for his throat and drop to his knees unable to speak. The twin fountains of blood arcing from his neck would attribute to that and as he began to teeter and fall over Nameia saw the shadows unwrap from around the decidedly feminine figure wearing a long cloak and cowl. In her hands were twin knives with blue blades, now stained with streaks of blood. She watched in disbelief as the woman snapped out a front kick directly into the falling Immortal's face. The force of the blow snapped his thick neck with a soft pop causing Nameia's eyes to grow ever wider as she watched his body flip over and land on the floor face down. She watched as those dual blades spun in the woman's hands with consummate grace and then they disappeared beneath the cloak as she spat on the Immortal's now cooling body.

Nameia felt jolts of intense fear shoot through her when the women turned towards her. “I am... please... I do not wish to die!” Nameia stammered, barely able to contain her fear.

Yuri turned to look at Nameia and for a moment that seemed like time stopping Yuri gazed upon her with emotions and desire swirling through her own body unlike anything she had ever felt. The only word Yuri could think to describe her was exquisite. She heard shouting in the other rooms and this snapped her out of her trance like state and she stepped up to the elf female.

“We must move quickly.” Yuri hissed softly. “Before they return.” She drew out one of the blue bladed knives and quickly slashed through the plastic like bindings. The Paravin blade made short work of the bindings and Nameia's hands dropped to grip Yuri's shoulders as they were freed.

“Who...” Nameia gasped as all sorts of emotions rippled through her.

Yuri threw back her cowl and Nameia's eyes flew open. “Princess... Princess Yuri!” She nearly shouted as she drew back her hands and tried to step back away from her. “You... you are dead!”

Yuri gripped her arms tightly, not allowing her to move away, but also not hard enough to hurt her. “The rumors of my death are quite inaccurate.” She spoke quickly. “That pig Morew told me you have an explosive device inside you. Where?”

“He... he sold me to these monsters!” Nameia exclaimed.

Yuri nodded. “And he has paid for that action with his life.” She told her.

“You?” Nameia gasped. “You killed him?”

“The explosive?” Yuri asked again more urgently. “Where is it?”

Nameia shook her head. “I don't... I don't know!” She exclaimed. “I could never find anything!”

Yuri reached up and took Nameia's face in her hands. “Think Nameia!” She insisted. “When Morew was defiling you... is there any part on your body that he ignored?”

“What?” Nameia hissed. “No! He pawed me like... no!” She tried to reach around the small of her back. “My lower back! He never... when he would take me that way he never touched me there!”

Yuri moved around her quickly and her eyes immediately detected the faint scar in the bright light. It was barely discernable but she reached out and ran a fingertip over the scar. Nameia flinched at the touch, but not out of fear. Yuri's touch sent electric jolts coursing through her. “Yes... this is it.” She stated. “It has to be an R90 Explosive tipped receiver. Did he give the transmitter to the Immortal scum?”

Nameia nodded. “Yes! Take it out!”

“It needs to be removed surgically!” Yuri snapped angrily. “I would hurt you too much trying to take it out here! It's too close to your spine and it would take too long!” She moved back around in front of her and took her hands. “We have to get you out of here! Outside its range!”

“How?” Nameia nearly sobbed. “They are all over!”

Yuri gripped her hands tightly looking into those eyes. "I will not let them have you!" Yuri exclaimed passionately. "I won't! Come!" Yuri bent over and snatched a thick blanket from the floor of the room and tossed it around Nameia's shoulders. "You must trust me."

Nameia looked at her, staring into her dark brown eyes and for whatever the reason, what she saw staring back at her made Nameia want to trust her no matter who she was. She nodded her head slowly and Yuri gripped her hand.

"No matter what happens do not let go of me." Yuri told her.

"Or what?" The voice barked and they both spun around to see Ral'dene in the doorway with two other Immortals and a tall vampire. "You were right Norev. You did smell vampire blood in here." He spoke as he entered the room, the two Immortals moving to either side of the doorway.

Norev was a tall, muscular vampire, a former officer within the High Coven fleet. He was also keenly aware of who was staring back at them. "Princess Yuri." He spoke in an even voice. "So the rumors of your death are not true?"

Ral'dene looked at him. "Yuri?" He snapped. "You're sure?"

Norev nodded his head. "I'm sure." He answered evenly, his eyes never leaving Yuri's face.

Ral'dene chuckled as he looked back to Yuri. "Well now... isn't this a pleasant surprise." He spoke. "Princess Yuri here in my home. I should be honored."

Norev looked at Yuri. "You killed Morew?" He asked her.

Yuri stepped in front of Nameia, shielding her body as her hands filled with Tears of Heaven. "I slit his throat like the pig he was." She snarled.

"She's feisty!" Ral'dene chuckled. "After I break the elf I will enjoy having her."

Yuri chortled. "Not likely Immortal." She spat as she felt the presence within Mindvoice. So close and so very powerful.

Ral'dene grinned. "I'm going to fuck your ass Princess and listen to you squeal for more." He growled. "I never liked you or your bastard husband."

Norev stepped forward slowly, his eyes never leaving Yuri's face. He had met the Princess on more than one occasion though she probably did not remember. Yuri looked different now. Her face, while drawn back in a snarl of defiance, was much more relaxed and brighter. The darkness that had once clouded her features was gone and Norev saw purpose in those eyes now as they changed to the cobalt blue of her vampire nature. This was not the same Yuri he had seen those times... this Yuri was different. While Ral'dene may not have been able to sense it, Norev could feel the energy charging Yuri's body now.

"He is close isn't he?" Norev asked her.

Ral'dene looked at him. "Who is close? What are you talking about Norev?"

Yuri met Norev's eyes. "Close enough." Yuri answered.

Norev looked at Ral'dene. "Let her take the elf female and go Ral'dene." He spoke.

"What?" Ral'dene exclaimed looking at him.

"If you wish this encounter to end with your life still belonging to you, let her go." Norev spoke.

"Why the fuck would I want to do that?" Ral'dene snarled. He held up the small transmitter. "I can kill the elf girl right now and take her! I've never fucked a Princess before... and I never liked her!"

"Her Blessed husband is nearby." Norev spoke once more.

"I'm not afraid of that fool Moran!" Ral'dene barked. "He..."

Norev looked at him. "I'm not talking about Moran!" He shouted. "You haven't been listening to the rumors have you?"

"I don't listen to shit I can't gather myself!" Ral'dene snapped.

Norev looked at Yuri. "You left him. The few rumors we received here said you almost killed him and you left him. That you became the Blessed Wife to your Captain. You dropped off the grid. When the bounty was withdrawn I assumed you had been killed... or even taken prisoner since the implication from the Union was that to pursue the contract against you was not healthy. How did you manage to get the boy Prince to drop the bounty on you?"

"She probably fucked him silly!" Ral'dene retorted thinking it was hysterically funny.

"Shut up you fool!" Norev snarled at him. He turned back to Yuri. "Princess?"

Yuri tightened her grip on Tears of Heaven and felt Nameia press closer to her back. "I did become his Blessed Wife." Yuri answered calmly. "And we gave Androcles something he wanted far more than my blood."

"Androcles?" Norev said the word softly. He looked at her for a long moment and then turned to Ral'dene. "Let them go Ral'dene." He said.

"Again you tell me this!" Ral'dene snorted. "Why?"

"She is the Blessed Wife of an Immortal now you fool! She is Pa'cour's woman!" Norev barked at him. "And she is under the protection of the Union!"

Ral'dene looked at him. "What?"

Norev nodded. "Her Immortal Captain!" He hissed. "It is said she escaped Moran's ship with him. That he had taken her as his wife. And if she is standing here now, then the boy Prince did not kill her and he removed the bounty on her head for a reason! Open your eyes Ral'dene and try to think with something other than your cock!"

Ral'dene grinned. "That's no fun." He said.

Norev stepped back and held up his hands. "Ral'dene you fool." He spoke. "I will not be party to this. If you wish to throw your life away go ahead."

"She is alone!" Ral'dene snarled. "There is no one here to help her and she can't beat all of us."

Norev met his eyes. "That is where you are wrong." He stated.

"Bah! You are too..."

The explosion of shadows was soundless, but very visible as Onera unwrapped the wisps of the shadows from around herself and her father and they exploded into motion. Onera's heart was racing madly, the adrenalin pumping through her system. She had trained for weeks with her father and mother both but until now she had never known combat. She allowed her training to control her movements and this served her well. Iphan rie Aellseum was already moving before the shadows had fully faded away from her body and she stepped away from her father. The blade bit deeply into the Immortal soldier beside Ral'dene, her combined Immortal and vampire strength propelling the Dragon Armor forged sword with tremendous speed and power. The Immortal barely had time to blink before Iphan rie Aellseum cut completely through his left arm that held the hand weapon. Onera didn't watch the Immortal's eyes fly open in agony as she gripped the pommel with both hands and twisted the blade in mid air, snapping it back upwards. As the Immortal bent his head to look down at his arm on the floor of the room, the tip of Iphan rie Aellseum came whistling up and sliced through the Immortal's neck like a hot knife through butter. Blood erupted from his nearly severed head as his body tumbled to the side and Onera turned to protect her mother. She blurred in motion and was instantly beside Norev, Iphan rie Aellseum pressed none too gently to his throat and Norev staring with wide eyes at the stunning beauty of the half Immortal half vampire female with the savage cobalt blue vampire eyes.

The moment Onera began unwrapping the shadows from around their bodies Pa'cour was moving. It was child's play for him, tracking the scent of Yuri's blood, as she no doubt knew it would be. She was just as much a part of him now as he was of her and they would be able to find each other amongst thousands if need be. Pa'cour's left hand came up in a single eye blink and he fired his silenced K14 KM from point blank range right into the face of the second Immortal soldier beside Ral'dene. The spray of blood coated Ral'dene's left side with blood and brain matter and froze him in his spot in shock for three tortuously long seconds. More than enough time for Pa'cour to twist his body and bring Halize rie Aellseum up in a single graceful swing and then slash downward three times in quick succession. Ral'dene howled out his pain as each cut bit into his flesh and carved out deep, ugly wounds across his chest that began to leak blood at an explosive rate. Pa'cour snapped out with his right boot and smashed Ral'dene in the face as he began to double over, flipping the large Immortal up and back. He crashed onto his back on the floor with a loud groan of pain and the air leaving his lungs. He stepped closer and drove Halize rie Aellseum down with incredible force, impaling Ral'dene through the side and pinning him to the floor, his hands wrapped around the bloody blade.

Pa'cour turned to look at Yuri and he rose back to his full height and crossed the room to her in three strides, sweeping her up in his arms. Yuri smiled brightly as his arms closed around her and she held his broad shoulders.

"It took you long enough to find me husband." She spoke laconically.

Pa'cour glared at her, trying to be angry and failing. Finally he just kissed her hard on the lips standing among the death and blood. Yuri whimpered softly and squeezed his thick arms before she drew her head back. "You and I will talk about your reckless actions my Blessed Wife!" He growled at her.

Yuri gripped his face in her hands. "I had to come husband." She said softly. "I..."

Pa'cour shook his head. "Not now." He spoke. "We must leave before this fool's men begin to realize he is no longer their leader."

"If they haven't heard his wails of pain. What a baby!" Onera commented looking at her father.

Pa'cour turned quickly and looked at Norev. "What about him?" He asked.

Yuri squeezed his arm and stepped forward. "What about you... Norev is it?" Yuri asked.

Norev bowed his head slightly. "I have not seen you Princess." He spoke. "I... you are not the same as I remember you to be Princess. There is something different about you now." He spread his hands out slowly causing Onera to move quickly and bring Iphan rie Aellseleum up in a single heartbeat to press to his throat. Yuri blurred forward to stand in front of him, her face twisted in anger.

"Why have you become like this?" She snarled at him. "Morew! How many other purebloods in your group have become nothing more than vith 'ez maggots?"

Norev lifted his face and looked at her. "Morew was a pig and you gave him the end he deserved!" Norev hissed. "What were we to do Princess? Your... your mother was destroying the Coven like a cancer. From inside. She and Moran were driving us to extinction! It was either fight for them and die or desert and at least die free! Die by our own choice! The Kavalians were beating us and Moran's tactics... your mother's tactics... they were helping them!"

"How many of your men are like Morew?" Yuri barked.

"Morew was not part of my crew! He joined us here!" Norev spoke.

"Your crew?" Pa'cour asked moving closer.

Norev nodded. "My crew. BLOODLETTER-Class Cruiser. RED MIST. It is under Shroud just at the edge of the system. I don't bring it close to this retched planet!"

"Your crew?" Yuri asked.

Norev met her eyes. "Most of them came with me when we deserted. I had their families rendezvous at a secret location and then we took them and left. The MIST is overcrowded but we are making do."

"You have families on your ship?" Yuri asked him.

Norev nodded. "Nearly a hundred and forty families." He replied. "Women, children. Mothers. Fathers. I couldn't ask them to leave their loved ones behind and be killed by the Kavalians or something stupid your mother or Moran did."

Pa'cour stepped closer. "You have family on your ship?"

Norev met his eyes. "A wife and two daughters." He replied.

"Quellian says you and your group are no better than these Immortals." Yuri spoke.

Norev looked at her once more. "This is The Wilds Princess. If you appear weak you die. We are protecting our families now and to appear weak puts them at risk. Yes... we have smuggled goods and conducted some very violent and immoral things... but to protect those we love... we would do far more. Our only purpose now is to protect them."

"And what if you and your men had purpose once more?" Yuri asked him.

Norev met her gaze evenly. "Your sister... Empress Narice... she would never allow us to return to the Coven after the things we have done. No matter how much we would want to. She is purging all the bad blood from the Coven even now."

"You still care about the Coven?" Yuri asked him.

"The High Coven is my home!" Norev snarled. "I would never betray the Coven to the Kavalian dogs or anyone else! Never. And neither would any of my men!"

"Yet she works closely with the Lycavorian Union." Yuri said. "Her Blessed husband is Arrarn Leonidas. They help to defend us even now."

Norev nodded his head. "We should never have been enemies with the Union." He stated calmly. "We are more like them than many of our people wish to admit."

"How many of your men work for Moran?" Yuri asked him. "Putting spies in a group like yours is something he would do."

Norev shook his head. "Morew is the only one who was an outsider. The only reason I allowed him to join us was because of his contacts here in The Wilds."

"What if I gave you purpose again?" Yuri asked. "You are still loyal to the Coven... then help me."

"Mother?" Onera gasped.

Yuri held up her hand though Pa'cour said nothing. He was thinking along the same lines as Yuri and he knew having a ship and men like this Norev would be a huge asset. "Tell me Norev. You wish to defend the Coven. You wish to have purpose and honor once more."

"Doing what?" Norev asked. "I don't know what has changed about you Princess but you are different. I will not work to subvert your sister in order to put you back on the throne. The Empress... she is the only hope we have as a people now. I will not work against her."

Yuri shook her head quickly. "I have no desire to reclaim leadership of the High Coven Norev." She told him. "And you are correct that only Narice can repair the damage my mother and even I have done through the millennia. No... I wish to see my sister succeed. I wish to see the Coven brought back to what it once was. I am not trying to subvert my sister... I am going to help her."

"Help her?" Norev asked.

Yuri nodded. "I am going to help her by doing the things she can not as Empress." Yuri spoke. "From the shadows."

"And she... she knows this?" Norev asked.

Yuri shook her head. "No... she has no idea."

"Then why?" Norev asked.

Yuri looked first at Pa'cour and then Onera. Her eyes returned to his then. "Because I have found something in this universe that means more to me than power and strength. In order to protect that... I need to protect my sister and what she does." Yuri paused. "Perhaps one day... perhaps one day I will be able to walk within the Coven's borders and my actions will be forgiven... but not now. Now I must help Narice from the shadows." She met Norev's eyes. "You and your men can have that purpose too. Your families will be safe and want for nothing. We will pick our battles and not throw lives away."

Norev blinked twice but nodded. "Done." He spoke.

Pa'cour looked at him. "That was fast." He stated.

Norev looked at him. "There is nothing more glorious than fighting to win back the honor we have lost as a people." He stated. "As the Princess said... perhaps one day we will be able to walk among the Coven with our heads held high. My daughters will be able to do this. That is what we want. You of all of us should know that feeling Pa'cour."

Pa'cour nodded his head. "Indeed I do." He stated.

"How many other females are here?" Yuri asked.

Norev returned his eyes to her. "Six. All in the next room." He answered. "The other Immortals are in the entertainment hall on the other side of the compound. It is why none have discovered what has happened here. They will though... and soon."

"Then we get the others and we leave." Yuri spoke. "I have no desire to remain here any longer than necessary. We must get Nameia and the others up to Nalavi so that he can help them."

"I will help you." Norev spoke. "I know the compound and it will be harder than you think convincing the other elf females it's safe to leave. They have been here longer and are..."

Pa'cour nodded. "They are broken." He said softly. He took a deep breath and reached behind his back under his cloak. He drew out two large blocks of explosive. "And I intend to insure they never do such a thing again." He snarled.

Yuri nodded and turned to Nameia who was quite lost. She gripped Nameia's hands. "Can you help us?" She asked. "If not... Onera can get you out of here to safety."

Nameia looked at Yuri, not understanding why this pureblood vampire female drew her in so deeply. She was strong and decisive and her beauty was almost surreal but she knew well the history of Yuri Moran. She was known for being exceptionally cruel and violent. She was also what many called a loose cannon. The woman standing before her was none of those things, yet she was all of them. Staring into those cobalt blue vampire eyes Nameia felt a wave of confidence swirl through her. Confidence and attraction. She had nothing left in her life, her family killed by Morew. Perhaps this was fate's way of trying to make amends. She trusted this woman for some reason. Trusted her more than she trusted herself and she decided quickly what she would do. Nameia squeezed her hands back. “Yes.” She said without really thinking about it.

Yuri nodded and turned back to Pa'cour. “We must move quickly.” She said.

“Quickly does not begin to describe how fast we must move.” He answered as he moved to the door. “Onera... follow me daughter.”

SCIMITAR ORBITING SOLMAR

“... A little worn out there Andro.” Sa'sur spoke with a grin as they sat in their joint offices.

Andro lowered the mug of his mother's coffee and grinned. “I claimed Sehri last night.” He replied looking at her. Sa'sur's mate was a Lycavorian and he had turned her long ago so she knew the significance of that. They also did not keep many things from each other as long as they had worked together. “We may have... overdone it.”

Sa'sur laughed at his expression and nodded. “No apologies necessary.” She said. “She's a beautiful young woman. Just like all of your wives and mates. I hope she is the last one though. It's getting kind of hard to keep track of them.”

“Carians yes!” Andro exclaimed. “I don't want or need anymore! I'd end up killing myself!”

Sa'sur laughed now as well and sat back in her chair. After a moment she lowered her own mug of tea and looked at him. “So now what?” She asked. “I'm kind of surprised we haven't detected a Kavalian force moving here now to try and retake the colony to be honest.”

Andro shook his head and leaned forward on the couch. “No. Keleru set up this entire operation to eliminate Byka and Azlenr and to try and make himself look good on the Netnews. He failed at that. He won't try and retake this colony when they succeeded in taking the others. He's not that stupid.”

“Too bad. I was hoping he might try something. We got three entire Fleet Groups in the vicinity now. We would have pounded anything he sent this way.” Sa'sur answered. “The civilians have seemed to accept the Kavalian troops. Most of them knew the Puma Bane assholes were the ones to be afraid of. And the Kavalian troops are going out of their way to help in any way they can.”

Andro nodded. “I think we have acquired solid allies in Azlenr and Byka. Their men trust them... especially now that they know their families are safe.”

“They don't seem like such a bad lot.” Sa'sur said.

Andro nodded his head. “Yes, but we will take no chances. Lisisa is already establishing contacts with several of the Bontawillian and elven engineers. They will be our eyes and ears when we leave.”

“Where are we going?” Sa'sur asked.

“We're going to return to Earth for the moment.” Andro said. “I need to get a handle on how much losing those colonies means and what we can do to counter the effects. And Sehri's mother has already gone on ahead with Kelelm to meet with Tenna Deia as a member of the Rothryn government.”

Sa'sur nodded. “Then what?”

Andro looked at her as he got to his feet. “Then I talk to Arrarn and Narice who will be meeting us there.” He shook his head. “I never really understood how much my father was involved in the political matters of the Union. I thought he hated it.”

“He does.” Sa'sur said as she got to her feet. “That doesn't mean he isn't damn good at it.” She told him.

“Better than me for sure.” Andro said.

“Don't sell yourself short Andro.” Sa'sur told him. “This is new to you just like it was with your father. You just do what he did and follow your heart.”

Andro met her eyes. “And has he had enemies all around him even among our own people?” He asked.

“Especially among our own people.” Sa'sur said. “There will always be the fools who think they know what's best for everyone. Or that they can do a better job. Icho is just one of dozens who think like that. I got a feeling Sadi straightened Ulana out... but we'll see. Your father never let it change who he was... and you're doing a damn fine job of impersonating him.”

Andro smiled. "You know... for the longest time all I have ever wanted was to come out from what I perceived as my father's shadow." He said softly. "I am coming to realize that it was not his shadow I was walking in, but one of my own making. I think like him and act like him not because I am his son, but because I believe in what he believes in. Those are the conclusions I have come to after seeing all we have seen."

"Not so bad are they?" Sa'sur said.

Andro shook his head. "No they are not." He answered. "Keep me advised of any new movements by Keleru and his ilk as they come across. I'm going to get with Lisisa and then have breakfast with my mates. We'll meet with Azlenr and Byka this afternoon and begin to plan the movement and redeployment of their forces."

Sa'sur nodded. "I'll be here." She stated.

Andro nodded with a smile and then headed out of their office to move down the corridor. Andro was silent as he walked down the corridor, his mind on many things but after last night with his wives and mates, his main thoughts were on how to get to the Beta Quadrant as soon as possible and scoop Caliria into his arms and ask for her forgiveness. Her forgiveness for letting her go and putting her in the situation he had. He knew Sadi and the others missed her and they were still somewhat miffed at him in how he went about that. He needed to make amends but the longer he remained here; he feared the harder it would be for Caliria to accept and forgive him. As he entered the elevator to take him to the mess deck he looked up and saw Jomann quickly enter the elevator with him. This brought him out of his mindset as the doors closed.

"Jomann." He said in greeting.

Jomann nodded. "Andro." He said with a grin. "Looking a little ragged there my friend." He spoke.

Andro smiled as he saw the state of Jomann's eyes. "You are one to talk." He said. "Eli is coming into phase isn't she?"

Jomann tried to hide his embarrassment but it didn't take with Andro. They were far too close as friends now, as well as what the King now called them. Praetorians. "Let me just say that I may have gained several cavities last night as sweet as her scent was. I..."

Andro grabbed his arm. "Jomann... she's my sister." He stated. "Way too much information my friend."

Jomann laughed. "Sorry." He said.

"What about Brendi?" Andro asked.

Jomann looked at him. "We are not actively pursuing her if that is what you mean." He said in reply. "Eliani desires her deeply, but she also knows what type of person Brendi is. She is not willing to risk losing her by moving too fast."

"And you are ok with that?" Andro asked.

Jomann nodded. "Eliani is my Anome. I am hers. There is no doubt there. None. Neither of us could desire another if we both did not desire the same person, you know that better than most Andro."

Andro nodded. "I do."

"We both desire Brendi. We both want her in our lives. We are willing let things develop on their own." Jomann said.

Andro grinned. "Wow... Eli usually isn't so calm and patient about things. She must be serious." He said.

Jomann smiled. "We are." He said.

Andro nodded. "We are going to have to pull Dorian aside soon Jomann. He needs to fully understand what we both sense in him. He needs to know and understand what it means."

Jomann nodded as the doors to the elevator opened and they exited on the mess deck. "I agree." He said as they walked towards the mess lounge. "I don't think I fully understand what it means Andro... but I do know we need to talk with him."

"We'll know more when we have a chance to speak with Murano." Andro said. "One of the few bright spots father found on his trip. We..." Andro came up short with Jomann beside him when he looked up and saw Sehri's sister Osbela blocking their path. "Lady Osbela..." Androcles stated. "Is there something I can help you with?"

"Prince Androcles... I was wondering if I could have a moment of your time." Osbela spoke sweetly as she batted her eyes at him.

"What can I do for you?" Andro asked.

Osbela looked at Jomann. "Alone I mean." She said quickly. "It's of a rather sensitive nature."

Andro knew immediately what was going on for he could sense Osbela trying to use a female aura she could not control or direct as her sister Sehri could. He smiled and bowed his head to her. "Captain Jomann is my First." He said. "There is nothing he can not know."

This seemed to thrown Osbela for a split second but she recovered quickly. "It's... it concerns my sister Sehri actually." She said. "With my mother gone on to Earth I feel it is my obligation to speak up for her."

"Ah..." Andro said. He looked at Jomann. "Jomann... I'll be along shortly."

[Are you sure Andro?] Jomann asked. [Given what you have told me and what I have heard...]

Andro nodded his head. [Trust me... I know what is going on here.] He said. [I will be fine.]

Jomann nodded. [I'll let Sadi and the others know you will be right behind me.]

Andro nodded and then turned back to Osbela as Jomann walked towards the entrance to the mess lounge. Osbela watched him enter and then returned her gaze to Androcles. "It's much better this way." She said. "Is there someplace where we can speak more privately?"

Andro looked around and saw the corner into a maintenance corridor and he motioned with his hand. "This way." He said. He watched Osbela smile and then move in that direction. He followed and in a moment they were in the corridor which was much less traveled than the main corridor. "So how can I help you?" He asked as Osbela turned and looked at him. "And how does this concern Sehri?"

"My mother... my mother told me that Sehri has displayed an... interest in you if you will." Osbela said. "That you and she believe there is a connection of some sorts between you. Her abilities have had her with the Circle of Shamans since she was very little and when she turned sixteen she... she swore a vow of celibacy to the Circle. I believe she may be infatuated with you and not fully understand who and what you are."

Andro smiled calmly. "And you do?" He asked folding his hands behind his back.

Osbela smiled. "I do." She said reaching up and running her hand along Andro's shoulder and down his arm. "You are a Crown Prince of your people. A position of power and prestige. You are a virile man... strong and intelligent." Osbela returned her eyes to Andro and saw him gazing at her. "You deserve a woman of similar stature. Like your other mates."

"And I suppose that would be a woman like yourself?" Andro asked her evenly.

Osbela smiled shyly and looked down. "Well... yes. I suppose I am." She answered meeting his eyes with an inviting gaze.

Andro nodded. "You should probably know... I claimed Sehri last night." He stated seeing Osbela's face tighten in surprise and her eyes go wide. "Funny thing though... she was none of those things. In fact... she was quite adventurous and inventive." Andro smiled at the look on her face and bowed his head slightly. "If you'll excuse me."

Osbela stood there in shock and complete embarrassment. She watched Andro's back turn and go around the corner of the corridor and Osbela suddenly became very angry. She clenched her fists and stormed off to find her sister and Shaman Master Harira.

Sheva Juconi looked around the inside of Dorian Leonidas's quarters and shook her head slowly. His equipment and weapons were strewn about the main living area and she could see a trail of clothes leading into his bedroom. She didn't understand why he had wanted quarters so close to the dorsal hull of the ship. It was a dangerous place if they ever came under intense attack, only twelve centimeters of Depleted Laminated Crystanium Weave hull molded with an inner and outer layer of Dragon Armor stood between him and the void of space. Jomann had asked her to collect him and join them for breakfast in the mess lounge and she had reluctantly agreed. She hadn't seen him fighting on Solmar, indeed she was angry that he had gotten involved at all, but she had read and heard the reports and comments from those who had fought beside him and all of them praised his skill and actions.

Sheva looked around his quarters listening the dull drum of the shower, taking in the holoscreens on the computer desk as well as the credenza along the bulkhead. There were several large paintings hanging on the walls that depicted scenes from Lycavorian history, one of the them at some point during the Battle of Thermopylae. These were not standard paintings or pictures and she realized that someone had decorated his quarters for him. She moved to the credenza and thumbed through the selection of reading discs on the top and the odd collection of music. It was varied and contained different material on war and philosophical teachings, some old and some new. It was certainly not what she expected from Dorian Leonidas given how he acted in many ways. She still considered him a child Sheva knew... only months old, yet occupying the body of a young man. She still had issues with this arrangement and it did not sit well with her or her primary duty. It did not help matters in the least that the body he had was sculpted perfection as far as she was concerned and it troubled her deeply that she was so physically attracted to him. She did not understand how she could find him so striking given that she knew how he had been born. She also didn't understand why that mattered. It had been so long since she had last been with a man and no matter how much she tried to deny it, Dorian Leonidas excited her more than any man she had ever been with.

As she turned from the credenza, the activated data pad on the computer desk caught her eye and she moved to the desk and picked it up. Her eyes grew wide when she saw that it was her entire personal file. Her entire life within the Union. Fresh anger surged through her though she had no idea why and his deep voice caused her to nearly jump out of her skin.

"You come into people's quarters uninvited often do you?" Dorian spoke.

Sheva's head came up and she stepped back several steps before catching herself. She hadn't heard or sensed him come into the main room. Her eyes grew even wider when she saw he was dripping wet and holding a rather smallish towel around his waist. Her shock quickly turned back to anger and she held up the data pad.

"What are you doing with this?" She demanded. "You have no right!"

Dorian moved further into the main room holding the towel tightly. "I have no right?" He stated calmly. "You can know all there is to know about me... but I am not allowed the same courtesy? Is that what you are saying?"

"I am... I am Durcunusaan! It is my... my duty to know these things!" Sheva barked.

Dorian stopped a few feet in front of her and Sheva felt her blood stir as she glared at him, his exceptionally powerful body on display for her to see. He almost matched his brother in definition and appeared to be just as heavily muscled as him. This apparently did not take away from his speed according to the reports she had seen.

"Is it also your duty to come into my quarters uninvited?" Dorian asked her.

"Jomann... Jomann asked me to collect you." Sheva stammered. "To meet your brother for breakfast."

"Ever hear of using the chime?" Dorian asked her. His own wolf blood was stirring as well, combined with the pureness of his mother's vampire blood, it made for a very nearly irresistible combination.

Sheva glared at him. "I am your Captain!" She growled. "I do not need to use the chime!"

Dorian met her gaze. "You are my Captain and you think it is beneath you!" He snapped. "You think I don't know how you feel about being assigned to me?"

Sheva blinked quickly. "You... you don't know what you speak of?" She finally told him.

"Don't I?" Dorian spat moving closer to her. "You think I haven't heard you complain to Jomann? To a few others? You think it is beneath you! You think I am a child in an adult's body! That I'm unnatural and some sort of abomination!"

Sheva's eyes grew wide. "I never said that!" She barked.

"But you think it." Dorian snapped. "You don't hide your surface thoughts as well as you should."

"You... you have read my thoughts?" She hissed at him. "You have no right!"

"When you wear your thoughts on your sleeve about me as you do, it's hard not too!" Dorian growled at her moving even closer, his anger and desire driving him now. Her sweet scent, a combination of berries and apples to his wolf nose, was maddening to him. "You think I am some sort a monster! And a child at that!" He spat, towering over her five foot one frame.

Sheva didn't back down however, glaring back at him. "You... you act like a child at times!" She snapped. "You are reckless! And arrogant! And you..."

"Go ahead!" Dorian snarled. "Spit it all out! You think it is beneath your wonderful skills to be babysitting me! You have thought this since the day my mother appointed you my Captain Sheva!"

"YES!" Sheva shouted as her light green eyes flared in anger. "Is that what you want to hear?" She barked. "Yes damn it! You act like an impudent child at times! You are extremely overconfident and believe your skills will get you out of any danger! You are..."

“Why don’t you admit why you really want to get away from me?” Dorian snapped at her, his desire and want for this woman making him brave and confident because he could smell the desire for him wafting from Sheva’s pores no matter how much she tried to fight it.

Sheva blinked again. “Wha... what?” She gasped.

“You know what I’m talking about.” Dorian hissed softly. Andro had told him if he truly wanted something to go after it. If he felt Sheva was what he truly wanted, then go after her. The worst she could do was reject him. At least then Dorian would know where he stood. He was going to go after her now and determine what part of his future Sheva Juconi would play in it. “Admit it!”

Sheva looked at him. “What... what are you talking about?” She stammered trying to gain control of her own emotions which were rapidly spiraling out of control. He was so close to her, so dominant and handsome. He was the most incredibly beautiful man she had ever laid her eyes on in over three hundred years of life, and it had been so very long since she had shared the warmth of a man. None of the men she had bedded in the past could hold a candle to Dorian in any way. He brimmed with confidence and intelligence and knowledge that he should not have given how he came into this world. Sheva did not understand it, for while she was considered a Tier Six Mindvoicer, she had never delved into the capabilities that skill afforded her. She tried to avoid using it at all costs because she did not believe she actually had this skill or that she could actively use it in any way.

However, Sheva could not deny it now. She could not deny what Dorian made her feel and it terrified her that he could elicit these emotions in her so easily. She watched as he stepped closer to her, causing her to inch back until she was against the bulkhead. She could almost taste the blood running through his veins. Mixed blood yes, but blood that was purer than anything she had ever smelled and her mouth almost watered at the desire to taste it.

“I think you know what I mean.” Dorian spoke in a voice that now openly held passion in it. Passion and desire and confidence. All traits of a man who had many more years of life than Dorian Leonidas, yet traits that exuded from him now. And it was utterly maddening to Sheva.

Sheva looked at him with wide eyes hearing the voice and feeling his pulse pounding in the tiny space between them. His brown eye had shrunk and was now surrounded by the thick black ring that gave away his wolf blood, while his cobalt blue eye had become even brighter than normal. “You... back up please!” She rasped out the words. “This isn’t... I...”

Dorian moved closer to her now, reaching up with his left hand to run his fingers along the edge of her jaw and seeing her body react to his touch. His blood was on fire and he could no longer hold back the emotions. “Leave!” He hissed softly. “Leave Sheva! Before I can’t... before I can’t stop my desire for you!” He husked the words to her forehead. “Go! I will... I will tell Jomann and my brother to reassign you! I will...”

Sheva could not deny it any longer. She did not want to deny it. The scent of his blood was so staggering. The heat of his desire for her was unlike anything she had ever felt from any man. Dorian Leonidas didn’t want to bed her as a conquest... Dorian wanted to possess her. He wanted to have every bit of her. She reached up with a shaking hand and covered his larger hand with her fingers feeling the heat of his skin and body. Her mind told her not to look up, but her body and her heart were wining this battle and she lifted her now cobalt blue vampire eyes into his face and saw his unique eyes once more.

“Dor... Dorian I... you...” He did not give her the opportunity to finish her words and Sheva was so very happy he didn’t. He leaned over and covered her trembling lips with his own and then he was lifting her petite form into his arms, the towel falling away from around his waist and he was pinning her to the bulkhead as he kissed her with a ferocity Sheva had never known. Sheva let go of everything then, all of her doubts and the misgivings that Dorian would never know. She simply surrendered to what was racing through her because it was the most divine thing she had ever felt in her life. Her whimper of delight was very audible as she wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders and surrendered to that fearsome kiss with ardent fervor.

Sheva could feel his hands working, pulling at her uniform urgently, and nearly tearing her fatigue top off with his combined wolf and vampire strength. He didn’t even attempt to lift her t-shirt from over her head; he simply shredded that with his strength from the front and then pulled her even closer. Then Sheva’s bare breasts, firm mounds of flesh topped with small but hard nipples were pressing into his bare chest and setting her body on fire. She began helping him then, her hands tearing at her pants, trying to get them off her body. He somehow managed to unlace her boots in their movements and soon they were flying across the main living area as she pushed her pants below her hips. His powerful hands took control then and he pulled them down her legs until she was suddenly very naked in his arms. His large hands filled with her small, but incredibly firm cheeks and Sheva tore her lips from his when she felt it. Her center was drenched, more wet than she had ever been in her life and she burned with need.

“Dor... Dorian wait!” She gasped with wide eyes at feeling the scorching hot organ press against her opening. “You... it’s too...”

Sheva Juconi tossed her head back and screamed in utter, cataclysmic bliss as Dorian Leonidas pulled her hips down and speared her fully in one, soul robbing, eleven and a half inch plunge that seemed to last forever. When their groins smashed together at the end of her plunge, Sheva erupted in the most mind numbing orgasm she had experienced in over three hundred years of life. Her body shuddered almost violently and she wrapped her arms and legs around his powerful body, locking her ankles around Dorian’s waist at the small of his back as her sweet juices coated their groins. She held on for dear life as Dorian pulled her away from the bulkhead and began to stomp across his quarters towards the bedroom. Each step drove Sheva deeper and deeper into orgasmic frenzy and she was crying out again even before he was through the doorway into his bedroom.

Dorian would not be joining his brother for breakfast, but through his pleasure clouded mind and the feel of Sheva’s incredible body wrapped in his arms, Dorian sensed his brother’s happiness for him at what he would experience. Deep in his mind he felt Andro close a door and then Dorian was all alone with Sheva.

Dorian Leonidas was not about to waste that time.

USU OZEIB 7

YDARE

VENTASH’MA PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT CHAMBERS

There were twelve Ventash’ma now, three of them newly elected to go along with the thirty-two Sector Governors from all of High Coven space that was free of Kavalian control. The table in the room was massive, able to seat all of them in an oval shape and insuring they had equal line of sight to where Narice sat on one end of the table at the head. Computer monitors and control consoles were in front of every man and woman, data pads and discs stacked to the sides or simply strewn across the table in some areas. Cooled pictures of cloned blood resides all over the table, half empty glasses near everyone. They had arrived early this morning to discuss and vote on several items of importance, the first vote just finishing up as each individual man and woman typed on their monitors.

Ventash’ma Datarik glanced over to the head of the table and watched as Narice’s aide Felisa sat just behind her to the right and was whispering into her ear. He had to admit to himself that since Narice’s return, their future had become so much brighter as a people. Datarik was a loyal and committed member of the vampire species, but he was also very intelligent and knew when they had to change as a people in order to survive. Aikiro and Veldruk never knew that, or they never tried to know it, and they had brought the High Coven to the brink of destruction. He wondered for a moment what they would think of their youngest daughter being in charge now and the radical changes that she was making in how they did things. The ten Ventash’ma oversaw the thirty-two sector governors and those governors had been very hastily elected by the people they represented in the first weeks of Narice coming to power. Some of the sectors were larger than others, but for the moment everyone within the High Coven had a voice in the direction of their people now, and for the first time in their history, three members of the Ventash’ma were under the age of ten thousand years.

Datarik knew there would be dissent among them, but now they no longer had to worry about a visit by the secret police in the middle of the night for voicing their opinion on what to do. Unlike most of the other Ventash’ma however, Datarik knew Narice was not her mother or sister. She would not tolerate the back room deals or proposals. Her values and morals were solid and immovable. She would not be swayed in another direction if it did not benefit the people of the High Coven. He was going to enjoy being part of Narice’s rule.

Datarik saw Narice nod to Felisa and she got to her feet. “Very well everyone... the final vote is unanimous.” She spoke. “Forty-four to zero. We will reopen the Vorellian Ruby Mines on Hongar. The Hongar will mine the rubies and will receive seventy-five percent of the profit from these mines to improve the state of their planet and surrounding colonies, as well as upgrade their mining equipment. The Coven will use our twenty-five percent to refund and balance the use of the Coven Dakar.”

Narice saw the governor of the sector Hongar was in nod his head enthusiastically. “This will go a long way to helping insure stability and long term currency value Empress.” He spoke. “And the Hongar will have more than enough to fund the projects for their people. Most of that material will be bought from our companies anyway.”

Narice nodded. “As long as we trade with them on a fair level Governor.” She spoke. “I do not want to hear that our companies are inflating their prices to make a profit. The Hongar have been part of the Coven since the very beginning and I will not repeat the mistakes of my father by treating them as he did.”

The man nodded. “I will see to it personally.” He said in reply.

Narice nodded and looked around the table. “Very well. It’s been a long day I know... but I think we have accomplished more than we thought we could. Let’s...”

“Excuse me Empress?” The Governor spoke from halfway down the table.

Narice looked at him and glanced down at her data pad. “Yes... Governor Torlen is it?”

The man nodded and rose to his feet. “Yes Empress... Governor to Sector twenty-Three.” He replied. “There is another issue that we have not yet brought up. Some of my colleagues do not deem it important... but those in my region do.”

Narice tilted her head. “Really?” She spoke. “What issue would that be?”

Datarik looked at the man. “I told you this was not the time or place to broach this subject Torlen!”

“I disagree.” Torlen spoke. “Respectfully of course Ventash’ma Datarik.”

Narice looked between the two men and then back to Torlen. “What am I missing?” She asked.

Torlen returned his gaze to her. “The citizens of the High Coven that I represent are... more traditional than most.” He spoke smoothly.

Narice nodded. “Yes I know that.” She spoke. “What are you getting at Governor?”

“Several dozen of the older, more influential families have come to me and asked when they will be allowed to present their sons to you for inspection.” Torlen said.

Narice shook her head. “Excuse me... inspection? Why on earth would I need to inspect them?” She asked.

Torlen nodded his head. “So that you may chose a pureblood husband to rule beside you of course. It is the custom for the Empress to do this when she is not joined, according to our laws. This is how your mother chose your father.”

“I know how my mother chose my father Governor.” Narice spoke. “I am not my mother however, and I already have a Du’used M’ranndii Governor. A man who I love beyond words of expression. And I have a lover who I love beyond words. This is not going to change.”

“Your husband is a Prince of the Lycavorian Union.” Torlen pressed. “He is a half breed himself and much younger than you. Since the beginning of the Coven, our Empress and or Emperor has always been pure of blood. The more influential families in my sector are expecting you to follow this birthright as well.”

“Are they?” Narice spoke.

Torlen nodded his head. “It would not be unusual for you to have a consort. Arrarn Leonidas could fill this role if you wish. The woman Toria as well. But it does insure that a pureblood vampire is always ready to rule and any heirs are pureblood as well.”

Narice sat back in her chair slowly, her dark eyes boring into Torlen as he stood there with no idea of the arrogance he was portraying. “Let me get this straight...” She began to speak. “You want me to tell Arrarn Leonidas, who I love more than my own life and whose name I carry proudly, that out of political necessity I need to share a bed with another man and produce a child from that relationship? All while he watched and endured his wife sleeping with another man?” Narice leaned forward at the table. “That is what you are saying Governor?”

“That is how things have been done for millennia Empress.” Torlen said.

“Oh... then I suppose you won’t mind if I tell you that I need your wife of three thousand four hundred and two years needs to bed an Immortal or two in order to keep relations between our two people calm.” Narice spat.

Felisa couldn't help but chuckle softly beside Narice and she looked over to the side and saw her Immortal husband Ki'nuq and Colonel Co'kal standing along the wall with wide eyes at Narice's words.

Torlen looked at Narice with equally wide eyes. "Certainly not!" He hissed dramatically.

"But you expect me to do this?" Narice demanded.

"I... I am only explaining to you how... how things have worked for millennia." Torlen spoke. "And what those within my sector expect."

Narice nodded her head. "Then you go back to them and tell them this." She spoke getting to her feet. "I am Narice Leonidas! Arrarn Leonidas is my Du'ased M'ranndii and that will not change! Not now! Not in the future! Any children I bear will be his children and no one else's! I would never betray the man I love in such a way! Never! Nor would I betray Toria in such a way!"

"Empress you..." Torlen began.

"NO!" Narice barked silencing him. "I will not cling to archaic rules of law that have no right to even exist! I have tasted Arrarn's blood and no man's blood will ever compare to his! I don't care if he is a thousand years younger than me! He is who has claimed my heart and my soul! Arrarn Leonidas is part of why I am who I am! I would never... could never be debased or dishonor him by doing such a thing willingly! I am setting the Coven on a new path and if that means dismissing traditions that are vile to me and to so many others, so be it! The families will just have to tolerate it!" Narice snarled. "Part of the reason we came so close to death is because we cling to these out of date and often times vile traditions. I will not!"

"What... what should I tell those families who have asked me this?" Torlen spoke.

"Tell them the only man who will ever have me in or out of his bed is Arrarn Leonidas!" Narice snarled at him. "The only children I will ever bear will be Arrarn Leonidas's children! Period! Outside of that... if they don't like that answer... they can always go live within the Kavalian Federation! Phraktos... I can't believe we are even discussing this after all that has happened!"

Datarik rose to his feet now. "Please... everyone... it has been a long day for all of us!" He began. "Why don't we end these sessions for now and take a break? We have much to accomplish over the next few days with everyone here and exhausting ourselves on the first day will do none of us any good. There are still many things we need to discuss and decide."

Datarik saw the nods of many heads around the table.

"I second this." Riara spoke from his chair.

"As do I." Anebal echoed. "There is too much to do."

Datarik nodded his own head. "Please... Colonel Co'kal will show you to your escorts and insure you are directed to the proper facilities."

Co'kal stepped forward and bowed his head. "I have teams standing by for the Governors and all their aides." He spoke. "We would be honored to escort them."

Datarik nodded. "Good. We will adjourn until tomorrow morning then."

Everyone nodded and began to head for the exits while Datarik, Riara and Anebal moved closer to Narice at the end of the table. She watched as they settled into the now vacant chairs and then looked at Datarik.

"What was that?" Narice asked softly.

"I told Torlen it was not the subject he wanted to bring up." Datarik answered. "He did not listen obviously."

"Datarik... there is no way I will ever submit to that no matter what he says or what these so called influential families want!" Narice exclaimed. "Arrarn and Toria... they are... they are my life! They are part of what makes me... who I am!"

Datarik nodded his head. "I tried to explain this to him but it seems the families have quite a bit of sway over him."

"A different agenda as well perhaps." Anebal spoke from her chair. "They are not going to let this go Empress."

Narice nodded her head. "I know. My mother did it. Yuri did it. They expect me to do it." She said. "Which I have no intention of doing no matter what."

"There are some..." Riara spoke. "There are some who are miffed that Arrarn is acting as Defense Minister even though Admiral Pontal and others think he is doing an amazing job. Not many... but they do have some influence. They don't trust the Lycavorian Union or the motives of Androcles Leonidas. They see your union with Arrarn as too convenient."

"Convenient?" Narice hissed loudly. "I almost lost him in the beginning because of my own arrogance and exactly that kind of thinking!"

Riara nodded. "I'm only relaying to you what they think."

"They'll need to get over it!" Narice exclaimed. "Andro could have wiped the Coven out if he wanted for what was done to Zarah! If they are foolish enough to underestimate him too bad!" She looked at Datarik. "What about the other Ventash'ma?"

Datarik shook his head. "All twelve of us are behind you one hundred percent." He said. "You need not worry about us. It's the different governors that will bring these things forth based on who is pulling their strings."

"We only have to tolerate them for a year until new elections are held and then properly supervised." Anebal said.

Narice sat back and shook her head. "I can't believe they would even entertain that train of thought anymore." She said.

"Torlen shut up quick when you said that about his wife." Felisa said with a smile. "I don't think he liked that idea."

Datarik nodded with a grin. "Felisa is right. This might be something that you take to the people." He spoke. "You have their unwavering support Narice and if need be you can go to them."

"God... I hope no one makes the mistake of approaching Arrarn about this." Narice spoke. "He... he would not take it well. He is viciously protective of Toria and I."

Datarik nodded. "Yes... that is something we noticed when he nearly killed the media reporter who suggested your relationship with Toria was unnatural."

Anebal reached out and took her hand. "Go home and tonight make sure he knows that this is a non issue with you." She said with a smile. "That young man worships you Narice. And he has no reason to doubt you."

Narice nodded. "Yes." She said softly. She rose to her feet and looked at them. "If you will excuse me." She said.

Datarik was silent as he watched her exit with Felisa at her side. He turned back to Anebal and Riara as he motioned his own Immortal guard to his side. Va'gek had been here that first day and was a senior Captain in the Immortal ranks. He had eagerly agreed to become Datarik's security officer when the units were being formed. Datarik waited until the six foot six Immortal stood just behind him.

"This is troubling." He spoke.

Anebal nodded. "It's being driven Datarik. And not by those who wish to go into the future on the path Narice is setting us on."

Datarik nodded. "Do either of you believe Arrarn Leonidas being her Blessed husband to be some sort of ploy by Androcles Leonidas to destroy us from within?" He asked.

"Please... if he wanted to destroy us he would not have stopped with Research Station One." Riara spoke. "He could have killed us all that day. If Narice had not succeeded in making us see what we were becoming I fully believe he would have turned her loose on us. I for one do not wish to see her lose her temper."

"Nor do I." Anebal spoke.

Datarik leaned back in his chair. "I agree." He said. He looked at the towering Immortal that was his shadow now. "Va'gek..." He said looking at him. "Can you have a discrete word with Co'kal and perhaps find out where this is coming from? Anyone behind this will to speak with us nearby... but they might let it slip if they felt secure."

Va'gek nodded quickly. "I believe the colonel would do so happily Ventash'ma Datarik." He said.

Datarik nodded his head. "Narice is our best and brightest hope for a future. Others may think different... but I believe Androcles when he says that we were meant to be friends and allies and in many cases family. Anything that is a threat to Narice... threatens her... we need to be aware of it. We all agree on that yes?" He said.

Riara nodded his head. "Without question. And we need to make sure Arrarn Leonidas remains unaware of it as well. At least as much as we are able." He said. "Half elf he may be... but he is a Leonidas and they do not react well to others trying to hurt their wives and mates in any way. We all have seen this."

"Indeed." Datarik said. He turned and looked at Va'gek once more. "Have Co'kal see what he can do and then inform me Va'gek."

The Immortal nodded. "Right away."

Anebal got to her feet. "Let's hope Torlen does not push the issue. I have a feeling we would not like to see Narice's response if she were to truly unleash on him."

Datarik nodded. "Nor would I... but I believe we can not control that. And I for one have no desire to try."

SCIMITAR ORBITING SOLMAR

They sat at the same table in the mess lounge, against the back wall, but with other crew filled tables all around them. This was Sa'sur and Andro's will at work. There was no special seating for officers or enlisted, and though all of them held a rank of some sort, you could not tell it from the way they interacted with one another. Five Crown Princesses sat at the same table, the Lycavorians among those in the mess lounge detecting immediately that Sehri was now a wife and mate to Androcles Leonidas. It was easy enough to determine just by his scent which lingered powerfully within her blood as it did all of his mates. Even to those who were not Lycavorian it was equally obvious just by the way she acted with the others. Laughter, small kisses between lovers, and almost always in physical contact with each other in some fashion. At least for those on the SCIMITAR it was an easy item to pick out.

For Shaman Master Harira it was not so easy.

She sat with Ibani and Osbela at another table, their eyes watching as Sehri laughed out loud with Carisia over something that Lu'ria had said. Harira turned back and looked at Osbela. "You are certain that is what he said Osbela?" Harira asked her.

Osbela nodded. "Yes. I'm surprised he is not here already. I thought he was coming right here after he left me."

"Shaman Master... this cannot be allowed to stand." Ibani spoke. "Our father meant for Osbela or myself to become his wife. Not Sehri!"

"Did she not take a vow Shaman Master?" Osbela asked looking at her. "A vow to the Circle?"

"Yes she did." Harira hissed. "I cannot tolerate this."

"What can we do?" Osbela asked.

Harira got to her feet. "I will remind her of her duty to the Circle and what her father intends for her. Your mother is not here to do that, so I must in her place."

Osbela and Ibani watched as Harira turned and began walking towards their table. They hadn't expected her to react in such a manner but they were both eager to see what would happen.

Sadi was the first to look up when Harira approached and she came to her feet with a smile. "Shaman Master Harira... join us please." Sadi spoke as she motioned to the empty chair at the table.

Sehri nodded quickly. "Yes... please."

Harira was briefly taken aback by the good natured invitation but she recovered quickly and shook her head. "No thank you." She answered. "I did need to speak with Sehri however." She said looking at her. "Privately."

Sadi looked at Sehri who got to her feet slowly. "Certainly." Sehri spoke. "I'll be right back." She told Sadi.

Sadi smiled and they shared a brief kiss before Sehri moved around her and Harira took her hand and began to lead her out of the Mess Lounge. Once out of the Mess Lounge Harira turned quickly and led Sehri a short way down the corridor to an adjoining walkway that was empty of anyone. She pulled her into the area and turned to look at her. Sehri met her eyes with confusion and looked at her.

“Shaman Master Harira... what is this about?” Sehri asked.

“What do you think you are doing?” Harira hissed at her.

Sehri shook her head in puzzlement. “I’m sorry... what I’m doing?” She asked. “I don’t understand the question.”

“You know full well what I am talking about!” Harira snapped. “You have broken your vow to the Circle haven’t you?”

“What?” Sehri asked.

“You... you laid with Androcles Leonidas!” Harira snapped once more. “You shared his bed! Did you allow him to claim you in the fashion of his people?”

Sehri’s eyes grew a little wider and she pulled her hand out of Harira’s grasp. “I’m sorry Shaman Master... but I don’t see how that is any of your business.” She spoke.

“It is my business because you swore a vow to... to the Circle!” Harira snarled angrily. “You swore a vow of celibacy to the Circle of Shamans and you have violated that vow! And you have done so with the man your father intended one of your sisters become wife and mate too!”

Sehri looked shocked at Harira’s reaction, clearly not understanding why she was so angry. Shaman master Harira had always seemed more uptight and too strict in her mannerisms than the other Shaman Masters within the Circle and Sehri had expected her to be upset, but not like this. She was a task master when it came to schooling and while this was not a bad thing by any means, it seemed she always was pushing the students harder than needed. Almost as if she was testing them.

“I... I followed my heart Shaman Master. Androcles followed his heart. Isn’t that... isn’t that what the Circle says we should do?” Sehri asked.

“You have betrayed the Circle with your actions Sehri!” Harira hissed.

Sehri’s glaucous blue eyes narrowed. In the past she would have been chastised and shameful if a Shaman Master suggested she had betrayed the Circle in any manner. Sehri was no longer the same woman however. Discovering Androcles, Sadi and the others; discovering what she could be, all of this had changed her and made her much more confident and decisive in herself and who she was.

“I have betrayed no one!” Sehri snapped at her angrily, surprising Harira. “I followed my heart and it led me here! This is where I belong!”

“You are too young and foolish to know where you belong or what your place in this world is!” Harira growled at her causing Sehri’s eyes to grow even wider at this obvious insult to her intelligence. “Why do you think your father gave you to us?”

“My father gave me to the Circle so that I would not have to suffer the Rothryn Science Academy and how they treat those like me!” Sehri snarled.

Harira shook her head. “Sometimes I wonder if the Academy is not correct in some of its teachings.” She quipped.

“How could you say that?” Sehri gasped.

Harira ignored her and shook her head. “You... you will disavow this... this thing you have started with the Lycavorian Prince and the others. His wives.” She stated as if Sehri was not standing in front of her. “Yes... you will disavow any relationship with them. Tell them it was a mistake. That you were only exploring your womanhood because of your fever. You will be punished of course... but you can remain within the Circle. One of your sisters is better suited for the Lycavorian Prince. You...”

“I will do no such thing!” Sehri snarled angrily now. “Andro is my husband! Sadi and Ne’Veha and the others belong to me as I belong to them!”

“Nonsense! You will end this before it goes further!” Harira demanded.

Sehri looked at her wide eyed in disbelief. “Do not presume to tell me what I will and will not do Shaman Master! You would not care for the reaction you would receive!”

Harira glared at her. “Are... are you threatening me young lady?” She gasped. “I am a Shaman Master and you will do as I tell you! This is part of the vow you took when you entered the Circle! You will do as I tell you! This... this Androcles and the others are not for you! They warp... they warp your thinking!”

Sehri met her eyes with no back down in her whatsoever. “What rubbish!” She barked. “You do not know Andro! You do not know Sadi and the others! Who are you to say that they warp my thinking? You know nothing about them! You do not even know me!”

“Have I have no desire to learn about them! And I know all there is to know about you as an apprentice to the Circle.” Harira snapped.

“You are so wrong Shaman Master Harira! Cleric Mother Ilossa would not say these things to me!” Sehri snapped right back. “Nor would she make these demands from me!”

“I act with her authority as a Shaman Master! She favors you too much!” Harira spat. “Now you will do as I say or I will...”

“Or you will what?” The new voice snapped from behind them, causing both of them to whirl around and watch as Sadi step closer to them from out of the main corridor.

“This does not concern you!” Harira hissed softly.

“Doesn’t it?” Sadi spoke as she stopped beside Sehri and looked at her keenly. “Sehri... we felt your anxiousness and we wanted to find out what was wrong?”

“Shaman Master Harira is demanding I disavow what I have discovered.” Sehri said taking Sadi’s hand within hers without hesitating and looking at Harira. “To just dismiss that Androcles has claimed me. That all of you have claimed me as I have claimed you. She expects me to just dismiss that because of some silly vow I took when I was younger and did not fully know or understand who and what I was.”

Sadi looked at Harira. “Andro followed the letter of your law Shaman Master Harira.” She said. “And he followed the letter of our law as well, which I dare say is more strict than yours. Lady Aleatia was well aware of Andro’s intentions and ours. And she knew how her daughter felt in return. She was very supportive and happy about what Andro was prepared to do!”

“Lady Aleatia does not have any say over what the Circle of Shamans does.” Harira snapped. “Or what we expect of our apprentices!”

Sadi nodded her head. “Perhaps not... but the same can be said of the Circle of Shamans and you. You have no authority over a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union... which is what Sehri is now. She is a Leonidas now.”

“She took a vow!” Harira almost shouted.

“I am not the first apprentice to have a change of heart and want to move in a different life direction!” Sehri snapped at her. “Those who made this same decision were not looked down upon or demanded to disavow their husbands and mates! Why do you do this of me?”

“You are different!” Harira snapped back.

“Why?” Sehri snarled.

Sadi looked at Harira and smiled knowingly. “Because you are the daughter of the leader of the Rothryn people.” She spoke matter-of-factly. “Isn’t that right Shaman Master?”

Harira met her gaze. “You know nothing of what you speak!” She snapped.

Sadi continued to smile. “Don’t I?” She said evenly. “The Circle of Shamans may be the underground equivalent to the Rothryn Science Academy, teaching those with advanced Etheric abilities, but you act in a strangely similar fashion to them if what I have heard about them is accurate.”

“How dare you compare us to... to them?” Harira snarled. “Do not toy with me girl! I will...” Harira’s hands suddenly wrapped with a light blue field of Etheric power as if she intended to use it.

Sadi stepped right up to Harira when she saw this, her fangs extending and her jungle green eyes shifting to her wolf persona. Sehri was surprised at this reaction but seeing Sadi defend her was oddly exciting. And then she saw the light blue Etheric field surround her entire body, not just her hands.

“What will you do Shaman Master Harira?” Sadi prodded her menacingly. “Do not think for an instant that you could possibly stand against me!” Sadi growled at her the soft blue Etheric light suddenly grew a little brighter around her entire body. The dormant Paladin gene within Sadi, like it was with Aricia, afforded her abilities that most did not have. While Aricia could use her psychic knives and mild Etheric power to toss things about, Sadi had long been practicing how to control her ability to use her Etheric Power in a similar physical manner. To move things with force of her will alone. These past months studying the skill sets given to her by the Feravomir, Sadi had become quite proficient at using this power. Sadi had a strong will before she met Androcles, but after meeting him and finally accepting her complete love for him, her will began like iron. It only doubled when she bonded with Caydren.

“Your Etheric skills are pitiful when held against what I can do Shaman Master Harira.” Sadi snarled at the woman as any pureblood female would when she was protecting what was hers. “And my skills are miniscule in comparison to our mate and husband Androcles. Or did you think I would not notice your pathetic attempts to probe my mind ever since I came to Sehri's side." Sadi saw Harira's eyes grow a little wider and she smiled. "Yes... I have felt it... and I have ignored it. Luckily for you. What you have been doing is forbidden within the Union no matter where you go."

"You have been trying to touch her mind?" Sehri gasped in disbelief stepping closer.

"Ever since she came on board the SCIMITAR." Sadi answered her "Most have not detected it... but Andro, Carisia and I did right away. Lu'ria and Ne'Veha shortly after. You hide it well Shaman Master... but not from those who know what to look for and are far stronger than you could hope to become."

"How dare you!" Sehri snarled now. "You had no right!"

"Be thankful that Androcles is not here Shaman Master." Sadi continued. "For what you have just suggested Sehri do he would have vented you out the nearest airlock. He's very protective of us. It is a trait he inherited from his father." She told her seeing her eyes grow wider. "I suggest you return to your breakfast table and I will forget this conversation ever took place."

"I will communicate directly with the Cleric Mother!" Harira hissed angrily.

Sadi nodded her head. "Please do so." She said. "It will be interesting to see her reaction to the news."

"This... this could cause severe political fallout!" Harira snapped.

Sadi shook her head. "I do not share your misgivings Shaman Master Harira..." She said. "But I do know threatening a Crown Princess of the Union in any way is a death sentence. Is that what you wish to do?"

"You cannot protect her!" Harira hissed angrily.

Sadi chuckled softly. "You think I am protecting her? Sehri does not need me or anyone to protect her." She said proudly. "She is far more capable than you know. Especially now with Andro's blood swirling in her veins."

Harira looked at Sehri with wide eyes. "You let him... you let him bite you?" She gasped in shock.

Sehri crossed her arms over her chest. "Yes." She replied tartly. "And it was glorious!"

"Perhaps you should go now Shaman Master Harira." Sadi said. "When we get back to Earth we can take this up with Lady Aleatia and get her point of view."

"This will not be allowed to remain in place!" Harira snapped.

Sadi chuckled and took Sehri's hand, drawing her close. "Really? Try convincing our husband and mate of that fact Shaman Master. You will find he is not as understanding as I am." Her eyes returned to normal and her fangs disappeared slowly. "If you will excuse us... we have a breakfast to finish. Our husband and mate is on his way as we speak... and he is inquiring why our heart rates and emotions are elevated. Should I tell him?"

Harira met Sadi's eyes. She had no desire to get into a situation with Androcles Leonidas at this time. There were better places to have this battle. "Then I will wait until we have a chance to speak with Sehri's father and mother and the Cleric Mother of the Circle."

Sadi smiled. "An intelligent move to be sure." She said. "Come Sehri... Ne'Veha and Carisia and Lu'ria have been running interference for us, but Andro's inquiries are becoming more insistent."

Sehri didn't resist when Sadi began to draw her away from Harira. She only glared at the Shaman Master for a moment before turning and moving with Sadi.

[Sadi she...] Sehri began.

Sadi nodded her head slightly. [Yes... she made an awful big deal about this. Much more than I would have suspected. There is more to this than some silly vow you made years ago.]

[But what?] Sehri asked her.

[Something tells me we will find out soon enough.] Sadi looked at her as they headed back towards the Mess Lounge. [Tell me of this woman and this Circle of Shamans Sehri. My instincts are shouting for me to be careful and I want to know why.]

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

ONTEROM

“...Delnash. Now there is an interesting man.” Sumar’s voice spoke. “He isn’t like the others he surrounds himself with. He’s cerebral... likes to think everything through and then make his decision. He’s precise and conscious of every avenue available to him. He has run the Science Convention with skill and that same precision. I should expect no less... he is Murano’s older brother and now I see where Murano gets it.”

Delnash stood in the corner of the transport just behind the cockpit. He was alone as the others were loading up the ramp and the pilots were running their preflight checks. In his hand he held the data disc that Martin Leonidas had given him only a few hours ago. This was the second time he had viewed the disc and what it contained and to say he was stunned would have been the understatement of the century. He glanced back as others were moving into the rear of the transport, making sure that he was undisturbed and then he turned back to the disc. In the view of the small disc in his palm he saw the holographic image of Sumar move and settle into the chair at the desk. Looking at the man he could not deny the resemblance Martin Leonidas had to him, or the significance of this. He watched as Sumar lifted a glass to his lips and drink some liquid and then turn his head.

“41... this information is current yes?”

-As current as the databases allowed when we left Chief Elder- The Avatar’s voice replied.

“What do you think 41?” Sumar asked.

-Nothing you have dictated is inaccurate Chief Elder. I have nothing further to add that would alter the decision you have already made- 41 answered. -If you are asking my opinion... the information provided is sufficient enough to deduce he would act as he has always acted-

Sumar chuckled. “Thank you 41... your insight is always exacting in detail.”

-Of course Chief Elder-

Delnash watched Sumar lean back in the chair. “Elder Delnash... recently married and head of the Science Convention. Among all the men and women I have reviewed so far on this trip, he is by far best suited for the position. His natural compassion balances the hard decisions he would need to make, but he will not sacrifice who he is in order to please one group. He uses facts and instinct and so far he has not been wrong in combining those two. I have spoken to Murano about him, gotten to know him through his brother.” Sumar shook his head. “Makes me wish Murano was here now. Wayonn agrees that we should have brought him... but leaving him behind to watch over things was the wiser thing to do. Something... something told me that his path... his path leads him down a different road and in order to follow that road he needs to be where he is.”

“When we return I will submit to the Convention of Elders that Delnash replace me when I step down.” Sumar spoke. “Wayonn and I agree that five years is sufficient to train those Praetorians we have with us. Once that is done... I will give the reins of leadership to Delnash and assume my role as leader of the Praetorians. I believe we can work closely together to insure our people are kept safe from the Scourge. With Delnash at the helm of political matters, I can concentrate on our defenses and be confident that he will have the interests of our people in his heart. The Scourge will be back... of that I am certain. My fool brother made sure of that when he conducted his twisted experiments and gave them the ability to reason and think. They will not be so easy to defeat next time and it will be up to Delnash and I to make sure we are not caught unaware.” Sumar lowered his glass back to the desk. “As a side note... my brother’s actions will taint our family now. No matter that father and I pushed for his punishment... our mother and father and even our sisters and brother will need to endure the consequences of his foul actions. I intend to take the Conventions punishment one step further and expel the chamber with his body into the next Red Giant we pass. I will inform City Ship 19 to release the chamber with his essence into the gravity well of the Brown

Dwarf Star we will pass in the next system. He grew too powerful and let that affect his decisions. He wanted to be a god. I can't take the risk of his essence returning to his body in some way. I will be killing my brother permanently... but it is the only way."

Delnash watched Sumar get to his feet. "41... make the proper entries in the logs. Make sure they are dispatched at the next Network station with our position and status. And send a short message to Murano letting him know what I intend for when we return."

-The usual greeting Chief Elder?-

Sumar nodded his head with a smile. "Yes... he likes that."

Delnash deactivated the data disc and took a slow, deep breath. This was not what he had expected when Martin Leonidas had given it to him. He had expected plans or demands that he was going to make. He had never expected this.

Sumar was, by a very wide margin, the most popular and respected Chief Elder that their people had ever elected. His victories during the First Scourge War had seen to that, but his way of leadership was also honored and respected. He did not ask of those who served with him something that he was not prepared to do himself and Delnash could see this very same trait within Martin Leonidas. He turned and watched as more of his troops boarded and took their seats. He could see Lorendo sitting with Sashan and talking in whispers. Lorendo did not look in the least bit happy but at the moment Delnash didn't care. No matter what his reasons were, Lorendo was responsible for too many deaths in the last few days to just dismiss that. And the fact that he did not seem to care infuriated Delnash.

The flash of movement outside the ramp caught his eyes and he saw the massive dragon land by where the Lycavorian ship was resting some two hundred meters behind their own. He watched the large figure leap easily from the back of the massive dragon and knew it could only be Martin Leonidas.

"I came here hoping to find my history." Martin's voice echoed softly in his head as he watched him jump easily from the dragon's back. "I came here hoping maybe... just maybe to find my ancestors. So I could learn about my past and what it means. Instead I came here and found you."

Those words cut Delnash deep now. Too deeply.

That Martin Leonidas was a Praetorian was without doubt in his mind. He could not deny it any longer after seeing what he had seen and he was every bit his grandfather's equal, if not more powerful, because of the Lycavorian blood flowing within him. He knew that exceptional Lycavorian blood was what afforded him the indomitable will and drive that surrounded him and his personality. Delnash thought for a moment... perhaps... perhaps Sumar knew exactly what he was doing when he merged their peoples together so long ago. He may have seen this very thing. The intensity and the pull over men and women that this Martin Leonidas exuded without even knowing it. Delnash continued to watch as two men moved up to where he stood beside the massive dragon, one of them his own brother Murano. He had made the decision to return with Martin Leonidas and there was nothing Delnash could do about that now. Even as Chief Elder he could not command a Praetorian to do something and he had no intention of ever denouncing his brother no matter what anyone said to the contrary. Murano was different now. The purpose Murano had been lacking since the end of the war had returned with a vengeance and Delnash knew without question it was because of the discovery of the Praetorian blood within Martin Leonidas and his sons. Sumar had spoken in the transmission of leaving Murano behind for a purpose. This meeting, discovering these men and women, that had to be the very purpose he had been speaking of.

Delnash looked across the field and realized he did not show him enough; he had not shown him through the past years the thanks and awe that he held his brother in for doing what he did during the wars. Murano had given up so much, far more than even he knew and he had saved so many lives back then. Now Lorendo and so many like him believed they could survive without the Praetorian Guard of the Pralor people. How foolish and arrogant they had become since their downfall. It was as if they were returning to the ways that led to their destruction by the Scourge. That was something he could not allow.

Delnash felt the presence of someone and turned his head to see Kesyla standing beside him. “Kesyla?” He said softly looking at his oldest daughter.

“I know what you are thinking papa.” She spoke softly.

Delnash smiled. “Do you?”

“Uncle Murano is going with them. Elder Kasdan and his brother. Elder Radra.” Kesyla spoke. “You are wondering...”

“How did I ever let things get so out of control?” Delnash said softly, completing her statement. “Have we grown so arrogant and complacent that we think like Lorendo? That the loss of life on this mission means nothing?”

“You are not Lorendo papa.” Kesyla told him.

“Mari won’t talk to me.” Delnash said softly continuing. “And I can’t order her about any longer. She is fully grown.”

“She intends to go with Uncle Murano Papa?” Kesyla said.

Delnash looked at her. “You knew?”

Kesyla shook her head. “I suspected. She is very taken with Uncle Murano with good reason and she wants to see and experience so much more. I tried to talk her out of it but she would not hear of it.”

“Short of keeping her under armed guard... what choice do I have?” Delnash spoke. “If I do that she will hate me.”

“You have known for many years she is adventurous.” Kesyla spoke. “It is in her very nature... and you know where that comes from.”

“And what about you?” Delnash asked.

“I am your senior aide papa.” Kesyla answered him. “But... if you are asking me if I would find traveling with these men and women and learning about them intriguing... then the answer is yes. I would... very much so.”

“You admire them?” Delnash asked.

“In a way.” She replied. “They have a spirit and passion about them. A spirit that will never be crushed. A passion that will never go away. They do not fear what will come as we do. No matter what it is.”

“A trait that can be dangerous.” Delnash said.

Kesyla nodded. “But so very rewarding.”

Delnash met her eyes and smiled. “It could be yes.” He spoke. He lifted the data disc so she could see it. “I thought it would be a list of demands or something of that nature that he was making.” He smiled. “I was wrong once more.”

“What was on it Papa?” Kesyla asked.

“Someone talking about the man I used to be.” Delnash answered. “The man I should be now.” He took her arm. “Tell me daughter... does your admiration for these people push aside whatever fear you may have of what is out there?”

Kesyla nodded. “If it is for the purpose I see in your eyes... yes papa. It is the look you had when mother married you... according to her.” She finished with a smile.

Delnash smiled. “Come with me then. These Svorag have reached the surface some sixty kilometers from here and they are heading this way. We need to move quickly.” He squeezed her arm. “Grab your brother and come with me.”

“... Like cockroaches!” Martin spoke. “Thousands of them! And they are moving fast. Torma and I did two passes high up and one low. We got about ninety minutes before they are all over this area.”

“Everything is just about loaded fervon.” Danny told him. “We’ll be long gone from here by then.”

Murano nodded his head. “I believe everyone who has made the decision to come with us is here as well.” He stated.

Martin met his eyes. “You sure about this Murano? Are they sure? We ain’t coming back here. Not after what has happened.” Martin said.

Murano nodded his head. "I believe what has happened here the last few days has opened some eyes Martin." He spoke. "For Kasdan and Radra both. I can't seem to keep my niece away from me no matter how hard I try. I asked her three times to reconsider this. Each time she just looked at me like I was insane."

Martin shook his head with a grin. "She's a woman Murano. You can't figure out what they are thinking half the time no matter how hard you try. Better to just agree with them. It's safer."

We heard that! Aricia and For'mya's voices filled Martin's mind at the same time and he could hear his other mates chuckling within Mindvoice.

Murano and Danny looked at him with smiles having heard the unshielded response. "No way you can hide from six of them!" Danny said. "You are really screwed fervon."

Murano was smiling when he saw his brother moving up towards them with Kesyla and Daron in tow. "Martin." He said motioning with his head.

Martin turned slowly having already smelled Chief Elder Delnash, his son and daughter approaching them from across the space between their ships. He watched the Pralor Chief Elder come to a halt in front of them and he could see Lorendo and Sashan standing on the ramp of their own ship glaring across the distance at them. He turned his eyes to Delnash as he came to a stop in front of him. "Chief Elder?" He finally said.

Delnash fingered the data disc for a long moment before looking at Martin. "I take it you have seen what is on this?" He asked.

Martin nodded his head. "Most of it yes." He answered.

"Why give this to me?" Delnash asked. "After what happen here... why give this to me now?"

"Let's just say my grandfather saw something in you that others did not." Martin said. "The same thing that I see, but it's buried under a whole lot of bullshit. I wanted you to know what that was."

Delnash looked at Murano and then back to Martin. "Bullshit? What is this... bullshit?"

Martin smiled and looked at Danny before turning back to Delnash. "Let's just say..."

"I believe it is a term they use to describe what could be considered a façade of sorts Papa." Kesyla spoke.

Danny laughed. "That's a lot nicer than I would have described but yeah."

"You don't give up trying do you?" Delnash asked Martin.

Martin smiled and shook his head. "Giving up ain't in my nature. Leaves a bad taste in my mouth." He told him. "What can I do for you sir... we're getting ready to depart. And you should be too."

"How long before they get here?" Delnash asked surprised at the respect and tone Martin was using with him. It was not what he had expected though he was rapidly learning that with Martin Leonidas you didn't always get what you expected.

"Ninety minutes roughly." Martin answered.

Delnash met his eyes. "I find myself wishing that all of this had not happened in the way it has Martin Leonidas." He spoke evenly. "I... I used to be able to admit when I was wrong but it seems that trait has fallen to the side in these past millennia. Not anymore. I have been wrong. About you. About your people and about listening to others with a different agenda. I want... I want to try and make amends."

"Why?" Martin asked. "You didn't seem particularly willing to be open minded not so long ago. Seems awful sudden like."

Delnash nodded his head. "No I did not." He said in reply. "I was listening to others and not following what my own instincts told me. Instincts I have not followed in far too long." He told him. "What... what I allowed to happen here is not me Martin Leonidas. What I allowed to happen here is tearing my people apart... and those are just the ones here with me. The security forces are divided about what they were ordered to do... many of them know what you are and it goes against the very essence of our people to openly fight a Praetorian."

"We are not gods brother." Murano spoke now.

Delnash nodded. "No... but you are the most respected and revered men and women in our history and they can sense that Martin is also a Praetorian, no matter the blood that runs in his veins. They also sense there are more of you. I can not imagine what it would do to our population if what happen here, if it gets out to them in a way that is not of my own accord and truthfulness."

"So you are worried about your position?" Martin asked.

Delnash met his eyes. "I am worried about my people." He said not taking offence at the comment. "Everything I have done through the years has been for them. Some of what I have done is not popular but... but I thought it was the right thing to do at the time. I have been listening to the wrong people and taking their advice instead of following what I would want myself. I intend to stop that."

"How?" Martin asked.

"I would like Kesyla and Daron to accompany you." Delnash spoke. "No matter how much I try to keep the knowledge that you exist from reaching my people... it will get out to them because I don't intend to suppress it. And it will happen much faster than even I realize I suspect. I can't deny what you are anymore... I can't..."

"I'm just a man." Martin said.

Delnash looked at him. "If only that were the case." He spoke. "If we are going to survive as a people, if I am going to see my people live on, then I need to follow what my instincts are telling me."

"And what are they telling you brother?" Murano asked softly.

"That we are connected to you and your people Martin Leonidas." Delnash answered him looking at Martin. "That in order to survive... we must do so together. And that means... that means accepting things that we have previously been reluctant too. I can't just dismiss your existence. Not after what has happened here."

"What are you proposing then?" Martin asked.

"That we stay in contact." Delnash said. "Let me return and work with Teniri. Let me brace our people for the knowledge that... that we are no longer alone. That we don't have to be alone anymore."

Martin turned and looked at Murano and Danny for a long moment. He turned back to Delnash and looked at Kesyla and Daron. "You would trust me with your children?" He asked.

"I trust that you are a Praetorian like my brother." Delnash spoke. "Like your grandfather was. Protecting those in your charge is part of what you are as a Praetorian. I learned that from my brother. And I sense that you would never allow harm to come to any man's children if it is in your power to prevent."

[Ladies?] Martin reached for his wives and mates.

[Do not try to play this down Martin Leonidas.] Aricia's sweet voice spoke... assuming the tone for all of his wives as she so often did. [Do you think we do not know why you came out here? What you were searching for? It is not what we wished for... the way it has come about... but it is the beginning that we desired.]

Delnash could feel the tremors within the Etheric realm as Martin talked to someone. They were supremely powerful and the shields he had up were unlike anything Delnash had ever felt. He glanced at his brother who was staring at him. Delnash knew this was the right thing to do. He could feel it within him. He saw Mari come walking down the ramp towards them a look of confusion on her face, Radra right behind her. Kasdan remained at the top of the ramp of the unique looking ship.

[How is it that I was blessed to have all of you in my life?] Martin spoke to them all.

[You're lucky as all hell.] Anja's voice quipped playfully. [And you aren't so bad looking either. And you have a really big...]

[Melyanna!] Dysea's voice cut in.

[What? I'm only telling the truth!] Anja replied.

[Anja has a point Ussta She-elf.] Isabella chimed in with more than a little humor in her tone.

[And it is all ours.] For'mya spoke now. [You have our love and devotion Martin Leonidas. And we feel your desire to do this. Follow your heart and we shall trust in that.]

[Yes we will.] Cirith finished.

Martin chuckled along with his wives and mates in Mindvoice and looked at Delnash as Mari came up beside Murano. He sniffed the air slightly and caught the scent he hadn't detected before, his eyes growing a little wider but he kept his face and emotions rigidly impassive and turned to face Delnash fully. Out of the corner of his eye he saw that Danny had detected it as well but was doing nothing. Dan's sense of smell was very nearly as acute as his.

Martin nodded to Delnash. "It is what I want as well." Martin said. "What I think all of us want. It's part of the reason we came out here. And to help Muton and the others discover their history as well. There are buckets and buckets of history that connect us now because of what my grandfather did, what Muton's grandmother did and I am not the only one who wishes to discover that history."

Delnash nodded his head slowly. "Then let me... let me make the first overture to you. In order to show you that I am not... that what I allowed to happen here is not me."

Martin shook his head. "That's not necessary. I would be able to smell if you were lying to me." He said reaching up and tapping his nose. "One of the little advantages we have as a species."

Delnash looked surprised. "That... that is fascinating." He said shifting on his feet. "Then you... what about...?"

"He is lying his ass off and he hasn't stopped." Martin stated bluntly. "And he will be a problem for you going forward too... now that he knows we are around. He's hiding a lot more than what went on here."

Delnash's eyes narrowed somewhat and he gave a curt nod. "I will deal with Lorendo." He said. "Trust me when I tell you that."

"I'll hold you to that sir." Martin said. "He's responsible for enough deaths already. Your own people as well as mine. Any more that occur because of him and I will deal with him myself and it will not be pleasant." Martin's voice was not amusing and Delnash detected that easily.

Delnash nodded. "Very well." He said. He turned and took Kesyla's arm. "You have met my oldest daughter Kesyla. She is my senior aide and will know how to contact me for any reason. Even in ways that others do not know."

Kesyla bowed her head. "It will be an honor traveling with you King Leonidas." She said softly.

Martin smiled and looked at Murano quickly before turning back to her. "You might not think so after you see the trouble that I always seem to get into."

"Now... ain't that the bleeding truth!" Danny snorted softly.

Kesyla smiled at this comment and squeezed her father's hand. "I think it might." She said.

Delnash turned and motioned to Daron. "My son Daron. He is my oldest and is a very competent researcher. One of our best in Bioengineering Theory. He may be able to help your own people."

Daron also bowed his head slightly. "I look forward to meeting the different species among your people King Leonidas. They seem very dedicated."

Martin looked at Delnash now. "All three of your children?" He said. "That's quite a vote of confidence Chief Elder."

Delnash nodded slowly after looking at Murano. He turned back to Martin. "Perhaps it is... but is it undeserved?"

Martin met his eyes. "No." He said confidently. He stepped closer and held out the small disc he took from his belt. "Quantum Com Frequency that Avi monitors all of the time for me. You want me... you contact me on that."

Delnash looked at him. "What are you planning to do?" He asked.

"I'm going to send the bodies of my people home to Sparta." Martin spoke. "Then I have an appointment with my sorry ass brother. After I find a nice, out of the way planet and let the hatchlings we have spread their wings and hunt for a few days."

Delnash gripped the disc and nodded his head. "I... I intend to make you see that you have not come out here for nothing Martin Leonidas." He said meeting his eyes. "That your purpose for leaving your home and family was justified."

Martin nodded. "We'll see." He said. "We need to get moving."

Delnash nodded. "Of course." He said. "If I could speak to Mari first?"

Martin turned and looked at her. "Be quick... these lizard bastards might be faster than we think." He said before turning and heading up into the STRIKER.

Mari looked at Delnash as he took her hands and waited for the others to move up into the ship. [What... what are you doing?] She reached for him.

Delnash smiled. [What I should have done a long time ago.] He answered. [I'm going to be who I should be. I'm going to do what I think is right.]

[Papa... you...] Mari began.

Delnash shook his head. [No.] He told her. [You don't need to say it. I can see it in your eyes and I would do the same thing as well. Your mother won't be happy you know.]

[You will explain it to her?] Mari asked.

Delnash nodded. [I will try.] He reached up and caressed her cheek. [Mari?]

Mari covered his hand with hers. [I need to do this.] She stated.
[You realize it might not receive the reaction you are hoping for.] Delnash said.

Mari nodded. [I have to try.]

Delnash nodded. [Yes you do.]

[Thank you for understanding Papa.] Mari said.

[Just be careful. If anything were to happen to you... your mother would have my head.] Delnash told her.

Mari chuckled and smiled brightly at him. [I will.]

Delnash leaned forward and kissed her forehead. [Go with the gods Mari my child.] He said softly.

[And you Papa.]

Delnash watched as she turned and raced back up the ramp. He looked around, took a deep breath and then turned to head back to his own ship. Perhaps things would begin to look up now. He intended to make sure events were no longer dictated by others. He intended to take charge and become the leader that Sumar believed he could be.

ARC ROYAL

Martin walked onto the bridge of the ARC ROYAL with Murano, Avi and the others following close behind. Anja and Aricia were taking Jacina and Recia directly to the Medical Bay with Isabella, while For'mya, Dysea and Cirith secured the STRIKER and began to see to the dissemination of the mounds of information they had taken from the station. Murano and the others were astonished at the level of sophistication of the ARC ROYAL, more so because they had never been on any ship besides a Pralor vessel. They took everything in as they moved through the corridors and up the Elevator Lift that deposited them just outside the bridge.

Avi moved immediately to a sensor station where the female operator moved out of his way and began to monitor a smaller console just to his right. Captain Akemi didn't rise from her command chair as Martin came up to her side which surprised Kasdan and the others with the exception of Murano. Martin Leonidas was King and they expected others to jump to their feet and bow to his will.

"Akemi?" Martin asked.

"All stations secure sire." She reported. "We're standing by to execute."

Martin glanced over to where Avi stood. "Avi?" He asked the hulking Avatar.

-Twenty-three seconds Martin- Avi answered.

Kasdan stepped up next to Murano. "What is happening?" He asked looking at Martin.

Martin looked at him hearing his question. He liked the Pralor Researcher and his brother Garan. Kasdan was very down to earth, if a little excitable, and his brother had proven to be cool under fire even though he was out of his league and knew it.

"I'm going to make sure this little group of Svorag are not a problem for anyone going forward." Martin said.

"What do you mean?" Daron asked moving closer as well.

"Watch." Martin said.

-They have deactivated Avatar 27- Avi spoke now.

"We expected that." Martin chimed in. "Did he accomplish his objective?"

-Affirmative. I am syncing control now- Avi answered.

"What are you doing?" Daron asked again more forcefully now.

Murano looked at him. “Something that needs to be done.” He said. “Lorendo’s horrors at this facility need to be cleansed.”

“Uncle?” Kesyla asked moving closer to him. “What do you mean?”

Martin looked at Avi’s back. “Avi?”

-I have access Martin Leonidas- Avi answered. -I am initiating shutdown of the Pralor targeting systems and main power to their weapons-

Martin turned to Akemi. “Do it!” He hissed softly.

Akemi nodded and turned her head slightly to the side. “Weapons Officer! Four Fusion Matter Torpedoes! Full yield! Target the station! Follow on with half a dozen H19 Concussion Missiles with Plasma Tipped warheads!”

“Weapons aye!” The man barked.

“Ventral weapons pods!” Akemi snapped. “Fire at will!”

“Fusion Torps away!” The man barked. “Missiles on ten second follow up!”

Akemi looked at Martin. “It’s over kill sire... but better safe than sorry.” She spoke almost casually.

Martin nodded. “I like safe.” He told her.

“Missiles away!” The weapons officer barked out.

“Give me visual from orbital ventral cameras!” Akemi snapped. “Main screen!”

The large forward screen which took up half the forward hull of the bridge came alive with a view from orbit of Onterom. The cameras appeared to be focused over the continent that held the Science facility. Everyone could see several bright spots racing across the lower screen and into the atmosphere. Seconds later they saw a massive flare on the surface of the planet which announced the death of the Pralor Science station for anyone watching.

“Captain! We’re being hailed by the Pralor ship!” The female shouted from her COM station.

Akemi nodded. “I just bet we are. Probably pissed in their pants when we fired. Put it up on the main disc.” She ordered as Martin grinned from beside her chair.

Martin and the others turned as Sashan’s face body appeared in the transmission, his face twisted into anger.

“What are you doing?” He barked angrily. “You are firing on our ship!”

Martin and the others could see the crew of the Pralor ship’s bridge racing back and forth as they tried to regain control of their ship from Avi’s hacking.

“I’m doing what you should have done.” Martin snapped back to him. “And our weapons are firing at the planet... or did you miss that part. That facility needed to be destroyed. And all the Svorag as well.”

“Release control of our ship immediately!” Sashan barked.

Martin smiled. “I will. In a moment.” Martin said. “Akemi?”

Akemi looked at the small screen on the arm of her chair. “Clean hits by the FM Torps.” She replied. “If these readings are right we caught them as they were swarming all over the facility.”

“Avi... coordinates to their little haven under the station?” Martin barked out.

-Feeding them to Fire Control now- Avi replied. -We must use our complement of ZMF missiles in order to penetrate the twenty-four meters of lime and bedrock to the main cryo chamber ceiling. Follow on concussion will bring the remainder of the chamber down-

“Do it!” Martin barked without hesitation.

Within seconds the ARC ROYAL’s primary complement of the deadly ZMF warheads were launching. Nineteen of the missiles streaked from their ventral launch tubes headed for one point on the surface. Martin caught the movement of the corner of his eye and saw Delnash entering the bridge of the Pralor ship with a frantic Lorendo in tow. Their bridge crew was also monitoring what was taking place on the surface and in seconds they were watching dozens more huge flares from the surface as the ZMF missiles hit their target and destroyed the main chamber of the Svorag on the surface. Seismic scans taken later would show that the entire cavern had collapsed upon itself with the destructive force of the missiles that hit in the small ten meter area.

“Picking up massive seismic activity!” The Tactical Officer barked out.

-Confirmed- Avi spoke quickly. –The Svorag cavern is collapsing upon itself Martin. Resulting tremors from the explosions are causing both minor and major tunnel sections to collapse as well-

Daron was the one who stepped forward. “You... you just killed thousands of them.” He gasped. Martin looked at him. “I did.” He answered.

“Your wife developed a cure!” Daron hissed. “You said so yourself!”

“She developed a cure that worked on two of your people who were not fully changed.” Martin told him. “We don’t know if it would have worked on those who have been fully changed for any length of time. And neither of us had the manpower to try and subdue them to try and find out!”

Sashan was the next to speak from the bridge of the Pralor ship. “I demand you release control of our ship!”

Martin looked at him in the transmission. “I just bet you do.” He said.

Lorendo stepped into the transmission now. “You... you just destroyed thousands of hours of research and data we could have used you fool!”

Martin grinned at him in the transmission. “No I didn’t dumb ass! Us primitives are not as stupid as you like to think we are.” He said. “Any one of my mates could think circles around you sport. We have the data.”

“What?” Lorendo nearly screamed. “You have stolen it?”

Martin smiled. “I didn’t steal it. I liberated it from your P9 as you were sending it up to your ship. Well... what you thought you were sending to your ship. Before Anja took your computer from you. It only looks like you were sending it to your ship. You actually uploaded it to my ship.” Martin chuckled. “Wait... that would mean the person who configured the signals so you didn’t detect them, my elven pilot Endith by the way, that would mean she is smarter than you? Imagine that?”

Lorendo’s eyes were filled with rage and his face was about to turn five different shades of red. He turned his head as Delnash came closer and entered the transmission. “Chief Elder... you cannot allow this!” Lorendo nearly shouted. “That is our data! That...”

Delnash ignored him and met Martin’s eyes. “What do you intend to do with this data Martin?” He asked causally.

“I intend to have it disseminated, examined thoroughly, and then I will send you a report based on truth and facts and not the shit that Lorendo there tries to shovel out his mouth.” Martin growled.

Delnash thought about that for a second, it was really all the time he needed for after speaking with him, Delnash felt he could trust Martin Leonidas more than his own people at this time. He nodded his head. “I look forward to seeing the report.” He said finally, causing Lorendo to nearly fall over in shock.

“Chief Elder... you can’t be serious!” He exclaimed. “That data... it has details to our technology that...”

“That they already possess.” Delnash told him. “In case you have missed that part.” He turned to Sashan. “What systems have been affected by the virus?”

“Weapons. Targeting. Nothing... nothing else.” Sashan answered.

Delnash turned back to Martin. “Do you think you were able to capture all of them within the blast radius?”

“I don’t know... but enough so that they aren’t a threat for the moment. At least not on this planet.” Martin answered.

Delnash nodded. “Avatar 27?”

“You can reactivate him.” Martin spoke. “He did what we wanted him to do before you shut him down. You really should start treating them better. The Avatars among your fleet. They could be so much more if you let them.”

Delnash couldn’t help but smile. “Yes... so I see. I will... I will consider what you have said Martin.” He said. “How long?”

“One hour.” Martin answered. “Enough time to jump several times so you can’t follow and no one can slip and give away our location with orders to destroy us. If you get my meaning when I say that.” Martin said looking right at Lorendo.

“You are nothing!” Lorendo nearly screamed. “You are nothing more than the animals you can change into!”

Martin nodded his head. “That may be...” He said. “But this animal will kill you the next time I see you fat man. And it won’t be quick or painless either. Remember that Lorendo you lard ass... because we might be seeing you again real soon!”

Lorendo was struck into silence at his words and his eyes went to Delnash. “Chief Elder?”

Delnash ignored him again and looked at Martin from the transmission. “Until we meet again Martin Leonidas. Go with the grace and guidance of the... of our Ancestors.”

Martin stood up a little straighter and bowed his head slightly to Delnash. It was an act not unnoticed by Mari, Kesyla or Murano and the others. An act of respect and honor. “And you sir.” He said.

The transmission ended and Martin turned to Avi immediately. “Avi... set the timer for one hour. Akemi... begin evasive pattern delta four. Begin jumping in three minutes. First stop is to grab Muton and the others and then continue.”

Akemi nodded. “We’re on it.”

Martin looked at Murano and the others. “Come on... I’ll give you a quick tour and then show you to your quarters.”

SCIMITAR ORBITING SOLMAR

How did this happen?

How could she have let this happen?

How did she become so weak as to let this take place? She had always prided herself on her self control and staunch position. She had worked so very hard to get to where she was and to let this happen was something she could not believe she had allowed. In her three hundred plus years of life no man had ever been able to crack her barrier. She had bedded many of them in those years, but none of them could even come close to the events and exquisite satisfaction of the last seven hours. Part of her mind screamed at her that she was insane for allowing this to happen, but the other part was singing in happiness she had never felt in all her life. Her lithe body was shouting to the stars at what she was feeling. Dorian hadn’t just fucked her... that was what the men before him had done. No... Dorian Leonidas had consumed her. Possessed her and reshaped her and everything about her. He was insatiable and like a playful child who was so very eager with a new toy. A child he was not however, Sheva learned very quickly, as he had done such a masterful job of turning her into a babbling idiot.

Sheva Juconi lifted her head slowly from his broad, powerful chest and turned to look at his face. His fingers were dragging along her back and shoulders, one of her legs thrown over his, her taut breasts pressed firmly to his side. His one cobalt blue eye glittered in the dim light, and combined with his dark brown eye, they made her feel so utterly content. His eyes were an oddity of his heritage, but one he wore with extreme pride.

Content.

An emotion that she was by no means used to. Sheva had heard all of the locker room rumors and whispers from other females of how all of the Leonidas men must be built like bulls in the cock department. Why else would all of the Queens and Princesses walk around with permanent smiles on their faces and looks of adoration at their men? Until this day Sheva had never put much stock in them. Sheva may have been a member of the famed Durcunusaan and she was every bit as lethal in combat with her training, but she was also only five foot two and barely over a hundred pounds soaking wet. Dorian Leonidas had used this to his advantage and her extreme delight. After that first plunge down his incredibly long and thick manhood against the bulkhead, Sheva’s orgasms came in cascading waves that were almost nonstop. Dorian was definitely not shy about what he wanted, and what he wanted was her Sheva soon discovered. He took her with dominating power, eagerly plunging into her depths, driving her to greater and greater heights of passion until their eruption could not be denied. Sheva had screamed in blissful abandon when his vampiric fangs had sunk into her neck just as they exploded and sent her spinning wildly into a realm of pleasure she had never known or imagine could exist. His dual fangs were slightly thicker and longer than normal vampires because of his wolf blood but the pain as they pierced her skin was quickly washed aside by the inconceivable wave of pleasure that crashed through her as he fed on her blood during their explosion, amplifying their pleasure by four fold.

It hadn't stopped there by any means.

Sheva had not even recovered from her first explosion before he was ravishing her body with attention and causing her to shiver and quake in anticipation of more. Her petite body fit within his embrace like it was made especially for him, and this was something that Sheva took note of right away. His kisses were like molten lava stealing her breath away and burning with desire and passion she had never felt. He was so very animated and soon Sheva had surrendered to the swelling emotions within her and began directing him to certain areas of her body that would elicit the most reaction. These he found easily enough and when he began to discover areas that even Sheva had not known about, her world descended into an chasm of heavenly ardor and pleasure. His lips and tongue never ceased moving, his fingers and hands, so large and powerful, caressed her flesh like feathers across her skin. He was soon feasting on her in ways she had never dreamed of or experienced before, her body quaking in one raging climax after another.

Sheva was by no means inactive once she had given in to the swell of desire and emotion she was feeling; it just wasn't in her character. She delighted in the power she had over him, grasping his maleness in her hands and using her soft lips and nibbles to keep him hard and ready and exploring the dominating cock that now belonged all to her. Twice Sheva had drank down his passion, something she had never done before with any man that had shared her bed and she found it so very delicious to her taste buds. She rode him hard at times, taking complete control as he laid there and stared up at her, and then she allowed him to stroke into her with exquisite slowness while his kisses ignited more fires within her. She never imagined a kiss could cause such superb sensations and she pulled him tighter with each blistering kiss he gave to her. He could have gone on for hours more she had no doubts, but he sensed her body's weariness after so many hours and his powerful arms finally encircled her and pulled her close without words, content to hold her head to his chest and stroke her short, wavy blond hair as she tried to calm her breathing and her racing heart.

Dorian reached up with a hand and used two fingers to trace her jaw and cheek. Sheva smiled dreamily and leaned into the caress slightly.

"You look like you have questions." Dorian spoke finally.

"Why?" She asked softly.

"Why what?"

"Why me?" Sheva spoke.

"I don't understand the question." Dorian said tilting his head slightly.

"Why did you pick me?" Sheva asked.

Dorian chuckled softly. "I didn't pick you Sheva." He said. "Fate picked you. My wolf blood picked you. My instincts picked you. My heart picked you. From the very first moment I smelled you."

"Dorian... you know I..." Sheva began.

"Don't believe in any of that." Dorian finished her statement. "Yes... I know. You have said that on a number of occasions. Do you still have faith in saying that now? Even before these last few hours... I could have found you among millions just by the scent of your blood, by your unique scent, which for some reason vampires don't believe they have..."

"And what do I smell like to you?" Sheva asked him with a grin.

Dorian smiled. "Like a Dalfier Rose."

Sheva laughed softly and spread her hand across his broad chest, tracing the extreme definition of his pectoral muscles. "Dalfier roses are unique to their world Dorian. I would have known if you had gone to the Folcani homeworld."

Dorian grinned. "My father has. My mother has." He answered. "I have his memories Sheva. And hers to a much smaller extent. What they have seen in their lifetimes. The memories he carries within him. Some of them anyway. Just like Andro does... though he probably sees more. I know what a Dalfier rose smells like and that is what you smell like to me. Sweet... like they are just blossoming."

"Dorian..." Sheva began lowering her head.

Dorian lifted his other hand and took her face in his large hands. "Listen to me." He spoke. "I do not care about that. And I don't want to change you. I want you in my life Sheva... now. Always. You will begin to see and eventually you will come to believe. It's only a matter of time."

"You sound so sure." Sheva told him.

"You will be exposed to it everyday Sheva." He said. He blinked several times. "If... if that is what you want as well." He added as he lowered his hands and looked at her. The tone of his voice was one of hesitancy now, something Sheva didn't like in the least. After what he had made her feel, the emotions he had opened within her, the part of her mind that screamed for her to say more quickly overrode the part that said end this.

Sheva grabbed his hand within hers and pulled it back to her face, replacing it where it had been. His warm skin against hers caused her to close her eyes for a moment and then she looked at him. "Dorian... I..."

"I will not ask you to believe at this very moment Sheva." He spoke. "All I ask is that you keep an open mind and do not dismiss what you may not understand. I am... I am different. I am like... I am like my brother now. Like Jomann. I don't know how or why... but that is what I have been called to do. How I was born... how long it took for me to grow... that doesn't matter to me. It never did. I know what I want. I want to serve my people... that is my purpose. And I... I want you."

"You can't tell me you knew how to do all those things to me just by instinct." Sheva said with a smile.

Dorian grinned and suddenly leaned over to the side of the bed exposing Sheva's naked breasts as he was reaching under the bed. He grabbed a data book and rolled back over where Sheva instantly settled back onto his chest uncaring about her nakedness, which was a huge leap forward for her at this point. Dorian had already seen and explored her petite form to his heart's content and what would be the point in trying to hide from his delicious eyes now. Sheva Juconi doubted she would deny him anything now, sexually as well as everything else, not after what he made her feel. He dropped the book on his chest in front of her eyes and she picked it up, reading the title. Her eyes grew wide, as did the smile on her face.

"I've only read the first nineteen chapters." He told her proudly. "I still have thirteen to go."

"Five Thousand and One Ways to please the woman in your life?" Sheva asked looking at him with a wide and delighted smile. "You... you read this for me?"

Dorian nodded his head. "It has got some good pointers and..."

Sheva tossed the data book onto the floor and shifted her body further up on his chest, her breasts flattening against his hard flesh. "You don't need a book to make me... to make me feel these things Dorian Leonidas." She said softly stroking his cheek.

"You say that now." Dorian spoke with a smile.

Sheva chuckled as she leaned forward and brought her lips to his in a soft kiss of deep feeling. His lips tasted so good and she could detect the heady scent of his hybrid blood with his veins. He had taken her blood during their lovemaking and Sheva had almost done the same. Something had held her back however, but as every minute passed whatever had stopped her from tasting his blood was rapidly falling away. She drew back just a little and looked at him. "If I am... if I am going to be a regular visitor to your quarters Dorian Leonidas... I must know why you chose this dreadful location over the more comfortable quarters on deck ten? And you must be neater."

Dorian grinned and reached above his head to a small control panel. He touched it twice and Sheva heard a soft whirring sound. Her head turned upwards and her eyes grew wide in astonishment as the layer of Dragon Armor over the entire ceiling in the bedroom retracted to leave nothing but stars and space revealed to her. She felt a momentary jolt of fear but that quickly subsided as the beauty of what she was seeing overtook her fears.

"Oh... oh my god!" Sheva exclaimed looking all around and even seeing several other warships in the distance. "Dorian... it's... it's breathtaking!"

"Andro told me about it." Dorian said. "It was originally supposed to be an observation lounge but that changed. He said it was empty and I could have it if I wanted. The view window is the most advanced mixture of Clear Polymore Aluminum and it's only three inches thick. It will withstand a hit from a type two quad cannon. It's really cool when you are going through a nebula or something like that. I have been using it to meditate instead of the landing bay. Ryner and I close off our connection and we both can look out into the stars even though he is in his pen."

"I..." Sheva dragged her eyes away and turned them back to him. "It is amazing." She said.

“You are amazing.” Dorian spoke.

Sheva reached up and took his face in her hands. “You are... you are so very different.” She said softly as a part of her that she did not think she had come out in her words.

“I hope that is a good thing.” Dorian said.

Sheva grinned and lowered her lips to his. “Yes. Yes it is.” She said just before covering his lips with her own.

PUMA’S PRIDE

The ship was quiet.

Just as Kalis knew it would be before a vent. The vast majority of the crew had returned to their quarters or were occupying the many lounges across the ship for they were in a better shielded portion. The radiation from the vent was not harmful in small doses, but in enclosed areas it could be lethal. Kalis had memorized every portion of the ship and knew exactly where and how to go to make their passage to the landing bay as quickly as possible. Serale had not released his hand since leaving his quarters, her other hand clutching the ARSOC pistol he had given to her. His feelings for her had grown more intense hourly since Kalis had embraced this new life and person he wanted to be, and he would die willingly if it meant she would be free. Danim stayed close on their heels as they moved quietly and quickly. Kalis had to remember to keep his pace measured so they could keep up with him but through it all Serale did not release his hand.

Kalis came to a halt next to the edge of the corner that would take them to the rarely used maintenance entrance into the landing bay. He felt Serale press up against his back as he slowly glanced around the edge. He didn’t know what was going through her head but he could smell her fear and anxiousness. He probably would have been very surprised about what was going through her head at the moment however. Surprised and very happy.

Serale shifted the her slim shoulders to better seat the small pack she wore as she pressed against Kalis’s back. Fear caused her to be alert, her dark green eyes shifting from side to side and all around, but her faith in Kalis also made sure she was calm. Serale would never have seen herself in this position two months earlier. Being taken from the resort moon, having to watch her mother endure the sexual abuse by Kalis’s father, the constant fear for herself and for her brother. All of that changed when Kalis came into her life. Pusintin’s son he may have been, but that is where all similarity ended. She did not know Kalis before coming to this ship, and she was quite sure by his own admission she would not have wanted to meet him, but her Kalis was different.

Her Kalis.

She was just past her twentieth birthday and had already experienced far more than most Hadarian females her age. More than any of them would ever experience. She had also found something most of them would never find. A man like Kalis. Standing so close to him she could feel the heat put off by his body, and even though she was Hadarian if she inhaled deeply enough she could take his musky aroma into her nostrils. She looked up at him as he turned back and Danim pressed close to her. Kalis met her eyes and nodded.

“It’s clear.” He whispered. “The ship is the second one to the right as we enter. It is already prepped for launch. Once we enter the bay do not stop for anything and move right for the ship.”

Serale looked at him. “I don’t like that look in your eye Kalis.” She spoke.

Kalis smiled gently. “Do not worry... I shall be with you.” He said. “I do not plan to do anything stupid. The sooner we are gone from here the sooner I can make you completely mine in every way.”

Serale smiled brightly at his words squeezed his hand. “Good. I don’t want to lose you because I am looking forward to that as well.”

Kalis nodded his head and looked at Danim. “Let’s go.” He spoke. He squeezed Serale’s hand and stepped around the corner.

Directly into the view of three Puma Bane troops with their weapons leveled on them. To his credit, Kalis reacted instantly, his ARSOC coming up in one hand and his other pulling Serale behind him to shield her. Danim surprised him as he stepped up next to Kalis just to his left and leveled his ARSOC at the two Puma Bane troops who were holding their rifles on them. The third had a weapon in his hand, a similar pistol, but it was pointed at the floor.

“Hello Kalis.” The third Puma Bane soldier spoke. “I see you have been very busy.”

Kalis didn’t blink even as he felt Serale’s hand tighten within his and her other hand came up with the ARSOC in it, though it was shaking badly.

“Mata?” Kalis spoke softly meeting his old instructor’s dark eyes evenly. He took a deep breath knowing this could very well be it. The end of everything he hoped for. If that was the case... Kalis would die as his uncle and cousin had taught him in his lessons. He would die protecting the woman he loved and he would take as many of the enemy with him as he could before he fell.

“You have grown Kalis my boy.” Mata spoke his words carrying a note of pride in them that Kalis had not expected.

“Let us just kill him and the boy and take the female Master Instructor Mata.” One of the Puma Bane troops said. “We can use her for several hours before giving her to the Marshal.”

Kalis watched Mata shake his head and then his hand came up in a split second. It was filled with an ARSOC that sported the short barreled silencer on it. He leveled it at the head of the Puma Bane troop who had spoken and he pulled the trigger twice without blinking. A split second later, he shifted his aim and pumped two more rounds into the second troop. Their heads blew apart from the impact of the high velocity rounds and Kalis leveled his own ARSOC at Mata while pulling Serale further behind him as he watched Mata lower his weapon.

“Fucking pig!” Mata snarled softly.

“Mata!” Kalis hissed.

Mata shifted his eyes and looked at Kalis. “Jugar saw you entering the landing bay on several occasions. He figured you were getting ready to run. He brought it to me hoping we would deal with you ourselves. There is a squad waiting in the bay near the entrance to the ramp of the LEUGERS.”

“Mata... what... what is going on?” Kalis hissed again.

“Shoot him Kalis!” Danim exclaimed.

“Wait!” Kalis snapped not looking at Danim. “Mata?”

“I have watched you grow Kalis.” Mata continued softly. “I have watched you change these last weeks. Something happened on Enurrua didn’t it? Something that changed you and made your father fall more into the abyss of insanity.”

Kalis took a step closer to Mata. Serale tried to hold him back but she also didn’t want to lower her weapon. “I did change Mata. I... I discovered who I want to be.”

Mata looked at him evenly. “You were never truly Kavalian in your heart Kalis. You tried to be... but you never were. That spark within you has finally lit and that is a good thing. I... I have nothing left for me here.” He said looking around. “You... you have achieved what I had always hoped you would. You have discovered who you truly are. My duty is done now. I have no purpose now. I will cover your escape. Come in from the east entrance. You will come up behind them.”

Kalis moved closer. “Come with me Mata.” Kalis said. “Find purpose again!”

Mata looked at him intently now. “Come with you? I can not go where you are going Kalis. I would not fit in.”

“Bullshit!” Kalis snapped. “My Uncle has... he has many Kavalians who serve with him. My cousin took Athani as his wife and mate! Keleru’s daughter! That ought to tell you that they are different!”

“What would I do?” Mata asked. “I have been Puma Bane all of my life. I know nothing else.”

Kalis moved closer to him. “You have trained me all of my life Mata. I can see in your eyes what you intend! I ask you not to do this! There is still much you can teach me. Teach others. Don’t throw it all away now! Not because of my father! Too many have done that... been forced to do that because of him! Look at where that got them?”

Serale stepped forward now as well, moving up next to Kalis. “You... you saved us just now. You knew what Kalis intended but you never... you never exposed him.” She spoke softly to him. “Why?”

Mata looked at her. “I lost everything many years ago.” Mata told her. “My family... my Pride.”

“Fighting the High Covenant?” Serale asked.

Mata shook his head. “The Coven? The High Coven was never an enemy of ours. Not one that threatened us. Keleru and Pusintin only wanted revenge and a means to usurp your uncle Kalis. No... disease took all I ever cared for.” He answered gently. “Disease and poor leadership. Keleru... he was slow in responding to our pleas for help. Rancor Plaque struck our world. Most of my Pride died before the relief ships arrived.”

“Mata you can start over again!” Kalis hissed. “Start a new life and keep their memories close to you. You can honor them by continuing to live! They would not want you to throw your life away! It would be wasted! Mata... Mata please! Come with me! With us!”

Mata looked at the deck for a long moment taking in the bodies of the men he had just killed. He had taught Kalis all he knew and now he was better than him. His thoughts wandered to the soft brown fur of his woman. He had never adhered to the Kavalian tradition or treatment of females when they were alone. He was gentle with her always, never raised his voice and always treated her with respect. He avoided situations where he would have to treat her in such a way to maintain the show. She had died in his arms, stricken and corrupted by the disease that to their people was always fatal, telling him that she loved him with all that she was. It was not something she had ever told him, it would have been taboo within Kavalian society, but she had told him then. Kalis had replaced the four young sons taken from him along with her by that retched disease and that is why he had driven him so since their loss. Mata looked up and met Kalis’s eyes again.

“Start over.” He said softly. “Like you are doing?”

Kalis nodded his head. “I have found purpose. And you can once more Mata’Liguran. Let go of the past and embrace the unknown of the future you could have. Build your Pride back to what it once was.”

Mata took a deep breath feeling a swell of pride at Kalis’s words but feeling the truth of them even more. He was not ready to die. No... he was not ready just yet. She would not want him to just toss his life away for nothing. She would want him to go on. And he could honor her memory far better if he changed the way Pian’Nruarani had changed. He could insure she did not die for nothing if he helped to make their people live on into the future and change how they did things. He drew in a deeper breath and looked at Kalis suddenly filled with a new vigor and reason to go on Yes... this is the path he would follow now. A path shown to him long ago by a boy, but one he had not fully recognized until this very moment. Mata’Liguran took a deep breath and lifted his head fully. “Then we must hurry. I am guessing you plan to escape when the vent begins?” He moved closer to the young man he had trained since childhood.

Kalis nodded. “Yes.”

Mata nodded. “Then we must move quickly.”

Mata had told them where to wait for them and they now readied themselves behind several massive shipping crates. They were watching in the wrong direction however, and only a casual glance back by the Puma Bane Lieutenant saved them.

For all of four seconds.

Mata led Kalis out of the entrance hatch and as the heads of the Puma Bane squad began to turn, Kalis stepped out from behind him, his now silenced ARSOC coming up into firing position just as Mata brought his own silenced ARSOC up. Kalis’s weapon joined his and they stood side by side and began pumping rounds into the seven Puma Bane troops who had been waiting in ambush. There were no words, no perfunctory expressions or last offers of surrender. There was only death. Kalis and Mata did not stop shooting until all seven Puma Bane troops were down on the deck and bleeding from at least four projectile rounds apiece. Blood was rapidly beginning to pool under their forms and Mata moved forward quickly to put a single round into each of their heads to insure they were truly dead. Serale also had witnessed this from behind the safety of the doorway and it was here that she saw the other half of Kalis’s true nature. The Spartan half. He was not about to tolerate any threat to her and those who stood in the way of him getting her and Danim off this ship would fall before him. Serale should have been aghast at the way he took life so easily, but she could feel nothing but her love and adoration for him grow even more.

Mata finally turned to him as he reloaded his weapon. “Kalis... get them on board! I will release the security clamps!” Mata ordered.

“Mata?” Kalis questioned him thinking he would still do something foolish and take his own life.

Mata smiled. “Do not worry boy!” He spoke. “Hurry!”

Kalis nodded his head, satisfied by the look on the face of the man who had essentially raised him. He turned back as Serale and Danim stepped forward, their eyes wide. “Do not look!” Kalis hissed pulling Serale close to him and pulling her face towards his. “There is nothing but death.”

Serale did not argue with him in the least and kept her eyes on his face. Danim as well refuse to direct his eyes onto the bodies all around him. “I see the ramp.” Serale spoke with confidence now over his shoulder.

Kalis nodded his head. “Go! And move quickly!” He said. “Prep the engines!” Serale nodded and grabbed Danim’s hand and began moving for the rear of the LEUGERS. He turned quickly and saw Mata in front of a computer console and he rushed over to his side. “Mata!” He exclaimed.

“Give me a moment!” Mata snapped. “I am trying to recalibrate the gravity emitters.” His hands adjusted several controls. “There!” He barked. “When they try to engage the launch bay locks they will automatically turn off the gravity emitters to the bay. Anyone not anchored will be thrown everywhere! It will keep them from launching fighters to follow us!”

Kalis grabbed his arm. “I already have that taken care of Mata!” He snapped causing Mata’s head to turn to him. “Now come with me and find a new life! Please!”

Mata nodded his head. “Lead the way boy!” He spoke.

RAVAGER’S LEUGERS HOLDING STATION

“...are they?” Ceale gasped loudly as she stood in the cockpit with Nedoli at the controls, his brother’s wife Corsa across from him and Mani beside his father standing behind both seats in the cockpit. Koguth could not help but notice that her hands rested on Nedoli’s shoulders, squeezing them in anxiousness.

“Vent begins in thirty-three seconds.” Corsa called out.

“They will not leave the ship until seconds before the vent begins.” Koguth spoke now. “Corsa... prepare to initiate the commands to the RAVAGER. Mani my wife... let the others know that we are about to begin and the ride may get rough.” Mani nodded her head and turned to move back into the large cargo area where the other members of their Pride were seated and waiting anxiously. “Nedoli?”

“Taking only one ship may work against us father.” Nedoli told him.

Koguth shook his head. “Once we are gone we can balance the load with Kalis’s ship.” He spoke. “The less trails we leave for them to follow, the less chance they will have in finding us.”

“Twenty seconds!” Corsa called out.

Koguth nodded. “He will send the signal now.” He spoke confidently.

Corsa’s eyes grew wide. “There!” She exclaimed. “One millisecond pulse! That’s it!”

Koguth nodded. “Initiate auto program Corsa. Nedoli... take us from her shadow and begin...”

“He’s out!” Nedoli barked instantly. “Six degrees port! He’s just leaving the starboard landing bay! Pulling away hard!”

“It’s him!” Corsa followed suit. “He’s radiating the pulse every millisecond Koguth!”

“Go Nedoli!” Koguth hissed.

Nedoli didn’t hesitate and threw his throttles to full power, the LEUGERS screaming out of the RAVAGER’s shadow and turning to follow the lone ship leaving the PUMA’S PRIDE behind.

“The vent is starting!” Corsa barked as they began to see the reddish color gas of the Tri-Cobalt venting beginning to fill the areas around the different ships. “Forty-two seconds before it disables all LSD operation!”

“Contact him Corsa!” Koguth snapped. “We need to sync our jumps!”

KALIS’S LEUGERS TRANSPORT

Serale was actually the one doing the flying, and she was concentrating intently as Kalis sat beside her in the co-pilot's seat adjusting their power output and calculating their LSD jump. Danim turned from the Engineer station where he sat, Mata watching everything with complete fascination.

"It's mother's ship!" Danim barked. "They are hailing us!"

Kalis nodded. "Quickly... we need to sync our jumps Danim! Put them through."

Danim adjusted his console. "Go!"

"General?" Kalis barked out.

"We are here Kalis!" Koguth's voice announced.

"You have Lady Ceale?" Kalis asked the first question he knew Serale would want to hear.

"She is standing beside me and painfully gripping Nedoli's shoulders I'm quite sure." Koguth's voice answered.

Kalis saw the sigh of relief from both Serale and Danim and he nodded. "I'm sending you the coordinates General!" Kalis hissed. "Lock them in quickly." He spoke as he transmitted the set of LSD jump coordinates.

"We have them!" Koguth answered. "Corsa... lock them in!" They heard him order someone.

Kalis turned in his chair. "Danim! How far are we from the edge of the cloud?"

"Four hundred thousand meters!" Danim answered as his hands moved over the controls. "Twenty-three seconds before it overtakes us and we lose the jump window."

"General?" Kalis exclaimed.

"There!" The female voice announced. "We are synced!"

Kalis looked at Serale. "Four degrees to port Serale." Kalis told her.

Serale nodded and adjusted their course. "Full power to sublight engines!"

"Full power you have!" Kalis spoke as he slid two of his fingers along the engine panel and the green strip of lights followed his touch. "Ten seconds General!" He barked.

"On your mark!" Nedoli spoke now. His voice was calm in the transmission.

"Kalis... your father's ship is hailing us!" Danim shouted.

"Put him through!" Kalis snarled as he looked out into the stars ahead of them. "Father?"

"Kalis... what the fuck are you doing?" Pusintin's voice growled angrily. "Turn that ship around and bring those prisoners back!"

"I don't think so father." Kalis spoke. "Goodbye father." He spoke in a firm voice not realizing his voice was still carrying over the radio link to Nedoli's LEUGERS and they were hearing every word. "I have decided to lead my own life father and I will not allow you to bring harm to the woman I will share it with. I will be a Spartan! As my grandfather was before me. As my Uncle and cousins are! Uncle Martin is coming for you father and I hope you rot in the pits of jorbhe for all you have done! To my mother! To my brothers and sisters! And to others! I will live my own life going forward father. And I will be better than you ever were." He looked at Serale and smiled at her beauty. "General Juturi... on my mark! Three... two... one... mark! Jump now!"

Serale didn't hesitate and slid her hand up the panel activating their LSD coils and Light Speed Drive. The familiar sensation of her stomach falling away filled her as the LEUGERS spirited her away and into her new life.

PRIDE OF PUMA'S

"...do you mean launched?" Popal barked angrily causing Pusintin to look up from the data pad he was reading.

"Sensors just detected a LEUGERS leaving the starboard bay only seconds ago!" The sensor operator spoke. "The vent is affecting sensors sir. No LEUGERS was scheduled to depart at this time because of the vent. Sensors are barely able to track it!"

"Boost power to the active emitters!" Popal snapped.

Pusintin got to his feet and moved over beside his executive officer. "Popal?"

“Marshal... sensors have just detected an unscheduled launch from the starboard landing bay. It’s a LEUGERS transport sir.” Popal answered.

Pusintin leaned closer to the screen. “Who would launch in a LEUGERS just as a vent started?” He asked.

“I have them sir!” The sensor operator barked. “They are power accelerating away from us! Bearing three six one nine! Course two four seven five mark eight!” He looked closer. “Sir! Another LEUGERS is forming with them!”

“What?” Popal hissed.

“Hail them!” Pusintin snarled. “And get someone down to the starboard bay and find out who let this ship launch!”

Popal turned when the Puma Bane officer came sprinting onto the bridge. “Captain! Marshal! The prisoners in Colonel Kalis’s quarters are missing! We have found two dead troopers in the corridor leading to the starboard landing bay and another seven dead in the bay itself!”

“Marshall they are answering!”

“Father?”

“Fuck!” Pusintin snarled. “It’s Kalis!” He growled moving to another console. “He’s trying to take the Hadarian bitch’s daughter.” He stabbed his finger down on the console button. “Kalis... what the fuck are you doing?” Pusintin’s voice growled angrily over the open channel. “You turn that ship around and bring those prisoners back!”

“Marshal! Another LEUGERS has fallen into formation with them!” The sensor operator shouted.

“I don’t think so father.” Kalis spoke. “Goodbye father. I have decided to lead my own life and I will not allow you to bring harm to the woman I will share it with. I will be a Spartan! As my grandfather was before me. As my Uncle and cousins are! Uncle Martin is coming for you father and I hope you rot in the pits of jorbhe for all you have done! To my mother! To my brothers and sisters! And to others! I will live my own life going forward father. And I will be better than you ever were.” Pusintin and the others heard him speak. “General Juturi... on my mark! Three... two... one... mark! Jump now!”

“Stop them!” Pusintin screamed.

Popal shook his head as he looked at the sensor board and stood back upright. “We can’t. They are gone.” He answered.

“Track them!” Pusintin snapped.

“We can’t right now.” Popal answered urgently. “The vent will affect any scans beyond five million kilometers. We can follow their engine trail once the gas has dissipated.”

“Fuck!” Pusintin screamed. “That little fuck! He’s been planning this all along! I should have seen it when he requested to move them to his quarters! That bastard betrayed me!”

“Find out where that other ship came from!” Popal barked the order out. “He was in communication with it and he spoke General Juturi’s name!”

“Not from us sir!” The tactical officer spoke. “Internal sensors indicate all LEUGERS accounted for except one four.”

Pusintin looked at the man. “One Four is my ship!” He barked. “He took my ship?”

The TO nodded slowly. “Yes Marshal.”

“Fuck!” Pusintin shouted.

“Marshal!” The sensor operator screamed. “Ship contact! Bearing three four one! Half a million meters and closing! It’s General Juturi’s ship the RAVAGER! She’s... she’s on a direct collision course! Impact in thirty-nine seconds!”

Pusintin’s eyes went wide and he turned quickly. “Seal the vents!” He screamed. “Seal the vents! Power port batteries! Fuck... he laid a trap for us!” He screamed.

“Marshal if we fire into the gas it will ignite!” Popal barked.

“Projectile munitions only!” Pusintin shouted. “Lock on the RAVAGER and fire at will! Kill that ship before she hits us or we are all dead!”

OMEN THREE

TEN MILLION KILOMETERS FROM KAVALIAN FLEET

“...jumped away?” Yuriko asked her XO ten seconds after arriving on the bridge. “To where?”

“We’re tracking their engine matrix... but something else is happening.” The man told her as they moved to the star chart table. The chart showed every Kavalian ship in exquisite detail as well as the fact they were all stationary because of the Tri-Cobalt vent taking place. Yuriko had thought she was going to get some down time with her husband when the vent started but it appeared that was not going to be the case. “This DIATAGA-Class is on a direct collision course with Pus nut’s ship. Impact in less than a minute. It started moving just after we detected the LEUGERS.”

Yuriko looked at him. “Pus Nut?” She asked.

The man grinned. “Something the bridge crew came up with.” He stated.

“And it’s on a collision course with his ship?” Yuriko asked stunned as she looked at the board. “What the hell is going on there?”

“I don’t know... but if they don’t stop that ship from hitting them, it’s going to do some serious damage to the ship and it may set off a reaction within the Tri-Cobalt gas in the area and cause a massive fire wave.”

“Enhance!” Yuriko barked. “It if kills him I don’t think father will mind in the least!” She said. “I want to know who was on those LEUGERS! CSO?”

“Princess!” The man answered turning from his station.

“Find me where those LEUGERS went!” Yuriko snapped. “Expand our passive scanning parameters out to five light years! Helm! Prepare to engage LSD coils! And drop us back another five million kilometers from these idiots! I don’t want to be within spitting range if it goes to shit for them!”

“Helm aye!”

Yuriko turned back to her XO. “Keep half the arrays on the Kavalian fleet and find the LEUGERS with the other half XO. Whoever they are... if they left Pus Nut... then they have to be on our side.”

The XO nodded his head with a smile. “We’ll find them.”

“I need to let father know about this.” Yuriko spoke. “Are we clear enough for a QCR connection?”

Her XO shook his head. “Better if we wait till we moved further away.” He replied.

Yuriko nodded. “Make it so. I’ll be in the QCR center when we’re in position. Let me know.”

ARC ROYAL QCR ROOM

“...much damage Yuriko?” Martin asked gently.

“They were able to shred the forward section of the DIATAGA with projectile rounds before it hit them.” Yuriko answered from within the QCR transmission. “They got lucky and punched a shit load of holes through the engine cores and knocked them out. The ship lost power about ten seconds before collision and some smart Kavalian hit it with a tractor beam to direct it away from them. It’s drifting now.”

“The Tri-Cobalt vent?” Martin asked looking at Aricia where she sat on the edge of the table.

“It will be another three to four hours before they can shift back to normal operations.” Yuriko answered. “The price of a Tri-Cobalt main power source.”

Martin nodded. “Yes it is.”

“Yuriko... is there any way you can determine who was on the two LEUGERS?” Aricia asked.

Yuriko shook her head. “It caught us with our pants down as well mother.” She answered with a touch of anger in her voice. “Once we find them we’ll be able to find out. But we have to find them first.”

“A LEUGERS doesn’t have the range or LSD coils to jump back to the Alpha Quadrant father... you know that.” Aricia said. “Their engines would be depleted after fifteen or so long range jumps.”

“Kalis?” Martin asked softly.

“Who else could it be Beloved?” Aricia asked.

Martin looked at her. “He hasn’t entered the last code into the P1 I gave him though.” He said.

“I think mother is right.” Yuriko spoke. “And meaning no disrespect father... you aren’t exactly the most forgiving individual.” She said with a smile. “Andro is worse... but not by much. He may be too scared to activate the link.”

Aricia slipped off the table and moved up next to him reaching up to touch his face. “If he has embraced his Lycavorian blood as we all believe he has... then what would be his first course of action Beloved? What would you do?”

“Get the hell away from my brother as quickly as I was able.” Martin answered without a moment’s hesitation.

Aricia nodded. “And two ships means he has discovered others who think as he does.” She said.

“Pleistarchus won’t let him go.” Martin said evenly looking at Aricia. “He’ll go after him just like he is after For'mya.”

Aricia nodded. “Probably. And when we finally do meet up with him... you can put an end to him. Or I will... for what he did to our Kinsoaurgai. Kalis would never have completed the tasks on the P1 if he had not embraced his Spartan blood. Which means we need to help him as well.”

Martin stared at her beautiful azure eyes for several moments before turning to look at Yuriko in the transmission. “Yuriko... find where they went.” Martin said moving to the console on the table and beginning to type. “I’m sending you my code to activate his P1. Once you find him, make contact with him. We need to find a planet that the adolescents can stretch their wings. Murano has given me some ideas and we’ll check them out... but I need to get them off the ships or they’ll begin punching holes in the hull.”

Yuriko nodded her head. “I will find them father.” She said. “It shouldn’t be hard.”

Martin nodded. “Can you drop a remote drone to shadow the Kavalian fleet?” He asked.

Yuriko nodded again. “Already prepping one.”

“I’ll send you our location as soon as we find a planet but contact me if anything else happens. I don’t care what time it is.” Martin said.

“Then I better get busy.” She said with a smile.

“Alu xuil udossta ssinsrigg Yuriko.” Aricia told her. (Go with our love)

Yuriko looked at her and nodded. In the beginning Yuriko had thought for sure that Aricia would be the hardest to win over. It turned out that Aricia was her strongest supporter. Aricia was the first of her adopted mothers to notice the attraction she had for Filrian, and she was the first to tell her to not let him get away. Through the years, though she loved them all equally, Aricia had been the mother she had always gone to first for advice and support even though she was three times her age. Aricia spoke bluntly and told her how it was and that is exactly what Yuriko needed to hear and experience. It helped that Aricia and she had much in common and whenever they were together always managed to train with each other, making each of them even deadlier when it came to hand to hand combat.

“Lu'dos zuch ilhar.” Yuriko answered. (And you always)

“Try not to kill too many of them daughter.” Martin said with a grin.

Yuriko and Aricia chuckled. It was an inside joke between them and had been for over a decade. “I will try father.” She said with warmth. “No promises though.”

They watched the transmission fade quickly and Martin turned to Aricia. “This is going to come to a head quickly once things get rolling.” He stated drawing Aricia close to him and inhaling deeply of her lavender and coco scent.

Aricia nodded and drew deeply of his mint scent, letting it fill her and relishing in the feel of his powerful arms around her. “Yes... but it will end a chapter in our lives that will remain buried forever afterwards. He needs to pay for what he did to our Kinsoaurgai Beloved. I know you feel that and I also know it sears your blood every time you think about it.”

Martin lowered his forehead to hers and nodded. “He will pay Saaurano.” Martin spoke softly. “He will pay.”

Aricia looked at him. “What happen does not change your feelings for For'mya does it?” She asked him gently.

“Never Saaurano! You know that! Never!” Martin hissed strongly. “I love her more now! And Fedor and Eirene are my children! Mine!”

Aricia smiled and wrapped her arms around his waist tighter. "I knew this to be true." She said. "I think a part of For'mya had doubts... but I did not and neither did any of us. We will make sure For'mya knows this."

Martin looked at her shining eyes so close to his. "What... what is going on with this Jacina?" He asked. "Anja says... she says there is something between you."

Aricia nodded. "I don't know what it is Martin... but I feel she will be in our lives for many years to come."

"Aricia I don't want or need another wife or mate." Martin said. "I will refuse if..."

Aricia laughed and took his handsome face in her hands. "You think highly of your skills my Beloved Martin Leonidas." She laughed again. "Rightly so of course... but no... Jacina is different somehow. She will not be part of our lives... but she will be part of our lives." Aricia grinned. "We have no intention of sharing you or your delightful gifts with any other woman my love. You belong to us for eternity."

"Good." Martin said. "I'm hungry."

"You are always hungry Martin." Aricia answered with a smile.

Martin grinned lustily. "Not for food." He said.

Aricia reached out with a hand and sent a thin Etheric push to the console by the door. She waited until she heard the small chime indicating the door was locked and then she wrapped her arms around his shoulders as he lifted her into the air. "Then perhaps you should sate your hunger Beloved." She whispered just before his lips claimed hers.

VANARI HOMEWORLD

AUSTROVA

CAPITAL CITY OF MYDALA

DUTKNE'S TEMPORARY RESIDENCE

TUGARD DIPLOMATIC TOWERS

Tugard Diplomatic Towers.

A plush skyscraper of nearly four hundred stories and filled with penthouse apartments for the wealthy and diplomats that came to Austrova. His apartment was on the top floor of the building, one level down from the roof. Denali's apartment, very similar to his in layout, was on the other side of the building. It really didn't matter for they only used the different apartments to sleep. The rest of the time they were crossing back and forth between the two plush suites in order to better coordinate what they were doing. Dutkne turned from the balcony, the mug of Denali's mother's coffee in his hand. He hadn't believed Andro when he said he would become addicted to his mother's coffee, but it had happened. The liquid was so rich and smooth and no where near as harsh as some of the coffee he had drank in his lifetime. He saw Denali standing beside one of Dutkne's senior military advisors and one of the Rothryn senior officers that Dyack had brought into the fold near the star chart table that had been set up in the center of the main living area. With them was the third most senior officer within the Vanari military and a man that Dutkne had met once before. He was tough and completely loyal to his people and when Coren had presented all the evidence he had to him, the man had agreed to join their small group without hesitation. Against the far wall of the suite, a communications center of sorts had been established so that they could remain in contact with both the ARCH DEMON and her ships as well as the Protectorate and other assets they had brought into play. Arduri Leonidas was presently with her father and Caliria at his home on the outskirts of the city. Coren had made some headway into breaching the security net of the OSG and the more he discovered, the angrier he was becoming that it had gone on for so long and how deeply some of the Vanari politicians were involved. Arduri was seeing personally to his security while Caliria was using her status as a student to gather as much information from the Vanari Science Board as she possibly could.

Looking at Denali made him think of Androcles. They were so similar in appearance to each other and their father that it was hard not to think of him. Wayonn had explained it to him before he left, the connection he and Andro now had, and Dutkne had fully accepted what path his life was now on. It felt so very right and for the first time he had no questions about what his future held. He would fight beside Androcles when it called for and guide him as best as he was able to. He had hundreds of years of training behind him now thanks to his grandfather, and Dutkne now knew why he had pushed and prodded him all of those years. He would share his training and experience with Androcles always. Andro sent him reports every other day that no one else knew about and as he read them, Dutkne began to understand it all so very clearly. He would act for Androcles as his grandfather had acted for Sumar. As his father had acted for Resumar and now how his Aunt Helen now acted for Andro's father. That was his destiny now. A Praetorian Mage. Half Lycavorian and half Pralor but entirely Lycavorian in his heart and soul.

Looking at Denali also made him think of the one thing he had tried very hard not to think of. He saw them in his dreams all the time now. The curve of their faces, the softness of their lips and the desire their lush bodies caused within him all the time now. He could still focus enough to be able to smell them, though he knew that was probably just in his head. No woman had ever affected him in such a manner, and now two were making his wolf blood sizzle and burn for them. It shocked him in some respects because he never imagined he would find a vampire female attractive in the least, yet Zarah Leonidas was half vampire and Lucia was a pureblood vampire and they could incite him like no women ever had. He would have them Dutkne knew, but he also knew what had happened to Zarah and the role Lucia had played in saving her. He knew he needed them to fully accept the love they had for one another before they could accept him. Dutkne was many things and patient was one of them.

Things were progressing slowly... but they were progressing. Coren was positive that he had convinced the OSG agents he was legitimate in his desire to enter into the realm of the Black Market that dealt with Vanari females as well as many other things. He had already conducted two small operations to prove his willingness by securing what the OSG thought to be sensitive information about Vanari movements. He had also convinced the Vanari agents that he wanted to push Ardan out of the picture and take over his role. Expand it even. The OSG had been very willing to agree with this because of Androcles's threats to them. They were terrified that he would do what he said and Coren silently reveled in their fear. Coren Re Mydala knew that Androcles would do exactly as he said he would. If Androcles ordered it, the Eridiani and their OSG cronies would cease to exist. Dutkne had already secretly positioned Protectorate ships to strike at the heart of the OSG when the time came. Dutkne had taken on Andro's trait of intense dislike for those who preyed on the weak and unarmed. One of the many traits that he had absorbed from Androcles as their connection grew stronger and more focused. Dutkne, Denali and the Rothryn officer all turned towards the sound of the elevator as it reached their floor. The doors to both main suites were always open to allow their people to move back and forth between them freely.

All of them came instantly alert when Dyack's personal aide and Chief of Security, a tall and powerfully built Rothryn/Lycavorian practically pushed Dyack into the main suite.

Denali was the first to speak as he turned to face them. "Praetor Dyack?" He asked. "Is... is there something wrong?"

Dyack took a deep breath and looked at him. "I think I may have been compromised." He spoke as calmly as he could.

"Compromised?" Dutkne asked moving closer.

Dyack's Security Chief stepped closer. "As we were entering the building from the Lifter Garage I noticed two men who have never been there before." Horam explained. "They tailed us into the rear of the main lobby and watched as we boarded the elevator. We exited on several different floors before coming all the way up here but if..."

"If they are any good at their job they will discover where you ended up right away." Denali finished his sentence.

Horam nodded his head. "Yes."

"Sibfla!" Denali swore. "Are you sure?"

Horam looked at Dyack and watched as the man he had guarded for over half a century nodded his head with a pain filled expression. He turned back to Denali and Dyack. "I am almost positive I recognized one of them as one of Anroth's Lieutenants."

"Your son?" Dutkne asked.

Dyack nodded his head. "Whether he is working for the OSG as well or simply trying to move into the arrangement I have made with them I don't know."

"What do you think Praetor?" The Lycavorian General from the Protectorate asked now.

Dyack shook his head. "I don't know." He answered honestly. "Anroth... he has always been hungry for more responsibility within the government. I have avoided giving him what he has wanted and he has gone behind my back on many occasions and done what he wanted regardless. He is too close to the largest rival of my family and as much as I do not want to admit it, he wields quite a bit of power in the underground because he is my son."

"I am familiar to a point with your government Praetor Dyack..." The Vanari Admiral spoke now. Rodem Esa Mosril had served the Vanari fleet for all but nineteen of his four thousand seven hundred years of life and he was a complete and total patriot. "If... if your son were to expose this information to others they could use it to oust you from your position."

Dyack nodded his head. "Slavery is forbidden by law among the Rothryn people though many partake of it on the Black Market. Only the most powerful of the Rothryn families will even attempt it. Others simply look the other way. If it is discovered that I have made this false arrangement with the OSG concerning the Vanari females then Barnak can use it against me in the Rothryn Assembly. He will attempt to discredit me with the Assembly even though he takes part in slavery all the time."

"And your son is tight with this Barnak person?" Denali asked.

Dyack nodded. "Too close." He answered him. "Anroth believes that our bloodline... our heritage... he believes it makes us better than most others. Like Barnak... he wishes to bring back many of the more archaic rules that we dismissed as a people long ago. Much like the Union has done since leaving Lycavore."

Denali tilted his head at him with a smile. "I see you have been talking to Caliria." He said.

Dyack smiled now as he became more relaxed, knowing he was among friends. "She has become quite the historian of your people in such a short time. She gave me a book she had borrowed from the library aboard your ship. I have not been able to put it down."

"Which one?" Denali asked.

"Life, Slavery and Back Again by the Lycavorian call Merclaes." Dyack answered. "It is a fascinating history Denali Leonidas. I did not imagine our histories could parallel each other in so many ways. Your time as slaves to the High Coven not withstanding."

Denali grimaced slightly. "We had to read that for school." He spoke. "I hated it."

Dutkne laughed at him. "It did not move fast enough for you?" He asked.

"Hell no!" Denali spat. "I'd fall asleep after only a chapter or two each time I tried to read it!"

"I am almost finished with it." Dyack spoke. "I have just begun the chapters detailing the history of The Evolli War."

Deni met his eyes. "Oh."

"You fought in this war? With your father and brothers?" Dyack asked.

Denali nodded his head slowly. "Yes."

"I would be honored if you would tell me of it." Dyack said. "Reading it is one thing... but hearing it from one who was actually there? Especially this place called Alba Tau. What can you...?"

"No." Deni spoke firmly. He met Dyack's eyes. "I'm sorry sir... whatever you discover about Alba Tau will have to come from the book." He answered as flashes of what he had seen on that planet whisked through his brain. He took a deep breath. "If you will excuse me." He said before turning without another word and walking towards the balcony of the suite to breath fresh air.

Dyack turned to Dutkne quickly as Rodem Esa Mosril, Horam, and the Protectorate and Rothryn officers moved closer. "I have offended him Dutkne." Dyack spoke earnestly. "This was... it was not my intent."

Dutkne nodded his head. "He knows that sir." He answered. "Alba Tau is... most of the younger generations of Lycavorian Spartans fought there. Were forged there. It was a battle that should have lasted hours and ended up lasting months. It could have lasted longer if not for their training and leadership. It was..." Dutkne looked at him. "It was... for lack of a better term a bloodbath. Horrific battles and countless lives changed or altered. Androcles, his father, their dragons... they took part in the first battle. That battle would lay the groundwork for the entire operation really. Day patrols, ambushes and violence. Death on a scale not seen in their history since the Black Day, the Purge of the Oracles or the death of King Resumar. At least not to me. The Evolli knew it was their last chance to have any victory and they fought like demons. The first... the very first battle lasted nearly twenty-six hours... and both Androcles and his father were nearly lost in that single action. Denali and his siblings arrived with a relief force in the morning. What they found was... it was horrific to say the least.”

Rodem stepped closer. “You speak... you speak as if you were there as well Dutkne.” He said softly.

Dutkne looked at him. “What... what Androcles and I now share... part of that is who we are at our cores. I have seen his memories of this place... what they endured and what he was forced to do. In a way... yes... I suppose I was there. Alba Tau is where Androcles... it is where he became who he is now.” Dutkne looked at them. “Asking one of them to share this is not something that is done among the Spartans. It is a sacred memory to all who fought there and they will only talk of it with someone who experienced it just as they did. Those men and women are the only ones who could truly understand it.”

“If this place... this Alba Tau...” Dyack spoke. “If it is the measure of him, the measure of his father, then I believe we have a right to know.” Dyack shook his head. “No... that is not the right word. I believe we have a duty to know what makes them the men they are. We are all Lycavorians no matter the names we use to describe ourselves. That is something I have come to believe fully now.”

“I agree Dutkne.” Rodem echoed Dyack. “What Denali does now... what he says his brother will do when he arrives?” Rodem looked at him. “He is still coming yes?”

Dutkne nodded. “Oh yes... and probably far sooner than most of us believe.”

“Never in our history have we been asked to trust so thoroughly Dutkne. When I look at Denali... see him talk to others, how he treats my people, I know in my heart that trust is sacred to him. To his brother. I have seen the way he looks at Arduri Re Mydala, the total devotion to her in his eyes even though she is Vanari.”

“Arduri is his wife and mate now sir.” Dutkne said. “That is not something a Lycavorian will ever forsake no matter the species of their woman.”

Rodem nodded. “I wish to be able to explain to my men and women why that trust should be sacred to us as well. I wish to be able to tell them what drives these men and women who have sworn themselves to our defense even after the way your people have been treated by ours throughout the centuries.”

Dutkne looked at them for a long moment. “You may be shocked by what I tell you.” He said. “They... the Evolli gave Androcles and Elynth a name in their native language during this war. Just as his father earned a nickname fighting the High Coven on Earth. It is a vile curse in the Evolli language but in any other language it translates very differently. It... it defines them to their enemies and it is why they are so feared by the lawless within the Alpha Quadrant.”

“What was this name?” Dyack asked.

Dutkne met his eyes. “Soul Slayers.”

KALIS’S LEUGERS

Serale’s hands moved across the console quickly and efficiently as they exited their fourth LSD jump.

“Disengaging LSD Drive.” Serale called out from the pilot’s seat. “Bringing the main engines to full power and setting the LSD coils to automatic realignment and recharge.”

“Scanning.” Kalis spoke as he stared at the sensor screen from the seat beside her. “No contacts. We’re clear. General Koguth’s LEUGERS is right with us. Come to course 39864.1 Serale. We must continue to move while the LSD drive recalibrates and recycles.” Kalis told her.

“Are you sure this course takes us closer to your uncle Kalis?” Serale asked as she adjusted their course.

Kalis nodded his head. “I used the information on my P1 to calculate. Based on the jumps and course he has maintained, I calibrated our course to parallel it as much as I was able. It also... it also feels right.”

Serale looked at him. “That’s... that’s quite a guess Kalis my love.” She said.

Kalis nodded his head taking no offense at her comment. “Anything away from my father is preferable for all of us.”

Serale smiled. “Well... there is that.” She said.

Kalis smiled at her. “We should initiate a hard seal with the General’s LEUGERS so you can see your mother.”

“Shouldn’t we wait?” Serale asked.

“It will take the LSD coils fifty-two minutes to fully realign and recalibrate for maximum efficiency.” Kalis told her. “It is plenty of time.” He reached up and tapped the panel above his head. “Nedoli... your status?”

“LSD Drive disengaged and running on main engines.” Nedoli’s voice answered. “You?”

Kalis nodded. “We are the same.” He spoke. “I recommend we initiate a hard dock. I have planned one more jump before I try to begin contacting my uncle but I think we are safe to at least finally meet face to face. Can you move to our port?”

“Consider it done. Coming to your port side and preparing to dock.” Nedoli answered.

Kalis nodded. “We will see you in a few minutes.” He said.

“We look forward to it.” Nedoli answered.

“Kalis... meet me at the secondary engineer’s station.” Mata’s voice filled the intercom. “I have discovered some interesting things about the ship we have stolen.”

Kalis looked at Serale. “Can you...?”

Serale nodded. “Yes... go.” She watched him rise to his feet and he leaned over to kiss her deeply. It was a kiss that Serale relished and returned with equal emotion. They held it for a long moment and then Kalis ran his fingers over her cheek.

“Soon Serale my love.” He whispered to her.

“Not soon enough for me.” Serale told him with a mischievous smile.

Kalis matched her smile and then turned to move into the back. He moved quickly down the three short flights of stairs and saw Mata sitting at a computer station, Danim leaning close from a chair beside him. He moved up behind them. “Mata?”

Mata turned his head and looked at him with a smile. “Kalis my boy... when you steal a ship you don’t play games do you?”

Kalis looked at him confused, shifting his eyes to Danim and then back to him. “I’m not following.” He said.

“This is your father’s ship.” Danim spoke quickly looking at him.

Kalis nodded. “I assumed it would be the most well cared for and the most ready for long flight.”

Mata nodded. “And it is...” He said. “General Koguth is going to love this...”

“Love what?” Kalis asked.

Mata adjusted the controls, his fingers nimbly moving across the access board. “When you stole your father’s ship... you stole the most recent deployments of every major Kavalian force, to include the Puma Bane units.” Mata looked at him. “They were up to date right up until the time we left. They may have shifted by now... but this information would be nearly invaluable to a resistance. Especially one with the resources to follow up on this information.”

Kalis looked at the screen Mata brought up and his eyes grew intense. “Fleet dispositions. Ground Force multipliers.”

Mata nodded as Kalis spoke. “You realize what this would be worth to say... to someone like General Pian?” Mata said. “Access codes. Deployments. Force numbers. It is... it is like being in the Kavalian Command Bunker yourself! Danim here is far more versed in computer use than I am and he is finding items at every turn.”

Danim smiled. “Computers are a hobby of mine.” He stated. “I like to crack them. Your father doesn’t use very sophisticated encryption.”

Mata looked at him his face becoming serious. “You realize what your father will do when he discovers this?”

Kalis nodded his head. “Yes.”

“I hope your uncle is nearby... or at least able to assist us.” Mata said.

“Why?” Danim asked.

Mata turned back to him. “This information could very well be what a resistance needs to defeat the KFI.” He said. “Military operations... deployments. Whoever had this would have a huge advantage.”

“Mata...?” Kalis asked softly looking at him.

Mata turned and met his eyes seeing the questions in them an Mata laughed. For the first time in nearly four hundred years he laughed with genuine mirth and humor. He laid a large, fur coated hand on Danim’s shoulder. "Danim has given me what you want me to have." Mata spoke. "He has uncovered the information I need to find purpose again Kalis. To see our... my people finally begin to break the chains of the past."

Kalis smiled and placed his hand on Mata's shoulder. "I'm glad." He said. "But this also means my father will try harder to find us."

Mata nodded. "Well... there is that." He spoke with a smile. "I will wager you have some other tricks up your sleeve though. You are full of surprises. And your father has not done so well against his brother up until now." Mata laughed again. "Something tells me your uncle could fight circles around your father even if he had to stop every hour to take a shit! That should be painfully obvious to even the most dull witted person!"

Kalis grinned at Mata's new and infectious attitude. He had never seen his instructor like this and it pleased him to see that Mata had tossed aside the doldrums of a stagnant life and was reaching for more. "We are docking with General Koguth's ship. Help me prepare the seal?"

Mata nodded. "Danim...?"

"Don't worry... I'll file everything and label it all for ease of use." He said.

Mata nodded and turned back to Kalis. "Let us get moving!" He said happily.

Kalis watched him move past him with a smile and resolve in his footsteps. This was a Mata he had never known. A driven man who appeared ready to face anything. They would need that in the future Kalis knew.

Kalis watched from beside Mata as Ceale crushed Serale into her arms and then drew Danim into her embrace as well. Ceale looked a thousand times better than when he had last seen her. Her cheeks were no longer sunken and her skin looked alive and vibrant just like Serale's. Kalis saw where Serale got her beauty as he studied them intently; her mother was a vision of beauty as well, even with the much darker red hair. Kalis shook his head slightly, wondering what kind of man could willingly inflict pain and shame on a woman with such beauty. If treated like a precious gem, that woman would reciprocate the same emotions and give her man everything.

Kalis blinked as the large Kavalian stepped in front of him, his eyes boring into Mata who stood beside him without fear. Kalis had no doubts Mata could have killed everyone within the rear of the transport if he so wanted, so he did not fear Koguth or his two sons. He stood there without fear and filled with new resolve. It was something that Koguth detected right away as he looked at Kalis. He held out his hand and Kalis grasped his forearm without hesitation.

"It is an honor to finally meet you General." Kalis spoke.

Koguth pulled his eyes from Mata and stared at him. "I must say the same thing." He said.

"I am sorry about your ship." Kalis told him.

"She was old and had served my Pride well." Koguth said. "Hopefully she died as well as she lived."

"I don't put much hope in that sir." Kalis spoke.

Koguth nodded. "Nor do I..." He replied with a smile. "But she bought us the time we needed."

Kalis motioned to Mata. "May I present Master Instructor Mata of...?"

"I know who he is young Kalis." Koguth spoke returning his gaze to Mata. "Puma Bane."

Mata didn't back down and he bowed his head slightly. "The tone of your voice when you speak that name tells me how far we have fallen General." He spoke meeting his eyes. "It makes me especially glad I have the opportunity to change that path for myself. And maybe others in the future."

"Mata helped us to escape my father's ship." Kalis told him. "He is on our side General."

Koguth looked at him. "I don't doubt that Kalis." He said. "He would not be standing here otherwise considering how well I have come to know you these last days. And your desires."

Kalis nodded his head. "Thank you." He said. "Lady Ceale looks very well."

Koguth glanced back and nodded. "She is a strong woman. Stronger than she appears. Mani and Corsa have helped her and she has... she has bounced back faster than even I thought possible."

Kalis inhaled slightly and caught Ceale's scent, similar in many ways to Serale, but muskier in a fashion. His eyes grew slightly wider as he sniffed more deeply while Koguth watched and he detected the stirring desire in her scent for the broad Kavalian standing just behind her and watching her embrace with her children. He could smell it as easily as his own desire for Serale and hers for him and he looked back to Koguth. “She...?”

“Mani was right.” Koguth spoke. “You have fully embraced your Lycavorian blood.”

Kalis nodded slowly. “Yes sir... but I have not dismissed the Kavalian blood in my veins either.”

“Then what you smell... it is as we...” Koguth questioned.

Kalis nodded his head. “Yes sir. It’s there... and very strong. Potent. And becoming less unsure as every hour passes.”

“You can tell that just from her scent?” Koguth whispered the question.

Kalis nodded. “Most do not know what Lycavorians can do with their sense of smell. It’s far more intricate and expansive than is commonly known. I am still learning myself... but yes I can smell that.”

Koguth took a deep breath and nodded. “Good. Good. I... she has shown this on our ship but I did not know if it was simply to appease us. Nedoli... he...”

Kalis nodded. “Yes... that is very apparent in his scent as well.” He answered. Kalis motioned to a table behind him. “We should probably sit and discuss some things.” He said. “And if you wish, it must be crowded on your LEUGERS; you can shift half your people to this one and give everyone more room.”

Koguth nodded. “I was hoping you would suggest that.” He said.

“We should also speak of what Danim discovered.” Mata said looking at Kalis. “That may well dictate how we proceed forward.”

Koguth looked at him and then to Kalis. “What has he discovered?” He asked finally.

Kalis met his eyes. “The plans and deployment of every Kavalian unit before we left the Alpha Quadrant.” He said.

Koguth’s eyes went a little wider. “You are kidding!” He gasped.

Kalis shook his head. “No. Which means my father will probably be coming after us as soon as he is able. I kind of... I stole his ship.”

Koguth laughed at the expression on his face and he reached out to place a hand on his shoulder. “But think of the expression on his face when he discovered you did.” He said.

Kalis smiled. “Well... there is that.” He said as Mata chuckled.

“Why would this information... as important as it is... matter?” Koguth said. “We have no means to communicate directly with Keleru or the KFI Command.”

Kalis met his eyes. “My father doesn’t...” He said. “However... I’m betting my uncle has a means to communicate with the Union.” He removed the P1 from his belt. “And it has something to do with this. It’s much more than a mere data and storage pad. That much I know without a doubt.”

Koguth was silent for a long moment. “If what you say is true... it could alter the course of the foolish war Keleru started with them.” He said.

Kalis snorted derisively. “Keleru and my father made a mistake thinking they could enter a war with the Union and win as they did against the Coven.” He held up the pad. “And they will not need this to thoroughly kick Keleru right in the nor and make him feel it.”

“Nor?” Koguth asked.

“His balls.” Mata laughed. “I had to ask him the same question.”

Koguth laughed again now. “His balls... yes! Outstanding!”

“Mata and I were thinking... we were thinking what this could be worth to General Pian and the others who feel as you do sir.” Kalis said.

Koguth became silent and looked at him. “Probably more than you know.” He said.

Kalis nodded his head. “Then I suggest we sit down and figure some things out.” He said. “I have a life I wish to start and you have a daughter you wish to find.”

Koguth took a deep breath as an image of Iama flashed through his mind. “Yes.” He said softly with firm resolve. “Yes I do.”

BENEATH EDEN GRAND CENTER

Aihola looked at Lynwe from across the large table with a smile. She had been escorted into the Command Center with Tarifa, Anuk and Nayeca who had flown in from Sparta at Lynwe's request. Tareif's Dragoon Guards provided security to Aihola and Tarifa within Eden City and the Durcunusaan covered them when they were in Sparta. The two units worked quite seamlessly together, training and sharing information. If Aihola had to guess, she suspected that she and Tarifa were almost as well protected as Martin and any member of the Leonidas family. It helped that Martin considered both of them dear sisters and they were treated as such by everyone who came into contact with them. It wasn't often that Aihola and Tarifa got to see one another during the day. Their duties kept them on different sides of the planet most of the time, especially since Tarifa was now Governor of Sparta, but they relished the moments they were able to sneak. Both of them missed Isra and being able to spend more time with each other until their husband and mate returned was always good. They were watching Lynwe talking with Nesa at the other end of the room and both knew something was up. Nesa was Armetus's senior Intelligence Analyst and a Lycavorian woman they had both worked with before. If she was involved then whatever Lynwe had brought them here for was important.

They both turned when the thick door slid open easily and Selene entered with Charles and two Drow officers that were the heads of their own security details. Aihola recognized both of the Drow females as members of Lynwe's personal scout team many years ago. They had fought beside Lynwe in the Battle for Earth and had taken part in the smashing of Ukwav with Martin. Selene had accepted her Drow guard without thought considering that the woman she loved more than her own life was a Drow and after some prodding Charles had accepted his own. Now Charles Taylor did not go anywhere without Zeia and she watched over him like a hawk.

Aihola, Tarifa, and the others rose to greet Selene and Charles and hugs and kisses were exchanged between all of them. Charles Taylor and the women in this room were responsible for the rebirth of Earth in every sense of the word. Even though he was well into his seventies, Charles didn't look a day over forty and moved around with the spryness of someone half his age.

Tarifa looked at Charles as he held her at arms length. "Charles... what is going on here?" She asked. "Why all the secrecy about this meeting?"

"It's not often we are escorted in through the bunker tunnels of the city we helped to found." Aihola added.

Charles nodded. "I know. You will understand shortly trust me. We had to wait until we had all of our information together."

"What information?" Anuk asked now. "Why are Nayeca and I here for that matter?"

Nayeca nodded. "Yes... I would like to know as well."

Charles nodded and motioned for them to take their seats again. "And everything will soon become clear. Please sit down."

"Charles... why don't I like the way you say that?" Tarifa asked. She looked at Selene as she came back over from greeting Lynwe. "Selene?"

Selene took her hands and leaned forward to hug her and kiss her cheek. "You were not told of what is happening because you needed to focus on getting a handle on things in Sparta and we did not have all the information. Now we do."

"Information about what?" Tarifa asked.

Selene smiled. "Nesa and Lynwe will brief us." She said. "She has been worrying about this for weeks."

"Selene...?" Aihola asked.

"Sit." Selene said with a smile as she leaned over and kissed Aihola's cheek. "We'll find out everything very soon."

Lynwe turned as everyone settled back into their chairs. Lynwe and Tareif were tasked with the defense of Earth and everything involving Earth's system. For twenty-five years they had held this job and now, Earth and her planetary system was almost as well defended as Apo Prime. Lynwe and Tareif took nothing for granted and had sworn a vow that Earth would never again be conquered by an enemy. Just getting close to the planet with any kind of attack force would be a hellish nightmare. With EDEN's primary weapons systems all upgraded and Admiral Wallace on constant alert, combined with the PDPs situated in key locations across the system, it would cost far too much to any attacking force. And that was before they actually reached the planet itself. Lynwe looked at her dear friends across the table and felt warmth spread through her. Tarifa and Aihola had shown her all those years ago what she could have and Lynwe had embraced it completely. While their intimate moments together had long since ended when Isra took them as his mates, there was still an attraction to them for her as well as Selene. Lynwe doubted that would ever change. She looked at Nesa who nodded to her and then she stepped close to the table.

“Ok... you are probably very confused at the moment.” Lynwe said.

Tarifa chuckled. “That’s an understatement Lynwe.” She said. “Just tell us why you have us here. We have never kept anything from each other. Why now?”

Lynwe nodded. “We haven’t kept it from you Tarifa... we didn’t have all the information we wanted. We do now. That is why you are here now.”

“What is this all about Lynwe?” Aihola asked.

Lynwe met her eyes. “Aelulip and Kawyona ring any bells.” She spoke the two words knowing the reaction she would receive from both Aihola and Tarifa as well as Anuk and Nayeca.

All four woman sat forward in their chairs now, their attention full focused on them.

“Lynwe... tell me you are joking.” Aihola finally gasped.

Lynwe shook her head. “Unfortunately no.” She stated turning to Nesa. “Nesa?”

“I thought... I thought she was dead.” Tarifa exclaimed.

Nesa stepped up to the table. “Dead?” She said. “No. She’s very much alive and as much as it pains me to say... we have lost her again.”

“Again?” Aihola said. “What do you mean?”

“Armetus made me aware of her existence many years ago.” Nesa said. “He was making a list of potential threats to King Martin’s rule. The Drow that abandoned you in Canada Aihola... they were near the top of the list because they had not been discovered leaving Earth from any of the normal ports that were established in the beginning and we were monitoring all space born traffic harshly back then. We determined they had simply gone somewhere where we did not have any eyes here on Earth.”

“It turns out we were right.” Lynwe said looking at Aihola.

“Lynwe... you were part of this?” Tarifa asked.

Lynwe nodded her head. “Selene and Tareif as well. Charles we brought into the fold when he was elected President.” She replied. “This was a request from both Martin and Aricia. They wanted it kept very low key... almost nonexistent. He did not want the Drow to thin he was targeting them.”

“Our people worship him!” Aihola almost yelled. “His entire family. Especially now that Andro has taken Lu'ria as his wife and mate!”

Lynwe nodded. “I tried to explain that to him Aihola... but he did not want this to look like a witch hunt against the Drow.”

“Lynwe... they would never think that.” Tarifa spoke now.

“We would have hunted them willingly!” Aihola declared.

“That is why he wanted it kept compartmentalized.” Selene interjected. “He did not want to put you in a position of ordering the hunt for Drow criminals. Not so soon after you were made Queen. He wanted you free to do what you needed to do.”

Anuk leaned forward now. She knew full well who Kawyona was and what she had done. Her actions may have brought Nayeca and her fully together as Mistress and Slave... but the manner in which it was done could never be forgiven. They were falling in love well before Kawyona’s actions forced them together and though it had happened the way it did, neither of them regretted it in the least. “So they are not dead?” Anuk asked. “Why does this matter to us now Lynwe. It’s been over twenty-five years.”

Lynwe looked at her. “Drow do not forget or forgive Anuk... you should know that by now.”

Anuk nodded. “I do. But we... the Drow did not do anything to them except chose to follow their Queen and not the hate Aelulip and Kawyona were espousing.”

“We pushed them aside Anuk.” Nayeca spoke reaching out to place her hand on Anuk’s arm. “To the Drow... to them... that was enough.”

Aihola looked at Lynwe. “You are... as Martin is so fond of saying... about to drop a big old bomb on us aren’t you Lynwe?”

Lynwe looked at Nesa. "That's what we thought at first." She said. "Now... now we are not so sure."

"Lynwe... Nesa..." Charles began. "Enough side stepping. We came here to make decisions, so let's make them. Show them what we have discovered and what has happened."

Lynwe looked at Nesa. "Go ahead Nesa."

Nesa touched the computer panel on the large table and a large holo monitor came alive on the wall. "Six weeks ago three Drow stumbled into the camp of one of our Deep Exploration Mines on the African continent. The same one Tarifa got started eighteen months ago. All of them were severely injured, cuts and bruises, two of them had been shot and one stabbed. They had made their way through six hundred kilometers of jungle and desert terrain before finding the camp. The camp Commander immediately sent for Durcunusaan assistance and a team from the Krypteria was sent as well." Nesa changed the holomonitor to show the faces of three Drow females. All of them were typical Drow and exquisitely beautiful in an exotic fashion. All of them could see the injuries they had suffered however but it did not keep Aihola from coming to her feet.

"Kawyona?" She gasped.

Nesa nodded. "Yes... though she no longer goes by that name according to her. The other two are sisters... Bae'diraz and Isa'mada."

"She doesn't go by that name?" Tarifa asked.

"She is using Akor'dris." Nesa answered.

Nayeca leaned forward. "That is the name of her mother." She said. "She was... she was killed by the Coven in the camps."

Nesa nodded in agreement. "We confirmed that with Princess Narice and others within the High Coven. Akor'dris was her mother's name. All three have sworn off a family name."

Aihola looked at her. "Sworn off a family name?" She gasped. "But that is... that is like declaring yourself void of... void of the right to live among the Drow. Why would they do that Lynwe?"

"There is much you need to hear and see..." Lynwe said. "But the most important thing we have to do is decide what to do."

"About what?" Aihola snapped. "Damn it... no more dancing around! What is going on Lynwe?"

"Aihola... according to these women... they escaped Aelulip's control for one reason." Nesa said. "To protect and warn you as their Queen."

"What?" Tarifa gasped. "Kawyona wasn't so quick to do that originally!" She hissed.

"Why... warn me of what?" Aihola asked.

"Aelulip is planning a coup." Lynwe answered. "She has roughly fifty thousand men and women, not all of them Drow, who follow her. They are scattered all over the planet and are waiting for the word from her to execute their orders."

"A coup!" Aihola nearly shouted.

"Aelulip is using the non-Drow as cannon fodder." Lynwe said with a shake of her head. "Men and women who hope to gain something if the Drow are split. Her true strength comes in the fashion of her Drow guard which numbers about ten thousand. They were under Kawyona's command until she escaped. Bae'diraz and Isa'mada were her two most senior Lieutenants and the most skilled."

"A coup? Now?" Tarifa declared. "A coup would never succeed Lynwe."

"No it would not..." Lynwe agreed. "However... it would split our people since Aihola has always walked a thin line on our traditions and values. She has never crossed that line and that is why she has maintained the support of most of our Elders. Lu'ria's mother among them."

"Let her try this!" Aihola snapped. "I will not hide because of her!"

"It's not a matter of hiding Aihola." Lynwe said. "Aelulip is planning an attack against your home here in Eden City and against yours Anuk. Her directions are clear. She wants all of you dead."

"And Kawyona escaped to warn of this?" Nayeca asked. "Why?"

"The why of it we can determine later." Nesa spoke. "What we need to do now is make a decision what to do."

"About what?" Aihola said.

Nesa brought up another image. "We have confirmation from seven different assets that those Drow are now forming at one location to disperse among the Drow population here in Eden City and the surrounding area."

“From information you got from Kawyona?” Tarifa asked.

Lynwe shook her head. “No. From an asset we have had in place among the Drow of Aelulip’s group for the last ten years.” She said.

“That was Armetus’s doing.” Nesa said quickly.

“So... so Kawyona’s information is correct?” Nayeca asked softly.

Nesa nodded her head. “We questioned all of them extensively.” She said. “With drugs and without. They submitted to this willingly and their stories have never varied. Aelulip has become insane with power. She began using abandoned High Coven Tech in experiments to try and make the Drow stronger and more resilient. The experiments were forced on many of the Drow in the beginning. Kawyona and these two among them.”

“What kind of experiments?” Tarifa asked.

“Mostly genetic in nature. Trying to improve their strength and endurance so they could match a pure blood Lycavorian.” Nesa answered. “By all accounts she had High Coven scientists that escaped the purge right after the Battle for Earth and was using them to conduct the experiments. “

“You have known about this all of this time?” Aihola asked.

Nesa shook her head. “No. Our agent was never privy to what was going on behind the scenes. Only rumors and tidbits of information that she did not forward unless she could confirm them herself. Armetus trained her himself and she is very thorough. She was never able to give us anything definitive and therefore we never told you. Her last report however... it stated they were staging for some kind of mission into Eden City and we needed to be aware of what was going on. What we discovered from Kawyona and the others only confirmed this and told us what Aelulip has been planning. The woman is quite mad.”

“Sibfla... we could have told you that!” Tarifa hissed.

“Aihola... we have... we have the tools to break her back now.” Lynwe said. “We can take out most of her supporters and discover the identities of others. We need to move now though.”

“What are you asking Lynwe?” Aihola asked feeling a cold sensation in the pit of her belly beginning to form.

Lynwe lowered her eyes. “If we let them escape into the Drow population here it could wreak havoc among our people. We can’t allow that. Not now. All of you are targets... and there is little doubt that Daba and Lu’ria will also be targets. We need to act. I need... I need your permission to end them.”

“End them?” Nayeca asked.

Lynwe nodded. “I have a Brigade of Drow and Dragoons standing by right now.” She said. “With air support and indirect fire from two ships in orbit.” She looked at Aihola. “They are a threat to you... to Tarifa and Anuk and Nayeca. Countless others, including Lu’ria. And you know well what Androcles will do if harm comes to Lu’ria. What Martin will do if you or Tarifa are hurt? We need to act and act now to remove this cancer before it spreads.” Lynwe moved around the table to look down into the face of her dear friend. “I need you to authorize me to destroy them Aihola. Before they gain a foot hole within our people and begin to spread their poison. That could spell doom for all of us.”

“Lynwe...?” Aihola began.

“You are Queen of the Drow and you must give the order.” Lynwe said. “And you must give it today.”

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

ARC ROYAL

FIFTEEN HOURS POST ONTEROM

“...woke up about an hour ago.” Anja told Martin as they looked through the clear plexi window into one of three private rooms within the Medical Bay on the ROYAL. They could see Jacina and Aricia in the room with the second Pralor female Recia. “She kind of lost it for a moment, but thankfully Jacina was with us and was able to calm her quickly.”

Martin looked at her. “So she knows what happen to her?” He asked.

Duewa nodded as she stepped up on Martin's other side. "Yes." She answered. "She is a Botanical Biological Research Scientist who was concentrating on improving the growth and acclimation hormones of different plant sources to Onterom."

Martin shook his head. "Come again?"

Duewa chuckled. "An advanced plant doctor." She said as Anja laughed softly.

"Ah... ok." Martin said with a grin.

"Jacina was able to sooth her within Mindvoice." Anja said. "She did it without shielding and it was very impressive." Anja looked at him. "She's a Tier Six Marty."

Martin nodded his head as he looked at the woman lying in the bed. She looked worn and still somewhat pale and sick, but her long auburn red hair was healthy and given more time she would turn out to be a very beautiful woman just as Jacina had when she was fully recovered. "I'm guessing most Pralors will be Tier Six... they use Mindvoice even more than we do." He looked back to Anja. "She's fully clean?" He asked.

Anja nodded. "No trace of the Svorag virus left in her blood work." She replied. "We'll test her every other day just to make sure like we will with Jacina... but there's no reason to think it will come back."

Martin looked at her. "Red... could you have... would you have been able to...?"

"I really don't know Lover." Anja answered him softly knowing why he was asking the question. "It's possible... but there is no way to be sure if the serum we developed would work on a fully turned Svorag. And neither Duewa, Radra nor I have any desire to try and vaccinate a Svorag. If it fails and it gets loose on the ship... it could infect a quarter of the crew in hours. In days the entire ship would be infected. And given that we have discovered they probably keep at least a small portion of their memories and knowledge... it's too much of a risk. You want Svorag running around who know how to operate this ship?"

Martin nodded and looked back through the window. "No. I was just checking is all?" He said.

Anja took his arm in her hands and stepped closer to him looking up into his face. "You did the right thing Lover." She said gently. "Maybe in the future we'll discover it will work on fully turned Svorag and maybe we will design and implement a delivery system. Right now... we just don't know."

"I want a two member security detail on her twenty-four seven." Martin said finally. "At least for a few days and until we are sure that this virus thing is fully gone."

"Is she confined to Medical?" Duewa asked.

Martin shook his head. "No. Not at all. We haven't limited Jacina because you and Aricia are sure she is clean. This one... Recia right?"

Duewa nodded. "Yes."

"Recia is free to go wherever any other guest on this ship would be allowed to go. I don't want her to feel like she is a prisoner in any way." Martin said. "I just want someone with her all the time. For her safety as well as ours."

"I'll have Thoti assign someone to her." Duewa spoke.

Martin nodded his head. "Good enough for me." He said turning to look at Anja. "Now tell me about this information you have discovered."

Duewa touched his arm and nodded to Anja. "I will let her know and give her a final exam before we release her." She said. She and Anja had already been through the small bit of information that they had found and Anja would be able to explain it to Martin in a way he understood without all the medical terminology.

Anja motioned to him with her hand. "Follow me." She said moving for the main office that had been set up in the Medical Bay. The crew quickly determined that Duewa had become second only to Anja when it came to medical decisions on the ship and among their small fleet of two ships. To make this obvious to anyone who didn't know, they added a desk and high backed chairs to the office, giving Duewa her own set of Hadarian computer terminals to work with. Their desks were in the shape of a capital L, allowing them to exchange information and talk to one another easily enough. Anja led him into the office and moved behind her desk as he pulled a chair over. Anja slipped into the high backed chair and the small hover jets in the legs came alive as they sensed her weight. Anja Leonidas was known for darting back and forth in her chair when she was deeply involved in something on her computers and it was almost funny to watch as she scooted back and forth between terminals or the three consoles that surrounded her desk. "Duewa and I have only begun to scratch the surface of this information... that was an excellent idea by the way."

Martin grinned letting her sweet honey scent filter over him. "I do have my moments you know." He said.

Anja chuckled. "Occasionally... yes you do." She told him.

Martin smiled and shook his head at her playful jab. They had done this even before Anja finally became his wife and mate, though on a much lesser scale. It was their way of showing their deep affection for each other. It was also a source of constant humor for everyone around them as well since the only people with enough courage to speak to Martin without a trace of reverence for his position as King were his wives and mates and Danny. Martin also knew that if they argued, not only was it entertaining for those who witnessed it; it was also very fun to make up later in their bed. Hadarian she may have been, but growing up first around humans and then becoming his wife and mate had made Anja quite adventurous. She was a ball of fire in their bed when she was wound up. Anja looked at him and her jade green eyes narrowed at the look in his eyes as he gazed at her.

"Are you thinking what I think you're thinking?" She demanded.

Martin smiled. "Only pleasant thoughts." He told her.

"God Marty... you are such a perv!" Anja exclaimed with a large amount of humor and just a touch of lust in her voice.

Martin laughed. "Only for you and my ladies Red. Only for you and my ladies."

"I hope so!" Anja declared. "You are such an inventive pervert!"

Martin chuckled again and leaned forward closer to her. "What do you have Red?" He asked her finally getting back to their original topic.

Anja typed quickly on the control panel and then turned the left monitor to face Martin as he sat in the chair to the left side of her. "Lorendo... that fat little fuck... he wasn't erasing the computers cores as we first thought Marty. He was downloading them. Right where you wanted him too... along with the entire core of his P9." She looked at him. "How did you know?"

"A hint from something Avi said and my gut telling me that whatever was here they wouldn't just toss away." Martin answered.

"Beautiful call Lover." She told him. She turned back to the screen. "The source file encryption is pretty extensive but Avi was able to sift through the three layers and then crack it. He is opening the files as we go... but there are hundreds of folders and entries and he has to do each one individually."

Martin watched as the list of files scrolled past him on the screen. He wasn't as computer illiterate as most people thought and in fact had earned a degree in Advanced Programming from the Apo Prime University in secret. It was this knowledge and his continued association with Avi that allowed him to become quite the computer guru according to Tina and Endith. He reached up and touched the screen. "These files date back almost twenty-five thousand years Anja." He said looking at Anja. "Lorendo said they had been dealing with them for only twenty thousand years."

Anja nodded her head. "That's the first thing we noticed. We started with the oldest files first." She said. "Then there is this." She touched the panel and his screen changed to one of genetic code and different images of cells.

Martin leaned back. "Red... what am I looking at?"

Anja slid over next to him in her chair. "This... my handsome and ever so well equipped husband and mate..." She spoke leaning into his side with a smile. "This is the source genetic code for the Svorag virus."

Martin looked at her. "Wait... the source code? Like the original code for a computer software program?"

Anja nodded. "Works in pretty much the same way yes." She answered. "It's the original genetic code for the virus. The genetic source that every mutation has derived from. This virus has mutated a total of four times if what I'm looking at is accurate based on the type I found in Jacina and Recia. I could go into much greater detail but I know you hate that... so the bottom line is this. Lorendo made this virus."

Martin's head snapped around. "Say what?" He almost shouted.

Anja nodded her head. "Oh yeah. Every mutation we have seen in these files so far has been tested against the original strand Marty. The only way to have the original strand is if you made it or you found it. And testing each mutation against the original strand of the virus is sincerely damning proof."

"He couldn't have found it?" Martin asked her. "How do you find something like this?"

“No... he didn't find it. Not that little power mad bastard. No... he made this.” She snarled. Anja leaned over and tapped her control panel twice more causing the image on the monitor to change in front of them. This time it showed some sort of written material. Short blurbs in what appeared to be a log of some sort. Martin's eyes grew wider as he read. “Read this.”

“Nubou lae!” Martin hissed.

Anja nodded. “Yeah... that's what I said too.” Anja told him.

Martin turned to her. “You think Delnash...”

Anja shook her head immediately. “No. There's no way he could have known any of this and acted as he did. He was adamant several times that he did not authorize Lorendo to use the type of force that he did against us on Onterom. He wouldn't have let his children come with us Marty and he just isn't that good of an actor. And you know I'm pretty good at reading people. No... this is all Lorendo's baby Martin. Besides... For'mya would have sensed something off about him right away.”

“You had her...?” Martin asked.

Anja smiled shyly. “Well...”

“Red... we don't do that.” Martin said. “You know that.”

Anja nodded. “Yes I do. I also know that these are Pralors and more than likely they have played a role in all of our species' advancement Martin. At least in some shape or form. The proof is popping up all around us as we go. And the arrogance in many of them just flat out pisses me off. For'mya didn't press very hard and she only sifted through his surface thoughts. She was partly empathic before you bit her you big lug. You were just too busy looking at her ass to notice.”

Martin grinned. “Well... you have to admit... it is a nice ass.”

Anja smiled brilliantly. “I know.”

“So he didn't detect it?” Martin asked surprised.

Anja snorted in disgust. “Please... with the ego trip these people are on he probably thought it was a headache. I don't think they realize just how powerful we are. Especially you for that matter. And For'mya has gotten every good at detecting things like this without anyone knowing. She is very subtle.”

“Man... you are devious!” He announced.

Anja laughed. “That's why you love me so much.” She said cheerfully.

Martin smiled at her and leaned over quickly to silence her laughter with a kiss. Anja gasped and returned the kiss as he pulsed her with his aura and sent shivers of delight through her body. “Yes... I do.” He said finally as he pulled away.

Anja looked at him dreamily and took his arm in her hands. “What do we do now?” She asked keeping her mind focused. He could so easily distract her.

“Keep digging.” Martin said. “Pull some people you trust to help you and Duewa. No more than three or four and make sure you swear them to secrecy.”

Anja nodded. “Ok. What are you going to do?”

“Talk to Murano.” Martin answered. “I have some questions for him and Delnash's daughter Kesyla.”

“What questions?” Anja asked.

Martin looked at her intently. “I want to know where the Lycavorian planets in this system are. And I want to know why the Pralors stopped monitoring their progress.”

Anja's eyes grew wider. “Martin you don't think...”

“I don't know.” Martin said. “I hope not... but now that you have shown me this and after what I have seen of them on Onterom... I have a very large empty spot in my gut forming and I don't like it.”

“Marty... this is only the tip of the ice burg. Something tells me this Lorendo is involved in some really nasty sibfla.” Anja said. “But aside from this we don't have answers to the rest of the questions we have about this. Why? How? When?”

Martin looked at her. “Then find them Red.” He spoke firmly. “You are the only one who can.”

Anja nodded her head. “Ok.” She said softly. “I will. But we may not like what we find Martin.”

Martin nodded his head. “I have no doubts we won't like what we find.” He answered. “But we need to be sure before I see that bastard again and dismember him with my bare hands for what he has done.”

Anja nodded. “That would be fitting.” She said in agreement.

“Keep this under wraps Anja.” Martin said. “Outside of those you pick make sure no one else knows. If what I think has happened has indeed happened, we won’t be able to hold our people back. And I wouldn’t want to try.”

“I know Lover.” She said softly. “I’ll be careful.”

Martin nodded and rose to his feet. “I’m going to go see Murano.” He spoke evenly. “I need some answers and only he will give them to me.”

“You trust him that much Marty?” Anja asked.

“He’s a Praetorian.” Martin said. “I can feel the connection he has with me. With Andro. With us. The Praetorians... they were all connected in some odd way. Yes... I can trust him.” He answered. “I have to.”

“Martin... be careful. I can’t say this enough... but based on what I’ve seen so far, this Lorendo asshole has his fingers in all kinds of dirt.” Anja said. “There’s no telling what he has been involved in or with. And he has gotten away with it because there have been no checks on his work. The Pralors... their government has no oversight. They trust him completely to be working for their benefit and this proves he is not. At least not entirely.”

Martin nodded. “Yeah... you noticed that too huh?”

“We all did.” Anja said.

“Nothing gets passed you guys.” Martin said with a smile.

Anja laughed at him. “We aren’t men.” She stated. “We aren’t distracted by all the tits and ass. We have the tits and asses.”

“Hey... I’m not distracted by the tits and ass!” Martin quipped.

Anja canted her head slightly and looked at him. “So you are telling me if I stripped out of my uniform right now... you wouldn’t jump my bones?” She stated. “Not that I don’t love when you jump my bones mind you.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed. “That’s not fair.” He stated.

Anja chuckled. “You know what I mean Lover.” She said. “Go on... get out of here and let me get back to work.”

“Let me know if you discover anything important.” Martin said.

Anja nodded her head as she turned back to her computers. “I will.”

Martin turned and headed out of the Medical Bay his thoughts already shifting to his talk with Murano. He lifted his hand and tapped his jaw activating his COM implant. “Avi?”

-Martin-

“Avi... did you by chance access the history data files aboard SPARTA’S WRATH when you were onboard?” Martin asked.

-You would not inquire if you did not already know the answer King Martin- Avi told him with what Martin swore was a humorous tone.

“Join me in the secure port lounge on deck eleven Avi.” Martin said. “And have Wayonn, Murano, Danny and Helen join us. As well as Delnash’s daughter Kesyla.”

-Understood- Avi answered.

Martin turned the corner into the main corridor and made his way towards the elevator lift. He needed answers and he intended to get them.

KALIS’S LEUGERS FLIGHT

“...four planets within this system that can sustain life.” Corsa spoke softly as she pointed to different locations on the star chart. “We are too far at the moment to scan any of them more intensely, but they are as good a location as not.”

They had conducted their last jump more than ten hours ago and once arriving in this sector of space they had docked together once more to balance the passengers of the two ships more. Koguth, Corsa, Mani and Nedoli stood around the star chart, Ceale beside Nedoli and Mataen standing beside Corsa.

“We do not know if that is what Kalis intends.” Mataen spoke. “Landing on one of these planets is a risky proposition at best father.”

Corsa nodded her head agreeing with her husband. “I too think it is a risk we should not take.” She stated. “If the Marshal’s forces somehow find us... they could easily destroy our ships from orbit and we could very well die on any of these planets.”

“We should not question his motives or his plans.” The voice spoke and they all turned as Mata moved up to the table.

“We are not questioning him.” Mataen spoke.

“Aren’t you?” Mata asked with no hostility in his voice. “You have questioned whether this was such a good idea the moment you discovered I came with him.” Mata moved fully up to the table beside Koguth. “I am Puma Bane yes.” He told them. “However... I am not like the rest of them you know so well.”

“So you say.” Corsa hissed softly.

“Corsa!” Mani gasped.

“No... it is her right to disbelieve me.” Mata spoke quickly. “And I understand why... I do. All I ask is that you do not question Kalis or his motives. He has lived in the shadow of his father, in fear of him for so long. Now that he has finally discovered who he is at his core, he has been more decisive and confident. More in control than I have ever seen him.”

Ceale glanced over to where Kalis was stretched out on the ridiculously uncomfortable web bench along the bulkhead of the ship. His head was resting on a pack of some sort and his arms were tightly wrapped around the lithe form of her daughter in quite the protective manner. Serale was stretched out on his body, very intimately in several places, her head resting on his chest as she slept soundly. They had been that way for nearly seven hours now, neither of them moving more than a few inches in any way. This was not some sort of fling on her daughter’s part or Kalis’s for that matter Ceale was quickly discovering. Serale had told her everything that happened between them, even the part of Kalis refusing when Serale practically begged him to take her on that ship, completely naked in his arms. Ceale’s gut had twisted up when she had seen the first few displays of affection between them, but it had lessened with each one when she thought back to what Serale had told her. Ceale was beginning to see that her daughter’s feelings were sincerely genuine and came from her heart and if what she knew of Lycavorians was any measure, Kalis’s reaction to her was just as genuine. Ceale knew enough Lycavorians to know that what she saw between Kalis and Serale, the way he looked at her, the way he was so protective of her, this was how true Lycavorians viewed their females.

Ceale turned quickly and let her eyes settle on Nedoli. She had been fighting the growing feelings she had for the tall and imposing Kavalian, but it was a losing battle she knew. His treatment of her was beyond reproach and completely heartfelt. He doted over her like she was some sort of royal figure and Ceale could not believe he would find her even remotely desirable after all she had endured. Ceale discovered quickly that was not the case at all and no matter how much she tried to persuade herself otherwise, her feelings for him were growing more powerful by the hour. She found his features incredibly handsome, even covered in the soft light brown fur. Pusintin had forced her to perform oral sexual acts with several of his Kavalian officers and Ceale could not help but wonder if he was as large as they were. His entire manner was completely opposite of those men and his affection for her was becoming more and more open as the hours went by. It was an affection that Ceale was rapidly beginning to return for it made her feel like a woman again. Whole and unblemished.

“We should wake him and find out what he intends.” Corsa spoke now. “We have been stationary for too long as it is.”

Mata shook his head. “No.” He stated. “He has been running on pure adrenalin since he embraced what he wanted after Enurrua. Protecting himself and Lady Ceale’s children in the heart of the devil’s realm when the slightest mistake would mean his death as well as theirs takes much determination and planning. He needed this rest. I have seen it within him these last weeks... none of you have.”

Koguth nodded his head. "Mata is right." He spoke. "We have lived with this, the knowledge that what we feel and believe could be our end all of our lives... this is new to Kalis. Hopefully in a short while it will all change for the better."

Mata looked at all of them. "As for me General Koguth... if it makes all of you more comfortable I will surrender my weapons to you. You can assign someone to guard me if you wish... I don't care. What I have done is my decision... and that decision was to follow Kalis and return the purpose to my life that it once had. I have trained that boy since he was an infant and I would follow him wherever he goes without question. Believe that if you will... but it is the truth."

Mani looked at him and slowly reached up to place a hand on his cheek. "You... you carry much weight upon your shoulders Mata." She said softly. "Much pain."

Mata looked at her and nodded. "I do." He said. "But I have chosen not to let it destroy me as it has so many others. Following Kalis is only the first step. Getting the information that we have found on this ship to General Pian is the next step and then fighting to free my people from their oppression is the last. Whatever happens in between I will take with the newness of a rebirth I never thought I would be allowed."

Mani smiled. "Indeed." She said. "I think we are all at that point in our lives now." She told him.

Koguth looked at the star chart. "Let us chart different courses to these planets so that we are prepared in case it is Kalis's plan to go to one of them. We..."

His words ended when the red flashing lights began to blink on and off and an alarm of some sort began to sound throughout the transport. "What..." Koguth began to speak as he turned toward where he knew Kalis and Serale were sleeping. He needn't have bothered for just as his eyes settled on Kalis, he saw both him and Ceale's young daughter spring up as if shot from a cannon. Both of them were instantly awake and moving for the cockpit before he could even utter a word.

"What is it?" He snapped turning back to Corsa.

"Proximity alarm!" Corsa answered as her hands flew over the star chart in front of them and Kalis and Serale disappeared into the cockpit. "Someone just hit us with an active sensor scan!"

"A ship?" Nedoli hissed.

"I don't know!" Corsa exclaimed. "Nothing is showing on the sensors!"

Koguth began marching for the cockpit without a second's hesitation. "That does not mean something is not there!" He barked.

OMEN THREE

Yuriko Leonidas sat calmly in her command chair on the bridge of OMEN THREE, Filrian standing beside the arm of her chair as they watched the monitor to their right front. They could see the two LEUGERS easily, the two transports docked together as they were. It had taken seven hours to find the two ships, and then only after they had finished their last jump. Once they had located them it had taken OMEN THREE only one jump to reach them with their advanced engines. The Kavalian fleet was in disarray at the moment and Yuriko felt confident they wouldn't be able to respond to her cousin leaving the Task Force for at least ten more hours. It was more than enough time to make contact with Kalis and get him and his supporters further away from Pusintin and his madness.

"Still no contacts?" Yuriko called out.

"Board is clean." The sensor operator responded. "LSD Drives on both targets are powered down to recalibrating mode. No signs of any weapons. Sensors confirm ninety-two lifesigns. Eighty-eight Kavalian, one Lycavorian and Kavalian combo and three Hadarian."

Yuriko leaned forward in her chair. "Hadarian?" She asked looking at her husband of over a decade now. "Did you hear of any Hadarians being lost before we left husband?" She asked.

Filrian shook his head. "Not within Union controlled territory." He replied. "There are a number of Hadarian operated clinics within The Wilds however."

Yuriko looked at the screen and the two ships on it. "Interesting." She said softly. "I don't believe I've ever heard of Hadarians willing traveling with Kavalians. If the reports from Enurrua are accurate though, father laid a beating on Pusintin something fierce. Maybe he needed Hadarian medical treatment."

Filrian leaned close to her. "Given your father's reputation Yuriko... whatever the reports say... I would double their assessment. Your father is not the most forgiving of fighters and the reports say he nearly killed him. And your father did give you his authorization code Yuriko." He said.

Yuriko nodded. "I know. He does have a temper doesn't he? Especially when it concerns my mothers." She said. "The Kavalians having Hadarians onboard changes things somewhat. It could show they aren't really allies."

Filrian looked at her. "I think it leans more to the explanation that they are allies." He said. "They can't possibly think we would allow them to keep prisoners. Kalis would know this if he has changed as your father and even you believe. Why have them if that is the case?"

"Leverage." Yuriko answered.

Filrian thought about that for a second. "Possible." He said. "I don't think so... but very possible. Only one way to find out."

Yuriko looked at him with a smile. "Yes... there is." She said. She reached behind her back and pulled out her P1 from the small pouch she wore it in. She brought it up and plugged it into the arm of the chair. "COM officer... prepare to send this command on the frequency specified. Tactical Officer... hit them with an active scan. Give them a two second pulse just to let them know someone is out here. Let's see what they do."

KALIS'S LEUGERS

"Serale?" Kalis gasped as Koguth and the others piled into the cockpit behind them.

Serale shook her head quickly. "Nothing!" She exclaimed. "Sensors are clean!"

Kalis looked up slowly from the sensor screen between them and nodded his head as he gazed out into the stars in front of their ship. "Yes... it is clean. It is clean because we can't see them. Not even a flicker on the sensors. Not a whisper."

Serale looked at him detecting the change in the tone of his voice. "What do you mean?" She asked. "Kalis?"

"There have been rumors for years among the Kavalian High Command that my Uncle has such ships." Kalis spoke softly. "Ships that you cannot see on sensors or visual sweep Serale my love. Super secret Intelligence platforms. Designed to infiltrate an enemies main defenses and send back information to the Union Command."

Nedoli and Corsa looked at him as he spoke. "Kalis those ships... they are only rumors." Nedoli said. "We have never been able to confirm they exist. The technology needed to build such things is..."

Kalis turned and looked at him. "After what you have seen and heard Nedoli Juturi... do you honestly believe my Uncle does not possess this technology? They have had that unique ship that so many say is a myth for over two decades."

"Kalis is right Nedoli." Corsa spoke softly looking at him. "It's the only thing that makes sense."

"What are all of you talking about?" Koguth demanded.

Nedoli looked at his father. "The Lycavorian Ghost ship father." He stated confidently. "They are said to be the most advanced warships in existence right now. Used primarily as intelligence platforms. Completely invisible to known sensors and even the naked eye. It is said they are able to bend light somehow around the ships. Kavalian Intelligence has never been able to actually confirm they exist though. No one has. But there are many rumors out there that say otherwise."

"He's had one shadowing my father's fleet ever since we left the Alpha Quadrant." Kalis said softly. Kalis turned and looked at Koguth. "It has to be. It is the reason why we have never been closer than two days from them General. Why he always seems two or three steps ahead of us. This ship has been following us and sending him all our information and he simply adjusts his course to compensate. He's luring my father further and further away. He... he knows where he is going General and my father is following the bait like some unschooled pup fresh from his mother's womb. And when my uncle determines he has him far enough away..."

Serale looked at him. "What?"

Kalis looked at her. "He will turn around Serale. He will turn around and strike my father so hard and so savagely that he will never recover. He will have his vengeance for my father's actions. And he will kill him this time."

"Couldn't happen to a nicer person!" Ceale spat.

Kalis looked at her and nodded his head in agreement. A simple act really... but one that made his status in Ceale's eyes suddenly rocket upwards. "I agree completely Lady Ceale." He said softly.

"What is he looking for out here?" Corsa asked of no one in particular. "We have never even sent probes out this far. No one has ever been out here but he follows a course and seems to know where he is going."

"Whatever it is... it can't be good for us." Nedoli spoke.

"He will not harm those who do not harm him first." Kalis spoke. "We must remember that as we move forward."

Koguth shook his head slowly. "And these are the people Keleru and your father would have us go to war with?" He said.

"That war started the moment my father laid hands on For'mya and violated her in such a way General." Kalis spoke with contempt in his voice as he turned his eyes back to the view window. "Until then... until then it all could have been avoided. Once my father crossed that line... once he assaulted her dignity and honor in such a way... it all became mute."

Koguth nodded. "Indeed." He said gently. He looked out the view window. "Is there a way to contact them? Show them we are not the enemy?"

Kalis shook his head as he looked out the view window. "Even if there was they would never acknowledge it. We..." The mad chirping alarm nearly caused Kalis to leap out of his seat as he grabbed for his lower back to the surprised looks of everyone in the cockpit. His hands closed around the P1 he carried there and he brought it around in front of him with wide eyes. The P1 was the cause of the quiet alarm, the small screen blinking on and off as he held it in his hand. His head turned and Ceale noticed how they settled on Serale. "Serale?" He gasped. "It's... it's a COM link! An active COM Link!"

Ceale's daughter reached across and touched his forearm as she spoke with a smile. "This is... it is what you have waited for Kalis."

"And been too cowardly to do!" Kalis hissed angrily at himself.

"That doesn't matter now." Serale told him. "Answer it Kalis my love."

Kalis looked back to the pad and lifted his hand. It hovered over the small control panel for a long moment before he finally brought his index finger down on the button and activated the COM link. "Yes..." He spoke hesitantly.

"To whom am I speaking?" The female voice asked ringing out with confidence and strength.

"This is... I am Kalis." He answered while looking at the small screen.

"So... it is you cousin." The female voice spoke. "This information is going to make father very happy."

Kalis's eyes narrowed. "Cousin?" He asked.

"I am Star Captain Yuriko Leonidas." The voice said with no small modicum of pride. "Martin Leonidas adopted me many years ago and I have carried my name proudly ever since that day. You have brought others with you I see."

Kalis turned quickly and looked at Koguth. He said nothing and turned back to the P1 in his hand. "How do you..." Kalis shook his head. "I travel with General Koguth'Juturi and many of his Pride members. They have left my father and the Kavalians behind just as I have."

"And the three Hadarians with you?" Yuriko asked. "Prisoners?"

"What? How do you...? No!" Kalis hissed loudly. "I mean they were... but no longer. Why do you think they are with us?"

"I hope so." Yuriko said. "Are your ships damaged?"

"No." Kalis answered. "However... the rapid jumps to escape my father have taxed our LSD cores to the limit. They will need time to recalibrate and recharge."

“Understood.” Yuriko’s voice answered. “There is a Class M moon half a light year from your current location. Proceed there at sublight speed and land at the following coordinates.”

Kalis watched a set of numbers flash across the small screen. “I have them.” He spoke.

“The coordinates are to a clearing near a set of natural caves where we have established a forward listening post. You will find supplies and clothes and other needs.” Yuriko told him. “We will meet you there in six hours.”

“Will you not reveal yourself?” Koguth spoke now leaning forward to look out the view window.

“I have revealed myself.” Yuriko answered. “This is sufficient until we meet face to face.”

“Wait! My daughter...” Koguth asked quickly leaning forward. “Iama’Juturi. We have... we have reason to believe she may be among those with your father. We...”

“She is.” Yuriko answered.

Mani moved up next to Koguth now her eyes moist as she gripped Koguth’s arm. “Is she... is she well?” She stammered.

“Very much so.” Yuriko replied. “She has become a vital member of my father’s crew with her skills. And she has even found a husband and mate I understand from my mother’s last transmission. She is bubbling with happiness according to my mother.”

Mani gasped as tears burst fully from her eyes, her hands going to cover her mouth in shock at this news. “Husband?” She exclaimed softly.

Koguth’s face became a little harder and he looked at the P1. “Husband? Who is this husband?” He demanded. “A Lycavorian?”

“I’m sure you will discover everything soon.” Yuriko answered. “Please proceed to the coordinates I gave to you. I will contact my father and let him know what has transpired here. He will decide what to do from there. OMEN THREE out!”

The transmission was terminated from the source before they could say anything else and Kalis lowered the P1. He glanced quickly to Serale. “Do you have this moon on our sensors Serale?”

Serale adjusted the sensor board between them and ran her finger across the screen. “Yes.” She answered. “Point six Light Years away. Two hours without using the main engines to ease the stress on the LSD coils.”

“Plot the course.” Kalis said quickly. “General... you and Nedoli should return to your LEUGERS so we can unseal the dock and make our way there.”

Koguth nodded his head still trying to wrap his mind around the fact that his youngest child was alive and well and so very close. He gripped Mani’s hand and nodded again. “Yes.” He said. “Nedoli. Corsa.”

Nedoli nodded and began to turn to follow Corsa who was already walking out. Ceale stopped him by grabbing his thickly muscled arm. “Nedoli?” She whispered looking up at him and not caring that everyone’s attention turned to her.

Nedoli met her gaze and smiled as he reached out tentatively and placed his hands on her waist. Ceale didn’t pull away from him now and even gripped his arms tighter as she stared up at him. “Stay with your children Ceale.” He spoke with a smile. “I will see you in a few hours.”

Ceale didn’t release his arms and instead reached up and placed her palms flat against his lightly furred cheeks. She used her thumbs to stroke the soft fur on his cheeks. “Come... come back to me.” She whispered to him.

Nedoli’s dark eyes grew bright at her words and he eased her closer to him... tentatively pulling her against his body. Ceale didn’t shy away and she felt his hard body press against her front and small shivers of delight coursed through her at the sensations. Sensations she never thought she would feel again after what she had endured at Pusintin’s hands, and certainly an excitement she never experienced with her husband. Nedoli lowered his forehead to hers and gently squeezed her waist. “I will always come back to you Ceale.” He spoke softly. “Always.”

Serale was watching intently and she blinked away the tears in her eyes when she saw her mother’s face brighten and Nedoli lean over to kiss her ever so softly on the lips. It was a kiss that her mother accepted and returned with the passion it was given. A gentle and warm kiss that spoke of intense feeling and devotion. Much the same as when Kalis kissed her. Serale knew then that her mother would heal. The towering Kavalian in front of her would help her to heal and perhaps give her something their father never did. Nedoli let his large hand caress Ceale's cheek before he followed Corsa out of the cockpit. Koguth motioned to the two extra chairs behind Kalis and Serale.

"We will remain with you Kalis." He spoke. "If that is alright."

Kalis nodded. "Of course." He stated. He touched the COM panel. "Mata?"

"I'm securing the hatch and seal now." Mata's voice answered.

"Mata we..." Kalis began.

"Hah!" Mata exclaimed. "Have no fears Kalis my boy... I intend to live for many more years to come. I will leave my weapons on the ship. I have no desire to be shot by the very people I wish to join because my past clings to me still."

Kalis nodded and glanced at Koguth. "Thank you Mata."

"Hatch is sealed." Mata said. "Let's get moving."

Koguth smiled slightly. "He marches into the unknown with no fear." He said. "Just as we do. I'm beginning to like him and I never thought I would say that about a Puma Bane."

Kalis nodded in agreement. "Yes sir." He smiled at Ceale who was watching him intently from the chair next to Mani and then turned back to the front. "Serale... spool up the sub-light engines. Let's take that first step into our future boldly."

Serale nodded her head. "A future I can't wait to start." She said looking at him with adoration in her green eyes.

It was a look that Ceale saw instantly and try as she might she could not feel anything but happiness for her daughter. Happiness that they were free of Pusintin and his vileness. Free of her deceitful and ignorant husband who cared nothing for them. Free to finally live their lives how they wanted too. Ceale would never imagined that events would happen as they had, her daughter falling in love with the son of their captor. Her powerful and growing feelings for Nedoli and his gentle touch and words.

Future. A word her daughter had used several times now. Ceale nodded her head to herself. Yes... a future. A future where they all could find what they so wanted to find. And Ceale suddenly knew that future for her would be with Nedoli. And as she thought about it, that prospect did not cause her fear in any way. It made her relish in what she could have. Would have very soon.

"Nor I." Kalis said. "Nor I."

SCIMITAR

ENROUTE BACK TO EARTH

"...speak to him soon Tenna Deia." Andro spoke as he sat on the large couch in his quarters. He wore only his white pants and no shirt. All that adorned his upper body was the glittering fragment of the Dragon Heart pendant he never removed. "I would imagine things are very interesting where he is and that is why he has not contacted me."

"You don't think..." Deia's face asked as she moved around her desk in the transmission and held the mug of tea.

Andro shook his head quickly. "No. There was a brief moment... a faint spike of intense anger... but nothing like that since. He is most powerful with my mothers around him, you know this, and I would be able to detect if something terrible was amiss."

"You can... you can really sense him even across so vast a distance?" Deia asked.

Andro nodded his head. "I haven't asked Val'istar Shiria yet but I believe it is because of this Paladin gene that we all carry. I can sense him, Denali, Jomann and even Dorian now. I have been... I have been getting flashes from Deion as well Tenna. I think he might carry the gene too."

"Deion?" Deia asked. "He is within his Agoge now. As is Nara. From what I understand they are not being particularly easy on either of them."

Andro nodded. "Good. It is the only way to learn." Andro looked at her in the secure QCR transmission. "Father will contact me soon. When he has decided what course of action he is going to take."

Deia nodded. "Very well. Arrarn, Narice and Toria arrived this morning with Cha'talla and Admiral Pontal. Several of the Ventash'ma also came with them. Pian and Jalersi are due in later this evening with a dozen of the senior Kavalian Pride Leaders. The rest will arrive over the next two days. They are using Isra as their conduit out of Kavalian space so he can control their movements."

Andro looked at her. "Uncle Isra suspects something?" He asked.

"He did not rise from Chetak's son to the position and trust he now holds because he is not cautious." Deia said.

"True enough." Andro said.

"Lady Aleatia and her son arrived yesterday." Deia said. "I must say she is extremely pleasant and full of life. Gorgo has taken it upon herself to show her Sparta and fill her with our history. It seems she feels this is her duty since you took her daughter as your wife and mate and no one else from our family is here to greet her."

Andro grinned. "Sorry about that." He said sheepishly.

"I hope you are quite done." Deia asked him with a smile. "The Netnews is going crazy because now they won't be able to keep up with you and your father."

"The Netnews couldn't keep up when I was single." Andro stated.

Deia laughed at his words. "Yes... well... the comparisons to your father are nearly out of control now. One of the more senior Netnews people even went so far as to say that while you both truly love your wives and mates, you and your father are going to insure that the name Leonidas lives on for millennia to come. That there will always be a Leonidas on the throne. That is attested to by the fact that you and your siblings are so many."

Andro chuckled softly. "Father would say the size of our family is no one's business and that he loves children. I know my mothers would say that."

Deia matched his laugh. "Indeed they would." She said.

Andro looked at her. "Anything from Icho?"

Deia turned serious and shook her head. "He's maintaining a very low profile lately. You certainly made him look somewhat the fool when you commandeered his Netnews briefing. Or perhaps he is just waiting for Ulana to return so that he may pump her for information about your actions on Solmar. That was a big risk you took with the Kavalians Androcles."

"But one that needed to be made." Andro said nodding his head. "And it openly shows that Keleru is not as powerful as he likes people to believe. Has his accusations against Sadi gained anymore traction?"

Deia shook her head quickly. "That died very quickly after the interview you gave. Some of the braver Netnews people came to Sparta and began asking questions about her they had no right to ask, but you know how our people from Sparta view Sadi. How they are coming to view Ne'Veha and Lu'ria and the others. They were quickly shown the way to the city gates."

Andro nodded. "Good. I have some ideas I would like to run past you and Tenna Tarifa when I return. Perhaps we could set up a quiet hour or two for that?"

Deia nodded. "She is in Eden City now dealing with an issue concerning the Drow but I will let her know."

"The Drow?" The female voice asked from the side and Androcles turned to see Lu'ria standing in the doorway to the bedroom. He could see Sehri sitting on the bed with Carisia brushing out her long hair as she read from a data pad. Sadi and Ne'Veha were lying to the side going over reports they had received from Ben at Dreamland. Andro didn't question them about this for he knew they would tell him when they felt whatever they were working on was ready. Lu'ria wore only a white lace pair of panties and bra which contrasted incredibly with her dark skin color and shimmering white hair. The thin robe was made from the same material as Sadi's but she preferred the crimson color to any other. Her amber colored eyes focused on Deia in the transmission as Andro held out his hand for her and she took it without hesitation. He pulled her onto the couch next to him and she curled her long legs under her firm ass as she scooted close to his warm body. "What about the Drow Deia?" Lu'ria asked once she was settled.

Deia had long ago threatened her with dire consequences if she was to use her official title when speaking with her. Deia's words were quite to the point.

“You are a Crown Princess of the Union and a Leonidas now as well as my Mandri’s Blessed Drow wife and mate. He adores and worships you just as he does Sadi and the others.” Deia had told her. “You will not refer to me except by my name and I don’t care who knows it.”

“I don’t know all the details Lu’ria... Tarifa was going to fill me in when she returned this evening.” Deia told her. “It has something to do with the few dozen Drow who left the city they occupied when Aihola first reformed the Drow as one entity. Just after Eden City was formed. All I know was that they were meeting about it and then there was a period of several hours where the EDF chatter on the planetwide Net increased. I think Lynwe and Tareif then conducted some sort of operation with local forces. No doubt Charles will inform me when all the information is in, but you know we do not interfere with the internal politics of individual planets. Especially here on Earth because of the diversity of the species and most especially not the Drow. They are too close to Andro’s father and now him. Besides... Charles, Selene and Tarifa have got that running so smoothly they don’t need my help. You will probably find out the same time I do.”

Andro glanced at Lu’ria for a moment and then back to Deia. “Make an inquiry on our part regardless Tenna Deia.”

Deia nodded. “As you wish.” She looked at him. “How long before you return?”

“Twelve hours roughly.” Andro answered.

“I will see you when you arrive then. Contact me if your father transmits to you.” Deia said.

Andro nodded. “I will.” He told her. “We’ll see you in a few hours.”

“Very well. Go with the gods my boy.” Deia said as she reached out and ended their transmission.

Andro looked at Lu’ria as the figure of his Aunt faded. “What are you thinking Lu’ria?”

She focused her amber eyes on him. “I know enough political code words to know that Internal Politics means trouble Andro.” She spoke softly. “And not minor either. Then the EDF running some sort of operation and not telling anyone? General Lynwe does not get involved in that sort of thing unless it’s important.”

“Do not try and read more into it than we know ArzurGai.” He told her softly. “We’ll find out in due time.”

Lu’ria looked at his azure eyes when he said that and she felt warmth spread through her. ArzurGai... or Drow Heart in the Lycavorian language. He had started calling her that a few weeks ago out of the blue and the name had taken off with all of them really. It made Lu’ria flush when any of them spoke it, for it was what they used to show her how much they loved her. Just as they called Ne’Veha SirsanGai and Carisia Enylarcopri. It was Andro’s little way of showing each of them just how dear they were to him.

Lu’ria reached up and ran her fingers along his jaw and smiled. “I know... I just...”

Andro leaned over and nuzzled the hollow of her throat and the deep valley between her large breasts causing her to gasp softly and reach up to hold his head in her hands with a smile. “What?” He asked her softly. “Talk to me.”

“I want to do more.” Lu’ria said softly. “I feel... I feel I should do more to help the Queen and my mother when it comes to governing our people.”

“Then do so.” Andro spoke.

“What... what do you mean?” Lu’ria asked.

Andro looked at her bright amber eyes. “The Drow are your people too ArzurGai. There is no reason you can not help Tenna Aihola with governing them. Just because you are my wife and mate and a Crown Princess of the Union does not mean you can not have a life outside of traveling wherever I go.”

“This... this would not make you angry?” Lu’ria asked softly.

“Gods Lu’ria... why would it make me angry?” Andro asked. “Ne’Veha is speaking with the First Minister on a regular basis now, learning the intricacies of elven politics as she calls it. Narice has kept Enylarcopri in the loop on everything she is doing. You may be wolf now and a Crown Princess... but that does not mean you need to change your life for what you think I may want you to do Lu’ria. That would be wrong on my part and I won’t do it. To any of you.”

“Do you know how the Drow view you Andro?” Lu’ria asked. “View your father?”

Andro met her eyes. “I probably won’t like what you tell me... so no.” He replied. “My father and I... we are not gods ArzurGai. We are men and we have our faults.” Andro chuckled. “I have quite a few of them actually.”

“You know what I mean.” Lu'ria spoke. “First your father... now you. You trust us without question. Without hesitation.”

“Well... I think the credit for that goes more to my father and Aihola.” Andro said. “They worked long and hard for that. Walter did make the Drow to be most like Spartans in the very beginning. It is no wonder we see things the same.”

“You... you took me as your wife and mate Andro.” Lu'ria said.

Andro looked at her. “I took you as my wife and mate because you smell delicious, you are exquisitely beautiful and we were meant to be together by a power much higher than my pay grade. There was no political purpose to my actions Lu'ria. All of your scents are divine to me. You make me part of who I am. All of you do.”

“Will Sehri become like us?” Lu'ria asked him. “She has questioned us about it and she has an appointment with Eliani tomorrow for an exam.”

Andro tossed the data pad he was holding to the side and grabbed Lu'ria's waist, pulling her into his lap. He reached up and brushed some of her shimmering white hair from her face and then ran his finger over her soft violet lips. “I know and I am going with her.” Andro said. “And to answer your question... I don't know. It doesn't matter though. It will not change the way I feel about her. About any of you.”

Lu'ria smiled seductively and shifted her hips on his lap, only the fabric of her panties and his pants separating her increasingly hot center from the bulge of his thickening manhood. She pulsed him with just a fraction of the female aura that she now possessed and Sadi had been teaching her and Ne'Veha to use so well. They would never be as powerful as Sadi because she was a pureblood, but it was indeed enough to incite Androcles. Her action drew a smile and instant reaction from him as his breathing became a little shallower and the swell of his cock between her thighs began to thicken faster. He had been the first man to ever have her and he would be the only man to discover the secrets and treasures her body possessed Lu'ria knew without question. No one would be able to compare to him now. His size alone caused her to become moist for she would never have believed she could take his all of his length and girth within her. She managed it quite well now, the velvet connection when they were joined enough to drive her crazy for more. When combined with his devastating aura and the fact that his kisses could steal her breath away and his hands were never idle, Lu'ria was convinced no man would ever make her feel as he did. She also knew that all of them felt the same way.

Lu'ria glanced into the bedroom area and saw that Sadi and Ne'Veha had tossed aside their work, their scents telling her just how aroused and ready they were. Her slave Carisia was also ready, Lu'ria able to detect her delightful rose blossom scent. As she inhaled deeper she could easily make out sugar plums and spice, amaretto, and apples and walnuts wafting through the air of their quarters now. It was growing thicker and more aroused as they sensed what she was doing and knowing that their Drow mistress would willingly share. Lu'ria smiled and turned back to Andro, running her hands across his broad chest and leaning over to drag her pink tongue languorously over the skin of his neck until she felt him shiver when she tickled his ear.

“Then perhaps Androcles Leonidas... you should show your wives and mates how you feel about us before we return to Earth.” Lu'ria whispered in his ear, her lips just brushing his skin.

Lu'ria yelped softly as his hands gripped her firm ass and he was suddenly standing up in the main room. She quickly wrapped her long legs around his waist and laughed as she felt his aura expand outward to encompass all of them and her body ignited in intense desire and want as it always did when he pulsed them. She glanced quickly back in to the bedroom and saw that his aura had the same effect on all of them, Sadi even more than the rest of them as she had already grabbed Carisia and was locked in a sizzling kiss as they rolled to the side of the bed frantically pulling at their undergarments. She turned back to Andro and saw his azure eyes nearly glowing in his own animalistic want. She smiled to herself knowing he was going to make all of them very happy this night. He began moving into the bedroom and into the open arms of Ne'Veha and Sehri and just before he tore her panties off with a growl of ardor, Lu'ria thought of Caliria and how much they all missed her. She would be back among them soon and Lu'ria knew more times like this would happen. Her Alkay could make all of them last so much longer and extend their desire and pleasure for each other. Lu'ria knew they all preferred one another in certain ways and Lu'ria could not deny that Carisia and Caliria could and did excite her just a tiny bit more. She did not feel bad about this as they had talked among each other about this very thing. Sadi openly admitted that Ne'Veha and Sehri could provoke her desires just a fraction more than the others. It was something all of them accepted easily because they all knew Andro was theirs for the taking whenever they desired.

Lu'ria so missed her blue skinned Vanari lover and fellow Crown Princess. Lu'ria was thinking of how sweet her lips tasted just before Andro's warm lips came down and hers and stole her breath away and swept her up within the incredible wave of their combined auras. She was vaguely aware of Sehri and Ne'Veha pressing their now naked flesh against hers and then everything descended into heavenly bliss as Andro sank all twelve and a quarter inches of his thick manhood into her with one will crushing stroke and she screamed in unabashed fervor as the first orgasm of the night smashed aside her shields and all their minds became one with each other.

ARC ROYAL

“...sure of what the logs say?” Murano asked Martin from across the table as he lowered the data pad and passed it to Kesyla.

Murano sat across the table from Martin in the secure conference room, Helen sitting beside Wayonn and Kesyla to Murano's right with Mari to his left. Avi stood directly behind and to Martin's left side, Danny occupying the chair beside Martin.

Martin nodded his head. “Trust me... when it comes to anything medical... Anja is never wrong.” He stated. “She is one of the most intelligent people I have ever known. Avi cracked the encryption and Anja has been studying the logs for the last few hours. She is sure.”

Wayonn set down his copy of the files he was reading from his P1. “Now I know my distrust of him was justified. What I don't understand is why though.” He said thoughtfully. “Why even make something like this?”

Martin leaned back in his chair. “Murano... what do you know of him from before?”

Murano shrugged his broad shoulders. “I did not interact with him except for the one time after Sumar and Wayonn were declared lost. He was Assistant Director of Operations for the Science Convention at the time and I went to him to approve a search mission. I only met with him once as I said. The meeting did not go as well as I had hoped.”

“Explain.” Martin said.

“He seemed... he seemed almost happy when they declared you lost Wayonn.” Murano said. “He was not going to accede to a demand from some upstart Praetorian when all evidence pointed to the fact that none of you survived.”

“This only lends more credence to the feelings I have about his actions as well as the evidence that Avi possesses.” Wayonn spoke quickly.

“What evidence?” Daron asked leaning forward.

“Nothing you need to concern yourself with young man.” Wayonn told him from across the table.

“You accuse Elder Lorendo of actions against you and our people but present no proof.” Daron spoke. “He has done many great things since we had to flee. Things that have helped and protected our people!”

“Whatever he has done to protect our people was done by accident.” Murano snickered. “He was protecting his own backside first and foremost.”

“You do not know him Uncle!” Daron snapped. “You...”

Murano looked at him. “I know him far better than you ever will Daron!” He snapped right back. “I have seen his actions and what they have wrought! I have seen him sacrifice lives in order to save his own during the Great Exodus! Do not tell me I don't know the man!”

“And I have seen him in action as well.” Wayonn said. “Long before you were ever born Daron. The orders and updated charts we received on City Ship 41 before the storm were flawed in almost every way. Our sensor net should have detected the Ion Storm and sent out warnings to all our ships. We never got the warnings because the Ion Storm was left out of the charts we received. Only one man was authorized to sign off on any updates. The Assistant Director of Operations for the Science Convention. Lorendo.”

“Wayonn... are you... are you saying he purposely withheld the information about the storm that caused your City ships to crash?” Kesyla asked stunned.

Wayonn looked at Avi. “Avi?”

-As Wayonn has stated. All updates from the sensor network grids were passed through the office of the Assistant Director of Operation. It was his duty to review them for accuracy and insure any new information was then transmitted to all Pralor ships in every known Quadrant- Avi answered.

“He did not do this?” Murano asked now.

-An update was received prior to CS41 encountering the Ion storm... however it was without the updated charts showing the storm- Avi said. -They were the identical charts we had received in the prior download one week earlier. Once updates are sent and confirmed, all data is then filed and taken off the main computer core so it is not used actively again. Procedure is very clear on this. It was not followed this time and the wrong update was sent to us-

“That does not prove anything!” Daron spat. “Everyone is entitled to a mistake!”

Avi’s bright orange hue eyes focused on Daron. -Your hypothesis would be accurate Daron... except the date and time stamp of the update was altered. This was not detected until after CS41 had crashed and been on the surface of Lycavore for more than two decades. I cross referenced the charts and all updates and discovered that the most recent update was in fact the one we had received previously only the time stamp and date were altered-

“We were focused on trying to establish ourselves and remain out of the path of any Lycavorians at the time. We directed Avi to concentrate all his efforts on repairing the lone transport that had survived the crash at least somewhat intact while the rest of us were involved in repairs to CS41.” Wayonn spoke. “That was all we were concerned with.”

“Why did you never try to repair the COM system of the ship or transport?” Mari asked now.

-The entire Communications grid throughout the entire ship was affected by the storm- Avi answered her. -Even the backup Bio-mechanical Data boards were damaged beyond my ability to repair. We had no means to restore or replace them. Those in the transport were damaged and would only transmit over short distances-

“Avatar 41... if what you are saying is accurate... and I am not dismissing what your information says...” Kesyla stated. “My question would be why? Why purposely alter a vital data upstream to our ships?”

-I can not accurately answer that question without more data Kesyla- Avi answered almost casually.

“Then your accusations have no basis in fact!” Daron snapped. “I have worked with him many times in the last years!” Daron barked out. “He has had nothing but the benefit of our people at the forefront of his actions!”

“The benefit?” Mari gasped now. “Daron... he murdered three hundred of our people on Onterom! Men and women who could have been saved! He did not consult with anyone before doing this! Not even father! He just did it! How does that benefit our people?”

“You do not know what you speak of Mari! He did not murder them! He was following established security protocols!” Daron hissed back at her. “And he is an Elder of our people serving on the Convention of Elders! We should not question him!”

“There is nothing wrong with questioning the wisdom of your leaders.” Martin spoke up now looking at him. “That’s good sense.”

“You know nothing of our people!” Daron snapped.

“Daron!” Kesyla barked at him. “You are a guest here among these men and women! Just as we all are! You will mind your manners and your tone and conduct yourself in the way father raised you to!”

Daron glared at his sister but said nothing. He knew Kesyla carried the power of their father’s office in her hands. She was his most senior aide in all things and could do things and speak to people who he did not have access to. He shifted his eyes to Wayonn who leaned forward at the table.

“I will withdraw my accusations because Daron here is correct.” Wayonn spoke. “I do not have the proper evidence to support my claims.” He met Daron’s eyes. “But know this boy... Avi and I will continue to gather information and evidence and when the day comes that we have the proof you so desire I will present it. And then I will come for Lorendo and he will answer for the crimes we know he has committed.”

Danny sat forward. “Why don’t we stick to the facts for now ok?” He said. “We know from his own logs that he made this Svorag virus.”

“Logs that you stole.” Daron spat.

Danny turned to Daron. “However we obtained them... do you deny what they say?”

Daron sat back. “No.” He said finally. “I can not deny that. But we do not know what he originally intended when he made it. It could have been a vaccine of some sort. A medical break through. We don’t know!”

“Well... we know what it has become.” Martin continued along Danny’s train of thought. “We know he tried to cover it up by erasing entries and then trying to download the station’s remaining logs before anyone had a chance to view them.”

“I would like to view these erased logs.” Daron spoke quickly.

“For what purpose?” Murano asked.

“To determine if they are genuine!” Daron answered. “I believe I am the most qualified individual here to do that.”

Martin nodded. “Ok... I’ll let Anja know to give you access.” He said.

“Privately.” Daron prodded.

Martin chuckled. “Not a chance.” He told him. “Given your propensity to defend him... I won’t give you access to view the files without Anja present.”

“So you don’t trust us.” Daron.

Martin pointed at Kesyla and Mari. “There’s no point in lying to you Daron... I trust your sisters, I trust your uncle, but you are a different animal altogether. You seem to want to cling to this ideal that you are superior and can do no wrong. We know Lorendo was under orders not to use force against my people... which he ignored... resulting in the death of three of my people. Which doesn’t seem to bother you in the least. We also...”

“The deaths were acceptable given the circumstances.” Daron spoke. “Your people had control of the station and all we knew was that primitives had...”

“Daron!” Mari gasped in shock.

“That is what we knew at the time!” Daron snapped.

“Daron... you need to leave!” Kesyla snapped angrily.

“I will not leave!” Daron barked right back at her. “I have every right to be here to insure that these...”

Murano came to his feet now in an instant. “You are my brother’s oldest but so help me Daron... if you utter another word of disrespect I will turn you over my knee and inflict upon you the punishment your father never gave to you!”

“You wouldn’t dare!” Daron snapped at him.

Murano lifted his hand and Daron suddenly found himself lifted from his chair seized in the grips of an Etheric field he could not hope to break free from. “You test my patience boy!” He snarled at his nephew.

Mari stood up and placed her hand on Murano’s arm. “Un... Uncle release him.” She said softly.

“He does not know respect for those who are his equal or his betters as you and your sister do Mari!” Murano snapped. “I know your father taught you better than that!”

Kesyla stood up and moved up next to her uncle. “Yes he did.” She said softly looking at Murano. She turned to look at her brother. “Daron... you will leave this meeting and you will not be part of any others in the future until you learn humility! Is that clear?”

“You can not keep me from...” Daron started to say.

“I can... and I will!” Kesyla snapped. “I will not allow you to dismantle everything father wants to try and build here! I won’t! Or do I need to contact father directly and have him send a transport to take you away from here?”

Daron’s eyes narrowed for he knew Kesyla would do exactly that. He stopped struggling within the grips of his uncle’s Etheric power after a moment and snarled at her. “Fine!” He spat. “But I will speak with father myself about this!”

Kesyla shrugged her slim shoulders. “That is your right... but now you will leave!”

Murano released his hold on Daron and he dropped gently to the deck. Daron glared at him for a long moment and then turned and moved to the door which opened for him instantly. Martin waited for the door to shut and then he turned back to Murano and Kesyla. He saw her turn to face him.

“King Leonidas please accept my sincere apologies for...” She began to quickly stammer out the words.

Martin held up his hand stopping her words. “No apology is necessary.” He said quickly. “In a way I respect him for clinging to his ideals.”

“They are not my father’s ideal King Leonidas.” Kesyla spoke.

“No they are not.” He said in agreement. “And stop with the King crap will you. You are here representing your father and just as I told him, I will tell you. My name is Martin.”

“Or bone head... depending on your mood.” Danny quipped.

Kesyla met Danny’s eyes and couldn’t help but smile. She turned back to Martin and nodded her head. “Martin.” She said in reply.

Martin sat back in his chair. “I would like to know something Kesyla... if you are privy to the information?” He asked.

Kesyla nodded her head to him and Martin saw her eyes dart to Daniel next to him once more as she sat back down. “I will answer anything I can that does not violate the authority my father gave to me.”

Martin glanced at Danny and then back to her. “We know there are two worlds that were seeded with my people out here somewhere. One of them we know of for sure within this very quadrant of space.” He said. “Where are they? Why did your people stop monitoring them and what can you tell me about them?”

Kesyla shook her head. “I truly do not know Martin.” She answered. “As you have no doubt seen... the Science Convention does not tell the Chief Elder Pralor everything. I do know my father would never have sanctioned what Lorendo was doing on Onterom. The Svorag have taken too many of our people through the years for him to allow such a thing.”

“Can you get exact locations of them?” Martin asked.

Kesyla nodded without hesitation. “Yes.” She said. “You realize that Lorendo and some others will want to make it seem as if you are marshalling your species.”

Martin nodded. “Let them think that.” He said. “Let them guess at what I’m doing. It gives me the advantage until I find out what the hell is really going on.”

Murano looked at him. “You suspect something Martin?” He asked.

Martin met his eyes. “We killed a couple of these Svorag on Planet Twelve Alpha. Anja was able to examine them and she discovered Lycavorian DNA as well as Pralor DNA in one of them.”

Kesyla leaned forward. “You are certain?” She gasped.

Martin nodded. “Like I said... Anja’s not just a doctor... she’s the foremost researcher into all that genetic hoopla anywhere in the Union. And Duewa is nearly as good. With Duewa helping her... there is probably nothing they couldn’t figure out. Both of them are geniuses.”

Danny nodded. “No arguments here.” He stated.

“What connection are you trying to make?” Kesyla asked.

“Whoever she was... she was a Pralor that was turned by a Lycavorian and then attacked and changed by a Svorag.” Martin explained. “That much Anja was able to discover. Now... the only Pralors that I know of who were turned by my people are those with my grandfather and Wayonn here. And none of them made it three quarters of the way across the known galaxy into this quadrant from Lycavore. She was turned by a Lycavorian male, with no signs of any struggle and the bite was clean and in the general area where a male of my species would bite a female to change her. If he changed her then he probably took her as his wife and mate. That leaves only one possibility.”

Mari’s eyes grew a little wider. “Our people were keeping account of them!” She gasped.

Martin nodded his head. "And somehow or someway this female was turned by one of mine. This leads me to believe there are more. Finding her on Twelve Alpha also tells me something else. If she was his mate... and I believe she was... he would never abandon her to the Svorag willingly. He would need to be dead. Especially if they had children together. He would take as many of them as he could before they got to her... or he would have sent them away."

Murano nodded. "So you are saying she must have come from one of the Lycavorian planets." He said softly. "Which means the Svorag have already been there."

Martin nodded as well. "Correct." He said. "And I intend to find out."

"What... what do you intend when you... when you discover them?" Kesyla asked with hesitation in her voice now.

"They are my people Kesyla." Martin told her. "Removed from Lycavore and brought here by your people many thousands of years ago. I intend to see if there is anything I can do for them."

"What if they have not... what if they do not have your level of technology?" Mari asked. "We can not simply give it to them. Announce ourselves to them. It could alter their natural growth!"

Martin nodded. "I don't intend that no." He spoke. "But they are my people and as King... I am bound by honor to at least see for myself. It is what my grandfather would have wanted and it is what my father would expect of me."

Kesyla nodded her head. "I understand what you are saying... and I agree." She stated. "I will find out from my father where these planets are. It is what he would do for any of our own people."

Martin nodded his head in gratitude to her. "Thank you." He said. "Listen... it has been a stressful few days and it will take all of us a little while to get used to each other." He spoke evenly. "Why don't we start out with some easy stuff now? Get to know one another?"

Danny looked at Martin. "I could pull out my deck of marked cards fervon." He said with a grin. "Nothing like a little five card stud to get the blood pumping."

Martin met his eyes. "You're terrible at poker." He said.

"Yeah... but I might be able to win back some of the money you and Jules took from me over the years from them." Danny spoke. "They have to be worse than me when it comes to poker."

Martin laughed now and even Murano couldn't hold back the chuckle. "Poker?" He asked with a smile.

Martin nodded. "It's a card game." He explained. "One that he has never been very good at." Martin said jerking his thumb at Danny.

"Hey! That's not true!" Danny protested.

-You have played four thousand nine hundred and sixteen hands of poker in my presence Daniel Simpson- Avi spoke from behind Wayonn. -You have won only nineteen point three five percent of the times-

"I'm getting better!" Danny continued to defend himself.

-At your current rate of improvement you will begin winning more than you lose four months and three days after you reach the age of eight thousand six hundred and fourteen years- Avi told him. - Considering that you are not yet six hundred years of age, perhaps a new hobby is in order-

Danny looked at Martin. "He's been hanging around you way too much." Danny said.

This comment caused the others to chuckle softly as Kesyla let her dark eyes fall on Danny once more. She found him fascinating for some reason and it wasn't because he was so large. His smile was infectious and his teeth perfect and extremely white. His eyes were bright and the neatly trimmed goatee he sported was unlike anything she had seen among the Pralor men she knew. The COM panel on the table buzzed snapping Kesyla out of her thoughts and Martin reached forward and tapped the panel. "Go." He said.

"Nauta Melme... we are going to contact Andro so that we may meet the newest member of our family." Dysea's voice came over the COM. "Since he will not contact us... we will contact him."

Martin smiled and shook his head. "You know he doesn't like surprises Melda Min." He spoke.

“He will have to endure.” Dysea spoke firmly. “We have every right to meet her even if we are several billion miles from home.”

Martin grinned and looked at Murano. “In his defense... he was fighting at the time.” Martin spoke. “And we ain’t exactly been sitting on our hands either.”

“Don’t you defend him Martin Leonidas! It has been three days and still he does not try to contact us and introduce us to her. The events on Solmar have been settled for that long and it has been nearly a day since we left Onterom.” For’mya’s voice echoed in the background. “He should have found the time!”

“Ok. Ok.” Martin said quickly. “We’ll meet you in the QCR center.” He spoke getting up.

Murano looked at Martin. “You have been keeping in touch with him I take it?” He asked.

Martin nodded his head. “We can... it’s very odd but we can...”

Murano nodded. “A Praetorian gift.” He said. “We can sense another Praetorian and his emotions even over vast distances. It ties us together in a way. You feel your other sons... Denali and Dorian?”

Martin nodded. “And Jomann.” He answered.

Murano nodded and moved closer to him. “Just as I feel all of you as well. It is not as pronounced as what you feel because I have not met them yet... but I can sense fleeting thoughts and emotions that are not mine. I will need to instruct all of you how to keep better control of this skill.”

“It’s very useful...” Wayonn said now. “However... it can be like a beacon at times.”

Martin looked at him. “Helen and the others as well?”

Murano nodded. “Praetorian Mages as you call them... yes. It will not be as developed with them... but they are connected with us as well.”

Martin looked at him. “I got a lot to learn huh?” He asked.

Murano smiled. “Not as much as you might think. If you and Andro have been studying the Tomes that Sumar and Wayonn wrote as he told me... then you are far more skilled than most of those who are just discovering their skills. And no doubt that whatever he may have learned from those Tomes, Andro has already passed to Denali and Jomann and probably will begin passing them to Dorian as well.” Murano chuckled.

“Saves time.”

Martin looked at him. “Those that Shiria might find?” He asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “They will need to start from the beginning. They do not share the blood of Sumar within their veins and this makes it easier for you to pass this information to others within your bloodline. They will not have that luxury.”

Martin nodded and shifted his eyes to everyone else. “All of you are welcome to join us and meet my son.” He said.

Mari jumped up quickly. “I would like too!” She announced.

Kesylya nodded as well. “I as well.”

“I am going to check on Anja’s progress.” Wayonn spoke. “And visit with Jacina and Recia for a time. She will need all the support she can get.”

Martin nodded and turned to Danny. “You, T’lolt and the Master Chief put an operational plan together for this planet Murano recommended. Figure a week to let them hunt and air out their wings and give Arzoal and Torma time to school them.”

Danny nodded. “Will do. We already started working on it. Figured that is what you were going to do. I’m going to include Garan and the three men that came with him as well. He worked the OP with us on Onterom and seems pretty cool under fire. Might be beneficial to work together and find out what each other knows.”

Kesylya looked at him from across the table. “I... I was under the impression that you did not consider Garan and the others as... experienced as yourselves in such things.” She said softly.

Danny looked at her. “The learning never stops.” He said with an infectious grin. “That’s what Anuk and Nubian tell me.” He slapped Martin in the arm lightly. “I’ll get with you after Andro burns your ass for interrupting what is undoubtedly a pleasant time for him.”

Martin rolled his eyes. “Don’t remind me.”

“Like father like son.” Danny said. “Get with us later.”

Martin nodded. “Done.” He said. He watched Danny nod and then he headed for the door. Martin turned to the others. “Ok... if you will follow me... the QCR chamber is two decks below us.”

“You developed the Quantum Communications Relay yourselves?” Kesyla asked as she moved around the table.

Martin nodded. “Avi set it up initially... my people just added some other things to it.” He replied. “We have limited its use to Command and Control ships and a few locations on Earth and Apo Prime for right now, but it will eventually become standard across the entire Union.”

Murano looked at Mari as she gripped his arm with her hands and a smile and they began to follow Martin and Kesyla out. He did not understand the sparkle in her blue eyes or the meaning behind the wide smile, but it was indeed pleasant to have his niece think so highly of him.

CLASS M MOON
UNION DESIGNATION
AT459

Kalis lowered his P1 and looked up at the rock face in front of him. It had been relatively easy to land half a kilometer from this site, the LEUGERS now running on automation while they had gathered equipment and began the trek here. Serale had not strayed far from his side as they moved through the trees and tall grass that surrounded the mountain range, usually holding his hand. The air was slightly heavy due to the height they were at in the mountains, but aside from that it appeared as if the moon was a lush place. They could see the green of vegetation below them as they moved along the ridge and a very large body of water to their south. True to his word, Mata had forgone any weapons and carried a large pack on his back as he moved behind Serale. He was aware of the eyes of many of Koguth’s men and women on him, but he ignored them. He was set on his path and nothing would alter his course now. Not even those who still considered him an enemy. Most of the Juturi Pride had remained at the ships and they would be sent for when they found the location Yuriko had given to him on his P1.

Kalis looked at Serale as she came up next to him, his assault rifle slung across the front of his body, but ready to use if need be. “This is it.” He said to her. “The entrance must be just between those outcroppings.” He moved forward between the two jutting pieces of rock on either side that extended far up along what appeared to be a sheer drop from the summit above the mountain they were on. He saw the darkness of the opening and felt his blood begin to stir at the unknown. “This way.” He called back over his shoulder.

The interior of the cave was nothing what they expected. As they moved down the short tunnel it opened into a massive cavern fully a hundred feet high and nearly three hundred feet wide all around. There were several exiting tunnels that they could see in the light provided by the dozen or so light globes that floated unaware in different areas of the main cavern. There was a single large fire pit in the center of the main cavern, the smoke from burning embers drifting lazily towards the ceiling. As Kalis’s eyes drifted upward he deduced there must have been ventilation opening near the top in order for the smoke to rise as it was. Across the wide expanse of the main cavern they saw small groups of chairs and at least five small tables spread all around and a single large table off to one side against the tunnel wall with what could only be some sort of portable COM array set up. Stacked five high along another wall were three rows of equipment crates of some sort. It definitely appeared as if someone had been spending time here.

Koguth and Mata moved up beside Kalis as their eyes scanned the interior of the cave. The eighteen men and women they had brought with them were beginning to fan out slowly, still alert, but their weapons no longer posing an immediate threat.

“This is... this is no camp they just threw together Kalis.” Koguth spoke softly as he looked around. “This is a forward operating position.”

Mata squatted next to the fire and held his hand over the embers. “Still slightly warm.” He stated. “They were here recently.”

Kalis held up the P1. “This is the right place!” He hissed softly. “This is it... but no one is here!”

“Aren’t we?” The female voice spoke.

Kalis whirled around as the space beside Serale shimmered and the PSG deactivated to reveal the vampire female of medium height and build wearing the body armor of a Union Scout with slight modifications.

Yuriko stood there as all of the Kavalians and the three Hadarians spun towards her voice and watched her figure come into full view as the PSG powered down. Mani had stepped closer to her husband, her hand against her chest.

“By the stars!” She gasped.

Yuriko stared at Kalis as he lowered the P1 and turned to face her fully. Through the years Yuriko had become very good at reading people. It was a gift her father had once told her. She could tell things about people by the slightest twitch of a facial muscle or strand of hair just as a scent could tell her father volumes of information. She ignored the others and stepped closer to Kalis who remained still.

“Hello cousin.” She said with a neutral voice. “It is a pleasure to finally make your acquaintance.”

“Yuri... Yur...” Kalis stammered.

“Yuriko.” She told him.

“I... this place...” Kalis fumbled with words. “It...”

Yuriko smiled at him. “We discovered it about ten days ago.” She told him looking around. “The mountain provides natural shielding against sensors as well as protection from the elements. This moon has some very harsh thunderstorms. We have used it in order for my people to stretch their legs and remain off the ship for a day or two at a time.”

“Your people?” Nedoli asked.

Yuriko smiled and nodded her head. “I’m sorry.” She stated. She lifted her head slightly and made as if looking into thin air. “Stand down. Three seven one.” Kalis and the others whirled in all directions as the PSGs of nearly twenty Lycavorian Spartans appeared all around them. Among them were half a dozen elves, two other vampires and what appeared to be a Limian. All of them were positioned in such a way as to provide deadly and accurate fields of fire on the arriving Kavalians should the need arise. Yuriko moved forward quickly. “Do not be alarmed! We mean no harm! As long as that is your intent as well!”

“Weapons to safe!” Koguth barked instantly.

The Kavalians responded to their Pride leader without question and within seconds all their weapons were slung and secure. Yuriko saw this and immediately reacted. “Secure!” She barked. “It appears we are among friends after all!”

Koguth watched as the men and women did as Yuriko instructed them without question. He turned back to Kalis and Yuriko in time to see her step forward and embrace the taller Kalis. Koguth saw his surprised face, but then he saw the peace spread across his tense features as he realized for the first time that he had achieved a large part of his goal. Kalis was soon crushing Yuriko in his arms, nearly bringing her to tears as she felt his happiness within Mindvoice. She pulled back finally and looked at him, her hands coming to rest on his shoulders. “Father is going to be so very happy that you have taken this path Kalis.” She told him. “He has worried for you since Enurrua. He was worried that he might have turned you against him and what you could become with your family.”

Kalis smiled fighting back his own tears. “I... I almost didn’t open the P1 that first time.” He said honestly. “I am... I am so glad that I did.”

Yuriko nodded. “So are we cousin.” She told him. “So are we.” Yuriko straightened up slightly and looked at Koguth. “General Koguth’Juturi, on behalf of the Lycavorian Union I welcome you and all the members of your Pride.”

Koguth was somewhat taken aback but he bowed his head. “I am... you know the custom of formal greeting among my people?” He asked. “The use of our Pride name in our titles?”

Yuriko smiled. “It’s my job to know these things.” She said. “You may send for the remainder of your people at whatever time you feel comfortable. We have more than enough supplies to spread around. And the local fruit and plant life is very abundant and excellent to eat.”

“This is not some random location you have picked out.” Mata spoke now “You have... you have been here for some time.”

Yuriko looked at him. “Yes we have... Puma Bane.” She stated evenly but with no hostility.

Mata saw two of the Spartans moved slightly closer to him and he held up his hands. “I am no longer Puma Bane.” He stated quickly. “I have left that life behind me.”

“Have you?” Yuriko spoke calmly. “How do I know you have not already activated a link back to your ships telling them exactly where we are?”

Kalis came to his defense instantly which caused Mata no small pride. “Yuriko... he is with me.” He told her and watched as she turned to look at him. “He... Mata has been the one who has trained me since childhood. He has come freely without weapons to show you that he is sincere. I trust him with my life.”

“We have trusted him.” Serale spoke stepping forward to quickly take Kalis’s arm. It was something that did not escape Yuriko’s notice and she turned back to her men.

“Stand down.” She ordered simply and watched as they obeyed without hesitation. She turned back to Kalis and looked at Serale. “And who is this?”

Kalis looked at Serale and Yuriko saw his eyes soften considerably. “Yuriko... this is Serale.” Yuriko noticed his voice held pride in it when he spoke her name. He turned quickly and motioned to Ceale as she stepped away from Nedoli. “Her mother Lady Ceale and her brother Danim. My father... he took them from Talbor Seven as prisoners when we left the Alpha Quadrant.”

Yuriko watched the Hadarian woman move closer. She bowed her head slightly. “Lady Ceale.” She spoke reaching out.

Ceale didn’t hesitate and took her offered hand. “Princess Leonidas.” She said with an almost reverent tone. “I... we... we have seen you on the Netnews.”

“Please... my name is Yuriko.” She replied with a smile. “Like my father and mothers and all my siblings... we hate the royalty tag. We just can’t seem to get away from it though.” Yuriko squeezed her hand. “I would imagine there is a story behind why you are accompanying my cousin... but we can save that for another time. I get the feeling that it is not a pleasant topic.”

Ceale shook her head. “No.” She answered softly.

Yuriko looked at Kalis. “We have sealed containers of food from the Mess on my ship.” She told him. “More than enough for everyone. Fresh water containers are here. The tunnel to the left there leads to a relatively large underground spring if anyone wishes to bath. You can arrange it however you wish. The tunnel to the right leads to an area we have set up with sleeping mats. We didn’t have enough cots onboard... but we managed to gather enough blankets and such. It can get chilly here at night.”

“Yuriko... Uncle... Uncle Martin.” Kalis asked her. “Have you...”

“I sent him an encrypted message letting him know what was happening.” She told him. “It might take him a day or two to respond. They are dealing with other things at the moment.”

“Other things?” Koguth asked.

Nedoli moved up next to Ceale. “Then he does know where he is going?” He asked.

Yuriko grinned. “In all the time since I was reunited with him I have never known him not to know where he is going and how to get there.”

“Then your purpose for moving into unknown space was not to lure Kalis’s father away from Keleru and the KFI?” Koguth asked.

Yuriko met his eyes. “It was a small part of it yes. But not as much as you might think.” She said. “He just happens to be a thorn in our side for the moment. One father will remove when he feels the time is right.”

“Our daughter?” Mani asked now. “Iama... where is she?”

“She is on my father’s ship.” Yuriko answered. “When she first came onboard she took over the duties as Chief Chef.”

“Chef?” Koguth gasped.

Yuriko nodded her head. “She has eighty men and women under her direct direction. And let me tell you... from what I understand... she is the most popular person on the ARC ROYAL because of the food she prepares for everyone. When you get my mother’s raving about the cooking skills of someone besides themselves... then you know she is superior at her job. She has... she has forged a life for herself.”

“You said... you said she has a husband?” Mani spoke.

Yuriko nodded. “That is much more recent. Within the last few days from what I hear. I don’t know if it has happened yet but it will soon I imagine.”

“A Lycavorian?” Koguth asked with skepticism in his voice.

Yuriko looked at him. “Half Lycavorian. And half elf.” She told him. “My brother Fedor. My mother For'mya’s set of twins.”

Kalis’s eyes grew wide. “Queen For'mya’s twins?” He questioned. “Then he is...”

Yuriko nodded. “Yes. Fedor is your brother as well.”

Koguth looked between them for a few seconds until he put it together and his eyes grew wide. “Brother?” He hissed. “Kalis... is she saying that Pusintin’s blood has taken my daughter as his wife. One of the children born of his rape of the elven Queen?”

Kalis nodded and looked at him. “My half brother. His name is... Fedor.” He said with a small smile.

“My daughter will not consort with a bastard child of that man!” Koguth almost shouted. “I will not allow it! Never!”

Mani gripped his arm tightly. “Koguth my husband...” She said in an embarrassed voice. “Kalis is of his blood as well.”

“I know what...” Koguth stopped when he realized what he had said and he turned his eyes on Kalis. Yuriko could see the shame in those dark eyes. “Kalis... please... I did not mean to... please forgive me.”

Kalis shook his head slowly. “I no longer consider myself his son regardless that his blood flows through me sir. I have embraced the part of my blood he turned his back on many millennia ago. We are nothing alike... and I doubt my... my brother is either.” He said softly.

Yuriko shook her head. “Not by a long shot.” She said. “In fact... he and your sister have dismissed him as well. My father has adopted them. They are his children now.” She motioned to one of the tables nearby. “Please... why don’t we sit down and I can fill you in on what I know of your daughter and what I am authorized to tell you right now. My father will contact us as soon as he is able I’m sure. He has been waiting and hoping Kalis would contact us and now that you have... we will see him soon enough.”

SCIMITAR

FOUR HOURS FROM EARTH

Sadi sat in the center of the larger of the two couches in their quarters, Ne'Veha leaning up against one side of her and Sehri laying with her back on the couch and her head on Sadi’s thigh. Lu'ria was stretched out on the second, slightly smaller couch with Carisia between her legs as Lu'ria braided her long raven black hair. None of them wore much in the way of clothing and all of them were pleasantly sore. Their torrid hours with Androcles had been exceptional, none of them escaping his carnal attentions, to their extreme delight.

Sehri was still overwhelmed by everything as she laid there and nibbled on the piece of fruit. Even in her wildest dreams she had never imagined it could be so devilishly wonderful. Her senses were more alive than they had ever been and the scents of the four women who she was rapidly growing to love almost as intensely as Androcles filled her mind and senses. She had never imagined being together as they were last night could be so utterly and insanely filled with ardent pleasure and passion. None of them were idle at any time during the many hours they enjoyed each other and Sehri found it most exciting as she tasted each of them with eager happiness. Hearing their cries of delight and then having them do the same things to her was not something she could put into words. When she thought it could get no better, that is when Andro took her again. He filled her absolutely and while she tried to keep her wits about her as his aura swarmed all over them and around them, she found it impossible to concentrate on pleasing her Drow Mistress while Andro filled her so divinely. Ultimately she did what they all did and just surrendered to the swirling passions and smells that filled their room and the severe way Andro’s aura caused them such exquisite enchantment.

Sehri tilted her head back and looked up at Sadi who was reading a morning report from a data pad. “Is it always like that Sadi?” She asked in a soft voice. “When we are all together?”

Sadi lowered her pad and looked at her as Ne'Veha turned her head. “It will be even more when Inamarno returns to us.” She answered. “The Alkay she secrets affects all of us. It makes us last so much longer and feel so much more pleasure.”

“I have... I have heard how the Alkay from a Vanari can affect you when aroused.” Sehri said. “So it is true?”

Sadi nodded. “Yes it is.”

“Will we be seeing her soon?” Sehri asked playfully.

Ne'Veha and all of them laughed at her tone. “We have turned you into a vixen Sehri.” Ne'Veha said with a smile.

Sehri blushed. "It's just... it's very..."

Sadi smiled and leaned over to kiss her softly. "Yes it is." She said. "It is amazing that he can make us feel what he does isn't it?"

"He gives us all that he is." Lu'ria spoke. "That is why. He holds nothing back from us and the pleasure we feel stems from that."

Sadi nodded. "Our Drow Mistress is right." Sadi said. "We..."

All of them turned quickly when the QCR disc in the floor of the corner of their main quarters flared to life without warning and suddenly they were all looking at the images of Aricia and all of Andro's mothers. Sadi was the first to recover as Sehri sat up in total shock.

"Aricia!" She gasped as she came to her feet. "What... what is wrong? Is something..."

"Nothing is wrong Sadi." Aricia replied as she held up her hand. "Please forgive us for bypassing the normal channels but Androcles has not introduced us to his new mate and we wanted to meet her."

Sadi blinked several times. "We thought... we thought you were otherwise occupied." She stammered. "He did not want..."

Sehri was sitting there quietly, suddenly very conscious of the fact that she had hardly any clothes on with the exception of the skimpy undergarments. She had seen Andro's mothers within his thoughts and had commented to him on their beauty, but the images she had seen did not do them justice in the least as she stared at the transmission and the six women sitting around the table.

"Yes I know. He did not want to bother us." Aricia spoke. "We however wanted to meet her and at least..." Aricia's eyes fell on Sehri sitting beside Sadi and Sehri couldn't help but recognize where Andro got his amazing colored eyes. They were his mother's eyes; the same azure blue color almost exactly. "This... this is she?" Aricia asked.

Sadi smiled and returned to her seat on the couch and took Sehri's hand. "Aricia, Dysea, Anja, For'mya, Isabella, and Cirith... May I present Sehri Leonidas." She told them. "Sehri... these are Andro's mothers."

Sehri was unable to move for a few moments as she squeezed Sadi's hand tightly. She finally was able to focus enough and she bowed her head slightly. "It... it is an honor my Queens." She spoke in a tentative voice.

"Oh please!" Anja exclaimed from her seat between Aricia and For'mya. "Sadi... you have to tell her to not do that!"

Sadi and the rest of them chuckled at Anja's quick words. "I think she may be a little overwhelmed at the moment Anja." Sadi said.

Lu'ria laughed a little harder. "It is not everyday that all of you just appear in our quarters Anja." She said.

"True enough." Dysea spoke now. "But we wanted to meet..."

"Sehri." Ne'Veha said quickly.

"Sehri... that is a beautiful name child." Dysea said.

Sehri smiled slowly. "Thank you."

"So where is our hard headed son?" Isabella asked.

"In the shower at the moment." Carisia said leaning forward. "We woke only an hour ago. It was... it was a very busy evening." She finished with a smile.

Isabella's dark eyes twinkled in the transmission and Sehri saw all of them smile at the unspoken meaning in Carisia's words.

"Does he satisfy you Sehri Leonidas?" For'mya asked now. "Does he make you sing to the moon and the stars?"

Sadi smiled and leaned into Sehri affectionately. "You can answer Sehri." She told her. "They want to insure that Andro fulfills his responsibility as your mate and husband according to the Lycavorian and Spartan customs."

Sehri looked at the stunningly clear transmission. "It is beyond anything I ever imagine!" She said quickly, her face animated and bright. "He makes me feel so full and so loved! It is..."

Sehri stopped as Sadi and the others began to laugh and then Andro's mothers were chuckling as well. She looked at Sadi. "What?" She asked.

Dysea shook her head. “You have said nothing wrong Sehri.” She stated as she leaned back in her chair. “We are laughing because it is how all of us feel! We make sure our sons treat all of their mates and wives just as their father does us. And Andro’s father makes all of us melt within his arms.”

“More like sizzle.” Anja quipped playfully.

“He does make us become heated doesn’t he?” For’mya said just as playfully.

Aricia was smiling as she turned and looked at Sehri in the transmission. “We are not exactly shy about how Andro’s father makes us feel.” She said. “You will come to see that we are not afraid to talk about anything at all.”

Their heads turned quickly as the door to the shower room opened and Andro came walking out in all his glorious nakedness toweling his hair dry. “KertaGai... we need to contact my mothers when we reach Earth.” He began speaking as he came fully into the main living area. “I want to make sure they have a chance to meet Sehri even if it’s through a COM link. They will be furious with me for not...” Andro stopped talking when he realized how silent it was in the room. He slowly lowered the towel and saw all of them staring at him with lust in their eyes and a large amount of humor. “What’s going on?” He finally said.

Andro’s eyes darted to the corner where he saw the activated QCR link and the image of his mothers in the transmission. “Mothers!” He exclaimed as he instantly dropped the towel to cover his lower body while he saw all of them burst into laughter.

“Furious with you?” Aricia spoke finally trying to keep her laughter from spilling out. “You could say that! It’s why we decided to act on our own!”

“Mother... you could have warned me!” Andro snapped as he pulled the towel tighter around his waist. “Followed the proper channels.”

“When have we ever done that?” Anja asked with an ear to ear smile. “You should know by now we like to be unpredictable.”

Carisia was smiling brilliantly as she got to her feet and moved over in front of Andro, hiding him with her petite frame as best as she was able. “We will dress him Anja.” She stated as she pushed him gently towards the bedroom.

“Good. Then we will become acquainted with Sehri before your father and the others join us.” Aricia said.

“Father and...” Andro snorted. “You would have activated the link with strangers on it?” He declared.

“Of course!” Aricia said.

“We are not ashamed of our sons.” Dysea continued.

“Mothers that is not...” Andro began to protest but Carisia pushed him a little harder towards the bedroom.

“Do not fight with your mothers.” Carisia scolded him as she pushed him through the doorway.

Sehri couldn’t help but be surprised and utterly entertained by the antics of Andro’s mothers and all of them together. She felt confidence and warmth spread throughout her as she realized she was so going to enjoy her life going into the future.

“Now Sehri...” For’mya’s voice drew her attention back to the transmission. “Let us speak of womanly things before Andro’s father and the others get here.” She said. “Tell us of yourself child. And leave nothing out.”

SCIMITAR

ANDRO’S OFFICE

ONE HOUR LATER

Andro entered his office still somewhat put out by his mother’s actions but not really able to stay mad at any of them. They could have warned him they were trying to contact him in order to meet Sehri. If he had known they would do something like this he would have acted sooner. His father and others had joined the transmission by the time Carisia and he returned and he endured several moments of embarrassment as everyone was introduced. It was a pleasant conversation after that as they were introduced to the nieces of Praetorian Murano. Soon though it became a female thing as he, his father and Murano were rapidly phased out of the conversation. This didn't bother Andro as he saw his father's discrete hand motion and he excused himself from his quarters. He grabbed a large mug of coffee from the mess lounge before coming here to his office. He waited until the door sealed shut and locked before crossing the room and touching the panel on his desk.

"Activate QCR Channel Androcles Three Nine Secure." He spoke.

The newly installed QCR disc in the corner of his office burst to life with the image of his father in another area of the ship and alone. It appeared to be a smaller lounge of some sort and he watched as his father turned from the view window which currently showed several million stars and a large nebula in the background.

"Father." He said as Martin turned to face him.

"Finally." Martin said as he looked at his oldest son from within the transmission. "She is beautiful Andro." He said. "And very sharp."

Andro smiled. "Yes she is. And stubborn."

Martin grinned. "Well... easy women don't tend to draw our attention or interest son." He spoke.

Andro shook his head. "No they do not. Though you could have assisted me a little more."

Martin chuckled. "And risk the wrath of your mothers? Hah! Even I'm not that brave." Martin told him.

Andro shook his head and smiled an embarrassed smile. "They will never change." He said.

"No they won't." Martin told him. "And they are wondering what exactly your problem is? I'm wondering that. What boned headed piece of honor did you use to decide to let one of your wives and mates leave your side? I thought I taught you better than that?"

Andro moved to his chair and sat down. "I thought I was doing the right thing." He said.

"Bullshit!" Martin snapped as he moved around a large table and sat. "You should have known better boy! What happen is your fault Andro. Not hers. You let her leave before you made her see what she meant to you and the others. You let her leave confused and unfocused. With a father who has hated our people and taught her to dislike us her entire life. She caught a glimpse of how wrong he was but you should never have let her go. What happen is your fault son. You can not blame her. Not after everything you told me she endured before finding her. From what I understand about these Eridiani assholes from Wayonn... they are real good at screwing with people's heads. That sonofabitch probably saw how upset and confused she was and he took advantage of it."

Andro met his father's eyes. "I have never blamed Caliria father." He said softly. "I have always blamed myself."

"Good... cause the blame rests solely with you." Martin told him sternly. "Now you need to fix it! I expect you to fix it! If Sadi and the others have not demanded you go get her then I am telling you now to do just that!"

Andro met the dark eyes of his father. "I have every intention of doing that father." He told him. "You did not raise a fool."

"I know I didn't Andro!" Martin hissed. "But sometimes you get like me and someone needs to hit you in the head with a board to make you see things as they are. It is not the same set of circumstances as with your mother... but it is similar and you need to fix it boy! I damn well expect you to fix it... and quickly! Do not let it go for one moment longer than necessary! She is... she is part of your essence son. And you know as well as I that they are your strength, just as your mothers are my strength."

"I can't just drop everything no matter how much I want to father." Andro said. "You know that!"

Martin nodded as he settled into the chair within the transmission and Andro did the same in his office. "I know... and I don't expect you too. I have been reading your reports however and I have some ideas."

"Gods... I'll take any advice." Andro spoke.

"These numbers you have sent to me?" Martin asked. "They are accurate son?"

Andro nodded his head. "To the best of my knowledge... yes. Most of the Intel came from Resumar and I detached OMEN SIX to his command. He is using her well. Pian offered the rest willingly."

"It appears that Keleru's hold on power is not as strong as he wants everyone to think." Martin spoke thoughtfully. "If there are as many Prides as Pian suggests... that could be our Ace card."

“Keleru still has an enormous power base father.” Andro said. “One that he has cultivated for many years.”

Martin nodded. “Yes... too many years.” He said.

Andro looked at him oddly in the transmission. “What do you mean?”

Martin looked at him. “I’ve had some interesting conversations with Muton since he has joined us and since Avi was able to link to the history banks on SPARTA’S WRATH, I have been doing some homework.”

“Ok... I’ll bite father.” Andro said. “What do you suspect?”

“Muton says that his grandmother left logs in the beginning.” Martin said. “They are long since lost... but he discovered she is one of the four that Arzoal sent off Elear initially with the dragons.”

“So she was a Pralor?” Andro said. “That would explain the Pralor blood within them.”

Martin nodded. “Yes. Now we know that those dragons eventually were happened upon by the Pralors we have run across out here. Which means the ones Arzoal sent back were reunited with their people. We know that Muton’s grandmother apparently convinced a bunch of others to return with her and try to make things right with the Kavalian species.”

Andro nodded. “Something that didn’t work out so well it appears.” He said.

Martin nodded. “What if it wasn’t their choice to return?” Martin said.

Andro’s eyes narrowed. “What do you mean?”

Martin shook his head. “I haven’t put it all together yet son... but I think the assholes we are dealing with here had a hand in Muton’s grandmother and others returning to Cabelir. Your mother is discovering a lot of information from logs we happened to appropriate and...”

“Appropriate?” Andro asked with a smile.

Martin shrugged. “Ok... stole.” He quipped. “Considering who we took them from... I’m not going to lose any sleep over that.” He said. “When she finds out more I’m going to sit down with Muton and go over it all again. There are too many coincidences Andro.”

“It will be interesting to discover what you find.” Andro said.

Martin chuckled. “You say that now.” He said. “Wait to you meet the fuglies we are dealing with out here. Big old scaly fuckers. Nasty as all hell and just as smelly as they look.” He said. “They are able to infect and change others into them.”

“Change them?” Andro asked.

Martin nodded. “At the molecular DNA level.” He answered. “But they retain at least some of their memories from their old life. Their hard to kill and how they change you is not in the least bit pleasant.”

Andro saw the look on his father’s face. “I not sure I want to know.” He said.

“You’re heading back to Earth right?” Martin asked.

Andro nodded. “Yes. We should arrive in a little under two hours.”

“Pull Pian aside.” Martin said as he plugged his P1 into the slot on the table where he sat. “This is what I want you to find out.”

Andro withdrew his own P1 and plugged it into an identical slot at his desk. He saw the pulsing of the light for a few seconds and then a solid green indicating the information had been received. He pulled the P1 out and looked at the small screen for a moment before looking up at his father.

“Interesting father.” He said.

Martin nodded his head. “I’ve discovered a lot from Muton... much of it no one outside the Kavalian Federation knows. With good reason.”

“I would think so.” Andro agreed. “It could very well set in motion a wave that will not be stopped.”

Martin nodded in agreement with his son. “I think Pian may be that wave.” He said. “Meet with him... and the others that come with him. Try to get a feel for them. If what I think is happening is in fact the truth, then we will need to act accordingly.”

“I agree.” Andro said. Andro looked up from the pad. “And my Uncle?”

Martin looked into his son’s eyes. “He’s a walking around dead man son. He just doesn’t know it yet.” He replied. “His time will come very soon... and it will not be pleasant.” Martin shifted in his chair. “Andro... I need to thank you for Fedor and Eirene. What you did son... it was a big risk and you did it to save your mother and siblings. They remind me of Normya and Denali in their mannerisms you know.” Martin smiled. “You should see the look on her face whenever she's around Miso. He treats her like she is gold plated. And Fedor is getting around to claiming Iama. Took her some time to see it but I think Helen had a talk with her."

Andro smiled warmly. "Good." He said. "And I think you know I will always protect my siblings father."

Martin nodded. "That I do." He said.

"Kalis father?" Andro asked. "My P1 detected the activation of the COM link. Is he..."

Martin nodded with a small smile. "The last report from your sister says he broke away. He apparently stole a couple of ships and escaped. She was moving to link up with him. I haven't heard from her yet but I expect to shortly."

"Pusintin will not let him go so easily father." Andro spoke.

Martin nodded. "Don't worry... I have a plan." He stated confidently. "It's already in motion."

"Then I look forward to seeing him." Andro said.

"How is Dorian coming?" Martin asked. "Have you started him on the Tomes?"

Andro nodded. "The first one. Three days ago." He replied. "He also came to me with..." Andro stopped talking for a moment as if trying to find the words.

"What is it?" Martin asked.

Andro looked at his father. "He came to me with some information he discovered. We have decided to keep it between us and Ryner and Elynth for the moment. It is not something you would do I know... but I think we can use this to our advantage. And we don't want the Durcunusaan or our mothers to know about it for different reasons."

"Spit it out boy!" Martin hissed. "Don't dance around it. Not involving the Durcunusaan tells me they wouldn't like it. Not telling your mothers makes me shiver in my boots."

"It may be a way to discover Dante and his father. Where they are." Andro told him. "We are not completely sure but I need you to trust us on this father. We will put it in writing and explain it all to you and why... but Dorian and I want you to leave this to us. Let us do it our way. The Feravomir would understand I think... I know you share things with her that you don't share with our mothers. At least not at first."

Martin stared at his oldest son for a long moment. Andro held the Durcunusaan in the highest regard Martin knew, more so than his brothers and sisters in many ways, and for him to want to leave them out of the loop on something was saying a lot. And trust was never an issue as far as Martin was concerned. Martin nodded his head. "Ok... I'll let you run with it son. The only thing I will say is if you get the opportunity... you snatch those two sorry fuckers and you make sure it takes them three very long and painful days to die."

Andro's azure eyes narrowed. "That was never in question father." He said.

"Good." Martin said. "One more thing... I want you to take command of SPARTA'S WRATH Andro."

Androcles looked at him. "I thought she would be Res's ship father." Andro said.

Martin shook his head. "PILLAR OF FAITH is enough for him now."

"Then you should take command of her." Andro said. "She should be your flagship."

Martin shook his head. "No. She is the biggest, meanest and most advanced warship we have. We'll be kicking out stuff in the future based on her... but she is the first. She needs someone in command who is recognizable. When she goes somewhere I want people to sit up and take notice. If you are in command they will. Avi says that even though Resumar found him, 341 has studied everything about you and taken many of your traits."

"Mine?" Andro said.

Martin nodded. "An Avatar will simulate the one they are assigned to. It appears 341 has chosen you just like Avi chose me when I took my first steps into CS41." He said. "You have established a reputation as someone who is not to be fucked with son. People fear you. They know the usual bullshit won't work with you and that you will not hesitate to blow their asses into space if need be."

Andro chuckled. "A lot of that reputation carries over from you thank you very much."

Martin smiled at him. "You know what I mean. Promote Sa'sur... it's about time she made Admiral anyway. Put her in overall command of your Strike Force but you take command of SPARTA'S WRATH. You'll understand later."

Andro nodded. "Very well." He said.

Martin nodded and sat back in the chair. “Good. Now give me a brief rundown on how things are progressing for Narice and Arrarn and then tell me about Yuri and what she is up to lately. I imagine she’s got her hands in all sort of things I won’t like.”

Andro smiled. “I know where they are father.” He said. “And you might be surprised about what she is doing.”

Martin looked at him. “Really?”

“I think Xaxon’s essence had more influence over her actions than even we suspect father.” Andro spoke. “More than she suspects. I’m waiting for Marcie to confirm a few things but she is not the same person as you once knew. Well... she is but she isn’t.”

Martin’s head tilted slightly and he nodded. “Ok... I may be biased I admit that. Start with Narice and Arrarn and then fill me in on Yuri.”

ARC ROYAL FEDOR’S QUARTERS

Iama took another small bite out of the fuzzy fruit as her soft green eyes gazed longingly at Fedor’s tall, powerful body on the bed. She wore only a button down shirt she had found in his closet. She didn’t care for the light blue color but it was all there was since her jumpsuit lay on the floor of the bedroom torn into three different pieces. As her long tail twitched contently behind her Iama remembered those first moments with a smile. She practically had to force herself upon him, but once his wolf passion for her ignited, it was all Iama could do to keep from passing out in heavenly delight.

Iama’Juturi had been forced to submit to more men than she cared to try and remember in her time within the brothels on Nefoa. In that time she had come to view sex as a tool to get what she wanted. That mentality had begun to change the moment Fedor had first kissed her on Onterom. Many of the fools who had taken her had tried to kiss her through the years, but none of them had even come close to stealing her breath away as Fedor had. His lips were so soft and warm and they caressed her own like the petals of a flower. She couldn’t believe she had almost lost control then, every pleasure receptor she had within her body firing to life in the exact same moment, including many she had no idea herself that she possessed. Each kiss thereafter that he had given her, and there were many, all of them had done the same thing. Iama realized it was not the physical contact so much as the emotion behind it. There was lustful desire in his kisses, she would be worried if there wasn’t, but it was the way he kissed her. The way his hands held her face or his arms drew tight around his waist. The times he held her off the floor and kissed her. She couldn’t keep her tail from reacting of its own accord and flailing madly at times due to the intense emotions surging through her.

The power of his kisses here in his quarters had not only stolen her breath away, but they had returned every shred of dignity to her that Iama had thought lost forever. He was so eager yet so inexperienced, and still as his hands roamed her body with the newness of a child’s new toy, everywhere he touched lit her lithe frame on fire. She had presented herself to him quickly in the submissive show of the females of her species and had nearly broken into tears when he dismissed this and continued his exploration. She had done it willingly, so caught up in the emotion of the moment and still his only thought was to give back to her all that had been taken. Iama had whimpered and cried out for what seemed like hours as his lip and tongue and hands explored every portion of her body with insane slowness. His fingers had quickly found the extremely sensitive portion of her lower back, just above where her tail entered her tailbone. As his lips and tongue brought her to one staggering climax after another his fingers danced across this portion of her body, heightening her pleasure to levels unknown to her. Her cries of passion and unabashed delight filled his quarters continuously for what seemed like hours. When she could take no more she had to pull his head from between her thighs, so unwilling was he to leave her delicious center.

It was then that the wolf in him finally took over and as his lips, still saturated in her juices, came down on hers Iama could only scream into his kiss in mind blowing ecstasy as his entire length filled her in one powerful thrust. Fedor speared her completely in a single life altering plunge that ended with the most staggering orgasm she had yet to experience in her young life. He changed then, no longer the shy and tentative man child she had first considered him, and he became a man. He became her man... and he was going to do everything within his power to make her see it. He didn't last long after that first plunge before his explosion sent her into a world she never dreamed could exist after all she had endured. The volume of his passion was unlike anything she had experienced as it filled her and cleansed her very soul.

And it was not over by any stretch of her imagination.

Seven hours it had gone on. Seven glorious hours in which Iama Juturi was reborn and reshaped into what she had always secretly hoped for. As his shyness burned away, Fedor took her in every position he could possibly think of. Her playful laughter at his eagerness at times was quickly cut off by her wails of bliss as pleasure once more crashed through her mind and body. She had been almost right about his size, certainly not as large as one of the vile Kavalian men who had forced themselves on her, but more than large enough to make her feel completely full and satisfied. He was also much thicker than she had envisioned, which only added to her incredible enchantment. She was sore now, but not in the harsh manner of her previous life. It was an exquisite soreness that filled her with equal parts desire and unrequited love for the man lying next to her. Not once had he even considered making her feel submissive to him in any way. He refused her attentions to his pleasure, committed to making her experience everything she never had.

He had succeeded. Oh had he succeeded.

Iama was quite sure she could not go another day forward without Fedor in it. He had given her everything she had desired to have but was cruelly denied in her life. There would be no other men in her life now. All she would ever crave was Fedor Leonidas. She belonged to him in every sense of the word. Body. Heart. Mind and soul. He had claimed her in the fashion of his wolf half, and as she drifted off into a sleep of supreme contentment, her body wrapped protectively within his arms, he had promised to make her his in the fashion of his elven blood.

Her soft green eyes found the scars on his back where those horrible spikes had entered his body as he shielded her from harm. They were still slightly pink in color, two of them almost jagged in nature. His actions on Onterom were the quintessential profession of his love for her. He was willing to give his life in order to safeguard her. She had seen the determined gaze in his eyes that split second before the explosion and Iama knew then, even as he wrapped his arms around her protectively, Iama knew that she would be his forever.

Holding the fruit in one hand Iama leaned over and let her lips graze the puncture scars on his back as she stretched her lithe frame against his naked body and brought her cheek to the side of his head as her long, white blond hair cascaded over his opposite shoulder. Her full breasts were pressed against the backs of his shoulders, her hips against his lower back. Her tail gently curled around his left thigh, the tip coming to rest just above his knee where it flipped back and forth as if it had a mind of its own.

"Fedor... wake up?" She whispered into his ear

Iama saw his lips curl into a smile. "Why?" He asked. "I was having this incredible dream. There was... there was this vision of womanly beauty in it. She smelled of sweet kiwi and had eyes of satin green."

Iama grinned and rested her cheek against his as she inched her body further up on his back. "Really? Did... did this woman please you in this dream?"

Fedor opened his eyes and turned his head slightly. "It was the most incredible thing. She kept calling me her Avonbode. In between her cries of delight and nibbling on my ears of course."

Iama turned her head and nibbled on his two inch high elven ear as she had done often in the hours before as she clutched him, knowing it was an erogenous zone for elves. "Don't tease me!" She exclaimed softly. "What is... what is this Avon...bode?"

Fedor turned his head even more. "It is Lycavorian for man child." He said. "She kept making these strange noises when she tried to finish the word though and it never really came out clearly."

Iama's green eyes glittered in happiness. "Perhaps she could not finish this word because your very touch upon her caused her to experience pleasure beyond her most wild imaginations. Beyond anything she thought she would ever feel Fedor."

"You think so?" Fedor asked as he rotated his body to the side and shifted to his back. Iama shifted as well, finally settling on his chest and he reached up to push some of her hair from her face. "I was about to ask her that very question when you woke me up." He spoke.

Iama stared into his beautiful dark eyes. "I think maybe yes." She said confidently.

"So... am I still an Avonbode?" He asked her softly.

Iama closed her eyes at his touch as he stroked her jaw and she smiled. “Yes. But you are my Avonbode.” She said wistfully. “And I will never share.”

Fedor smiled as he gazed at her beauty. “Good.”

“What’s my name Fedor?” She asked opening her eyes and staring at him again.

“Iama’Juturi Leonidas!” He answered instantly.

Iama couldn’t help the warmth that spread over her at those three words. When he whispered them to her just before she drifted to sleep she had wanted to cry out in blissful happiness. “What’s my name?” She asked again.

Fedor smiled again and nuzzled the bottom of her ear. “Iama’Juturi Leonidas.” He said again.

Iama opened her eyes and looked at him. “Promise me that we will... that you will love me tomorrow as you do now Fedor. Promise me!”

Fedor pushed himself into a sitting position, pulling her into his lap, his hands spreading across her back as her tail wrapped around his upper arm. “I can’t promise you tomorrow Iama. You know that.” He said softly seeing her eyes grow wider. “We can not predict what tomorrow will bring.”

“But you...” She began to draw away from him in hurt. “I thought...”

Fedor held her tightly as he looked into her eyes a smile spreading across his handsome features. “I can’t promise you tomorrow Iama, but I can promise you that with every beat of my heart, with every breath I take until I leave this life and go to the gods, I can promise I will love you without question or hesitation or regret.” Iama felt her eyes grow instantly moist at his soft words and she dropped the fruit she was holding to the floor and reached for his face as he continued. “My heart beats only for you Iama’Juturi Leonidas. It will beat only for you and you can hear my thoughts in every beat.”

“Oh... oh Fedor!” Iama stammered as tears poured from her eyes.

Fedor pulled her even closer, Iama feeling his wonderful manhood between her thighs now, but with no hint of arousal. This was not the time and he was showing her that, just as his MedwanGai told him to do.

“Let her know that you love her Fedor. Let her know you worship her and that your cock doesn’t overrule your heart boy. You’ll know when the time is right. When the moment comes... seize it! Hold nothing back! Do that... do that and they will be yours forever and a day.”

Having her body in his arms was about as arousing as it could get for Fedor but he fought down those emotions easily because he truly did love this woman. He had from the first moment he had smelled her sweet kiwi scent.

“You are... you are my wife and mate now Iama’Juturi.” Fedor told her, his eyes never leaving her face. “And I will worship you as a wife and mate should be worshiped. With everything that I am.”

Iama’Juturi had no words to speak as she stared at him with wide eyes that were blurry with tears. She did the only thing she could think of at the moment and she pulled his head to her breasts and hugged him tighter than she had ever hugged anything in her life. She felt his powerful arms crush her to him and more tears came rushing forth. Tears of happiness. Tears of rebirth. Tears of discovery.

But most of all... tears of a love Iama’Juturi was sure she would never find. It was hers now. Hers for the taking.

And Iama’Juturi had every intention of taking it and holding on to it for the rest of eternity.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

It was one of the very rare times that he and Elynth had flown down to Cranae Island on a STRIKER. It always felt odd when they did this because both of them so enjoyed viewing their home from above with nothing around them but the sky and clouds. Deia had informed him that the Netnews had crews set up all along the shore in Gytheio waiting to catch a glimpse of him when he returned, though she said they were being very respectful and were not pressing the Durcumusaan officers near the mainland side of the causeway, and she suggested trying to keep his return low key. If that was really possible at all. There had been many stories done by the Netnews about his actions on Solmar and not all of them showed him in a positive light. Several more militant Netnews reporters criticized him for not destroying the invading Kavalians. They more than deserved it in their eyes. In many eyes Andro knew... and those were the eyes he would need to change.

Andro stood at the top of the ramp watching as Lu'ria and Carisia joined Majeir and Anthar in greeting Lu'ria's mother Daba. Sehri was with them and he could see her hugging her mother tightly while Ibani and Osbela stood to the side with stern looks on their faces. Andro smiled at that. Sehri's sisters had tried to entice him, even after he had claimed Sehri. He was not real high on their list of people they cared for at the moment. Sehri had taken it in stride, not even bothering to reprimand her sisters for she could see into Andro's mind and she knew he had no attraction to them in the least. He turned as Elynth's bulk moved up behind him slowly, Caydren and Cinol on either side of her and growing rapidly. Sadi and Ne'Veha would be able to begin riding them within a month or so he estimated. They were going to be on the large side for the Firespitter breed, just like their father.

Are you feeling overwhelmed Andro my brother. Elynth spoke softly.

Andro met her golden eyes. Not really sister. Perhaps a little. He answered. It is more that I don't want to deal with all the politics. I'm no politician.

And that is why you have others who are better suited for that role than you. Elynth told him. And you should use them. Just as your father does.

We could just burn all of them Prince Andro. Caydren spoke from beside Elynth.

Andro laughed as Elynth turned her head and looked at Caydren. You aren't allowed to burn men and women because they choose to work in politics Caydren. She told him.

Why not? Cinol asked. Ne'Veha has said many times she wants to kill the elven Ministers on Elear.

It would be much easier Elynth. Caydren spoke.

Elynth shook her head. You can't... it's that simple. Andro... tell them.

Andro shook his head and laughed once more. I agree with them sister. He stated with humor.

You are not to burn any politician Caydren. Sadi's voice filled their minds. Is that clear?

They turned to see Sadi and Ne'Veha moving from the small flight of stairs into the cockpit.

Nor are you Cinol. Ne'Veha spoke sternly.

Finally! The voices of reason and calm. Elynth declared. And imagine that... they are female.

Sadi chuckled as she walked up to Caydren and ran her hands down his powerful side. Only kill the ones I tell you. She told him.

Sadi! Elynth declared in abject horror. Her voice did not allow her to pull it off entirely though and Andro laughed harder.

Listen to you sister. He spoke as Sadi took his hand. Your talons are twitching.

Elynth's golden eyes blinked several times and then she shook her massive head. It didn't work did it?

Not in the least. Andro said.

Ah well... I tried. Elynth spoke.

Andro reached up and stroked the scales under her thick neck. Maybe next time sister. When you are not around those who know better.

I thought I had gotten so good at telling falsehoods. Elynth said. I will need to work on that more. Maybe my delivery?

Andro nodded. That's probably it. He said as Ne'Veha gasped in delight and rushed down the ramp into the waiting arms of her grandmother Na'rnoas who stood beside her mate and husband Jonout. Cinol followed without question and Ne'Veha turned quickly and reached for Cinol's muzzle as she introduced him to her grandmother. Andro watched as they stood there without fear and Na'rnoas even reached up to run her hands along his scales.

He gripped Sadi's hand tightly. "Come KertaGai. They will all eventually make their way to the villa. Let's beat them there."

Sadi grinned and gripped his arm tightly as they headed down the ramp.

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

“...are they talking about?” Sehri asked from her seat between her mother and Gorgo. Sadi sat on the opposite side of Gorgo in a comfortable chair while Ne'Veha, Lu'ria, Carisia all occupied two lounge chairs. Eliani, Lisisa, Normya, Zarah and Lucia were sitting at a nearby table with Narice, Toria and Athani picking at the dozens of different choices of food that Gorgo and Dasha had prepared. It had been a long time since they had been able to indulge as they were and all of them were enjoying it.

The patio on Cranae Island was full of nearly all of the remaining Leonidas family which made the Durcunusaan extra alert and mindful of everything going on around the island. There were several dozen members of the Netnews who were trying to get the remote drones close enough to the island to see what was going on while Dilaen was directing two specially chosen Netnews crews into different locations to take images and perhaps conduct small interviews. Retta and Calyb were sitting with Mara and Endeem and the other dragons in the large hay covered area off to the side listening to Elynth and Jeth fill them in on what happen on Solmar. They were both fifteen now and only one year shy of going through their own Agoge as Nara and Deion were now doing. Retta, her dark red hair aside, was looking more and more like her father while Calyb was taking on more of his mother's features.

Gorgo had found a fast friend in Aleatia. They were very close in age and as they spent time together she found they had many things in common and liked many of the same things. When she met Sehri she was taken by her beauty and calm demeanor even with everything that was going on around her so quickly. And once more Gorgo had wondered how her grandson had succeeded, like his father, in getting so many different and exquisitely beautiful women to love him so completely. Gorgo also knew, as she did with her son, that Sadi was the center of Andro's universe just as Aricia was for Martin. The comparisons of Sadi to her continued to happen unabated in Sparta while Aricia was already worshiped within the city because of her history here. Sadi's history was now well known and though Icho had tried to use that against her in the beginning; it had quickly backfired as the Lycavorians Spartans within the city saw the strength behind her jungle green eyes and what she had endured in order to protect her father.

Sadi's total devotion to Androcles was held up on a level with the Queens towards Martin and Andro's other wives and mates were rapidly gaining popularity and influence though they did not know it just yet. Ne'Veha was highly regarded among the millions of elves and people of Sparta and Earth just as Dysea and For'mya were. Carisia was idolized by the entire vampire population across the Union, and Lu'ria had an influence that was second only to Sadi because of her Drow blood and heritage. Gorgo had no doubt that when Andro retrieved Caliria, she would also find that her medical skills and connection to the Vanari would give her staunch influence and Sehri would soon take notice that while she may have called herself Rothryn, she was considered Lycavorian in every sense by the people.

As she let her eyes wander over those gathered Gorgo knew each of them here now was special. Narice and Toria held the respect and admiration of the entire Spartan Senate for what they had accomplished in so short a time, as well as their well documented and intense love of Arrarn. Athani was far more beloved than she knew for her decision to return to Kavalian space even though she had a death sentence against her. Her decision to return and help her people and remain by Resumar's side had secured her reputation among the Lycavorian people with stunning wide spread support. Lucia had quickly been accepted as she and Zarah walked among the markets with Gorgo. Everyone now knew what she had done and the role she had played in saving Zarah's life. Their love for each other was gaining much notoriety and the comparisons to Tarifa and Aihola and Selene and Lynwe were growing daily. Cha'talla's actions and those of his sons in rescuing Dysea and spearheading the resurgence of the ancient Akruvian honor had made Tir'ut somewhat of a celebrity. He was often seen with Normya visiting schools in the last weeks and having no qualms about roughhousing with the children in the many playgrounds. His massive size did not deter the small ones and even the dullest individual could see his total devotion to Normya and hers for him.

Gorgo knew Aleatia could not have been happier for her daughter. She had talked at length with Gorgo about Androcles and the conversation she had with him on Solmar. Aleatia had been so very impressed to say the least and Gorgo told her that he had learned from his father well.

Gorgo allowed her eyes to finally settle on Eliani and for the first time she noticed the sense of calm and happiness that permeated her being. Jomann had tamed the wild Leonidas daughter and done so in a way that made certain Eliani would only continue to be extremely well respected and adored by the people. Eliani still had her mother's temper, but now it was tightly in control. She was still a very emotional young woman, but Jomann's influence had tempered her base instincts. And Gorgo knew that Eliani worshiped Jomann with every breath. Gorgo always caught her looking at her husband and mate at odd times, her green eyes alive and bright and happy. And Jomann doted over her and did not care who saw. The diminutive Leonidas Princess and the huge Spartan Captain made quite the pair. That they were Anomes was even more telling, as the instances of non-Lycavorian pureblood Anomes was so rare Gorgo could count the number on one hand. And Gorgo knew without doubt that Brendi Faith would soon join Eliani and Jomann for the Eridiani woman could not hide what her eyes told everyone when she was around Eli or Jomann. Gorgo also knew that of all his brothers and sisters, Eliani would be the one who was always beside her brother Androcles. She had taken it upon herself to be his personal caretaker and now that her mate was his Captain, this would never change.

Gorgo turned and followed Sehri's eyes at her question and she saw Androcles walking along the edge of the water with his brothers, Jomann and Tir'ut. That the four of them were related could not be denied. Andro, Resumar, Arrarn and Dorian were near perfect specimens of healthy young Spartan men. All of them looked so much like their father, tall and muscular and so well defined. So much so that Gorgo knew many young Lycavorian females swooned over them and despaired that all of them were taken and committed to their wives and mates. When you added in Jomann and Tir'ut and you had six incredibly powerful young men, all connected to the Leonidas family in some way and among the most honorable men Gorgo had ever known in her life. It seemed that her family was touching many aspects of different species and cultures within the known universe and doing so in a way that would bring about permanent change for the better.

Gorgo noticed that none of them wore shirts and the sun beat down on already deeply tanned and muscular skin as they walked together along the shore.

"Knowing my grandsons as I do..." Gorgo spoke finally. "They are probably scheming and devising new ways to defeat our enemies in the most horrible of ways. And corrupting poor Tir'ut and Jomann in the process."

Eliani chuckled from her lounge seat. "Hah! Probably comparing notes on us too!" She quipped playfully. "They are all perverts!"

"As if you don't enjoy Jomann's perversions Eli?" Zarah stuck the rib to her. "You are such a pomai."

Eliani smiled from ear to ear. "Well... I never said he wasn't creative." She spoke with a decidedly sexual overtone.

This brought laughter from all of them and Athani sat back in her chair with a relaxed air about her that she did not have before. Her time as Resumar's wife had changed her and she thoroughly enjoyed the new her. Knowing that she was completely accepted among these men and women and that her sister Jalersi had found in Pian what she had found in Resumar had given her life new purpose. Their influence on her was also beginning to show as she grinned seductively.

"Resumar's perversions are very inventive if I do say so myself. I rather enjoy them." She commented.

Narice looked at Toria and smiled. "As are Arrarn's."

They all laughed more as Gorgo shook her head. "You see Aleatia... my grandsons have corrupted such fine, beautiful women. Just like their father."

"So grandfather Riall is not perverted grandmother?" Normya asked with a smile.

Gorgo looked at her. "I never said that." She answered with a grin. "Riall is... wonderful really. Magnificent and..."

"Stop!" Ne'Veha almost shouted. "I will never be able to look at the Admiral in the same way again if you continue Gorgo!"

They all laughed at the look on Gorgo's face and even Aleatia couldn't hold back her own comment. "Dyack does tend to be very... resourceful in our bed." She said.

Sehri twisted around and looked at her. "Mother!" She exclaimed.

Aleatia laughed. "Well... since we are all being so truthful I thought I would give my feelings as well. Your father is very attentive and..." She said.

"Enough!" Sehri exclaimed.

More laughter ensued further as Dilaen led the Netnews crew along the edge of the patio pointing out certain things as they snapped images of the dragons and Leonidas females on the patio. However... all of them wanted to be on the beach discovering what the Leonidas brothers were talking of.

"... can field probably a thousand ships with all the Prides together." Resumar was speaking as they walked along the water's edge. "All of them have fought the Coven and are experienced. We've also picked up hints that many of the senior officers are becoming wary of Keleru and his motives Andro. We don't know if this is true or not though. Mican is trying to get his people in deeper but it's slow and dangerous."

"Don't let him take unnecessary risks Res." Andro spoke. "His people are too valuable. Once Na'lia is able to manufacture a mass distribution system for the clone serum he'll need to rally them. You said she is close?"

Resumar nodded. "She has two Hadarians helping her. Last time Mican checked in he said they were only weeks away from a viable mass vaccination."

"You have escaped routes plotted from the Val'istar's home?" Andro asked.

Resumar nodded his head. "Nine of them. If we even get a slight hint that an attack is coming, every noncombatant will pull up and leave within two hours. We've drilled on it several times. I'm telling you... Pian is very careful. And he has no mercy in him for anyone who wants the status quo to continue. Jalersi either. I've spoken to Pian's mother at length and he has been like this since falling for Jalersi. Everything he has done for twenty years has been to win her love. Now that he has that... he lives for seeing his people free so that he can give her everything. And seeing the sisters work together is very interesting to say the least."

Andro nodded in agreement. "That is good to hear. Knowing that there are many like Pian is very good news." He said. "Father is going to talk to them when Pian has them all together. I have an idea of what he will say and offer but not all of it. You know how close lipped he can be."

"We can hurt them from the inside Andro." Resumar spoke. "Hurt them badly with the right support."

Andro nodded his head. "No doubt... but father doesn't believe Keleru's hold on his empire is as absolute as everyone seems to think."

"You think he's bluffing?" Tir'ut asked surprised by this information.

Andro nodded again. "In part yes."

Tir'ut whistled. "That would be a huge piece of information." He said.

"A nubous bomb! Especially after Solmar. Azlenr and Byka defecting to General Pian is huge!" Dorian added.

Arrarn looked at Resumar. "You think Pian and the others will go for Narice's proposal Res?"

Resumar shrugged his shoulders. "That I don't know Arrarn." He replied honestly to his younger brother. "There's a lot of bad blood."

"On both sides fervon." Arrarn chimed in.

"No doubt about that... yes" Resumar said. "With grandfather helping them, Pian believes the Coven is recovering faster than they would have normally. I told him it had more to do with Narice than grandfather Riall. Her proposal would certainly show that the Coven is no threat to them." Resumar looked at Andro. "Can we support both?"

Andro smiled and nodded. "That's one thing we can do easily." He said quickly. "You know how father hoards. We have more than enough to support both operations and then some. With grandfather within Coven space however, what we lack is a serious show of physical support for Pian. That is what father is going to speak to them about I'm pretty sure. He's got ideas within ideas in his head. Some he hasn't even shared with me."

"That could be very good or very bad knowing father." Arrarn said with a smile as he looked at Andro. "Especially now that you guys have discovered what it is that lets you do whatever it is you do. You said that this Paladin gene you, father, Dorian and maybe Deion carry lets you feel him even here on Earth?"

“It’s growing stronger for me…” Dorian answered quickly. “It’s like a distant sense. I can feel Andro and Jomann easily… but I only catch intermittent emotions from father. I’m also detecting Deion more and more so he has to have the gene.”

“As he continues with the Tomes it will become stronger.” Jomann spoke now. “It did for me. And I am feeling Deion as well.”

Andro nodded his head. “Jomann and I can feel father and the Praetorian Murano that travels with him if we concentrate hard enough. No doubt they can do the same. It’s easier with Elynth helping us but we can do it alone. Deion is growing quickly. I may have to pull him out of his Agoge to get him the training he needs. Or somehow adjust his training.”

“What about Nara?” Resumar asked.

“She’s is harder to get a read on.” Andro replied. “I think so… we can sense fleeting images only right now.”

“Images?” Arrarn asked. “What images?”

Andro looked at him. “A blond woman. I’ve never seen her before so I don’t know if it is a real person or if Nara has seen her somewhere before. The images are… vivid, so I won’t go into them. Not without Nara knowing we can sense her.”

“So this gene is only happening with those of us that are pureblood?” Arrarn asked.

Andro looked at him. “Arrarn… you don’t think…?”

Arrarn shook his head quickly. “What? No!” He exclaimed swiftly. “Carians no Andro! I know… I think we all know that whatever this power you and the others have will not change you. To be honest I’m glad I don’t have it. I wouldn’t want the… I wouldn’t want the burden.” Arrarn said with a sober tone.

“It’s not limited to purebloods.” Resumar said. “It can’t be. Dori isn’t pureblood.”

Andro shook his head. “No… but father’s blood is as pure as it gets and so is our mother Isabella’s. The combination must have something to do with it. I need to talk to Val’istar Shiria when she returns tomorrow to know for certain.”

“I would not want this power either.” Tir’ut echoed. “Discovering my father is bonded to a dragon was enough… but to know I had such ability… I would not think of it as a gift.”

Andro looked at Dorian and then Jomann. “Believe me… there are days where we don’t consider it a gift either.”

“Now ain’t that the nubous truth.” Dorian commented.

“So father and our mothers found Pralors?” Resumar said shaking his head and changing the subject quickly. He knew his brothers and Jomann did not want to continue the path of that conversation. “They always manage to do the impossible you know.”

Andro smiled in agreement. “I questioned what he was doing at first but it seems they found what they were looking for yes. It didn’t work out as well as he thought, but things have gotten better in the last few days from what he told me as we returned to Earth.”

“Fedor?” Resumar asked. “Eirene?”

Andro nodded to him in reassurance. “Both of them are doing very well.” He said. “As are our mothers.”

“And you fervon! You bad boy!” Arrarn chortled as he stuck a finger in Dorian’s ribs. “Your Durcunusaan Captain? You dog!”

Dorian smiled shyly. “She doesn’t want too many people to know fervon so please keep it low key.” He said.

Arrarn sobered quickly and nodded his head. He could be very tight lipped when he wanted and if his brother wanted that Arrarn would not violate his trust. “Ah… her duties. Got it.” He said.

“Sheva is… she is very professional.” Jomann said thoughtfully. “I have not tried to tell her that she is now considered a Princess.”

Dorian looked at him with wide eyes. “Sibfla… don’t do that!” He exclaimed. “She’ll go nuts! I’m still trying to get her to loosen up more in public!”

Jomann laughed. “Don’t worry… she would probably strike me if I did.” He said. “You will need to tell her eventually though. She needs to know Dorian. Her words will carry far more weight once it is discovered. And it will be discovered eventually.”

“I know. I know.” He said. “I just want to take things real slow.” He replied looking at Andro knowingly. “She is very private.”

Andro nodded his head. “Don’t worry Dorian.” He said. “She will have nothing to worry about. I told you that.”

Dorian nodded as they stopped walking and he held out the data pad to Arrarn. “I need you to have Narice check this out for me Arrarn.” He said.

Arrarn took the pad confused and he read quickly. His eyes narrowed somewhat and he looked up at his brother. “You’re sure Dorian? This...”

Dorian nodded slowly. “I need to know why?”

“We need to know.” Andro spoke. “This knowledge remains between us here.” He told them as Arrarn passed the pad to Tir’ut and he then passed it to Resumar after reading it swiftly. “Cha’talla may be able to help and you can include him... but no one outside of Narice, Toria and yourself on your end Arrarn. At least not now. Tir’ut... I would like you to work it on this end. More and more Akruvians are coming to Earth now with Esther’s approval. You can move among them easier and discover things we can not. And among the vampires as well. There are connections here on Earth; Dorian and I have determined that. We need to find them.”

Arrarn looked at him. “This could be explosive Andro.” He said. “This... this is a real threat to you and Dorian. Hell... it could be to all of us if it’s true.”

Andro nodded. “It could be... but I agree with Dorian on this. Besides... we’ll be able to see anything coming.”

“You’re sure about this fervon?” Arrarn asked looking at Dorian. “What I find out could be what you don’t want to hear.”

Dorian nodded in agreement. “I know... but I don’t think so.” He replied. “And when we get the answers, I intend to make the threat to her go away. Permanently.”

Jomann chuckled. “He is hanging around you and I too much Andro.” He said.

Andro smiled and looked at Dorian. “That he is.” He looked at Arrarn. “Can you access this information Arrarn?” Andro asked.

Arrarn nodded. “I’m the bloody Defense Minister!” He retorted with some force. “Hah! I love saying that!” He gripped Dorian’s arm. “It shouldn’t be an issue. And General Esavorna has resumed command of the Venorik Elghinn, which will make it a little easier.”

“The Ventash’ma allowed that?” Resumar asked surprised.

Arrarn nodded. “They practically begged him to return and take his old position. Some of them knew of his hatred for Aikiro and what she did and they kept it to themselves. They didn’t know exactly why... but they knew of it. He cleaned house in the first week. He made some enemies... but he made far more friends with his actions.”

“You are worried for Narice fervon?” Resumar asked.

Arrarn shrugged his broad shoulders. “There are more men and women who love her for what she has done and will do... but she has made enemies. You can’t alter the course of a people and not make enemies. They are small but connected. Yeah... I worry for her... but the Immortals got her covered like a blanket when she’s not at home.”

“You trust those Immortals who remain Arrarn?” Jomann asked. “I can arrange for some Durcunusaan to make the trip if you need. She is a Princess of the Union.”

Arrarn shook his head quickly. “No... the Immortals who remained are completely loyal to Cha’talla and Narice. They’d give their lives for her in a split second. They all know their future is tied to the Coven. Colonel Co’kal has made that very clear. Besides... Cha’talla is the one who trained him many years ago and they all look at him with something akin to reverence. Cha’talla is training more men on Kranek but Co’kal has got our back. Lynom has moved to the capital with As’hia to take personal charge of her overall detail... but I know all it takes is one. We’re being careful.”

Andro looked at Resumar. “Which also means you and Athani will become targets as well Res.” He said.

“More than we are now?” Resumar said laconically.

“When it is revealed what Pian is going to do... what I think father is going to do... yes.” Andro told him.

“Athani can take care of herself.” Resumar spoke confidently. “She’s a better fighter than most and Mican is coaching her and Jalersi nearly everyday. Seems he has taken quite the shine to having his sisters back with him. He talks about them all the time. He has taken it upon himself to make sure his sisters are just as well trained as he is. And he’s almost as good as Pian.”

Andro smiled. “Good. Just watch yourself.” He told him.

Resumar nodded. “I will.” He said.

Andro took a deep breath and looked out over the surface of the ocean to Gytheio in the distance. “So much is happening at once and we need to be careful about the steps we make now.” He said.

Arrarn moved closer to him and put his hand on his shoulder. “We are not alone fervon. We never are. Father taught us that.” He said.

Andro looked at him and nodded. “No we aren’t.” He said. He nodded. “Ok... enough work... let’s get back to our ladies and enjoy ourselves for the next few hours. We have a lot of work to do before father contacts us again.”

“I’m all for that!” Arrarn spoke.

“Me too!” Dorian chimed in cheerfully.

Andro turned and looked across the sand to where the patio was. He saw his grandmother watching them and he smiled. “No... we are never alone.” He said softly.

ARC ROYAL

“... coordinates of the two planets Martin.” Delnash spoke from within the transmission twelve hours later. “You are you going to investigate them aren’t you?”

Martin sat at the table with only Murano, Danny and Kesyla this time. He did not want everyone to know what was going on completely just yet. Martin looked at the pad with the coordinates of the two planets for a moment longer and then looked at him in the transmission. “That is the plan. Is it something you would do sir?” He asked.

Delnash nodded his head without hesitation. “Yes... in your position, I believe I would.” He replied honestly, still somewhat taken aback with the respect and honesty that Martin always addressed him with. “As the reports you have show, they were progressing as expected as a culture at the last contact. Yet that was nearly a thousand years ago.”

“Why did you stop visiting the planets?” Martin asked.

Delnash looked down for a moment, an expression of disgust appearing on his face with an equal part embarrassment. He looked back up his eyes determined though. “I have allowed others to do things that I had no knowledge of Martin.” He spoke finally. “I am the Chief Elder Pralor and I allowed them to conduct themselves with no oversight from myself or others. I can not deny this is my fault and I will accept blame for all of it.”

“That’s not what I asked sir.” Martin told him. “You can not change the past... only learn from mistakes made and then you move forward from there.”

“I do not know why the Science Convention stopped monitoring their progress.” Delnash answered him. “Given how Lorendo feels for your people anything is possible. I can’t access this information without him discovering it. Getting the coordinates for you without anyone else knowing was hard enough.”

Murano leaned forward. “Brother... what are you saying?”

Delnash met his eyes. “I’m saying that I have learned that there is at least one faction of our people, perhaps more groups, who are conducting themselves outside of normal channels. They are doing things I would never sanction openly. I only discovered this when I requested the coordinates of the planets because the man I asked for them is a long time friend. Until I return home... if I press too hard... I risk exposing the fact that I am now aware of these things. Lorendo has a large power base I have come to learn from others that I have spoken to since we left Onterom. I need to be very careful in what I do Martin. If I act too quickly they will go underground and disappear and I will never learn anything. And I fear that is not what we want to happen.”

“Brother... you never told me this!” Murano exclaimed.

Delnash nodded his head, “With good reason. You were my safety net. No one knew you even existed Murano. I felt that if I got in beyond my ability to control I could call you in.” He said. “What you forced me to see... what you showed me Martin Leonidas... that I had lost control... it was like getting hit with a very large bludgeon. It opened my eyes to things I have been ignoring for too long. Things I would never approve of.”

“And now you have to deal with it.” Martin nodded in acknowledgement of what he was saying. “I do know the feeling.”

Delnash shook his head. “I allowed them to gather the power they have. I have ignored that they even existed because I wrongly assumed whatever they were doing would be for the good of our people. I realize now... after seeing what Lorendo was doing... I realize that is not the case at all.”

“Father you should not have sent me away!” Kesyla chided him.

Delnash shook his head. “On the contrary Kesyla... sending you away was the only way to keep you safe and it insures that whatever I discover will not be swept aside because I will send it to you.”

“You actually think Lorendo will come after you brother?” Murano asked.

Delnash looked at him. “Based on what I saw him do to hide what was happening on Onterom... and what you have told me... that he designed this virus... it is not something I wish to discover.” He replied.

“Do you doubt Anja’s findings?” Danny asked him.

Delnash shook his head immediately. “No. You would have no reason to invent such information and after what I saw on Onterom... your red haired Queen appears to be far more competent than many of our own doctors and researchers. She is... she is very dedicated and extremely gifted. As are all your Queens Martin.”

Martin nodded. “That they are.” He said.

“His notes go back so many millennia however... it will take time for me to investigate and not raise any alarms here.” Delnash continued. “I have people I can go to... to seek their help. Men and women I trust... but it appears Lorendo has at least half the Elder Council fully on his side. I need to proceed very cautiously.”

“Explain everything to Teniri Chief Elder.” Martin spoke. “Hold nothing back from her. She holds a great deal of respect for you. As Elder Mother she can help you.”

“She is no longer Elder Mother from what you have told me.” Delnash said.

Martin shook his head quickly. “Arzoal is Senior Elder Mother... yes... but Teniri has held those dragons with her together for nearly as long as Arzoal has in the Alpha Quadrant. She deserves the same status and Arzoal has granted her that. She will retain her title and status among the dragons on Artaaya. A co-Elder Mother so to speak. You know how intelligent she and the other dragons are sir. Use that. She could very well help you discover some things about Lorendo that you do not know. And she can help to protect you without drawing undue interest in that action.”

Delnash looked at him and nodded after a moment. “I will do this.” He said. “Martin... I will need... I will need access to the computer libraries on your VORTEX Cruiser. Those data libraries will have information that was lost to us when we fled. VORTEX Cruiser 341 was assigned to the Science Convention specifically and they would have downloaded information from the main history archives on our homeworld. Sending them via transmission is too risky. Can I ask of you to...?”

Martin nodded. “I can have Avi download a copy of them to a P1. The better question is how do we get it to you without anyone detecting it?”

“Before leaving, Radra asked me to arrange a ship to bring her some equipment and clothing.” Delnash told him. “When I return to Artaaya I will chose the flight crew myself from those I know I can trust. You may give it to the Captain of that ship and he will return it to me. Our transports are similar to the corvette you have. It can reach you within two days at most depending on where in the Quadrant you are. You would just need to give me the coordinates of your current location and then wait for them to arrive.”

Martin nodded. “When we arrive at the planet Murano suggested I will send the message to you. We’ll be there for about a week letting the adolescent dragons stretch their wings and learn some things from the adults.”

“I am... I am not used to all this sneaking around in order to conduct business for the good of our people.” Delnash spoke finally with a shake of his head. “It is disconcerting to say the least.”

Martin nodded. “It sure is.” He agreed. “But I have found that there are always those who think they know better or can do things better. Or they just believe they are always right no matter what evidence is presented to the contrary. They believe they should be in charge because their way is better than the path currently followed. That will never change and we just have to deal with it.”

“And how do you deal with it?” Delnash asked him.

Martin laughed. “Well... if I left it up to my son... he would remove them permanently.” He answered with a small laugh.

“Your son... he does not sound very flexible.” Kesyla commented.

Martin looked at her. “Don’t misread my statement... Andro is the most compassionate and kind individual you will ever meet. For those who deserve it. He will defend those men and women to the death, no matter their species... but if you piss him off... well let’s just say he is not as forgiving as I am, as many people have commented over the years.”

“Yeah well... you ain’t exactly Prince nubous charming you know.” Danny quipped from beside him.

Martin grinned at him. “We just have to follow the path that we think is best as long as those people who it is our duty to lead agree with us.” He spoke turning back to Delnash. “It is a constant balancing act really... and I know you already know this sir. My Aunt Deia tells me I am getting better.”

Delnash looked at him intently. “I find myself wanting to get to know you far more than I do Martin Leonidas.” He said. “I... I believe I could learn quite a bit from you.”

Martin nodded his head. “No doubt just as much as I can learn from you sir.” He replied. “Perhaps we can make that happen in the future.”

Delnash nodded. “I think I would like that.” He said. “I will begin tracking what Lorendo does as best as I am able and I will keep you informed of anything that may come up. You have my word on that.”

Martin nodded. “We’ll do the same.”

“May... may the Ancients within the Rift of Time guide you in your many actions Martin Leonidas.” Delnash said.

Martin nodded again. “And you as well sir.”

They watched as the transmission faded leaving them alone in the conference room. Martin looked at Murano. “Tell me things aren’t as bad as he makes them out to be.” He said. “You are Pralors... Wayonn never told me this went on! I expect this from my people... but from Pralors?”

Murano looked at him for a moment then turned to Kesyla. She leaned forward in her chair taking the cue from her uncle. “It has... it has gotten worse through the years.” She told him. “There are many who fled the extinction of our people... people that brought with them their own ideals on how to deal with the Scourge and the aftermath. Some are more... extreme than others.”

Martin looked at her. “I’m not following.”

“They advocate active resistance Martin.” Murano said. “They want to return and take back our empire. No matter the cost or what we would need to do.”

“That would be suicide if what you’ve told us is true!” Danny announced.

“They are not a large number...” Kesyla added quickly. “But they do have a good deal of support in the different corners of our society.”

“In the military too?” Martin asked.

Murano shook his head. “Thankfully no. The military, such as it is, most of them have seen first hand what the Scourge did and how. There is no dealing with them and they know that. The best Scourge is a dead Scourge as far as they are concerned.”

“Seems I have heard that statement in past history.” Danny spoke softly. “And a few times it was not good.”

Murano nodded his head. “I don’t disagree Daniel... but that is the consensus of many of the older military officers.”

Martin looked at Danny and then back to Murano. “I can understand their emotion and experience but this doesn’t rule their actions now I hope.”

“No.” Kesyla answered him. “They know there is no way for us to defeat the Scourge now. Not in our current state. There is just not enough of our people left regardless of what others what us to think.”

Murano nodded in agreement. “The Scourge have Breeding Centers scattered all over what used to be Pralor space. Moon sized facilities where all they do is breed more of their kind. Their common warriors alone could overwhelm Artaaya in a matter of days. That does not include their officer corps or others.”

“Wait?” Danny asked. “Officer Corps?”

Murano nodded. “They have an upper echelon Officer Corps.” He told them. “Scourge Elites and Holy Elites. They lead the common soldiers... their Brood troops we call them. The officers walk upright as we do and they are large in number, but many are not as well trained as our people. They are incapable of thinking on their feet so to speak.”

“I thought they were all part of a Hive like mind?” Martin said.

Kesyła shook her head. “No... that is a common misconception.” She replied. “It is not true really.”

Martin looked at her and then back to Murano who smiled. “Kesyła has studied the many different parts of the Scourge whole.” He spoke. “Mari as well from what I understand. They are almost as knowledgeable as those of us who fought them. She is correct Martin. The Elites and Holy Elites are the only ones that have any sort of mental contact with the upper echelon of Scourge leadership. The Holy Elites dictate the orders from the Queen and it flows down to the Brood Warriors through the officers. The Scourge Elites.”

“The Elites are the core of their armies.” Kesyła said. “The Generals. The Holy Elites their government officials in a sense. They receive the orders and pass them down as I said. They are also...” Kesyła grew silent and looked at the table.

Danny sat forward now. “They are what Kesyła?” He asked. “Don’t stop now. Let’s hear it all.”

“They are also the only ones with the ability to impregnate females.” Kesyła finished her statement.

“What?” Martin gasped. “There are female Scourge?”

Murano nodded. “In... in a manner of speaking.” He said slowly. “The Scourge do not have... females as we know them. They are... Kesyła...” He spoke turning to his niece for help.

“They are a single sex species. The Queen produces the eggs and fertilizes them herself. All of the Scourge warriors are male. We know that before they came into contact with us every few thousand years one of these eggs would change to become female and take the place of the current Queen. At least that is how we thought it was before... before Xaxon conducted his experiments.” Kesyła answered. “They have evolved now because of her... and the Elites can now produce offspring. That is why they began taking our females during the war.”

Murano nodded. “We learned in the last millennia of the second war that they were not killing the females they took from our colonies and planets. They were using them as... as breeders. To produce Elites and Holy Elites who looked more like us.”

“Our scientists determined they were trying to breed a type of Scourge that would look like us in every way.” Kesyła said.

Murano nodded. “We saw many of them on the field of battle at the end... part Scourge part Pralor but equally as powerful as the Elites.” He said. “I don’t know if they have been able to perfect what they were trying to do.”

“It is unlikely.” Kesyła said quickly. “The differences in our physiology would be too much to overcome. At least that is what Radra believes. But those my Uncle and others fought at the end were incredibly powerful and were able to think and act for themselves.”

“So the Queen doesn’t lay the eggs anymore?” Martin asked.

Kesyła shook her head. “No. We believe that it is all done via cloning now. And these breeding centers. It is how they have become so numerous in so short a span of years. The Queen remains in absolute control but she... she no longer has the ability to produce eggs.”

“Well ain’t that peachy.” Danny said finally after a long moment of silence. “Why does every lizard or bug species in the galaxy want to use our women to breed? Why can’t they find their own?”

“The adaptability of our physiology makes us perfect for experimentation of many sorts Daniel.” Kesyła answered solemnly looking at him. “Believe me... it is not something we are particularly happy with.”

Dan looked at her. “No... I don’t suppose you are.” He said.

Martin looked at Murano. “Xaxon really stepped in it when he began experimenting on them didn’t he?”

Murano nodded his head. “His research gave them the means to branch off on their own.” He answered. “It is unlikely the Scourge would have discovered this knowledge without his interference.”

Martin looked at Kesyła after a moment. “Wait a minute... you said because of her.” He said. “What did you mean by that?”

“Uncle... you should tell them.” Kesyła spoke now.

Martin's eyes darted back and forth between them. "Tell us what?" Martin asked. He leaned forward quickly. "I need to know everything Murano. I've already had this conversation with Wayonn because he thought I wasn't ready for the knowledge. What is Kesyla referring to?"

Murano met his eyes. "It is the reason that many feel as they do about Praetorians." He said softly. "They don't like or trust us. They blame us for what happen."

"Shit... I ain't gonna like this am I?" Martin said.

"The Scourge are ruled by a Queen... we have known this since almost the beginning." Murano said. "She is the one who commands them and her rule is absolute as Kesyla has told you."

"Ok... so?" Martin said.

Murano took a deep breath. "Xaxon's research and vile experiments gave them the ability to do what they can now. He experimented on Pralors as well as Scourge... you know this. His actions are what caused many our of people to not trust us."

Martin nodded. "It's why he was punished in the manner he was... I got that part." Martin said. "Now... what don't I know already about why he was punished in this manner?"

Murano met his eyes. "One of those he used for the experiments... without being truthful to her... was his Praetorian Mage."

Martin's eyes grew wide in horror. "His Mage?" He almost yelled.

Murano nodded his head slowly. "Yes. He... he injected her with whatever serum or virus he had come up with at the time. He used her in a horrific manner. No Praetorian could believe it at first and when the truth came out, only Sumar's insistence he be tried for his crimes stopped the rest of us from dismembering him."

"I take it... Jesus... he killed her." Martin gasped in disbelief. The thought of using Helen in a manner like that was revolting to even think of for him. She had always been a rock for him, even more so when they discovered what it was they shared and why they were so close.

"We thought she had died yes." Murano said.

"Thought?" Danny asked.

"After Sumar and Wayonn departed on CS41 we began to receive intelligence that said otherwise." Murano said. "Rumors really. Rumors that she was not dead."

"Oh man... here comes the bomb!" Danny commented as he sat back. "This is not going to be pretty."

Murano met Martin's eyes once more. "We received confirmation of this information about halfway through the second war."

"Confirmation of what?" Martin asked.

"Xaxon's Mage was not dead." Murano told him. "Whatever he did to her... it somehow changed her. She... she became a Scourge Martin." Murano shook his head. "It is why they were so successful against us. Why they began targeting the remaining Praetorians with such success. That... and we believe she had help."

"She had help?" Martin asked. "What do you mean? She betrayed you?"

Murano looked at him. "Whatever Xaxon did to her it changed her enough that she became Scourge Martin."

"Yeah... I got that part!" Martin snapped. "What aren't you telling me?"

Murano answered softly. "It is why the Queen no longer produces eggs and why they use cloning technology to make their warriors now. She also became the new Scourge Queen Martin. Xaxon's Mage has supreme control and she hates us with every fiber of her being."

CLASS M MOON
UNION DESIGNATION
AT459

Kalis drew the thin space blanket up over Serale's shoulders, his eyes watching her face as she slept peacefully. The hi-tech blanket was not something new in the grand scheme of things, only improved upon through the many years. Even though it could be folded into the size of a data pad because of its thinness, it also provided incredible warmth and dryness from the elements. Kalis took a deep breath as he gazed at her beauty and could not wait until he could take her in to his arms and claim her as his wife and mate. Yuriko moved into the passage way and her eyes quickly found Kalis squatting next to the Hadarian female. She didn't speak or make a sound as she watched him draw the blanket up closer to her chin and simply stare at her. Yuriko may not have been Lycavorian but between watching her father and brothers and countless other Lycavorian men, Yuriko knew that Kalis's desire for this young woman was by no means a passing interest. His head came around quickly when he detected her scent and he rose to his feet and moved confidently back towards the passageway entrance into the sleeping area. The large general sleeping area was filled now with both Lycavorian and Kavalian men and women.

Kalis moved up in front of her and stopped. Yuriko reached out and took his hand in hers. "We just received a message from the ARC ROYAL. Father confirmed receipt of my message. He burst back a short reply that he would contact us in a few hours."

Kalis squeezed her hand. "Will he come?" He asked.

Yuriko nodded her head. "More than likely." She replied. "Father does not say he will do something and then not do it."

"How long have...?" Kalis began to ask but stopped.

Yuriko smiled. "It's a long story... but let's just say it goes back more years than most people know. Officially... he adopted me seven months after returning and claiming his place as King of the Union. Unofficially... I was only six when I first met him. And that was over five hundred years ago."

Kalis looked at her oddly. "Five hundred... I thought..."

Yuriko smiled and began pulling him out of the passageway into the sleeping area and towards the main cavern. "I told you it was complicated. Come... we can sit and I will tell you. It also pertains at least in some way to your half sister Lisisa."

"Lisisa?" Kalis gasped as they walked. "I... by the gods... I had forgotten all about her."

Yuriko laughed. "That would probably make Lisisa very happy." She said. "She does not like to be the center of attention. She much prefers just to blend in." Yuriko motioned to one of the chairs as they came up to the small fire and Kalis settled into it as she did the same. "It all starts when Yuri..."

Kalis listened for nearly an hour, enraptured by the story of how Yuriko was eventually adopted by his Uncle Martin. Part of him felt ashamed because he felt he had a harsh life, only to have Yuriko's story make his upbringing almost cartoonish by comparison. He also learned just how compassionate and understanding his Uncle Martin could be. This did more for his confidence that he was on the right path than anything had so far and this made him feel good inside.

"She loves you intensely you know." Yuriko spoke snapping Kalis out of his thoughts and making him look at her.

"What?" He asked.

"Serale." Yuriko told him. "She loves you intensely. You can see it in the way she looks at you."

"No more than I have come to love her." Kalis said. "She is what drove me to continue on Yuriko."

Yuriko nodded her head in agreement. "I understand. Filrian was much the same for me. It took me longer than you to see that I loved him... but once I did I have never let go." She told him.

"I do not intend to let go either." Kalis spoke softly. He looked at her. "Some of your people question my intentions don't they?"

Yuriko met his eyes. "Some of them yes." She answered honestly. "But as you go forward your actions are what will win them over. I believe you are sincere Kalis. I've seen how you look at Serale. I've seen the desire in your eyes. It is why father wanted to help you to discover it."

Yuriko looked up as one of her men turned from the COM station where he had been monitoring things and moved quickly to her side. "Cilor?" She asked. "What is it?"

The Lycavorian knelt beside her. "We have company." He said bringing Kalis to full alertness.

"My father?" He asked.

The man looked at him and shook his head. "No. Worse."

"Worse?" Kalis said.

The man turned back to Yuriko. "The species your father discovered on Twelve Alpha. The Svorag." He said. "Long range scans from OMEN THREE picked up a ship entering the system. Frigate size and configuration marks it as a Pralor powered ship and it's teeming with Svorag lifesigns."

“A Pralor ship?” Yuriko asked shocked.

Cilor nodded. “Power signature matches what Captain Akemi sent to us in the last burst.” He replied. “At least it used to be a Pralor ship.”

Yuriko came to her feet. “How many lifesigns?” She asked.

“Scans were not conclusive but upwards of a thousand at least.” He answered. “Far more than normal for a Frigate... but then again... these Svorag aren’t exactly normal.”

“S...Svorag?” Kalis asked. “They are native to this quadrant?”

Yuriko met his eyes. “You... you could say that.” She said. She turned to Cilor. “How long?”

“Current speed puts it about two and a half hours out.” Cilor answered.

“Any indication that they see our ship?” Yuriko asked.

“Not so far... but they are still a good distance away.” Cilor answered. “They could just be passing through the sector.”

“Let’s hope so Cilor.” Yuriko told him. “Have OMEN THREE pull back to ten million kilometers from the moon. We don’t have the firepower to stand with a Pralor frigate in a fight, especially if they know to use the weapons systems.”

“I’m guessing these Svorag are not a very friendly species then?” Kalis asked almost casually.

Yuriko looked at him and smiled. “I see that the laconic nature of a Spartan has rubbed off on you in father’s and Andro’s teachings.” She said.

Kalis shrugged his broad shoulders. “It would appear so.” He said.

“The General’s men...?” Yuriko asked. “They are fighters right?”

Kalis nodded. “All of them.”

“Wake him up.” Yuriko spoke. “Take a team back to your ships and make sure you erase any trail from there to here. These Svorag are a nasty species and they aren’t real fond of us right now. Father and Uncle Danny have... liberated more than a few of them of their lives and I’m guessing... but we probably aren’t on their holiday list of do-gooders.”

Kalis nodded. “We will see to it.” He said. “Yuriko... Mata is...”

Yuriko nodded. “Get him some weapons. If these Svorag get on the ground and find us before father gets here, we’ll need everyone holding a weapon.” Kalis nodded his head and turned heading for the sleep area. Yuriko looked at Cilor. “Get a burst off to my father Cilor. Let him know what is happening and tell him to kick in the burners.”

Cilor looked at her. “Kick in the burners?” He asked.

Yuriko smiled. “My father will know what it means.”

Cilor nodded. “I’m on it.” He said.

ARC ROYAL

Those who worked for her knew right away that something was different. Iama was usually very attentive when she first arrived at what all of them were preparing for food. She would go from person to person suggesting something different or praising them on the job they were doing. They may have been Lycavorian and Elf and Algolian, and they may have been only cooks, but the Kavalian female they now called their boss was everything any of them had hoped for in a superior. She always consulted with them before changing the menu, always asked if they had ideas to keep the menu varied and healthy, and she made sure that she was the last one to leave after dinner was finished and the menu prepared for the next day.

This afternoon was different however.

Iama had never been late before and the senior Lycavorian Chief was about to have security check on her when she entered the large Mess Lounge preparation area as if she was floating on air. In the weeks prior to today they had all come to take notice of how her tail was acting in order to sense her mood. Since coming onboard she had stopped wrapping it around her waist and they were able to tell her mood by how much it was twitching back and forth or how much it was relaxed. Today it was calmly moving back and forth as she walked into the area, her strides measured and even. Her face was brighter than any of them had seen it before, her soft green eyes glowing with new life and happiness. The Lycavorians among the mess crew, male and female both, knew instantly what it was for they could smell Fedor all over her and the resonance of his wolf aura flowing around her like a light breeze. His scent was thick in her blood, mingling tightly with her own. They knew that Fedor had not only scented her, he had claimed her as his wife and mate, and the way her scent and her blood utterly accepted this told them all they needed to know. It became apparent to the others rather quickly as well, those elven females who were not wolf could tell by her body language and her bright expression that a man who truly wanted her for something more than a fling had claimed her heart.

This was not like the other times when she had slept with crewmembers and come in the next day. This time she wore a dreamy expression on her beautiful features and she walked like a woman who had surrendered all she was to a man and he had made love to her until she was senseless. They all secretly hoped it was the young half elf Prince Fedor because they knew no matter how roughly she had treated him before; it was only because Iama wanted him badly and didn't really know how to approach him. If it was Prince Fedor, it would also account for the tremendously contented expression she wore on her face, for all of them had heard the many rumors that any male of the Leonidas family was built like a bull in the sex department and could make their wives and mates cry out in ecstasy and unqualified bliss every time. They only had to look at the Queens and Princesses to know this was true.

Their answer came in the form of Queen For'mya.

For'mya walked casually into the near empty Mess Lounge and moved up to the main counter with her normal gracefulness. Iama looked suddenly nervous as she briefly hesitated and then moved up to the opposite side.

“Queen... Queen For'mya.” Iama stammered. “I did not...”

For'mya's face was smiling and happy and she shook her head quickly and reached over the counter for Iama's hands. “I am not Queen to you Iama'Juturi. Not anymore.” She said. “I'd like to talk with you if I can?”

Iama glanced back quickly and then nodded as she moved to the counter entrance into the Mess Lounge. She moved timidly up to For'mya, looking shyly at the floor, and For'mya smiled and took her hands once more. “Why so timid child?” For'mya asked. “That is not like you.”

Iama looked at her nervously. “I... I know why you are here.” She said softly. “It is... it is because of Fedor. Milady I... I have never known what he makes me feel. I have... I have never loved anyone as I...”

For'mya shook her head and brought her hand up to lay her slender finger on Iama's lips silencing her words. “You think I do not approve?” She said softly. “You could not be further from the truth Iama.”

Iama looked at her with wide eyes. “But I thought... I am Kavalian. I am...”

For'mya squeezed her hands. “You are a beautiful young woman who has stolen the heart of my son Iama. Our son. I could not care in the least if you were Kavalian, Elven or vampire. I can sense Fedor's happiness, his complete love and devotion for you within his resonance in Mindvoice. It reverberates to all of us.” For'mya's eyes became slightly moist and she smiled brighter. “We wanted to welcome you into our family as we have every young woman who claims the heart of one of our sons and becomes a Princess of the Union.”

“We...? Princess...?” Iama asked with wide disbelieving eyes.

For'mya turned and glanced over to the doorway into the mess Lounge, Iama's eyes following her. They grew even wider when she saw all of Fedor's mothers waiting, as well as Fedor's twin sister Eirene. All of them with wide, happy smiles. She glanced back to For'mya, suddenly very nervous as they began to cross the large room towards them.

“Milady... I... I do not know... I do not know how to be a Princess.” Iama stammered quickly and quietly to her.

For'mya laughed softly as she drew her close and slipped her arm around Iama's waist. “Oh child...” She chuckled. “If only you knew how much *w*e don't know about being Queens and Princesses ourselves!” She told her. “You will fit right in Iama'Juturi Leonidas! You will fit right in!”

Iama felt her heart lifting even more than what it did within the embrace of Fedor's powerful arms as Aricia and Anja and the others swarmed around her with happy smiles and welcoming embraces and kisses. Nothing in the universe could have removed the smile she now wore on her face and as tears rolled down her cheeks, and the last remnants of her past life were irrevocably tossed away into the void, Iama finally felt like she was home. She felt welcome and loved. Emotions that had once been taken away from her were now hers once more and Iama'Juturi Leonidas had no intention of ever letting go of them again.

“...treat my mothers and Aunts then?” Fedor asked as he stood watching Martin and Danny checking equipment at the large table in the main Weapons Locker of the Arc Royal. “I did it right?”

Martin looked at him as his hands moved over the P190A4 with expert precision. “Did she scream your name to the moon?” Martin asked him.

“Medwan... there is no moon to see from my quarters.” Fedor spoke.

Danny chuckled. “It is a metaphor Fedor.” He said as he adjusted a combat harness without looking at it.

“Ah... would squeezing me nearly to death and whispering that she loves me over and over in my ear qualify?” Fedor asked.

“That it would boy.” Martin said with a smile. “That it would.”

“Does she make you happy Fedor?” Danny asked.

“Oh yes Tenne Daniel.” Fedor answered. “Her body is like... it is so smooth and firm and...”

“Whoa!” Danny spoke. “No... that’s not what I meant.”

Fedor looked at him oddly. “It’s not?”

Martin set the weapon down and moved around the edge of the table to stand in front of where Fedor sat on the stack of ammunition crates. “He meant does she make you happy in here?” Martin asked poking his chest over his heart.

Fedor nodded quickly with a wide smile. “Yes she does medwan.”

“True Spartan men never talk of intimate moments with their wives and mates.” Danny told him as Martin looked at him. “They joke and insinuate things... but they never reveal the true treasures of those that they cherish. That is between you and her. Keep that to yourself and never speak of it mandri. Hold it close to your heart as a secret and truth only you know.”

Martin nodded and turned back to Fedor. “Iama has had... she has had a life I would not wish upon my worst enemy Fedor. Your mothers and I... well we sensed your happiness within Mindvoice this morning. And through your resonance we could feel hers as well. You are not like anything she has ever experienced Fedor. You have given her something she believed she would never have son. What we felt from her this morning... let’s just say that if you worship the ground she walks upon Fedor, the fire of your love will never dim.”

“I will father. As you and Uncle Danny do.” He said.

“Well... she’s got spunk that’s for sure.” Danny said with a grin. “My bet is she will run you ragged.”

Martin grinned. “No bet here.” He said in reply.

Fedor laughed and nodded his head in agreement. “She already dictated to me what I was to have for breakfast this morning.”

Martin chuckled. “Sounds like Anja and Anuk.” He said looking at Danny. “It sucks having anyone in the medical profession as a wife and mate. They are so healthy. Now we got someone in the food industry as well. I can’t win.” He looked back to Fedor. “Just tell Iama to not try and get me to stop eating meat! It won’t happen!”

They shared a laugh as Danny looked over and saw the Officer of the Deck enter the Weapons Locker hurriedly and move right up to them. “OD?” He asked with a smile. “You lost son?”

“No General.” The human answered as he came right up to them. The crew of the ARC ROYAL had learned in the first weeks to never be shy about approaching Martin or any senior officer, especially General Simpson or the King. Many had spoken to them directly, even when not on duty, and this had endeared them even more to the crew. He held out the data pad to Martin. “Sire... urgent COM traffic from Princess Yuriko.”

Martin took the pad as his face became serious and he began to read. Danny and Fedor both knew it wasn't good and Fedor stood up quickly. “Medwan?” Fedor asked.

“Fervon?” Danny questioned next.

Martin looked up from the pad. “Yuriko made it to her base with the package.” He spoke looking at Danny. “But the Svorag just entered the system they are in and are headed for the moon.”

“They made them?” Danny snarled.

Martin shook his head quickly. “No... but given what we now know about these assholes, it’s only a matter of time before they do.”

“I’ll put together a team.” Danny spat. “We can leave in an hour!”

“No!” Martin told him causing Danny to look at him oddly.

“Marty... it’s Yuriko!” Danny gasped.

Martin nodded. “I know. But you aren’t going.” He said.

“What? Why?” Danny demanded.

Martin looked at the OD. “Have Akemi notify the Flight Deck that I will be taking my STRIKER. Get it prepped and ready for departure.”

The man nodded. “As you order King Leonidas.” He answered before turning sharply and jogging out of the Weapons Locker.

Martin turned back to Danny and Fedor. “I need you here Dan.” Martin said. “And you aren’t going either Fedor.”

“Father I...” Fedor began to protest.

“No!” Martin snapped. “I’m not taking you away from Iama so soon after you claimed her as your wife and mate! And until your mother clears you for full duty you are still not fit for action!”

“That is not true!” Fedor stammered. “I am fully healed and fit!”

Martin looked at him. “No.” He stated finally. “Not this time Fedor. There will be more than enough times in the future. Now I need you here.”

“What about me?” Danny demanded.

Martin looked at him with a sly grin. “I was going to make it a surprise... but when I talked to Andro I told him to put wives and mates on a Corvette and send them to us.” He explained. “It’s not right for me to have Aricia and the others here with me and no one else has that. Amazingly... only a few hundred of the crew are married so it’s not really a lot of extra people. He is probably back on Earth by now and he said he would send the ship out first thing. We should be hearing from Ben pretty quick to lock down coordinates and position. You need to be here with the others to greet them.”

“Martin that...” Danny started to protest but Martin shook his head.

“No fervon.” He said. “I’ll take Murano, T’lolt, Jules, Kenny, Pablo and Garan. Kasdan as well for a scientific perspective. I don’t intend to do any fighting fervon. We’re gonna go there and pull them out with the package.”

“And what if the Svorag don’t like that idea?” Danny snapped.

Martin grinned. “Well then you can come in and rescue my limp dick and try to make up for all the times I’ve saved your fat ass!”

“Asshole!” Danny barked.

Martin laughed. “Yeah... I’ve been called that a lot lately.”

“How do you know it ain’t a trap?” Danny hissed.

Martin looked at him. “I’ve showed you the results fervon. Do you think he could have done that if he wasn’t sincere?”

Danny was silent for a long moment and then finally shook his head. “No.” He said. “I still don’t like it!”

Fedor looked between them and finally stepped up. “Who are we talking about? What are you not telling me? Is this... is this about him medwan?”

Martin looked at him. “No.” He answered firmly. “If it was Fedor... I would share it with you. And I wouldn’t be going there to bring him back here. I’d be going there to kill him.”

“Then who?” Fedor demanded.

Martin reached out and placed his hand on Fedor’s shoulder. “Do you trust me son?”

Fedor looked at him as if he was crazy. “Medwan... you never need to ask me that!” He stammered. “Never!”

“Then trust me now.” Martin said. “Stay here. Spend every waking moment you can with Iama and show her how much she means to you. How much she is now a member of this family son. Kiss her. Hold her. Nuzzle her. Make sure she knows.”

Fedor looked at him oddly. “You don’t need to tell me to do these things father.” He said. “I already planned on it.”

Martin smiled. "Good." He said. "I had to hit your brothers in the head with a board to get them to do it."

"Somehow I don't think so father." Fedor spoke.

"Trust me boy." Martin said with a smile. "You'll know everything when I get back. Now get down to the landing bay and help your mother, Endy and Tina prep the ship."

"Father you..." Fedor started to say.

Martin shook his head. "Go." He said.

Fedor met his gaze for a long moment and then moved for the entrance. Martin turned and looked at Danny. "Want to tell me what's up?" Danny asked him.

"Iama's family is with Kalis." Martin said softly. "She's been through far too much than a young woman should have to experience fervon. Fedor has given her everything she thought she would never have and I won't let them take that from her. You smelled how deeply her scent is within his blood?"

Danny nodded. "Kind of hard to miss." He answered. "She would kill for him."

Martin nodded his head. "I want them to have time together." He said. "They need that time because when her family gets here things might get ugly."

"You... you could have told me about Anuk and Nubian." He said.

Martin looked at him. "And miss seeing the expression on your face when Anuk slaps you for following me out here? No way."

Danny chuckled and moved closer to him. He took Martin's arm and squeezed. "Thank you fervon." He said.

Martin nodded. "Don't thank me for doing what I should fervon." He said. "I haven't felt right since we left because of it. I hate splitting up families. Once we get to this planet for the adolescent dragons we'll have a good week of time. Murano says the planet is lush and uninhabited. It's perfect."

"Perfect never works for us... you know that." Danny said.

"Maybe our luck will change." Martin said. "Everyone needs the break. We have been out here a long time Danny."

Dan nodded. "That we have."

"So I'll go get Yuriko and Kalis and we'll meet you at the planet." Martin told him. "Then we'll have a big party and plan how we are going to squash Pusintin and his asshole followers."

Danny laughed. "Now that sounds like a plan!" He spoke.

VEYERAI
UNION SAFE ZONE
HIGH COVEN SPACE
FEBRUARY 12TH, 0835 HRS, EST

Yuri walked slowly down the corridor towards the base's medical area with an extremely contented smile on her face as she read from the data pad. They had returned two days ago and their first night back Pa'cour had been very attentive to her with Onera now in her own personal apartment. Yuri had to admit to herself that her Immortal husband was very creative in their bed and this creativity combined with his immense size and skill at making her cry out in delight made for a very exhaustive but overwhelmingly fulfilling evening. Last night had been more of the same and Yuri was sore now, but in a deeply satisfying and happy way. They had remained in their quarters for most of the day yesterday, Pa'cour doting on her like a jewel, and she reciprocating the emotions and physical pleasure quite willingly. His body was a beautiful temple to her, and Yuri simply adored worshiping at that temple. She craved his touch upon her more than anything else in her life and knowing that he felt the same way without doubt made it that much more pleasurable for her.

Yuri looked up from the pad as she entered Nalavi's realm and she spied him speaking with Nameia standing on the other side of the glass divider that separated the beds from the rest of the center. Six of them were occupied by the elven females that they had rescued and Nalavi was treating. She stopped for a moment as she took in Nameia's surreal beauty and Yuri felt her heart racing. Nameia wore a full, dark blue jumpsuit that hugged her lush elven figure like a second skin. She wore a utility belt of sorts with three small pouches along the small of her back and a single K14 sidearm on her right side. The K14 was the cut down version of the full sized Union K12 Magnum, but still a very lethal firearm. One of Pa'cour's Immortals must have supplied it to her since they were under orders to give her whatever she wanted. Yuri couldn't understand why she felt this way looking at Nameia... she was certainly not going to deny the emotions and feelings just looking at her caused. Yuri had vowed never to suppress her emotions and feelings again, for that was in part how Xaxon was able to manipulate her and gain control of her so easily. No... now Yuri would face and confront her emotions no matter what. She just didn't quite know how to proceed when it came to Nameia. That she was physically drawn to the elf female was a surprise for Yuri as she had never considered another woman in such a manner. She wanted Nameia though, that much Yuri was sure of. She wanted to feel Nameia's body against hers; she wanted to taste her in so many ways... she just didn't know how to come to grips with that.

Yuri straightened up and moved fully into the medical center, Nalavi turning when he heard her. His face lit up and he smiled as she came up to them.

"Yuri!" He exclaimed turning fully to face her while Nameia stood beside him and let her royal blue eyes gaze upon the vampire princess.

Nameia looked at her intently, the woman who had saved her life, but whose past was a myriad of angry and violent actions. Many of them resulting in the deaths of innocent men and women. Nameia had seen images of the vampire Princess many times on the Netnews, but the woman standing before her now looked nothing like those images. While her exotic heritage was obvious to any who looked at her, Nameia noticed that the severe lines and dark shadows that had occupied her face in those images were gone. Her skin was almost olive in color and vibrant with life. Her skin looked so soft and inviting to Nameia who was startled to say the least. Though only five foot four from what Nameia could judge, Yuri carried herself with an air of confidence and grace, not arrogance in any way. Her body was extremely well toned and very shapely and Nameia very briefly wondered what she looked like without clothes. She blinked rapidly and shook her head slightly trying to rid herself of such thoughts. She glanced up as Yuri spoke.

"I came to check on our guests." Yuri said softly, her voice causing Nameia to inwardly shiver in unexpected but very welcome feelings of desire.

Nalavi nodded his head. "Yes... I figured as much." He spoke holding out the pad to her. "I contacted Esther the moment after you contacted me from your ship. She sent me the formula for the vaccination she developed within thirty minutes. I had everything here to fashion the doses by the time you arrived."

Yuri let her dark eyes move over the six elven females who looked to be resting quite comfortably on the beds. "How are they?" She asked softly.

Nalavi turned back to his patients who all seemed to be resting quite comfortably, two of them asleep while the other four were taking among themselves. "Well... the vaccine worked." He said first. "All traces of the chemical that addicted them is gone. Their bodies are returning to normal for female elves... their mental state however is up to them."

Yuri looked at him. "What do you mean?"

Nalavi met her gaze. "They have been prisoners of Immortals for months Yuri." He answered. "The one with the red hair there... over a year. Everything they had is gone. Their lives are changed. And they endured months of forced sexual encounters that none of them wanted."

Yuri lowered her head to the floor instantly embarrassed. "Phraktos... how stupid of me!" She hissed softly.

Nameia stepped closer to her. "It is alright Princess." She said gently. "They do not... they hold no malice for you. They know you risked much by saving them and they all are indebted to you."

"The Immortals here..." Yuri said quickly. "Those who follow me and my husband. They are not the same as those that held you and them. They are so very different."

Nameia nodded. "They heard the other Immortals talking at different times while they were prisoners. They know what has happened to those that follow General Cha'talla."

"You know him?" Yuri asked quickly.

Nameia shook her head. "No... I have never met him... but what he has created on Kranek is well known now. Even within the Wilds."

“Do any of them... do they have families? Was any of them married?” Yuri asked. “Someone we can contact?”

Nameia shook her head. “Only Sora.” Nameia answered. “The dark haired one on the end. She was married only two months before the Immortals captured her.”

“Her husband?” Yuri asked. “Where is he?”

“Why?” Nameia asked.

“I intend to see them returned to their families.” Yuri told her.

Nameia glanced at Nalavi quickly and then back to Yuri. “I thought we... I thought we were...” She stopped speaking for a moment and Nalavi took it up.

“I think they are under the impression they are to be prisoners.” He told Yuri. “Slaves.”

“What?” Yuri gasped. “No! Never! I would not have taken them from that vile world only to replace that with another! Why would they think that?”

Nameia looked at her again. “Forgive me Princess. It’s just...”

“Stop calling me that!” Yuri snapped. “I am not a Princess of the Coven any longer! I have left that life behind me! Gladly!”

“They know who you are.” Nameia said softly.

Nalavi looked at her. “Your former reputation precedes you Yuri.” He said. “They don’t know that you travel a different path now.”

Yuri cursed under her breath and shook her head. She looked at Nameia, her dark eyes wide. “I wish to return them to their lives. To their families. At least as much as I am able after what they have endured.”

Nameia stared into Yuri’s dark eyes and saw the determination in them. The drive to do what was right. This was undoubtedly not the Princess Yuri they had heard so much about and Nameia knew for certain it was no act. This woman was different from the images she had seen of the old Princess Yuri. Very different.

“You... you are... forgive me but you are not the Yuri that so many have heard about.” Nameia said.

“If only you knew.” Nalavi said with a smile.

“Nalavi stop!” Yuri hissed.

“Why?” He questioned her. “Nameia is right. You are not the same person Yuri and you should not be afraid of who you are now.”

“I am neither afraid nor ashamed of who I am now.” Yuri stated confidently. “In some ways I’m still trying to figure it out... but I will not turn away from who I have become. It’s just very hard to explain to someone who...”

“Who doesn’t know you?” Nameia offered.

Yuri looked at her and nodded slowly. “That is part of it yes.” She said.

“I saw the way you acted with that Immortal on the planet.” Nameia said. “He is... he is your husband?”

Yuri nodded. “He is the one who saved me from the wretched life I was lost within.” She said in an almost wistful tone of voice. “His love for me saved me. What he did... what he did allowed me to love him in return. With all that I am. The young woman who helped us rescue you and the others... she is Onera. She is our daughter. The first and most beautiful sign that I have changed.”

Nameia gazed at her. “I know very little of vampires as a whole... but I am aware of the law your people have about relations with Immortals. It is a taboo within your culture isn’t it? A despicable sin according to what we have heard.”

Yuri nodded her head. “It was... yes. My sister Narice is changing that. She is changing so much for my kind. Since she became Empress there are many such relationships that have come out into the open. More than even my mother suspected. I am the Blessed Wife of an Akruvian Immortal and I have never been more proud of anything in my life than when I speak that fact.”

“There are many who think you are dead.” Nameia said. “That the bounty on your head was lifted because Crown Prince Androcles killed you.”

Yuri met her blue eyes thoughtfully. “In a way he did.” She explained. “He killed the old me.”

Nameia looked at her intently, tilting her head to the side. “That is a very... very odd thing to say.” She said. “You are standing here now.”

Yuri grinned. “I suppose it is.” She said. “But it’s very true.”

“I’m... I’m not sure I follow. The Immortals with you... your husband... they look so different from those who held us prisoner. We knew of Cha'talla of course but these other changes... none of us suspected.” Nameia said.

Yuri stepped closer to her. She could smell Nameia’s elven blood within her veins and it smelled almost as sweet as Pa'cour’s. No... she wasn’t going to suppress the emotions swirling through her. Never again. If Nameia attracted her so much, then there must have been a reason. Yuri knew there was a reason. And she would embrace the emotions and feelings without doubt until she found that reason. It was a vow both she and Pa'cour had made to each other one night while lying in each other’s arms. “Join me for breakfast and perhaps I can begin to explain so that you do understand.” She asked.

Nameia’s eyes brightened considerably and she nodded her head without hesitation. “I think I would like that.” She said in reply.

Though Yuri did not yet know it... Nameia had already decided she was beyond attracted to the vampire Princess. She desired the exotic looking woman in a very intense and intimate way. Nameia had always been very open and adventurous, she was an elf after all, and she had had two female lovers in her three hundred and six years of life. Though neither had lasted for any great length of time because of different reasons, they were still passionate and incredibly pleasurable relationships nonetheless. Nameia was free now... something she never thought she would be only a few short days ago. She was free to live her life how she wanted going forward into the future. She would contact her family in due time and then visit them. She needed time to adjust to things now and regardless of what had happened just recently, Nameia could not deny the intense attraction to Yuri.

Nor the Immortal she called her Blessed husband.

Perhaps events were happening this way for a reason. For a purpose that she did not yet know. Whatever the cause... Nameia was not going to turn away from it.

CLASS M MOON UNION DESIGNATION AT459

Koguth watched as Kalis, Mata and Nedoli finished using large branches with the leaves still on them to erase any sign of footprints they had left along the trail leading away from the two ships they had arrived on. They had secured both LEUGERS transports and then insured that each had an immense net drawn over them that would automatically adjust and blend in with the terrain around the two ships. This would effectively hide them from the naked eye unless you moved right on top of them. To keep them from being spotted by ship board scans their main power was dropped to miniscule levels and the LSD coils recharging reduced to a tiny fraction of what was needed to sustain them.

Koguth let his eyes cut to the side where he saw three of his Pride maintaining security alertly with three Lycavorian troops. The Princess had placed the men under his command without even pausing and this fact alone showed Koguth that his decision so long ago had been the right one. The Union didn’t care that he and his Pride were Kavalian. As long as they held the same values and morals... Koguth firmly believed that you would be accepted by citizens of the Union even if you had wings and gold skin. Even the few hours among them here on this moon had shown him this. Within the first hour, the Lycavorians were reaching out to his Pride members, offering food and drink and striking up conversations about the most mundane things. They were breaking the ice and trying to get a feeling for his people and when they discovered his Pride members were not so very different in their beliefs, the conversations continued unabated. It was something they did not expect from Kavalians, and when they did find they were the same in many ways, the walls of distrust and suspicion began to come down.

Koguth shifted the P190A4 to his left hand. The Union weapon was smaller and lighter than their assault rifles and would better serve them in the terrain. The silenced nature of the weapons also made them very appealing. He watched as first Kalis and then Nedoli stepped back from their work and then tossed the branches as far away from the trail they had taken as possible. They moved back to where he squatted, Mata finishing his portion after them and then doing the same with his branch. His eyes cut to the Lycavorian enlisted man as he moved from his position and came up next to him as Kalis settled to one knee in front of him.

“They will not be able to determine what direction we went if they find the ships General Koguth.” Kalis told him.

Nedoli nodded his head, his tail sweeping calmly behind him. “Not unless they have those like you Kalis. Those who can smell us.”

Koguth turned to the Lycavorian. “May I ask your name...?” He spoke.

“Vistale General.” The man replied. “Enomotarch Vistale.”

Koguth nodded his head knowing the Union ranks by heart. “Excellent. Senior Sergeant. You have served long then?”

Vistale nodded his head. “Seven hundred and eighteen years General.” He replied. “I joined when I finished my Agoge.”

“The Union Training Course for all their soldiers.” Mata spoke with a touch of respect in his voice. He looked at Koguth. “It is said this Agoge is brutally efficient General.” He looked at Vistale. “That is meant as a compliment.”

Vistale nodded with a small smile. “And that is how I took it.” He said. “It is harsh yes... but fighting the High Coven was never easy.”

Koguth nodded. “That is a fact no matter what anyone says.” He agreed. “What can you tell us about these Svor...? Svorag Senior Sergeant Vistale? You have crossed their path out here before I take it?”

“We haven’t directly sir.” Vistale answered. “The King and General Simpson have. On two different occasions. We have the reports and after action briefs.”

“Since it appears we do not have the time to read them... perhaps a short version would do.” Koguth spoke.

“I’m not an Intelligence Operative sir.” Vistale said.

“No... you are a soldier. I prefer a soldier’s view.” Koguth said. “They are more in touch with reality.”

Vistale chuckled and nodded his head. “I suppose we are sir.” He spoke. “They are a vile species. They walk upright for the most part, are very fast and extremely tough. Their skin has some sort of natural armor on it so aiming for vital areas is a necessity. They also...” He stopped for a moment.

“Vistale?” Koguth spoke.

The Lycavorian looked at him. “Do not allow them close to you.” He continued. “They have appendages that... if they are able to insert these tongues or other things into your body they can change you.”

“Change you?” Kalis asked.

Vistale nodded. “It is how they increase their numbers. They do something to you and inject you with some sort of liquid that makes you docile. Then they... they force themselves upon you over and over spewing their fluids into you until your body begins to change into one of them. It is... it is even more vile for the females they bring down. They violate every orifice with their appendages. The King’s last report indicates they are also using females of other species to breed more of their vile kind.”

“You do not mince words Vistale.” Koguth said finally.

Vistale looked at him. “You have come with Kalis Leonidas General.” He said firmly. “The Lycavorians among us can smell the Leonidas blood within him sir. He has embraced his Lycavorian nature and his actions towards the young Hadarian only confirm this for us.” He looked at Kalis who wore a shocked expression on his face. “Your desire for each other pours from both of you young Kalis. She is to be your wife and mate and all of us can smell it. We can smell your devotion to her.” Vistale looked at Koguth. “And we can smell it within all of you General.” His eyes cut to Mata. “Even within you Puma Bane.” He turned back to Koguth. “All of you are reaching for the unknown and our King has always said to never fear the unknown. We live by that phrase now. We are here now and we will stand beside you. All of you. Lying to you about something that endangers all of us is not something any of us would do. We are in this together.”

Koguth was silent for a long moment and his eyes moved to each Lycavorian that had accompanied them and he saw the same look in their eyes. He turned back to Vistale and nodded his head finally. “Yes we are.” He stated. “So these creatures... they are... you called them Svorag?”

Vistale nodded. “That is their official name. King Leonidas and General Simpson refer to them as Fuglies.”

Koguth's brow narrowed. "Fuglies?"

Vistale grinned. "Fucking ugly."

Koguth couldn't help but burst out laughing and he shook his head slowly. "Oh... I needed that." He said. "Indeed I did." He nodded. "Very well... let us return and set up our defensive line. If these Fuglies decide to come here they will find we are not so easily taken."

"...still on course Captain." The elven sensor operator spoke from the portable sensor table set up in the cave. They had a small, portable sensor array established on the top of the mountain above them which provided them sensor coverage for the immediate sector around the moon.

"How soon before they come in range of the moon?" Yuriko asked.

"Their speed has slowed... so say about three hours." She answered turning to look at her. "Maybe they'll bypass the moon altogether."

Yuriko nodded. "Let's hope so." She said turning to see Mani move up beside her. "Lady Mani?" She asked. Mani was slightly taken aback by how Yuriko referred to her and it showed in her face. Yuriko smiled. "My father and mothers taught us to respect our elders Lady Mani. I remember several times where Andro and my brothers forgot that and they felt the sting of our mother's hands upon their backside when they were growing."

Mani couldn't help but smile. "I did not... I did not expect us to be accepted so easily." She said finally.

Yuriko's eyes darted to the side of the cavern. "I think that tells us that your Pride is dedicated to the same ideals as we are Milady."

Mani followed her gaze and she smiled when she saw Nedoli leaning up against the wall of the cavern near the entrance. Sitting between his legs in a fashion that was much more than causal, Ceale was looking into his face as his large hand gently caressed her shoulder. Both her legs were tossed over one of his and she reached up occasionally to smooth out some portion of the light fur on his face. They were talking in small whispers and Mani saw Ceale smile brightly several times at something Nedoli said to her. She turned back to Yuriko.

"My son... Nedoli... he has never shown such emotion for any woman." She said. "He has been taken with Ceale since he first saw her, no matter what she was forced to endure. It makes my heart happy to see that Ceale has looked beyond what she has experienced and seen that he worships her. That she accepts him for who he is."

Yuriko nodded. "You'll get no argument from me." She said in reply. "Was there something you wanted milady?"

Mani looked at her. "I was going to ask... I was going to ask if you knew anything of my daughter. Of Iama?"

Yuriko shook her head. "I'm sorry... I've only met her once and that was at a meeting before we left the Alpha Quadrant." She said. "I know that she has the respect of my father and my mothers and that she is very well liked among the crew of the ARC ROYAL."

Mani looked over to where Ceale and Nedoli sat. "Her grandfather was the one who took her away from us. He did this while Koguth was off fighting the Coven." She turned back to Yuriko. "When he returned and discovered what his father had done, he was incensed. He killed his own father for selling Iama to the brothels. Not a day has gone by since then that he has not thought of her or stopped looking for her."

Yuriko thought briefly of her father and how driven he was looking for Lisisa all those years ago. She nodded. "Then my father will understand him." She said finally.

Mani looked at her. "Can you tell me of the King? Your father?"

"What would you like to know?" Yuriko asked her.

"Whatever you feel comfortable allowing me to know." Mani replied.

Yuriko chuckled and met her eyes. "That could take a long time." She said.

"What else are we doing but waiting?" Mani said.

"True." Yuriko said. "He is... he is a very different man my father and..."

As Yuriko began to speak, Ceale was looking up into Nedoli's face with what amounted to both new found desire and love.

Ceale knew what she felt within herself when she looked at him, yet she was still very unsure of herself. She knew that he adored her in every way and that whatever had happened to her did not matter to him in the least, nor did it remove his own powerful desire for her. His actions these last weeks had only proven that to her more and more each moment she spent with him. And as the days had passed she found herself wanting to spend as much time with him as possible. She also knew enough about men to know that while his eyes held passion and desire for her, it was not the same as the violent lust she had seen in Pusintin's eyes or the eyes of his officers she had been forced to service. No... this desire and lust was a kind that made her feel safe and warm within his embrace. His body was always warm, partly because of the light layer of fur and partly because like Lycavorians, Kavalians tended to have higher than normal body temperatures. When he looked at her with those eyes, she saw in them the desire that she had never seen in her husband's eyes. A desire to sweep her up and make her feel things she never had before. His long fingers absently stroked her shoulder delicately and while she knew he could extend very sharp and deadly claws if he wanted, she had no fear of him whatsoever.

He lifted his other hand and brought it to her face, brushing some of her dark red hair from her cheek. "What are you thinking Ceale?" He asked softly.

She reached up and covered his large hand with her own, holding it to her cheek for a long moment. Ceale was rapidly discovering that while open displays of affection were not common among normal Kavalians, those who believed as Nedoli and his Pride were not among that form of belief. "That it is so very strange how things have worked out." She said softly curling her fingers within his. "I don't really know... Nedoli I..."

Nedoli placed a finger to her lips and stopped her words. "You will heal Ceale." He said softly. "You will heal and I will help you. Time is one thing we have plenty of. I ask for and expect nothing in return from you. I will show you that what you have experienced in your life is not how it should have happened. I will show you that you are still the most beautiful flower I have ever seen in my life, no matter what has taken place."

"You say that with such conviction." She said looking into his dark blue feline like eyes.

"Why wouldn't I?" He asked her. "It is what I believe. What I feel in my heart. I can not take back what has been done to you my beautiful Ceale... I wish I could... but I can't. But I can show you that you have not lost that spark within you. That you are still a breathtakingly beautiful woman and if given the honor, I would love you like no other."

Ceale lowered her head to his chest and placed a hand over his heart as his words made her nearly come to tears. "Why couldn't I have found you before all this happened?" She said softly.

Nedoli smiled and wrapped his powerful arms around her upper body pulling her tighter to him. "The past no longer matters. All that matters now is how we approach the future my flower. Everything happens for a reason Ceale." He said softly. "I will show you what love is. When you are ready... when you are ready I will love you until it steals your breath away and washes you of the shame that you think you must carry within you. Then... then we will start our life together and you will know everything you have been denied. I swear to you."

Ceale's eyes closed and she smiled blissfully at his words feeling the warmth of his body fill her. She snuggled even closer to him, never having felt the emotions coursing through her that she felt for this man. She would never have dreamed she could have such emotions for a Kavalian male. Emotions that lifted her spirits to the sky and were the anchor to what she now held onto.

MARTIN'S STRIKER MARK II LEONIDAS ONE

"...course laid in. First jump complete. Time to next jump is three hours and sixteen minutes." Endith spoke from her pilot's seat. She turned to look at Martin who knelt between her and For'mya sitting in the co-pilot's seat.

Over two decades they had been a flight crew now, far longer than was the norm within the Union, but also the reason that they were the foremost Flight Crew anywhere within the Union. Combined with Tina as their Flight and Combat Engineer as well as their relief pilot, there was nothing they could not do together as they had proven through the years. They had taken their STRIKER into places that no pilot would ever attempt unless they were completely insane.

“How long Endy?” He asked somberly.

“Five hours after we exit the second jump.” She answered. “Give or take a few minutes.”

For'mya glanced at him and reached up with her gloved hand to place it under his chin and turn his head gently to look at her. “What is it Martin my love?” She asked. “I can sense your foreboding.”

Martin met her dark eyes and shook his head. “It’s not what you think Kinsoargai.” He answered.

“You question whether you have done the right thing.” For'mya told him. “Whether you should have exposed Kalis to his heritage after what Pusintin did to me.” Martin’s eyes went a little wider when she said that and For'mya smiled at his expression. “You think we don’t know how you feel?” She asked. “You can not hide everything from us you know. No matter how hard you try.”

“Have I done the right thing Kinsoargai?” He asked.

“What does your heart tell you Martin our love?” For'mya asked him.

“It is not my heart that I am worried about.” Martin said.

“Do you honestly believe that after all the years that have passed since you changed me that I would think any different from you in this regard?” For'mya asked him. “From the very first moment you made me like you I have embraced my life as your wife and a Spartan woman. We all have.”

“That doesn’t answer my question.” Martin told her.

“It is not a question you should be asking.” For'mya told him. “I may be an elf female but the moment you turned me, I became half Lycavorian and a Spartan woman. Anja and Dysea as well. When we realized what you had done on Enurrua... the opportunity you gave to Kalis... what do you think we did? We rallied around Aricia, who is our soulmate just as much as she is yours, and we decided that we would not throw away the chance Kalis never received. The chance you gave to him. The chance to know his Lycavorian bloodline. To see what he could become. He deserved the chance denied him by his father... and look what has happened? The brief glimpse you offered to him... what he would never have seen from his father... it was all he needed to drastically alter the path he was walking. He would not have been able to complete the skills and tests you, Andro and the others gave to him if his true heart was not in it Martin. You know that.”

Martin nodded. “Yes.”

“Now he has done what none of us thought he could.” For'mya said. “I believe you were the only one who had true faith in him enough to see it. We did not in the beginning... until he completed the tasks. He rejected everything he was and altered the road he walked on before it consumed and killed him like it did his brother. I have no doubts now. No questions to his intent. None of us do. He is a Leonidas now... and he is reaching out to us for the support and love he did not receive before. It is not something we would deny to any who bore our blood in their veins and he is no different.”

“Fedor and Eirene?” Martin asked.

“Fedor and Eirene will be cautious... but once they see what we have seen... well... he is their half brother.” For'mya said. “They will embrace that and build from there.”

“What do you sense For'mya?” He asked. “I know you can probably feel him through me. What do you sense?”

For'mya met his eyes. “You know I can not control my empathic abilities like that Martin my love.” She told him.

Martin nodded his head with a smile. “I also know you have become quite good at getting a read on something that you can feel. You have felt him within me?”

For'mya nodded. “Yes.”

“And?” He asked again.

“I sensed... I sensed fear and anxiousness.” For'mya answered him. “But most of all I felt love for another.”

Martin’s eyebrows lifted slightly. “Love?”

For'mya nodded her head quickly. “There is someone with him that has brought forth this love within him. He would do anything for her. Even die. Without doubt or hesitation. She is the true catalyst to his life becoming different” She smiled at the man she loved more than her own life. “That is how we knew he had changed. This is how we knew he had truly embraced his Leonidas bloodline. He carries within him the trait that is so prevalent within you and our sons.”

“Why didn’t you tell me this?” Martin asked her.

For’mya smiled and her cheeks flushed slightly. “We did not share it with you because what I sensed was very personal for Kalis and we decided it was not something others needed to know.”

“Personal?” Martin prodded her.

“Let’s just say that he wishes to make this woman feel what you make each of us feel when we are in your arms Martin my love.” She said. “That is not something you can fabricate within your emotions my love. And that is how we know Kalis has truly turned a corner in his life.”

Martin was silent for a moment and he finally nodded his head. “Ok.” He exhaled finally. “Now I feel a lot better about this. And the risks we are taking.” He looked at For’mya and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek and neck. Her eyes closed in delight and she squeezed his arm. “You are amazing you know that.” He whispered to her.

For’mya chuckled softly. “You are not so bad yourself you know.”

“Oh please...!” Tina exclaimed from behind them. “Enough already! No making the co-pilot all hot and bothered Skipper! Get off our flight deck!”

Martin smiled as he stared at For’mya and he kissed her tenderly before rising to his feet. “I got your hot and bothered...” He spoke looking at Tina. “He’ll be on the ARC ROYAL when we return.”

Tina and Endith looked at him with wide eyes. “Benjamin?” Endy almost yelled. “He is coming to see us?” They had been married over twenty years and no matter the time apart, Benjamin could make both of them sing in delight for hours.

“Marty... you better not be messing with us!” Tina snapped. “I swear... if you are... I’ll make sure For’mya and the others close the store on you!”

Martin leaned over and kissed Tina’s cheek. “No... I’m not messing with you. If Andro followed my instructions... he’ll rendezvous sometime tomorrow evening. He’ll be waiting for you when we return. It’s about time everyone else was able to enjoy what I can every day. Having those we love with us. At least for a time.”

“Endy you hear that?” Tina exclaimed. “You...”

Martin quickly left the cockpit before Tina got wound up and they started to talk of things he did not want to hear. He moved into the back and his dark brown eyes took in those with him situated within the back of the STRIKER. Torma rested within the pen in the back, his head on the hay covered floor. Kasdan sat beside T’lolt and was involved in an animated discussion with the Immortal. Garan sat with Julie, Pablo and Kenny at the table looking over images to the moon sent to them by Yuriko. He cut his eyes to Murano who came up next to him.

“We are going in rather ‘light’ as you say.” He spoke.

Martin nodded. “No need to bring more.” He answered. “According to Yuriko... those who left my brother number about ninety. All of them fighters as well as pilots. I don’t intend to stick around long enough to engage those Svorag fucks if they land on the moon. Hitch them and pitch them we used to say in the Teams back on Earth. Get in and get the fuck out quick.”

Murano nodded. “A wise tactic.” He said.

“Murano... I want to ask some questions and I want your word that you will tell me the truth and hold nothing back.” Martin told him.

Murano nodded his head without hesitation. “I think we are beyond that now Martin. As Praetorians it goes against everything I... we were ever taught to keep information from our brother Praetorians.”

“I want to know how the Scourge caught those like us... Praetorians... how they caught us flat footed at the beginning of the second war.” Martin asked him. “You should have felt them coming right? At least in some fashion. I want to know what you know about how my people were used by the Science Convocation. And I want to know about Delnash.”

Murano looked at him surprised. “Martin you don’t believe he...”

Martin shook his head quickly. “No. It’s not that. I don’t believe he had any idea what that fat fuck Lorendo was doing.” He looked at him. “I need to know what he is capable of. What you think he is willing to do if things get ugly. Something tells me that things are going to get real ugly Murano.” Martin said. “My gut is telling me that Lorendo and a whole lot of other people are doing a whole lot of nasty stuff behind your brother's back. Unfortunately... once they realize that he is helping us... my gut is telling me that they will begin to act. And we probably won't like what they do one bit."

Murano was silent for a moment as he considered what Martin said. He nodded finally. "I see your point." He said. "Come... I will tell you what I can. Everything I can."

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

"You are certain of this Tenna Aihola?" Andro asked as they walked along the shore. Lu'ria walked beside him on the left holding tightly to one hand, Sadi on his right gripping his other. Aihola walked beside Lu'ria holding her other hand while Tarifa walked beside Sadi gripping her hand.

Aihola nodded her head. "Without their assistance we would not have been able to put a halt to the insurgency Aelulip was beginning to form."

"But Aelulip and her lieutenants escaped." Lu'ria said.

Aihola nodded her head. "Yes... but that is through no fault of Akor'dris or Bae'diraz. The raid was executed to perfection and both of them did not hesitate in the least about taking down those who fought back. Lynwe had an entire team ready to act if they betrayed us. They did not... and I have... I have..."

Andro looked at her as they walked slowly. "Tenna?" He asked.

"Tell them Nya Istel." Tarifa spoke. "We can hold nothing back. You know this."

"Tell us what?" Lu'ria asked. "My Queen... we must know everything if we are to make a decision that is best for everyone."

Aihola looked at Lu'ria and smiled into her amber eyes. "You will make a fine Queen of the Drow one day Lu'ria Leonidas." She said.

Lu'ria looked at her wide eyed. "My Queen I..."

Aihola grinned. "Don't worry... I have no plans to retire just yet." She said as she lifted Lu'ria's hand and kissed her palm in the Drow tradition of deep friendship and caring. "I spoke at length with both Akor'dris and Bae'diraz. She is not the same woman who I confronted all those years ago Mandri. Yes... I would normally be more suspicious of Akor'dris given our history but... she showed me something that made me believe her."

"What could she show you that would make you not doubt her motives Aihola?" Sadi asked.

"Aelulip is crazed." Aihola spoke. "A year after they left us in Canada she settled them in South America. They discovered a High Coven science center that we did not know about. They slaughtered the staff but kept several researchers alive. Aelulip wanted to make the Drow with her stronger and more of a match for Lycavorians. She spared the researchers so they would work for her. At the time Kawyona still carried much hate in her for what had taken place. Aelulip used that hate and convinced her to become one of the first to be tested."

"Oh boy... I'm not going to like where this is going am I?" Andro said softly.

"No. But you need to know." Tarifa told him.

"The experiments these High Coven monsters were conducting were similar to what Yuri was doing within the many centers here in North America. To me. To Tari and others. They succeeded to a point."

"To a point?" Lu'ria asked.

Aihola nodded sadly. "They were able to increase the strength, endurance and reflexes of Kawyona and many of the other Drow warriors who went with Aelulip. There were side effects however. Many of them became... they became like Lynwe. They were altered into a more masculine version of the Drow while still appearing female outwardly in many ways. Lynwe was the first to notice because she is the same. Akor'dris was acting like she did before Lynwe found Tarifa and I and we guided her to peace."

Lu'ria inhaled sharply and gripped Andro's hand tighter. "No." She gasped.

Aihola nodded. “Unfortunately... yes. She carried the same hate and revulsion at what had been done to her as Lynwe did in the early years. And it was something that Aelulip knew about but did not care. Akor'dris discovered this fact some years later but that is not the reason she began to hate Aelulip.”

“Bae'diraz.” Tarifa said. “More specifically... Bae'diraz's sister. A beautiful young Drow who acted for Akor'dris much as Aihola and I did until she finally found Selene. In this woman Akor'dris discovered that she was not a monster and that she could know love. The three of them were inseparable for a decade. Always in secret, never letting it be revealed that Akor'dris had tamed the savage anger she felt at what Aelulip had done to her and so many. She gathered others who were like her, six that had the fortitude to not succumb to the hate and anger. Bae'diraz was the lover of one of them. Secretly they planned and plotted to remove Aelulip from power and turn the Drow to more peaceful avenues. They eventually wanted to reunite with those still in Eden City.”

“What happened?” Andro asked.

“Aelulip discovered them two years ago.” Aihola answered. “More directly they were betrayed by someone they thought was a friend. Aelulip took Akor'dris's lover... she took Bae'diraz's lover. Almost all of their group. She had them covered in pitch and set on fire in front of Akor'dris and Bae'diraz. She forced them to watch as those they loved died a horrible and painful death.”

“By the gods!” Sadi gasped in shock.

Aihola nodded sadly. “Their rage gave them the strength to escape however, both of them severely wounded, but still alive. They escaped into the jungles of South America. There they plotted and schemed for their revenge. They knew what Aelulip was planning so when they came across a Union survey team in the deep jungle, they came forward. The rest... well you know the rest. Now they are here with us.”

Andro was silent as he stopped walking and turned to look at the oceans as it lapped at the beach. He released Lu'ria's and Sadi's hands and moved to the water's edge where he squatted down and dug his hand into the sand. He lifted his head and turned back to his Drow Aunt. A woman who had been a fixture in his life just as much as Tarifa. “Why come to me Tenna?” He asked softly. “My blood... my blood burns at what was done to them... but what can I do?”

Aihola looked at Tarifa and then back to him. “Aelulip and her lieutenants were not among those we destroyed as Lu'ria has said. I believe...”

“We believe.” Tarifa corrected her.

“We believe that was her intent all along.” Aihola said correcting herself. “To sacrifice the majority of her followers in order to complete what was always her real objective.”

Andro met her eyes. “Infiltrate the Drow in North America.” He said.

Aihola nodded. “Yes.”

“Acting in your father's stead as you are and because Lu'ria is now your wife and mate and a Princess of the Union... you can not be seen as getting involved in something that is purely driven by internal Drow politics. It goes against everything that your father has championed and it will appear as if you are favoring one group over another.” Tarifa said.

Andro returned to his feet. “You think she will move against you?” Andro asked.

Aihola nodded her head. “Politically yes. Perhaps not in the short term, but she will begin making waves in the future. She will do so from the shadows at first until she feels comfortable enough to come out into the open. Then she will openly challenge everything we have built and hold dear these last two decades.”

“I still don't understand what you want from me.” Andro asked. “If you will not allow me to support you openly...”

“Andro you can't.” Tarifa told him. “The Chronicles of Lycavorian Law prohibit you from interfering directly in an internal political dispute of member states. You know this Mandri. No matter how much you want to help.”

“Then what?” Andro snapped angered by his lack of options to help those he considered family.

“We have reason to believe that Aelulip and her cronies will try to target Akor'dris and Bae'diraz.”

Aihola told him. “Remove them and everything they know... everything they can testify to will be lost forever.”

“You want them protected?” Sadi asked.

Aihola and Tarifa nodded. “Yes.” They said together.

“They are not safe among the Drow?” Andro asked.

Aihola shook her head. “We don’t yet know how far Aelulip has penetrated my people or how far her influence extends. Akor'dris and Bae'diraz need to be as far away from here as possible for their own protection. As well as for their own healing.”

“Send them to Apo Prime.” Andro said immediately.

Tarifa shook her head. “I already thought of that. Because of me and my relationship to Nya Istel, the Drow have gained notoriety on nearly every Union world. The moment one or more arrive on a planet it will be known within hours no matter how much we try to keep it secret.”

“Then send them to the SCIMITAR.” Andro spoke.

Aihola shook her head slowly. “That would make it appear as if you are siding with the Drow because of Lu'ria.” She said.

Lu'ria's eyes grew wide and she looked at Andro. “Saradasaar... your father!” She gasped.

Andro looked at her as what she was saying struck Sadi. “Of course.” Sadi exclaimed. “It's perfect!”

Aihola and Tarifa looked at her. “What?”

Andro rose to his full height and turned to face them fully. “My father wanted the loved ones of the crew of the ARC ROYAL sent to them. Wives. Husbands. A few children if they wanted. A Pralor corvette is loading as we speak. Aunt Anuk and Nayeca are going as well as several hundred others. Not as many as my father thought since the crew of the ARC ROYAL is still young and there are not many veterans among them.”

“It is leaving today?” Tarifa asked.

Andro nodded his head. “They will be departing in just over an hour. They will move to Dreamland from here to pick up Uncle Ben and a few others and then make several jumps to my father's location. Ben has that information.”

“Can we do that?” Aihola asked.

Andro smiled. “The Pralor corvettes are more than capable Tenna. They are Pralor ships after all.”

“It would still seem like you are siding with the Drow and...” Aihola began.

“Not if the only ones who know where they went are those of us here.” Sadi said quickly. “There are no Drow with Martin and the Queens. He specifically changed his mind at the last moment and did not take them because he did want to reveal their capabilities to any potential enemies. They are still your father's secret weapon Andro. You know he won't reveal every weapon he has to an enemy.”

Andro shook his head. “No... he won't.” He said.

“Can you make this happen Androcles?” Aihola asked.

“Will they go?” Andro asked her.

Aihola nodded her head quickly. “Both of them are aware of what could happen if they remain. They need... they have been running for years, always looking over their shoulders. It needs to end.”

“I want to meet them first.” Andro told her. “The corvette is loading in a secure dock on PROMETHUS Station. Bring them to the High Security briefing room there. I'll contact the Dock Officer and delay the departure.”

Aihola stepped up to him as Tarifa turned and lifted her head and called for Roluth within Mindvoice. Aihola took Andro's hands and leaned up to kiss his cheek. “Thank you Andro.” She said softly.

Andro smiled at her. “There is no need for thanks.” He said. “Just make sure that they know they will be entering my father's world.”

Aihola nodded as she felt Roluth approaching. “I will.” She said. She turned to Lu'ria as Roluth's red scales appeared over the tree tops from the villa and he circled once quickly before landing on the soft sand only meters away from his bonded sisters. Tarifa scrambled into the saddle quickly and motioned for Aihola. “Nya Istel... quickly. We do not want to delay the ship for longer than necessary. It will appear odd.”

Aihola nodded and darted to Roluth's side, scampering up into the saddle behind her. Roluth took to the skies immediately as Sadi and Lu'ria moved closer to him and they watched as he headed out over the gulf towards Sparta.

“I will go with you.” Lu'ria said as she pressed up to his body and Sadi did the same on his opposite side.

Andro nodded. “I figured as much.” He said.

“Why did you want to meet them Andro?” Sadi asked.

Andro looked at her. “To see them for myself.” He stated.

“Why?” Lu'ria asked.

“To make sure they are up for what they are going to get involved in.” He answered. He kissed Lu'ria hard on the lips and then turned quickly and did the same to Sadi. “Race you back to the villa!” He announced before shifting and breaking into a run.

“No fair!” Lu'ria declared as both she and Sadi shifted instantly into the golden colored female and shimmering white furred female and dug their paws into the sand to race after Andro.

PROMETHUS STATION EARTH DEFENSE FORCES UNION MILITARY SECTOR COMMAND AND CONTROL FACILITY

Androcles was no fool and he knew instantly upon meeting them that everything his Aunts had told him were completely true. There were not two women sent among them to spy or collect information. There were two women who bore the pain of their past in their eyes and in their body language. And that pain was extreme. They stood from their chairs at the end of the table as he entered the room with Lu'ria. Tarifa was the only one with them, mainly to keep her appearance as normal as possible. Tarifa was a frequent visitor to PROMETHUS Station because of her duties and her arriving with two cloaked and hooded Drow security personnel was far from out of the ordinary.

Andro could tell them apart easily enough. Akor'dris was the taller one at nearly six foot in height, though Bae'diraz was not far behind at nearly five nine. Akor'dris's face however, it was more tough in appearance, indicating she had endured far more misery than most Drow could comprehend. It did not detract from the exotic beauty that all Drow exuded, but her amber colored eyes were just a little more wise and pessimistic than most. Her full lips and high cheekbones were surrounded by flowing white hair that fell nearly to the middle of her back. Whatever she had endured in her life, while it showed a little in her eyes and in her face, it did not affect her stunning beauty or the unnatural aura that attracted men and women alike to the Drow. The flexible black jacket and pants encased legs that seemed to go on forever and breasts that were larger than his mother Anja's, but seemed to fit her tall, powerful frame smoothly. He could sense her suspicious apprehension, her combat instincts alert and very ready.

Bae'diraz is the one that caught his eye and held his attention the most however.

She stood roughly five foot nine and looked to be about a hundred and twenty-five very muscular pounds. The difference between them was obvious for within Bae'diraz's amber eyes he could still detect the signs of youth and exuberance that had all but been expunged from Akor'dris eyes. Bae'diraz met Andro's azure colored orbs with no back down in her whatsoever. Her shimmering white hair cascaded past her shoulders, nearly as long as Akor'dris's hair, but the lines of pain did not extend outward as they did for her companion. Her eyebrows curved gracefully over bright amber pupils that were alive with life and knowledge. It was perhaps knowledge that she should not have had to experience, but it was there none the less. She too had high cheekbones and a jaw line that angled around elegantly to her narrow chin. Her lips were coated with a lighter shade of auburn colored lipstick which contrasted with the umber color of her smooth skin. As with all Drow, Bae'diraz's skin was blemish free and while not the darker color of many Drow, it gave her an extra advantage when it came to the exoticness of normal Drow. Her eyes were delicately slanted inward, the amber pupils filled with young life and her makeup just enough to enhance the amber color and make them stand out more.

Bae'diraz too wore a black jumpsuit like outfit with matching jacket and combat boots. The leather like material clung to a figure that matched Lu'ria's in every way, though his Drow Blossom was slightly larger in the chest area than Bae'diraz. Her legs were long and muscular and ended with a taut backside that most men, Lycavorian, human or elf, would kill to have in their hands for an evening Andro knew. Given the muscular nature of that perfect ass, Andro deduced that Bae'diraz was probably just as lethally dangerous with her feet as she was with her hands and her beautiful features would hide that from most people until she struck. Long arms and delicate looking fingers more than likely masked some very dangerous abilities and given the look in her eye Andro knew this woman had killed before.

Andro moved closer to them with Lu'ria at his side and he watched as Akor'dris prodded Bae'diraz in the back and they both bowed their heads to him.

Andro held up his hand quickly. "Do not bow to us." Lu'ria spoke quickly taking the cue from her beloved husband and mate. "The Drow bow to no one. And certainly not to those who consider them friends and family."

Bae'diraz and Akor'dris looked up with slight expressions of surprise and Akor'dris turned to where Tarifa stood. Tarifa smiled at her. "I told you." She said.

Akor'dris turned back to look at Andro. "Everything we have done these last days we have done of our own free will." She said.

"We could not live the life we were living any longer." Bae'diraz added. "It was slowly... it was killing us... and..."

Andro held up his hand and directed Lu'ria to the chair before he sat on the edge of the table. He crossed his arms over his chest as Lu'ria placed her hand affectionately on his thigh and they both looked at Akor'dris and Bae'diraz. The Drow females saw this obvious display of mutual affection and were somewhat taken aback by it. It was not often they saw a Drow who was the wife of a non-Drow. And both of them knew from news reports and from listening to others talk that Lu'ria was also a Crown Princess of the Union, and she had five female slaves that called her Mistress. They had seen them together on the Netnews at different points holding hands and walking among different markets or eating at an outdoor café. Lu'ria was looked upon with almost as much affection as the Drow Queen Aihola because of her new position.

"I do not need to hear you relive the horrors of what you experienced in order to believe that what you want now is very genuine." Androcles said. "I wanted to meet you in order to tell you that you do not need to carry these burdens alone anymore."

"We do not wish to run away and hide!" Bae'diraz hissed softly. "It is not the Drow way!"

Andro shook his head. "No it is not."

"What do you know of the Drow?" Akor'dris asked more harshly than she intended. "What do you know of our history and our traditions? What..."

Lu'ria came to her feet, her own amber eyes flashing slightly in anger. "He knows more than you could ever believe!" She snapped right back. "He carries within him his father's memories and his grandfather before him! And Martin Leonidas considers all Drow to be his family as he has shown so much in the past!"

"You ask us to run and hide!" Akor'dris continued. "To cower in the face of danger and those who want us dead!"

Andro shook his head. "No... that is not what I am asking."

Bae'diraz looked at him. "Then what do you call it?" She asked in a more thoughtful tone of voice. "Asking us to run away and hide instead of remaining here to fight and bring that witch down. To see her beaten and brought to justice by the Queen for the horrors that are her doing!"

"You will be doing quite a bit where you are going." Andro said. "Running and hiding is most definitely not one of those things."

Bae'diraz looked at Akor'dris and then back to him. "What... what do you mean?"

"My father and those with him are currently in uncharted space." Andro said. "Which for lack of a better definition means they are where no man has gone before. Literally." He looked at them. "He has no Drow with him. He did not want to reveal their existence to whoever we meet out there who aren't real friendly. You know how my father feels about the Drow?"

Bae'diraz nodded. "Through the years even the Drow with us discovered this. He... he considers the Queen his honored sister and he considers the Drow warriors as brother and sister comrades in arms."

"My father does not hide." Andro said with a smile. "From anything or anyone. Where you are going is going to put you on the front line of new discoveries. New planets. Even new species. They've already run into a couple... one of them they aren't particularly fond of. It will also give you the opportunity to forever put the past behind you and try and build a new life. Is that not what Drow tradition demands?"

Akor'dris and Bae'diraz looked at him with wide eyes. "How... how do you know that?" Bae'diraz finally stammered.

"I've read the Yara Parma." Andro told them seeing their eyes grow even wider. "From cover to cover. I know exactly what Drow tradition demands. When the time comes... you will return here and you will face Aelulip and Drow justice will be done. What I am offering right now is an opportunity for both of you to begin anew. And perhaps find some peace.”

Bae'diraz looked at him. She had heard much about this young Prince of the Union. His reputation was well known and she knew he was feared by many because of the strange powers he, his father and a few others possessed. She could also tell just how devoted he was to Lu'ria by the simple and thoughtless actions she had seen since they entered the room. The way they looked at each other, the way their hands and fingers always seemed to be touching one another. Bae'diraz did not fear him though she knew she probably should. Aihola had told her quite a bit about him but she was very clear on one point. Do not try and be dishonest with him for he would smell it on her in an instant.

Bae'diraz had been a young child when her parents spirited her away in the beginning with Aelulip and the others. Her upbringing had been harsh and sometimes painful, but she had learned something about herself during that time. Her mother and father were fanatical followers of Aelulip and her twisted ideals and Bae'diraz discovered she was not. She kept this to herself, living a lie until the time presented itself for her to escape. Akor'dris and the others had provided her this opportunity.

“Peace?” She spoke softly.

Akor'dris came up beside her. “Is this... is this even possible?” She asked.

Androcles looked at them, his eyes moving to Lu'ria beside him before he turned back to them. “Did you believe you could come this far?” He asked.

Akor'dris and Bae'diraz looked at each other and then back to him. “We... we had doubts at times but no... we never gave up hope.” Bae'diraz answered.

“Returning here...” Akor'dris said softly. “It was the only way I could come to terms with what has been done to me.”

Lu'ria moved forward and took her hands. “And you can do this.” She stated. “Like Lynwe... you can see that you are not a monster and you can find purpose and love once more.”

Akor'dris looked at her. “It has... it has been two years since I lost her.” She said softly. “I do not know if I can... if I can feel that way again.”

Lu'ria nodded. “You can.” She said. “All you need to do is take the final step and let go of the hatred you hold within you. Once you do that... then you will be able to face anything.”

Akor'dris met Lu'ria's eyes and nodded. She took a deep breath and nodded. “I will try.” She said softly. “It is all I have left to me.”

Bae'diraz nodded. “As will I.” She said. “If I am to have a future... I wish it to be one of my choosing.”

Andro turned and looked at Tarifa who smiled at him and nodded. He turned back to them. “Then prepare to step into the unknown.” He said. “There will never be a dull moment with my father... that I can assure you.”

CHAPTER NINETEEN

EARTH

LYCAVORIAN UNION MILITARY HQ SPARTAN COMMAND CENTER, 0645 HRS 500 METERS BENEATH MOUNT HAGIOS

Hope.

They had gambled everything on that one word for their future and the prospect for their men and their people. Since the day he had stood in front of Dorian and Lisisa Leonidas, his belief in that word was growing by leaps and bounds. He glanced at his friend and could see the same faith etched on Byka's face as well as they entered the massive Command and Control Center. Perhaps it was for other reasons, but the same look Azlenr wore on his weathered face was also displayed on Byka's face. They were escorted by two Durcunusaan troops who had been their shadows since coming to Earth early yesterday morning. Yet these two men had treated them with more respect and honor than they would have received from many of his own people. They answered questions without hesitation and as honestly as they could and were allowed. Never once in their presence did Azlenr feel as if he was a prisoner. Knowing what he knew now, Azlenr'Macoe was quite sure the might and dedication of the Lycavorian Union would have crushed them like so much garbage had it come to blows on Solmar. Judging by what he had seen over the course of the last few days he knew that these were men and women, of all species, took the defense and preparation of their Union quite serious. He had seen small things at first; weapons, tools, communications equipment, items of war that he had not known could exist. And now this facility.

Though he had them outnumbered in actual troop strength, Azlenr had no doubts that the three brigades of Union troops that had landed on Solmar would have gone through his two divisions of experienced and well trained troops like shit through a Kavalian Plains Swamp Rat. As each hour passed since that day, Azlenr'Macoe could see the dark clouds that had hovered over his people for so long slowly lifting.

"We did the right thing Byka my old friend." Azlenr finally spoke softly.

Byka met his eyes and nodded. "Of that I have no doubts." He answered. Azlenr looked at him oddly for a moment and then he heard the female voice and knew why Byka was already firmly convinced.

"Papa! Isn't it amazing?" Kameka spoke as she moved up to him with the Lycavorian Spartan he knew as Daio moving behind her.

They stopped walking as Meka came up to them and halted. She was wearing a standard Union Light Armor Flight Suit that hugged her figure but her still beautiful face is what drew Azlenr's attention. Her dark brown eyes were more alive now than Azlenr had ever seen them since Marsin had violated her so and she appeared relaxed and confident. He hadn't seen her since the crash and for the first time Azlenr took notice that the scars that had dotted her face on were completely gone. He glanced up quickly and looked at Daio once more, saw the ways his eyes stayed on her, and then he put it together. His eyes went back to Kameka and he noticed how her tail was no longer wrapped around her waist as it had been in the years since the attack. Now it swayed leisurely back and forth behind her as she walked, twitching happily from side to side as his own wife's tail did when he was home with her. The Spartan Daio had obviously staked a claim to Meka and from her actions and the brightness of her eyes it appeared she was utterly accepting of his attentions. It appeared as if Kameka had stepped beyond her past for even in the few hours on the ship coming here he had seen her slowly coming out of the self-imposed shell she had erected around herself. Azlenr had heard from both Byka and others how the Spartan Daio had defended Kameka with savage ferocity and from the looks of it, there had been more involved than simply doing his duty.

In a brazen display of emotion and caring for a Kavalian male, Byka hugged his daughter tightly to himself, his own face relaxed and peaceful. Azlenr knew then that his friend had fully accepted the path they were on and was not going to hide it from anyone. Kameka hugged her father back and then stepped back slightly to stand in front of Daio almost possessively Azlenr noticed. He also noticed that Daio did not back away, his arm curling halfway around her waist as he held out his hand to her father. Byka took it without hesitation and greeted Daio as he saw Meka's tail slip up and curl around his forearm.

"Daio... I see you are taking care of my daughter." Byka said with a smile.

"Papa!" Kameka exclaimed in mock horror.

Daio laughed softly and his arm tightened around her waist slightly Azlenr saw. It was a move that Kameka did not shy away from, but leaned into somewhat, as her tail curled tighter around his arm as much as possible. "It is the first time I have ever given a tour of our city of Sparta to such a beautiful woman sir. I thank you for allowing me to do so. Her company was excellent. As was yours sir."

Byka looked at his daughter with bright eyes of his own. It had shocked him when Daio came to them at the embassy after only a few hours on the planet and asked for his permission to take Kameka on a tour of the city. He thought that they would be confined to the embassy grounds until after several meetings and such. The look in his daughter's eyes when Daio had appeared was something he could not deny. Her dark eyes were alive with life as they had been before Marsin had violated her so. He could not refuse her and he was even more stunned when Daio offered that he accompany them to dinner at least. Kameka was adamant that he come with them and Daio took them to a small outdoor café in the heart of Old Sparta he called it. The food was excellent and even as they sat at the table watching as hundreds of men, women and children passed them by, they were looked at only with curious wonder and not harsh anger as Byka had expected. It appeared that Athani Leonidas's acceptance into their world had given most of them reason to not judge all Kavalians in the same light. Kameka hung on Daio's every word as he told them his history and the history of the city he called home. After three hours Byka decided to leave them together for they could not take their eyes from each other and she had taken to holding his large hand within hers. Byka could think of no better hands to leave Meka with than the man who had saved her life and annihilated the monster that had been the cause of her agony and shame these last years. He knew they were not far from the embassy and as he walked the busy streets back to the embassy he was again taken aback at the seeming acceptance his presence caused among those he passed. After what Keleru and Pusintin had wrought in this very city he thought for sure he would be hated. These Spartans and their people whether Lycavorian or elf or human, it appeared they were far more tolerant and accepting than his own people.

"The meal was superb and I returned to the embassy and went right to sleep because of it." Byka told him with a smile.

Daio turned to Azlenr. "Good morning General." He said. "Andro is waiting for you at the other end of the CIC."

Azlenr looked around in wonder. This facility was unlike anything he had ever seen in his lifetime. The CIC as Daio called it was easily as large as an outdoor Tovon stadium. The madly popular Kavalian sport could attract thousands of fans from across the planets. He let his dark eyes wander for a moment, taking in the three floors and the open railing that allowed those occupying the upper floors to look down into the actual Command Center itself. He turned his eyes back to Daio. "I... this facility is amazing." He finally stammered.

Daio nodded. "I hate it myself." He answered with a smile. "Too many buttons and switches and screens for my taste."

"You allow us... you allow us access to your Central Command Center for the Union military Daio?" Azlenr asked.

"Our allies have come here often sir." Daio answered. "To discuss one thing or another."

Azlenr met his eyes. "You consider us your allies?" He asked softly.

"Your actions on Solmar have made the news here General." Daio spoke to him. "How you risked quite a bit to safeguard the civilian population. How many of your men remain on Solmar now helping to rebuild and defend the colony. The Bontawillian government has also expressed their thanks through diplomatic channels at what you and General Byka were able to do."

"We invaded their colony!" Azlenr spoke in shock.

Daio nodded his head. "In a ruse that was intended not for conquering... but to kill you and General Byka." He answered. "You were used sir... and when Keleru thought you had outlived your usefulness he decided to have you killed. The information we got from the Puma Bane commander's data pad only confirmed this as you know. Andro thought it to be wise to make sure that was known by everyone." Daio stepped closer to him. "You will find General... you will not lack for support and loyalty from us if you are our friends."

Azlenr was silent for a moment and then he nodded his head. "So it would seem." He said. "So it would seem."

Daio smiled and slid his arm down to grasp Kameka's hand. "Follow me. General Pian and the others are coming in from the south entrance as we speak. It's time that the future of the Kavalian people began to take shape."

"...the men who will make up the inner realm of the new government." Deia spoke from chair beside where Andro sat in his father's chair at the head of the table. "I will not attempt to name them all as my pronunciation of their names is not yet up to par and I do not wish to insult any of them." She finished with a small smile. It was a smile that was matched by several of the Kavalian men seated at the table.

The conference table was massive to say the least, easily able to accommodate all of the twenty-nine senior Kavalian Pride leaders who had accompanied Pian'Nrurani of their own accord, as well as Admiral Ceneu, General Vistr and three other senior Union officers. Arrarn sat at the other end of the table with Narice and Toria on either side of him. There was some tension between the Kavalians and Narice, for these men had fought the high Coven for many years, but none of them made any overt remarks and no hostile looks were given. Andro and Deia both noticed this right away and it was the first and best sign that these men and hopefully those they commanded would be indicative of most of the Kavalian population.

Around the table seated in comfortable chairs behind the men and women were senior aides and several other military officers of both species. Pian'Nrurani was seated five chairs down from Andro's left, Jalersi sitting proudly beside her husband and mate, his large hand resting between her two smaller, slender hands in full view of everyone who saw. Athani sat on her left beside Resumar with her long tail curled around his upper arm as much as she was able. Seated at this table were the men who led the largest Kavalian Prides to back Pian; all of them embracing the need for change in order to go forward into what future they were to have. Many of these Prides were from the outer edges of Kavalian space, far from the influences of the older and more archaic Prides who held power and wanted the status quo to continue. Many of those present had already begun to treat their females, not as inferior servants, but as equals in many things. All of them were intelligent enough to know that complete change would take many generations, but they were actively insuring that the path of their Prides led them forward and not back.

"I would like to welcome you all here." Andro spoke from his chair. "I hope we can accomplish everything we set out to do."

"Do you speak with the authority of your father Prince Androcles?" A Kavalian asked from his chair. His dark blond fur was generously laced with gray and he appeared to be one of the older Kavalians present. Pian leaned forward in his chair.

"Androcles... this is General Aleou of the Pride Hkan." Pian said. "Since the others will not let me escape leadership of what we have begun, I have appointed him as second to me."

Andro nodded. "General Aleou'Hkan then?" He asked.

The Kavalian's eyes showed his surprise at Androcles's use of the customary Kavalian tradition of speaking his full name in a show of respect. He bowed his head slightly at this show of high opinion to acknowledge it and then he turned his dark eyes to Pian. "It is you who had the courage and fortitude to finally act on what all of us here have been afraid to do Pian." He spoke. "It is only right that you lead us." The heads of all the Kavalians at the table nodded in agreement at Aleou's words, and did so in a convincing manner.

Pian nodded and looked at Andro once more. "We are ready." He said.

Andro nodded and looked at two men who stood off to his right and motioned with his hand to them. They began to move among the men and women at the table and hand out data pads. "To answer your question General... in almost all things I speak with the authority of my father. Not to worry though... we will be speaking with him shortly. I know you all met with Prime Minister Deia and several others last evening and these are the preliminary decisions that were made at the meeting. Most of them it seems you had already agreed to with Pian before coming here so there is no need for us to review them. They are issues that of the concern of the Kavalian people and are best left to those who understand your people most, which is you in this room." Andro leaned forward. "It is also my understanding that Pian has appointed General Azlenr to be the overall commander of your forces and General Byka as commander of what would be considered your Special Operations units. I will not begin to question the wisdom or experience of those in this room who have far more years than I do, just so you all agree on these decisions." Andro again saw the nods of agreement from the men at the table.

The younger Kavalian rose from his chair about half way down the table. His very large six foot three frame had light brown fur which was impeccably groomed. He had a powerful build under the uniform he wore and his green feline like eyes were bright with intelligence. His tail was at least a meter long and dangled calmly along his left leg.

"While these many pleasantries are all fine and wonderful... we need to know how the great Lycavorian Union intends to help us!" The man spoke in a tone of voice that spoke of if not distrust, then at least the fact he wasn't fully convinced. "We risked much by coming here! We risk our Prides and our futures by defying Keleru and Pusintin. We..."

"That is enough Cowen!" Aleou snapped looking at the younger man. "That we are even here should be proof enough that the Union will help us!"

Andro looked at the young Kavalian. "And you are?" He asked.

"I am Cowen'Shan." He snapped forcefully. "Leader of Pride Shan!"

“And you speak to the Crown Prince of the Union!” Pian snarled. “You will mind your tone Cowen! They did not need to do this and they certainly did not need to offer to help us! We need their help!”

“At what cost to us?” Cowen snapped right back though with a much milder tone because of the position Pian held. “I trust in you Pian’Nnurani... and what we are attempting but Keleru and his Puma Bane scum have already taken from us family and friends! What will the Union require for their assistance?”

Jalersi turned quickly and looked at Andro in an effort to explain. “My... my father’s Puma Bane assassination teams came for Cowen, his father and others of Pride Shan when they first...” Jalersi could not continue and stopped for a moment to compose herself. “They killed his father and two of his younger sisters. It was...”

“They made my father watch as a dozen Puma Bane Commandos raped and butchered my sisters in front of him!” Cowen barked. “And then after they beat him until he could no longer stand; they gutted him like some sort of animal in the streets! I swore to my mother to see them avenged! We can not do that sitting here!”

Andro looked at him. “Your mother survived?” He asked softly.

Cowen nodded his head. “My mother and my three youngest siblings! My father... my father left me in charge of our Pride and his last words to me were to keep them... to see them safe!”

“And keeping them safe means that you charge off into the unknown with vengeance in your blood and hate clouding your eyes and heart?” Andro asked him. “Did your father agree with Pian’Nnurani and what he is attempting to build for your people?”

“I would not be here if he did not!” Cowen snapped.

“Do you believe in it?” Andro asked as he rose and got to his feet.

“You question me?” Cowen growled.

Andro shook his head as he moved towards him. “I’m not questioning you... I’m asking if you share your father’s vision for your Pride and your people?”

“Pride Shan was closest to the influence of the center core worlds of the Kavalian Empire Andro. They are one of the largest to have joined me.” Pian spoke now from his chair. “When I put out the call... when I put out the call they were among the first who responded. They lost... they lost the most because of their proximity to the core worlds. Puma Bane teams were able to reach them more quickly than anyone anticipated.”

Andro walked along the side of the table towards Cowen. “How many of your Pride?” He asked softly.

“Nearly two thousand!” Cowen hissed angrily. “A quarter of them Pride Shan children! Our children!”

Andro stopped in front of Cowen who had turned to face him fully. Several Durcunusaan within the room were getting nervous at the Kavalian’s anger and what he might do and even some of those Kavalians at the table were showing signs of nervousness. Cowen was taller than Andro by three inches at least, but their builds were very similar in definition. Cowen probably outweighed Andro by about forty pounds and was somewhat thicker with muscle and many of the Durcunusaan were trying to determine if they should intervene. Many of the Kavalians at the table had also noticed that Jomann, who they knew to be Androcles’s Durcunusaan Captain, had not moved from his position just behind Andro’s chair.

Aleou got to his feet now. “Cowen... this does not help our cause.” He tried to reason with the young man.

“How do we know we can trust them?” Cowen snapped.

“Cowen’Shan!” Jalersi barked now as she got to her feet. “You have no right!”

Cowen’s eyes became instantly less angry as he looked at her Andro saw. “With all respect Pride Lady Nruarani, we waste time here.” He spoke in a respectful tone of voice towards her. He addressed her as all of them had begun to address her. Jalersi was Pian’s wife and mate now and she commanded almost as much respect as he did. No one knew who started it, but most of them had begun to refer to her as Pride Lady Nruarani in a show of esteem and for her role as the senior female of Pride Nruarani. Something Pian’s mother was ecstatic over. “We must act!”

“Does rushing off on a mission of vengeance honor your father’s last words to you?” Andro asked him.

“You know nothing of my father!” Cowen snarled turning back to him. “Or my Pride! You know nothing of what we have endured!”

Andro shook his head. “No... I don’t.” He answered him. “But it strikes me as odd how similar his words to you sound like the words a Spartan father would tell their son in the same situation.”

“So... so you say!” Cowen hissed.

Androcles looked at Cowen for a long moment. They were about the same age if he was correct, and there was no doubt that Cowen was strong willed and equally capable. Andro could also sense the fear and indecision within him. And it was not because he was here. Androcles sensed that he had much in common with this Kavalian Pride Leader. A man who had been unprepared to assume the role he now held. Much like Androcles himself. He held out his hand slowly.

“Will you allow me to show you that perhaps we are not so different Cowen'Shan?” He asked.

Deia rose to her feet as she recognized what Andro was about to do. “Andro... no!” She barked.

Cowen’s head turned to look at her. “What...” His eyes turned back to Andro just as he reached out and grasped Cowen’s large hand in his own. “Arrrrgggg...” Cowen screamed as white hot pain lanced through his temples and he reached up with his opposite hand to grab his head. “What... what are you...? Ahhhh!”

[Let me show you Cowen'Shan.] Andro’s voice echoed in his mind. [Let me show you just how close we are.]

Cowen groaned in pain once more, staggering almost drunkenly, his right hand held in an iron grasp with Andro’s and his left reaching out to brace himself against the table. He saw so many images flashing across his mind, children, men and women. He saw places he had never been to; never seen; the clash of hardened steel upon shield; the splashing of blood as that steel met flesh; the shattering sound of weapons fire in bright green jungles. Andro stepped closer to him, grasping his left shoulder with his hand and pulling him closer. Many of the Kavalians had come to their feet, the Durcunusaan suddenly moving closer as Deia moved around the table only to have Jomann grasp her arm.

“No.” Jomann said calmly as he held Deia back. “Everyone hold!” He barked the order.

“What is he doing?” Aleou barked angrily. “He is... he is killing him!”

Those close to Andro and Cowen staggered back slightly as the light blue Etheric pulse surrounded their hands. Cowen’s claws extended from his fingertips but his fur covered hand simply grasped Andro’s hand tighter.

“Resumar!” Pian growled. “What is happening?”

Resumar had come to his feet as well to protect his brother but he saw what Andro was doing as Cowen’s face began to lose the pained features. “Wait Pian!” Resumar shouted. “He is...”

“He is what?” Pian snapped.

“He is showing him.” Resumar declared softly.

[We are two of a kind Cowen'Shan. Different but still the same.] Andro’s voice filtered to Cowen as he gripped the side of the table but the pain rapidly dissipated to nothing. [You and I. We have been pushed into positions we were not prepared to take by actions not of our choosing. Do not be afraid my friend. You have a pure heart Cowen'Shan and what you see is all that I have seen. All that my father and grandfather have seen. Those loved and those lost. Family. Friends. I wish to share this with you to show you who I am. Be at peace and we will understand each other in a way that brothers understand each other. Reach beyond the hate and anger that clouds your purpose Cowen. Reach beyond and grasp what your father taught you.]

Cowen shook his head slightly, his eyes still closed tightly. [How...?]

[How can I do this?] Andro finished his sentence. [Let’s just say it is a gift and a curse I have within me. I will stand with you and your people. Die for you and your people in the cause of freedom if need be. I only need you to know that we are not so different and what I show you is to earn your trust.] Andro moved closer to him as everyone watched. [Open your mind Cowen and share with me as I have shared with you. Then you will see what future your people can have. What you can be part of giving to them.]

Cowen was a Kavalian warrior and he feared nothing. It was how his father had raised him and his brothers to be and he grasped that now. His eyes remained closed but all look of strain vanished as he let himself give of the memories he held within him. He gripped Andro’s hand tighter as the visions of his father and sisters returned from the night he found them. All of them shattered and broken and cast aside like so much fodder. He held nothing back and Andro saw the tears he had shed over his father’s body, the tender way he lifted each of his sisters and carried them to the waiting ship himself. Then Cowen saw another time and place... two young woman... one who looked very much like the man holding his hand. She too was broken and severely beaten and he saw the tears in the eyes of the Prince as he clutched his sister to him. He saw the perceived failures he harbored that still gripped Androcles Leonidas every single day; he saw the adoring love for the women who held his heart, the brothers and sisters and family that were his own. He saw the visions of slavery under the High Coven of old, but also the hope and confidence for the High Coven under his brother's vampire wife. He saw objects hurtling across the darkness of space, like beacons of light and hope. Cowen released the table and his hand came up behind Andro's head, pulling him closer as he was immersed in a world he never knew existed. Andro didn't resist as Cowen grasped for that knowledge and hope.

[There are few among your people who can do what we are doing now Cowen'Shan.] Andro continued. [We call it Mindvoicing. It comes natural to my people, my species and many among the elves and vampires. We can also give this ability to others should we turn them or chose to. Athani has it because she is my brother's wife and mate. I have chosen to give it to you. Your heart burns like a bright light Cowen'Shan. The goodness in it eclipses all else. Do not let the road and path of anger and vengeance take you to a place you will not return from. You and I Cowen... we represent a generation that has yet to see it's adulthood. What we could all be. You and I, others like us, we need to be the foundations for that generation in the years to come. My father, your father, Pian, these men at the table, we honor and follow them. What they do now, we will continue for centuries for it is what we believe as well. If we are to have trust among us, it must start with our generation. From there it will grow and prosper if we wish it to.]

Cowen's eyes popped open now. [You... you would do this?] He gasped with his mind startling himself at how easy it was.

Andro's eyes opened as well and he heard the muted gasps from several of the Kavalians present. His eyes had grown much brighter, as had Cowen's bright green feline orbs. Athani Leonidas grasped Resumar's arm as she realized what was happening just from the initial look on Cowen's face for it was exactly what she had experienced when Resumar claimed her.

"They are talking!" She gasped. "He has given Cowen what you and Cemath gave to me Resumar!" All eyes turned to her as Resumar nodded. "Yes he has."

"What? What are you... what do you mean?" Aleou asked.

"He has given Cowen the ability to Mindvoice General!" Athani replied. "So he will... so he will understand and know."

[I would do anything to protect those that I love Cowen'Shan. Just as you would. You and I... my Captain Jomann... my brothers; we wear that emotion openly on our sleeves my friend.] Andro told him. [It is not something we can fight or deny for it was instilled in us by our fathers and those who came before us. Like my father, I have never broken a promise that I have made. Give me... give us the chance to show you that if your goals and desires are for the benefit of your people and others, there is nothing we would not do for you. Nothing!]

[I care nothing for myself.] Cowen spoke softly. [I have no woman. No children. All that remains are my brothers and sister. My mother. My Pride.]

[Then lead them as your father would want you to.] Andro said. [Lead them as my father taught me to lead my people. Fight with your head Cowen... but lead... lead with your heart!]

Cowen's eyes grew a little wider when the meaning of those words struck him. They resonated within him like a scream of joy. [Yes!]

[This ability will be with you always now Cowen. It was... it was the only way I could truly allow you to see that I have no nefarious intentions.] Andro told him evenly. [I am sorry.]

[Sorry?] Cowen gasped. [For giving me the ability to see! For showing me that the future is not as bleak as I first thought? Never!]

[The future is what we make of it Cowen.] Andro told him. [I will assign someone to you in order for you to learn how to use Mindvoice effortlessly. For now... let us begin to work on how you will take back your empire and free all of your people. In order to do that... I need for you to trust me. At least a little. I will not betray that trust.]

Cowen nodded his head. [Then let us begin.]

Andro nodded as well and he stepped back slightly their direct connection broken but Cowen still able to feel the whispers of him within his mind. And the whispers of so many more all around. Andro looked at those gathered around the table then and he released Cowen's hand. "I believe we have some reports to receive." He finally spoke as he moved back towards his chair. "My father will be contacting us in forty minutes so let's get started. Mican and Na'lia are standing by."

The two Kavalians on either side of Cowen's Shan reached for him but he nodded his head quickly indicating he was alright. "We have... we have much to do." He said lifting his eyes to meet Pian's. "Our people need us now."

Pian nodded his head from across the table.

CRANAE ISLAND

Sehri Leonidas's eyes fluttered open slowly as the sounds of the gulls swooping over the surface of the ocean filled her head and the soft scent of the ocean breeze and sweet flowers filtered to her other senses. She felt the weight on her lower abdomen and she turned her head to see Sadi's bright, beautiful face looking at her chest with those incredible jungle green eyes. They were both naked beneath the thin sheet, Sadi's breasts pressed against her skin while her fingers drew soft lines between the valley of Sehri's own firm, medium sized breasts.

Sehri gazed at her for a long moment as Sadi's fingers danced across her skin. Never in her wildest imagination did she ever consider she would take one woman as a lover let alone five. And Sehri adored every moment they had spent together. Their scents filled her mind with delightful passion and unquenchable love. Andro's lavender and pines scent is the one she craved most of all, but Sehri knew she could not go on without them as well. They were a part of her now, part of her mind and her heart, and without them there would be a void that nothing could fill. She watched as Sadi's head lifted and those gorgeous eyes focused on her face and a smile spread across her features.

"Good morning sleepy head." She spoke with that delicious voice.

Sehri couldn't help but smile as Sadi adjusted her body and moved up higher so that their faces were only inches apart. "Good morning." Sehri answered wistfully.

"He is a beast isn't he?" Sadi asked with a lustful grin.

"Carians... he is like a machine!" Sehri gasped as the memories of last night flooded through her and warmed her senses. Androcles had taken each of them three times in the span of six hours, making all of them cry his name in blissful passion. When they weren't wrapped within his embrace, his lips and tongue and his wonderful cock driving them insane with desire, they were making each other howl in delight.

Sadi chuckled. "He does it to show that each of us holds a part of his heart and that we are all equal."

Sehri looked at her. "You... but you are his Anome Sadi." She said.

Sadi met her soft glaucous blue eyes. "Yes I am." She said nodding her head. "Carisia and Lu'ria have departed for Sparta. Ne'Veha is on the patio waiting for us with a guest... but I wanted to make sure that you know how we all feel."

"What do you mean?" Sehri asked.

Sadi looked at her. "We love you Sehri." She said softly. "You were meant to be part of our lives by a power far beyond our comprehension. When Caliria is back among us then we will be complete. I may be Andro's Anome... but he loves each of us with the same intensity and passion."

Sehri reached out with her hand and ran her fingers along Sadi's cheek. "No... he does not." She said confidently. "You may not see it... you may not want to see it... but we do Sadi our love. When he takes you it fills the air around us. His aura spikes so much higher, as does yours. You are like two burning stars within the Etheric realm as you come together. And it is so beautiful to see and hear."

"Sehri I..." Sadi began.

“Let me finish.” Sehri said gently. “I may be... I may be the youngest of us... but I know what I feel. I know that no other man could possibly come close to making me feel what Andro does. SirsanGai, Enylarcopri, Lu'ria... they all feel the same way. And I'm quite sure Caliria feels no different. You are the core of his heart Sadi... and we are the strands of his being. And we could not be happier about that. His love for us knows no bounds, and ours for him is something that can not be measured. But his love for you... it burns within him like a molten sun. And from that love... from that core comes his feelings for us. If we are together... he will always reach for you first and you know that. We know that as well, but we want for nothing else in our hearts because our love for each other is infinite. He will shatter worlds for you Sadi our love, all you need do is ask him, but he will do the same for us as well. We know that. We would do it for any of us.”

“Sehri I just want you to know...” Sadi began to speak again but Sehri placed her finger to her soft lips. Lips she had relished in kissing passionately or having them explore her body.

“I am happier now than I have ever been.” Sehri told her. “Happier than I ever thought I would be in my lifetime. The part of Andro's heart that loves me is more than I will ever desire or want. And when he is not there for me I know I can turn to you, or SirsanGai or our Mistress Lu'ria, or Carisia or Caliria. No matter where we turn we will always have someone we love nearby. That is something others will never have.”

Sadi didn't hesitate and she shifted on the bed and captured Sehri's lips in a blistering kiss full of love and desire. Sehri returned the kiss with equal fervor and they were locked in that kiss for a long moment before Sadi withdrew. She licked her lips, her taste buds alive as she tasted both Ne'Veha and Lu'ria on Sehri's lips. She reached up to run her finger across her bottom lip. “Our Drow Mistress is very tasty isn't she?” She said with a grin.

Sehri chuckled. “The contrast of our skin is more than enough to incite me.” She said.

Sadi nodded. “That it is.” She agreed. She leaned forward and kissed her quickly then. “Come... we should not keep our guest waiting longer.”

“Guest? Who is here?” Sehri asked. Her eyes grew wide. “Not Lady Gorgo? Or my mother?” She gasped.

Sadi laughed as she lifted her lithe frame up and Sehri gazed at her naked beauty. “No. Her name is Thr'won. I suppose you could call her Sparta's Chief Etheric Mage. She has been instructing Andro and his siblings beside Helen since they were very small. She even trained Andro's father briefly. She is considered a member of our family and she has come to test you.”

Sehri sat up now. “Test me?”

Sadi nodded as she reached for the thin robe draped across the chair beside their huge bed. “SirsanGai and I seem to have manifested our Etheric power in a somewhat physical manner. Not like Andro or his father or Jomann or Denali or Dorian mind you... nothing like them. They are... everyone is beginning to call them Spartan Praetorians. Thr'won says it was once called telekinesis and if used properly... it can be just as dangerous. I have... I have resorted to it in the past in anger and since then I have been studying with the Feravomir or her to learn how to control it. She is quite knowledgeable and after speaking with Gorgo and your mother she believes you have shown the same signs.”

“The Circle of Shamans never really... they did not want to delve too deeply into skills they say would have made us targets.” Sehri said.

Sadi nodded. “Yes... well... you are no longer a part of the Circle. You are Andro's wife and mate. Our wife and mate. We do things a little differently and we don't shy away from what our power could help us do.”

“She can teach me to use my Etheric power?” Sehri asked surprised as she rose to her own feet quickly and reach for a similar robe.

“Yes. In more ways than I think the Circle of Shamans ever considered.” Sadi answered moving up to her as Sehri tied her robe closed. She took her hand and held it to her lips for a brief moment and smile. “We are so happy you are here Sehri.”

Sehri smiled and embraced her tightly. “As am I.” She said softly. “As am I.”

“... Senior Hadarian Doctor here with us believes we can establish the basic vaccine delivery system within a week and begin mass producing it.” Na'lia was speaking from within the QCR within Shiria's fortress. “It's done Pian. And it will work.”

Mican stepped up from behind his elven wife and returned to the transmission. “I have already begun plans to distribute the vaccine to certain clone camps along the edges of the border. Vonis and I agree we need to start small and work inward to the larger camps as we gain more recruits.”

“Uncle?” Andro asked.

Vonis's voice came through the transmission as he moved into the cone of the visual imagery. “Mican and I have seven different camps slotted for the first echelon.” He said. “Na'lia and Va'nimia will handle the actual distribution to the two largest camps; our Hadarian Healers will take the rest. We have some minor details to work out... but it will work Mandri.”

Andro looked at Pian. “General?”

“Do it!” Pian told Vonis without hesitation.

Jomann stepped up beside Andro and whispered in his ear and he sat forward with a nod. “Uncle... father has initiated his COM signal. We will check back with you when you are ready to deploy.”

Vonis nodded. “Understood. Have him say hello to Isabella for me.”

Andro nodded. “I will. Go with the gods Uncle.”

“You as well.” Vonis spoke before the transmission ended.

Andro turned in his chair. “Activate the link!” He barked out the order.

“Stand by! Activating!”

The transmission disc in the center of the table came alive and the fuzzy image of Martin Leonidas appeared. His head was turned to the side and he was speaking to someone. A conversation that they caught the tail end of.

“...thing working Jules? I ain't got shit.” Martin's voice boomed across the CIC.

“It's working you ugly fool!” The female voice echoed quickly. “You need to press the right damn button!” They watched as the ebony skinned female entered the fuzzy image and flipped something on the small panel in front of Martin. The image instantly became as clear as if he was standing in front of them. They then watched as the female flipped her hand up and slapped Martin in the back of the head lightly.

Pian and the others looked aghast at this action but they turned when they heard Andro and his brothers laughing lightly.

“Thank you.” Martin spoke with a grin as he turned to the COM disc in front of him. Andro and the others knew right away he was onboard a STRIKER, which meant something was going on. “Andro... you there?”

“We are here father.” Andro answered as he leaned forward.

“Ah!” Martin smiled. “There we go. Now I can see you! Damn machines!” Martin's eyes went to Pian and Jalersi immediately and his face softened considerably. “Pian. Jalersi. It is good to see you again.”

Pian nodded his head and Jalersi smiled. They had learned saving the life of this man's Anome had earned them eternal gratitude and respect. Something they returned equally since he was the first to have accepted them. “King Leonidas.” Pian said. “You are looking... well.”

Martin laughed. “You think so?” He chortled. “Maybe if I had competent people around me it would be better!” He said turning his head as he spoke.

“Bite me!” The female voice came from outside the cone of the disc.

Martin turned back to the image and his head turned as he looked at the men and women gathered at the table. His eyes settled on Deia and he smiled warmly. “Tenna. You are looking well.”

Deia smiled and couldn't help but blush slightly. He had yet to learn the intricacies of diplomacy and she feared he would never learn. “Mandri.” She answered. “You are not on the ARC ROYAL?”

Martin shook his head. “No... we're three hours out from a little job we are conducting. I will need to make this briefer than I wanted but I'm sure you and Panos can cover completely what I will offer.”

Deia nodded. “Of course.”

Martin turned back to Pian. “They are all present Pian?” He asked.

Pian nodded. "All of the Major Pride leaders are here King Leonidas." He answered. "We will inform those Pride Leaders who were not able to attend because of their location or duties they are performing."

Martin nodded his head and seemed to settle onto the bench he was sitting on. The small table appeared in front of his knees and they could all see he wore an odd type of body armor and he wore his weapons as well. His normally shoulder length hair was tied into a tight pony tail and the matte black conforming body armor pieces extended right up his neck to just below where his neatly trimmed beard began. Even the Kavalian Pride leaders knew he was going into battle just by the way he was dressed.

"Very well..." Martin spoke looking at them in the transmission. "I am not one to beat around the bush gentlemen... so let me get right to it. All of you there have essentially broken from that lunatic Keleru. All of you probably have death sentences on your heads by now, and if not, you will soon enough. All of you have chosen to fight to bring the Kavalian people out of the darkness that Keleru holds over you. You have made this choice... and for that I respect you. What I say to you may surprise you, but I do not hold all of your people accountable for what has happened between our two species. Those I do hold accountable will have a reckoning one day, that I promise you. Those who wish to fight the oppression and brutal rule of a tyrant even though you are outnumbered... I hold you in a special regard. It is my understanding that Pian'Nruarani has officially submitted a diplomatic request for monetary and infrastructure assistance from the Lycavorian Union under the auspice of a newly formed free Kavalian government in exile?"

Pian nodded his head and got to his feet. "The Kavalian Democratic Republic." He said. "The KDR. I have been... I have been appointed to lead this new government until such time as we have ousted the criminals who now rule our people and elections can be held."

Martin looked at him and grinned. "My Aunt is pretty good with diplomatic speak isn't she?" He said.

Pian chuckled softly and nodded his head. "Yes she is King Leonidas."

Martin rolled his eyes. "Pian'Nruarani... you and Jalersi are partially responsible for saving the life of my Anome and mate. You protected her with your own lives. I think we can dispense with the King bullshit between us."

Pian smiled as the other Kavalians at the table looked on in shock. "Very well... Martin." He said.

"I hope that during your time on Earth you will see that the citizens of the Union are tolerant of everyone, no matter who they are." Martin spoke. "And like me... they will not hold an entire species responsible for the actions of a few dozen men. All that being said... let's move on to what you all want to hear." Martin shifted on the couch he sat on and lifted a data pad into their sight. "The latest intelligence reports from my son tell me many things. Keleru is rebuilding his forces that we destroyed at the onset of hostilities between us. Things are moving more slowly than he first thought which is both good and bad. It is bad because it gives him incentive to act as he has done with Solmar and four other Lycavorian Union colony worlds his forces recently conquered. He is becoming impatient and he unleashed his Puma Bane troops on these worlds. All the information we have tells us they were wiped out to the man."

Pian remained standing and looked at him. "How many?" He asked.

"Nearly two hundred thousand men, women and children." Martin replied instantly. "On each world."

"Gods." Aleou spoke lowering his shaking head.

"The good... the good is that it gives us our opportunity." Martin continued.

Cowen'Shan looked at the image of the man. "Opportunity?" He asked with far less hostility in his voice than most expected from him. "With respect King Leonidas... we need help. Ships. Men. Weapons. We need..."

"I can not give these things to you." Martin spoke immediately.

This simple statement brought the heads of every Kavalian at the table up and looking at him in shock.

Aleou's eyes were wide. "We came here... we came here expecting..."

"You can't help us or you won't?" Another Kavalian snapped from his chair.

"A little of both actually." Martin answered honestly.

"Pian... what is this?" A Kavalian barked. "We came expecting aide and support! He is refusing us! Why did we even come here?"

Resumar got to his feet. "Hglan'Omar wait." He spoke.

The man looked at Resumar. “You have been among us Resumar Leonidas! You have seen with your own eyes and your Kavalian wife fights beside you. We risked much to come here and your father refuses us in the time we need the most help. What are we to think of this?”

“Resumar is right Hglan.” Pian said quickly.

“Right! About what?” Hglan snapped. “I left behind my wife and seven children to come here! The Puma Bane butchers scour Kavalian space for our families while we are here safe! Now he refuses us in our time of need?”

“I am not refusing.” Martin spoke from within the transmission.

“What do you call it then?” Hglan barked at his image. “What...”

“Sit down and shut up old man!” Martin snarled quickly causing all of their eyes to grow wide. Even Jalersi came to her feet in horror at the lack of respect from him. Pian’s eyes were large as he stood there.

“Martin... you... Androcles told me that you would be open to helping us.” Pian spoke trying to measure his words. “That we could... that we could rely on you to... you give the High Coven assistance! Even now... your warships are within Coven space helping them to protect and rebuild!” Pian pointed to where Narice and Toria sat on either side of Arram.

“Yes they do Pian. That is something that my son did and to be honest... I would not have been able to raise the fortitude to do it. The history of the High Coven and I goes much deeper and harsher. My son... Andro and his siblings are from a generation that did not see the horrors perpetrated on my... our people. Narice is not part of that and never was. My son... my children took a leap of faith that I would not have been able to take. They trusted... they had faith in the influence of their generation. It worked... and for that I love them even more.” Martin answered. “Make no mistake though... had it not worked... the High Coven would be nothing but a smoking hole in space. We don’t give second chances.”

“That is what we are trying to do even now!” Pian protested. “We are trying to pull our people from the abyss! There are far more than you think who want nothing more but to think for themselves and be free of the oppression!”

“I don’t doubt that.” Martin said.

“And you would deny them that chance by refusing to help us?” Pian demanded.

Jalersi reached up and place her hand on his arm. “Pian my love...”

“No!” Pian snapped.

“I never said I wouldn’t help.” Martin told him.

Pian blinked several times as the Kavalians looked more intently at the transmission. “You just said you can not provide the materials we need to...”

Martin smiled. “I admire your passion Pian’Nruarani. I admire the passion of all of you. I said I could not supply you with ships and personnel... I never said I could not help you to sustain what you have and continue to build on.”

Pian shook his head. “I am... I am confused.”

“My son’s people should be passing out to you now what I will very happily do for the KDR as you call it now.” Martin said as Pian and the others saw dozens of aides step from the walls and begin handing out data pads to them.

“The Lycavorian Union will officially recognize in public that the KDR is the rightful government of the Kavalian people.” Martin said. “I believe the Spartan Security Senate has already voted on it and passed it unanimously. Tenna Deia?”

Deia nodded. “Late last night yes.” She answered. “Once this meeting is done we will put it to a full Senate vote but I doubt very much you will see a different consensus from the full Senate.”

“I am limited even as King on what we can provide to you militarily according to our constitution Pian... but as soon as that vote passes... you will want for nothing else.” Martin began.

“I don’t understand.” Aleou asked him.

“I will need you to shift all of your forces to the coordinates we have listed on the pads you are reading. There you will secure the immediate space around the planet Rizon Four.” Martin told them.

“Rizon Four?” Cowen spoke up.

Martin nodded. “Yes.” He said. “Within one hour of the vote being finalized... the Union has one thousand cargo and material ships waiting to depart for the planet Vamshi in the U’zolut Consortium. From there they will travel to Rizon Four to make delivery. Total time for travel is three days. On those thousand ships will be the first five billion metric tons of everything from underwear to mainframe computers. And that is just the down payment.”

Pian’Nnurani looked at Martin and he could feel the hope stirring within his chest once again where only moments ago he thought it was dashed.

“I have authorized the deployment of two full elven engineer brigades from the 1st Elven Engineer Division.” Martin said. “Two PROMETHUS Class Command stations that the KDR recently purchased...”

“Wait!” Pian exclaimed. “Purchased?”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes... with the recent discovery of massive deposits of the mineral Ostronium Ore on Rizon Four, the KDR has a credit limit with the Lycavorian Union about as large as it gets. The two stations will be towed to the coordinates provided. Fourteen Union Resource and Supply Stations will depart with the Command stations. Seven RENDER Class Portable Ship Yards will deploy from Nodon over the course of the next week with approximately half a million Nodon engineers. One hundred thousand Hadarian Healers have already volunteered for duty on the three fully complete and duty ready Orbital Hospitals that will leave with the shipyards. Among the first shipments of supplies will be over four million tons of medicines put together from a list my mate Anja made. They are mainly to take care of any civilian needs at first but ongoing supplies and the Healers will staff the three hospitals full time.” Martin looked at Pian and the men gathered. “Small arms weapons, ammunition, high explosives, missiles, tanks, spare parts by the bucket. Before you could not repair heavy damage taken by your ships, now you can. Before you had to abandon materials and smaller bases because you could not supply them. Not anymore. Serious injuries to your people could not be treated properly. Not anymore. I am chopping one of our OMEN-Class ships to Resumar’s command for the purpose of Intelligence gathering. That will be our little secret. Everything else you have bought and we are simply delivering it to you.” Martin looked at the men from within the transmission. “I may not be allowed to provide you with men and ships to fight with you, but I can damn well make sure that you can provide everything to maintain, repair and fight and win. You will want for nothing Pian. Your men and equipment will want for nothing. And several treaties are being drawn up now and will be presented to you. One of those treaties will allow you unhindered but monitored access into Union and Consortium space. There is a moon two light years across the Union border where you can set up your temporary government and its headquarters. It is also a place where you can bring your families. All of your families and whatever refugees you are able to accept.”

Aleou got to his feet slowly. “This... this is a joke yes?” He asked.

Martin looked at him and smiled. “It’s no joke.” He stated. “Our two people are closer than I think you realize General Aleou. Perhaps someday you would allow me to explain how. You will need to move quickly, for once Keleru gets wind of this; he will act.” Martin turned in the transmission. “Narice?”

Narice rose to her feet and waited as Pian and the others turned to look at her. “I have received the blessing of the Ventash’ma Ruling Council of the High Coven to extend a hand of peace and support in the hopes it will begin to heal whatever wounds have occurred between us in the last two decades of my mother’s reign.” Narice took a deep breath because she did not know if Pian would accept what she was going to offer. “Pian... I offer to you and the KDR, those of you who truly wish to be free, I offer three dozen High Coven Sector Monitoring Platforms. Also as a show of solidarity that we must leave our pasts behind us the Ventash’ma would also like to offer to you the use of six Orbital Shipyards to assist in your endeavors. They are not as large as the Union shipyards, but they are efficient and can handle most minor repairs. Should any Kavalian citizen wish to escape the oppression they are under now, we can also offer safe haven on several border worlds that will be protected by High Coven and Union forces. We ask for nothing in return. Only the chance to show that we make the first gesture in purging our demons.”

“I urge you to accept the Empress’s offer.” Martin spoke again. “If for nothing else, then to show that we as leaders can overcome.”

Pian stood there nearly overcome. Many of the Pride Leaders were also stunned beyond anything they had expected. Pian finally looked at Martin in the transmission. “Martin this is... it is far beyond anything we had hoped.”

Martin nodded his head. “Maybe... but those of you in that room are the future of your people if they are to have one. You must fight for everything in order to succeed. I may not be able to do what I would like to do... but like I said... I'll damn well make sure you got the best shot to accomplish your goals. Once you start this... all of Keleru's attention and efforts are going to be against you. He won't have a choice. He can't fight us and an internal rebellion of the size you will command. He will focus everything on you Pian. If at any point... no matter what is happening... if at any point you and your Pride leaders feel the situation is untenable, you pick up everything and everyone and you move across the border."

"If we did that he would then turn to you!" Pian spoke.

"And if he does... I will unleash the entire Union military against his skinny ass and bury him." Martin snarled.

"He will send for Pusintin." Aleou spoke up now. "He is the finest war commander that Keleru has. He will order him to return."

Martin shook his head now. "That won't happen either." He said softly.

"How can you be so sure King Leonidas?" Aleou asked.

"Two reasons really." Martin answered. "If my plan went the way I hope... he no longer has the ability to use his long range communications even if he was able to reach Keleru from where he is. Which he can't."

"You... you neutralized his long range communications?" Pian gasped. "How?"

Martin smiled then and it was not a pleasant smile. "Let's just say he never... he never felt the true calling of our family's bloodline."

"What... what is the second reason?" Aleou asked tentatively.

"You do not have to worry about Pusintin General... because my dear old brother isn't leaving this quadrant of space alive." Martin growled. "I intend to kill him in the most profane manner I can think of and then I will spread his body parts to the different planets out here for the animals to feed on for what he has done to my Queen. In a few more hours he will hate me enough to chase me across the galaxy anyway. Nothing else will matter to him. I'm such a popular fellow."

"There is also one condition to all this taking place." Andro spoke now as he got to his feet drawing their attention to him. "A condition that I have not discussed with my father or my Tenna Deia."

Deia looked quickly at the transmission of Martin who shrugged his shoulders and then she turned back to Andro. "Androcles?" She asked.

"It will not affect what we will do for you now I assure you. We want nothing more than to see you succeed and we will do everything within our power to see that happen just as my father has said. However, it will affect what happens after, if you refuse." Andro said. "I will understand should you refuse, however I hope you do not. I have spoken to all of my brothers and sisters about this and we are in complete agreement on this single condition."

"What is this condition Androcles?" Jalersi asked softly.

"On behalf of my brothers and sisters, to include Fedor and Eirene father..." Andro said looking at Martin within the transmission. "We require that every Pride Leader who agreed with and sanctioned the attack on our second elven mother be handed over to us." Andro told them. "We will not accept anything less. Proof of their death or the men themselves. They will face our justice."

"They... these men are Kavalian citizens." Aleou spoke.

Androcles nodded. "And you will have a choice to make. Give them to me... or when you have secured the KDR to the satisfaction of Union military leaders I will pull all support for you that you have gained this day. I will recall all assets and equipment and we will leave you to fend for yourselves." Andro looked at Resumar who didn't hesitate and nodded his head. "We will leave you to discuss these new revelations. You are welcome here and I suggest you gain as much knowledge of our people as you can. My siblings and I will require your answer in three days time. Until then... let us enjoy this new alliance as much as possible and work out as many details as we can." Andro bowed his head slightly. "I will leave you in the capable hands of those with more knowledge of these things and I. If any of you wish to speak with me simply contact the Durcunusaan and they will know where to find me."

Androcles Leonidas turned and began moving out of the massive CIC without another word. He had made his requirements known. Requirements that he had spoken to each of his brother and sisters about and found they all agreed with him totally. A fact that only made him realize they were more of like mind than he had first thought.

Andro sniffed the air as he walked out of the CIC and he thought he caught the faint scent of sugar plums and spice on air. He smiled as his body surged with power and suddenly he wanted to feel his Anome in his arms. Andro's azure blue eyes grew a little brighter as he walked and he smiled. Yes indeed... sugar plums and spice was all he intended to smell this night.

MARTIN'S STRIKER NINETY MINUTES TO TARGET

For'mya turned her head as Martin came in to the cockpit. He held up his hands in a show of defense.

"I didn't know." He exclaimed.

"Martin... you can not let him hold that over their heads." For'mya stated. "They had nothing to do with what was done to me. It is wrong."

Martin moved up and knelt between the seats, his dark eyes never leaving her beautiful elven face. "You know our son as well as I do Kinsoaurgai... no one will alter his course once he sets his mind to something. If he has the support and agreement of our other children... then he will do what he says."

"And you will do nothing?" For'mya asked him.

Martin shook his head. "No."

"Why?" For'mya demanded.

Martin leaned forward and kissed her hard on her soft lips, wrapping his male aura around her totally unshielded and completely pure. For'mya shuddered in obvious delight, her own female aura basking in the divine sensations he always caused within her and she couldn't help but return his kiss with equal fervor. After a long moment though, Martin pulled away, and using his thumb he reached up and stroked the outside edge of her four inch high elven ear. For'mya's eyes closed in shivers of bliss and she smiled dreamily.

"If you have to ask me that question after all these years Kinsoaurgai... then perhaps you and my other wives and mates do not know me as well as you think you do." Martin said softly watching as her dark brown eyes opened slowly and looked at him. He leaned forward and kissed her softly once more before rising from his knees. "I'm going to prep the others. Let me know when we are ten minutes out." With that Martin Leonidas turned and exited the cockpit leaving For'mya to stare at his back as he moved into the rear of the STRIKER.

"I'll tell you why For'mya." Tina said softly waiting for For'mya to look at her. Their friendship had blossomed after a rough first meeting when For'mya joined their flight crew. The three of them fit together so seamlessly it was no surprise that they could make whatever they were flying do things not normally seen. Endith and For'mya could make heads spin and eyes roll in what they could do with an aircraft and Tina was their anchor. They had shared their lives for the last two decades and that was a friendship that would never be broken.

For'mya looked at her friend. "Then tell me Tina." She said. "It is wrong... it is wrong to hold others responsible for what was done to me."

"Is it?" Endith spoke from the pilot's seat. "Is it wrong to hold people to a moral standard that any living being knows is right? It does not matter what their species is, for there is always a standard one must not fall below. And who is ultimately responsible when others allow one man to lead them off that standard willingly in order to gain power over others so that they can oppress them? What they did to you For'mya... what they made you suffer no matter the good outcome... that is a sin that can never be forgiven. I... I knew he was different the moment I first met him in that bunker in Utah. There is nothing he will do that will surprise me."

"Androcles is doing what his father can not." Tina said softly looking at her. "Martin is a Lycavorian Spartan For'mya. Pure, untainted and wild. As was his father. And his grandfather before him. As is his son. If it was up to him he would lay waste to the entire KFI for what Keleru did. What they made you endure and suffer. He can not because he is King and he knows that not all of them are responsible. Andro is not so limited girl. He will make them pay for what they did because he knows his father can not. Every last one of them that went along with Keleru."

"But Fedor and Eirene were a gift and not a curse as they wanted them to be!" For'mya protested. "They showed me that!"

Tina nodded. “Yes they sure were.” She said. “And Marty will love them just as strongly as he loves all his children. He’s already shown that. That does not change the fact that you are his woman. His Queen. You are one of six who rule his being and his soul and his heart. Aricia may be his Anome... but he would shatter worlds for all of you. Aricia knows that and she embraces that. Martin Leonidas would kill, maim, crush, and obliterate anyone who hurts or attempts to hurt any of you. It is in his blood and he will not deny his blood anymore. You saw that on Enurrua For'mya.”

“For'mya... you are just going to have to accept that you are wife and mate to one of the two most dangerous men in the entire universe.” Endith said with a bright smile. “A man who is driven by two things. His love for the six of you and your children... and the love of freedom for all.”

“Just go with it sister.” Tina said with a grin. “We got work to do.” She turned to her station as a soft chirping sound began to sound. “Engaging Shroud. We’re going in.”

TALISMAN

PRALOR VECTOR-CLASS ATTACK CRUISER

SLEKON CLUSTER

THREE HOURS FROM ARTAAYA

“...Do not know how to repair the trust between us Teniri.” Delnash spoke as he looked up into her muzzle. He had come down to the landing bay where the VECTOR-Class Cruisers had been refitted to carry a small number of dragons. “Only that I wish too.”

Teniri lowered her head down even with Delnash and gazed at him for a long moment. She rested comfortably on the deck, the others spread around her, some of them nursing the bruises that they received from foolishly fighting two Talon Guardians.

[You are different Delnash.] She spoke softly.

Delnash couldn't help but smile at that. [After what I have seen, how could I not be?] He said. [I have spoken twice with Martin since we left Onterom. Each time I speak with him I find myself liking the man more and more.]

[Do you doubt he is a Praetorian of your people?] Teniri asked.

Delnash shook his head instantly. [No. Not after what I saw.] He answered looking at her. [He is a different breed of Praetorian than what we have known in the past. More feral almost. He is more prone to follow the inbred instincts of his people... but so far I can not find fault his instincts. They are... they are driven by the pureness of the blood that flows within his veins.]

[A Talon Guardian of my kind can not be anything but pure Delnash my friend.] Teniri told him.

Delnash looked at her. [I did not know that Dragonkind had such things.] He told her. [I assume because of how you speak of it that this position is of some importance.]

Teniri chuckled with Mindvoice and shifted her front talons to a more restful position. [Talon Guardians date back to the very beginning of my kind.] She explained. [They command the most untainted and uncluttered links to their Etheric power. Those who can shape it to their will and use it. Very much like your Praetorians. They are the hand of the Dragon Council of Elders, but also the hand of justice. Their purpose is to safeguard our species from all threats. Even from those of our own kind. Their will was dominant in all things. My kind is not so very different from all species Delnash. We have our feuds and issues... though we are able to work through them far better than most.]

[These Talon Guardians were listened to by all?] Delnash asked.

Teniri nodded. [In order to be a Talon Guardian you must have accomplished something sacrosanct for our species as a whole. No one ever aspired to be a Talon Guardian... it just happened.] She answered. [The Elder Council would make the decision. To be honest I can only remember there ever being six Talon Guardians at once. That was before our kind became scattered across the stars by your people. Martin Leonidas and his son are also the first non-dragons to be named Talon Guardians. Never in the nearly five million years that our kind has existed have there ever been two like them.]

Delnash looked at her. [My people?] He gasped. [How... you never... you never told me this!]

Teniri's wings fluttered slightly. A shrug for a dragon. [It was many thousands of years ago. Long before you were ever born. We did not build ships to take us to different places my friend. Our talons to not give us that ability.]

[Pralors did this?] He gasped.

[You were and are seeders of life Delnash.] Teniri answered him. [That has always been the calling of your people. And a noble calling it is. My kind looked on it as an adventure actually. We could always talk to you and we were able to choose what planets to go to. Talon Guardians were limited to our homeworld long ago for when we began to take to the stars with you it was deemed too revered a position to just hand out.]

[Arzoal appointed Martin and his son as Talon Guardians. The dragons they are bound to.] Delnash asked. [What did they do to obtain this position if it is so revered as you say?]

Teniri blinked. [I will only say that Arzoal showed me what it was that they did. It is not something that we speak of openly or with others. Please understand it is a sacred thing to my kind. What they endured... it was horrific in its definition. Their actions were... they were more than anything I have ever seen. Pure and without question. Trust in that.]

[Will I ever discover it?] Delnash asked.

[If you allow your peoples to come together you will hear the whispers of their actions I am sure. But the four of them, Martin and Torma, his son Androcles and Torma's daughter Elynth, they will never speak of it. To them... to them it is a nightmare they would rather not relive.] Teniri answered.

[Martin's oldest son? Torma's daughter? They are the other two then?] Delnash asked her.

Teniri nodded her massive head. [According to Arzoal... they are more tightly bound to each other in many ways than their fathers simply because they were bonded while Androcles's mother still carried him in her womb.]

Delnash blinked several times. [He was... he was born aware?] Delnash gasped.

Teniri nodded her huge head as her eyes narrowed somewhat and she gazed at him with intensity. [You know of such a thing?]

Delnash nodded quickly. [There were... there were rumors that some of the Praetorians were born fully aware. It was never confirmed for Sumar shielded them viciously when he first formed them. It was said that this is what allowed them to have such a pure link to their Etheric abilities.]

[Murano?] Teniri asked him.

Delnash looked at her and nodded his head. [He was... he was always different.]

[Perhaps that is why Sumar valued him so much?] Teniri spoke. [Because he was like him?]

[You believe Sumar was born like this as well?] Delnash asked.

[I do not know for sure. Perhaps this would explain why he was so charismatic a leader and could inspire others to greatness.] Teniri said evenly. [From what Arzoal tells me that is what Martin and his son do on a daily basis without even truly knowing it.]

Delnash looked at her. [Even with my own people it seems.] He said.

Teniri chuckled softly. [Do not resent this fact Delnash. Kasdan and his brother have always been adventurous... Kasdan's rather excitable nature aside. Your own daughters are drawn to this as well. Mari most of all.]

[Not Daron?] Delnash asked.

[Your son has never made an effort to communicate with me.] Teniri spoke. [I have not tried to speak with him out of respect for his wishes. I do not know why he is like this but he is who he is. Tied more closely with Lorendo than is healthy I think... but that is not for me to say.]

Delnash looked at her. [I will discover what it is that Lorendo is doing.] He told her with firmness in her voice. [Martin... he told me to share everything with you Teniri. Everything that I discover.]

Teniri shook her massive head slightly. [It only matters now because I wish to know what happened in our time apart. Now that Arzoal and the others... now that we have a link to them it fills all of us with great joy. We do not dwell on the past. We are together again and that is what matters.]

[So there are more of your kind out there somewhere?] Delnash asked.

Teniri fluttered her wings again. [It is possible. I do not know where they would be. That information was destroyed with your Science Convocation Headquarters and your homeworld by the Scourge.]

[I gave Martin the coordinates to the two planets in this quadrant that were home to settlements of his people.] Delnash said. [He told me he intends to visit them and discover what happened.]

[Do you fear what he may find?] Teniri asked.

Delnash shook his head. [No. The more... the more I think about what has happened... how Lorendo acted... the more I find myself wondering what else he has done in the name of Science. He was developing a bioweapon of some sort on Onterom and he tried to hide it.]

[This is not against the laws of your people Delnash.] Teniri said. [Not when held up against the Scourge.]

Delnash nodded. [No... I know it is not. No matter how repulsive that may be to me. He should have told me though. Told those of us on the Elder Council. The Lycavorian people with Martin have evolved far more than any of us ever imagined. Most of that may have had to do with what Sumar did, intermixing our kind with them, but they are not inferior to us any longer no matter how much Lorendo and others believe. That train of thought will not bring about anything useful. It never did and I see that more clearly now than ever before.]

[You must tread very carefully Delnash my friend.] Teniri told him. [Lorendo was willing to murder hundreds of your people to protect the secrets he has been keeping. He may very well be willing to come after you to keep his secrets.]

Delnash nodded his head. [That is what Martin told me as well.] He said. [I must act Teniri. I can not let him try to wrest power.]

[No... but you must also solidify your own position Delnash my friend. Before you begin to move against Lorendo.] Teniri told him.

Delnash nodded and looked at her. [You mean hold elections.] He said thoughtfully to himself. [Perhaps that is the place to start.]

[If you hold elections Delnash... it would give you the base of power you need to combat Lorendo and whatever he is trying to do.] Teniri told. [You have done some things that angered many through the decades, that is true, but no one denies your leadership has made it possible for them to get this far. Review the decisions you have made in the past... change them if need be... and become the first Chief Elder to be truly elected since Sumar himself.]

Delnash met her gaze. [You think it is as simple as that?] He asked.

Teniri gave him what would amount to a large smile as she bared her tooth filled maw. [What goals may seem the hardest to accomplish, may well have the easiest path to achieve.] She told him.

Delnash thought he saw a twinkle in her brightly colored eyes and he smiled for the first time in several days. [Maybe you are right.] He said.

CLASS M MOON UNION DESIGNATION AT459

Yuriko lowered her macrobinos and cursed softly under her breath. “Just couldn’t catch a break could we?” She muttered. “I got twenty plus from the north. Still ten kilometers away though.” She spoke turning her head to the side.

Kalis lowered his binos and nodded. He laid beside Koguth to Yuriko’s right on the ridge. “I counted thirty from the west. Same distance. They must have split apart when they dropped below the sensor threshold.”

“Ok... two ships for sure.” Yuriko said. She shifted on the ground and looked at Kalis and Koguth. They rested on the ridge just above the entrance to their cave. The interior of the cave had a winding path that rose some two hundred meters up and ended in the natural ventilation tunnel. Yuriko’s people had built a metal ladder into the wall of the tunnel so they could use it for observation. Upon exiting the tunnel the ridge they were on was roughly fifty meters square and had a panoramic of the surrounding territory. “Roughly fifty on the ground.”

“They appear to be carrying some sort of hand weapons.” Koguth spoke now. “Light rifle of a design I have not seen. Though considering where we are that shouldn’t be surprising.” He lowered his binos and turned his head. “These creatures can use weapons?”

Yuriko nodded. “Those my father and others encountered on Twelve Alpha were using a sort of primitive firearm. Projectile based. The others they have encountered are equipped with more modern weapons.”

Kalis shifted slightly. “I thought you said they were primitive?”

Yuriko shook her head. “I said they appear primitive.” She answered. “Their cognitive abilities indicate otherwise.”

“You said they absorb others into their ranks?” Koguth asked. “Change them. Perhaps those they change are keeping at least some portion of their former selves.”

Yuriko nodded. “That is what my mother and others believe.” She said. “Otherwise they would not be able to operate the ships.”

“How many of these Pralors have these creatures captured and taken?” Kalis asked.

“That we don’t know.” Yuriko answered. “But I could hazard a guess and say a lot. They obviously have the ability to adapt and after what happened on Onterom, what my father found, we know they can reproduce.”

“They are like a parasite.” Koguth spoke. “Infecting others. Changing them.”

Their eyes shifted as another body began to climb out of the tunnel and Kalis quickly moved forward to assist Serale as she rose into view. He saw Nedoli and Ceale beneath her and helped her fully out of the tunnel and settled back onto the ground where she quickly settled between his legs. Yuriko waited for Ceale to exit the tunnel and then Nedoli and they moved to the side settling to the ground, Ceale almost instinctively leaning up against the large Kavalian.

“They have landed troops?” Nedoli asked.

Yuriko nodded. “About fifty that we can see from here.” She replied.

“Princess... you said your father and others have encountered them before?” Ceale asked.

Yuriko nodded again. “A few times... yes. Nasty buggers is what they are. Svorag is their official designation. We found that information out from the Pralor database at the abandoned Science station on Onterom.” She watched as Kalis handed Serale his binos and she shifted to view where he pointed out over the horizon. “They are the result of some sort of experiment gone bad.”

“Experiment?” Ceale asked. “You mean genetics?”

“That’s my take on everything I have read.” Yuriko answered. “You don’t want to get taken by these things. My mother’s findings indicate once they infect you, it is only a matter of hours before you start to change. If they are able to infect you multiple times, it can be quicker.”

“Multiple times?” Nedoli asked puzzled. “Does it matter once you are infected?”

Ceale rested her hand atop his and shook her head. “I know what she means Nedoli.” She said softly turning back to Yuri. “They force themselves on their victims then?”

Yuriko nodded. “It’s not pleasant.”

“They don’t seem primitive.” Serale spoke with the binos to her eyes. “Bipedal in nature, almost reptilian. Some sort of lightly armored outer layer of skin. They are moving as if they know what they are doing.” She lowered the binos and turned back to the others.

“The consensus is that they retain a large portion of their former selves. At least those pertaining to skill sets.” Yuriko said nodding. “Possibly even more than we know or have seen so far. My mother believes there is a chemical compound within their bodies that destroys the cognitive memories of who they were before, leaving only the Svorag part of their minds.”

Ceale looked at her. “That... that is a very sophisticated and deliberate act Princess.” She said. “Designing a virus of this nature is not something done for the good of others.”

“I don’t think the good of others was ever the intent with this thing.” Yuriko stated evenly. “I don’t know much about the medical field aside from treating battle field wounds, but I’d say this thing was made for only one purpose.”

Ceale nodded her head. “I would agree with you.” She replied.

“Genetic mutation the likes of which you say Queen Anja describes is immoral!” Serale hissed softly. “It is why the Union banned any sort of biogenic warfare research. Anything having to do with genetics.”

Yuriko nodded. “I don’t disagree Serale. I haven’t met any of the Pralor people as my father and mothers have, but based on their field reports, I don’t believe all of them agree with this kind of work.” She said. “Then again... we don’t know the nature in which this virus was designed.”

Ceale shook her head, the doctor in her coming out. “This was designed for death... nothing more.” She stated simply.

“Lady Ceale I don’t...” Yuriko began to reply but Koguth’s voice cut her off.

“We may have a problem.” He stated simply. He was lying on his front again and using the binos to watch the terrain.

Kalis quickly took his binos from Serale. “General?” He asked as he settled to the ground.

“I believe they just found our ships.” Koguth spoke with disgust in his voice and Yuriko joined them on the ground.

“Vith!” Yuriko hissed angrily under her breath.

“They’re not attempting to enter them.” Kalis stated as he brought the image into more focus and zoomed.

Koguth nodded. “It appears Mata’s idea to leave the ramps up was very justified.” He said. “Excellent call.”

“They can’t enter them?” Yuriko asked.

Kalis shook his head. “Mata locked them both with an encryption algorithm that only we have.” He said. “We were going to leave the ramps down.” He said sheepishly.

“Well at least we won’t give them two new ships.” Yuriko said. “But now they know there are others here. Not so good.”

“They are splitting up.” Koguth said suddenly. “Half a dozen moving around the ridge and another dozen following almost our exact path towards our current location. It almost seems like they...”

Kalis lowered his binos and looked at Yuriko. “Like they can follow our scents.”

“Kalis are you sure?” Yuriko asked.

“There is no way they could have picked up a trail.” Kalis told her. “We obliterated any sign we came in this direction. It is what we are trained to do. They would not know we moved in this direction unless... unless they could smell us.”

“Sibfla... that isn’t good.” Yuriko swore again. “We need to...”

“Princess!” The voice in her ear implant hissed out and Yuriko froze as she held up her hand.

“Go!” Yuriko snapped.

“Princess... the King’s ship just entered the system! They are less than an hour away!” The man reported to her.

Yuriko’s face beamed as she looked at Kalis. “This day just got a whole lot brighter.” She said. “Father’s ship just entered the system! He’ll be here in less than an hour!”

Kalis’s face changed slightly and Yuriko saw the sudden inkling of fear in his eyes. She reached out and squeezed his arm. “You have nothing to worry about. None of you do. Now... everyone back down into the cave! Now! They may get here before father does and we need to be prepared. And I want to talk to him!”

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

Sadi Leonidas knew something was different about Andro when he spirited her away after all of them had dinner. She didn’t understand why Ne’Veha and Sehri went off on their own with Lu’ria and Carisia not far behind. At least until they came here.

Sadi barely noticed the large blanket on the sand near the ocean’s edge, or the chilled bucket that held a bottle of Spartan Wine and two glistening glasses. She had no time to notice them as Andro’s first kiss had sent her spiraling into orbit. His kisses were always so intense and passionate, but he hadn’t kissed her like this since the night they had become Anomes, and her hormones reacted with giddiness. His unshielded aura wrapped around her tightly and her female wolf senses screamed out in delight as she basked in the passion and want that his aura held for her. His powerful arms drew her to him and Sadi knew he would control this night. As his kiss savaged her pleasure receptors, his nimble hands quickly discarded their clothes and two minutes after they had arrived here under the near full moon, Sadi Leonidas was screaming out her unabashed rapture as he pulled her into his lap and his entire twelve and a quarter inches of magnificent manhood speared her in a single powerful thrust. She exploded in an astounding orgasm at the pinnacle of that thrust, her head flying back, her fangs now fully extended as she wailed wantonly into the warm night air.

His large hands gripped her firm ass in his grasp and he held her down tightly, impaled upon him as she shuddered almost violently in release, her fingers digging into the skin of his shoulders. Her long blond hair, now nearly cascading to the middle of her back and shiny with health, whipped back and forth in delight as she let herself be carried on that tidal wave of pleasure. Andro always made love to them with deep passion and craving, but his aura burned so much brighter this night and Sadi could feel it smoldering just for her. This caused her own powerful female aura to react with equal passion and she pulsed him with everything of her essence, surrendering to his craving for her and embracing it utterly. His lips descended to her firm breasts, jutting proudly out from her chest, her nipples burning points of need and she whimpered loudly as he suckled them into his mouth. Sadi had never felt him so hot within her, his manhood like searing steel, buried so deeply inside her as he was. She could feel every pulse of the veins on his cock, every quiver and it was making her insane with enthusiasm for what he had started. She brought her head up quickly, her jungle green eyes changed now, her dual fangs extended and she looked at his face. She gasped at the near glow of his azure orbs and felt them gaze upon her with a hunger she had never seen in them before.

“Oh... oh carians Andro!” She gasped.

Sadi had no time to react and her eyes grew wide when he flexed his huge manhood within her and the pleasure smashed through her once more, even before her first orgasm had receded. She fell back in orgasmic devastation, his hands lowering her slowly to the blanket beneath them as she twisted in mind numbing pleasure, her heels digging into the muscles of his powerful ass, holding him in place instinctively. The fingers of his aura touched her everywhere it seemed, igniting fires within her body that she had never experienced. They had been Anomes for little more than a year now, the happiest time of her young life no matter the horrific events they had experienced as a family. As her orgasm shattered her senses, Sadi’s mind went back to the first moment she had seen those azure eyes. The first time that they had gazed on her when he was only nine months old. The first time she had smelled his lavender and pines scent. It was in that moment, in the deepest recesses of her mind, that Sadi knew she had found her future. Andro had told her on several occasions in the last year that she was the center of his universe. Sadi knew he loved all of them, would do anything for them as Sehri had told her this morning. Until this very moment in however, Sadi had not known how accurate Sehri had been. Andro was like the core of a sun and she was his essence. No matter what happened, no matter who shared their lives, she would always have command of his soul. His Etheric resonance touched her in that moment, all of his shields coming down and Sadi gasped, her eyes wide in blissful agony, as he allowed her to see everything that he was. He held nothing back from her now. He shared with her every memory that was his. All his hopes for the future. Their future. As she erupted in another cataclysmic orgasm the tears came to her eyes.

Tears of incontrovertible happiness.

Tears of unassailable love.

Tears of a bond so indisputably theirs.

As her body quaked in will crushing pleasure his strong hands pulled her up again. Sadi wrapped her arms around his head and kissed him with a zealous fury unlike anything she had ever known. Her breasts flattened against his iron hard chest and she could almost feel the sizzling heat of the Talon Guard brand in his skin as it touched her own. Sadi’s bright eyes grew even wider as she felt his massive cock swell larger within her and she tore her lips from his and screamed into the night sky beside his head as his explosion sent her reeling over the edge of the abyss a third time. As his blazing hot passion spilled into her forcefully in six potent eruptions, his powerful arms crushed her to him and he buried his face into the crook of her neck and shoulder.

Sadi knew they were not done yet, as his manhood remained rock hard inside her. She lifted her teary eyes to the stars and silently thanked whatever gods were out there for bringing this man to her. She thanked them for the other women in her life and the love she shared with them but most of all she thanked them for Andro.

That he belonged to her utterly... and she to him.

That nothing in this universe would ever take them away for each other.

Not even death.

Sadi stared up into his face as she leaned back against his bare chest sitting between his legs. She held the glass of wine in her right hand and watched as he chewed a piece of cheese. How he had brought these things out here and no one knew was beyond her but it was not something she was going to question. Four hours of blissful love making until their bodies could not continue and now they sat enjoying the cooler breeze of the late evening across their naked flesh and drank the wine he had brought. Sadi chuckled softly when he swallowed and tossed another piece of cheese into his mouth. His azure eyes turned to look at her and he grinned sheepishly.

“Sorry.” He told her softly. “Didn’t eat today.”

Sadi reached up and let the back of her fingernails drag along the underside of his jaw and the hollow of his throat. “Do you know how much I love you Androcles Leonidas?” She asked softly.

Andro smiled at her. “I would hope quite a bit.” He told her. “Or I’m doing something very wrong.”

Sadi smiled brightly and pushed back against him tighter without breaking eye contact with him. “No Andro my love... you are not doing anything wrong. That I can assure you with complete confidence.” She answered dreamily.

Andro looked at her intently and set his wine aside, drawing her tighter to him with his arms. “What are you thinking KertaGai?” He asked softly as he nuzzled her ear.

“I’m thinking that the gods have blessed me with you.” Sadi said softly. “They blessed me with SirsanGai, with Carisia and Lu’ria and Caliria and now Sehri. But mostly they blessed me by bringing me into your life.”

“I would argue that I am the one who has been blessed.” Andro said keeping his face next to her cheek.

“Argue all you wish.” Sadi told him. “I know the truth.” She looked into his eyes. “The very universe could come to an end tomorrow Andro and as long as I was in your arms I would not care.”

“I will try my best to insure that never happens.” He said. “I like the way you smell too much.”

Sadi chuckled. “Pervert.” She hissed gently. After a moment she ran a finger along the Talon Guardian brand and felt the warmth from the brand against her finger. “Why didn’t the others come here tonight?”

Andro reached up and trace the edges of the Dragon Heart pendant she wore as it rested between the valley of her breasts. It was much smaller than what he had given to her so long ago, but only because they had merged them back together in order to be split among all of them. Sehri’s pendant was recently finished and she now wore it proudly as they all did. A sign of their love and devotion to each other. A heart that would never die.

“Tonight all I wanted was my Anome.” He said softly. “I have neglected her for too long you know.”

“That’s not true my love.” Sadi said quickly.

“Yes it is.” Andro continued. “Carisia and Ne’Veha are the ones who told me so. Hit me in the head is more like it.” He finished with a smile. “Everything has been happening so fast... Sehri finally coming together with us. I needed time with just you KertaGai. To focus and re-center myself. Only you can do that for me. Only your scent and your mind.”

Sadi smiled. “Well... there are benefits for me too.” She said happily.

Andro nuzzled her cheek and ear and grinned. “We will be leaving soon.” He said as he drew her tighter and Sadi reveled in the feeling of his powerful arms around her.

“Leaving?” She asked looking into his face.

Andro nodded his head. “Events are growing larger and more complex where my father and mothers are. That is part of the reason why he is throwing all our weight into supporting Pian and the others. He believes Keleru is not as powerful as he projects and with our support they will be able to wrest control from him.”

“And your uncle?” Sadi asked.

Andro picked up his glass and sipped his wine. "One way or the other my father will end him this time." He said gently. "He will pay for what he has done."

"What does he want?" Sadi asked.

"As soon as we get things rolling with Pian and the others... we'll be leaving." Andro told her. "Tenna Deia knows and is already working on certain aspects to insure things run smoothly while we are gone. With Narice and Arrarn guiding the High Coven and Cha'talla and the Immortals to protect them, they will be able to handle everything. Once Pian begins to act against Keleru, he will have to direct all attention towards him or risk losing his hold on the KFI and he knows it." Andro finished his wine and set the glass down. "We'll be taking SPARTA'S WRATH and other assets and leaving for Vanari space by the end of the week. We'll make the political merger of the Union and Protectorate official and settle things with the Vanari one way or the other. We'll reclaim Caliria and then move to my father's location."

"How do you know all this Andro?" Sadi asked. "You've used the QCR more than you have let on haven't you?"

Andro nodded. "You know my father KertaGai." He said with a smile. "He is always thinking four and five moves ahead. He wants us to rendezvous with him in six weeks time. He estimates that is how long it will take him to deal with my uncle and search the two planets that were home to our people."

Sadi looked at him with wide eyes. "Our people!" She gasped. "More Lycavorians?"

Andro nodded. "He is concerned because the Pralors stopped monitoring their progress and no one has heard from them in centuries. These Svorag creatures are a menace and they are larger and smarter than everyone first thought. He fears... he fears they may be the reason our people have not been heard from."

"Why six weeks?" Sadi asked.

Andro shrugged. "I don't know why he gave me that time table. He wouldn't tell me. I think he believes something is going to happen to warrant our presence there and I think he wants me to find out as much as we can about this Rothryn Etheric Academy and this Circle of Shamans."

Sadi turned her head. "Then you feel as I do after what Sehri has told us?"

Andro nodded. "Something is not right about this woman Shaman Master Harira. I do not trust her or her intentions."

Sadi nodded. "She smells... off. And she was adamantly opposed to Sehri becoming our mate and lover." She commented.

"If what Sehri says is true, the Rothryn are oppressing Etheric users in this Academy that they have." Andro said nodding his head. "I sensed several hints from talking with Sehri's mother... and I believe they are trying to harness the physical manifestation of Etheric power by force."

Sadi met his eyes. "You think they are trying to control those who might be able to do what you can do?" She asked.

Andro shook his head. "Not what I can do... none of the Rothryn people were present on Lycavore when grandfather Sumar landed. The Paladin Gene would not be present in them. But if they can control what those like Sehri and you and Ne'Veha and even Zarah can do. Harness a small portion of their Etheric power and convert it to augment already established abilities..."

"Then they could conceivably control all Etheric users." Sadi said. "Make them do what a few of those in power demand."

Andro nodded his head. "I don't believe Sehri's father is part of it. They would not have given her to this Circle if they were. But I do believe that Harira is not what she seems to be. And I believe elements in her father's own government are working against him and towards this very goal. I trust Denali and that is what he senses is happening."

"All of us are going Andro?" Sadi asked. "You can't..."

Andro sniffed the air and his eyes lifted as he smiled. "Yes..." He projected his voice. "All of us are going!"

Sadi grinned and looked around as she smelled them now as well. "Stop trying to hide in the darkness." She called out.

Andro turned when he saw first Ne'Veha and then Carisia leading Lu'ria and Sehri out of the darkness behind them. None of them had much on in the way of clothing and he instantly held out his hand for them reaching out with his aura to envelope all of them. The four of them quickened their pace and moved up to them. Ne'Veha settled easily between Sadi's legs, Sehri between her legs. Lu'ria settled elegantly beside Andro on his left, his arm curling around her slim waist and pulling her tight and he shared a sizzling kiss with Carisia as she sat down on his right. He turned and kissed Lu'ria with equal heat and then leaned forward to nuzzle Ne'Veha's elven ear and the back of Sehri's head. Carisia pressed close to him, the thin robe covering her petite body moving aside as their skin touched. His arm curled around her waist and pulled her tighter just as he did with Lu'ria.

"I'm not leaving anyone behind." He said finally. "We all go together."

"First thing we do is reclaim our Inamarno." Carisia said.

Andro nodded. "Yes." He spoke firmly. "Then we officially recognize the merger of the Protectorate and Union and then we end the risk the Eridiani present to the Vanari. I understand Denali has made great strides working with both Coren Re Mydala and your father Sehri. It should only be a matter of acting on what they have done when we arrive."

Sehri turned her head slightly and looked at him. "You don't trust Shaman Master Harira do you Andro?" She asked.

Andro shook her head. "No. I don't think any of us do. Even you Sehri." He answered her. "And after speaking with your mother... I don't believe she does fully either. Shaman Master Harira's actions since you joined us have not been very convincing. She has opposed you being with us from the start. She has demanded your mother reign you in somehow. It's like she wants to control what you do and that does not relate with how you have told me the leader of this Circle of Shamans acts."

"It doesn't... I know!" Sehri said. "But I trust... I trust Cleric Mother Ilossa Andro. She has always watched out for me. Always."

"Then we will meet this Cleric Mother when we get to the Beta Quadrant." Andro told her. "We trust in what you know Sehri my love... don't ever doubt that, but even you believe that the Rothryn Etheric Academy is persecuting Etheric users in horrible ways. Using them for their own means. We have all seen it in your mind."

"I do not wish to end up within the walls of that place." Sehri spoke softly as she gently shuddered in a combination of fear and revulsion.

"You will not Sehri!" Ne'Veha exclaimed. "We would never let anyone take you from us now! No one!"

Carisia and Lu'ria extended out separate hands and placed them on her shoulders as Ne'Veha drew her closer. "SirsanGai is right Sehri our love." Lu'ria spoke. "And I would be remiss in my duties as Mistress to you if I allowed this. You belong to us now. And we to you. Nothing will ever change that."

Sehri turned her head quickly and looked at Andro. "You can not hurt him Andro!" She said quickly. "The one my father promised me too. He is a pompous fool yes... but he is not a dangerous fool!"

Andro looked at her wide eyed. "Sehri you wound me!" He said in mock exasperation. "I would never do such a thing!"

"Liar!" Sehri hissed but with an adoring smile and playfulness in her voice.

Sadi chuckled and reached out for Sehri's hand. "Our husband and mate is a Spartan Sehri our love. He will only do what is necessary to insure that no man foolishly ignores that you are mated to him now. To us. And if Andro is not present... one of us will."

Andro smiled. "Ah... the scorned woman." He said. "That would be a show worth paying to watch!"

Carisia slapped his shoulder. "Androcles!" She exclaimed. "That is not funny!"

"Watching one of you beat the sibfla out of some male who made unwanted advances?" Andro said. "Hell yes that would be fun to watch!"

"We will show you fun!" Carisia rasped as she shoved him back down on the blanket. "Who gets him first KertaGai?" She asked as Andro folded his hands behind his head with a smile.

Sadi grinned. "Who said anyone has to be first." She stated. "I think we can drive him suitably insane with five sets of lips and tongues."

Carisia turned back to Andro and saw his grin fade. "I think we can." She stated in a husky voice and a lustful glint in her maya blue eyes.

"Wait a minute!" Andro said. "Five against one is not fair odds!"

"Who said anything about fair Saradasaar?" Lu'ria spoke with a seductive tone in her voice as well. She lowered her head to his face as he was about to protest again and covered his lips with hers while Carisia extended her vampiric fangs and began to nibble on the skin of his neck and shoulder while bathing him flesh with her tongue.

All of them heard him moan as Sadi and the others shifted around and then three warm tongues were bathing another part of his body. Which quickly rose to the occasion. A few minutes later, Carisia's soft wail of delight filtered into the night air and ocean breeze, followed quickly by four other voices as their pleasure began. It would continue into the early morning hours until the Durcunusaan Duty Officer found them curled up on the sand sleeping soundly under the rising sun.

CLASS M MOON UNION DESIGNATION AT459

"...seven minutes out." Martin told her from the holoinage. "Have you been discovered yet arande?"

Yuriko shook her head quickly. "No... but they have landed at least two shuttles and they have found Kalis's two ships and they seem to be moving in our direction. Kalis believes they are following their scents father."

Yuriko saw Martin shake his head slowly. "Damn! That would only be a confirmation of what I feared." He said.

"That they are retaining at least some portion of the original host?" Yuriko asked.

Martin nodded his head this time. "Yes... that is what your mother and Duewa believe. It would also reinforce my conviction that they have taken quite a few Lycavorians through the years out here. More than that fat fuck Lorendo will admit. It's part of the reason they are so hard to kill."

"Our position is very defensible father." Yuriko told him. "Only two ways in or out. And they would have to get inside to get to the second entrance."

"They are armed?" Martin asked.

Kalis took a deep breath and stepped away from where he had been standing beside Serale out of the cone of the transmission. He moved up next to Yuriko and saw his uncle's dark eyes shift to him instantly. "We suspect light weapons Uncle." He spoke in a hesitant voice. "They... they appear to be older, projectile type weapons."

Kalis remember vividly the last time those eyes had fallen on him and it sent shudders through his entire being knowing how very close to death he had come that day. It seemed like an eternity ago, but he remembered it as if it had happened yesterday. This time however, this time he saw something quite different as he watched his uncle shift his position within the transmission and seem to move closer. Those dark eyes bore into him as if they were looking past his skin and body armor and peering into the depths of his soul searching. Kalis stood there under that gaze, never taking his eyes off his uncle. Not meeting that intense gaze would have been the clearest sign to his uncle that Kalis had not changed who he was in his heart. Kalis had changed... in so many ways... and he was intent on making sure that his uncle knew that. Only his uncle could show him and teach him what he wanted to know about the part of his blood he was still discovering. The history and culture that he had embraced utterly and wanted to know so much more about.

"Kalis." Martin finally spoke in an even voice. A voice quite unlike what he had heard on that day. This voice was filled with warmth and caring and happiness. Kalis saw the smile on Martin's face grow a little wider as he spoke. "You are looking well boy."

A small smile cracked Kalis's face now and he bowed his head slightly. "I am... even given our situation Uncle... I am..."

Martin sensed his apprehension and nodded. "We will talk Mandri." He said. "We will talk soon enough. Your mission?"

Kalis nodded his head in agreement. "Completed Uncle. Just as you directed." He said.

Yuriko looked back and forth between them confused as did everyone else. "Mission?" She asked finally.

“It’s not important arande.” Martin said looking back to Kalis. “I am truly happy to see you Mandri. Truly happy.”

“Not more than I for reaching beyond what I knew and grasping for what you showed me I could have Uncle.” Kalis told him before turning quickly and reaching for Serale. She allowed him to pull her close against him and into the cone of the transmission where she gripped his arm tightly with one hand and rested the other on his broad chest, her beautiful face beaming in emotion. Serale had never met a member of the royal family and standing before the King of the Lycavorian Union right now was just as equally scary for her as it was for Kalis.

Kalis turned to look at Martin. “Uncle... this is Serale. She is...” Kalis took another breath to calm his breathing. “I know this is not the time Uncle but I wish to claim her as a Spartan Uncle. I wish to make her mine.”

Martin’s eyes shifted to Serale and he could see right away part of the reason that Kalis had reached for something more. “Greetings Serale.” He said pleasantly.

Serale smiled brilliantly. “Milord... Milord King Leonidas.” She stammered.

Yuriko chuckled as her father shook his head sadly. She looked at Serale who had a horrified expression on her face as if she had done something wrong. Yuriko she reached out and squeezed her arm. “You will come to find out my father hates when people call him that Serale.” She told her. “We... our family does not stand on titles very much. Only when truly necessary. To be honest... we hate them.”

“We will be seeing each other face to face very soon.” Martin said with a smile. “We will talk more then.” He turned to Yuriko. “Post security but do not expose your position arande. Stay hidden for as long as possible but try and determine what they are doing.”

“We have an overwatch above the cavern father. One of my men is keeping tabs on them.” Yuriko answered.

“Your mother and Endith will drop us on the backside of the mountain and we’ll come over the top.” Martin said. “If you are discovered, insure you defend the entrance as long as possible. Then pull back.”

Yuriko laughed softly. “I have done this before father.” She said.

Martin rolled his eyes. “Yeah. Yeah.” He snickered. “I’m your father and I’m allowed to worry. Mandri... Yuriko tells me you have Kavalians with you that are politically aligned with Pian’Nrurani?”

Kalis nodded his head and motioned for Koguth to come forward. “Yes Uncle. General Koguth’Juturi. He commanded the ship we crashed into my father’s in order to cover our escape.”

Martin looked at the Kavalian in the transmission and nodded his head. He could see the same angular features on him even under his fur that he recognized in Iama’s beauty. “General.” Martin said.

“King Leonidas.” Koguth spoke confidently. “I... the Juturi Pride follows its own path King Leonidas. We follow the path that Pian’Nrurani has begun. We have had to remain hidden and...”

Martin held up his hand stopping his words. “You do not need to convince me.” He said. “If my daughter and Kalis trust you... then I will trust in them. And I trust Pian and Jalersi. I owe them a debt I can never repay.”

Koguth nodded at this obvious show of acceptance and pressed forward. “Sire... my... my daughter Iama. The Princess tells me my daughter is among you and your people.”

Martin nodded. “Yes she is.” He answered.

“She is... she is well then?” Koguth asked as Mani came up beside him, her tail curling around his waist as she pressed against him.

Martin nodded his head as he took in this obvious display of affection from the female who stood beside Koguth and the subtle way his arm shifted slightly to draw her closer to him. “Yes... she is doing very well. I believe many of us would have starved if not for her almost magical ability with food.” He said with a smile. “You have a strong willed, beautiful daughter General.” He said.

“Three minutes Marty!” The voice spoke from near Martin.

Martin nodded. “Arande... we’ll be there shortly. Be ready. Your mother and Endy are going to blow that frigate out of the stars and then we are going to get gone. I ain’t going to jack around with these Svorag Fuglies.”

Yuriko nodded. “We’ll be ready father.” Yuriko turned to Kalis as the transmission faded and she saw the questions in his eyes. “What?”

“Fu...Fuglies?” Kalis asked.

Yuriko chuckled. “Fucking uglies.” She translated for him. “Father and Uncle Danny can be very creative when it comes to naming things.”

Koguth grunted as he squeezed Mani with his arm around her waist. “No doubt they are equally creative at killing their enemies.”

Yuriko grinned. “Oh that goes without saying.” She stated.

STRIKER ONE ALPHA KING LEONIDAS’S PERSONAL STRIKER

“...one million meters.” Tina spoke softly. “Still no sign they have detected us and the sensors are clean for the rest of the system.”

“Passive array is showing no shields active.” For'mya spoke her eyes glued to the screen between her and Endith. She glanced up. “Could they not know how to operate some of the ship’s systems?”

“They couldn’t learn to fly that thing without knowing how to use the shields and weapons!” Tina commented. “Could they? I mean... Murano said they have lost ships through the years.”

“He didn’t know how many though.” Endith added. “Or if the entire crews were lost.”

“Considering what Anja has told us, we have to assume the crews were taken. Those that weren’t killed.” For'mya said. “The virus acts too quickly for them to escape if they survived the Svorag boarding their ship.”

“It doesn’t matter.” Endith said. “Boss said to blow this thing to sibfla. Let’s kill it and get back to the planet!”

For'mya nodded her head. “She is right.” For'mya said. “These are not things I wish to try and discover right now. They have taken control of the ship be it Pralor or not.”

“Works for me.” Tina echoed. Her hands began to fly across her Engineer’s panel. “I am deploying missile pods. Spooling up ZMF warheads. Chain turret is hot!”

Endith looked at For'mya. “How many do you think?” She asked.

“Murano said to target just below the ventral rib spans.” For'mya said. “It is the weakest structural point of the ship, especially with no shields up.” Her own hands were busy working the controls that were arrayed in front of her and to her right. “Targeting four ZMF missiles.”

Endith smiled. “Better safe than sorry.” She chortled.

“Approach from the stern Endy.” For'mya said. “We’ll lower the Shroud at five hundred thousand meters and fire.”

“Main power at your command lover.” Tina told her. “Try not to flip our stomachs too much baby.”

Endith smiled as she adjusted their course and speed. “Moving to five hundred thousand meters.” She said.

The STRIKER DT Mark II responded smoothly and with restrained power. The engineers had purposefully designed the ship to be overpowered in order to give every advantage possible to the pilots and dragons that would basically call the ships home. In the hands of pilots such as Endith and For'mya, the ships were capable of fighter like maneuvers due to their advanced engines.

“Still nothing.” Tina spoke as her eyes remained centered on her screens. “No sign that they know we are out here.”

“Doesn’t matter now.” For'mya replied. “Endith is right. Let us just kill them and get back to the surface.”

“Your wolf teeth are showing For'mya.” Tina said with some humor.

For'mya chuckled. “I have become more feral haven’t I?” She commented.

“No! What makes you say that?” Endith chuckled without looking at her. “You haven’t taken on the Boss’s more brutally laconic nature when dealing with our enemies. No way.”

For'mya and Tina laughed now as well and For'mya shook her head. “Thank you Endy.” For'mya said.

“Stand by. Coming up on five hundred thousand meters!” Endy called out.

“ZMF missiles ready! Syncing target coordinates and feeding them to onboard missile systems!” Tina spoke.

“In range!” For'mya barked. “Deploy missile pods!”

“Pods extended!” Tina hissed a moment later.

“Shroud coming down!” For'mya continued. “Endith! Fire at will!”

Endith mashed down with her right thumb on her side stick manual flight control module. It had dropped into place the moment they armed their weapons and while it could be used to fly the ship it was mainly used as the primary firing platform.

“Missiles away!” Endith announced.

RONAR CLASS PRALOR FRIGATE

The oldest class of current Pralor ships, the RONAR-Class Frigate was the first to be designed and built at the shipyards on Artaaya and it was still a workhorse and capable ship in the hands of experienced captains and crews.

The Svorag who occupied this ship were neither experienced nor capable.

While most of this ship's crew had been overwhelmed and changed, they retained only the basic memories of those they had once been. The higher brain functions that would have enabled them to crew this ship properly were just not there anymore. They had operated for six years now without using the main shields and only twice had they used the ship's advanced weapons. They had yet to encounter anyone within this quadrant of space willing to remain and fight them considering what they were capable of. There were several dozen different species within this quadrant that Martin and his people had not yet been introduced to. Some of them were violent and unpredictable, others peaceful in nature. None of them, no matter their culture wanted to risk an engagement with the Svorag that might end up costing them hundreds of their own people and equipment. None of them would dare remain to fight a stolen Pralor ship and its advanced weapons and engines that was filled with the Svorag.

Thus it was that when For'mya lowered the Shrouds of STRIKER ONE ALPHA only five hundred thousand meters away; the Svorag crew was unprepared and unsure of what to do.

They died in this very same fashion.

Nearly one thousand seven hundred Svorag would never know what caused their demise. The powerful ZMF missiles, already approved by Avi as a weapon that would work against even shielded Pralor ships, struck the unshielded hull of the RONAR about halfway along the underbelly of the ship directly over the main engineering construction seam. The force of the initial explosions caused the ship's hull to snap and break completely open under such horrific force, venting a full third of the ship to the cold of space instantly. As the zero matter reaction from the four missiles reached it's apex, the remainder of the ship simply glowed bright for a split second and then blew apart into millions of tiny fragments. Three pairs of eyes were the only witnesses to their deaths, and those eyes looked on with complete indifference. In their opinion the Svorag had chosen their side.

The wrong one.

STRIKER ONE ALPHA

“Holy shit!” Tina exclaimed as she watched on her screens. “It's gone! We must have hit something really big!”

“Fuck them!” Endith snarled from her seat. “They started this dance not us.”

For'mya nodded her head. “Indeed. Scan for any lifesigns Tina. One sweep. Once that is complete we are returning to the surface. A frigate of this type carries two of the Long Range Phased Quantum Transports similar to Shiria's ship. It also carries sixteen of what Murano called the TREFANO-Class Troop Transport. Yuriko reported only two ships came to the surface that they could tell.”

“How many can troops can the transports carry?” Endith asked.

For'mya met her eyes. “More than I care Martin and the others face.” She replied.

Tina turned her head and looked at For'mya. “You want to save any survivors?” She gasped.

For'mya's dark eyes met her blue orbs. “Nubou lae!” For'mya exclaimed. “I want to make sure they are all dead.” She replied firmly.

“Starting sweep.” Tina echoed with a chuckle. “No one survived that though.” She said. “No one.”

AT459

Kalis clutched the 190A4 tightly as his eyes watched the dozen Svorag come to a halt at the bottom of the trail that would lead up to the entrance of the cave. Perhaps fifty meters separated them, with the Svorag being slightly downhill from the nearly overgrown path up to the cave entrance. His eyes immediately focused on the Svorag in front of the others. He appeared to be the leader and he was also making the same motions as he himself did when he was learning to truly use his sense of smell only weeks ago.

[Yuriko?] Kalis reached out within the shielded connection for they did not yet know if the Svorag retained the Pralor ability to Mindvoice. [The one in front of the column. I was right. He is tracking us using our scents.]

[Kalis are you sure?] Yuriko asked. [How do you know?]

[He is making the same motions as I did when I first began to use my sense of smell as Uncle Martin and Androcles taught me in my lessons on the P1.] Kalis answered. [Watch his head. See how it twitches and moves from side to side ever so slightly?]

Yuriko trained her macrobinos down on the trail from her position on the small plateau above the cave entrance and enhanced the Svorag in the front of the column. She watched for several seconds and saw exactly what Kalis had described to her. Since she was a vampire, these tiny nuances were not something she took into account, but she was intelligent enough to trust in Kalis's judgment.

[Nice catch cousin.] Yuriko answered. [Why did they stop though? If he is tracking you by scent... it should have led him right up to the entrance.]

[No. Look at where the trails meet. Those beds of pinkish flowers. They are very fragrant and he can not filter through the mix of scents so easily I am guessing.] Kalis answered.

Above Kalis and lying on her stomach, Yuriko watched the Svorag intently. Kalis was right, the Svorag seemed to be slightly confused as he kept turning his head from side to side and trying to see something.

“Sibfla!” The Durcunusaan who laid to her right hissed softly. “Yuriko... two o'clock! Two more groups of Svorag coming from the east. They are spread out moving through the trees but I count at least thirty!”

Yuriko shifted her binos and her heart sank as she saw them. “Vith!” She swore. “We shouldn't have taken down the sensor array so quickly!”

[Yuriko!] Kalis's voice exploded into her head. [The leader is beginning to move up the path!]

Yuriko shifted her binos again and saw the Svorag who appeared to be following their scent moving up the path while the others waited. “Shit! Shit!” Yuriko muttered under her breath. [Father!] She reached out within Mindvoice. [Father you had better hurry! We have more of them closing on our position! More ships must have landed further away!]

[Two minutes Yuriko!] Martin's voice echoed in her head. She could tell he was moving quickly by the way his words were spaced between breaths.

[Father... I don't think we have two minutes!] She spoke.

It was at this exact moment when Nedoli led Serale and Ceale out into the small clearing by the entrance of the cave. All of them were now armed and moving in a crouch. Nedoli was a veteran of dozens of battles and he instinctively stepped over the small branch that lay before the entrance of the cave moving like a predator of his people. Serale and Ceale were not so lucky.

Kalis's head whipped around at the loud snapping sound and he saw Serale's eyes go wide in horror as the noise carried like a thunderbolt all around them. Serale had time to look down at the twig that was under her foot, look back up at Kalis and start to lift her hand to reach for Kalis's outstretched fingers before the Svorag leader descended on her with blinding speed. With an absurdly loud screech the Svorag half burst through the foliage that was expertly hiding the entrance to the cave, his powerful arms grasping Serale by her arm and hair and he yanked back, bringing her with him.

"Kalis!!!" Serale's voice wailed into the air as she was ripped backward through the thick foliage and disappeared.

Serale's scream of utter terror ripped through Kalis's entire being in that split second, his dark blue eyes wide in disbelief as he watched the woman he had come to covet so completely torn from his grasp. It began deep inside the pit of his stomach, a sensation of potent anger and savage power. It burned its way through his limbs, through his chest and centered around the heart that beat within his broad chest.

He understood now.

It all came into focus for Kalis in that terrible instant. The emotion she allowed him to feel. The sensation of her warm skin against his. Her sweet scent filling his mind and chasing away all the demons that had plagued him for so long. The color of her eyes and the way they made his heart skip when she looked at him. All of these things his father had never bothered to teach him; all the things his father had kept from him. It all came out now. Everything he had learned these last weeks from his Uncle Martin and cousin Androcles came rushing forward now with utter clarity and he embraced it all absolutely. His future, his sole reason for existing now. It had been taken from him.

No Spartan would ever stand for that.

Kalis's eyes changed in that single split second, the thick black ring encircling his dark blue irises and the savage looking dual fangs so unique to the Leonidas bloodline burst from his gums in a splash of blood and salvia. Rage filled him now. Love filled him. So many emotions he had denied up to this point in his life and he let it all come to him now. It infused his limbs and muscles with supremacy and purpose. Sixth tenths of a second after his beloved Serale had been torn from his near grasp and her scream cut right to his soul, shattering all the doors that had been closed to him, Kalis surged off the ground with a single minded rationale and passion fueled roar of his own. The sound that erupted from his throat and split the air all around them actually caused Nedoli to stagger back, pulling Ceale with him and cutting off her own wide eyed scream of horror as she had watched her daughter pulled from her. It was a wolf's howl of cruel rage and vengeance. As Nedoli and Ceale watched with gaping eyes, Kalis embraced it all within him and for the first time in his life he felt the smoldering of his bloodline as it shaped and molded him.

Kalis, the half Kavalian son of Pusintin, died at that very moment. The exquisite burning of his true bloodline seared away whatever remained of the troubled and angry boy he had once been. What was left behind was the powerful young man with the purest blood of Lycavorian Kings and true Spartans flowing in his veins.

The old Kalis died this day...

...and this death gave birth to the young man who didn't hesitate or pause for a single instant and exploded off the ground and through the foliage with a wolf's howl of death's right hand by his side. His only purpose, live or die, his only purpose in life was in danger. She had been taken from him and he would willingly die in order to get her back.

This day... Kalis sealed his father's fate as surely as the sun rises in the morning.

This day... Kalis Leonidas, the Lycavorian and the Spartan, was born.

And he would never look back... no matter what occurred.

CHAPTER TWENTY

CLASS M MOON
UNION DESIGNATION
AT459

It was a special event... something those Kavalians and Lycavorians with Yuriko that day would remember for the rest of their natural lives. It was a moment frozen in time that they would share with their children and grandchildren in the decades to come and tell them “I was there that day!”

The day Kalis Leonidas was reborn and announced his presence so spectacularly to the universe and the dark eyes of the Uncle he so wanted to impress. Another set of dark eyes also watched... watched with the utter pride of a father as Mata saw the man Kalis had hidden and suppressed for so many years finally and truly awaken. Three full seconds after Kalis exploded through the foliage hiding them; Mata let loose a battle scream of his own and followed without hesitation. Mata considered Kalis an adopted son, though he would never tell him that for fear of being rejected, and he would not allow him to fight this battle alone. Mata had trained him since childhood and watched him grow into the man he had become. Now he would bear first hand witness to Kalis forever tossing his dark, abhorrent past to the abyss and becoming what he had always been destined to become. What Mata didn't know right then was that Kalis's actions also served to cement the hard earned trust in him and every other Kavalian under the command of General Koguth; for an instant after he left his feet; Nedoli roared his own anger and surged forward. These vile monsters had taken the daughter of the woman he had come to covet and love more than his own life in so short a time. This was something Nedoli could not allow to take place. As Ceale staggered back in shock, she watched with wide eyes as first Koguth and then a dozen Kavalians and Lycavorians alike began to pour from the cave entrance and into the battle. Though most of the Kavalians were technicians and members of their now destroyed ship, there were still nearly fourteen that were full fledged soldiers of the Juturi Pride and in a rush of large and powerful bodies, those men joined the dozen Lycavorians and elves who were part of Yuriko's team as they plowed through the cover of thick foliage intent on destruction and death.

Serale ignored the pain in her back from where the beast had tossed her to the ground and she beat on the shoulders and head of the Svorag who had pinned her to the hard forest floor with his weight. He straddled her midsection obscenely, trying to grasp her flailing arms as more of his kind moved closer. He roared his anger as her blows landed, causing him no pain, but making it difficult for him to stab his tongue down into her throat and make her docile enough to insert his appendages and begin the transformation. His clawed hands finally were able to grasp her thrashing wrists and slam them to the ground none too kindly. Serale cried out in surprise as sharp jolts of pain shot through her arms causing them to go almost numb. She looked up into the ghastly face of the creature above her and saw its misshapen face snarl and shower her with warm saliva. Her eyes grew wide in disgust and fear as the lower portion of the armor like protrusion on its jaw lifted away to reveal the tentacle like tongue. A inch thick and easily more than a foot long, Serale's eyes grew wide in even more terror as she realized what the monster was intending to do.

“NO!” She screamed trying to twist her body this way and that to dislodge him. “Get away! No!” She wailed to no avail.

Serale tried to fight the beast but he was far stronger than her. A flash through her bright mind of what she was going to lose if she gave up infused her with a burst of strength. Kalis's handsome face and soft lips and his powerful arms holding her. The future she could have with him after finding him amongst such misery and pain. She tried to heave her lower body off the ground and succeeded in lifting the Svorag perhaps four inches off the ground just as it roared out its frustration and plunged its tongue toward her mouth. Her motion, unbeknownst to Serale, quickened the Svorag's death.

The deep throated roar that drowned out all other noise was unlike any that Serale and obviously the Svorag had ever heard before. This caused both their heads to snap around to the side to see the towering figure of Kalis Leonidas, his lips curled back in a twisted, savage snarl, revealing the long and incredibly lethal dual set of fangs exclusive to the Leonidas family and those they had turned. His eyes were changed, the dark rings around his blue pupils larger than Serale had ever seen and his face a mask of pure, unadulterated rage. The roar that leaped from his throat was that of an Alpha wolf gripped in the effects of a berserker rage. His whole body trembled as spittle flew from his open mouth and the sound that came out chilled Serale right to her center. It chilled her, but the expression and near partial transformation that had come over him did not frighten her in the least. If anything, Serale felt her love for him become even more complete as he revealed to her what he truly was beneath his handsome features.

“Kalis!” She screamed then, drawing the Svorag's attention back to her and making him snap his tongue forward towards her parted lips far faster than the eye could follow.

The Svorag's twisted eyes grew wide when something gripped the center of his tongue long before it ever reached the female's mouth. He had a split second to shift his eyes to where Kalis stood, as if expecting him to be swarmed over by his comrades and then Kalis wrenched his hand back with all his strength. The Svorag felt a momentary tearing of flesh and then hot, searing agony filled his mind as Kalis tore his tongue from his head right down to the root. Yellowish gray blood splashed wetly on Serale's chest and Kalis's arm as the Svorag reared back in horrific anguish, his hands releasing Serale and reaching for his head. His hands never reached his head as Kalis tossed the vile appendage into the brush nearby and took two steps forward. Due to Serale's actions, the Svorag's head was at the perfect height and he drove his large hand forward; the calloused fingers bent inward and forming an angular, almost pointed hammer. Into this blow Kalis poured all of his rage and all of his might. It represented all he had endured under the cruel yoke of his father. All the anger and the beatings directed at him for some perceived failure or another. All the mistreatment and never one iota of praise. The foul words and looks of disgust. It also was the first blow Kalis had ever thrown in defense of love. His love for the exquisite young Hadarian woman who had shown him that there was so much more to live and breathe for. The obvious pleasures and the delights he could experience with her; but also the laughter and moments of joy he could also experience. That is what fueled the blow, and while it was a lethal attack to begin with, even Kalis was unprepared for what the force of his strike would do. What the combined strength of his Lycavorian and Kavalian blood could produce if driven by the forces that filled him now.

Kalis's knuckles impacted the Svorag's lightly armored jaw just above what would have been his cheekbone. The audible sound of his armored cheek cracking and shattering was grisly to hear as the force of the strike first crushed and then shattered every bone in the side of his face. The Svorag's head snapped nearly completely around, his neck popping like the sound of a branch breaking and his body went completely limp instantly. Kalis did not stop there though as he stepped into the blow and using his large hands he grasped the Svorag's malformed head and twisted it savagely even more, lifting the now dead Svorag from atop his beautiful Serale with the ease of lifting a newborn baby. With a roar that was in every way equal to the one he has just released, Kalis heaved the large body of the Svorag away, watching as the limbs danced about wildly while his limp body crashed through the trees and light brush. It landed at the feet of three other Svorag some ten meters away who had stopped in their tracks, stunned at how easily this alien thing had killed one of their own.

As Mata and Nedoli and the others began to swarm around him with their weapons out, Kalis turned immediately to look at Serale and he dropped to his knees beside her. "Serale!" He panted, instinctively reaching for her and pulling her into his arms.

"Kalis!" Serale gasped. It was at that exact moment that Serale truly knew how much she had fallen in love with him. She reached for him just as he did for her and she felt a wave of desire and passion sweep through her unlike anything she had yet experienced in her nineteen years of life as his arms crushed her to his broad chest and she buried her face in the hollow of his throat. She felt his cheek pressed to her head, felt him inhale deeply of her scent and pull her to him intending to die protecting her.

"Stand ready!" Mata's voice echoed. "They will attack!"

Kalis turned quickly to see Mata and the others forming a protective barrier around him and Serale, Koguth and Nedoli among those who had rushed from the cave. They were shoulder to shoulder with Lycavorians and did not even blink. His changed eyes darted to where Yuriko settled next to Mata without hesitation, her eyes now the cobalt blue eyes of her vampire nature and fully exposed as she held the P190A4 at the ready.

"Sound off! How many? Check your fields of fire!" Koguth shouted out the orders as it came so naturally to him to do. He was no stranger to battle and in actuality, he was a superb commander of men. "Watch the flanks! Short bursts! Aim for their center!"

"Left flank General!" A Lycavorian shouted out.

"Right flank sir!" A Kavalian answered.

Yuriko looked at Mata as both Lycavorian and Kavalian troops called out their fields of fire to Koguth with barely a hiccup in their answers. That they were reporting to a man who, not so long ago, would have been their enemy did not seem to faze them in the least. More of the Svorag began to appear from the trees and make themselves seen. "I don't think they are going to be happy!" She shouted.

"Fuck them!" Koguth screamed in reply. "They will be even less happy when they die at our hands!"

Yuriko felt a familiar surge through her and her cobalt blue eyes grew wide. “Papa!” She gasped loudly.

Kalis felt it too now, fully engulfed in the sensations and the meaning of the blood that flowed through his veins, as he now was. He had never felt anything quite like it in his young life. Overwhelming, pure, focused and flawless power. It flowed over both of them like the warm embrace of a hot spring, embracing them and enveloping them completely. Kalis had never experienced anything like it before and it shook him down to his inner being. He could actually feel his uncle’s emotions to a certain extent. The awe-inspiring pride in the name he bore and in what Kalis had accomplished. It was almost a palpable thing for him and Kalis finally knew what it was like to know someone was proud of him. He could feel the irresistible need from his uncle to protect and support all that he loved and held dear. Then there was the carefully controlled anger that seethed and bubbled beneath the surface like an unexploded mega volcano. Kalis and Yuriko turned at the same time to look behind them and slightly above their position. Unlike the last time he had seen this sight, what Kalis saw now filled him with wonder and untarnished pride at the door he had so willingly stepped through this day. A door that allowed who he was meant to be to finally come out.

“Father!” Yuriko let out the excited scream, causing Koguth and all the others to turn to look behind them.

Martin Leonidas stood in the center of the single line of men and one woman. Danny stood to his right, Murano to his left. Julie, Kenny, T'lolt, Pablo and Tony making up the eight person line. Kasdan was bent over at the waist beside Kenny on the far end just behind T'lolt drawing in deep breaths as he tried to recover from the incredible sprint they had just conducted over the last kilometer to get here.

Kalis looked at the tall, armored form of his uncle and those with him, taking in the well muscled shape and the raw power that radiated from him like a burning sun. His Spartan helm covered his head and all but his eyes and a narrow portion of his lips, but Kalis could see the dual fangs that were bared in a unique combination of anger and utter control. The yellow/gold eyes blazed from under that helmet, the high plume with six different shades of soft horse hair blowing gently in the wind. The hair color of each of his uncle’s Queens Kalis knew. He carried no firearm, only a strange looking tubular object in his right hand and his extended Nehtes in his left.

“This a private party Yuriko?” Danny barked out the words from beside the man he had called brother since they were babies. “Or can anyone join in?”

If all of them thought Kalis’s roar was something to behold, the sound that escaped the throat of Martin Leonidas was much deeper, much louder and far longer. It held so much more power and domination in it. Even under the Spartan helmet, his dual fangs were now fully bared as he roared out his emotions for all to hear and Kalis could only shudder at the length and sheer utter terror those fangs could elicit from someone who didn’t know better. As with Kalis, spittle flew from Martin’s lips, his changed wolf eyes nearly glowing in their intensity and everyone present could feel the vibration of the roar through the air shudder through their entire bodies.

“By all that I hold holy!” Kalis heard Mata mutter softly from beside him. “This... this is what we would have fought?”

“Shit! Now you have done it!” Julie quipped in a laconic tone of voice from beside the man she had called brother for equally as long as Danny. “Now you have done pissed him off!”

“Hah! Stupid motherfuckers!” Tony bellowed with a tone of jovial happiness. “T'lolt my Immortal brother! Let’s bring the pain!”

“Oh yes!” T'lolt echoed with his own shout of merriment.

With two screams of their own, Tony and T'lolt brought up the harness mounted 20mm chain guns secured to the front of their bodies and broke in opposite directions from the ends of the line as they mashed down on the firing control buttons gripped in their hands. The three barreled chain guns began to spin and suddenly there were four foot long tongues of flame leaping from the barrels, sending hot death down range with unerring accuracy.

“Now Martin!” Murano screamed as a light blue shimmering cloak enshrouded his entire body. He was feeding off the passion and emotion he felt in his fellow Praetorian and to him it was like he had been reborn all over again. He literally surged with power he hadn’t felt in millennia. “They are confused! We go now!”

With a snarl of rage Martin Leonidas bent his knees slightly, a similar light blue cloak wrapping around his form and then he launched himself across the nearly hundred meters of open terrain between him and the first rank of Svorag soldiers with Murano a heart beat behind him.

“Bring it you sonsofbitches!” Danny screamed as he, Julie, Kenny and Pablo formed a small wedged shaped wall, their weapons coming up and they charged into the battle with no pause in their actions or intent.

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

While Cranae Island could have held them all easily, it was one of the reasons Andro had purchased the massive island and villa, Resumar and all of his brothers and sisters had chosen to stay at their own villas within the surrounding city of Gytheio. All of them were well within range of the island and only minutes away on their dragons or even by foot for Zarah and Lucia if they blurred. The only one to remain on the island and use one of the large guest apartments was Dorian, who did not yet have his own home.

The apartment was part of the family wing of the villa and entirely self contained. Six of these apartments were positioned across from each other, opening into the long courtyard and flower garden that ran down the center of the Family Wing. As the sunlight began to filter into the room from the large skylight above and touched her skin, Sheva Juconi shifted on the large bed and stretched her petite form under the thin sheet along the length of Dorian Leonidas’s tall, powerful body. She blinked several times and then opened her green eyes, seeing the side of his jaw and cheek from where her head rested on his shoulder. She lifted her head slightly and bit back the groan of blissful soreness. She dropped her head back to his naked shoulder with a smile of utter satisfaction and let out a long sigh of delight. Technically he may have only been a few months old, but Dorian Leonidas possessed the size, knowledge and sexual skill to leave her a whimpering mass of sated flesh. Never in her over three hundred years of life had any man given her such glorious pleasure in her bed. Never had any man devoted so much of his time to insuring she was screaming in delight before he took his own pleasure. Dorian never seemed to tire of her body or her for that matter. There were times when he would simply stare into her stunning eyes and she into his multicolored orbs and they each could see and feel everything the other was thinking and feeling. It was so completely surreal to her, yet it made her feel so totally fulfilled.

He had only taken her once the previous night, but that one time had lasted for nearly three hours and culminated in his fangs sinking deeply into her neck as they had every time they had made love since this affair began, resulting in them exploding together in a rapturous orgasm. Last night had been different however. So very different indeed.

Last night had been so utterly rapturous, that Sheva Juconi had forgotten her control and in the grips of her heavenly orgasm, she sank her vampiric fangs deeply into Dorian’s thick neck and fed on the most delicious blood she had ever tasted in her life. She remembered it vividly as she quivered and shuddered in the mind blowing orgasm, so warm and spicy with a hint of mint and lilacs in the flavor. Sheva tossed away all her stern control and clutched him possessively as she drank deeply of his delicious blood and he drank of hers, tripling the power and intensity of their mutual orgasm until they both collapsed on the bed unable to move. That is how they had fallen asleep, Sheva’s smaller body atop his, still impaled upon his impressive manhood.

Sheva Juconi stared at the side of his face now and knew that she was falling in love with him. Falling very hard and oh so very fast. It wasn’t supposed to be like this, but she could no longer refuse what she had denied herself for so long. What her heart was telling her she wanted more than anything. It was something she had denied herself in the hopes of some measure of revenge for her loss so long ago. A loss she had long put behind her. Young though he may have been, Dorian Leonidas shared both the memories and wisdom of his father and his dragon brother Ryner and Sheva could not deny she found that knowledge, coupled with his youthful playfulness, completely irresistible. Yes... she was in love with him. And while part of her questioned how she could have ever allowed it to happen, the other, dominant part wanted to insure it never went away. When he gazed upon her with those eyes of his she felt like the only woman in the universe and all of his desire and attention was focused entirely on her. As she lifted her upper body with her elbow, she held the sheet over her breasts and gazed at his exposed flesh. She took in his broad tattooed chest and tattooed shoulder. The intricate tattoo was something that enhanced his persona in her eyes. He was simply put the most beautiful man she had ever laid her eyes upon. She was tiny compared to him, but there was no denying that she fit perfectly into his embrace. His skin was deeply tanned, even more than her own and her green eyes glance out of the skylight into the brightening sunlight. It was still very early, but the sun rose early in this part of the world she knew. Sheva chuckled softly for a brief moment at the legend perpetrated here on Earth from the human population on how sunlight could kill vampires in seconds. That had never been the case at all. Due mainly to the atmosphere on earth, the upper layers of the ionosphere protected them from the very lethal neutron radiation that came from Earth's sun, many of the vampires who lived on Earth spent hours outside on purpose. It was the perfect place to a vampire and had been a good hunting ground. Though the hunting part came to an end very quickly many hundreds of years ago.

Her eyes turned back to gaze at Dorian's face and she concluded with no doubt that he had stolen her heart. Against all her training and judgment she had fallen in love with him in so short a time and that frightened her to some extent because of what he was. Dorian Leonidas was a hybrid child of perhaps the two most lethal species in the universe that she knew of. While he would never have the raw power of his pureblood brother Androcles, physically he was more than a match for any pureblood vampire and many pureblood Lycavorians right now. Only a pureblood of either species, thousands of years old and with much more experience could hope to stand against him in any way. His strength and speed was something she had never witnessed and she had seen firsthand the aftermath of the abilities he commanded while on Solmar. She had talked to others who had been there and they had told her of what he had done. Dorian was being trained by his brother Androcles and Sheva knew very well that Androcles Leonidas and their father their King were considered without question, the foremost hand to hand combatants within the Union by even the most senior Durcunusaan and vampire instructors. And that was before they had discovered this magical power they all seemed to possess now. It was a power that intrigued her, but didn't matter to her in the least when held up to her growing feelings for him. As the warmth of Dorian's body reached for her she dismissed the thoughts forming in her head and lowered her body back to his and snuggled close. The wolf blood in his veins was very dominant and it allowed him to generate so much more body heat than the few vampire males who had shared her bed. His powerful arm lifted almost absently as she snuggled closer and curled around her shoulders to draw her tighter and Sheva smiled contently. It was the first time in her life that she felt like this and it was heavenly.

The door chime rang and rudely snapped Sheva out of her thoughts. Her head swung around towards the door and she lifted her body up, the sheet dropping away to reveal her firm globes. She heard Dorian groan softly and she looked back at him as he spoke to the air.

"I'm late! So sue me!" He snarled as his eyes opened and his face turned to look at her. He saw her firm breasts protruding proudly outward only inches from his face and he grinned devilishly. "I'll be there in a while!"

Sheva looked at him as he spoke out, her green eyes wide and she realized that he was speaking to someone within Mindvoice. "Dorian?" She questioned. "Who...?"

"Andro." Dorian answered her cutting off her question. "We were suppose to train this morning. I'm late."

"Does he...?" Sheva began to ask.

Dorian lifted his upper body and pressed his face between her firm breasts planting a soft kiss in the valley there. "Know you are here?" Dorian finished with a hint of humor in his voice. "It would be kind of hard to miss the scents that are probably filling the atrium after last night. You smell very good. So... I would say yes."

Sheva pushed him back reluctantly with a groan at his reply. "Dorian!" She gasped in horror.

He lifted his eyes to hers and smiled. "Sheva... Andro has known since our first night together on the SCIMITAR. His sense of smell is nearly as advanced as my father's. He could smell you all over me the next day. I'm sure others have noticed as well."

"Others? Who? Jomann?" Sheva spat with more venom than she intended. Sheva saw his beautiful eyes fill with hurt and he leaned back from her. The look in his eyes caused Sheva nearly as much pain in her heart and she lifted her fingers to her lips in horror at how she had reacted.

“I’m sorry if that bothers you Sheva. I... I thought you would have known that.” Dorian said softly. “I should... I should get dressed and meet Andro.”

Sheva watched as he turned slowly and tossed aside the sheet and began to rise out of the bed. His body was so completely beautiful to her, so lean and powerful. His cock was still so very impressive even in its flaccid state. He treated her as some rare gem to be worshiped and adored and still she fought the emotions that were so prominently filling her very essence. She had become so very confused and torn in the last few years and Dorian Leonidas had suddenly become the anchor she had been seeking from the very first day he had entered her life. The anchor and the reason for the conflict of her emotions. The conflict that was about to end right now. Holding the sheet over her upper body with one hand she reached out and grabbed his large hand with the other. “Dorian!” She nearly yelled his name. She watched as he turned slowly away from her. “Dori...” Sheva spoke the nickname his siblings had given him softly. She had thought it was a stupid nickname when they first started using it but it came from her lips as easily and smoothly as breathing. She spoke it almost reverently for that is the emotion that filled her. “Dori... I’m sorry.” She said.

Dorian moved quickly and knelt beside the bed, pulling her smaller frame close to him. Almost instinctively Sheva allowed his hands to grab her firm ass cheeks and pull her near and she chose to wrap her legs around his sides and lock her heels at the small of his back. His face was suddenly only inches from her and she could smell the sweet scent of his blood. His lips grazed hers and she couldn’t help the shudder of desire that coursed through her. “I know... I know you are not comfortable with this.” He said softly. “With me. I...”

Sheva shook her head and lifted her hand to place two fingers on his lips silencing his words. She knew what he was going to say and at the beginning she may have felt that way, but in the days since their first encounter she had fallen so deeply in love with him she was not going to allow him to blame himself.

Sheva shook her head and leaned forward, replacing her fingers with her lips and she kissed him tenderly. Passionately. With all the emotion she could bring to bear and then some she never knew she even had. Her body rejoiced when he reciprocated without hesitation. “No.” She said softly pulling her head back after a moment and looking at his surprised but happy face. “Don’t you dare... don’t speak those words Dorian.” She told him finally. “Not now.”

“Sheva Juconi... I love you.” He told her confidently. “With every breath that I take, I love you. I know that you believe I don’t know what I’m saying and that I’m too young and... I do not want you to be... I do not want to force you to believe something you do not. I...”

Sheva shook her head again. “No Dorian... it is I who needs to... who needs to open my eyes and believe what I see.” She said. “There is so much more out there in the universe than what I believe and understand and know. Meeting you... meeting you and then... and then falling in love with you has made me see that. I can’t dismiss it. I don’t want to dismiss it for it fills me with such happiness.”

Dorian’s eyes grew a little wider, the brown and cobalt blue orbs wide as he gazed at her. “You... you love me?” He gasped in surprise.

Sheva felt in control of her destiny for the first time in her life and she nodded her head confidently. She would no longer rail against her emotions and what they were telling her. This was a decision she was making of her own free will based on the emotions rushing through her so powerfully. She was smiling brilliantly as she nodded her head and took his handsome face in her small hands. “I... I can’t begin to describe how much I love you.” She told him with small tears running down her cheeks in happiness. “How much I want to be with you. What you make me feel. I’ve never felt this way for anyone Dori. Never in all my life and it feels... it makes me feel so alive.”

Dorian tilted his head slightly to the side and his right eyebrow lifted a little causing Sheva to smile. “Ok... what did you do with the Sheva Juconi that wanted to kick my ass a couple weeks ago?”

Sheva laughed heartily, genuinely and relished the peace it brought her. “She realized that everything she has ever wanted was right in front of her face and staring back at her.” Sheva said. “You... you are the son of King Leonidas and his vampire Queen Isabella. A Prince. Most woman would jump at the chance to experience what you have shown me.”

“Sheva... I don’t want any other women.” He told her rolling his eyes.

Sheva nodded her head. “And it is I who needs to understand that you are different. That something so very special happened to you and now you are so much more mature and wise than I.”

Dorian chuckled. "I wouldn't go that far exactly." He said. "Though it does sound pretty cool coming from you."

Sheva smiled and snapped her head forward playfully to grasp his lip between her teeth and nibble on his flesh. "You know what I mean." She said after she elicited the groan she wanted to hear from him.

Dorian smiled. "I can help you." He said. "I want to share so much with you... but you know how my family is. How Androcles and my father are. If... if you share my life... then that makes you a Princess of the Union no matter the world you knew before. They would expect you to be treated as such."

"I will remain Durcunusaan Dorian." Sheva told him firmly. "That is what I have come to love doing and..."

"I would never ask you to change that." He stated. "Sadi is Crown Princess... and she is still a pilot in the Union Fleet. Ne'Veha as well. You do not have to change who you are Sheva! I would never ask that of you."

Sheva's heart swelled with unrestrained emotion. Vast mixtures of emotions that were new to her, but cascaded through her and made every sense in her body sing in delight. She wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders and shifted her body until she was pressing her groin up against his abdomen. "Sheva Juconi Leonidas." She spoke the words that rolled so easily off her lips. "That sounds simply divine."

Dorian covered her lips with his and crushed her to him as he stole her breath and her life away with the intensity of his kiss. He could curl her toes with his kisses and she whimpered in delight as she always did. Yes... Sheva Juconi was making the right choice. She could not cling to beliefs that were no longer her own. Age old hatreds that were fermented by twisted old men and were never hers to begin with. She had to let go of the past if she was ever to have a future and Sheva knew that future was right here in the arms and life of this man.

Now she had to live her own life and that is what she intended to do.

Gorgo stood in the doorway of the patio and watched as Andro and Dorian sat across from each other on the white sands of the beach near the water's edge. Elynth and Ryner sat behind their respected bonded brothers, their massive bodies resting comfortably on the sand. Elynth's right front talon was draped across Andro's right thigh as it usually was when they were deep in conversation, dwarfing his leg completely while Ryner's head was close enough to Dorian's shoulder for him to stroke the scales under his jaw without lifting his arm very high. Gorgo sipped her coffee slowly, her mind contemplating everything that had brought her to this moment in her life. Andro and Dorian were very different than their siblings Gorgo knew. They were different in such a unique way. The power they both could wield was something Gorgo did not fully appreciate but Shiria was making it easier for her to examine and comprehend all of it. Like their brother Denali and their father and Jomann, they held within them a force they could call on at will and it could be terrifying to behold.

Their father.

Even after all these years Gorgo still felt the joy she experienced the day Martin rescued her from that prison on Lycavore. The day she came to realize that the child she had thought lost so long ago was alive and well and had taken his father's place as King of not only Sparta, but the Lycavorian Union as well. Gorgo loved Riall with all that she was, but a part of her would forever and always belong to Leonidas. It was Martin, their child together that kept this connection alive within her. Riall knew she felt like this and he understood and fully accepted it, though Gorgo doubted he knew just how much she truly did love him. Gorgo turned when she smelled and felt Sadi and Lisisa come up behind her. Lisisa had arrived very early, knowing that Sadi and Ne'Veha were early risers themselves and she did not want to stay for very long in her and Denali's home without him and Arduri. She had free access to Andro's home as did all of his siblings and when she arrived this morning Sadi already had the coffee made and she and Ne'Veha were sitting on the couch going over the schematics on some new ship that Ben's engineers were building for them. Gorgo smiled at them as they approached for she knew that Sadi's reputation was growing by leaps and bounds among their people and Lisisa was already hugely popular. She motioned with her head to where Andro and Dorian sat.

"Do they do that often?" She asked looking at Sadi.

Sadi nodded as she sipped her mug. "More so since Solmar." Sadi answered. "Dorian's powers are manifesting themselves much quicker because of his accelerated birth and growth. Andro is really the only one who can guide him because they are the same."

"Because they were both bonded to dragons before they were born and became aware while still in the womb?" Lisisa asked.

Sadi nodded again looking at her. "It's not easy having the memories and thoughts of generations within your head." She said with a gentle smile. "Andro still struggles with it at times. He wakes in the middle of the night after some ghastly dream from a battle he never fought. Elynth is the same way. They usually end up flying off into the night and return in the morning after they have talked it through and soothed each other."

Gorgo nodded as she looked back to the brothers. "Aricia and Anja tell me Martin is the same way. A few nights a month he wakes in a cold sweat and they have to calm him. Then he usually flies off on Torma and returns a few hours later. I would imagine it is much worse for them because they became aware of life and could understand long before they were ready." She spoke motioning to Andro and Dorian.

"Andro calls it a curse sometimes." Sadi said softly. "He would not change anything... I know that... but there are times when he wished it wasn't so. Dorian is beginning to experience that now as well."

"It is my fault you know." Gorgo spoke looking back at them.

"Gorgo no! What they have become is not your fault!" Sadi exclaimed.

"Grandmother... Sadi is right... it is not your fault!" Lisisa quickly spoke.

Gorgo smiled. "Only three people know what I will tell you now. Not even my own son knows." She told them. "This new gene that we have discovered... this Paladin gene? The source of their power? Everyone thinks that it was active in my beloved Leonidas and just had not reached maturity. That isn't the case."

Sadi and Lisisa looked at her with surprise in her eyes. "But... I thought it... everyone says it was active within grandfather." Lisisa said.

Gorgo shook her head. "Leonidas was like you Sadi. The gene was present and though not entirely dormant, it was also not fully active. It allowed him to do what he did yes, but he was a warrior unequalled, a charismatic leader and masterful tactician even without the Paladin gene. Within me however... within me it was fully active and very much alive. Passed down from your great grandmother Eliani's lineage and bloodline. I passed this gene to Martin in a very active state and according to Shiria it bonded with the Paladin gene passed to him from Sumar through Leonidas. The strongest and most prominent holder of the gene. Shiria believes that even though dormant within Leonidas, the gene passed to him from Sumar took the gene I passed to him and merged them together into a near duplication of the gene Sumar himself possessed. It is all very confusing the way she described it, but she believes that is why Martin and his sons are equal to, if not more powerful than Sumar was." Gorgo saw the confusion in their eyes and she smiled gently. "I allowed Shiria to test the remains of Leonidas and Deia allowed her to test the remains of Resumar and Eliani. We wanted to be sure. In essence... everything they have endured and will endure is my fault." She said motioning to Andro and Dorian.

"Gorgo... you are not responsible for that! And neither Martin or Dorian or Denali would ever think badly of you because of this! It is incomprehensible that you hold this blame inside you and they would tell you that! And you certainly are not responsible for Andro and Dorian being born aware!" Sadi said. "You had no control over that."

"No... but the emotional state of Martin I am partially responsible for." Gorgo told them. "Shiria believes the active gene in my blood was absorbed by dormant gene within Leonidas's blood more than normally occurs because of the purity of our blood and the closeness to our Pralor ancestors. This increased the potency of the gene passed on to Martin as a whole. That is why it is so pronounced within Martin and now within Andro and Dorian and the others as I said. It passed over Pleistarchus for some reason and only passed to Martin. The gene within Aricia is also actively dormant Sadi, just like you and Leonidas. When combined with Martin's active gene... well you have seen what all of them can do. Deion and Nara are beginning to show signs as well." She sipped her coffee again. "The power of the Paladin gene Leonidas and I passed to Martin only served to enhance his emotional state and it even affected Aricia's gene more than it was. This caused the child they created... your mate Sadi... your brother Lisisa... this caused him to become aware while still in the womb. So in essence... I am responsible for all of it."

"But that would mean..." Sadi began to speak.

"That our mother Isabella has the gene as well!" Lisisa finished the statement with wide eyes.

Gorgo nodded her head in agreement. "Shiria believes the odds that there were Pralors with this gene on CS19 to be very high. Veldruk knew this because of Aikiro and that is why he kept me for so long. He wanted to learn all he could from me about this gene. It is why he never allowed Canth to pass on physically." Gorgo told them. "And your mother Isabella has always been an extremely emotional woman because of everything she endured while growing. Shiria believes that either Veldruk or Bella's mother carried the gene. She leans towards the mother because Aikiro would never have allowed Veldruk to roam about as he did if he was a carrier." Gorgo said.

"Grandmother... does that mean you could become what they are?" Lisisa asked her. "You could be a Praetorian like them?"

Gorgo shook her head quickly. "By the gods no." She gasped. "I have neither the skill nor willpower to harness the power as they have done. And to be honest... I would not want it. Shiria told me it was so very rare in the Pralors because there are so few who can call on and harness the immense willpower to control it. When Sumar merged the Pralors from his ship with our people on Lycavore he broke the cardinal rule among the Pralor people. A rule he himself began. They feared what this power could do in the hands of a species that were war like and violent. Just as we were as a people so long ago."

"We are not like that now!" Sadi gasped.

Gorgo shook her head. "No we are not. But Shiria believes Martin is going to have a hard time making the Pralor people they have discovered believe that. Only time will tell."

"You think that is why Martin wants us to join them?" Sadi asked.

Gorgo nodded. "I believe that is part of it yes." She replied. "As I said... only time will tell."

"Why hasn't Shiria returned now that father found Pralor survivors grandmother?" Lisisa asked.

Gorgo chuckled. "Her words to me were simple. She has no intention of returning to the emotionless, close minded fools who sent her away to begin with after experiencing the passion and life of our people and those Kavalians she associated with. She is a stubborn woman."

Sadi took her arm. "I know for a fact that Andro reveries you Gorgo." She said. "You carry a burden that is not yours to carry and your son and grandsons would tell you that if they knew you felt this way."

"Sadi is right grandmother." Lisisa told her.

"Perhaps." Gorgo spoke. "Speak of this with no one please. I do not wish to cause more issues. They have enough to deal with as it is."

Sadi looked at Lisisa and then back to Gorgo. "Come back inside Gorgo. Lisisa brought some Loukoumades that she made last night. They are delicious."

Lisisa chuckled as she took Gorgo's other arm. "I used your recipe grandmother." She said. "You'll have to tell me how I did. When I make them for Denali and Arduri I want them to be perfect."

Gorgo smiled as they drew her back into the villa. "Child... Denali and Arduri are not going to be concerned with Loukoumades when they see you once more." She said with a chuckle.

Lisisa's dark eyes simmered. "I know... neither will I. But we will need snacks for in between." She said with humor.

Gorgo laughed as they walked back into the villa.

"Won't go away fervon." Andro told him as they sat on the warm sand. "They will always be there. Keep at the techniques I taught you and soon you will be able to block them almost all of the time."

"Almost?" Dorian asked.

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. "Even father cannot block them all." He said. "It is something we will need to accept and make part of us as the years pass. As I said... you will learn to block most of them and the others will fade into distant images and memories and not return often. There is a section in Tome Five, Section Eighteen I believe, that details such things and it was very helpful to Elynth and I."

[It allowed us to alter our focus enough to make the technique easier to learn.] Elynth spoke. [Once we read that, it was only a matter of a few days before it became so much easier.]

[We will read it tonight.] Ryner spoke lowering his snout enough to nudge Dorian's shoulder.

Dorian nodded his head. "Yes we will."

“So... tell me about Sheva fervon.” Andro asked him. “We’ve avoided the topic as long as we can.”

Dorian nodded. “I know.” He said softly. “I just... our times together... they are... I don’t want to... I feel as if I am betraying her.”

Andro smiled gently, understanding what his brother was saying. “I do not want the details Dori.” He said. “Those are for you and Sheva. I told you that I trust in your instincts and I do. I can smell her blood within you so I know you have tasted it. Leaving out everything you do not need to tell me... what have you discovered?”

Dorian looked at him. “She took my blood last night Andro.” He said.

Androcles was silent for a moment as he gazed at him and then he glanced up to Elynth before turning back to Dorian. “Then whatever doubts I may have had are now gone.” He said finally. “She could not have done that and be an agent of our enemy. I put aside any questions I had.”

[As have I.] Elynth spoke. [Among vampires that is the pinnacle of an expression of love and devotion. It speaks to where her heart truly is.]

Andro nodded. “Yes it does. More than anything.” He said. “Now... tell me what you have learned so that we can help her.”

Dorian took a deep breath. “She’s confused.” He said. “Her emotions are a whirlwind. She is filled with doubt and questions. About her role. Her purpose. Her beliefs.”

“About you?” Andro asked.

Dorian shook his head. “No. Her feelings for me are genuine and the only thing about herself that she doesn’t hide. I know what I feel Andro and...”

“Dorian... you don’t have to convince me.” Andro told him. “I’ve told you that. Have you learned anything that could help us help her? Or discovered more about her? What her mission is? Or was?”

Dorian met his eyes. “Given time... I know she would tell me.” He said. “When she looked at me this morning... her eyes... she wanted to tell me so much more. I know it. I just need time to make her see that I love only her and that she can trust me no matter what.”

[She has had extensive training if you cannot see these things within her mind after taking her blood Dorian.] Elynth said.

Dorian nodded. “I assume she was trained by the Venorik Elghinn. They would be the only ones capable of training her to suppress her emotions and feelings like she has.”

“Well... they didn’t train her well enough.” Andro stated. “She did not strike me as someone who would follow an ideology blindly. If she has doubts about her beliefs that tells me something.”

Dorian looked at him. “What?”

“That she was not born here within the Union as her records indicate.” Andro explained. “No vampire born within the Union would harbor any doubts about their beliefs. None of them adhere to what the Coven once stood for.”

Dorian caught the meaning behind his statement. “That would mean she was placed here by someone.” He said.

Andro nodded. “She is over three hundred years old... and she may very well have been here since before father returned and assumed his role as King.”

[She resisted being assigned to you at first Brother.] Ryner spoke [Remember?]

Dorian nodded and looked at Andro. “I could sense it from her when I was growing. It was faint... she was guarding it well... but when mother assigned her to me she was very upset Andro.”

[Perhaps your mother was the reason she was here.] Elynth stated. [We know her father tried to have her killed many years ago. Who is to say vile Aikiro would not continue this. She was far more devious and cruel than Veldruk could ever be.]

Andro turned his head and looked at Elynth. “An interesting premise Sister.” He spoke softly. “If she was sent here to strike at mother at some preordained time?”

“Andro she wouldn’t.” Dorian defended her. “Not now!”

Andro shook his head quickly. “Oh... do not misunderstand my statement fervon... I don’t believe she could now either Dorian. But perhaps that was her original mission.” He said. “Jomann told me there was some anger within her when she was first assigned to you. He didn’t think anything of it at first... but it would explain quite a bit. She wanted to remain part of mother’s detail.” Andro shook his head slowly. “Aikiro would not bother with mother.” He said thoughtfully. “She was an arrogant upae and did not think mother anywhere in her league. No... this is someone else.”

[Yuri?] Elynth asked.

Andro looked at her. “That is what I first thought.” He answered. “But I am not so sure now. Thinking back on what we felt within her Sister... the emotions that were all new to her. Those she had embraced? She has spent months trying to fix her mistakes and she is succeeding at it.”

“You’re keeping tabs on her?” Dorian asked.

Andro nodded his head. “She knew I would. I think she even welcomed it to be honest. Her desire to show that she has changed... that her life moves on a different path is very strong in her now.”

[If not this... Yuri... then who?] Ryner asked now.

“That is a good question Ryner.” Andro spoke. “Narice has enemies. Powerful enemies. Arrarn has told me of one or two purebloods with the access and means to employ an assassin of the Venorik Elghinn. I question what their purpose would be by coming after you or our mother.”

[She has been here far longer than the recent events that happened within the Coven my bonded one.] Elynth said.

Andro nodded. “Yes. But if she is a sleeper agent... that would have been her purpose. To wait until called upon and then act.” He looked at Dorian. “Though I’m quite sure whatever her mission may have been, she is no longer going to carry it out because of what she feels for you Fervon. If she was... she would never have taken your blood.”

“I think she will tell me.” Dorian said. “I think she will tell me everything if given the time Andro.”

Andro nodded his head slowly. “You may be right Dori.” He said finally. “Regardless... her movements and actions will not be hindered in any way. She is a senior officer of the Durcunusaan and if she has forsaken her old masters then I will not take from her the trust she has earned while among us. If she has not forsaken her old masters... then she will only bury herself in time.”

“We should have Nesa’s people look beyond just the information in her file.” Dorian said. “Try to pinpoint when she got here and how. What events were occurring when she came here. Everything.”

Andro nodded in agreement. “I will let Armetus and Marci know and they will pass it on. With the influx of volunteers from EI since what happen to our elven mothers, they have more than enough experienced men and women.”

Dorian looked at him. “When are we leaving?” He asked.

“End of the week at the latest.” Andro answered him immediately. “We’ll continue with our lessons though. To be honest... it is very soothing for both Elynth and I to know that we are not alone.”

Elynth nodded her massive head. [Yes it is.] She said.

“We’re bringing an assortment of people with us.” Andro told him. “I’m going to form an entirely new unit from a combination of those who fought on Solmar with us. We meshed well together and there is no reason to think we cannot do even more.”

Dorian nodded. “Sounds reasonable.” He said.

Andro chuckled. “I’m glad you agree. I’m making you second in command.”

Dorian looked at him wide eyed. “Me?” He gasped. “Andro... that... that’s insane!” He stammered.

“Not in the least.” He told him. “Though there are quite a few who have called me that in the past.”

Andro said. “Quite a few of the senior Durcunusaan and others said you performed exceptionally.”

“I had no clue what I was doing!” Dorian exclaimed.

Andro laughed. “Gee... that’s kind of how we learned too.” He said stroking Elynth’s talon with his fingers.

Dorian and Ryner heard her chuckled softly within Mindvoice. [Oh that is so very true.] She echoed Andro’s words.

“Resumar has established himself with the Kavalians.” Andro said. “They trust him. If I pull him out now they will question our resolve. And Res won’t let me do that. Father believes they can win and so do we. Arrarn is a pilot by his very nature... and Narice needs him where he is. As Defense Minister... he can help to shape the Coven the way Narice wants to. And... worst case scenario... only he will know how to get them out alive if things go bad.” Andro told him. “Besides... I will need you to help Jomann and I to school Deion and Nara on the trip.”

“Me?” Dorian said. “I’m still learning what I can do.”

Andro nodded. “We all are Fervon.” He said. “But like me... your affinity to our Etheric connection is more refined than Jomann. He is more experienced yes... but it comes naturally to us where he has to concentrate. Deion and Nara will need that.”

“You’re going to pull them out of their Agoge?” Dorian asked.

Andro nodded. “They will learn more from us over the last few months. I will bring three senior instructors to assist in their other schooling... but I have a feeling father meant for all of us who have this gene to join with him. There is purpose to his actions and the more of us there are the better I think.”

“What do you believe is going on?” Dorian asked.

Andro shrugged. “Let’s just call it a hunch.” He replied. “There is always purpose to father’s actions though none may be seen right away. He specifically asked that you, Jomann and Deni be with me. That tells me he wants those of us with this gene because we will be needed. Our skills will be needed.” He explained. “Deion and Nara are becoming stronger by the day within the Etheric realm. I know you can feel them.”

Dorian nodded. “Yes.”

“Then they are better off with us refining those skills with us as much as possible before we get to where father and our mothers are.” Andro spoke.

Dorian looked at him. “And Sheva?”

Andro didn’t hesitate. “She is your wife and mate now Fervon.” He answered. “Where you go... she goes. Something tells me she would not let it be otherwise. Not now that she has found you.”

“And her history?” Dorian asked.

“If we are lucky... we can discover what it is before we reach father’s location.” Andro said. He shrugged his shoulders. “It doesn’t matter to me now. She has shown where her heart and mind resides by her own actions. They belong to you. As far as I am concerned... that is all the proof I need.”

“Thank you Fervon.” Dorian said.

Andro shook his head as he got to his feet. “There is no need to thank me.” He said as he pulled his brother up and draped his arm over his shoulders. “I only do what is right.” He said. “Now let’s head back... Jomann should be arriving shortly with Daio and the others and we can begin putting our people together.”

Dorian lifted his arm and put it across Andro’s shoulders as they walked and he smiled. “This ought to be very interesting.” He said.

Kameka glanced out the small window in the STRIKER AT Transport once more as they circled the island below and began to descend towards the landing pad near the center of the collection of buildings in the middle of the island. She turned back to look at Daio who was reading from the data pad in his right hand. They sat in the pair of chairs near the rear of the transport with everyone else in front of them. Daio’s left hand rested possessively on her thigh, Meka’s long tail draped across his hand extending up his arm, the tip of it gently tapping the side of his forearm in contented happiness. Kameka’s thoughts quickly went to the previous evening at his home in Sparta as she gazed at him and she felt sexual warmth and emotional happiness flush her body at what he had made her feel and experience. He had made her a delicious dinner, fussing over her endlessly until she had tasted all of the food and could eat no more. Kameka could easily sense what he wanted, see it in his eyes, but it was controlled and measured. She was frightened at first knowing that he wanted her so, but she quickly pushed that fear aside and acted as her heart and mind told her to act. Daio was no Marsin and he would never treat her that way. She practically had to force herself on him at first, so desperately did she want him as well, but once he got the message he quickly came around.

Kameka could not begin to put into words what he had made her feel and what she knew would now belong to her forever. She knew enough about Lycavorian culture from her study of dragons to know that he had scented her heavily during their lovemaking, lavishing her with licks and nibbles and kisses while she quivered in delightful abandon within his arms. He was claiming her as his own and making sure no other Lycavorian male would come near her. This knowledge alone, that a man could desire her in such a way, it caused Meka to shudder in further bliss. Kameka knew a Lycavorian did not scent any female unless their intentions were honorable and meant to be very long term, and this suited Kameka perfectly for it was something she never imagined she would ever have. How could she not want or desire a man who treated her in such a way? She did not know how much other Lycavorians would accept this, but it didn't matter to her. Kameka knew he would acknowledge their pairing officially when he spoke with her father, but he had already made sure she had no doubts about what he felt and what he intended. He was so very handsome to her... the most beautiful man she had ever seen... and he treated her like a rare flower. Their lovemaking had been very intense at times, both their instincts emerging, but it was so very gentle and filled with emotion as well. His body was far more sculpted than Marsin's form; rippling with muscle everywhere she grasped him. Each of his kisses, each of his explosions of passion into her, it stripped away the shame of the life she had endured for so long and tossed it away. Kameka had willingly done things to Daio that she would never have done to Marsin unless he forced her and the pleasure she got from watching Daio shudder under her touch was more than enough reward.

All the misery at the hands of Marsin, the rapes and beatings, the pain... Daio had washed it all away in the space of six exquisite hours. She had told him this with tear filled eyes and he had simply smiled at her and stroked her lips. His words then had mattered more to her than any actions.

“You are mine Kameka’Caleo. And I intend to show you every day for the rest of our years that you are the most desirable and delicious woman I have ever known. I will make your father see that I love you. And we will have many children to raise and teach of our love and both our cultures.”

Kameka had been laying in his arms contemplating this when the transmission came that told him to report to Cranae Island with her. She didn't understand why she was supposed to come and she held a small bit of fear inside her wondering about this. She wouldn't let it stop her though. She had found everything she had ever desired in this man and nothing would take him from her now. She let her dark eyes shift to the others who sat on the transport with them. One of them she recognized from the Battle of Solmar. The human female who had commanded the incredible armored soldiers she had seen pummel the Puma Bane troops into pulp. She wore a uniform now, decorated with many colorful ribbons, telling Kameka she was important. She recognized the two senior Kavalian officers from the meeting, aides to Pian, both wearing civilian clothes and looking very well groomed as they discussed something they were reading. Her eyes shifted shyly to where the Prime Minister of the Union sat with the older, nearly white haired man whispering quietly between themselves. She knew who Deia was... there were few who did not... but Kameka also felt she would have more hatred for her because of what had happened. Deia still used her hover chair to move around even though she was regaining her strength on a regular basis and would soon be able to leave it behind altogether. Kameka knew her injuries had been severe and painful and she wondered if the woman felt hate towards her because of her species.

[She does not.] The female voice whispered within her thoughts.

Kameka stiffened slightly, causing Daio to look up as she looked around slowly. “Meka? Are you ok?” He asked quickly.

Meka turned her eyes to him and saw the concern on his face. She smiled and nodded her head just as quickly. “Yes.” She answered warmly staring into his handsome face. “I'm fine.” She smiled and waited for Daio to turn back to his pad and then her eyes darted towards the front of the ship searching for the source of the words. She had heard them in her head and knew that was not natural.

[He can not hear me child. No one can I assure you. And no you are not going crazy. I have established this link between the two of us alone. Being the Senior Mage of Sparta, working with the Feravomir and helping to raise the Leonidas children, it has afforded me some abilities that even members of the Durcunusaan do not have.] The woman's voice echoed softly within her mind once more. It was a sweet and warm voice, reminding Meka of her mother's voice.

[Who... who are you? Where... where are you?] Meka reached out tentatively and held back the gasp of surprise at how easy it was for her to speak with her mind.

[Three rows up child. Aisle seat.]

Meka cut her dark eyes and they settled on the incredibly beautiful elven female with long blond hair and stunning blue eyes sitting beside the equally beautiful blond haired elven female. Her ears were only half the size and Kameka immediately deduced she was a child of elven and Lycavorian parents. The woman wore an almost elaborate set of robes that flowed around her form but did not hide the fact that she had an incredible figure. Her four inch high elven ears curved elegantly upward and angled towards her head, the tips poking through her strands of thick hair near the top.

[My name is Thr'won. Senior Mage to the City of Sparta and the King's family.] Thr'won answered her and Meka saw her smile. [Forgive me for intruding on your thoughts child but they have been rather... provocative... since you came onboard. Daio laid claim to you last night didn't he? He bit you?]

[How... how do you know that?] Meka gasped within her mind.

Thr'won smiled widely. [It is no different than what my mate and husband did.] She replied. [Almost five hundred years ago. Thankfully I had better control of my Mindvoice skill then. You have not had that opportunity. I've been blocking your surface thoughts from affecting everyone on the ship who could sense them. It wasn't a deep bite I hope?]

Meka shook her head slowly, almost shyly. [Just a small... just a scratch really.]

Thr'won nodded. [A scratch is all that is needed child.] She told her. [It will not change you as it does others... but that small scratch began the transformation.]

[Transformation?] Meka asked with a touch of fear in her voice.

[Kavalian you may be Kameka' Caleo... but the virus in a pureblood of our species will still affect you. If only slightly. You will find your senses will become far more attuned to the things around you as time passes. And it granted you the gift of Mindvoicing.] Thr'won told her.

[But you... you are elven.] Kameka said.

[I became part Lycavorian the day my husband and mate changed me.] Thr'won answered with a smile. [And I have embraced that part of me ever since.]

[You seem to know an awful lot about me.] Kameka said defensively.

Thr'won chuckled. [You have no need to fear me child.] She stated. [Daio is a member of the Durcunusaan and Androcles's personal team now. There is little Andro does not know of those close to him.]

[Personal team?] Kameka asked her.

Thr'won nodded from her seat. [Androcles is doing what his father did so long ago. He is building a team of his own. Some of the finest trained men and women in the Union. Men and women he trusts more than anyone else. Daio is now part of that team though he does not yet realize it. As are you.]

[Me?] Kameka gasped.

Thr'won smiled again. [You will see child. You will see.] She spoke. [I can feel your happiness Kameka' Caleo. It makes your essence burn brightly. Your scent saturates the area around you and tells everyone that you love Daio deeply. That love will grow and prosper over time. He will worship the ground you walk upon child... guard you against all harm... and give you all you have ever wanted. It is the way of Lycavorian men... you know that.]

Kameka glanced quickly at Daio and then back to her. [I cannot begin to... I do not know how to put it into words.] She said.

[Then don't try to.] Thr'won told her. [And just revel in what he makes you feel.]

[I am Kavalian. I do not want that to... to hurt him in any way.] Kameka said quickly.

[That is something you need not worry about.] Thr'won told her. [All you need do is look at how Athani is viewed by our people. She is Resumar's beloved wife and a Princess of the Union. Our people learn to quickly look beyond the outer shell of an individual and to their inner core. That is what matters to us. It is why Andro and so many others have embraced Pian and Jalersi and the others and what they want to do. You need not worry about how you will be viewed child. Not here.]

[Do you know why Daio was told to bring me?] Kameka asked her.

Thr'won gazed at her. [I do.] She said. [There is little that Andro and his family do not share with me. And I will leave it for you to discover. Just know that Androcles's wives and mates wield nearly as much influence and power as he does. And like his mothers... they know how to use it. You will see.]

[I don't understand.] Kameka told her. [What could they possibly want with me?]

[Have faith child.] Thr'won told her. [And know that I will gladly help you to learn about your new skills if you like. At least the parts your new husband and mate will probably forget to teach you. You haven't told him?]

Kameka looked down shyly. [I... I wasn't fully convinced myself until just now.]

[We will speak more on Cranae Island.] Thr'won said. [But Sadi and Carisia will help you to adjust and learn even more than I will. They have been using their Etheric abilities longer than Lu'ria and Ne'Veha. Sehri is an unknown to me right now, but that is also one of the reasons I am going to the island. I've been working with her.] Thr'won felt the transport shift and begin to descend. [Kavalian you may be child... but you are also one of us. All you need do is reach out and we will help you. Embrace the new life the Gods have granted you.]

Kameka met her eyes and smiled. [I intend to.] She answered confidently.

[Good. We will speak more soon. I will leave you to discover where your new path and life will lead you.] Thr'won said. [I don't think you will be disappointed in the least.]

“...concerned do we need to be when it comes to these Vanari Andro?” Jomann asked as they stood on the patio of the villa.

Andro turned from looking at the ocean surface and looked at him. He lifted the mug of his mother's coffee and took a long pull from it. They both wore casual clothes now, though as Andro's Durcunusaan Captain, Jomann still wore his KM14 and his Nehtes. Jomann gripped the oversized mug in his hand, letting the sweet scent of the coffee drift to his nose. Aricia's special blend of coffee had become almost exclusive to the Durcunusaan in what they drank. It was not simply because she was queen, but the different blend of beans gave the coffee an extra rich flavor that appealed to many Lycavorians and other species that enjoyed strong flavored food and drink. It was a very exclusive item across the Union and it had made the Leonidas family very wealthy when added to the many different business deals that Martin had worked over the course of the years.

The Leonidas family as a whole was worth well over five hundred billion Riyal, Martin and Androcles ranking among the wealthiest of their family at over a hundred billion Riyal in worth apiece and making them one of the wealthiest families within the Union. Aricia came next in individual wealth because of her coffee business, with Anja, Isabella, Dysea and then For'mya following in that order. Among their children, Andro was the wealthiest followed by Eliani, Resumar and then surprisingly, Zarah and Lisisa. As with every other wealthy family, millions and millions of Riyal from their wealth was poured back into society in ways to insure that there was no poverty within the Union. While most would never achieve the wealth they had... no one went without anything within the borders of the Lycavorian Union and almost everyone could live a very comfortable life.

Jomann's family now owned and ran three different large cafés and eateries within Sparta and Eden City and all of their children had a stake in the profits from this business. Jomann had invested well, like his mother, and he would never want for anything. Combined with Eliani's wealth, they rivaled Andro and Sadi in their business interests. It was very customary among Lycavorians, especially those who had remained true to many of their old customs, for mates to combined their wealth and assets when they joined their lives together and it was one part of the many reasons why poverty no longer had a hold in their society. Eliani knew of her husband's love of her mother's coffee and she had bought him a silver lined steel mug almost double the size of normal mugs for him to drink from. He had not parted with the mug since and when not fighting it was one thing everyone had grown accustomed to seeing him carrying in his hand. Jomann had been a fast riser within the ranks of the Durcunusaan well before he had met Eliani, but his union with the petite and fiery red haired daughter of Martin and Anja Leonidas had elevated him to an even higher status. To see them together was a sight indeed, with Jomann reaching nearly six foot three and Eliani barely reaching five foot five, but it was plain even to those who did not know them that they were a perfect match. Jomann and Eliani were one of the exceptionally rare cases of non-pureblood Anomes within the Union's history. Daniel and Anuk Simpson were the only other known pair of Anomes where the female was not a pureblood. Their devotion to each other was easily seen in the way they looked and acted with each other, and like her mother, Eliani Leonidas was extremely protective of her mate. Though together barely a year now, many men and women were commenting how they acted like they had been together for decades.

Jomann's life became complete in every way when he met Eliani Leonidas. He had known other females in his years, but until Eliani's maple wheat and slightly honey scent had touched his nose, nothing had even come close. Her scent alone was enough to enflame the blood in his veins, but to know she was every bit as adventurous and exciting as her mother was something of a surprise. She was stubborn and intensely independent openly, but in the privacy of their home and lives she was almost submissive to him. It took him a few weeks to accept this because he did not want her to be submissive to him, but in the end it was something that she wanted and enjoyed and even encouraged. She was also the most intensely passionate and adventurous woman he had ever known or shared a bed with. Their bond as Anomes allowed them to know exactly what the other desired and liked and wanted and this only added to the pleasure and passion they gave to each other. It also allowed them to know that they both desired Brendi Faith badly. Given her upbringing however, they were pursuing her in a manner that they hoped would eventually lead her into their arms, but also not scare her away and allow her to see that a relationship with them was also what she wanted.

Andro met his Captain's eyes and shrugged his broad shoulders. As with Dutkne, Andro held nothing back from Jomann, especially now. Their power and abilities set them apart from others and they knew what the power of their Praetorian blood could do and how it bound them together.

"To be honest Jomann... I don't have a clue." Andro said. "Dorian asked me that the other day and I still don't have an answer."

Jomann smiled. "Is there an answer?" He asked.

"Maybe not." Andro agreed. "I will not tolerate their government as a whole in the way they treat our people and I will go through with what Denali told them. If they refuse to change and start to think of us as equals rather than inferior they can go straight to hell. I'll yank all treaties and pacts they had with the Protectorate and let the chips fall where they may."

"What does Deni say?" Jomann asked.

"Sehri's father apparently has gotten himself included into the small circle of people that the OSG deals with." Andro said. "They had approached him before but he rebuffed them. It is a way for them to discover just how deeply imbedded the OSG is within the Vanari government and its agents. Coren Re Mydala is pressing from his political end while Dutkne and Deni work on discovering where each and every OSG base of operations is. They are maintaining a low key approach but Deni says he can feel the distrust coming from many of the Vanari Regents. It is misplaced because of the false information they have been given for so long." Andro looked at him. "They are pretty sure the OSG is tied to the Kavalians in some way, and part of the reason the Vanari feel the way they do, but they just don't have proof yet."

Jomann sipped his coffee. "Tied to them how?"

"The criminal element here in Alpha Quadrant anyway." Andro told him. "Deni believes the Kavalians fund them under the table through front organizations and companies. That criminal group are the ones who made contact with the OSG in the beginning and then worked the deals to take Vanari females prisoner."

"We know who they are?" Jomann asked. "Let's have UI take them out. Marci and Armetus would jump at that chance."

Andro shook his head. "We don't know the leaders." He replied. "And Deni is pretty sure that some of them at least are Lycavorian. Within the Protectorate and here in the Union. High ranking people too, otherwise they could not have remained hidden for so long. They would need the funding and the assets to cover the trail back to them."

"Nubous slavers!" Jomann hissed harshly. "I hate them!"

Andro nodded. "So do I." He added. "I always have... but like my father I think I gained a special hatred for them when I took Ne'Veha and Lu'ria as my mates. The elves have an even longer history than our people with slavery."

Jomann nodded. "Ain't that the truth?" He said softly. "Andro... how did the Kavalians know where to reach out within the Beta Quadrant. Or even how?"

Andro met his eyes. "Shiria believes, and my father agrees, that Keleru is not everything he says he is. He is Kavalian yes... but Shiria believes he may actually be more like Muton and his followers. Descendants of Pralors."

"You're serious?" Jomann gasped.

Andro nodded. "It is a thought my father has had before and once he was able to talk to Shiria for a time he believes it firmly and now so does she. It would explain a great deal... but there again... we have no proof."

"Nubou lae!" Jomann rasped out the words.

Andro grinned. "You have been hanging out with my sister too long. You are picking up her distinct ability to hit the nail on the head in a couple of words."

Jomann chuckled and thought briefly of his petite, but fiery young mate and wife. He nodded his head. "I suppose I am." He stated.

"Brendi?" Andro asked.

Jomann met his eyes. "We are... we are working on it." He said in reply.

"You can smell it all over her Jomann." Andro said.

Jomann nodded. "I know." He said. "It is sensitive however. One wrong move on our part and it could ruin what we both want so much."

Andro nodded. "I'll let you guys handle it then. Eli is tenacious, but also very smart. She'll run you ragged."

Jomann grinned. "I thoroughly enjoy when she runs me ragged." He stated proudly.

Andro nodded and took another sip of his coffee, looking out over the ocean before continuing.

"Jomann... when we reach the Beta Quadrant... make sure Sehri is covered all of the time. Assign one of Lu'ria's Drow Scouts to her as well as her normal detail. Make sure she remains hidden at all times and only acts if it is necessary." Andro blurted out. "Tenna Aihola gave her four to use as she sees fit. Lu'ria wants this... as do we all."

Jomann tilted his head slightly and looked at him. "You think they will make a play for her?" He asked.

Andro nodded his head. "The Rothryn people, a least a small but powerful portion of them, do not see our Etheric abilities as an asset. They would much rather be able to control these abilities as opposed to allowing them to grow and be nurtured. This Rothryn Academy, their equivalent to our School of the Oracles, I think they... I get the sense they treat Etheric users as..."

"What?" Jomann asked him.

"I get the sense they believe Etheric users exist for their purposes." Andro said. "They do not want them to be out there free and roaming around. They want to control them and use them for what they can do. Anyone who does not submit to their ridiculous rules is branded a traitor and hunted. Sehri has said she has heard stories of terrible things within the walls of that place and it doesn't sit well with me. That is why Sehri's father allowed her to go with this Circle of Shamans. At least initially."

"I thought these Shaman people were just the opposite." Jomann said sensing a tone in Andro's voice.

Andro nodded his head. "I believe they are." He looked at him. "Most of them anyway."

Realization came over Jomann then. "You think this Harira person has a different agenda don't you?" He said.

"Let's just say I wouldn't trust her as far as I could spit." Andro said with some venom in his voice.

"Some things she has said... her reaction to Sehri becoming my wife and mate for one. It just doesn't add up considering what she is supposed to represent. I don't believe for a moment she is what she says she is."

"I'll see to it." Jomann said.

"You pick the last members?" Andro asked him.

Jomann nodded and held out the data pad to him. "I think so. Andro... are you sure about this Kavalian Cowen? Or the female that Daio has claimed?"

Andro looked at him. "I will ask him. We'll see what he says. I probably shouldn't have done what I did and my grandmother and Tenna Deia let me know it afterwards, but it felt like the right thing to do at the time. I just went with it. Thr'won is bringing the one who will help him to adjust to being able to Mindvoice. One of her most senior instructors. Her daughter in fact. A half elven female with, as Thr'won describes, the disposition of a pit viper. She should be able to handle Cowen."

Jomann chuckled. "Wow. That's high praise coming from Thr'won."

"I know... but she's partial to her daughters and says this one is the strongest." Andro said.

"I'm guessing his skill set is probably very heavy oriented so he would fit in perfectly." Jomann said. "Hopefully it will work out."

"Only if he agrees." Andro said. "He leads his Pride now and Kavalians are serious about things like that according to Pian."

Jomann nodded. "You know... we are discovering many things about others we did not know before. Akruvians. Kavalians. We have many more similarities than we do differences in many cases."

Andro nodded and sipped his mug of coffee. “That we do.” He said. “As for the female... Kameka I believe her name is. KertaGai read the after action report from the team who went to get General Byka. She kept her DAGGER in the air for nearly twenty clicks before it crashed. And that was after she got shot in the shoulder. Sadi saw that and the first words out of her mouth were that they had found their third. Ne’Veha agreed.”

“What’s this ship they keep talking about?” Jomann asked.

Andro shrugged. “Something they worked out with Ben before coming to Solmar. I have no idea and she keeps telling me it will be a surprise. All I know is that it will be bigger than a STRIKER DT II but able to do everything it does and carry all of our dragon brothers and sisters. Yours as well.”

Jomann looked at him with wide eyes. “Mine?”

Andro chuckled at his expression. “This wasn’t my idea.” He said. “Arzoal left Syrilth in charge while she was gone and she and the rest of the elders determined that you needed a partner. You won’t be bonded to him, but he is one of the senior instructors for the Dragon Brigade and he volunteered. It will make things easier and even though you won’t be bonded, you can still pull from each other if need be.” He explained. “I thought it was a good idea as well. But Syrilth and the other Elders made the decision. He’ll be flying over from Dragon Mountain later today.”

Jomann blinked several times. “I...”

“You will have a lot in common my friend. Do not be afraid to share it with him.” Andro said.

“What do you mean?” Jomann asked.

Andro met his gaze. “Alba Tau.” Andro said softly. “His... his bonded brother was killed on Alba Tau. He was severely wounded. Took nearly a year before he could fly again. He hasn’t allowed anyone to fly on him since that day. You share a common bond and that is what you will need to connect with. Syrilth told me he asked for this... he already knows who you are and he says he is ready to do more.”

Jomann nodded his head slowly. “Then we will... we will work things out.” He said.

Andro smiled and slapped his shoulder. “Personally I think it is Syrilth’s way of keeping tabs on the Talon Guardians. Make sure we don’t do something stupid.”

Jomann blinked and looked at him. “Why does that sound like something she would do?” He said with a smile. “Finally... some back up!”

Andro laughed. “Hey... we aren’t that bad. Are we?” He asked.

Jomann grinned. “I will refrain from answering that question for fear it may incriminate me. And anger my mate.” He answered as they turned and headed into the villa.

“Hey... that’s not fair!” Andro said as he followed.

CLASS M MOON UNION DESIGNATION AT459

It was something Kalis Leonidas would speak of proudly to his grandchildren he knew, if that day ever came. As he clutched Serale to his body protectively, these thoughts were what flashed through his mind at what he witnessed and it filled him with hope and pride unlike ever before.

It was the single most devastating show of power Kalis had ever seen in his life. Far beyond anything his father had ever been able to achieve. He watched as if it happened in slow motion as his uncle’s body launched through the air, exploding with a light blue shimmering shield, and a single leap took him the hundred plus meters from where he had been to the first Svorag. He watched as his uncle, with exacting precision, used his two hundred and thirty-eight pounds of muscle and bone to drive his booted feet into the chest of the stunned Svorag and drive him into the hard ground. Kalis thought for sure he could hear the Svorag’s chest crunch and shatter under the terrific force of his uncle’s momentum and power. He then watched as his uncle leaped nimbly from the Svorag’s unmoving form and jerk his right hand outward. The Nehtes extended instantly to its full near eight foot length and then his uncle was launching that spear through the air like a bullet almost in the same motion. Kalis’s eyes were wide as the spear tip impaled one Svorag through the chest, lifting him up into the air with the energy of the throw and then dropping him back to the ground nearly six meters from where the spear had struck him. In a single, seamless motion, Martin Leonidas switched the tubular like object to his right hand and with a small flash of light the sword blade extended from Flatspace and his Shi Viska appeared on his opposite arm. Then the killing truly began.

It was unlike anything any of them had seen really, with the exception of Yuriko of course. Tony and T'lolt had spread to the sides, their chain cannons chopping out lethal 20mm kinetic projectiles at a frightening rate, mowing down Svorag as well as any small tress and vegetation that happened to be in the way. In the hands of the two strongest members of his uncle's team, the guns were like toys as the Master Chief and T'lolt swung them back and forth as if they were using normal rifles. Each of them had a look of severe concentration on their faces as they took in all around them and did not discriminate against the Svorag they were killing.

Koguth watched with stunned eyes as Danny and Julie led Kenny and Pablo in their small wedge, wading right into the thick of it behind Martin and Murano. Their P190A5s, much shorter versions of the normal Spartan weapons than Koguth had seen before, were precise in their accuracy and deadliness. No matter where they fired, Svorag fell with massive wounds from the obviously explosive tipped caseless rounds. He watched as the ebony skinned vampire female flashed out with dual blades so common to vampire commandos and opened many a Svorag throat to the air, her A5 dangling from quick release straps as they moved.

Ultimately however, it was the two figures in the center of it all they drew everyone's attention.

Martin and Murano stood back to back, their Etheric shields shimmering in the sunlight as they carved themselves a path through the Svorag troops. Martin spun around, using his Shi Viska as a battering ram, smashing it into the chest of a Svorag and sending him flying away screeching in agony from his now crushed breastbone. He would land several meters away and scream until Danny put two rounds through his skull and silenced him forever. As they all watched, Martin twisted his arm and leveled his Shi Viska at a group of Svorag that were forming to his right. The shield leaped from his arm, the razor like blades extending from the edges, and two of the three Svorag had their heads removed from their bodies before they were able to take three steps, the Shi Viska speeding off seemingly with a mind of its own. As their headless corpses fell and the third Svorag watched in horror, Martin stepped into the powerful swing of his sword and cleaved the Svorag's upper body nearly in two. He lifted his now free hand at the end of the swing and sent forth a massive wave of Etheric energy towards two other Svorag who were regaining their senses. They were caught directly in the path of the crushing wave and each had nearly every bone in their bodies shattered instantly as they were flung through the air like dolls. Neither would live more than a few seconds longer. As soon as he released that wave, Martin whirled, ignoring the two for he knew they were dead. His hand came up again and he sent three Etheric diamond shaped projectiles sizzling out from his hand. Each Etheric projectile struck another Svorag in his upper body, blowing massive holes through his chest cavity and spraying blood and bone matter out his back as his body was tossed backward from the kinetic force. As he released those Etheric diamonds he heard the horrible scream and whirled to see the single Svorag leaping through the air at him. He was about to swing his sword to disembowel the Svorag when the creature's body was snatched from the air by some unseen hand and sent hurtling into the large tree off to the side. The sound of his bones snapping was very audible even over the sounds of weapons fire. Martin's head snapped around and he saw Murano smile at him.

"I had him!" Martin screamed.

Murano roared out his own laughter now, fully engulfed in feelings of exhilaration he had not felt in more millennia than he cared to recall. He relished in the emotions flowing through him now, for he had missed them for so long. Feeling Martin beside him, a fellow Praetorian and the descendant of the man Murano had worshiped, it was nearly overwhelming. It felt like it had back then, wading into battle beside Sumar and their Praetorian brothers. Murano never dreamed he would be able to feel that again, but now it flowed through him as it had back then. He felt alive again, recharged and vigorous, for the first time in nearly forty thousand years.

"No doubt!" Murano shouted back as his Saber Staff whipped around and he removed the head of a Svorag who was trying to sneak up on him. "Why should I let you have all the fun?" He barked out.

Martin's eyes were wide. "And they call me crazy!" He screamed as he spun back around just as his Shi Viska appeared from the side and alighted on his arm once more. He twisted in to a graceful spin, his arm extended outward and released the Shi Viska once more as if he was throwing a discus. The shield leaped forth and shot off into the distance once more with blinding speed, curving through the air and cutting a swath of death in its wake.

“They keep coming from the shadows!” Murano screamed.

Martin turned and caught three of them in the grips of an Etheric field, lifting their bodies into the air almost five meters and then bringing his hand down with a jerk. The Svorag were thrust downward to smash into the ground with horrific force, driven by Martin’s devastating Etheric power. None of them moved after that.

“Time to light the shadows up then!” Martin snarled back. He turned his head toward the tree line that was opposite the entrance of the cave. Torma my brother! Now! I need some light!

Don’t understand why he didn’t allow me to come with them. Garan asked as he sat easily in the saddle on Aurith’s back. Does he not trust me even still?

He had flat out refused to ride Torma because he was the Bonded Brother of a Praetorian and in Garan’s eyes untouchable. Torma thought this humorous and Aurith chuckled with her father as she butted Garan in the shoulder and ushered him onto her back. They knew right where they were going and had flown here in under five minutes, Garan thoroughly enjoying his first ride on the back of a dragon. It was the most amazing thing he had ever experienced and secretly he hoped it would happen again in the future.

Aurith rested now on the ground beside her father, hidden in the thick brush on the down slope of the ridge three hundred meters across from the base of the mountain where Yuriko’s cave center was. The terrain provided them excellent concealment even for their size and one would have to walk right up upon them to even know they were there even with Garan in her saddle. Their keen eyesight would keep anyone from getting too close without them knowing it. Torma turned his head to the side and looked at Garan on his daughter’s back.

Is that what you think Garan? Torma asked him.

Garan turned and looked at those golden colored eyes. I do not know what to think. He answered honestly.

How is it that you converse with Dragonkind so easily Garan of the Pralor people? Torma asked.

Garan paused for a moment and then shrugged his broad shoulders. I... I have always been able to. He answered. I have never feared your kind Torma... and I have had to work with many Dragonkind when arranging trips or meetings for Chief Elder Delnash and Elder Mother Teniri. We have always been able to communicate and work together easily.

You do not view us differently? Aurith asked now turning her head on her long neck.

Differently? In what way Aurith? Garan asked confused.

As Lorendo sees us. Torma told him. Tools to be used.

Garan’s eyes grew wide. By the souls of those within the Rift of Time no! He hissed. Your kind... Dragonkind... you are revered by many of our people Torma. Your actions saved millions of my people when we first came together. When the Scourge chased us from the last planet we thought would be our new home. Many of Dragonkind fell beside my people in battle and defending them. I could never look upon you in such a way. My parents... they told Kasdan and I stories of those few days. They have always adored your kind. As millions of my people do.

Then you should know this... Torma said. If Martin Leonidas did not trust you Garan... you would not be here among us. Nor your brother Kasdan. We left your other two men to help For'mya, Endith and Tina guard the STRIKER. They are trusted as well because you chose them. You wonder why he did not take you on the assault.

Garan nodded. Yes... I suppose.

The men and women with Martin... with the single exception of your brother because of his unique skills and knowledge... they have trained and fought beside Martin since they were only children. They know what each other will do in every situation, for it is the same thing they would do. Torma explained. It is not because he does not trust you Garan, just the opposite in fact.

But why leave me and take Kasdan? Garan asked.

King Martin leaves no one in command that he does not trust with his own life. Aurith picked it up. You are a soldier... your brother is not. Your men are soldiers and they follow you. He trusts no one with the lives of his Queens Garan, especially not my Bonded Sister after what took place recently. That he relies on you and your men to protect her... protect them... it is his way of showing you that your honor and trust is beyond reproach.

Torma nodded his massive head. My daughter speaks wisely for one who never had much use for her studies when she was younger. Torma said with a laugh.

Father! Aurith complained.

She is right Garan. You are here with us... your men help to protect one of his Queens. Torma said. To Martin Leonidas there is no greater a show of respect and honor than that. When he calls for us... we will answer and then you will fight beside him and Murano. Have patience my friend... do not be so quick to rush into battle. He took your brother because contrary to what everyone believes, Martin is not a war monger and he will often assess a situation most carefully before acting.

These monsters have taken many Pralor people through the years Torma. Garan said. Too many to count.

Torma nodded as his head snapped around and looked back up towards the edge of the ridge at the sounds of gunfire. And when we are done... this group will take no more. We have destroyed their ship and now we will finish those who escaped to come here.

I thought you said he likes to assess the situation first? Garan asked. They had to have just arrived at the cave!

Torma felt his Bonded Brother within him and all that was happening. He turned to look at Garan. He did assess the situation. He did not need your brother to tell him all of these vile creatures need to be exterminated.

Garan grunted with satisfaction and nodded. A fine assessment. He spoke. One I would have made too.

Torma my brother! Now! I need some light! Martin's voice reached them easily within Mindvoice and Garan shuddered with the power and clarity of the Etheric resonance of Martin Leonidas.

Torma rose to his talons as did Aurith. Now... now we do battle! He barked. Daughter... break to the right just as we discussed! Go now!

Garan could only hang onto the saddle horn as Aurith bolted from her position with a speed like nothing he had seen from Dragonkind before. Out of the corner of his eye he saw Torma's massive form also explode forward in what seemed like the blink of an eye, his hugely muscular body simply bowling over smaller trees that stood between him and his Bonded Brother.

Prepare yourself Garan! We are not kind in battle! Aurith shouted just before she rammed through the last small section of thick brush into the clearing where the battle raged. With a roar of anger Aurith reared back her head and cut loose with a stream of superheated breath directly into a small group of Svorag that had been lying in wait on the fringes of the battle. They turned to see they massive beast to the side and their eyes went wide. That is how they died. Garan's P130A4 snapped to his shoulder instinctively and as Aurith cooked the Svorag alive he began to pick his shots easily and Svorag began to fall.

Murano heard the near deafening roar and felt the shuddering of the ground and whirled just as Torma's massive formed burst between two thick trees nearly ten foot tall. His front right paw came crashing down, his talons impaling two Svorag clean through their torsos as he snapped his head to the side and sent a stream of superheated breath tearing across a wide expanse of terrain in front of him.

Left brother! Martin shouted within Mindvoice. Burn it all!

Torma didn't let up and as Murano and others watched, it almost seemed as if his breath got even hotter. Plants and small trees were charred to ashes instantly when that stream of nearly four thousand degree heat passed over it. Larger trees began to burn from the base up, flames licking upward even further. Murano turned to see Aurith doing the same, Garan upon her back securely in the saddle and his P190A4 slinging out death in every direction as he twisted this way and that, firing the entire time. Never had he seen such a thing in his life and Murano could only shake his head in awe.

"May the spirits within the Rift preserve me?" He spoke softly.

Murano was just beginning to realize the connection and power being bonded to a dragon carried as he witnessed Martin leap to within five meters of Torma's massive form and kill two Svorag who were rising to fire their primitive weapons at the colossal monster killing their kind. He watched as Martin dispatched those Svorag and then proceeded to leap onto Torma's back and launch his Shi Viska once more. They worked seamlessly without communication; just as Martin and his team did Murano took note. In many ways... it was as if he was watching Sumar in battle all over again and it filled him with pride of his own. Martin had told him that Androcles and his Bonded Sister were even more powerful than their fathers in some ways because of how their bond developed and Murano looked forward to finally meeting him and seeing what he could do. Hope filled Murano for the first time in millennia as he stood there among the blood and sounds of battle. Hope for the future and continued existence of his people and every other peaceful sentient species.

The snapping sound caused his head to cut around and he saw the three Svorag frozen in place off to his right. They had been attempting to sneak up on him and they had almost succeeded. Murano allowed a small smile to split his lips. Yes... things were beginning to fill with hope.

"Business first Murano." He spoke to himself and lifted his hand toward the Svorag as Danny's voice echoed in his ear implant.

"Stragglers are scattering fervon!" Danny's voice barked through the implant Murano now wore along with everyone else.

Murano turned and saw Martin spin around in the saddle, his left arm lifting almost as an afterthought to collect his Shi Viska as it zipped in from the side and landed on his left forearm. In an instant it flashed and vanished back into Flatspace.

"Jules... Kenny... Pablo! Pursue for half a klick! Kill as many as you can catch! Go!" Martin snapped out the order and watched as Julie turned and blurred in motion to go deeper into the timber. Kenny and Pablo instantly shifted into their wolf forms and followed. It was a tactic the three of them had refined for years when they were younger and it was why they were the most skilled scouts within Martin's team. Kenny and Pablo were also devastated when they had lost Julie all those years ago, and then just as elated when she came back to them. Given that her memories were intact up until the point they had returned to Earth so long ago, it was like she had never left them and Kenny and Pablo reveled in the feelings of that camaraderie once more.

"Danny! Back to the cave! T'lolt... Master Chief... flanking fields of fire on the edges!" Martin snapped out the orders, the transmitter implanted into his jaw line easily carrying the orders over their receivers. "If they are scattering it means there are more of them on this planet than we first thought! They'll be back and I want to be gone!"

"Moving!" Tony's voice barked in reply.

"As am I." T'lolt spoke as well and both of the huge men turned and began to move.

"Fervon... get Garan off Aurith's back!" Martin barked turning to look at Danny twenty meters away. "He's having too much fun! Then give me a recon of the area around the cave! One klick out and hold fervon! I'm gonna have For'mya bring the STRIKER to us!"

"We're on it!" Danny answered and broke into a sprint moving with the grace and speed of his wolf nature and making his way to where he saw Aurith swing her clubbed Heavyhorn tail to the side and crush two Svorag too stupid to know better.

Murano gripped his Saber Staff almost casually as he turned to look around them just as Torma's massive form moved up to him with Martin in the saddle. "There were far more than we first thought Martin." He spoke staring off into the timber.

Martin nodded as he looked around from the saddle. "For'mya took out their ship... but they must have got more groundside before that happen. Or the transports they used carried more than we thought."

"They are not like us!" Murano spoke turning to look up at him. "They will have packed as many as possible into the ships! It is something we have seen before. Comfort means nothing to them. They will have left only a skeleton crew on the frigate!"

Martin glanced at him. "You could have told me that before!" He barked.

"You did not ask!" Murano asked.

"Sibfla!" Martin snarled watching as Aurith's wing snapped forward and caught two Svorag square in the chest and sent their bodies hurtling through the air for almost fifty meters.

"We need to destroy their transports!" Murano snapped up at him. "Keep them from leaving the surface!"

"Working on it!" Martin answered.

Torma's head turned on his long neck to look at Martin. They are running very fast! He declared with an almost humorous tone.

Back to Yuriko! It's time to go! Martin ordered him turning to look at Aurith. Aurith! Fall back to Yuriko's position! They are running so they can bring more of their friends!

Martin saw Aurith turn to look at him and nod her huge head before shifting her muscular body and heading for the base of the small mountain cave. They had drawn the vicious battle away from Yuriko and the others on purpose and now they were some two hundred meters away from them. Martin turned back and looked at Murano, holding out his hand. "Let's go."

"Martin... we must purge this pestilence!" Murano shouted as he settled into the saddle behind him and Torma began to sprint through the timber and brush back towards Yuriko. "We can't let them leave this moon!"

"I know!" Martin snapped in reply. "I said I'm working on it!" Martin tapped his jaw. "Kinsoaurgai?"

"We are here Martin my love! We have been monitoring." For'mya's voice answered instantly over the COM.

"Contact OMEN THREE For'mya!" Martin told her. "They are equipped with three Fusion Core Hammerhead nukes! Hundred kiloton yield! Have them prep those missiles, triangulate the position of the Svorag transports using Yuriko's cave as ground zero and glass this entire area For'mya! We have to keep them from leaving the moon!"

"Will that be enough?" For'mya asked without hesitation.

"Initial blast radius on the Hammerheads is ten kilometers." Martin spoke calmly to her even as they approached Yuriko's position and those with her began to rise to their feet and stare at him. "Another twenty kilometers out is still within the instant kill zone because of heat and fire! Nothing will survive within fifty kilometer of her cave!"

"Tina is contacting them now! Get back here quick Martin! It will not take them long!" For'mya said. "And we need to get gone! I don't envy a radioactive tan!"

"Tell me about it." Martin chuckled. "That's why I want you to come to us! Lift off, mark my location and come join the party. Area is big enough to land and we need to move fast." Martin said.

"Powering engines!" For'mya answered. "We'll be there in four minutes!"

Martin watched as Yuriko approached with a wide smile on her face and he dropped quickly to the ground from the saddle. Yuriko may have been officially adopted, but that had only been done for legal purposes. Martin didn't need a document to know she was his daughter. He had felt that way about her so long ago and those feelings had come rushing back when they came back together on Earth. As he opened his arms, Yuriko folded herself into them and he hugged her tightly inhaling deeply of the scent of her hair and body. A pureblood vampire she may have been, but Yuriko was a Leonidas without question. The oldest of his children by far, and behind only Andro and his mates, the one who knew him better than most. Yuriko was just as capable in her own right as Androcles and the two of them thought along the same lines and that is why they were the most feared of all the Leonidas children.

Martin squeezed her tightly, his cheek against her long black hair and he chuckled softly. "Why does it seem I'm always bailing you and your brother out of thee situations?" He muttered to her. He felt Yuriko laugh within his embrace and she pulled back from him.

"Andro and I are too much like you that is why!" She declared holding his arms tightly as she looked into his face with love and adoration.

"That will be the death of me you know." He stated.

Yuriko smiled brightly. "Not likely Ilharn." She said. "Not likely." (Father in vampire language)

"Your mother is bringing the ship here." Martin said. "I'm using the Hammerheads on OMEN THREE."

Yuriko nodded. "I suspected you would." She answered. Yuriko turned as Koguth moved up behind her. "Ilharn... this is General Koguth'Juturi. He..."

"Yes... I know who he is." Martin spoke sternly seeing the look of surprise on Koguth's face. He looked at Koguth... Iama having shared what had happened in her past with him and all of Fedor's family members now that she was his beloved wife and mate.

Koguth took an involuntary step back at the tone of voice of the Lycavorian King and looked at Yuriko quickly. Yuriko saw this and squeezed his arm. "Papa... I think there may be some misinformation. What Iama thinks happened is not accurate. He..." Martin blinked at her confused and was about to respond when he caught the scent and cut his eyes. Yuriko saw instantly where his eyes went and she stopped. "We'll talk later Ilharn. I'll get everyone ready to move." She said quickly pulling Koguth with her. "Come General."

Martin reached up slowly and with his hands on either side he removed his Spartan helm as he focused on the two figures to his right. He zeroed in and moved towards them without any hesitation.

Kalis stood there unable to move even if he wanted to. Serale clung to him, her arms around his waist tightly as the battle had been drawn away from them and they watched. Fear gripped Kalis now as his uncle moved up to stand in front of him. Serale was braver than him as she stared up into the face of the Lycavorian king ready to defend the man she loved. Kalis dropped his eyes to the ground, unable to meet those deep brown orbs of his uncle. He had seen them when they were wolf eyes, yellow and green in color and gazing upon him as something so insignificant it was laughable. He could feel the staggering power of his uncle's aura pouring outward, moving all around him, surrounding him and swirling all over the immediate area. Everything he had done in these last weeks, all of it had been leading up to this one moment and for the first time in his life Kalis was humbled and fearful. Afraid he would not be accepted after what he had done. Afraid that the future he had hoped to grab on to would come crashing down around him. That it was all a lie and...

"Can you not look at me Mandri?" Martin spoke softly.

"I... I am... I am not worthy." Kalis finally stammered.

Martin reached up and gripped the back of Kalis's head, watching as his face came up slowly to look at him with moist, dark blue wolf eyes. He had not shifted back just yet, and his fangs were still prominent as were his eyes. He saw his uncle smile at him warmly when he saw those eyes and fangs.

"Worthy?" Martin spoke to him as he moved even closer. Serale released Kalis as she watched, feeling him tense slightly as her arms left his waist but he didn't flinch away. "Why would you not be worthy Mandri?"

"Uncle Martin... I..." Kalis began to rasp out the words when Martin lean closer and inhaled deeply, drawing Kalis's scent into his lungs and letting it filter through him. Kalis stopped and remained still as Martin drew back and looked at him. His own eyes changed then and his fangs extended once more. Kalis felt a ripple of fear at the sight of those fangs but his uncle smiled.

"Do you know what I smell Kalis?" He spoke calmly. "I smell the blood of a Leonidas within your veins! I smell the strength to recognize your own faults and the lies you have been told and to see them for what they are. I smell a man who would die protecting what he has come to love!" Martin spoke as he gazed upon Serale to the side, her green eyes tearing up as she watched. He looked back to Kalis. "I smell a man who had the strength and conviction to alter the course of his life and embrace what had been denied him for too long!"

Kalis felt the tears roll down his cheeks but he didn't care about this show of weakness for everything he wanted... everything he had hoped for... it was standing right in front of him. "I must... I must atone for my sins Uncle!" He stammered softly. "I must..."

Martin reached up with his other hand and put it on the opposite side of Kalis's face. "You will not atone or be accountable for the sins of a dead man." He spoke warmly. "The man you were died many weeks ago. The day you made the choice to follow the blood within your veins is the day you were born Kalis Leonidas."

Kalis looked at him with wide teary eyes, as if hearing that name for the very first time. The awe he felt coursing through him was nearly a physical thing and he reached up to grip his uncle's arms, squeezing those thick forearms as hard as he could. "Uncle... Uncle I... my father will..."

Martin shook his head quickly. "He is not your father any longer Kalis." He said. "A father would never do to you what he has done. Twisted you... shamed you. No... he has no right to carry the name of father to you. I will be the father you should have had. I will be the father he should have been... just as I am to your brother Karun. I will show you what he should have shown you. I will be the father he should have been. Your old life dies here on this stinking rock Kalis my boy. Now you will know the emotion and the meaning of the blood that flows within you. I will teach you... your family will teach you." Martin said with a smile as his own eyes became moist.

Kalis was unable to react as Martin slowly pulled him into the embrace and his powerful arms and hands wrapped around him. Arms and hands that had come so very close to ending his existence that day not so long ago. Arms and hands that now filled him with emotions he had never been allowed to experience. Emotions that racked his body and caused him to shudder in relief and joy. Emotions he had been denied for far too long. Kalis's eyes closed and slowly his arms embraced his uncle. His uncle's mint scent filled his nose and provided him a measure of peace that Kalis had ever known. And then the floodgates opened and twenty-five years of emotions that had been denied came rushing forth like a spring of pure mountain water and Kalis crushed his uncle in that embrace. He buried his face in Martin's shoulder as his body was wracked with sobs, his hands clenching and unclenching trying to grip the body armor that his uncle wore. His uncle responded, pulling him tighter and his hand coming up and holding the back of his head tightly. Serale watched with tears in her eyes and her hands over her mouth. She had never expected such a show of emotion from the Lycavorian King and suddenly she understood why so many billions upon billions of men and women across the breadth of the Union would die without hesitation for this man. She could almost see the doubt and trepidation leave Kalis's body as his uncle embraced him.

Martin pulled Kalis back as she watched as he gripped his head, staring at him with those eyes and fangs extended. Kalis didn't shy away this time and he held his uncle's arms as he met that gaze, his own eyes and fangs still exposed.

"Embrace it all Kalis!" Martin hissed at him. "Never doubt! Never regret! You have done what so few are ever able to do my boy! Embrace it and never let it go! Never fear the unknown Kalis. From this day forth... you are a Leonidas and we do not fear the unknown! We embrace it!"

"I will... I will never dishonor you uncle!" Kalis choked out the words.

Martin shook his head quickly. "Not me Kalis. The blood within you. Never dishonor your blood. Your grandfather sings within me you know... he is... he is so happy. And so am I."

It was as if the weight of a planet lifted from Kalis and his face brightened as he stared at Martin. Martin felt the light within him finally burn away all the darkness that had resided in this young man, darkness put there by his foul brother. It was another crime that his brother would pay for Martin thought to himself.

"Uncle... Uncle Martin this is..." Kalis turned quickly and took Serale's hands gently within his. She didn't hesitate in the least and she stepped back close to him, wrapping her arms around Kalis's waist with a brilliant smile. "This is Serale." Kalis spoke wrapping his arms around her petite frame. "I wish... she is my life now uncle Martin. I wish to make her my wife and mate."

Martin looked at her beaming face and grinned. "I take it from your scent and the look on your face you want this as well." He said with some humor.

"So... so very much King Leonidas." Serale stuttered quickly.

Martin shook his head. "No member of my family calls me that Serale Leonidas." He said seeing her eyes go wide. "I suggest you make it official when we get back to the ARC ROYAL."

Serale looked at Kalis's face with adoring eyes. "I will insure that he does... Martin." She said with brimming confidence in her voice and her own feelings.

Martin grinned again at her poise. "Oh... I like her." He said. "Anja is going to love you as well." He turned back to Kalis. "We can... we can continue this later. Right now... we need to vacate this rotten place. I'm going to burn it clean and make sure these Svorag here never hurt anyone again. Prepare yourself Mandri. A new world has opened for you... and it's time to step through that door and leave whatever is left of the past behind you."

Kalis took a deep breath and nodded his head as he hugged Serale to him tighter. "I... I am ready Uncle Martin. I have been ready for a very long time."

Martin look up as the STRIKER came roaring over the top of the mountain and it spun gracefully as it began to land in the clearing. Martin nodded and turned to look at him. "Good." He said. "Welcome Mandri... welcome to the Leonidas family."

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

MARTIN'S STRIKER DT MARK II

SIX HOURS FROM RENDEZVOUSING WITH ARC ROYAL

Though it was one of the new STRIKER DT Mark IIs, the inside of the ship was still packed pretty tightly with the addition of half the Kavalian crew. Yuriko returning to OMEN THREE with her people and half the Kavalians had freed up some space and now everyone was able to stretch out on what benches and seats there were. Many even chose to sit on the floor and catch the sleep they had not had in several days since their escape from the Kavalian fleet. Now both ships were moving under Shroud after making two short LSD jumps to move quickly out of the area. Kalis was amazed at how easily he was accepted by those in his Uncle's team, their banter with him alluding to the fact that they respected what he had done. They were all sitting around the opening into the Dragon pen where Torma and Aurith sat side by side. Serale rested comfortably between Kalis's legs as if it was the most natural thing in the world and she absently stroked his forearm as they listened to them trading jabs back and forth now that the rush of the combat high had worn off.

"... Make sure I tell Anuk and Nayeca all about how we found their big, bad Spartan mate stuffed in the cargo hold of the STRIKER because he felt left out." Julie was speaking with a large smile as she held a canteen of water.

"I didn't feel left out!" Dan protested. "You guys needed me!"

"Correct me if I am wrong Simpson..." Kenny spoke with his customary smile. "The Skipper did order you to remain behind."

"You should have seen the look on your face when Master Chief opened the cargo hatch door!" Pablo said with a wide grin. "You looked like we had caught you stroking..." He stopped his comment before finishing and let his eyes dart to Serale as he turned red under his tan. "Ah... never mind."

Serale burst out laughing and the others quickly followed at the look on Pablo's face and then on Danny's face. Martin shook his head in mock disgust. "Bunch of reckless, over eager kids is what you all are." He stated. "No wonder I spend half my time babysitting you."

"So... does that mean you are gonna ground him Skipper?" Kenny asked with that mile wide grin.

Martin nodded. "Damn right I am." Martin exclaimed loudly. "He disobeyed my orders to remain behind. We can't have that kind of action without consequences."

"Hey! I saved your ass out there!" Danny protested once more... but did so much more weakly than before.

"We were handling it just fine Simpson you ass!" Julie spat. "All you did is provide a bigger target for the bad guys and make it easier for us."

"See!" Danny barked. "I told you I helped!"

"General Simpson..." Martin spoke. "I sentence you to three solid days making sure that your mates know how much you have missed them. You were supposed to meet them on the ARC ROYAL and now they'll be pissed at me because you weren't there."

Danny chuckled and shook his head before looking at Martin. "Hell... you get blamed for everything anyway fervon. How is that any different than now?"

"I don't need you adding to my own screw ups and then leaving me to explain it." Martin said with a smile. "Three days. No work. And if I discover you don't comply with that... then I will turn your discipline over to Anuk and Nayeca."

Danny looked at him with a twinkle in his dark brown eyes. "That sounds promising." He said.

Julie shook her head. "Please... we've seen you buck ass naked Danny." Julie spat. "You aren't all that." This comment caused all of them to burst out laughing heartily, even T'lolt could not contain the laughter this statement caused and he too joined in the after action cool down period that always occurred between warriors.

Martin shook his head slowly reveling in the feelings of having them around and then he looked at Kalis and Serale. Their faces were bright and happy with a new found future together that both of them were eagerly waiting to begin. Martin leaned over towards them and saw their eyes shift to him.

"Serale... I'm going to borrow Kalis for a little while if you don't mind." Martin said. "There are some things we need to talk about."

Kalis leaned close to her and nuzzled her cheek, his hand coming up to stroke her chin as he kissed her. "I will be back shortly." He said.

Serale nodded her head, the smile never leaving her face as she watched Kalis get to his feet. She was still in somewhat of a state of shock considering she had never once thought she would ever meet the King of the Lycavorian Union. Nor did she expect the many statements about the Royal family being no different than normal families to hold any weight. Yet here she was, the King of the Lycavorian Union not a few feet away and acting as no King she had ever seen or read about in history. And doing so with a group of men and women who treated him no different than they treated each other. Serale's green eyes glowed in happiness as she looked up at Kalis for this was going to be her life going into the future and that made her giddy. Kalis squeezed her hand gently and then turned to look at his uncle as Martin turned and headed for the cockpit. Kalis followed without hesitation and watched as his uncle motioned to where Mata sat alone along the bulkhead. The Kavalian quickly got to his feet and moved to follow them. Serale glanced quickly to where her mother sat on one of the couches in the STRIKER. Her legs were drawn up under her and she was tucked very intimately against Nedoli's side, her head on his chest and her eyes closed as she slept peacefully for probably the first time in weeks. And Serale knew her mother's peace now was because of Nedoli. That much Serale knew without question. Knowing that her mother, as well as herself, had found love out of the horror they had endured showed Serale that hope was never dead. It just came in many different forms, some of which you could not understand right away.

Martin took the four stairs into the cockpit in one step and before Kalis thought about it he had followed and moved into the spacious cockpit. He came to an abrupt halt when he saw For'mya standing and leaning against the human woman's chair and holding a large mug of coffee in her hands. Kalis suddenly found himself wanting to be anywhere but here. He was sure his uncle didn't think of how he would react, but given how he had changed in the recent weeks, Kalis could feel nothing but shame for how his father had abused this woman and forced himself upon her. She had every right to hate him for his part in her imprisonment and his subsequent actions on Hadaria and Kalis did not know what to expect. He watched as his uncle moved right up to her and even with the coffee in her hands, she was able to fold her lithe form against his as they shared a warm and emotion filled kiss. Her dark brown eyes cut to him when they parted and she handed the mug to Martin as she turned to face him. Kalis lowered his eyes, unable to face her, but he would not back down from her fury for his part in what was done to her.

For'mya stepped up to Kalis as Martin took a sip of the coffee and saw that he would not meet her gaze. She could sense the embarrassment and ignominy filling him and radiating from his pores. His wolf aura trembled with regret and a small amount of fear, but she could also detect the overwhelming sense of pride and accomplishment within him. It was part of her 'gift' to be able to sense strong emotions and For'mya could feel them easily from Kalis. She could sense the unequivocal love for the young Hadarian female and how she was now the center of his life. Given what For'mya now knew, what Martin had allowed her to see within his many memories, and knowing firsthand what a monster Pusintin was, For'mya could not bring herself to feel anger or hate towards Kalis for what had happened. No matter what, he had been used by his father in a vile way, just as she had been, and he had experienced it for far longer than she had. For'mya reached out and placed her hand on his cheek and let his aura swirl around her, focused and pure now, just like one of their sons. By instinct For'mya allowed her own wolf aura to cascade out, the same motherly sensations and emotions that filled her aura whenever she was around her children.

"Look at me Kalis." She spoke softly.

Kalis shook his head slowly. "I am... I am too ashamed." He spoke in a soft, trembling but completely honest voice. "After what I..."

For'mya reached up with her other hand and pulled his face up. Like her own sons with Martin, he was taller than her, but his eyes told her just how much awe he held her in. It was the same look they gave to her and not one she was altogether comfortable with.

"You bear no shame or responsibility for the actions of your father Kalis." For'mya told him. "None whatsoever."

"I... I allowed him to do the things he did!" Kalis began to complain. "I allowed him to dishonor you and..."

"Kalis..." For'mya said softly with a warm smile. "I held no malice for you then and I certainly hold none for you now. Not after knowing what you have endured your entire life and then what you have accomplished in these last weeks. You allowed him to do nothing because if you had tried to stop it you would be dead. I do not blame you in any way.”

“You should.” He told her.

For'mya shook her head. “If there is anything I have learned after all these years of being a Leonidas, it is that we do not hold hate within us for mistakes or actions that were never in our control to begin with.” She told him. “Your father and your father alone bear the responsibility for what he did.” For'mya dropped her hands to his and took them in her grasp. “You have... you have evolved far more than I ever had hope for you.” She told him honestly. “That you have cast aside the man you were and embraced the blood within you says all I need to know. All your brother and sister will need to know.”

Kalis met her gaze now and in his eyes For'mya saw concern but also want. “Will... will they hate me?” He asked softly.

For'mya smiled again and shook her head. “No Kalis.” She said without hesitation. “They will be very curious no doubt, you are their brother after all, but they will not hate you. When they discover what you have endured and tolerated for most of your life and then seeing how you were able to break those chains... I think you will find them to be very happy to know that you will be there for them.”

Kalis glanced at the deck quickly and exhaled. “I can only hope my mother; Karun and Nikkei feel the same way one day.”

For'mya squeezed his hands tightly. “I think you might be very surprised.” She told him. “But now... now I want you to let go of whatever guilt you think you need to bear. You have walked through the door into a new life and that is what you should be concentrating on.”

Kalis took a deep breath and squeezed her hands tightly. “I will. You... you are my Tenna For'mya.” He said proudly. “I will never disrespect any of my Aunts. I would be a poor excuse for a Lycavorian and a Leonidas if I did.”

For'mya smiled at him and held open her arms which Kalis stepped into without question. For'mya embraced him and as she felt his aura swirling with new emotions and pride she found once more that she could hold no hatred for him. As she had told him, he had been used by his father just as she had. They were both victims of the same depraved man and quite surprisingly she felt a genuine connection to him because of this. Without knowing why, For'mya knew that Fedor and Eirene would feel the same way and embrace him far more easily. She hugged him tightly as his wolf aura burned and told her everything she needed to know and she allowed her own aura to speak for her. It was filled with love and support and great confidence in who he had become. She could almost feel the tension leaving his body and his spirit brighten. For'mya stepped back after a moment and planted a kiss on his cheek much like any she had given her children through the years.

“Welcome to your family Kalis Leonidas.” She stated with a smile. “It is so very good to have you among us.”

Kalis nodded his head. “I will carry my name proudly.” He said.

For'mya nodded. “As you should.” She stated. She turned back to Martin. “Now... why is it that you have brought him up here Martin? Aside from the obvious.”

“The obvious?” Martin asked with a grin. “When have I ever done the obvious?”

For'mya was about to answer but Kalis looked at his uncle and reached towards his belt. He withdrew the small disc and stepped up to him. “This is why.” He said holding out the disc to Martin.

Martin reached up slowly and took the disc in his fingers. “This is not something that I asked for you to do Kalis.” He said. “In fact... I distinctly remember saying don't do anything that puts you in danger.”

“No Uncle... you already told me that.” Kalis said. “It is something I felt I needed to do however. And you did not say I should not do anything either. In fact I remember you said if I felt the need to stick it to my father without endangering myself or Serale then feel free to do so.”

Martin shook his head. “Jeez! Why is it that no one can do what I tell them anymore?” He rasped in frustration.

For'mya looked at Martin. “Wait... you've been communicating with him?” She asked. “You did not tell us this Martin Leonidas.”

Martin shrugged his shoulders. “Short bursts on the P1.” He replied. “Nothing important and only after I knew for sure what his intentions were.”

For'mya reached out and took the disc from his fingers, her dark brown eyes scanning it carefully, and then growing a little wider. "This is... Kalis this is a D7 encrypted Kavalian Central Core Communication Disc." She said. She looked back at him. "This is the central processing core of all communication devices on a Kavalian ship."

Kalis nodded his head in the affirmative. "My father's ship to be more precise Tenna For'mya." He told her with a certain perverse happiness in his voice. For'mya looked at him and saw the look of satisfaction on his face as well as the pride. She didn't know that saying that one word meant everything to Kalis. Knowing that he could speak that word with respect and honor made him swell with confidence.

Kalis glanced quickly back to where Mata stood in the doorway of the cockpit and saw his Kavalian mentor nod his head in approval. "Well done Kalis." Mata told him. "Well done indeed."

Kalis turned back to For'mya. "Every communication my father has had in the last ten years from his ship, encrypted or otherwise, is on that disc. The activation codes for the Long Range COM array as well. Which they will not be able to use now by the way." He looked at Martin. "I did as you asked Uncle Martin. I sabotaged the main circuitry board in the way you suggested, as well as all the backups. They will not be able to utilize the long range array without docking at a Kavalian ship yard and having the entire network replaced."

For'mya looked at Martin with questions in her eyes. "I thought you said you told him to remain safe!" She hissed.

"I did." Martin protested.

"By having him sabotage their main Com array?" For'mya demanded.

Martin grinned sheepishly as Kalis watched in amusement. This was something he did not expect to see and he was discovering what many others already knew. His uncle's wives and mates went out of their way to keep tabs on him.

"It was Avi's idea actually." Martin said finally. "I only suggested if he was thinking of doing something that this would be it. Switch three of the four power crystals and when they activate the Long Range COM array the reverse polarity of the crystals will short the entire COM grid. Fry it beyond repair."

For'mya shook her head. "Martin Leonidas... your other wives and mates and I will be having a talk about this with you. You put Kalis and all he has been able to accomplish at risk!" She scolded him.

"I did not!" Martin protested. "I put it forth as a suggestion. That's all."

"That does not excuse it! You knew he would do as you 'suggested'" For'mya hissed.

"I was glad to Tenna. Really." Kalis spoke up.

"That does not excuse it." For'mya answered him. She looked back to Martin. "I don't understand why though. Why have him do this?"

Martin reached up and took the disc from between her fingers. "I'll show you why." He stated as he turned and held the disc out to Tina. "Tina... plug this in and initiate a short range COM signal to my brother's ship."

Tina met his eyes with a stunned expression. "You're serious Skipper?" She asked. "Why in the holy billy hell would you want to talk to that scum bag?"

Martin smiled. "Trust me." He said.

Tina shook her head as she turned and slipped the disc into a slot on her secondary COM console. "Ok."

"This ought to be real entertaining." They heard Endith speak from the pilot's seat.

Martin looked at Kalis. "You are sure you want to do this?" He asked.

Kalis moved closer to him with a nod. "Now more than ever Uncle." He answered with no small amount of confidence.

Martin nodded. "Ok..." He said. "Tina?" He asked turning to look at her back.

"Syncing up the transmission variables now." She spoke. She reached up and touched a panel near her head. "Initiating the COM pulse. This will fucking wake them up something good."

Endith laughed softly from her chair. "I think the best show is yet to come lover." She stated.

Tina chuckled. "Ain't that the truth."

ENROUTE TO PRALOR DESIGNATED WORLD MANNE

“...will you tell father?” Mari asked her sister as they sat in the largest of the Mess Lounges on the ARC ROYAL and enjoyed a hearty breakfast meal. Kesyla sipped her mug of coffee slowly, savoring the flavor. She had discovered this liquid since coming to the ship and had become addicted to it almost immediately. The rich, dark flavor was decadent and it had succeeded in calming her nerves on many occasions since coming onto the ship. It was her first time away from her father on an extended diplomatic trip, and unlike her sister Mari, Kesyla was somewhat homesick. This was very different from the times they had traveled to the other Pralor worlds. Kesyla was thoroughly enjoying her time among the Lycavorians and elves on the ship, as well as the assortment of other species, but she still missed her home. The coffee, surprisingly, helped Kesyla to remain calm and stay focused on her duties. Mari on the other hand, she relished in the excitement and the unknown of being out here among the stars with people they barely knew. She had always been far more open and adventurous than either her or Doran.

Kesyla met her eyes. “What do you mean?” She asked.

Mari rolled her eyes. “It is me sister.” She said. “I know you have communicated with father on a secure channel outside of their ability to monitor. At least that you know of. What have you told him?”

Kesyla looked around quickly and then back to her. “Mari... keep your voice down!” She protested.

“Why?” Mari asked her with a grin. “You think they don’t know?” She said with a shake of her head. “You do not give them enough credit sister.”

“You are wrong.” Kesyla said. “I give them every credit due to them.” She spoke. “I am not Doran Mari, you know that. I have only used the communicator father gave to me twice since coming here. I am not reporting to father anything that Martin Leonidas has not already talked to him about. Each time I used it, father had already talked to Martin.”

Mari tilted her head slightly. “You are serious?” She asked.

Kesyla nodded her head. “It appears father has talked to Martin Leonidas more than I have talked to father. They are communicating on a very regular basis. To be honest, since Onterom, I think father has had his eyes opened.”

“Then why...” Mari began.

Kesyla shook her head. “Because father does not want Doran having access to the COM device. He is afraid he will use it to inform Lorendo of what we are doing. He does not trust our brother Mari... and nor do I.”

Mari’s eyes were wide. “You think he is working to help usurp father?” She gasped.

Kesyla shook her head. “No... I think he is working to help Lorendo however he can and to further his own aspirations, whatever they may be.” Kesyla told her honestly. “I think, if he knew about the COM unit and was able, he would report anything that could be construed as supporting Lorendo’s assertions about these people.”

“He has not tried to...” Mari began.

Kesyla shook her head again. “I don’t think so.” She answered. “He has remained quiet since that day in the conference room. But that will change. He has already begun roaming the ship looking for information he can use against them and for new women to bed.”

“That would not be the wisest of actions on his part sister.” Mari said. “His propensity to think that others are beneath him will only get him in trouble. As well as his inflated ego when it comes to women.”

Kesyla nodded. “I agree.” She said. “I know... I know he has attempted it with one or two of the female elves he has seen on the ship but I do not know the outcome. And they were not attached. That I am sure of.”

“If he attempts to bed a married Lycavorian female, the result will not be good sister. For any of us.” Mari said quickly. “If the woman does not kill him outright, then the husband most assuredly will.”

“I am watching him.” Kesyla said. “You know he likes to use his abilities to manipulate the Etheric realm to make himself appear more attractive to his conquests. Especially the ones who are married. I don’t know how it will work with Lycavorian females.”

“Kesyla it won’t!” Mari hissed softly. “They... they mark each other when they mate. They have... they have auras that they utilize to show affection and love. Nearly imperceptible pheromones that are used between each other. Once they mate they are bound to each other very happily. If he infringes on that... they will not hesitate to strike him down.”

“I know Mari!” Kesyla spoke with some force. “Give me some credit sister.”

Mari stared at her for a moment. “Forgive me Kesyla.” She said softly and with some embarrassment.

Kesyla smiled at her and reached across to place her fingers on Mari’s knuckles. “There is nothing to forgive sister.” She stated. “In your position I would have thought the same things and acted the same way.” She told her. “Being among these people though... seeing how they treat one another, how they interact with each other, it is enlightening to say the least. I was frightened at first... but not anymore.”

“They are fascinating aren’t they?” Mari said. “Uncle Murano was right.”

Kesyla nodded her head. “I have never been as close to Uncle Murano as you... but I think I would like to change that.” She stated. “He is the only one they have fully accepted you know. They still view us as something of an oddity I think. They do not know what to make of us... but Uncle Murano... he is fully accepted among them.”

“He is a Praetorian... just like Martin Leonidas and his sons.” Mari said. “And he has fought beside them without question. To Lycavorians... to their Spartan heritage... that is the highest honor and duty one can exercise. The moment he did that our Uncle became one of them.”

Kesyla looked at her oddly. “How did you find that out Mari?” She asked quickly. “I have questioned four different people as to why they view Uncle differently and none of them gave me a straight answer.”

Mari shrugged her shoulders. “I went directly to the source.” She answered her. “I asked Wayonn and the woman they call Helen. She is Wayonn’s granddaughter you know. Two or three generations down the line, but she is of Wayonn’s blood. And she is the Praetorian Mage for Martin Leonidas. Just as Wayonn was for Sumar. And Wayonn’s great grandson Dutkne is now the Praetorian Mage to the son Androcles. It seems their bloodlines are tied to each other somehow. Just as it was for our people in the early times of the Praetorians sister.”

“So it would seem.” Kesyla said thoughtfully as she sipped her coffee. “You noticed the new arrivals that boarded yesterday?”

Mari nodded. “Most of them are wives of the crew.” She answered. “The King did not feel right having all of his wives with him while the others were away from theirs. There were not many married crewmembers... but he had the wives of those brought here.”

Kesyla tilted her head as she looked at her sister. “And just how did you discover that?” She asked.

Mari blushed and looked down at the table quickly and shyly. “I asked one of the elven transport pilots during dinner last night.” She replied. “I think... I think he was attracted to me. He acted like it I think. And he was very forthcoming with the information.”

“Mari!” Kesyla exclaimed but with a knowing smile.

Mari smiled brightly at her as she looked up. “I only asked the questions!” Mari told her. “Don’t worry sister... I have no interest in any man at the moment.” Mari spoke. “I have yet to meet one who stirs my mind as well as my passion.”

Kesyla grinned. “Yes... they are hard to come by aren’t they?” She said. “I have spent quite a bit of time with the Queens Dysea and Isabella. They are extremely intelligent and very well versed in politics; though I do think Queen Isabella would rather remain out of political discussions from her demeanor. I found that so very refreshing. Not enough women take an interest in our politics if you ask me.”

“Maybe you will.” Mari said. “Surely being by father’s side you have learned much?”

Kesyla nodded her head. “Oh yes... but I wish to take a more active role.” She answered. “For example... Queen Dysea in particular is very active in governing. She is considered the Union’s High Education Leader. Her mandates dictate what is taught in all of their schools. The red haired one, Queen Anja, she is the one who decides everything about medical practices and policies; Queen For'mya is the political liaison between all of them and the Prime Minister of the Union and she is also considered the Royal family’s Ambassador. If any of them think an issue needs to be brought to light, For'mya is the one they have address it.”

Mari nodded her head in agreement. “Wayonn and Helen have said that For'mya is the most patient of all the Queens. She is the one most able to cut through the governing red tape so to speak.”

“She is also widely renowned as one of the three or four finest pilots in their entire Fleet.” Kesyla said with some wonder in her voice. “She is not simply an figure head. None of them are Mari. That is what I find so intriguing about them. All of them are respected in the fields of what they do, but all of them are recognized as exceptional warriors as well. Queen Aricia most of all, with Isabella and Anja not far behind her. I could learn so much from how they do things Mari.”

“Then learn from them sister.” Mari told her confidently. “They would not refuse you. And none of them are shy about voicing their opinions according to Wayonn and Helen.”

Kesyla shook her head. “I am father’s aide and...”

“Father would not expect you to be stagnant Kesyla!” Mari exclaimed. “He did not make you his aide to simply run errands for him or to be his buffer between rival positions. If you can learn from them he would expect you too.”

“Perhaps you are right.” Kesyla said.

“You know I am Kesyla.” Mari told her firmly. “I am spending as much time as I can with Wayonn and this Helen. They work quite a bit with the Avatar they call Avi... and the dragons. The Dragon Elder Mother is amazing. She is so much more comfortable around non-dragons than Teniri. You should hear her instructing the adolescent dragons in the hanger bay. She never raises her voice within the Etheric Realm when talking to them, but they know by her tone and what she says whether she is pleased or not.”

“I gather from Elder Mother Teniri’s reaction when we first met them that she was very shocked how some Lycavorians and elves have bonded with her species within the Etheric Realm.” Kesyla said.

“She had never seen it before. She did not think it was possible until she saw the King and his dragon Torma.” Mari said. “Not in the way it occurs. We have never seen something like that Kesyla.”

Kesyla nodded. “True.”

“It is even more incredible when it comes to Martin Leonidas’s oldest son.” Mari said. “He bonded with his dragon while he was still within his mother’s womb. He was born fully aware sister!”

Kesyla looked at her with wide eyes. “Wait... you mean...”

Mari nodded. “Wayonn and Helen explained it to me as best as they were able. Even they do not understand fully how it happened. He was still within his mother’s womb and he had all the knowledge of his father and mother, as well as his dragon sister. Elynth I think they said her name was. She in turn had all the knowledge of her father and mother. They shared all of this knowledge with each other before he was even born!” She said. “And just recently... Queen Isabella’s unborn son Dorian experienced the same thing with his dragon. Wayonn believes it stems in some way from what they call the Paladin gene. The extra set of chromosomes that grant Praetorians their abilities. They have never really studied it extensively because up until their son Dorian was born, only the son Androcles had ever experienced it.”

“Mari... that... that is incredible!” Kesyla said. “Our scientists would kill to study a phenomenon like that.”

Mari nodded. “I know. It is not spoken of often and almost never in public.” She told her. “At least according to Helen and Wayonn. They do not understand enough about it and while there are rumors floating among their own people, it is not something they wish to delve too deeply into. It is more a spiritual thing I think.”

Kesyla’s brow furrowed somewhat. “Then it is not something Daron needs to know.” She said quickly. “He would... given where he has shown his allegiance to be... he would only try and use it against them and cause father more problems.”

“He won’t hear it from me.” Mari said. “He hardly even acknowledges I exist. Not that it bothers me.”

“He acts that way because he can’t influence you.” Kesyla said with a smile. “He acts in a similar manner with me. Don’t be worried by it Mari. It will only...”

Mari saw Kesyla look up over her shoulder towards the door of the Mess Lounge and Mari turned her head. She saw Daron enter the Mess Lounge, his eyes gazing lustfully at the female elf walking with two others in front of him. Mari rolled her eyes and looked back to her sister. “Can he be any more obvious?” She rasped in disgust.

Kesyla shook her head. “I know.” She agreed. “We should talk more sister. I like when we compare notes and it is so much more pleasant when speaking with someone who knows what I am saying. But later, when it is just the two of us.”

Mari nodded as she saw Daron turn and make his way towards them. “Tonight.” She said. “I will come to your quarters.”

Kesyra nodded. "Change the subject quickly!" She whispered as Daron almost reached them.

They were saved by the Durcunusaan soldier approaching Daron before he reached their table and tapping him on the shoulder.

"Excuse me. You are the Pralor Daron?" The man asked.

Daron turned halfway and looked at him. His body language made it clear he did not like the man or being interrupted. "Who wishes to know?" Daron spoke in a voice tinged with distaste.

The Durcunusaan picked up on his tone of voice and demeanor right away. "I am Senior Lieutenant Relas of the Durcunusaan. I was instructed to inform you that you need to report to the Medical Bay for an exam."

Daron turned fully to look at him. "An exam?" He demanded. "There is nothing wrong with me."

The Durcunusaan stood there stoically. "You have been asked twice before sir." He said. "You have ignored both requests."

"As is my right." Daron hissed at him. "I do not need an exam. Especially not from your people."

Relas stepped closer to him. "Queen Anja says otherwise." He stated. "She is the Chief Medical Officer on this ship and within the entire Union. She has forgotten more about medical things than you will ever learn. She has ordered this. And she will be obeyed."

"I do not answer to your Queen." Daron snapped.

Kesyra began to get to her feet but Mari grabbed her hand and shook her head quickly. Kesyra saw the look in her eyes and smiled gently as she sat back down. Perhaps it would not be such a bad thing if Daron was put in his place.

"You are a guest on our ship sir." Relas told him. "If Queen Anja orders that you undergo a medical exam... then that is what you will do. You have refused her request twice now... I am here to insure you do not insult her honor by refusing once more. You would not like the reaction you received if this happens."

Daron stood there arrogantly. "She cannot order me to be examined!" Daron snapped. "I am not sick! And I will not submit to such a degrading thing."

Relas nodded his head. "She said you would refuse." He spoke. "In that case, you will be confined to the quarters you are assigned for the remaining time of your stay with us." He spoke calmly. "Please come with me."

"What?" Daron exclaimed. "That's preposterous!" He snarled. "You can't do that!"

"I can and I will." Relas told him. "You come on our ship... you insult one of our Queens and you strode the corridors of this ship attempting to bed our females and crewmates." Relas saw Daron's eyes grow a little wider and he smiled menacingly. "Did you not think this would be noticed? Our females are not so stupid it seems."

"I... I will..." Daron stammered.

"If you will not submit to an exam then you will be confined to your quarters sir." Relas told him. "Do not make a scene here in the Mess Lounge over this. I would prefer not to have to subdue you and have you escorted away in restraints... but make no mistake I will."

"I want to protest this treatment to the King!" Daron barked at him harshly.

Relas nodded his head. "That is your right... but if you think King Martin will go against Queen Anja, who many believe he favors most of all after his Anome Queen Aricia, in favor of you and your complaints, then you are not as smart as you consider yourself to be."

"This is..." Daron began to speak but grew silent when Relas stepped closer and growled softly in his throat.

"Do not make me subdue you." Relas snarled softly. "I would like nothing better than to make you look the fool. It is your choice... but you will come with me now. To the Med Bay or to your quarters. Decide now."

"Fine." Daron spat. "I will submit to this exam under protest!"

"I don't care how you submit to it." Relas told him. "If it shuts you up." He motioned with his hand toward the doors. "This way sir."

Mari and Kesyra broke into muted laughter as their brother was led from the Mess Lounge, his face twisted into an angry expression. Sooner or later he would offend the wrong person and they would deal with him. That much the sisters knew.

“...All done.” Anja spoke as she looked at the nearly nude Iama on the examination bed of the small, private room in the Med Bay and pushed away the hovering medical computer. “That wasn’t so bad was it?”

Iama looked at her and smiled as she sat up. “No.” She answered honestly. “I... I didn’t know what to expect when you called me down. I’m sorry.”

Anja chuckled. “Don’t be.” She stated. “I’d be scared if I called me.” Anja turned and pushed the hover computer further away while typing on the small console and saving the data to three different secure computer cores on the ship. Three secure computer cores that only a dozen individuals on the ship could actually access. “You are a member of our family now Iama. A Princess of the Union. Your medical well being is now my concern.” Anja turned back and looked at her. “You can get dressed.” She said.

Iama slid off the exam table and slipped the simple white medical gown off her shoulders and reached for her clothes. She had taken to wearing a Union Flight Jumpsuit because it was very comfortable and easy to obtain. The ship’s Tailor, an elven female, had worked on all of them so that they fit her like a second skin as well as allowed her tail to slip through a slot that she had offered to engineer right into the fabric for Iama. Anja watched as she took the men’s t-shirt, obviously one of Fedor’s by its size, and pulled it on over her very firm, medium sized breasts. “What was the exam for?” Iama asked as she slipped her legs into the jumpsuit.

“I have the medical files of our entire family on one computer core.” Anja answered her. “Basically each person’s entire history medically. I’ve given the exams to everyone and I keep them up to date myself. We had the time so I figured I would add you to the database as well.”

“So there is nothing wrong with me?” Iama asked her, lifting her soft green eyes to look at Anja as she pulled the jumpsuit up her legs around her waist.

“Given what you have been through in your life Iama... you are in superb health.” Anja said. “A little on the light side as far as weight... but you are adding a few pounds of muscle here and there since Fedor bit you. That is good.” Anja told her. “All your tests are normal or better than normal. I’d call you the picture of health.”

“Will... will the changes grow more pronounced?” Iama asked her.

“Not as much as you might think.” Anja answered. “Kavalians as a whole have senses that are close to Lycavorians. All the virus will do is enhance those slightly. It will affect your internal makeup somewhat differently though. Your natural healing will increase quite a bit and the natural Kavalian resistance to diseases and poisons will be close to par with Lycavorians. Since the Biogenic process you underwent is based at least in part on Lycavorian DNA, you’ll never have to take the injections again and you’ll never revert back to your natural state any more than you are now.”

Iama’s tail flipped forward casually and she smiled. “I like my tail.” She said.

Anja nodded her head. “He probably could have picked a better place to bite you when he made you his.” She stated referring to the teeth marks Iama had on the side of her right breast. “It’s a tossup when they go all instinctive on us.”

Iama blushed slightly. “I... I never really felt it.” She said as her mind wandered back to that moment. She didn’t really feel the pain of Fedor’s wolf fangs as he had bitten her. She was in the grips of one of the most intense orgasmic eruptions of her life and his bite only enhanced that. Afterwards... knowing the significance of him doing such a thing... Iama had relished in the moment.

Anja smiled at her knowingly. “Neither did I.” She stated. “That Leonidas wolf blood can really set you on fire. His father is a beast when he gets like that. Martin can have all of us screaming at the same time. And nights like that usually end up nine months later with another little one. Which reminds me... you should sit with For’mya or Aricia soon and learn how to use your developing Mindvoice and Etheric abilities to adjust your body chemicals and have them act as a contraceptive. At least until you two are ready. Leonidas men are notoriously fertile and when you combined that with Fedor’s elven half... well...” Anja saw the look on her face and moved closer. “What?”

Iama couldn’t meet her eyes and looked at the floor. “I... no one knows but Fedor.” She said softly. She looked back up at Anja. “I cannot have children Anja. It would not due for the females in brothels to become pregnant. All of us were subjected to sterilization injections. We did not have a choice.”

Anja tilted her head to the side slightly. “Really?” She asked with some humor. She took Iama’s hands, the jumpsuit bundled around her waist. “Then I guess I do really good work.”

Iama looked at her. “What... what do you mean?”

Anja smiled and squeezed her hands. “Iama... I am the foremost Hadarian Healer in the Universe.” She stated with mock arrogance. “You don’t really think the clumsy attempts to sterilize you would escape my notice did you?”

“What... I don’t understand?” Iama stammered.

Anja chuckled and stepped closer. “The virus in Fedor’s blood began repairing whatever they tried to do to you the moment he bit you Iama. I simply hastened the process so that it was complete. You can have children Iama... as many as you want.”

Iama stared at her with wide eyes. “That... that is not a joke?” She gasped.

Anja shook her head. “Not in the least. Fedor did most of the work when he bit you like I said. I have to ask though... as far along as the process was, how often have you two...?” She said with a smile.

Iama gazed at her in shock for a very brief moment and then shrugged her slim shoulders shyly. She was becoming more comfortable with the openness of Fedor’s family when it came to sexual matters, but she hadn’t caught on entirely just yet. “I... every moment we have had alone.” Iama blushed slightly. “He makes me feel so wonderful Anja... I can’t get enough of him. I... I have never wanted to please a man as I want to please Fedor Anja. Just the way he smells when it fills my senses is...”

“Divine?” Anja finished her statement with a knowing look in her Jade green eyes. “Trust me... I do know the feeling. All of us do when it comes to Martin.”

“Will... it won’t ever go away will it?” Iama asked.

“Gods... I hope not!” Anja exclaimed. She reached up and rubbed Iama’s cheek. “Let’s just say that your frequent interactions have helped the process along as well.” Anja said with another knowing grin. “The official medical definition is somewhat boring and technical, but essentially... every one of Fedor’s cells that made it inside you have been working on repairing that issue. I simply finished it up when I examined your abdomen today.” Anja finished her statement. “When the time comes that the two of you decide to have children... that will not be an issue you need to worry about.”

“I can... I can have Fedor’s children?” She stammered softly, still not able to believe it. “I can...” Tears started to fall from her eyes. “I can have children! Our children!” She said as the tears came more freely now.

Anja smiled happily and pulled her into an embrace. “Yes you can.” She stated happily. “As many as you two want.”

Iama’s arms held her tightly, her tail wrapping affectionately around Anja’s waist. When she had told Fedor she could not have children she thought for sure that he would want nothing more to do with her given how much value Lycavorians and elves put in children. She should have known better considering she had floated within his thoughts and seen his love for her. So complete and total. Happiness rushed through her as she realized she would be able to give him children. “Thank you!” She gasped into Anja’s chest. “Thank you.”

“Don’t thank me.” Anja said. “You can thank Fedor. His blood did all the work.”

Anja watched as Iama pulled away and began wiping at her eyes. She smiled warmly. “All of this is overwhelming for you isn’t it?” She asked softly.

Iama nodded slowly. “Not all of the time... but there are moments.” She replied. “I just... I had resigned myself to never finding happiness. I thought I would die on that vile world, or die in the process of trying to get away. I never imagined I would find someone like Fedor. That I could feel for him what I do. That I would be a... that I would be considered a Princess.”

“No regrets?” Anja asked her.

“Regrets?” Iama gasped. “By the moons Anja... never!”

Anja reached up and pushed some of her blond hair from her face. “You are not alone anymore Iama’ Juturi Leonidas. And like For’mya told you... we haven’t yet learned how to be Queens... so we are in the same position. Though I think that comes from the fact that none of us want to be Queens more than anything. We can’t learn to be proper Queens if we don’t want to be.”

Iama laughed at this statement and wiped some more tears from her eyes and cheeks. “Thank you Anja.” She spoke softly.

Anja smiled at her. She reached up and brushed some hair from her face. “Fedor loves you with every waking breath he takes Iama. We all can see it. Everyone can see it. Just in the way he looks at you. He will be viciously protective of you but he knows you are quite capable of taking care of yourself. Never hold back from each other Iama. Share everything with him just as you have. Your love will burn brightly if you do.”

Iama looked at her. “Do you... do you and the Queens still love the King the same as when you first met him?” She asked softly.

Anja shook her head quickly. “We love him more.” She stated. “It only gets better Iama. There will always be bumps on the road you travel... but it will always get better. Trust in your feelings for him and his feelings for you. You are stronger than you think or else you would not have made it this far.”

Iama nodded her head. “I will.” She said softly.

Anja kissed her cheek and stepped back. “Well... we are done here.” She stated. “Should I call him to walk you to the Mess lounge or...” They both turned when the male voice echoed loudly right outside of the Exam Room door and then the door slid open fully.

“Sir... you can’t go in there!” The Lycavorian female protested. “Queen Anja is with a patient and...”

“I will go where I want!” Doran’s voice barked. “I want to get this foolish exam that she has ordered me to undergo over with!” Doran turned and his eyes grew slightly wider as he saw Anja and Iama standing together. “Well...”

Iama quickly finished zipping her jumpsuit up as Anja stepped in front of her. “You had better have a good excuse for barging in here!” Anja snarled.

“I’m sorry Lady Anja... he wouldn’t listen to me.” The female elven medic explained.

“You have a lot of nerve mister!” Anja spat. “I am conducting a medical exam! You have no right to...!”

Iama tore her eyes from the way Daron was lustfully gazing at her and she stepped to the side around Anja. “It’s ok Anja.” She stated confidently gripping her hand. “I will go and see Aricia about what we discussed. Will you and the others join us for dinner this evening? We are meeting Eirene and Miseo in the Port Mess Lounge.”

Anja’s angry eyes turned to Iama and changed instantly. She smiled and gave her a warm kiss on the cheek. “We’ll be there.” She stated.

Iama smiled and then moved past Daron, looking at him with evil eyes as he gazed at her lustfully until she had passed him. Daron turned back to Anja and for the first time he saw just how attractive she was. Daron had not really noticed what she looked like on Onterom because he thought her and the others beneath him but he chided himself for not noticing sooner. She was certainly much more attractive than many of the women he had bedded on his home world and extremely fit.

Anja was watching him with her arms crossed under her large breasts and a thoroughly disgusted expression on her face, one he took for something else entirely. Daron took a perverse joy in getting married women to sleep with him. Whatever the reason; their husbands didn’t pay them enough attention; they were having an affair as well; or the woman had been selected for her husband without her real consent and she wanted to explore other options. Whatever the many reasons, Daron found that married women were far more open in bed, and far easier to manipulate once he had bedded them. Even up to now, none of the husbands had come forward to confront him in regards to bedding their wives. They either did not care or still had not discovered the infidelity of their significant other.

Daron stepped closer to Anja. “I am here.” He stated deciding that he would show his father just how primitive these men and women were by bedding one of Martin Leonidas’s queens. “You did not have to send your bully out to get me.”

“You ignored my first two requests.” Anja spoke. “I don’t like asking twice. Three times and I get pissed.”

Daron’s eyes narrowed. “Pissed?”

“Angry.” Anja hissed.

Daron nodded his head in acknowledgment and smiled as he moved up in front of her. She was beautiful he thought. High cheekbones and soft full lips... not to mention she had the finest and most lush figure of any of the married women he had bedded in the last six hundred years. “I am here now.” He said bowing his head slightly. “My apologies.”

Daron reached out subtly within the Etheric realm, searching for the strands of Anja's surface thoughts in order to warp them into seeing him as a man who was much more attractive and intriguing than her husband. Daron had become a master at this skill, usually having the woman willing to sleep with him in a matter of hours after manipulating her surface thoughts. He did not care that this practice was intensely frowned upon among his own people. He had been using this skill for centuries even as many of their politicians blithered about whether to outlaw such manipulation. It was not a skill one was born with, it was something that the person had to choose to practice and become skilled with. Many Pralor people regarded men or women who chose to enhance this skill to be nothing but criminals for the effect it could have in so many different ways. Daron stopped short when he felt the power of the Etheric shields Anja Leonidas had in place around her mind and was somewhat surprised at her lack of reaction to him though he made no outward show of this. Even Anja's surface thoughts were well guarded and he had to be very careful not to probe too deeply. He simply twisted several of the thought strands to think what he wanted them to think. Daron decided to not probe too deeply just yet and to show an interest outwardly as well.

While Anja Leonidas was officially listed as a Category 18 Etheric user, she was now in fact a Category 19 Etheric user. Anja Leonidas had spent every free moment for the better part of the last five years either learning with Helen or training with Aricia in being able to more intensely focus her Etheric abilities. Aricia, who along with Sadi, had perhaps the most pure and dominant female Lycavorian blood known to exist within the Union was also a very traditional Lycavorian/Spartan woman. While she could not manifest an Etheric knife as Aricia was able to, or throw up very powerful Etheric barriers like Helen, Anja had learned how to use her Etheric connection to lift her healing skills to a much higher level. She had also, very quietly, taught herself how to uniquely influence the metaphysical healing radiation within her body so that she could use it for things outside the realm of healing. What had happened to Aricia all those years ago, and recently to For'mya and Dysea both, only cemented Anja's mentality in this regard. She was wolf yes and since she had experienced Martin's full and unshielded aura, no other man would ever compare to him or be able to twist her senses as certain individuals had done to her fellow Queens and lovers. His unshielded Alpha wolf aura had been the utter epitome of glorious and even before experiencing that magnificent moment, Anja had loved Martin completely. Now she would willingly worship him in any way he desired, just as any of them would, though all of them knew he would never treat them in such a manner.

As harsh as her view may have been to some who would never understand, Anja and her fellow Queens knew that there would always be those who thought they could influence or control Martin Leonidas through harm or threat to the Queens he adored so. The chances of that happening now were much slimmer than before they knew, but Anja also knew there would always be some fool willing to risk it all by kidnapping or capturing a Queen of the Union and raping or beating them in order to get back at Martin for some perceived wrong he may have done. Anja was intent on making sure that never happened.

While all of them were developing their own unique solution to this fact, Anja had spent her last years studying how to influence the healing properties of the radiation within her body and turn it into a weapon if she needed to. This required that she study and learn how to focus her Etheric abilities to the point that it moved her into the next category of the Pralor Etheric rating scale. It was also one of the reasons she was so adamant about not submitting to further testing by the DSM or any of his cronies, for it would certainly be detected. Anja was now able to influence the metaphysical radiation within her body and use it as a weapon. She could alter the healing pulse she used or even shield her entire body by making the radiation alter a person's molecular structure at its core. This could cause intense pain to the point of being able to incapacitate an individual. Anja and her fellow Queens had made a vow to each other that no man but Martin Leonidas would ever have them in such a way again, and any who were fool enough to attempt it with Anja would be in for an tremendously painful and possibly very lethal surprise.

Anja shook her head in disgust at his answer and his sudden change in demeanor towards her for she saw it for what it was and she motioned to the table. "Get on the table!" She spoke harshly as she turned to the hovering computer terminal.

Daron moved to the table and began unbuttoning his shirt as he turned and lifted himself onto it. He pulled off his shirt, exposing a lean and powerful upper body physique, and draped the shirt neatly beside him on the bed. "So what is this exam for?" He asked casually.

Anja turned around holding the medical scanner and saw him on the bed without a shirt. Her alpha female wolf instincts lit up instantly as she could easily smell the desire for her openly wafting from Daron's pores. Anja fought down the urge to rip his face off for such a blatantly obvious exploit only because he was not Lycavorian. She sincerely doubted he didn't know what he was doing but he probably had no idea about what his actions really meant in to a mated female. Or he just didn't care and was doing it on purpose for a reason.

Anja lifted the medical scanner and began a standard scan. "The exam is to determine the differences and similarities in your physiology as compared to others so that we can treat you better should the need arise." Anja answered him keeping her voice neutral.

"And what will you do with this information?" Daron asked her.

"It will be added to the ship's Medical Database. Elder Radra is coordinating that." She replied.

"And here I thought you were being so persistent because you wanted to get to know me as a man and person." Daron commented with a handsome smile.

Anja's jade green eyes glanced up into his face. "Not quite." She stated.

"I have been reading some of the information in your ship's library on your species and the Lycavorians." Daron spoke arrogantly, dismissing her answer entirely. "I was wondering if I could ask you some questions."

"Like what?" Anja asked.

"I read that your species, the Hadarians, have been members of this Lycavorian Union since it was founded." Daron said.

Anja nodded her head. "Yes."

"Yet in all that time, nearly four thousand years now, you are among only a handful of Hadarians who have ever been 'turned' I believe is the word your history files use. And all of them have been within the last hundred years." Daron spoke.

Anja looked at him intently now. "What are you getting at?" She questioned.

"It's curious that's all." Daron said. "In all that time, thousands of years and only in the last century have there been those among your people who have been turned."

"Why is that curious?" Anja asked him. "There are thousands of documented marriages between Lycavorians and Hadarians throughout our history."

Daron nodded. "Yes... but none where the Hadarian allowed themselves to be turned." He said. "According to your own history records, including you and your sister, there are only nine Hadarians who have been turned by Lycavorians. And only one instance before you reclaimed your throne as Queen of your people."

"I still don't see a question there." Anja told him. "Do you have one?"

"You were turned by Leonidas before you discovered your past and that of your people." Daron said calmly. "Do you think it would have been different had you been aware of your own history? Would you have let him turn you?"

"Yes." Anja answered without a split second's hesitation.

"Even though many of your people look down on such a pairing?" Daron asked. "I saw from the records that there were many among your people who were upset by the fact that he had turned you. They felt it somehow tainted your royal blood."

"Those people that look down on such a pairing, as you say, are short sighted and very unwilling to accept change." Anja told him calmly, ignoring the condescending way he spoke the words. "Those very same people also initiated an illegal coup against me and have turned our government into some sort of fanatic religious state who is friends with the very people that started a war against ours. Twice." Anja met his eyes. "They act sort of like you and many of your people in regards to Lycavorians and other species." Anja sent the jab at him.

"Not all of us adhere to such things." Daron told her quickly sensing her underlying anger at him.

"Really?" Anja quipped. "I haven't seen much of that in recent days."

Daron chuckled in a friendly nature. "Elder Lorendo is not indicative of our people." He said.

"No?" Anja said. "You could have fooled me. With the exception of your sisters, Kasdan and his brother and those that came with them and Elder Radra... it seems to me that Lorendo is indicative of the mentality of the majority your people. At least that is the impression he gives in his actions and words."

“Elder Lorendo is much older than I.” Daron said. “He is more cemented in his way of thinking. I consider myself to be very open minded and I do not take the same course as he does in many things.”

“If you say so.” Anja said.

“I was wondering...” Daron said with that engaging smile of his. “Since you have me in a rather uncompromising position before you... shirtless and all I mean... could I ask you a personal question?”

Anja drew back the medical scanner and tapped lightly on the small control panel. “That depends on what the question is.” She said in reply.

“While I could find nothing within the history files of the Lycavorian people saying that it was not allowed, having more than one partner, or mate as they are commonly called among Lycavorians, it is not a common practice is it?” Daron said.

Anja looked at him. “No it’s not.” She said. “So?”

“You are one of six Queens.” Daron said measuring his words. “Do you or the others... do you not feel neglected at times?” He asked with all the charm he could muster. “Especially since the Lycavorian Queen Aricia is said to be the Anome of Leonidas. The most important to him and the one he favors most.”

Anja tilted her head to the side and looked at him. “And why exactly would that matter to you?” She asked.

“Well... you are a stunningly beautiful woman, all of you are.” Daron answered. “I guess I just don’t understand why you would accept such an arrangement when you could obviously have any number of men you would not have to share. He couldn’t possibly feel for all of you what he does for her could he?”

Anja stared at him for a long moment trying to decide whether she wanted to beat his ass now or wait and string him along further. Anja was no fool and she had already heard all about Daron from Radra and his sister Mari. That he was being so transparently obvious about his motives told her that he had no respect for her or anyone else for that matter. He was only out to prove a point to someone, probably his father or Lorendo. Anja felt the sudden warmth and love of Aricia fill her as she pulsed Anja with her female wolf aura from wherever she was on the ship, followed quickly by Dysea and then Cirith. Though Isabella could have sent a similar pulse through Mindvoice, that probably would have been detected by Daron and she knew this, so she allowed Aricia and the others to send Anja the message in a manner Daron could not hope to pick up on. They no doubt felt Anja’s emotions spike in anger at what Daron was doing. In each of their female auras Anja could detect the decision to string him along and they would deal with him together in a manner befitting what he was trying to do. Anja couldn’t help but smile inwardly at that and she sent back a pulse of acknowledgement within her own wolf aura to all of them. For’mya would agree with them when she returned they had no doubt and Anja knew it would be gratifying to put Daron in his place once and for all. Besides... all of them loved to brag about Martin in every way... and making Daron look the fool while they did would be delicious.

Anja met Daron’s eyes. “I... I guess I never thought about in that way.” She said in an almost wistful voice.

Daron’s facial expression told Anja that he thought he had hooked her. He blinked his eyes several times. “Forgive me for bringing it up.” He said suddenly.

Anja shook her head. “No... no it’s ok.” She said trying to act flustered. “We... we are done here.” She said quickly. “You... you can put your shirt back on.”

Daron got to his feet and made a show of stretching his upper body as he slowly put his shirt back on. Though these actions made Anja want to gag and laugh at the same time, she acted as if she couldn’t tear her eyes from him. “I did not mean to bring up a subject that was unpleasant.” He said with false sincerity.

Anja shook her head again. “It’s... it’s fine.” She said softly. “It’s... it’s just that... it’s not something we... that we talk about.”

“Perhaps you should.” He said gazing at her.

Anja shook her head. “Martin... Martin is very possessive and...”

“If it is not a situation you wish to be in then you should not be in it.” Daron spoke. “That is just my opinion.”

Anja gazed at him for a long moment. “So you... you think I am attractive?” She finally stammered like a schoolgirl.

Daron looked at her. “You will forgive me if I am out of line, but I think you are the most attractive woman I have ever seen.” He said to her with heartfelt honesty that was so false Anja just about reached out and slapped him right there. “And you would be the center of all my attention.”

Anja forced a shy, schoolgirl smile then and looked down at the floor. “I’ll... I’ll let you know when I have the results. Perhaps a day or two.” She said.

Daron smiled thinking how easy this had turned out to be. He thought it was going to be so much harder to manipulate her. “I’ll look forward to seeing you then.” He said reaching out and running his fingers across the back of her hand and halfway down her arm.

It was a very sure and deliberate show of affection and interest in her and in any other circumstance Anja would have cleaned his clock right then. His touch made her shiver in utter revulsion, something that Daron took as a completely opposite reaction. Anja watched him turn and exit the exam room with a smug expression on his face thinking how clever he must be. Anja cut her eyes and looked at her elven medic as she came into the room right after he left.

“My Lady?” She said softly.

“Carians Nadia!” Anja stated in a loud whisper. “Find me some really strong disinfectant will you! I want to bath in it to make sure I don’t catch anything from him.”

“Should I have Atropos return from the HOPE and make time for a... talk with him?” Nadia asked quickly. She was deeply involved with one of the senior Lycavorian engineers on the ARC ROYAL, a glorious three year relationship that was rapidly moving to them becoming mates. He had already scented her, and Nadia had become close with his mother and sisters in the traditional Lycavorian way. She knew what Daron was doing and also what Anja’s reaction would be. She had been around Anja and the other Queens long enough to know how they all felt about the King. Nadia was quite sure there wasn’t a male in the universe who could make any one of the Queens take a second look.

“No!” Anja exclaimed quickly looking at her. “Carians... Atropos would skin him alive! And don’t let it slip to any of the Durcunusaan either. They would just tell Martin and he would flat out kill the fool after all that has happened in the last months. No... the Queens and I will handle this ourselves.” She answered.

Nadia smiled brightly then, knowing exactly how the Queens would handle it. She had heard several rumors of how the Queens of the Union had handled similar situations that had come up through the years. “Will you at least make sure I am able to witness it Milady?” She asked finally.

Anja chuckled and held out the medical scanner to her. “We’ll give you front row seats.” She said.

Nadia grinned. “I look forward to it. It will be very entertaining I’m sure.”

“Give that to Radra if you would.” Anja said. “She is working with Avi to enter all the Pralor records into our database. I’m going to go grab a mug of coffee and see Aricia and the others.”

VEYERAI HIGH COVEN SPACE

Yuri stepped from the large bathroom wrapped in the oversized towel and stopped as her eyes settled on Pa'cour sitting on the bed and sifting through a stack of data pads. He wore only a pair of loose pants and Yuri felt a heady rush of sexual desire course through her as she gazed at him from the doorway. The same intense sexual exhilaration she felt course through her body whenever she looked at him. Even now, months after he had saved her life and the nature of his true feelings for her had come to light, Yuri was still astounded at the emotions this knowledge caused to race through her. Never in her wildest fantasies had she ever considered bedding an Immortal, it was so taboo within vampire society, no one in their right mind would think such a thing. How little she knew Yuri thought. Not only had hundreds of purebloods taken Immortal husbands secretly, they had done so long before Cha'talla’s wife Esther had developed the serum that returned the Akruxians to their natural outward appearance. What they looked like before her father had twisted and warped their DNA for millennia and turned many of them into vampires.

Now Yuri could not imagine how she had ever survived without Pa'cour in her life. He was absolutely beautiful to her in every way, his skin a deep bronze color and the bone spurs that ran along his jaw line adding to his incredibly handsome features. His very touch could incite passionate desire in her. Not the artificial desire she had experienced with Robert or the others who had shared her bed in her lifetime, but a deep, burning and throbbing of desire that would not go away until he had taken her. Yuri never had a man love her in the way Pa'cour did, often times making sure that she was screaming out in shameless pleasure before filling her completely with his immense Akruvian cock and making her blissfully shriek his name in glorious ecstasy until she was hoarse. Pa'cour did things to her that Robert would never have thought of let alone agreed to do. When he took her, he didn't just fuck her, he worshiped her in every possible way. An old adage from ancient Earth lore came to her mind then, one about how most men with large cocks didn't know how to use their equipment. To Yuri's sensational delight, Pa'cour knew just how to use his incredible equipment to drive her utterly insane with pleasure. Pa'cour had taken her in every way she had ever been taken before by other lovers and each experience had been beyond magnificent. Pa'cour was the Blessed Husband that Yuri had always dreamed of having as a young woman growing up. A man who yearned for her body every waking moment, but who also desired her mind equally as well. And while her mind was far clearer and much sharper than it had ever been, all the hours training with Pa'cour and Onera had insured that her body had become equally as fit as her mind. Yuri found herself wanting to keep her body in peak shape for she never wanted Pa'cour's attentions to stop.

Pa'cour was a brilliant tactician and leader all by himself, something that must have run in the genes of their family since his brother Cha'talla was the same. Yet he never hesitated to ask her opinion on something that he thought she could provide a different insight to. This was something that Robert had never done and it showed her more than anything else that Pa'cour respected her just as much as he loved her. Yuri was now doing the same thing, asking for his opinion on many decisions that she thought she alone was best qualified to make not so long ago. More often than not Pa'cour agreed with her assessment anyway, but just having his input told Yuri she had come a long way.

Of course, dying tended to do that to a person.

Yuri held no malice in her heart towards Androcles Leonidas for his lethal actions. In his position she knew she would have done the same thing. He had taken her down that day, and if not for Pa'cour, he more than likely would have succeeded in making sure she never rose again. Something within her had changed that day, and it wasn't just the vile darkness of Xaxon's taint leaving her body. In many respects, Yuri had died that day, and been reborn. Even without the taint of Xaxon within her, she found herself looking at things differently than she would have decades ago. She considered her options more carefully before committing to an action, and she found she was far more open to different things that just last year she would have refused outright. She was still very cruel in some respects she knew, not hesitating to execute those she knew were working against her or what Narice was trying to do, but at least now there was purpose to her actions. Yuri knew Narice was the only one who could save and lead the High Coven into the future. She had done so much in only a few short weeks. It needed to continue Yuri knew and she had dedicated her life now to insuring that Narice succeeded where she herself had failed. Yuri knew Narice was the last and best hope for their people, her marriage to Arran Leonidas being the first step. Things would change under Narice, change for the better, and Yuri intended to see that her sister had the resources and allies to insure her success. Twice now since Narice had assumed total control of the High Coven government, Yuri had sent her new agents against those who opposed her sister.

Yuri had been surprised that she still had support on her home planet but when the few military officers and members of the old Venorik Elghinn discovered she was alive and how she had changed, they swore their loyalty to her and in doing so, they swore the same thing to her sister Narice and what she was trying to accomplish. They knew what Yuri was doing and they very willingly did the same. Supporting Narice and her changes from the shadows and insuring that her enemies knew it would not be wise to go against her. Two of the mid-sized Pureblood vampire families that had followed her mother and father so devotedly had expressed their displeasure with how Narice was changing things. Word of their actions had gotten back to Yuri through that same network of Immortal and vampire contacts that were still loyal to her and Pa'cour. After brief discussions with Pa'cour, Yuri acted decisively. The heads of both those families and several close members of those same families died in carefully orchestrated and completely natural 'accidents'.

Yuri had also instructed those same agents to keep very close watch on several other vampire Pureblood families that were making the most noise about the many changes Narice was instituting. Yuri's advantage was that she knew how to play that game and she knew all of those involved. They would not be able to hide from her if they went against Narice. The largest such Pureblood family was even now demanding that Narice take a Pureblood vampire husband and regulate Arrarn Leonidas to a male consort if she intended to keep him around. It was their way of maneuvering in order to remain relevant in their eyes. Marry one of their sons to Narice and they would have a grip on power within the new Empire. Yuri knew her sister would never do such a thing, and had Narice asked Yuri for her advice, the new Yuri would have been dead set against it as well. Arrarn Leonidas was the largest part of the mold that held Narice together. That her sister loved the younger Leonidas son so passionately, as well as the red haired pureblood female Toria, was easy enough to see. And it did not escape her notice that Arrarn had taken both of them as his mates and they now carried Leonidas as their last name. Yuri had seen in broadcasts how her sister looked at them and they at her even in public, the pride and love and devotion. It was no different than how she now looked at Pa'cour. Narice was also considered a Leonidas now and having Arrarn in the mix of things showed those who may have doubted Androcles's commitment to them that the Lycavorian Union was very serious. The continued presence of Admiral of the Fleet Riall within High Coven space and working closely with Admiral Pontal was also another factor that was rapidly winning over more and more of the older, more skeptical Purebloods. Yuri needed to make sure that continued.

"The longer you stand there wearing only a towel Yuri my Blessed Wife... the more of a distraction you will become." Pa'cour spoke from their bed jarring Yuri from her thoughts and causing her dark eyes to gaze at him. "I will need to act upon this distraction eventually."

Yuri laughed softly as his words coursed through her and she strode towards the bed. "Who says I do not want you to act husband?" She spoke in reply as she seductively leaned over the edge of the bed and crawled towards him. She delighted in the look of wanton desire that suddenly filled Pa'cour's eyes for it matched the same emotions in her.

This was the new Yuri. So much more free with what she felt and how she expressed those very same emotions. She no longer held them deep within her, or suppressed them. Now she embraced them and in doing so, Yuri had experienced more pleasure and love in the last four months with this man before her than she had in over three thousand years. That showed in the new brightness of her eyes and the relaxed beauty of her face.

Yuri pushed aside the data pads and with measured, seductive movements intentionally meant to enflame the desire in her husband's eyes, she knelt between his legs on the bed and wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders. All the while insuring her large breasts pressed against his chest under the towel. His powerful arms suddenly crushed her petite frame to him and their lips came together in a kiss of sizzling love and unquestioning passion. Yuri groaned loudly in happiness, her hands coming up to hold the sides of his head. In all of her long life, even from those who had shared her bed and professed their love to her, no one had ever kissed her with the wild and absolute ardor that Pa'cour did. Yuri relished in every moment that he held her in his powerful arms and just as she had in the weeks before now, she nearly cried at the devotion this man had for her. His love for her was unconditional, without doubt, hesitation or regret. And though he was twice her age, Yuri basked in the feelings this knowledge caused within her and it allowed her to reciprocate those same feelings with no doubts, no hesitations and no regrets. Their daughter together was the culmination of the love they held for each other and Yuri had every intention of giving birth to as many more children as Pa'cour wanted. It also helped that in order to make those children; Yuri would be involved in the most glorious sex she had ever experienced in her life.

After a long moment they parted from their kiss, Yuri dragging her tongue across his lips as she drew her face back and traced the bone spurs on his jaw. "I could simply throw you down and take what I want." She hissed in a soft voice.

Pa'cour chuckled as his hands tightened on her ass, pulling her body closer. "I would be in no position to stop you." He stated happily. "I would be a fool to want to stop you."

"Hmmm." Yuri cooed as she gazed into his delicious eyes. "I also know my Blessed Immortal Husband does not normally bring data pads into our bed, so whatever it is you are doing is important."

"Nothing is more important than you." Pa'cour told her.

Yuri smiled and kissed him once more. "While your words fill me with passion and love, we both decided that we would do as much together as we were able."

Pa'cour nodded. "We did." He said.

“Then I will help you... and then you can have your way with me.” Yuri said kissing him once more before twisting her body around between his legs and settling fully to the bed, her back to his bare chest. She flushed when his lips grazed the back of her neck and he leaned over her shoulder.

“Most of these are reports from Nalavi and Professor Lidene.” He said. “A few from our people in different locations across the Coven. I was training with Onera most of the day and did not get to them until late. I have been trying to catch up.”

Yuri turned her head and looked over her shoulder at his face. “You sound different when you speak of Onera since Nebonese Pa'cour.” She said softly. “What is wrong my love?”

Pa'cour shook his head. “It is probably nothing, but part of me thinks she has become too confident in her abilities.” He said. “The natural strength of my people and yours coupled with the ability to wrap the shadows around her. After what happen on Nebonese, taking the life of that fool soldier, I think she believes she is indestructible.”

Yuri shook her head. “Defeating one Immortal whose skills had degraded to the point of uselessness was not a true test of her abilities. Part of me wants to insure she never has to do that again, but I know eventually she will need to defend herself and others.”

“She wields Iphan rie Aellseleum as if it is an extension of her very body.” Pa'cour spoke carefully choosing his words. “None of the men will train with her now. Even I have a hard time matching her.”

“I do not want her to become hardened to death Pa'cour.” Yuri said. “I do not want her to become like I once was. Uncaring and unfeeling.”

“I know.” He said sliding his arm around her waist in a comforting manner and pulling her closer to him. “There is a way.” He told her. “She needs training that you and I can not give to her Yuri. With all that is going on, we have neither the time, nor the resources. And to be perfectly honest... neither of us has the skill needed to teach her. I am very good with bladed weapons, you are much better, but she needs someone who can teach her the path of the warrior like it is second nature. To guide her developing skills and her mind so that she does not falter. She is beginning to naturally augment her physical skills with her Etheric abilities and she does not realize it. That is why she is becoming both a danger to herself and others. I know you have noticed it.”

Yuri nodded her head slowly. “Yes.”

“We did not realize her Etheric skills would manifest so soon. If at all. We should have known better considering how strong you are.” Pa'cour said thoughtfully.

“I know now that Xaxon affected my mother. That a large sliver of his essence took over her and that is how she was able to do what she did.” Yuri said evenly. “But in order for him to have chosen Dante so quickly he must have sensed something within him. A connection of some sort.”

“This Paladin gene they are talking about among their Netnews people? I saw several obscure reports on this and while they could not give a whole lot of information, they did say it appeared to be the reason that Leonidas and his sons have this unique power.” Pa'cour asked her. “It would make sense.”

Yuri nodded in agreement. “Yes... I have come to that conclusion as well. But how did my mother come to have this gene. And if she did... how did she pass it to me? She told me that the crew of that ship was all dead when her father and others found it. They had been dead for centuries.”

“Perhaps it was not your mother Yuri.” Pa'cour said. “Perhaps it came from your father.”

Yuri turned her head again and looked at him intently, her dark eyes showing surprise as something in her mind clicked. This was yet another reason why Yuri had come to so love him in so short a time. He did not just dismiss something because it made no sense at all. He looked at everything and whatever was left after dismissing the obvious, however astonishing it might have been, must have been the answer. His words struck home and Yuri knew that he had to be right.

“There were survivors of that ship. There had to be!” She stated in realization. “That... that would explain many things.” She finally said. “It is why she kept such close tabs on father and his actions even from Nuwaroa . It is why she wanted Isabella dead so badly once she discovered her. Why she did to me what she did. She must have discovered that father passed this gene to Isabella as well as me and when combined with the gene in Martin, it became active in their son. Perhaps even their daughters. That is what Xaxon must have sensed in Dante. This Paladin gene in some form. Passed to him from me. That has to be why Lucia can do what she can do. I must... I must be a carrier of this gene from my father and I passed it to them.”

Pa'cour nodded in agreement. "And it all begins to come together." He said softly. "And it would also explain why Onera is advancing so quickly in her training. She must carry this gene in some form, also passed down from you."

"Then why can't I do what Leonidas and his sons can do?" Yuri asked. "I can't manifest this gene into any special power Pa'cour. I saw the reports from Dante about what Lucia did on Earth... those whip like projections she used... but even that is not the same thing as what Androcles or his father have done. What they can do."

"Perhaps it affects other species differently." He said. "Lycavorians and Upyri. You are similar Yuri, but not the same."

Yuri looked at him and smiled. "Upyri. I haven't heard that term to describe us in centuries my love." She said.

"It is the recognized name of your species and was for dozens of millennia." He told her. "I remember Cha'talla and I having to sit through classes about your history once we were changed. Only in the last thousand years has it fallen to the wayside for this term vampire that was dreamed up on Earth and suddenly became common among the young generations of your people."

Yuri nodded. "Yes... I know." She said. "So much was forgotten or lost because of my mother and father. Pa'cour you realize what this could mean?" Yuri said. "Narice needs to know this. If there are carriers of this Paladin gene among our people, they would have been too frightened to come forward with my mother in power. She would have eliminated them the moment she discovered them as a threat to her power. Now... with Narice in charge... these men and women could mean so much to our people. Help us in so many different ways."

"Then how do we get a message to Narice? And how do we discover who they are? How do we know she is not already aware of it?" He asked. "You can not just approach her Yuri. We don't know what she would do, or how she feels about you. And there are still many who would rather see you dead my wife. And many would view it as you returning to claim the rule of your people."

Yuri looked disgusted. "Phraktos my love... I want nothing to do with governing our people now!" She hissed vehemently. "Only Narice can do that."

"I know this... they do not." Pa'cour told her.

"It would not surprise me if Leonidas and his people have already figured out how to find them to some degree." Yuri said. "The man is no fool. Unlike the image he likes to project of himself, he is extremely intelligent and cunning. And their own Netnews reports indicate they have at least two of the Pralor species among them now. A species that were thought to be long dead. Not to mention that ship... which is fully intact and operational. Think of the knowledge on that ship!"

"We should try." Pa'cour spoke. "This... this Paladin gene could work heavily in favor of the Coven. And it would give us equal footing with the Union and make Narice's alliance with them even stronger. More balanced."

Yuri nodded her head. "Because they have the means to train those individuals properly." She said thoughtfully. She looked at him. "You used the Lycavorian term my husband." Yuri said.

Pa'cour nodded his head. "It is the true term to describe what you and she can do. What Androcles and his family can do. The Lycavorians have refined it to a unique science now, and since these Pralors have arrived in their midst and they are the ones it all stems from, it seems appropriate."

Yuri nodded. "Yes it does." She said in agreement. "But not all of his family is affected. Only Androcles and his brother Denali. We do not know about the son from Martin and Isabella or what he can do. His Durcunusaan Captain seems to also have this ability but we know nothing about him."

"It does appear from what we know right now that it only happens with purebloods like them." Pa'cour said.

"I will need to discuss this with Nalavi." Yuri said. "There is so much we..."

"Does it matter Yuri? Our daughter is beyond beautiful my Blessed Wife... but I have no wish to see some scum sucking Kavalian or vampire or even Akruixian reject become lucky in a fight with her and severely injure or kill her. I do not care where this gene comes from or who it happens in... all I care about is that it is within our daughter." Pa'cour said to her. "You know I speak the truth my beautiful wife... I can sense it in your emotions. There is only one place she can receive the training she needs to combine her skills into a single cohesive force.”

“Androcles.” Yuri whispered to the air as she nodded.

Pa'cour nodded his head, his cheek brushing against her long, silky hair as he spoke into her ear softly. “Androcles and his father were true Masters of combat with bladed weapons even before they discovered their Etheric powers Yuri. Androcles was trained practically from birth to hold a blade as any Lycavorian Spartan is... you know this. I have seen footage of him in action with his weapons Yuri. He is truly one with his blades. They are extensions of his body and his will. It is no different than his father. They have taken bladed combat to the next level with this gene they possess Yuri and without that knowledge Onera will only end up hurting herself or someone else as I said. It is not something I can give to her. If she were to pit herself against someone trained by Lycavorians in the sword, they would hurt her, even with her added Etheric abilities because she is untrained. The training that she needs only the Lycavorians can provide to her. The training that she needs only Androcles or his father can give to her. It is the only way... otherwise she will end up hurting herself.”

Yuri nodded her head. “I... I saw this coming you know.” She said softly leaning back against him. “We are... we are tied more closely to the Lycavorian people than my mother and father could have ever imagined Pa'cour. All we could have been, all we could have done and accomplished together and they threw it all away because of their lust for more and more power and control. Thinking about all that has happened... how it has all come to be... I believe more and more that Androcles was right. We were never meant to be enemies Pa'cour. Our people were meant to be allies and friends and work side by side.”

Pa'cour nodded his head. “Considering the history and involvement of these Pralors I am not surprised. And you are not your mother and father now Yuri. You are different; you are the true individual you were meant to be.”

Yuri nodded. “Nor am I surprised.” She said taking a breath. “What do you suggest?”

“Contact him Yuri.” Pa'cour said softly. “He must know what we are doing here. And he has done nothing to interfere with us because he approves. He has done nothing because it is what he would do. Androcles is more likely to test the limits of honorable actions than his father and that is why he lets us be. He knows what needs to be done in order to defeat our enemies. And our actions only benefit both the Coven and the Union in the long run. He is not his father my love... and I think he has proved that to you already.”

Yuri nodded her head with a soft chuckle. “If he was his father I would be long dead by now.” She stated. “And do not discount what Martin would do when pressed to the wall Pa'cour my love. He keeps it locked away... but behind several locked doors and an indomitable will there resides a savage beast that will do what is necessary when push comes to shove.” Yuri drew in a deep breath and nodded. “But you are right.” She said confidently. “It is the only way. I will initiate COMs with him tomorrow. I will be honest with him and we will see what he says. What of Onera?”

“I think she will embrace the idea with all that she is.” Pa'cour spoke to her. “She lacks your composure and has let it slip many times that she would like to see the Union. And I believe she knows she is different and has wondered why.”

Yuri nodded. “Then it is settled. I will speak to her tomorrow as well if Androcles approves.” Yuri took a deep breath knowing it was the correct course of action and she would not second guess herself anymore. The decision was the right one and Yuri trusted enough in herself now to not question that. She looked at the two pads in her hand and rolled her eyes. Yuri held up two data pads and shook her head with a smile.

“It is the right choice.” Pa'cour said.

Yuri nodded her head. “I know. And I will not question our decisions. It is done and this is the path we will follow.” She said lifting the two other data pads. “Pa'cour my love... why is Nalavi sending you reports on organic isotope compounds he is testing. And why is Lidene sending you his reports on the results of experimental Quantum Twelve Power Mathematical Formulas?”

Pa'cour shook his head with a smile, also feeling their decision had been the correct one. His daughter would be trained and guided by the finest and ultimately that is what Pa'cour wanted. “I have no idea.” He stated honestly.

Yuri laughed again at the look on his face and tossed them to the floor alongside the bed. “I will talk to them in the morning as well. Nalavi is being Nalavi and I think Lidene still has his doubts about me.” She said with a slight shake of her head. "I did not treat him very well in the past so I can understand he is trying to be thorough."

"Norev reports that the exchange of the elven females went off without a hitch." Pa'cour told her as he held up the last data pad. "They had a company of Cha'talla's Immortals from Kranek there; he was concerned for a moment, until they saw Norev's men carrying the females from the transport."

Yuri nodded. "Even with Androcles's orders they will not trust us completely until we have proven ourselves my love." She said looking over her shoulder into his face.

Pa'cour nodded. "I know. Once the exchange was made, Norev says they actually took the time to engage in some small talk. He says it was an exchange that would go a long way to improving our status with them." Pa'cour kissed her bare shoulder softly. "It was an excellent move, sparing him and offering Norev and his men a purpose once more."

Yuri chuckled softly. "I almost didn't." She told him. "Then I realized he was forced to act how he was acting. Purpose was all they really needed again. And we gave it to them Pa'cour, not just me. We gave it to them."

Pa'cour nodded his head. "I noticed the blond one Nameia... the one you have spent so much time with... she did not return." He said softly. "Why?"

"She had nothing to return to." Yuri said as her thoughts quickly went to the beautiful female elf. "She has no family except distant cousins she does not communicate with. She was only a few weeks from graduating from the Medical Academy on Elear when she was taken."

"Ah... Hadarian trained is she?" Pa'cour stated.

Yuri nodded her head. "Yes. And she knows what she is about too." Yuri spoke. "Nalavi adores her and is overjoyed that he has someone who knows what in the blazes he is talking about."

Pa'cour detected something wistful in her voice and leaned closer. "There is more to it then that isn't there?" He said. "You are... you are happy she remained."

Yuri nodded. "I have... I have never really had a true friend Pa'cour." She stated softly. "She has... Nameia does not treat me differently. She is honest and forthcoming. I have caught myself sharing things with her that..."

"That you would never have told anyone before." Pa'cour said.

Yuri nodded. "Yes."

"You also find her very attractive don't you?" He asked her.

Yuri turned her head and looked at him. "It is that obvious?" She asked.

"Only to me." He told her. "I can see it in your eyes and your smile when you are with her."

"I do not know what she makes me feel Pa'cour." Yuri said. "I have never... I have never even thought of another woman in such a way. It is... it is not the same as what I feel for you my husband. No one could ever replace you... but she..."

Pa'cour pulled her tighter. "You are different now Yuri." He said softly. "I am different. We have both entered a world we never thought existed. Do not shy away from that now. If this Nameia interests you, attracts you, do not deny what you feel. That is what your mother and father trained you to do. Listen to yourself now."

"And what if I choose to... to experiment?" Yuri asked him. "What then?"

Pa'cour smiled. "You are my life and my love Yuri." He told her. "If it makes you happy then it belongs in your life."

"You make me happy my husband." Yuri said. "Happier than I have ever been in my life. I can't begin to put into words my feelings for you. For what we have."

"You don't need too." He told her. "I will never deny you something that makes you happy Yuri my love. Well... another man perhaps but..."

Yuri slapped his face lightly. "Pa'cour... no man could ever steal my affection and love from you! That is just not possible! Don't talk like that... even jokingly."

Pa'cour reached up and took her face in his large hand. Yuri relished at the warmth of his touch and looked at him with a dreamy smile. "Pursue whatever gives you happiness my wife." He told her. "If Nameia can give you something I can not and she makes you happy, then do not turn away from it."

"You give me all I need." Yuri told him.

“You misunderstand me.” Pa'cour said. “If she can be a friend to you, someone you can trust and care about, something you have never had by your own words then pursue it Yuri. Embrace who you have become and do not doubt. If your friendship blossoms into something else... or if it does not... it matters not. A true friend is precious and if she desires the same thing, then do not turn away from it.”

Yuri reached up and placed her palm against his cheek and smiled. “I love you Pa'cour.” She said softly. “More than I can put into words.”

Pa'cour smiled. “And I love you.” He said.

Yuri tossed the data pads off the bed as her passion stirred. “Show me husband.” She said turning and pulling the towel from around her body until she was naked in his lap. “Make me scream your name to the stars Pa'cour my love. Show me how much you love me.”

Pa'cour let slip a low growl of desire and quickly rolled over on top of her, enveloping her into his embrace and covering her lips with his own. Yuri moaned loudly with the kiss, and felt the fires in her body ignite easily. Pa'cour did indeed show her how much he loved her.

Countless times over the next hours.

KAVALIAN GREAT SOUL DREADNOUGHT PUSINTIN'S COMMAND SHIP PUMA'S PRIDE

“Marshall Pusintin!” The Bridge COM officer barked. “We are receiving an incoming hail on a Kavalian channel from an unknown origin!”

Pusintin looked up from his command chair where he was reading the latest reports and brooding miserably over the events of the last days and the betrayal of his only remaining child. The damage from Koguth's ship was minimal only because his gun crews had been sharper than most. They had blown the ship into three pieces before it struck their shields and rendered the impact of the huge chunks into manageable force. The follow on debris had crippled two destroyers and a cruiser however, and those ships had to be abandoned in order to continue. Pusintin was enraged at being caught so unaware of what his own son was doing right under his nose. They had discovered the dead Puma Bane soldiers in and near the landing bay and it had been clear Kalis had help. When they discovered it had been Mata who helped him to escape it made Pusintin even angrier. Mata had been the one who trained Kalis. He had been a trusted Puma Bane officer for decades. Pusintin suspected Kalis had acted out of simply wanting the Hadarian female for himself and then had been drawn deeper into the plot engineered by Koguth's Juturi. They were still examining the debris from General Koguth's ship, but so far it appeared as if the ship had been heavily automated and that is why only two LEUGER-Class transports were needed to escape.

Pusintin turned in his chair disgusted at everything he was reading. He would flay his son alive himself if he ever found him. Kalis had embarrassed him terribly and he would pay for that in spades. “Who would have Kavalian channels out here in the unknown?” Pusintin snarled at him. “It is my son. The fool boy did not plan well enough and Koguth either left him for dead on some planet or things did not go as he would have liked. Range?”

The COM officer looked at him. “It's a short range signal Marshall.” The man answered. “Less than ten light years distance. Bearing three seven nine eight mark two.”

“Helm... adjust course to three seven nine eight mark two and increase to full power on the sub light engines.” Pusintin ordered. “Sensors... begin a scan as soon as we come within range of the passive sensors! Find him!”

“Do we answer Marshall?” The COM officer asked.

Pusintin came to his feet and nodded. “Main holo disc.” He answered. “Signal me when we have his location and prepare to initiate a LSD jump to his position.”

“Receiving transmission and routing to main holo disc.” The COM officer reported.

Pusintin turned slightly and watched as the image of his oldest child with Jalersi came into view, sputtered and then cleared. Pusintin expected him to be nervous and frightened and contacting him to beg forgiveness so that he could return. What he saw was very different. A confident Kalis, standing calmly and with little sign of stress or worry. He appeared to be on some sort of ship, but it was not a LEUGERS Transport that he was sure.

“Kalis!” Pusintin hissed. “You stupid fucking boy! I will administer the lashes myself when you return! Do you know what you have done? Do you?”

To Pusintin’s surprise Kalis smiled calmly back at him. “I know exactly what I have done Marshall Pusintin.” He answered using his formal rank which surprised Pusintin. “And your threats no longer have meaning for me father. In fact... you no longer have any meaning for me.”

“Kalis I can’t cover for you now!” Pusintin snapped. “You helped a traitor! You freely helped a traitor and were complicit in the escape of three very important prisoners to the KFI. I can’t protect you from this fuck up!”

Kalis chuckled softly. “Traitor?” He stated evenly. “Mata is no traitor father. And neither is General Koguth. Not to the Kavalian people. And those prisoners you speak of were only important to you as long as you got to abuse Serale’s mother. I could not allow that any longer.”

“You could not allow!” Pusintin hissed. “Who are you boy?”

“You have never protected me father.” Kalis continued. “Leruk was always your favorite because he embraced your twisted ideals without question. Karun turned away from you openly and you dismissed me as too stupid to do any better. Look at where you are now father. You have nothing.”

“What your tone with me boy!” Pusintin snarled. “I’ll beat you within an inch of your life when you return!”

“Yes... as you beat me so often as a boy.” Kalis said somberly.

“You needed discipline!” Pusintin growled at him.

“Tell me Marshall Pusintin, did you take some perverse joy in beating down and breaking the boy I once was?” Kalis asked. “Did you enjoy taking the boy I was away from me? All I ever wanted was your approval. To have you acknowledge me as a son like Leruk and not a tool.”

Pusintin looked at the transmission with confused eyes. “You needed discipline!” He spat.

Kalis shook his head. “No... you wanted me to fully embrace your hatred and anger as Leruk did. I should have seen it when Karun turned away from you. I should have seen it then. I should have seen it when mother finally realized that everything you told her was a lie and she followed what was in her heart and accepted the love she had for Pian.”

“You shut your damn mouth!” Pusintin barked. “You have no idea what you are talking about! You know nothing!”

“Don’t I?” Kalis said casually. “I will tell you what I know Marshall Pusintin... I know that you are not my father. You were never my father. A father would not treat his son as you treated me and Karun. A father would not have ordered his own daughter to be committed to the brothels on Nefoa. A true father would not have held back the history and heritage it was his responsibility to show his sons!” Kalis finished that statement with a shout as his voice had risen during the exchange.

“What the fuck are you talking about boy?” Pusintin snapped at him. “You aren’t making any sense!” Pusintin saw Kalis look to the side out of the transmission and then nod his head and look back at him.

“No... I suppose I am not.” He stated. “At least not to you Marshall Pusintin. Or should I call you Pleistarchus? That is your name isn’t it? The name you were born with.”

Pusintin hesitated not knowing where Kalis was coming from. “You... I renounced that name when I became Kavalian!” He barked.

“How do you renounce the blood that flows within you?” Kalis asked. “How did you turn from everything you were taught and raised to believe in to become the perverted and sadistic nubous midaeus you are now? How?”

“I grow tired of this Kalis!” Pusintin barked. “Surrender yourself and I will provide some leniency. Resist and I will...”

“You will do nothing.” Kalis hissed. “You will do nothing do you hear me! I will never again allow you to twist me as you did in the past! I will never allow you to bring harm to the woman I have come to love... or harm those who are her family!”

“This is pointless Kalis.” Pusintin snarled. “You can not survive out here on your own! Where will you go? Who will help you? Did Koguth abandon you on some planet and that is why you are contacting me now?”

“Coming into range now Marshall.” The Ops Officer spoke softly from his station. “I am initiating a passive scan.”

Pusintin watched as Kalis smiled and shook his head. “No father... we are all here.” He said. “I have not been abandoned. I have been found. I have discovered the beginnings of all that you should have taught me. And I decided I wanted to know so much more.”

“You are not making any sense now Kalis!” Pusintin growled.

“Not to you I suppose.” Kalis said. “Have you found me yet father?” He asked. “I know you probably are beginning a passive scan with the sensors since you realized I was less than ten light years away.”

The Ops officer’s eyes grew wider as he looked at his instruments. “Marshall! Sir!” He gasped. “The signal... he is transmitting from...”

Pusintin turned to look at him. “What?” He barked.

“Marshall... Kalis is transmitting from a Union STRIKER transport.” The man answered. “One of their new STRIKER Dragon Transports!”

“What?” Pusintin snarled. “How can that...” Pusintin stopped and turned back to the image of Kalis with wide eyes. “Kalis... tell me you didn’t.” He spat.

Kalis smiled. “Oh but I did father.” He answered. “I have discovered what you would not teach me about the blood that runs through my veins father. I have discovered the beginnings of what it means and I like it. I embrace it!”

“You... you will be an outcast!” Pusintin almost screamed. “They will laugh at you boy! Scorn you! They will...”

“They will honor the path he has chosen.” The deep voice spoke from outside the cone of the transmission cutting off Pusintin’s words. “And they will respect above all else that he has chosen to walk that road even after all you have done to demean him. And they will help him at every turn. Because that is what our father taught our people.”

Pusintin’s eyes grew larger when the cone of the transmission expanded slightly and then Martin stepped up next to Kalis.

Martin looked at him intently from within the cone of the transmission. “Hello brother.” He said calmly. “Top of the morning to you! It’s a fine day to be a Spartan don’t you think?”

“Martin!” Pusintin snarled viciously. “You sonofabitch!”

Martin chuckled softly. “I see the beating I gave to you hasn’t improved your disposition brother. Just as vile and misguided as ever. A pity. Though it will make killing you a lot easier. And it will finally bring our mother peace.”

“I will kill you!” Pusintin snarled viciously.

Martin nodded his head. “Yeah... you and your cronies have been trying that for a while now. Trouble is... I’m still here. You ain’t very good at your job brother.” He said with a smile. “In fact... you down right suck at it.”

Pusintin burned with hatred as he stepped closer to the transmission. “I will find you Martin!” He hissed. “I will find you and after I watch you bleed out your life, I will take back what I took from you and made mine! You should have heard her squeal Martin. Begging for more from her mate. Begging me to fuck her more!”

Martin smiled sadly and shook his head. “You have forgotten so much about what it means to be Lycavorian brother.” Martin said.

Pusintin watched Martin reach to the side and then his eyes grew wider when he pulled For'mya into the transmission. She appeared surprised at this action, but pressed her lush, elven body against Martin intimately and quite willingly. Pusintin’s eyes narrowed and burned with rage, his fists clenching and unclenching when Martin leaned over slightly and kissed For'mya hungrily. For'mya responded instantly, her hand coming up to his face as she kissed him back just as hungrily. Pusintin watched as Martin pulled away from their kiss and firmly nuzzled the outer edges of For'mya’s four inch high elven ears. For'mya’s face showed the reaction that had, as her lips parted in bliss and her eyes closed in a dreamy expression of ardor. Martin captured her lips again quickly and her eyes opened to stare at him. They locked eyes for only a brief moment, though Pusintin would never know what Martin told her within Mindvoice. Whatever he told her made her face brighten and her lips curl into a seductive smile as she pressed closer to him and wrapped her arms around his waist.

Martin turned back to his brother. "I turned her brother." Martin said. "I made her like us. I made it so she could feel what she feels as a female wolf. I don't need some device implanted in her head blocking her natural abilities in order to actually make her feel things. You never had her brother, you never had her because I never lost her. I am in her blood, just as she is in mine. Whatever she felt with you was because you forced it upon her and she had no defense against it because I didn't do what I should have done." Martin looked at For'mya once more who was staring up into his face with adoration in her dark brown eyes. "I have since rectified that brother. And I have exposed her to everything about me that I should have shown her years ago." Martin turned back to look at his brother as For'mya buried her face into his neck and shoulder and squeezed him even harder. "You'll never have her again. You never had the true For'mya anyway. The part of her that resides within her heart and in her mind. That has always belonged to me and I cherish it even more now."

In a move that was very rare and completely out of character for For'mya Leonidas she turned towards Pusintin in the transmission and stepped away from Martin slightly. There was a reason that For'mya was considered the most patient and laid back of Martin's Queens by many people within the Union. She rarely lost her temper, and while she didn't hesitate to act and wear clothes that accented her sexuality, she did not often go out of her way to exploit that.

"If you knew anything about women, you would know we don't beg for more unless what we are getting is not enough." For'mya snarled baring her wolf fangs as her eyes changed quickly to that of her wolf persona. "And in your case Pusintin, the quality and much more importantly, the quantity was sorely lacking."

For'mya smiled as Pusintin's eyes grew wide at the blatant dig towards his manliness. He heard several different female voices in the background of the transmission that broke out into hysterical laughter as For'mya turned away from him and began to move out of the cone of the transmission, purposely brushing her hip against Martin as she passed him and letting her hand brush across his crotch. Even he was looking at her with wide eyes and a smile that explosives would not have been able to remove from his face. He looked back up at his brother in the transmission.

"Ouch!" Martin said. "That had to hurt brother!" He exclaimed.

Pusintin was trembling in undisguised anger and hatred. "I will kill you!" He almost screamed. "I will kill you and fuck all your precious Queens in front of your corpse before I give them to my men!"

Martin laughed as he pulled out the disc. "Good luck with that brother." He said. "I do want to thank you for this though." He said holding up the disc. "You recognize it don't you?"

Pusintin's eyes grew even wider indicating that he did in fact recognize it. "Kalis... you..."

Kalis nodded. "I did father." He answered proudly. "I took it from right under your nose. You are not so skilled as you like to think it seems!"

"A decade of your COM traffic stored on this disc." Martin said looking at the disc. "A decade of your dirty secrets and who knows what plans you had concocted in that insignificant brain of yours. And now it belongs to me. Pretty stupid to store all that on one disc and not several. But then again, you don't seem to be known for doing the smart thing." He looked at Pusintin. "Armetus and Marci are going to have a field day with this. I'm quite sure it will have a whole lot of information that Pian can use to fight that lunatic Keleru. We also downloaded the computer core from your personal LEUGERS before we blew it up. I'm pretty sure that will have more data on it showing what a coward you really are."

"Coward!" Pusintin screamed. "I am no coward!"

Martin lowered the disc. "You are the worst kind of coward brother." He said evenly. "You prey on the weak and the defenseless. You seek to control through fear and manipulation. Keleru isn't what you think he is brother... though I suspect you already knew that." Martin saw the light of realization in his brother's eyes and he smiled. "Yeah... I figured as much. For someone who thinks they know everything... you are as dumb as a fucking rock brother. Father should have discarded you five minutes after you took a breath."

"You know nothing!" Pusintin screamed. "You did not even know our father!"

"I know our father better in death than you ever did while he was living." Martin growled at him. "You are a disgrace to him and every moment you breath you shame his blood within your veins!"

“I shame!” Pusintin roared. “You share a bed with the very creature he was fighting his entire life! Your son shares a bed with Yuri’s offspring! The sister of the monster who ordered our father killed! Who is a disgrace brother!”

“Androcles has more honor in his little toe than you carry within your entire body you fool!” Martin hissed. “He is... he is everything a Spartan inspires to be! And so much more. Our father would have been proud to call him grandson. Just as he will be proud to look down from the heavens and see that first Karun and now Kalis have turned from the path you set them on and embraced the Spartan and wolf blood within them. You are a disgrace to our kind! You have fallen so far that you could not even remember to imprint the children you forced upon For'mya. So intent on grasping power through her and the children she could give to you that you forgot the most basic instinct of our people when it comes to our children!” Martin moved closer to the transmission. “Fedor and Eirene are my children now. They found my imprint on For'mya when they reached for it from their mother’s womb. In her blood and her mind. They call me father. And I will be the father to them that you could never be. Just as I will be the father to Karun and Kalis that you never were. You are a fucking worm Pleistarchus! A cockroach! You are unworthy to have our father’s blood flowing in your veins!”

“You... I will gut you like a dog!” Pusintin snarled menacingly. “I will gut you and watch as your entrails spill around your feet and the life leaves your body.”

“Big talk from a man who has been stumbling around the stars looking for us with no success.” Martin told him. “You think I don’t know how you are tracking For'mya brother? Did you really believe I would not discover this? I know every tiny millimeter of her body, by touch and by taste, just as I do with all of my Queens. Right down to their toes. When I worship them in our bed brother, I worship them completely. Utterly. You have been able to continue tracking For'mya because I have allowed it brother. But now... now I grow tired of this game.” Martin reached to his belt and pulled the P1 out of its pouch. He activated it with a single touch. “Avi?”

-I am monitoring Martin Leonidas- Avi’s mechanical voice replied instantly.

“Avi... initiate the reverse Borellum Acoustic Pulse.” Martin told him.

-Initiated- Avi answered. -The Borellum Pulse is now being blocked. When will you be returning?-

“We’ll be back in a few hours Avi. See you then.” Martin spoke lowering the P1. He looked at his brother in the transmission. “I’ll just leave you to stumble around out here brother. I’m going to go to this planet we have found. White sandy beaches. Sunny. Cool lakes and oceans. I’m going to sit on the beach with my Queens and enjoy the sunset. Sooner or later you’ll stumble into something or someone that will chew you up and spit you out. Saves me the trouble.”

“I will find you Martin!” Pusintin growled angrily. “I will find you and I will enjoy killing you.”

Martin nodded his head. “I’m sure.” He answered laconically. “Problem is... you have to pull your head out of your ass long enough to wise up and find the balls to come get me. How long have you been chasing me and you haven’t done nothing. You’re a coward brother. Bring your ass here and let’s have a stand up fight. Or... turn your fugly face around and go home with your tail between your legs. You do that really well.”

“I will kill you!” Pusintin screamed.

“You couldn’t wipe your ass with both hands, a flashlight and your junior aide holding your balls out of the way.” Martin quipped. “You’re a coward and you are useless. For'mya is mine Pleistarchus. She was always mine and she will always be mine. You are nothing to her. You’re a sorry excuse for a man. Can’t keep your children and you need to force yourself on women in order to get their attention. Pathetic.”

“I...” Pusintin began.

“I’m done with you!” Martin snapped shaking his head. “You are a waste of time. Your children are dumping you like the shithead you are and no one is scared of you brother. Not anymore. They think you are a fucking nut job!”

“You fucking...”

“I will teach your sons what they need to know.” Martin said. “I will teach them so that our father will look down and be proud of them. He looks down and sees you and he wants to vomit. You aren’t worthy enough to carry the blood you have in your veins. You're just another piece of shit bully." Martin looked at Kalis. "Is there anything else you want to say Kalis?" He asked.

Kalis shook his head quickly. "No Uncle. I think you have been quite clear."

Martin looked back at Pusintin. "Doubtful." He said. "Your father isn't too quick on the uptake." Martin smiled. "Have a great day brother. You are a walking around dead man and don't even know it. And recognize that you will never have the chance to do the one thing you have never been able to do. Beat me at anything."

"Why you... I will... Arrgghhh!" Pusintin began to scream at the transmission before it disappeared and he was staring at nothing.

MARTIN'S STRIKER

"Arrgghhh!" They began to hear Pusintin scream before Martin slammed down on the panel and cut the transmission.

Martin looked at the transmission disc for a moment longer and then turned to Kalis. "He's got a set of lungs on him." He said. "He screams really loud."

Kalis couldn't help but openly laugh and then Mata was joining him as he had watched the entire exchange from the doorway into the cockpit. "I don't think he... I have never seen him so angry Uncle." Kalis finally said.

"Good. Maybe he'll accidentally shoot himself when he is cleaning his weapon." Martin spoke. "Save us all a lot of trouble." Martin reached out and held the disc for Kalis to take. "Hang onto this for me. We'll go through it when we get back to the ARC ROYAL." He waited until Kalis took it and then slapped his shoulder. "Now get back there to that beautiful young woman. I've kept you away from her too long."

Kalis looked at him. "Uncle..."

Martin shook his head and smiled. "You have no need to say it mandri." He said. "The look in your eyes when you look at Serale is all the knowledge we need. Now go."

Kalis smiled and turned to exit the cockpit, Mata following him, his arm going over his shoulders as they went down the stairs. Martin watched until they were out of sight and then he turned back to see For'mya, Tina and Endith looking at him intently.

"What?" He asked.

For'mya stepped closer to him. "Martin you..."

"Boss... you do realize that you just told that fucking scum bucket how to find us." Tina spoke cutting off For'mya.

Martin nodded his head. "I know." He answered his eyes never leaving For'mya's face.

"Oh... ok." Tina said. "Just wanted to make sure... you know, make sure you didn't just tell our enemy where we are taking our vacation or anything. Wouldn't want him crashing our party now."

"Why Martin?" For'mya asked. "Why would you do such a thing?"

Martin stepped closer to her, drew her into his arms and kissed her softly. "Avi?" He spoke to the thin air.

-I am here Martin- Avi's voice answered from the internal cockpit speakers.

"Did you mark their location?" Martin asked.

-I have a firm lock. Using OMEN THREE'S Long Range Array I will be able to track them once they come within three systems of our location-

"Say they are smarter than I think and they figure out what to look for immediately." Martin said. "How many planets in the area like the one I described?"

-There are thirty-one planets with similar atmospheric and terrain properties as you described between our current location and the planet you have chosen to land on Martin- Avi answered. -Which we will begin doing in exactly three point three hours-

“And how long to fully scan those thirty-one planets to insure we are not on them?” Martin asked.

-Given the level of Kavalian sensor technology, at least twelve hours per planet- Avi replied. -That does not take into account travel time-

“So three weeks, give or take a few days?” Martin asked.

-That would be reasonably accurate- Avi said.

“Thank you Avi.” Martin said. “Send the signal to Yuriko to initiate Phase One. I want full sensor sweeps done of the first target by tomorrow evening when we return.”

-And Target Two-

“We’ll decide after we see the sensor readings.” Martin said.

-Understood- Avi said. -I will have everything ready when you return. ARC ROYAL out-

For'mya reached up and took his face in her hands, feeling his hard body pressed against her own. “What are you doing Martin Leonidas?” She asked.

“I’m doing what I need to do For'mya.” Martin answered her softly. “You know that.”

“Martin you don’t have to do this.” For'mya started to speak but Martin put a finger to her lips and shook his head.

“Yes I do Kinsoaurgai.” He said softly. “You know that as well as I do. He needs to pay for what he has done. For everything he has done, but mostly for what he did to you. Only then will the debt of honor be paid. Only then will my mother and my father, wherever he may reside now, only then will they have their honor back. Their peace. Only then will you finally be able to move on.”

“Martin I have...” For'mya started again but Martin leaned forward and nuzzled her elven ear causing her to gasp in bliss and pull him tighter.

“You can not hide it from me For'mya.” He said softly drawing his face back until he was looking at her. “From Aricia, from Anja and Dysea, from Bella and Cirith, but not from me my beautiful wife and Queen. Not from me.”

“Martin... he is your brother.” For'mya said softly as her dark eyes began to tear up.

Martin shook his head again. “No. Danny is my brother For'mya. He has always been my only brother. That will never change. Ever. Pleistarchus stopped meaning anything to me when he took you from me and forced himself upon you. He is not my brother any longer For'mya my Queen. He is my enemy. I intend to treat him like any other of mine.”

“Martin...”

“I am going to bait him; I am going to draw him in; I’m going to wear him out and then I am going to kill him For'mya. In the most horrific way I can possibly think of.” Martin said. “For over three thousand years of sins he has heaped upon the weak and the defenseless. For what he did to you my beautiful For'mya, for what he has put his children through, for every sin he has ever committed. He must atone for that and I will be the instrument of that atonement. I’m the only one who can.” Martin traced her lips with his finger and smiled at her. “Then it will be over. Then we all can move on. For we have much bigger problems coming our way my love. Much bigger problems.”

For'mya’s eyes furrowed in confusion as Martin kissed her and then quickly moved out of the cockpit before she could ask him what he meant. She watched his back for a moment and then turned to look at Tina and Endith.

“Ok... did anyone else just get this really bad chill running up their spine?” Endith asked them.

“Man... that wasn’t a chill Endy” Tina exclaimed. “That was a fucking blizzard lover.” She looked at For'mya. “For'mya?”

For'mya looked at her and shook her head. “I have no idea what he meant.” She stated softly.

“Shit!” Endith swore. “Something tells me we don’t want to know what he meant. That ain’t good. Shit... that ain’t good at all.”

EARTH SPARTA TEMPORARY SENATE OFFICES

“...Been communicating with Dutkne’s senior aide almost daily as time grows shorter.” Deia told Andro as they sat in the office that had been secured for her. There were two very stern looking Durcunusaan outside her office, while Jomann sat on the couch just inside the door. The entire building was swarming with security now for the Durcunusaan would take no more chances with the lives of those they were charged to protect. “A polite young man, a little too polite, but very capable it seems.”

Andro smiled. “Tenna... you are an icon to the people among the Protectorate.” He told her. “He is probably just awestruck.”

“An icon?” Deia gasped. “You must be joking!”

Andro shook his head. “The woman who helped draft the laws of our people. You are just as well known and honored as grandfather Resumar and Feravomir Canth.”

Deia laughed softly. “I helped to draft nothing. I was simply in the same room with them when they hammered out our laws.”

“And I’m quite sure they did not asked you or grandmother Eliani anything at all about how certain laws should be established and implemented.” Andro said sarcastically.

Deia met his eyes and smiled shyly. “Well... I suppose there...”

“That is what I thought.” Andro said with a grin now. “Face it Tenna Deia... you are the last true link to grandfather and grandmother for many of us who were not alive back then. We will always look at you differently because of that. Those in the Protectorate are no different.”

Deia nodded her head slowly. “Perhaps.” She said softly.

“How does it stand now?” Andro asked her as he held the data pad in one hand and the mug of his mother’s coffee in the other.

“A Protectorate cruiser will arrive here three weeks after you leave.” Deia told him regaining her famous composure. “We have worked it out so that the escort will be a healthy combination of their ships and ours. That should provide you enough time to determine where the Vanari will stand.”

Andro nodded. “If what Denali and Coren have been telling me is accurate... I will need the time. Coren believes many of the Vanari Regents are on his side, but the real power rests with many of those who do not.”

“Do not lose your focus with them Mandri.” Deia spoke. “They are politicians like those who used to live and work on this planet. They will curry favor in many different ways. I have spoken with Coren as well and he impresses me. Far more than he did before. He has come a long way.”

Andro nodded in agreement. “Yes he has. With his connections and the information they have slowly been putting together we just may be able to convince the other Regents that we are not the enemy.”

“The Rothryn are the unknown here Andro, especially after you told me about the reaction of this Harira woman.” Deia said. “We know how to deal with species like the Vanari. You have already had Deni explain to them, at least a small portion, of what will happen if they choose to continue to embrace their misguided and inaccurate conceptions about us as a whole. The Rothryn however, they are a different story.”

“Lycavorians who cannot shift their forms but are stiff no different than us.” Andro said softly nodding his head. “Sehri’s father seems very genuine Tenna. And he has done much to help Coren and Deni get information on the OSG and their operations.”

Deia nodded. "I have spoken to Aleatia on several occasions. Putting aside the obvious bias she has for her husband and mate, she has told me of many things he has done through the years that tell me he is the ally we need there. Changing the minds of the senior families and clans as Aleatia says is not going to be so easy. They are too much like us when we were just beginning to rise from our past. And this information you gave to Panos about this Rothryn Academy and how they view Etheric users is very troubling to me."

Andro nodded. "Yes... me as well." He said. "I get the sense from listening to Sehri and speaking to Aleatia, that Etheric users in Rothryn space lack a certain freedom to do as they wish. They are closely monitored and controlled."

"Controlled." Deia said. "There is the word I don't like." She stated. "Controlled implies many things... and none of them good. And soon they will have not only Denali, but you and Sadi and Lisisa and some of the most powerful Etheric users in the galaxy within their grasp. And given what you have told me about this Shaman Master woman, it makes the hair on the back of my neck stand up."

"We will be careful Tenna." Andro said with a grin. "I certainly do wish to become the object of some dissection or experiment."

Deia reached across the small table and cuffed him gently in the side of the head as she had done so many times as he was growing. "Do not joke Androcles." She scolded him. "This is serious. I do not enjoy having your father and mothers out there in the unknown and now having you basically doing the same thing is even worse."

Andro looked at her and set his coffee down. He took her hand in his and brought it to his cheek. "I am listening Tenna." He told her firmly. "I am taking everything in. Your words do not fall on deaf ears. I know this will put a great deal of strain on you when you don't need it, but I will be careful."

Deia smiled at him and drew her hand back making sure to caress his cheek. "I am well on the way to being fully recovered Mandri." She told him. "You do not need to worry about the strain on me. I have dealt with far more strain than this in my time. Just remember to always keep your wits about you."

Andro smiled again. "Sadi will not let me forget my wits." He said.

Deia laughed softly and nodded her head. "And that is why she is so loved among our people now." She said. "She is the only one who can actually control you. I was against letting her history into the open, but I was wrong. When our people, everyone, when they saw all she had endured and suffered in order to protect her father; when they see the way she looks at you, how the two of you interact so effortlessly. They are all your strength Mandri... but Sadi is your core. As you are hers. Just as your mother is with your father."

Andro nodded. "I know." He said softly. "Tenna... does it ever get any easier?" He asked her looking at her across the small table.

Deia shook her head. "No. There will always be others, even among our own people, who believe that they know what is best for everyone. That no matter what path we walk, the path that they advocate is the only correct one. Many are simply fools, but there are some who can become dangerous if left unchecked."

"Icho." Andro said. "Ulana's father."

Deia nodded. "Both of them were cancers. Icho still is. And he has brought so many to his side and given them a means to voice their fool ideals. You should have let Armetus do what he wanted when we first discovered what he was doing."

Andro shook his head. "No. We do not have all the pieces yet. Until we do... we cannot move against him." He returned his gaze to her. "Once we do though, then Armetus may have his way with him and all of his cronies."

Deia nodded. "Well... that is not something for you to be concerned with now. Armetus and Marci will take care of that when they have what they need." She took his hand in hers. "I am not in agreement with you taking your younger brothers and sisters Andro. Or Gorgo, Dasha and Normya. I think it is far too much of a risk. So many of our family will be in the same location at once."

Andro nodded. "I know you don't agree." He said. "But I have given it much thought Tenna. I know that father and my mothers need to see their children. They have been away for too long now as it is. 341 will have a Pralor transport on round the clock standby to remove all of them if they become endangered, but you know as well as I this is our strength as a family."

Deia nodded slowly. "Yes it is. Just be very mindful. Deion and Nara can take care of themselves now... but Retta, Calyb and Byron are still young. They still have much to learn and experience."

“Tenna... when have I ever put any of my siblings in harm.” Andro asked.

“Never.” Deia hissed quickly. “That is what I mean. You go to such extremes to keep them safe that you sometimes forget to take care of yourself. Just be mindful Androcles. Be aware of everyone and everything around you.”

“I will Tenna.” He said. “And if I have a question on anything I will not hesitate in the least to contact you.”

“Good.” Deia said as she sat back. “Events with Pian are moving very smoothly. I never thought I would hear myself say I have come to admire a Kavalian, but this man is cut from a very different mold. Those Pride Leaders with him look to him for leadership. And Jalersi is pivotal as well. They view her in a much different light than I expected. One of honor and also leadership. It appears that I am guilty of stereotyping their people and I have been for years. I will not do so any longer.”

“With grandfather Riall helping the Coven, which I’m quite sure the Kavalian high command knows, they may think when Pian begins his move they can attack us in retaliation.” Andro said. “Grandfather Vengal and General Vistr will teach them the error of their ways. They will have to fully concentrate on Pian or he will fracture their entire command structure in weeks. Keleru will know this and he will need to focus entirely on him. Any attacks against Union forces will be secondary and weak.”

Deia nodded. “I’ve already instructed Ceneu to put additional Omega Teams on Hadaria as soon as you depart.”

Andro looked at her with a sly smile. “Tenna?”

Deia snorted. “Hadaria is a founding member of the Union!” She hissed. “I will not allow that illegal government to remain in power any longer than necessary. The teams will only observe and report, but the Hadarian people are part of the Union and we will free them.”

“Yes we will.” He said.

“You are allowing Ulana to accompany you.” Deia asked him. “Even after what she attempted with Sadi.”

“If I tried to keep her out of it she would cause more trouble.” Andro answered. “I am meeting with a few others later today that will be coming with us. Those you chose I believe. Anlah and Jucara among them. They can keep her under control.”

Deia nodded. “Good.” She said. “And since Shiria has returned, at least briefly, you should have her give you a status on finding the others among our people that carry the Paladin gene. They could play a very large part in our future if what Shiria and Wayonn say does indeed come true.”

“What do you think?” Andro asked her.

Deia looked at him and smiled. He was so much like his father. Martin never hesitated to ask her opinion on anything political and on many things militarily. He valued her insight and it seemed he had made this clear to his sons. Use every asset that you had no matter how off the wall it might seem. It was also Martin’s way of insuring that Deia never lost importance or any influence among their people.

“To confront an enemy with nothing but hatred in their hearts and souls.” Deia said softly in reply. “It is not something we have ever faced before Androcles. The Coven, the Kavalians, even the Evolli, all of them have been driven politically in some way, shape or form. These Scourge however, they are not motivated by politics. It’s almost like a religious thing with them and those are the most dangerous foes to face.”

Andro nodded his head. “There is nothing I do not agree with in that statement.” He said.

Deia waved her hand. “This is not the time for that discussion. You have much to do and little time to do it all.” She told him. “I will keep you advised of anything that might change with Pian and the others, but so far they are absorbing all we are teaching them like sponges. Some have even asked to have their mates brought here. I have approved this. Pian has started something Androcles, something powerful. And we need to insure it carries into the future.”

Andro got to his feet. “That we do.” He said. “I’m going to meet Sadi, Ne’Veha and Sehri for lunch.” He said. “We’ll return to Cranae Island then. Carisia and Lu’ria should be back from Eden City by then. You could join us for dinner?”

Deia shook her head. “I have much to do myself.” She said.

“Sadi is cooking.” Andro offered with a twinkle in his eye.

Deia met his gaze and smiled brightly. “Then you have convinced me.” She said as she stood up. “I don’t think that girl has cooked anything since she became your mate that wasn’t fabulous.”

“Seven o’clock then?” Andro said.

Deia nodded. “I will be there.”

Andro leaned over and kissed her cheek. “I will remember everything Tenna.” He said softly. “I give you my word.”

Deia squeezed his arms. “I know.” She said. “Now go. I will see you for dinner.”

VEYERAI HIGH COVEN SPACE

“...can stop sending your reports to Pa'cour Lidene.” Yuri said with a small smile as she stood in front of his desk.

The man looked up at her. “I am only trying to be through Princess. I do not...”

Yuri settled into the chair in front of his desk and held up her hand silencing his words. “I am well aware of what you are trying to do Lidene.” She said. “I also know that I have treated you harshly... very harshly in the past. With little or no reason. I have given you reason to fear for your life and the lives of those who work for you.” Yuri met his eyes. “True?”

Lidene shifted in his chair. He had seen how she had been the last weeks, but a large part of him still did not believe all the gibberish about spirits and mysterious powers, and he was still trying to determine if it was all true. “Princess I...”

“I am not a Princess anymore Lidene.” Yuri said. “Nor do I want to be.”

Lidene looked at her. “What... what should I call you then?”

Yuri smiled. “My name would be a good start.”

Lidene shook his head quickly. “No. I could never do that. I...”

Yuri leaned forward. “Lidene... I was a colossal bitch!” She spoke. “To you and to everyone. I know you have a hard time believing that I have changed, but has anything I have done in the last weeks been what I would normally do?”

“No.” Lidene answered.

“Would the Yuri you knew... would she tolerate having an Immortal share her bed every night. Would she have thought about giving birth to a half Immortal child just to try and further some façade she was putting forth to fool you and others into believing that she had changed? Would I have done any of that Lidene?”

Lidene’s eyes narrowed slightly. “Impossible.” He said finally. “You would never...” Lidene stopped talking and looked at her. He saw the smile on her face and the brightness of her dark eyes. The old Yuri would never have insured that they escaped with their families. She would never have insured that those families were housed and taken care of and protected. She would never have allowed an Immortal to touch her in the way he had seen Pa'cour touching her these last weeks. The way she looked at him, allowed him to hold her close, even kissing him in full view of others. This was not what the old Yuri would have done or even thought of. He leaned back in his chair. “Nalavi... he tried to explain it to me.” He said softly. “I did not... I did not believe it could be.”

Yuri nodded her head. “You deal in facts and what you can see and determine with your mind Lidene. You are a scientist. That is to be expected.” Yuri then did something he had never seen her do. She chortled softly in laughter. “If it had not happen to me... I would never have believed it either.”

“Princess...?”

“I’ve had my eyes opened to so much in the last weeks Lidene.” Yuri told him. “I can never take back what I have done in the past. All I can do now is try to make amends in as many ways as I can.” She met his eyes. “I want to see the High Coven become what it is... what it was destined to become Lidene. The only way it can do that is with Narice leading it. I have no desire to be thrust back into that role. None. I... my task now is to help her however I can from the shadows. That is what I have always been good at. I have found an emotion with Pa'cour that I had never experienced until now Lidene. That emotion is love. I love him. I love him with every breath that I take. I am nothing without him. Without our daughter. Without the children we will have in the future. That is who I am now. I am not asking you to believe what happen to me... I'm asking that you judge me now on what I do now. If you can not do this I will understand. And I will make a ship ready to take you wherever you wish to go."

Lidene came to his feet. "No!" He spoke quickly. "No! That is not... I do not want that!"

"Nor do I." Yuri told him. "You are the... you are the finest scientist I have ever known Lidene. I do not wish to lose you. That is why I have not interfered in how you have done things. I don't need too. You get results. I just need..." Yuri got to her feet now as well. "I just need you to trust me now. I have not given you reason to do so in the past... so I ask that you take a leap of faith and trust me now."

"That... that is not something the old Yuri would have asked." He said.

Yuri shook her head. "No. I suppose not."

Lidene met her eyes. "This change in you Princess... it has something to do with the technology you have me working on doesn't it?"

Yuri nodded her head. "In a manner of speaking... yes." She replied deciding on the way here that she would keep nothing from him. "More to do with the people who developed that technology and less about the tech itself. At least concerning me that is. It is very complicated to explain. I'm not sure I understand all of it."

"This is the reason Androcles Leonidas spared you isn't it?" Lidene asked pointedly. "You are... you are like him aren't you?"

Yuri chuckled again. "Like Androcles? No. I am not even close to being what he and his father are. What others among their family and their people are. But I am similar in some ways I suppose... yes. And there is a chance that there are those among our own people who are like them. That is why I left all of my mother's files with you to look through. She did not share what information she had in this regard and I determined that you would be able to make the most sense of it."

Lidene's eyes grew wider. "Your mother's files!" He almost yelled. "I forgot!"

Yuri looked at him. "What?"

"Your mother's files!" Lidene spoke going to his makeshift desk and pushing aside several data pads until he snatched the one he was looking for. "I decrypted several data files last night! The information was astounding!"

"About the weapons systems you are working on?" Yuri asked.

Lidene held out the pad to her. "No. About the High Coven cloning process and just how advanced it really was!"

Yuri took the pad from him. "I don't understand." She said as she began to read the file.

"Our cloning process was decades more advanced than anyone thought Princess." Lidene told her excitedly. "Your mother was hiding most of the important breakthroughs even from the senior people on the project."

"What does our old cloning program have to do with the weapons you are working on?" Yuri asked him looking up.

"Nothing." Lidene answered her. "Nothing at all. Until you get to page forty-three of that report." He said pointing to the pad. "Beginning there it lists three clones. Three perfect clones. And when I saw perfect... I mean perfect. In every possible way. Three perfect Lycavorian pureblood clones."

Yuri glanced at him with wide eyes. "I was under the impression that cloning a pureblood Lycavorian was next to impossible because of the PCC content of their blood and their healing capabilities."

Lidene nodded his head. "As was I." He stated quickly. "It is not really my field and I'm sure Nalavi would be better able to explain it... but if what is written there is true... then they succeeded Princess."

Yuri nodded. "I still do not see how this matters Lidene." She said. "We have all but stopped using our cloning program and it does not matter how many clones we have, it will not help us against the reason you are working on the weapons systems."

Lidene looked at her oddly. "The reason?" He asked.

Yuri nodded. "I will give you all the information I have about that. And the reason you are working on the programs that you are. But why is this cloning issue so important to you?"

Lidene took the pad from her hand, tapped on it for several seconds and then gave it back to her. "That is why." He said.

Yuri's eyes nearly exploded out of her head. "A l'Ze'zhuanth Sanguine Sengeren!" She exclaimed. (By the Ancient Vampire Lords)

Lidene nodded. "I... I thought that as well. It seems your father's work on the King's mother Gorgo was the breakthrough they needed. It is no wonder they kept her imprisonment such a secret."

"Lidene you are certain these files are accurate?" Yuri stammered.

Lidene nodded. "They are unaltered from the moment I was able to decrypt them." He replied.

Yuri turned and looked at the wall for a long moment. "This... this is not good." She said. She turned back to him. "This stays between us Lidene. It has to stay between us. Take it to Nalavi and confirm that it is indeed possible but no one else is to know!"

Lidene nodded. "I understand." He said.

"Trust me on this Lidene." Yuri said. "If this information were to fall into the wrong hands it could destabilize the entire Lycavorian Union! It could... it could destroy everything!"

"Then they are not our enemy any longer?" Lidene asked.

"Gods no! They never should have been our enemy to begin with! My mother... her father before her... they made us enemies in their lust for power! Their need to control!" Yuri exclaimed. "The Lycavorian Union is the best hope for the High Coven! The best hope for the universe as we go forward! If the Union falls... all of us will fall!"

Lidene looked at her. "I don't understand why?" He asked.

Yuri gave him the pad. "Take this to Nalavi and have him verify that this is actually possible Lidene. We must know for sure. I need to... I need to contact Androcles."

Lidene's eyes went wide. "About this?" He gasped.

Yuri shook her head. "No... about Onera." She replied. "This... this no one knows about until we all sit down with Pa'cour and make certain she was able to do this."

Lidene looked at the pad. "And if she was?" He asked.

Yuri looked at him as his eyes came up. "Then... then I will have to do something I have no desire to do. Something I fear more than death itself." She replied.

"Princess...?" Lidene asked.

"I will need to face Martin Leonidas and tell him this." Yuri said. "And pray he does not strike me down."

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

EARTH

SPARTA

KAVALIAN EMBASSY

Jalersi'Nruarani.

She was not religious in any way, but if there were Gods she would be praying to them every day, for almost more than anything else she cherished saying those two words.

Jalersi stopped just outside the doorway into the bathroom of their quarters in the newly repaired Kavalian Embassy and looked across the room at where Pian was sitting on the edge of the bed. He was half dressed and studying a data pad between lacing up his boots. Staring at his broad back as she secured the large towel around her naked form, Jalersi felt a shiver of desire and passion course through her stronger than anything she had ever felt in her life. Something that had only started with Pian. He had cut all of his body hair very short and now the light brown fur that covered his powerful frame was feather soft to the touch. He had kept the hair on his head longer, pulled into two separate braids on either side of his head at her request, giving him a very distinguished and very delicious look in her eyes. Jalersi had never really stopped to think about how incredibly handsome he was to her eyes. Even that night together nearly twenty years ago, as wild and unkempt as he had been then, he had an almost magnetic pull over her. She should have seen it that night, recognized it for what it was, as Pian had taken her with such blistering passion and emotion. His kisses had consumed her, his hands never ceasing to explore her body in ways Pusintin never had. She had failed to see it that night. She failed because she believed in the words of her father and Pusintin more than she had believed in her own female intuition. She would never make that same mistake again.

Pian'Nruarani treated her as if she was the most valuable thing in the entire universe to him and she doubted she would ever know how accurate that description truly was. Pian was always touching her in some way now, a simple caress of his fingers on her arm or cheek or a gentle squeeze of his arm around her waist, all to insure she knew how much he loved her. It was his way to show her that he was different than what she had experienced in her life. Pian never failed to ask her opinion of something that he knew nothing about. He was not politically astute and he was the first to acknowledge that, though he was learning quickly Jalersi knew. When he was named the interim leader of this new government they had formed, he turned to her and took her counsel first and foremost when it came to their people and what needed to be changed in order to bring them out of the abyss her father had taken them to. Now even many of the Pride Leaders had begun to look at her differently. As Pian's wife, she had taken the place of his mother as the ranking female among the Nruarani Pride and with his mother's backing and guidance, Jalersi had begun to help him shape something great.

The Nruarani Pride had become the catalyst for change. The other Kavalian Prides saw what they did and had begun to emulate them. The changes would not be easy or swift, Jalersi knew this, but they had begun and that is what mattered the most. The females of the other Kavalian Prides that followed them now held a place of respect and honor. No longer were they seen as inferior. Jalersi knew this was the largest change and it would be perhaps the hardest change to accept, but amazingly she had noticed many of the young men from the other Prides had embraced this ideal. It would be harder for the older men, but based on what she had seen with the Pride leaders here with them on Earth, the change had taken deep root and nothing would stop it now. These men were trying and in many cases succeeding in curbing centuries of ingrained culture and teachings. They were embracing the change and it was a testament to the influence of Pian and the resolve of those who followed him.

Pian had embraced her daughter Nikkei as his own; the fact that she was Pusintin's child did not matter in the least to him. He got along famously with Karun and honored that he had chosen to embrace the name and blood of his Lycavorian heritage. Nikkei however, she was different, and had chosen to take his name as her own just as her mother had done. Nikkei spent much of her time with Pian's mother and she no longer feared the Kavalian blood within her. Nikkei'Nruarani, as she adored being called now, she had embraced it now and Jalersi knew that there were several young Kavalians in the Nruarani Pride alone who had shown an intense interest in Nikkei because she shared her mother's corporeal beauty. Pian however, he would have none of it. He intended to make sure that the man who courted Nikkei did it for the right reasons and not to get close to him or Jalersi in an attempt to further his own gain. Whoever did decide to court Nikkei would need to pass the gauntlet that Pian and Karun had established. Her son Karun adored his half elven wife Ardis, and she adored him, and Karun had accepted the Lycavorian blood in his veins as well as many of their traditions, including the one looking out with great care for his siblings. Jalersi knew no young male would come near Nikkei without the proper intentions because of Pian and Karun. Jalersi thought briefly of Kalis and though her heart ached that she had lost him to his father's path, he was still her son and she still loved him. Pian understood this and had told her once that hope was never dead. That one day Kalis might wake up and discover that his father was not who he made himself out to be. Jalersi secretly hoped for that but she did not expect it.

Jalersi knew that all of this had begun simply because Pian desired was her.

For so many years he did not care about anything else but making her his and he had started himself down this path for that sole purpose. His reasons were different now, seeing what his actions and intent had born fruit to had changed him. He was dedicated now to seeing their people free of her father's oppression and rule of fear. His unrequited love for her had started him down this path and now that he had her, he would continue it willingly. He knew that without real change, he could never have the life he wanted with her. They could never have the life that they wanted. And there was certainly no other place Jalersi wanted to be now. Pian had shown her more love and passion in the few short months they had been together than Pusintin had shown her in all the years they were mated. In their bed, Pusintin did not compare to Pian in any way. In either size, skill or intent. When Pian made love to her it was with an almost endless passion and love and above all else a desire to make her never want anyone else. Jalersi had already decided that, and the decision had been so very easy. The moment Pian had buried himself within her completely and the base of his huge manhood had swelled, locking their groins together, Jalersi had made that decision. In that moment Jalersi had descended into a world of bright lights and crushing ecstasy. Locked together as they were in those moments, and the many moments since, her orgasms had come rushing forth almost non-stop and with devastating power. Feeling his hot seed erupting inside her depths sent her reeling over the edge of desire and into euphoric rapture each and every time. They could stay locked together like that for hours, each of them basking in the mutual pleasure until they were exhausted and spent. He had ravished her lush body, exploring every crevice and curve with his lips and tongue, something Pusintin would never have done. He delighted in this fact and the reaction he got from her when he did those things to her made him all the more eager to continue this practice and even improve on his skills. Things that even Jalersi had never thought of often times would send her spinning and screaming off into glorious heaven. And it did not matter to him in the least that since she had stopped taking the injections, her own tail had begun to grow back, causing the small of her back to be extra sensitive and quite the erogenous zone. At first she thought the change would take shape all over her body, but Anuk Simpson had assured her that this was not the case. The same thing that had happened to Athani was happening to her and once her tail was fully restored Anuk determined the change would cease.

Jalersi was not idle by any means with Pian. Not after what he made her experience and feel. She wanted him to know how she felt about him, how he was also now the center of her entire universe, and she took great joy in seeing the contortions of his face and body as she pleased him just as eagerly as he did her. If not more. She had memorized every hard muscle and line of his physique. The power that his body radiated alone could make her wet between her thighs. His huge cock reached places inside her, did things to her that Pusintin could never have reached or accomplished, and she lavished his organ with attention whenever she could. She tasted him as often as she wanted, savoring the taste and texture of his manhood like a fine meal. Being with him had brought out a part of her that had lain buried in obscurity for so many years and Jalersi nurtured that within herself. She was very playful in their bed and very vocal, and she did things to Pian that she would never have done to Pusintin.

Then there were the many nights where they just laid together in their bed, their naked bodies entwined together, and they savored the sensation of each other. Jalersi would never get enough of having his soft fur touching her naked flesh wherever she could. The warmth of his body was considerable and often times they did not need or care to use a blanket. He would sometimes extend the claws from his fingers and use them to stroke her skin ever so gently, sending delightful shudders through her body. She was his mate now, his wife and love, and Jalersi had never been happier in her entire life. They had begun a new future together along with those that followed Pian, and Jalersi had every intention of seeing that future come to fruition. Her life, her heart, her love, it all belonged to Pian now. As his did to her. They would take that strength and use it to free their people even if it cost them their own lives in the very process. Jalersi looked down at the small device in her hand and felt happiness flow through her. She padded across the room and crawled seductively across the bed until she was behind Pian. She felt him smile as her arms snaked over his broad shoulders and he instantly set aside the data pad and lifted his head as she brought her cheek to his and kissed his shoulder.

Pian turned his blue feline eyes on her face and thought to himself that he had never seen a more beautiful angel in all of his life. Her hand came up to his cheek and her fingers danced across his neck as he kissed her, breathing deeply of her freshly showered smell. Though not as acute as a Lycavorian's sense of smell, Kavalians could still distinguish between scents, and Jalersi always smelled sweeter to him than anything.

“What are you reading?” She asked him.

“Status reports.” He answered her. “The Union Senate has moved far faster than even Deia thought they would. They have voted on every article of our treaties and agreed to all of them with very minor changes in the wording.”

“Everything?” Jalersi gasped in surprise.

Pian nodded. “Aleou and the others were shocked as well, but General Azlenr seemed to already know what their answer would be. And Cowen did not seem particularly shocked either to be honest. Perhaps their interaction with Androcles gave them foresight into some things.” He told her.

Jalersi nodded her head. “Androcles touched Cowen in a way we will never understand Pian my love.” She said thoughtfully. “I think he will always have an insight into them now. And Azlenr owes him his life and his command. He saw what kind of man Androcles is and by virtue of that the Lycavorian people. Has Cowen made up his mind yet?"

Pian shook his head. "Not yet... but I believe he is leaning towards accepting the offer. He is different now Jalersi. The passion and emotion is still there, but he keeps it in check now. His lessons with the female that Androcles assigned to him are helping him immensely." Pian looked at her. "And I think he finds her fascinating and not a little attractive."

Jalersi laughed softly. "Now that would be something." She said. "You told me in all the years you have known him and watched him grow; he has never displayed an interest in any woman."

Pian nodded. "He hasn't. He has always been dedicated to his Pride. Like his father." He told her. "There was talk that he might not favor women at all."

"Pian!" Jalersi exclaimed with a smile.

"I am only telling you what was whispered. I never believed it." He answered her. "This Sherisa, she is the oldest daughter of Thr'won, the senior Mage of Sparta, and she is very strong in what they call this Etheric realm. Sherisa appears to take after her mother and she is very outspoken and forceful."

"There is nothing wrong with a strong woman." Jalersi said.

Pian smiled and shook his head. "No there is not. I have you... and I know this to be fact. And Nikkei takes after you in that regard." He said.

Jalersi smiled. "She adores you Pian." She said softly. "You are the father to her that she has never had."

Pian nodded. "It is an honor for me." He said.

Jalersi traced his jaw and smiled. "How many children do you want Pian my love?" She asked.

Pian smiled in reply. "We have never talked of that have we?" He said.

Jalersi shook her head. "No."

"I have always wanted a big family." Pian answered. "My father once said to me that a true Kavalian would want as many children as his wife and mate could give to him and remain healthy and strong herself." He looked at Jalersi with devoted eyes. "I only care that they are healthy and happy. And I hope any sons we have are as smart as you and any daughters are as equally beautiful."

Jalersi kissed him hard, his words causing her passions to ignite and course through her. She held his face in her hands as she ran her tongue along his lips playfully and he tried to catch it with his lips. It was a game they had started shortly after they had come together and it was one they played even in public now. Pian had made it a point to show her affection whenever he could and not care who was watching. She drew back after a long moment and stared into his eyes.

"Have you thought of any names?" She asked him.

"Names?" Pian asked with a smile and shake of his head. "Until now all I have focused on is doing what I needed to do to secure your love Jalersi." He said. "The names of children we might have never even crossed my mind." Her stared at her for a long moment. "I think... I think our first born son I would like to name after my father, if you approve. He was the one who started me on this road. Encouraged me. He never doubted I would win you over one day. I would like to honor him for that faith."

"Aelan'Nruarani." Jalersi said softly. She smiled at Pian, her blue eyes glittering in joy. "He will have a strong name. An honored name."

Pian nodded his head in agreement. "Yes he will." He said. "He will..." Pian stopped talking and looked at her oddly. "Why are you asking me this now Jalersi?" He questioned her suddenly on alert.

Jalersi shrugged. "I just thought it might be something we needed to talk about." She said with a huge smile. "Especially now."

"What is so special about now?" He asked. "We..." His eyes grew wide and he bolted to his feet next to the bed staring at her. "Jalersi! Are you saying... are you...?"

Jalersi couldn't hold in the tears of happiness she felt anymore and her own feline like eyes became moist as she held out the pregnancy test to him. "I... I asked Tarifa to get this for me because I wanted to be sure. Their tests are so much more accurate." She said as Pian took the device. "I carry... I carry your son in my womb Pian'Nruarani."

"My..." Pian looked at the test in his hands and found they were shaking. "My son." He gasped lifting his eyes to look at her. "You carry... you carry my son! My... my child?"

Jalersi hadn't really known what to expect when she told him. Pusintin had not shown much emotion at all when she told him she was carrying Karun, and hardly any with Kalis, Leruk or Nikkei. Pian's face however, it lit up and his bright blue eyes shined with unabashed and obvious delight. Jalersi yelped in surprise as he scooped her from the bed and into his arms and began to whirl her around their quarters while hugging her tightly to him. Jalersi laughed in total and complete happiness. This was certainly not what she had expected, but seeing him act this way, any lingering doubts that may have persisted in the back of her mind were fully tossed aside. He kissed her hard, his lips capturing hers in a sizzling show of devotion and love to her. Jalersi returned the kiss with all that she was, wrapping her arms around his shoulders as he held her suspended eight inches off the floor.

Pian stopped spinning her around and stared into her eyes. "How... how do you know it is... how do you know it is a boy?"

Jalersi's tear filled eyes glowed in love. "I know. A woman knows these things Pian my love." She stated softly.

Pian kissed her again and Jalersi basked in the intensity of the passion as she kissed him back. The door chime interrupted their moment and it became insistent when they ignored it initially. Pian didn't release her from his arms as he moved to the wall and stabbed his hand down on the wall panel.

"What?" He snarled almost angrily about the interruption.

"Pian... I'm sorry..." Karun's voice carried to them.

Pian's face immediately became softer. "No Karun. Forgive me my harshness." He replied as Jalersi rested her head on his shoulder.

"Andro is here and he wanted to speak to my mother and I." Karun's voice told them.

Jalersi lifted her head. "Us?" She asked. "Did he say why Karun?"

"No mother. Only that it was important." Karun answered. "Ardis and I are headed for the foyer to meet him. Come down as soon as... as soon as you are presentable."

Jalersi looked at Pian and her face broke into a smile as they both caught her son's implied comment from the tone of his voice. Karun knew that Pian had given her the love his father never had and his mother returned that love and emotion with happiness. He had never seen her so comfortable and glowing now that she had accepted and embraced her true feelings for Pian.

"We are... we are merely talking Karun." Jalersi finally stammered.

They heard Karun chuckle softly and then they heard Ardis's whispered admonishment to her husband and the sound of her striking his thick body. "Very well mother." He finally said. "Come down quickly."

Jalersi looked at Pian, his blue eyes making her shudder in happiness. She traced his strong jaw with her finger, delighting in the feel of the soft fur of his face. "I have never loved anyone or anything as I love you Pian'Nruarani." She spoke softly. "You have... you have given me something I never imagined I would have."

Pian kissed her softly. "No more than I love you Jalersi'Nruarani." He said.

"Let us go see what Androcles has to tell me." Jalersi spoke. "Then I wish to tell your mother and make plans with her for a traditional Kavalian ceremony for when our son joins us."

Pian looked at her with bright eyes. "She would be honored my wife." He said with a smile. "But first you must put regular clothes on." He said lowering her to the floor. "I do not wish to have others gaze upon delights that are only mine to see."

Jalersi laughed and gave him a shove in the shoulder. "Let them gaze." Jalersi spoke as she turned to head for the closet. "There is only one set of hands and eyes that will ever rest upon me again."

Pian watched her strut seductively across the room and once more he blessed his father for pushing him forward. He now had what he had desired most in his life in Jalersi... but that same faith his father had shown in him was now part of Pian. And he would use that faith to free his people so that he and Jalersi could have the life he wanted. Free of oppression and hate and death.

Pian would keep that faith close to his heart. Especially now that his future would include one more life. One of many more he hoped.

“...begun to settle in.” Cowen spoke as he led Andro and Jomann into the main foyer of the embassy and waved his arm around the interior. “Working with your people we have been able to remove everything from what Matuarr and his bastards did. We have replaced all of the offices and repaired the damage done.” Cowen looked at Andro. “I never fully appreciated the skill of your engineers Andro. I do now.”

Andro smiled. “They sure can build things can’t they?” He said.

“Indeed they can.” Cowen spoke looking at him intently. “You... you have come for my answer?”

Andro shook his head. “I told you I would give you a few days to think it over and work with Sherisa. How is that coming?”

Cowen’s eyes narrowed somewhat and he turned fully to face him. “I am a poor student and she is... she is very patient.” He said.

Andro nodded. “It is not easy I know.” He said. “Part of me regrets doing what I did. I do apologize for...”

Cowen shook his head quickly. “No!” He hissed sharply. “I do not regret it for a single moment! What you... what you showed me Androcles. Never in my life would I have been able to see things like I do now. Not without your actions. I will not turn away from that now. Not with the future of my people in the balance.”

“There is no need to rush.” Androcles told him. “Jomann can tell you that control only comes with time and patience.”

Jomann nodded in agreement. “I am still learning about what I am able to do.” He said in agreement. “It does not happen overnight.”

Andro nodded. “I as well.” He said. “Especially now.”

Cowen nodded his head. “I think Sherisa finds me amusing.” He said with no malice in his voice. “And she is...”

Andro looked at him. “She’s what?”

Cowen met his eyes. “She can distract me so easily.” He said almost embarrassingly. “I have never been... never been so close to an elven female. Seen them from afar yes... but never so close to me. Their beauty... her beauty... it is beyond anything I have ever seen.”

Andro nodded. “She does take after her mother in looks doesn’t she?” He said with a smile. “But remember... she’s half Lycavorian too. And she is very proud of that fact. She is sterner than her brothers and sisters, I know that from experience. She used to watch us as we were growing. I think that is because of the time she was born and was raised here in Sparta. It was not an easy life with everything happening then.”

Cowen nodded. “I don’t imagine it was.” He said.

“You have more in common than you might think Cowen.” Andro said. “Do not be afraid to ask her these things. It will build a trust between you that can only help with your studies.”

Cowen blinked several times. “I... I did not think of things this way.” He said. “Perhaps you are right.”

They turned as Karun and Ardis came down the stairs from the upper level and Ardis went immediately to hug Andro tightly. He squeezed her hard with a smile as Karun shook hands with Jomann.

“How you doing cousin?” He asked drawing back and looking at her.

Ardis smiled brightly. “It’s nice to be home.” She said holding his arms. “We are enjoying it as much as we are able before we leave to go back.”

Andro nodded his head and looked at Karun. He reached out and Karun grasped his arm without question, pulling him tightly into an embrace which Andro returned. “It’s good to see you Andro.” Karun said.

Andro smiled. “You are looking well cousin.”

Karun grinned. “It’s Ardis. She keeps me on my toes and feeds me well.”

Ardis laughed. “Ah! He does all the cooking! I hate to cook!”

Andro laughed as well and nodded. “Yes... I seem to recall we all got sick the last time you attempted your culinary skills.”

Ardis punched him lightly in the arm. “Hey! That was an accident.” She spat at him.

Andro nodded. “Indeed it was.” Ardis looked at him menacingly and Andro grinned even wider. “Ok... ok. No more making fun of your cooking.”

“What’s going on Andro?” Karun asked. “You wouldn’t have come here unless it was important. I know you are getting ready to lave soon.”

Andro nodded. “This is important.” He said. “And it is something you need to know as you go forward.”

“Androcles!” Jalersi’s voice echoed and they all turned to see her finish coming down the stairs, Pian right behind her.

Andro didn’t hesitate and he stepped up to her and took her hands. Though it was not something publicly spoken of, all of the Leonidas children held a special place in their hearts for Jalersi and Pian because of their actions in helping to save Aricia’s life. By their actions they had helped to save one of their mothers and would be forever honored and treated as extended members of their family. Andro gripped her hands tightly and leaned forward to kiss Jalersi’s cheek warmly. She smiled brightly and Andro detected the distinct change in her scent almost immediately. He leaned back quickly and looked at her, questions in his eyes. Jalersi nodded but said nothing and he knew they were waiting to tell everyone.

“It is always a pleasure to greet you Lady Jalersi.” He spoke with a smile. He looked at Pian. “General Pian.”

Pian stepped up next to Jalersi and nodded to him with a smile of greeting. “You are here early Androcles.” He said. “It is a pleasure... but as you said it must be important to divert you from your other duties.”

Andro nodded his head and stepped back slightly. “It is important.” He told them. “As I was telling Karun, it is knowledge that you should have moving forward, for it concerns family and the future.”

Jalersi looked at him confused. “Family?” She asked. Jalersi’s eyes grew wide and her hands went to her mouth as she felt a stab of sorrow in her heart seeing that Andro’s eyes had focused entirely on her. “Kalis!” She gasped. “It’s about Kalis isn’t it?”

Andro nodded his head slowly. “Yes.”

“He’s... he’s dead isn’t he Andro?” Jalersi asked as her blue eyes became slightly moist.

Andro withdrew the holodisc from inside his uniform jacket and held it up. “You should probably see this for yourself.” He said moving to the small table in the foyer and setting the disc down. He pressed the activation button on the top and a beam of light shot out directly in front of them becoming the full cone of a holographic message projection within a few seconds. Jalersi gasped loudly when she recognized who was in the transmission and she stepped closer to Pian, his arm slipping around her waist.

“Kalis!” Jalersi gasped. It was Kalis yes... but it was not. Something was different about her middle son. So very different than the last time she had seen him. When he started speaking Jalersi knew why.

“Hello mother.” The image of Kalis spoke now. “I hope... I hope Karun and Nikkei are with you when you view this message, but if not perhaps you could find it in your heart to let them see it. Uncle Martin said I would have time to do this before we returned to his ship and I wanted to do it as soon as possible.” Kalis smiled almost shyly. “Before I lose the courage too.”

Karun stepped forward. “Uncle Martin? Andro what...?” He almost shouted.

Andro nodded and held up his hand seeing the looks of confusion from Jalersi and Pian both. “Watch cousin... watch and see.” He said.

“I do not... I do not know where to begin really.” Kalis continued now. “My words and my actions towards you and Karun and Nikkei through the years... more so you mother... they were vile and they dishonored you in a way I don’t know if you will ever be able to forgive. I would know... I would understand if you felt this way... but I wanted you to know what I have found mother. I wanted you to know that... it is my hope that one day you will forgive me for all I have done. That Karun and Nikkei will forgive me. I know it may not be possible... but Serale convinced me that all I could do was try.”

They watched as he shifted on his feet and they could see movement in the background. He was obviously on a ship and they could easily see other Kavalians in the background as well as Lycavorians. Kalis finally looked back up and began speaking again.

“Something happened to me on Enurrua mother.” Kalis spoke again. “In the midst of all of father’s twisted ideas, the hate and corruption that gripped me, I was shown a path. Uncle Martin showed me a path that father never did. He could have killed me so easily...” Kalis laughed softly. “Carians... he could have struck me down without blinking an eye or a wasted breath. He did not. He gave me something that... it allowed me to see what father never showed to me. Never showed Karun; what it was his duty to show us as our father. When Uncle Martin showed me this... when I saw this, a new road was opened to me mother. It is a road that I now walk with my head held high.”

They watched as Kalis reached to the side with a smile and drew the stunning young red haired woman into the transmission with him. She stepped up against him without hesitation they all saw and she wrapped her arms around his waist as she stared up into his face with obvious adoration.

"I have left father's hate behind mother. Left it behind forever. I will walk the path that is so brilliantly illuminated for me now. The path my blood calls for. My heritage. Uncle Martin's actions and words... they saved me. He has accepted me and I travel with him now. I escaped father with others that follow Pian's ideals mother. And yours." Kalis looked down into the young woman's face, for she was easily seven inches shorter than him, and without hesitation he kissed her softly. This action affected Jalersi and Karun more than Pian and Ardis for they knew Kalis and his past. This simple action, it was not something Kalis would have done not so very long ago. It was a kiss that the young woman returned without pause they all witnessed. Kalis looked back up.

"This is Serale mother. My light... my love... my life now. I will honor her as I should have honored you and my sister. I am so very happy that you have found new love... new purpose with Pian. I wish... I miss you mother. I miss all of the things that should have been and never were because of father's hate and anger. I miss my brother and sister..." Jalersi gasped out loud and tears burst forth as Pian pulled her close to him. "I take solace in knowing that I will be able to protect another brother and sister that father tossed aside like so much garbage. I will protect and guide Fedor and Eirene as much as I am able... and I will do so because they are my blood. I will do this just as Androcles would do. Something... something I should have done for Karun and Nikkei. Brother... if you see this Karun... I finally understand why you were different. I understand for I have embraced it now as well brother. And it feels glorious. I will remain with Uncle Martin... there is so much to see and experience out here... it is amazing mother. I will love, honor and treat Serale as you should have been treated mother. As a precious jewel. Perhaps... perhaps one day you will forgive me. Perhaps Karun and Nikkei will forgive me. I will work for that day and I will make all of you proud of who I have become. I will make it so you will be proud to call me son and brother again."

They watched as he and Serale turned when a voice out of the transmission spoke to him and Kalis nodded his head and turned back. "I must go mother. If you view this and you can find it within your heart to forgive me, know that I want to be your son once more. I want to be Karun and Nikkei's brother once more. I want us to have what father never allowed us to have. More than anything this is what I want." Kalis looked up once more; heard someone speak to him and he nodded. "Mother... we have discovered something on a nearby planet and I must go. I love you mother. I always loved you... and now I am not afraid to say it. The gods guide you and Pian in your actions mother. May... may they guide all of us."

They watched as he stopped talking and turned to the side and hold out his hand. They saw Daniel Simpson enter the image then and hand him a P190A4 as Kalis nodded and began to check the weapon while speaking with him even as the young woman Serale began to speak with the older woman that appeared in the transmission. Then it all faded to blackness.

Andro tapped the button again and deactivated the disc, retrieving it from the table and moving back in front of Jalersi. He held it out to her and saw the tears streaking her face. "He asked that I make sure to hand deliver this to you and I do so now with happiness."

Jalersi reached out with shaking hands and took the disc from him, gripping it tightly as she looked at him. "He... he is so different!" Jalersi exclaimed. Her face was animated and very bright even through the tears that flowed. "The darkness... the anger is... it is gone."

Andro nodded. "He walks a different path now." He said. "And there is no where better to learn of his blood than with my father and the Feravomir. My father would not have allowed him to continue if his heart was not true. He has become the man he was always meant to be."

"What... what was happening Andro?" Karun asked. "The young woman... she..."

"She is Hadarian." Andro spoke looking at him. "I don't know all the details as to how they came to be together but my father told me they are very much together. They are already planning for Kalis to claim her in the fashion of our people when they return to the ARC ROYAL eventually. My father and his team picked them up just over a day ago. Apparently Serale, her mother and brother were being held prisoner. Kalis rescued them when they escaped. I don't know much more than that to be honest."

"She is beautiful." Ardis spoke softly.

Andro nodded. "That she is." He said. "I won't speak to my father again until he returns to the ARC ROYAL. They were going to land and investigate a facility that they discovered on sensors on an unoccupied planet as they were returning. We can see to a real time connection when they get back. If that is what you wish?"

Jalersi shook her head. "I... I don't know... I'm..."

Andro reached out and squeezed her arm. "He walks a different path now Lady Jalersi. Just as I said earlier. This is not the same Kalis all of you knew but it will ultimately be your decision. Just know that it took courage and honor to admit everything to you as he did. And it took even more strength and faith for him to grasp onto what my father showed him and embrace it as he has." Andro leaned over and kissed her cheek. "I will insure my aunt knows what to do if I am not available to give approval for the COM traffic." Andro bowed his head to her. "I have much to do today, so if you will excuse me." He turned to Karun and nodded. "Be well Karun my cousin."

Karun nodded in reply still somewhat shocked himself. "You as well."

SPARTA OLD DISTRICT
TEMPORARY SENATE OFFICES
OFFICE OF THE CROWN PRINCE

"... Make me assign a full squad to you and Tenna Ceuma." Andro spoke to Sivana as he held out the glass of fruit juice to her. Sivana chuckled as she took the glass and she looked at Ceuma who sat beside her on the couch. Belen stood to the side of the couch, Joci sitting on the arm of the furniture, his trademark dreadlocks pulled back and tied with fine leather wraps that Ceuma had purchased for him. "If you were to allow yourselves to be hurt or captured my mother would have my nor in a grinder for letting you go."

"Don't worry Andro." Sivana answered. "We have no intention of doing anything like that. Anja is the adventurous one of the three of us. She would be the one to do some crazy stunt... not us."

Andro nodded and moved back to sit on the edge of his desk. "Just so we are clear. We are in no position at the moment to even attempt to retake Hadaria and return the three of you to your rightful positions."

"Well... I'm not exactly a Princess." Ceuma offered holding up her hand.

Andro looked at Deia who had sat quietly behind the desk until now. Deia leaned forward and looked at Ceuma. "Regardless of how you may view yourself Ceuma, or the events that shaped your history, Sivana and Anja both consider you a sister. Therefore the Lycavorian Union considers you their sister and a Princess of Hadaria. As well as a Princess of the Union based on your relation to Anja."

Ceuma blinked several times and looked at Joci quickly. He smiled back and shrugged his broad shoulders. She turned back to Deia. "You are serious?" She stammered. "I'm a... I am the product of a test tube Deia! A clone!"

Deia shrugged her shoulders as well. "However things may have come to be, genetically you are Anja's clone, but since she is twin sisters with Sivana, that makes you their sister as well Ceuma. And you have already proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that you are your own person. Therefore you have the same status as they do within the Union and among our people. All of our people."

Ceuma looked at Joci once more, the shock of this knowledge very evident on her face. She turned back to Deia. "I didn't... I never suspected that..."

Deia shook her head. "You would be very surprised what is accepted by the men and women of the Union. We are, perhaps, the most tolerable collection of species to have ever inhabited the universe. That is one of our strengths."

"And that means you are not allowed to act as my mother does and do something totally off the wall." Andro continued now. "You may direct resources to Hadaria and communicate with them and begin to establish targets and such, but outside of that, you will not do anything."

"Don't worry Mandri." Belen spoke now with a smile. "My father left strict instructions from Anja to that regard. Joci and I will make sure they are followed."

Sivana snorted at him very unladylike. “While our sister prances around the unknown and gets into all sorts of danger.” She said.

“Anja is trained for such things.” Belen said. “You and Ceuma are not. You are dedicated Healers... not fighters. That is the difference.”

Andro lifted the data pad and looked at it. “I have assigned two officers to put together a small staff for you Tenna Sivana. Both of them have been pulled from my mother’s ship and you probably have met them at some point through the years. What we will direct must remain very quiet and very secret. No one must know what you will be doing.”

Sivana nodded. “Agreed.” She said. “I would like to inform Zaniai and Eurin at least. They should be involved because they know the political landscape of Hadaria better than Ceuma or I.”

“You mean they know Buonau better.” Deia said.

Sivana nodded. “Yes.”

“That upaee needs to be put on trial for what she has done and then executed.” Deia hissed.

Sivana nodded. “I think you know that Anja and I agree Deia. Eurin as well. She will have a reckoning and she will answer for her crimes.”

“Good.” Deia said.

“Whoever we send in will need equipment and resources Andro.” Joci spoke. “When we departed Hadaria we took everything that belonged to us, which was the vast majority of the military and intelligence apparatus.”

Andro nodded. “I know. Marci is taking care of that now. With Armetus back working again and them sharing the work load now she is able to do what she does best. Armetus has made her co-director of the Krypteria so she will have the ability to do what she needs and get you what you require.”

The door to the office slid open and Carisia strode in with Lu'ria beside her. All of them saw Andro’s face relax when he smelled his wives and mates and they watched as both of them walked up to him. He nuzzled Lu'ria’s elven ear and they saw her face take on a very dreamy expression. Sivana watched silently, knowing what Lu'ria felt, for she felt it as well. It had come as a surprise to many when Lu'ria became Andro’s wife and mate. The first pureblood Drow in their history to be turned if what Sivana heard was true. There were some Drow who had been turned in the past, but all of them were direct products of the High Coven’s failed early experiments in cloning. Sivana knew the most notable was the second wife of Danny’s father. He had changed the Drow over two decades ago and she was happily the Mistress to Danny’s mother and second wife and mate to his father. Lu'ria on the other hand was the very first pureblood Drow who had been changed. And now she was the wife and mate to Androcles. A young man who held the Drow in just as much respect and honor as his father. Sivana knew that Lu'ria was now somewhat of a celebrity among the Drow because of her position, but she also knew from direct contact with her that she was completely unassuming and down to earth. She was a Drow of course, and while she had all of the surreal and exotic beauty of all the Drow females Sivana had seen, she was also exceptionally deadly.

Andro shifted his head slightly and shared a soft but very emotion filled kiss with Carisia. She was quite petite when compared to Andro at only five foot two, but all of them knew just how lethal she really was. They watched as Lu'ria handed him a large mug of his mother’s coffee and then she and Carisia moved to the empty couch after sharing soft kisses of greeting with both Sivana and Ceuma. This was the way of the Leonidas family and Ceuma had learned it very quickly and accepted it even faster. Physical contact was their way of showing their love and devotion to family.

Andro lifted the mug to his lips and took a sip, savoring the rich flavor of his mother’s coffee. He lowered the mug and was about to speak when the chime on the desk sounded. He turned and watched as Deia reached across and activated the panel.

“Yes?” She asked.

“Prime Minister Deia... Senator Icho and Senator Ulana are here to see Androcles. They have brought others as well.” Jomann’s voice

“We are rather busy Jomann.” Deia said. “Have them leave the building and request an appointment like everyone else.”

“I informed them of this.” Jomann stated. “Icho’s reply was that if they are not allowed to see Andro now he would go to the Netnews in regards to the fact that we will be leaving at the end of the week to travel to Vanari space.”

Andro looked at the COM panel. “Jomann... that information is not known outside those of us...”

“I know Andro.” Jomann interrupted him. “I’ve already contacted General Vengal to tell him that a possible leak within the Durcunusaan has occurred. Intentionally or not. It is the only explanation.”

“Anse!” Andro swore.

“The good Senator also informed me that if you do not see him and his quorum that he would insure that what Sadi did on the SCIMIATAR was known across the Union. As well as some other bits of information that he said you would not find pleasant if it was released to the Netnews.” Jomann told him.

Deia shook her head. “That fool!” She hissed. “He’s still trying to use the Netnews in order to make you and Sadi and the others look bad. He should have learned his lesson when you took over his Netnews briefing!”

Andro looked at Deia, who met his gaze. “Any ideas tenna?” He asked.

Deia sat back. “Let them in. Better we deal with them now then wait until after you are gone.”

“Send them up Jomann.” Andro spoke. “Under guard that is.”

Jomann chuckled within the transmission. “Understood.”

Andro turned as Sivana and the others got to their feet. “We’ll head out the other way and leave you to handle this.” She said as they shared a hug and a kiss of family. “I will let you know what we have done before you depart. And when you see our sister, tell her she owes us big time.”

Andro looked at her oddly. “Excuse me?”

Sivana laughed softly. “She’ll know what I mean.”

Andro nodded. “Ok. I think.” He said.

He watched as Sivana laughed again and then she and Ceuma turned and headed out of the office through the rear door, Belen and Joci right behind them. He turned to look at his Aunt and Deia lifted her hands in feigned ignorance.

“I have no idea what they meant by that.” Deia said. “She has been hanging out with your mother all of these years and the only one who can translate what they say half the time is your sister Eliani.”

Andro nodded his head as Lu’ria and Carisia laughed softly. “That is so true.” He said as he moved to the couch and sat between his Drow and vampire wives.

They didn’t have long to wait before two Durcunusaan officers entered the office leading Icho and Ulana and four other men and women. Andro didn’t know who the others were and he glanced at his aunt, who was watching them intently. She obviously knew who they were given the look in her eyes, but he said nothing and turned back to watch them as they came fully into the office. He sipped his coffee and watched as they were led in, not bothering to get to his feet in greeting. Ulana seemed very reserved now and he could detect no indication of her aura in the room. This made him wonder what exactly Sadi had said to her on the ship for it had most effectively shut down her attempts at enticing him with her female aura. He dismissed it just as quickly, knowing Sadi acted in the way of any true Alpha female of their people, and he knew just how vicious Sadi could be when she wanted.

Icho glanced at where Deia sat as he stopped in front of the couch and Ulana and the others moved up beside him. He turned back to Andro and bowed his head slightly. “Prince Androcles.” He spoke. “I assumed... I assumed we would be meeting with you alone.” He said.

“You assumed wrong.” Andro replied as he lowered his mug of coffee.

“What I... what we have to discuss with you is of a sensitive nature Milord.” Icho told him. “I’m not sure you would want others hearing our conversation.”

Andro met his eyes. “Why not?” Andro asked. “This is so sensitive that it cannot be heard by the Prime Minister of the Union? Or two of my wives and mates? I think not.” He said. He motioned to the two small couches across from where he sat. “You can sit there... or stand. I don’t really care.”

“There is no need for hostility Milord.” Icho spoke.

“Senator... as you did before... you connived and bullied your way to a meeting with me.” Andro told him. “On top of that... you threatened to release information to the Netnews which you should not have. It is information of a sensitive military nature and I’m very curious as to how you came to have it. I don’t know what you are trying to accomplish... but so far what you have done has not made me happy. You’ll forgive me if I dispense with the pleasant talk. I know you and I know Ulana... I don't know the others with you. Perhaps you could tell me."

"Of course." Icho spoke. He motioned to the man and woman closest to him. "I present Senator Tamalan and Senator Irina from the Tenth District of Apo Prime. They represent the citizens of the port city of Gornan. Along the western coast of the Yanloa Ocean. As well as the surrounding eight sub-districts."

The man and woman bowed their head slightly to him. "It is a distinct pleasure to finally meet you in person Milord Prince." Tamalan spoke. "We have heard much about you through the years."

"All of it bad I'm sure." Andro spoke. "Considering the company you keep."

The man and woman both looked at him surprised at his frankness and they looked very quickly to Icho. The woman turned back to him. "What would make you believe this Milord?" She asked.

"Never mind." Andro said.

"This is Senator Vlone and Senator Tranar and they represent the Menkla District which includes the city of Palno and much of the Northern Continental Provinces ." Icho spoke to Andro motioning to the two men who had already sat down on the couch.

Andro detected the antagonism of the two men even before looking at them. Their scents were filled with distaste and distrust and they were making no attempt to hide that. Andro also knew that a large portion of Icho and Ulana's base support came from the Menkla district. This is where the Utopia Movement was headquartered.

"I have a rather full schedule Senator Icho." Andro spoke turning to look at him as he sat beside Ulana on the second of the smaller couches. "Would you care to enlighten me as to what it is you want?"

"No casual conversation to break the ice Milord?" Icho asked. "Right to business?"

Andro chuckled. "Senator... you don't like me, and to be particularly honest, I don't care for you in the least. I don't do casual conversation sir. We have nothing in common. So spare me the pleasantries."

As you wish Milord." Icho spoke drawing out four data pads from within his jacket and setting one of them on the table between them. "I have several different business interests within The Wilds. Mostly on Talbor Seven. Recently these interests informed me of dozens of survivors of what was once the Icalro Alliance wandering to the resort looking for aide and support. They spoke of wild stories about Lycavorian Union warships and attacks by our military on Icalro installations and facilities. I had some of my people make some inquiries about their claims and discovered that in fact they were true." Icho looked at Andro evenly. "Your name particularly was spoken of Milord. Quite a few times in fact. All in regards it seems to a young female from the Vanari people with whom we have just recently made first contact and then some incredibly fantastic claims about disappearing ghost ships that apparently blew the entire Icalro Alliance government into oblivion while they were in session in their main government headquarters. Warships that, from what I understand, are not supposed to exist."

Andro lifted the pad and began reading while he sipped his coffee once more. "That is interesting." He said calmly.

"Yes it is Milord, considering that we are not aware of any new warships that we have built, and I made that inquiry of several colleagues before coming here." Icho spoke. "It also does not explain intercepted reports from Kavalian news sources about the Pralor warship that we apparently now have in our possession. A ship far more powerful than anything we can field and which took part in the destruction of nearly six hundred Kavalian ships. A ship based on the technology of City Ship 41, which your father brought to Earth more than two decades ago. A ship which is still off limits to myself and many of my fellow Senators after all this time I might add. If this is true, the number of Kavalian dead is staggering, as are the technological wonders this ship might have. If all of that is true."

"Military operations and matters fall under the purview of the King!" Deia snapped out. "And in his absence the next in line, which is the Crown Prince! It has been that way since Martin returned to us."

Icho nodded. "Yes I know." He said. "Perhaps it is something that should be reviewed by the Senate."

Carisia and Lu'ria were watching Andro's face and surprisingly it was completely calm and seemingly unconcerned. They both knew their mate and husband well enough to know that he was either holding his anger in check or he had foreseen that this was coming.

Icho set the next pad down as he looked at Andro. "I think you will find this is even more interesting Milord." He said. "It has also come to my attention that you intend to depart Union space and travel to the Beta Quadrant in order to finalize a merger between the Union and an extreme offshoot of our people known as the Protectorate.”

“Extreme?” Andro asked looking at him.

Icho nodded his head. “Those members of our species that still cling to past traditions in many ways. Traditions that our people left behind on Lycavore after The Black Day. Including ways which your grandfather personally hated, in order to pull us into the future. At least that is what my information tells me.” Icho spoke. “It is said that this offshoot of our people is actively involved with a massive slavery and illicit goods Black Market organization centered within the Beta quadrant and now extends into the Alpha Quadrant. Among their actions are the purchase and selling of these Vanari females for... well for less than honorable reasons.”

“They are subjected to the same indignities that our elven females were once subjected to! That they are still subjected too in many places we do not control.” Irina hissed. “Sexual abuse and perversions beyond imagination. And you are going to merge them into the Union!”

“Not to mention that you plan to depart Union space after involving our people in a war of choice!” Vlone snapped. “Now you will leave and our people will suffer for that decision! In more ways than one!”

“That was a decision made by an overwhelming majority of your fellow Senators!” Deia hissed from the desk. “They apparently viewed what happened to For’mya and the attacks by the Kavalians on the Drow and here in Sparta itself to be a much more important event than you!”

“Perhaps if the King had not pretended he was dead she would not have made such a decision!” Vlone barked right back.

“How dare you suggest such a thing! She did not make that decision!” Deia barked. “It was forced upon her in a vile manner by an evil man only concerned with power!”

“How do we know that Prime Minister Deia?” Vlone asked now. “The details of what happened between Queen For’mya and Marshall Pusintin are sealed. No one is allowed to access them. That should be public information! How do we know she did not willingly accept what he offered her just as the Kavalians claimed? That she willingly accepted to become his mate and wife in order to save her own life? It would not be the first time something like this has happened.”

“Senator Vlone... you dare accuse the Queen of this?” Deia snarled at him. “You dare suggest this?”

“I am only voicing the questions that many others are asking.” Vlone spoke.

“Questions that others are asking?” Deia snapped. “I have heard this question from you and you alone! No one else has voiced this opinion!”

Vlone nodded. “Because they fear what he will do.” He answered motioning to Andro.

“You are a pureblood.” Andro said. “You know she would have no control over it if she could not feel my father! Or have you forgotten what it means to be Lycavorian?”

“How could she not feel him?” Vlone barked. “He is the most powerful Alpha among our people!”

“She was under the influence of a device.” Andro said. “It blocked her ability to sense him.”

“What device?” Irina asked. “I have heard of no such thing. Who made it? How did your uncle get it? These are the things that our people need to know.” She said.

Andro looked at her. “Why? What would be gained by this information being public knowledge. Who would it benefit?”

“Our people should know the facts!” Vlone snapped.

Andro glared at him. “Why? So you can twist those facts into something sinister! So you can twist those facts to undermine my father and mothers and try to sway more people to see your own views?”

“We would not...” Irina began.

“Don’t!” Andro snapped. “Do not stand there and tell me you would not! I am not so stupid as to believe that! None of you have supported anything my father and mothers have done in the last two decades!”

“War is not the only option!” Tranar hissed.

Andro looked at him. “No it is not. But it is the only option when your way of life is at risk and the other side started it! Or do we allow the government of Keleru to do these things and not respond? We should turn the other cheek?”

“If it wasn’t for those accursed dragons none of this would have taken place!” Vlone said. “This all started because of them! Because you agreed to train them!”

“Do not blame those who are blameless Senator.” Andro spoke. “It makes you look more the fool. The High Coven dragons were only the catalyst... the Kavalians would have found something else if not them.”

“Your family is too secretive!” Vlone snapped. “How do we know what has been said of Princess Ne'Veha's actions in regards to this Tarren fellow are true? The records are sealed by your order.”

“Ne'Veha already answered those questions!” Carisia snarled.

“But the records of his charges and interrogation are sealed.” Tranar said. “Our people do not know the truth.”

“Ne'Veha told you the truth!” Lu'ria hissed.

“And Captain Tarren tells a different version.” Irina said. “Who are we to believe? Who are our people to believe? We have all seen how possessive you are. How do we know this is not you hiding the truth?”

“What? Why?” Andro asked him aghast.

“Perhaps because you acted in a manner that is forbidden by males our of species!” Irina told him.

“I'm not even going to dignify that with a reply.” Andro told her.

“Our people have a right to know!” Tranar echoed.

“Our people do not have the right to know the details of an ongoing investigation!” Andro barked loudly. “Nor do they have the right to know the details surrounding my mother's imprisonment and rape!” Andro snarled. “What would be the purpose behind releasing that kind of information? And that you would even suggest my mother would agree willingly to anything my uncle did is... such a thing is beyond my ability to fathom. And it is certainly not the right of our people to know personal issues with my wife and mate!”

“You are the Crown Prince.” Icho chimed in now. “Everything about you and your mates should be open to the public.”

Andro shook his head. “In your opinion perhaps... not mine. And not my father's.”

“We will never know what really happened!” Vlone said. “You have the records sealed!”

“And that will not change no matter what you spout!” Deia snarled.

“Then I will petition the Lycavorian Spartan Court to release those details.” Vlone spat. “It is my right as a Senator!”

Deia nodded. “Yes it is. Be my guest.”

Icho leaned forward again. “Information has also come into my hands that we have at least two of these Vanari females right here on Earth.” Icho said. “That they were somehow involved with the Icalro Alliance and what happened there. Is this true Milord?”

Andro nodded his head. “They are being treated medically and emotionally. They were held prisoner for many months and were deeply affected.” He replied. “They chose to remain behind here when Denali took his advance party to the Beta Quadrant.”

“His Advance Party?” Icho asked surprised at this release of information be it inadvertent or not. “We were not made aware of any Advanced Party with the intent to conduct diplomatic negotiations.”

“There was no need to inform you Senator. You are not a member of the Senate's First Contact Team.” Andro answered him. “The Protectorate already has many contacts within the Vanari government. Any and all agreements or treaties will remain in place once the merger is complete. The Protectorate has dealt with the Vanari for far longer than we have and they already have established relationships with them. They are the ones working with our people to facilitate the merger. There is no need to throw more pomp and circumstance into an already full situation.”

“In your opinion!” Tranar spoke.

Andro met his eyes. “Yes.”

“You are going ahead with this merger then?” Irina exclaimed.

Andro looked at her. “Again... yes.” He answered. “I don't know where you got your information but not surprisingly, it is in no way accurate or up to date. This, for obvious reasons, is part of the rationale for you having been left out of the loop.”

Carisia could not contain her snicker at that comment and she turned her head to the side to try and hide it as much as possible. Ulana and Irina glared at her while Lu'ria couldn't help but smile as well.

“You do yourself no favors by mocking us Princess.” Irina snapped.

Carisia looked at her then. “You do not need my help in making yourselves look the fool Senator.” She spat at Irina. “You are doing a fine job of that all by yourselves.”

Irina began to respond but Icho interrupted her by placing another data pad on the table. “Your should probably review this one carefully Milord.” He said.

“Why is that?” Andro asked picking it up.

“This is a private report from the Director of the School of the Mages. The DSM as he is often referred to if I am not mistaken. It is a very detailed report that he put together for me on the use of Etheric power within the Union. Specifically within your own family and several others. I contacted him after what we witnessed in the Senate Chambers not so long ago and asked him to put it together for me. Do you know what I discovered?”

Andro smiled. “I’m sure you are going to tell us.” He said.

“While he could not go into great detail because of the veil of secrecy you and others have propagated... I discovered that not one of your family, yourself included, have attended the School of the Mages.” Icho said. “This is troubling to me since the vast majority of our people who have enhanced Etheric abilities as they are now called... all of them have attended the school. The DSM’s own report from several weeks ago, a report he says he submitted to your office, indicate numerous requests for added or further testing of you and others within your family. All have been rebuked. We would like to know why? The people of the Union have the right to know why the Leonidas children and family are exempt from having to attend the School of the Mages for instruction in how to control and utilize their abilities.”

“Why would this be a concern of yours?” Andro asked him. “Attendance at the school is voluntary if I am not mistaken.”

“Given the display you put on within the Senate Chambers, executing that poor man in the manner you did, without a trial, I should think that is enough for many of us to be concerned Milord. Don’t you?” Irina asked.

“That poor man?” Andro asked her. “That man was party to everything that happened to my mother. He knew about it and helped to assist it. That makes him just as guilty as my uncle who actually committed the crime. Why does it seem to me like you and your colleagues are defending what the Kavalians did?”

“That is certainly not the case Milord.” Irina told him quickly. “We simply want more information. It is obvious your abilities have far exceeded even the most powerful of the DSM’s teachers and instructors. And your reaction right now tells us that the rumors about your father and brother possessing similar skills are also true. This is information we feel we should be party to.”

“Why?” Andro asked. “What is wrong with what you already know? It’s the truth.”

“We feel our people have the right to know everything.” Irina said. “In that way they can make informed decisions.”

“Again... you mean informed decisions based on information that you twist and turn to make it appear to support whatever bird brained idea or scheme you are spouting at the time?” Andro hissed now, his anger beginning to show through finally.

“Simply because you do not agree with what our values and beliefs are does not make them wrong Milord!” Vlone snarled.

Andro shook his head. “No... it makes them utterly stupid!” He barked.

“Enough!” Icho barked. He leaned forward. “This is the last of our concerns Milord.” Icho said with a small smile as he set the last data pad on the table. He felt he was winning this debate and did not want to push too far.

“And this is?” Andro asked picking up the pad.

“The details of your purchase of the Palno Square Apartment Complex and Cranæ Island.” Icho told him. “It has been brought to my attention of some... irregularities if you will... concerning the purchases of the building and island and the profit you have made since bequeathing the building as your marriage gift to former Governor Voralis.”

Andro looked up from the pad. “Irregularities?” Andro asked.

Icho nodded his head. “The means by which you purchased the building Milord. As well as Cranæ Island,” Icho said. “No record of where the funds came from is made.”

“Where the funds came from is of no consequence.” Andro told him. “The two purchases were very legitimate and are part of public record.”

“Yes they are.” Icho stated. “But as I said... no mention of where the funds came from is made. This is a requirement of all purchases within the Menkla District as I recall... and here in Sparta as well. As I understand it, there were several offers made on the apartment building and only yours was accepted. As for the island, it was the property of the former Greek government according to history records, and if that is the case how is it that you were able to file an actual ownership deed to the property?"

"And that is an issue why?" Andro asked.

"It is an issue if, by virtue of your position, you persuaded the other prospective buyers to allow you to complete the transaction." Vlonc told him. "This is why I began looking into the purchase of the apartment building. I should think that forging a deed to the island in your name is a crime, wouldn't you?"

"You dare accuse him of this crime!" Lu'ria snapped now as she came forward.

"We only wish to know the details Princess." Icho said. "So that these questions can be laid to rest."

"So someone has said I pushed them out of the bidding for the Palno Apartments huh?" Andro said. "That is very interesting." Andro looked at Icho. "And what is it you would like Senator Icho? Please do not take me for a fool and expect me to believe this is all out of your concern for me, our people and the letter of the law. You came here for something." Andro asked him as he placed the pad back on the table. "Now why don't you tell me why you carried your ass here to begin with?"

Icho smiled at him. "Ever the diplomat Milord." He said.

Andro shrugged. "Like father like son." He said. "Can we dispense with the rensibfla please? I'm rather busy."

"As you wish Milord." Icho said smugly. "We want full disclosure on what occurred with the Icalro Alliance Milord. To include access to any new warships that we have built being used. We want three representatives of our delegation to accompany you to the Beta Quadrant to facilitate negotiations with these Vanari and whatever other species we encounter. We know there are more based on the Crown princess's slip up during her interview. And the rumors that you may even have already taken one of them as your sixth wife and mate."

"Is that all?" Andro asked.

"We want full access to wherever you are building these new ships." Icho said. "And please do not take me for a fool and tell me we do not have such a facility. It is the only way any ship could be built without us knowing about it. We want access to these Vanari females who are here on Earth. We demand that all information in regards to the events with Queen For'mya be made public so that our people can know the details of what took place. We also require that you and your siblings submit to the testing that the DSM suggests so that we may better understand and control the Etheric abilities that may appear in the future in others. We also demand that you give full disclosure in regards to the purchase of the Palno Apartment Complex to include where you obtained the funds. And we insist on reviewing and taking part in this so called merger. The Union Senate should be deciding this Milord. Not you and your father."

"How dare you make such demands?" Deia shouted as she came to her feet. "You have no right!"

"We have every right Prime Minister!" Icho answered. "It is stated so right in our own Chronicles of Lycavorian Law."

"Do not spout the Chronicles of Law to me Senator!" Deia snarled angrily. "You were not even a wet spot on a sheet when I helped to draft those same laws with Resumar and Canth! We..."

Andro held up his hand quickly and turned to her. Deia met his eyes and saw him shake his head. He then looked back to Icho. "And if I refuse?" He said.

"Then as much as it would pain me Milord... I will take all of this information public and we will have to let the people decide." Icho said.

"As much as it would pain you?" Deia spat.

Andro smiled at Icho and turned away and moved to the window in the office. He sipped his coffee once more as he stared out over the city of his grandfather and father.

Sparta.

The city of true warriors and the birthplace of his grandfather no matter how that had occurred. He had fought and died here in this place, defending others. The mountains rose majestically in the west and north, the towering green trees and forests filled with all kinds of animals and life. Andro had loved to run among those trees as a boy, chasing the many rabbits and deer in his wolf form. Many of those times beside his father and then as they grew older, his brothers and sisters. He closed his eyes and reached for his Anome and his SirsanGai within their connection.

[KertaGai? SirsanGai?]

[I have seen within your thoughts my love. We all have.] Sadi's voice answered from the SCIMITAR where they were working today in orbit. [You do not need to question us about what to do. I love you Andro. We all do. You will do what you must and we will support you.]

[It could get very nasty Sadi.] He said. [Not just for you and I. But for Ne'Veha and the others as well. Even Sehri when they discover her. And they will discover her if they have not already judging by Icho's comment.]

[You think this matters to us Andro?] Ne'Veha's musical voice answered. [You have done nothing wrong. We have done nothing wrong. Let that fool do what he will. The truth will always prevail in the end.]

[Sehri?]

[I do not fully comprehend the complexity of politics in general Androcles. To be honest, it all bores me to death.] Sehri's sweet voice answered softly and Andro could hear Sadi and Ne'Veha chucking softly in the connection. [I trust in you and Sadi and the others. That is all that matters to me.]

[How do you like your tour of Sparta Sehri our love?] He asked.

[It is utterly beautiful Andro! So very beautiful!] She exclaimed happily. [And your sisters are so very entertaining.]

Andro smiled. [Don't believe a word they tell you.] He said.

[Too late.] Sehri answered with a laugh within the connection.

Andro turned his head and looked at Carisia and Lu'ria on the couch. They were both looking at him for they had heard every word and they both nodded their heads. [So be it.] Andro said. [We will see all of you tonight.]

Andro turned from the window and moved back to the stand beside the couch. He looked at Deia who knew he had been talking with Sadi and the others though she could not hear the words. She knew her nephew well enough to read his body language however. Deia also knew that while not as politically adept as his father, Andro was no fool when it came to situations like these. Andro looked at the smug faced Icho sitting on the couch. Strangely Ulana had not said a word the entire time. That was different for her and he did not know if Icho had told her to remain quiet or if it was of her own doing. It didn't matter regardless.

His azure eyes finally focused on Icho. "Senator... I have not in the past, nor the present, nor will I in the future, put the lives of our fighting men and women in the hands of you or those like you." He stated calmly. "Those ships do exist. They were built for a singular purpose and that is the protection of the Lycavorian Union. Your demand to be given access to those ships and where they are built you can stick in your ass. It will not happen. Ever!"

"Milord you..." Icho began.

"I have listened to you blather and blither!" Andro growled menacingly as he moved closer to Icho. "Now you will listen to me! Then you will leave my office or I will throw each and every one of you out the fucking window!"

"Milord!" Irina gasped clearly offended.

"Military operations are classified Senator Icho!" Andro snarled at him. "I will not reveal any items or information in regards to past, present or ongoing operations to you in any shape or form. We have a Senate Committee that is reported to. They are the only political arm of the military that will exist. Good luck getting any information out of them. Or any of your cohorts here. I will not allow you to put our people at risk!"

"Milord..." Icho began to protest again as he came to his feet.

"Sit the fuck down and shut the fuck up!" Andro barked loudly at the man. "I am not my father sir! I will tell you exactly how it is and I won't be nice about it!" Andro pointed at him. "I won't even address how you got your hands on whatever information you have, but I will find out from whom you got it, and I'll plug that leak so fast your ass will pucker up real quick!" Andro set his coffee on the table. "No details of what happened to my elven mother will be made public so that you can slander her name, her honor and her dignity. I would no more allow that than my father would Senator. Question it all you like, make your snide comments and innuendos all you like, but that information stays sealed."

"Do not tap dance with me old man!" Andro growled at him. "You want to investigate me? Go ahead. Everything I have done is public record! I dare you to find anything that I have done wrong! You want to go after my SirsanGai... go ahead. While you are at it, when you see this fool Captain Tarren tell him to grow a pair of nor and face me like a man to speak his lies. We will see who is telling the truth just as quickly.” Andro barked.

“Do not sit there and accuse the citizens of the Protectorate of being barbaric or common criminals when you do not have all the facts. The merger will go forward... and relations with the Vanari will proceed by how they deem to treat us. As they will with the Rothryn people who we have also discovered within the Beta Quadrant. Lycavorians just like us who cannot shift their forms.” Andro turned and looked at Ulana when he spoke next. “I will grant you demand for representation. You can have Ulana and two others accompany us.” Andro saw Ulana’s eyes grow large as she looked at him in shock. “There is already a political delegation appointed and your people will answer to them. Their communications back here to you will be monitored and censored. If that is not acceptable to you... too fucking bad. I would no more trust you than I would trust an Algolian Sewer Roach!”

“As for the School of the Mages, I won’t even begin to address the fool who is in charge over there!” Andro snapped. “He is a little worm of a man who thinks because the Feravomir left him in command it makes him something special! He thinks his position gives him some sort of special powers to make policy! It does not! There is no law stating that we need to attend the School of the Mages, as it is for all of our people, therefore it is a non issue. No one there could teach us anything we haven’t already learned and improved upon anyway.”

“You are not being very giving Milord.” Icho spoke.

“Yeah... well too bad!” Andro snapped. “Access to Dragon Mountain will remain as it has since my father brought the ship here. Home to the dragons of Earth and off limits to all but those cleared to actually enter the mountain. The same applies to the new Pralor ship we have acquired. I will not risk the security of this Union by giving you information that will make its way to the Netnews in a matter of hours. There! Now you have your answers! Is there anything else I can do for you or can I get back to work now?”

Icho stared at him as the others rose to their feet. “You will have forced my hand Milord Prince.” Icho said. “I did not want it to be this way.”

Andro chuckled. “Don’t try to fool anyone Icho. You knew exactly what I would tell you before you ever came here. And you also knew what my answers would be. If you wish to fight this out within the Netnews because you are being left out of the loop so be it. You may go after me all you like, but the moment you bring my elven mother, any of my mothers into your little mud throwing contest, the rules will change.”

“Are you threatening us?” Vloné demanded.

Andro looked at him. “Simply stating a fact.” He told the man. “Something that all of you are seriously lacking.”

“I already have a Netnews Briefing scheduled for this afternoon Milord.” Icho said. “If you change your mind please contact me.”

Andro turned back to him. “Not likely Senator.” He said. “Not fucking likely at all. Now if you will all leave, I have work to do. The Durcunusaan will escort you out.”

Icho had a small smile on his face as he turned and headed out of the office. Ulana and the others followed silently and Andro watched them until the door closed behind them. He turned to Deia.

“This is going to be ugly.” Deia said.

“How did he acquire so much information on Sehri?” Lu’ria asked now. “He would not have mentioned that unless he already knew about her. Or the Vanari females for that matter.”

Deia met Andro’s eyes. “What is this about the Palno Apartment Complex and Cranae Island?” Deia asked him.

“There were two others who were interested in the complex.” Andro told her. “A Folcani and the owner of Palno Exports. I outbid them. That is simple.”

“And Cranae Island?” Deia asked him. “How were you able to secure an ownership deed Mandri? Is what Icho says true?”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes... the island’s last owner was the Greek government from before the Great Fire. Of which there are two living representatives left. I went to both of them and asked how I could purchase the island. We hammered out the details of the transaction over three weeks Tenna. It is all very legitimate, if not usually done.”

“Where... where did you find two living representatives of the Greek government?” Deia asked as she moved around the desk.

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “Hard work and lots of investigating.” He replied. “One of them is a vampire who defected from the Coven long before the Great Fire. He is married and living with his wife and children in Gytheio. He buried his past because he did not want to be known at the time as a traitor to the Coven. The second is a human.”

“Human?” Deia gasped.

Andro nodded. “One of those members of the Greek Parliament that was put into stasis in order to have a working government after the Great Fire. The chambers they were occupying at the time malfunctioned and did not open until sixty years before my father returned to Earth. He is over a hundred years old now and is living a very quiet life.”

“And the riyal you used?” Deia asked.

“Two thirds of my Trust Fund Tenna.” Andro answered. “You know that.”

“Then what did Icho mean about profits you have received even after bequeathing it to Sadi’s father?” Deia asked.

“That wasn’t me.” Andro answered as he moved to the couch and sat back down. “That was Sadi’s father. He established a trust fund for the poor just as he said he would, but he also established a separate fund for Sadi and I with part of the profit each year.”

“How much is in the fund?” Deia asked.

Andro shrugged his shoulders again. “I would have to look.” He answered. “Neither Sadi or I really cared about it to be honest. Her father has added Ne'Veha, Carisia, Lu'ria and Caliria to the fund as well by now. I’m sure he will add Sehri sooner or later.”

“He is going to use this.” Deia said. “He’s going to try and make it seem like it was all planned and executed in some nefarious manner.”

“What he demanded was far above his station Deia.” Lu'ria stated.

Deia nodded her head in agreement. “Yes... but he assumes that since Andro is leaving and he is not as politically astute as his father, that he can take advantage of that. He will come after all of you now given what you told him.”

“He can try to besmirch my name all he likes.” Andro told her. “As long as he does not bring my mothers or siblings into it.”

“I don’t think he will leave them out.” Deia said. “Lisisa’s connection to your uncle; you protecting that knowledge for so long without telling anyone?”

“Surely he will not garner any support?” Carisia said. “He has already tried that and it failed.”

Deia nodded again. “Yes... but this time he is not focusing on Sadi. He’s going after you directly Mandri. And our entire family indirectly. Someone within the Durcunusaan talked or is still talking Andro. It is the only way he could have gotten some of his information. I still don’t understand how he got the information about the Vanari and the Protectorate.”

“It’s obvious isn’t it?” Andro asked looking at her as he sipped his coffee calmly. “He got it from the one source that would have any knowledge about them outside of those of us in this room and a few others that we trust. He got it from Laustinos... who got it from the Kavalians and probably the OSG as well.”

Deia’s face twisted into a snarl. “Laustinos!” She hissed. “Carians... I despise that name! If I ever discover where that man is I will cut his nor from between his legs myself!”

Lu'ria and Carisia laughed softly and moved over beside her. “Calm yourself Deia.” Lu'ria told her. “We do not need you losing control.”

Andro looked at her from the couch after picking up one of the pads Icho had left and reading briefly. “So what do we do?” He asked.

Deia shook her head. “What do I do you mean.” She told him. “You have too much on your plate to worry about this. I will deal with Icho and his followers. He will give his briefing this afternoon and once I see everything he will present I will decide how to proceed. You continue to prepare for what you must do in the Beta Quadrant. Leave Icho to me.”

“Tenna... you don’t need to get involved.” Andro said rising to his feet once more. “Isn’t it better if you remain outside of this battle. He has obviously made this personal, or he will when he goes before the Netnews worms.”

Deia shook his head. “He knew what your answer would be before he ever came here. You know that and he knows that.” She answered. “No... this is a gauntlet that he has thrown down to our entire family. Your father may be King... but I am... I am the Matriarch of this family. I will not let anyone do what Icho plans on doing.”

“What is he trying to do Deia?” Carisia asked.

Deia looked at Andro and saw in his eyes that he knew what was going on. She turned back to Carisia. “He’s trying to bring down our family.” She said. “He and his ilk have never liked that Martin returned and took his rightful place as King of our people and the Union. He is going to do everything within his power to see to it that we are disgraced in whatever manner he can arrange. I intend to meet him at every corner and slap him silly.”

“Why though?” Lu'ria asked softly. “Why do this now? What could he possibly hope to gain?”

“What does anyone like him desire Mistress? Power.” Carisia said softly.

Lu'ria looked at her. “Yes... but he can only acquire so much power and influence and then it is wasted. He will never be in a position to challenge Andro’s father or even him if that...” Lu'ria stopped taking and turned back to Deia with wide amber eyes. “Deia... you don’t think...?”

Deia nodded. “I would not be surprised in the least.” She said. “I’ve always known that there would be others who wanted my job. Up until this point none of them have been as sadistic and crude as Icho, but it had to happen sooner or later.”

“He will never get your job Tenna.” Andro told her. “You have too many people within the Union who adore you just as much as they adore my father and mothers. You have too many powerful friends.”

“So you believe he is doing this because of something Keleru offered to him?” Deia asked.

Andro shook his head. “I don’t know.” He answered softly. “Something about Icho doesn’t sit right with me Tenna. I don’t know how to describe it... it just feels off.”

Deia stepped closer to her nephew. She reached up and placed her palm flat to his cheek and stared into his eyes. Deia knew that her two favorite nephews were different in many ways. She also knew Andro had an uncanny sense about things and people, even more so than his father because of how he had been born. She stared into his eyes for a long moment and then nodded her head.

“Hold onto those feelings Mandri.” She said softly. “They will become clear when the time is right. For now we will meet Icho head to head and I will lead the charge. You need to continue your preparations to leave and go to your father’s aide.”

Andro smiled. “What makes you think he needs aide Tenna?” He asked.

Deia chuckled and lean up on her tip toes to kiss his cheek. “He is your father... and no matter how hard he tries... trouble always seeks him out. If he doesn’t now... he will need your aide in the future. Leave Icho to me and those who know how to deal with mideaus like him.”

Andro reached up and placed his hand over hers on his cheek. “Do not hold back Tenna.” He said. “Icho won’t.”

Deia nodded. “I don’t intend to. Not anymore.”

ARC ROYAL ORBITING PRALOR DESIGNATED WORLD RYLONN TWO

They had crammed everyone back into the STRIKER for the last three hour portion of the return flight to the ARC ROYAL. What they had discovered was another Pralor science facility, but this one was completely deserted and without power. The STRIKER’s sensors had detected the small portions of its structure that had remained above ground. Most of the facility was intact but now buried under several hundred tons of rock and dirt. The bulkheads of the facility had no problem holding back the weight of rocks and dirt, it was a Pralor designed facility after all, but the risk to trying to bring the power online was more than they were willing to take. It had been an extreme relief to discover there were no Svorag on this planet or within the facility, but after only a few hours on the surface, Martin had them heading back. They would return in the future to further investigate the facility, but he wanted everyone back to the ARC ROYAL and OMEN THREE back on station shadowing the Kavalian fleet.

Martin stood in the cockpit with Murano, Koguth, his mate Mani, Kalis and Serale, which made for a tight fit. They were looking at the image of Wayonn being projected from the COM disc between For'mya and Endith's seats.

"... No record of it in either the records from the other facility or SPARTA'S WRATH's databanks from what I can determine." Wayonn said. "You are sure it was inert Martin?"

Martin nodded his head. "Quiet as a tomb." He answered. "No power at all. Everything looks intact even though it was buried under probably a hundred or hundred and fifty meters of rock and dirt. One of the vehicle entrances was all that was sticking out and that is why Tina picked it up on our sensors."

"Murano?" Wayonn asked looking up.

Murano shook his head. "I was not privy to the Science Division's activities Wayonn." He answered. "This could very well be one of Lorendo's secret facilities that never became active."

"Seismic activity appears to have caused the collapse of the ground around it." Tina spoke from her console. "Then years of overgrowth and follow on tremors."

"Can you determine how long it has been there Tina?" Wayonn asked.

"Based on composition of the soil and rock from scans we did while Marty and the others were on the surface, I'd estimate no more than seven hundred years Wayonn, but no less than three hundred." Tina answered.

"Interesting." Wayonn said. "I will need to look through the files that Delnash shared with us... but this appears to be a station that was going to be active until the seismic instability of the surrounding area caused its current condition."

"And it not being listed in any files is problematic." Murano said. "It means Lorendo may have more of them out there that we don't know about."

"Now why wouldn't that surprise me?" Martin said.

"This... this man you are speaking of does not appear to be very forthcoming." Mani spoke.

Martin looked at her and smiled. "Lady Juturi... you have no idea how accurate that statement is." He said.

Mani glanced at Koguth with surprise in her eyes as Martin turned back to the image of Wayonn. Koguth smiled down into her eyes and his arm squeezed her waist tighter. They had truly entered a new world and life here and it was one that Koguth found himself grasping onto tightly. Nedoli had already done so with his feelings for Ceale, and her mutual and growing feelings for his son. Mataen and embraced this long ago when he took Corsa as his wife and he had been devoted to her from that first day. Koguth hoped that future included Iama. He knew his youngest probably hated him for what she perceived he had done, but no matter what, he would insure she knew the truth and that he loved her. He turned his head and looked back into the passenger area of the STRIKER, his eyes searching for and finding the young man who had been fighting beside him for nearly a decade. He had promised him that if they found Iama he would allow him to court her. He had not told him that she had supposedly found a husband among the Lycavorian people. A new life. A small portion of Koguth hoped that Iama would see she belonged with one of her own, but the larger part of him didn't care any longer as long as he could once more hold her in his arms as he had when she was small.

"...Be landing in about thirty minutes." Martin was speaking as Koguth turned back. "Make sure Anja has a portable Med table to screen the members of the Juturi Pride so we can get their transition done quickly."

Wayonn shook his head. "I'm sure she is aware of that already and I for one will not even attempt to tell her what her duties are. She about chewed my ear off the last time I attempted to suggest something."

Martin and For'mya chuckled. "She does have somewhat of a temper Val'istar." For'mya said.

"Somewhat?" Wayonn spoke. "More on a par with yours Martin. And I have no desire to be on the receiving end of that temper. I'm sure she will be ready."

"Coward." Martin hissed.

Wayonn grinned in the transmission. "In this case... gladly."

Martin smiled again. "Ok... at least let her know we'll be arriving soon."

"That I can do." Wayonn said. "We'll talk more about this station when you get settled back in."

"Fair enough. And have Kesyla join us." Martin said. "She has a good insight of things and is sharp as a whip."

"Daron?" Wayonn asked.

Murano shook his head. "The less he knows the better Wayonn."

"I concur. I'll see to it." Wayonn answered.

"Wayonn... where is Fedor?" Martin asked.

"He and Eirene left their studies with me a few minutes ago. He said something about a picnic with Iama in the port landing bay. The area we have arranged for the adolescent dragons to stretch out and rest." Wayonn answered. "Shall I have him meet you?"

"No. We'll find him." Martin said. "See you soon. STRIKER ONE out."

"Dragons!" Mani hissed softly. "She is among dragons!"

For'mya turned in her seat and looked at her. "You have nothing to fear." She said. "Fedor is bound to a dragon, just as we are. Dnom would die to protect Iama just as he would Fedor. And she has shown no sign of the inbred fear your people have for dragons. She is very comfortable among them."

Mani looked at her with wide eyes. "She does not fear them?" She gasped.

For'mya shook her head. "Not in the least. If I may ask... when was the last time you saw her Mani'Juturi?"

"Not since... not since they day they took her away." Mani answered almost shamefully. "We are not allowed to see them once they are given to the biogenic program. Nearly... nearly twelve years now."

"She may... she may be somewhat different than you remember." For'mya told her. "I hope you are prepared for that?"

"She is our daughter." Mani said. "And we have searched for her since Koguth returned from the war. We do not care what she looks like... only that she is alive and well."

"And soon she will be back among her family." Koguth added. "That... that is our hope."

Martin looked at him. "Just remember that she is her own person now." He said. "She might... she might surprise you."

"Will we... will you take us to see her right away?" Mani asked gripping Koguth's arm tightly in anticipation.

Martin looked at For'mya and saw her dark brown eyes on him. He turned back to them and nodded. "For'mya and I will take you... yes." He said.

"Just prepare yourselves for her being different than you remember." For'mya said.

ARC ROYAL PORT LANDING BAY SECTIONS 10-15

The last five sections of the bay had been turned into an enormous dragon pen so to speak. Spread across the deck plating was several inches of dried grass taken from the planet where they had captured all of their meat and first come across the Svorag. It allowed for the dragons to rest without the cold of the deck touching their scales. Though it was a less than stellar location for the pen, it was the only set up that allowed them this much freedom. Many of them, Dnom and Kdan among them, were growing rapidly and this portion of the landing bay was not used because the ARC ROYAL had no fighter complement. They could stretch out and move around as much as they wanted. Arzoal, Torma, Isheeni and the other adult dragons were two sections down within their own pens. This allowed them to watch over the young ones and insure they were not getting into mischief as young dragons so often do. Many of them had taken to flying in the landing bay, and while the ceiling did not provide the most ideal situations for them, at least they were able to stretch their wings. All of them were itching for the all clear to come from the ground team currently on the surface of the planet they orbited so that they could truly take to the skies and fly and hunt.

Dnom and Kdan were celebrities after a fashion since they were the Elder Mother's grandsons and they were bonded to the Prince and Princess. It was a common sight to see both Eirene and Fedor down here among them with their bonded brothers, and since they both had taken mates, they had been here as well. Miseo and Iama were accepted and considered one of them, and it was not special to see them among the resting dragons with their mates. They favored Iama of course since her antics with Fedor were quite humorous. He would chase her through the bay while she bounded from broad back to broad back of the resting dragons, her genuine laughter so very pleasant to them. It was entertaining to watch when Fedor finally caught her and she melted into his arms so easily.

Today it was quiet though. Fedor and Iama had arrived some time ago and shared a lunch of sandwiches and fruit, which they had no problems sharing with those dragons sitting closest to them. Now Iama was stretched out on top of Fedor's powerful body, his head propped up against Dnom's thick front talon and leg as he read from the data pad and Iama's head rested on his chest. His left hand stroked her shoulder and down her back to curl around the firmness of her ass and then back up as Iama purred contentedly. Iama could not get enough of his hands upon her and she relished in the attention he paid to her. And she reciprocated that emotion and touch equally. Iama had gone to his mother Aricia just as Anja had suggested and Aricia had then taught her how to focus her new and growing Etheric abilities in order to prevent herself from becoming pregnant. She and Fedor were making love every opportunity they had and Iama never wanted it to end. She worshiped Fedor almost as much as she knew he worshiped her and this knowledge made both of them very passionate in their bed, or wherever they chose to couple. And in the last few days there had been many places they had coupled Iama thought with a gleeful smile as her head rested on his powerful chest. Since Anja had told her she could still bear children, it made Iama all the more blissful and sexually adventurous. She wanted to try everything with Fedor, experience all the pleasure she had been denied in her young life and she wanted to experience it with him. And Iama gave back to him all the pleasure he made her feel in return and she did so with eagerness. They had talked very briefly of children, but neither of them was ready for that kind of commitment and both of them wanted to explore the love they had found together for many years before they had children.

Her long, almost white blond hair was splayed across Fedor's chest and shoulder while her slim fingers danced along his rib cage and she tickled him gently. Not enough to divert his attention, but enough to let him know that he meant everything to her. Her tail flicked back and forth in the air casually as it so often did now when she was calm and purring in happiness. And Iama knew she did purr. How could she not when Fedor's touch ignited a desire within her that only he could quench.

They wore simple civilian clothes and Iama had pulled apart his buttoned shirt so that she could rest her head on his bare chest and better hear his heart beating. Her own shirt was loose fitting and had fallen off one shoulder, which allowed his wandering fingers to graze her bare skin as they caressed her flesh. All of the horrors she had been through, all of the vile Kavalian men who had taken her, all of that had been washed away with Fedor's love. It washed her soul clean and enveloped her in a protective blanket of warmth. Iama relished speaking her name, thoroughly delighted in how it sounded coming from anyone's lips. She still had yet to grow accustomed to how others treated her now that she was Fedor's wife and mate. She was a Princess of the Union she knew, but trying to process that information sometimes drove her mad. It was much easier because For'mya, Anja, Aricia and Fedor's other mothers, none of them acted as you would expect a Queen to act. Even in the few short weeks that she had known them and the last few days since Fedor had claimed her, they had not changed. And she felt so at peace just being around them and his sister Eirene. Fedor's fraternal twin sister was a godsend to Iama. They had grown so very close in so short a time, and it had been Eirene who had become her closest friend now. Even her husband and mate, the hulking Kavalian Miseo, even he treated her differently now. He had been so very correct that day when he told her she was wrong. And now Iama was joyous that she had been wrong indeed.

She reached out with her hand and snatched up a small fruit that was still in the basket. It was no bigger than a small orange and was purple in color. She took a bite from it as she lifted her head and gazed at Fedor's face, her soft green feline like eyes beaming in love. As Iama knew he would, Fedor took only two seconds to realize she was looking at him and his dark brown eyes turned to her. Iama held out the fruit to him and Fedor took a bite while it was still in her hands. The juice from the fruit squirted onto his chin and into his eye and Iama couldn't help but break out into soft laughter. Fedor joined her in laughing as he reached up to rub his eye and chew the fruit in his mouth.

Iama inched further up on his body and covered his lips with her own and Fedor's arms wrapped around her lower back as they kissed deeply.

Martin and For'mya stood with Koguth, Mani, Nedoli, Mataen and Corsa in the small pilot's briefing room watching Iama and Fedor through the glass. Mani was openly weeping, her hands shaking horribly over her mouth as her tears soaked the soft fur on her cheeks. Martin glanced at Koguth and saw the tall Kavalian was barely holding it together no matter how you looked at it.

"By... by all the prayers I have spoken..." Mani stammered through her tears. "She... she is... she is so beautiful!"

For'mya smiled gently and stepped closer to her, slipping her arm around her waist and nodding her head. "Yes she is." For'mya said.

"General?" Martin spoke softly.

Koguth turned to look at Martin, his heart racing and his own eyes moist as he tried to hold back the emotions that threatened to sweep him away just as they had his wife. "I... I have no words King Leonidas. I cannot..."

"May I make a suggestion sir?" Martin asked stepping closer to him.

Koguth nodded quickly, unable to find his voice for a moment. "Of... of course."

"Iama believes that you were the one who gave her to the Biogenic Program." Martin said. "After what we have seen... there is no doubt that could not be true." He said. He stepped closer to him. "To avoid a confrontation that would not be pleasant... I suggest you let Iama see her mother first. Lady Mani can explain it to her. Make her see that what she has believed for so long is not true."

"I want... I want nothing more than... than to hold my baby in my arms." Koguth stuttered out the words.

"King Leonidas is correct father." Mataen said gripping his father's arm. "Nedoli tried to protect her when the Puma Bane bastards came for her. They beat him for it. Let mother and him see her first. Let them tell her that you have not stopped looking for her since the day we returned."

Koguth looked at his oldest son and nodded quickly. "If... if you think that is best." He answered.

Martin motioned with his hand. "We can wait in the briefing room down the corridor sir." He said. "I can get you a drink if that will help you to calm down. I know I would need one."

Koguth nodded again without really hearing his words and Mataen took the cue to lead his father out into the corridor and follow Martin. Nedoli stepped up to his mother, his own heart singing in happiness as he gazed at his younger sister.

"How...?" Mani looked at For'mya as Corsa held her hand. "I cannot go out among them." She stammered. "My fear... I would be..."

For'mya smiled knowing what she meant. She looked out through the briefing room glass and saw all the dragons that were scattered about the landing bay. "I understand." She said. "I can call them here if you like?"

Corsa looked at her with wide eyes. "You can... she will hear you?"

For'mya nodded her head. "Fedor... part of the Lycavorian custom is for the male to bite the female he chooses to spend the rest of his days with. This is done during an act of love between them. It imparts a small portion of the virus within Fedor's blood to Iama and signals to other males of our species she is his wife. No other Lycavorian, pureblood or turned, will ignore this. Fedor is within her blood now, just as she is within his. We conducted a small elven ceremony as well, and for those species that cannot smell Fedor within Iama's blood, she now wears a ring on her hand to signify that she is his wife and mate. It is a custom that began on Earth among the humans and it has carried over to many of the elves and Lycavorians through the centuries."

"You... you do not wear a ring." Corsa said shyly.

For'mya looked at her hand and chuckled softly. "No. Martin Leonidas is nothing if not unpredictable." She reached up and drew back the collar of her flight suit to reveal two different necklaces. One was a glittering Rilian diamond and the other was a coral red pendant of some kind. Both Mani and Corsa gasped in awe. "He has to be different.” For'mya finished as her fingers traced the two pendants reverently. She looked at Mani. “Are you ready?”

Mani nodded her head. “I have been ready since the day they took her from me nearly a dozen years ago.”

For'mya turned her head and looked out into the landing bay as she touched the control panel and raised the blast shield over the glass.

Fedor my son. She reached out.

Mother! Fedor's voice echoed. You are back! For'mya didn't see him and Iama break their kiss, but he felt Iama join their connection almost seamlessly now. She was getting stronger For'mya noticed.

We returned only a few minutes ago. For'mya answered.

Everything went well For'mya? Iama asked.

Yes... in a manner of speaking. For'mya replied.

Mother...? Fedor could sense something was odd within her voice.

Would you and Iama join me in Port Briefing Room Eleven please? For'mya asked. It is important.

For'mya didn't physically see him do it but she sensed Fedor's head turn and look toward the room where she stood. What are you doing in there mother? He asked as he rose to his feet and pulled Iama to hers.

Just join us Fedor. For'mya told him.

Us? Fedor hesitated.

Do not argue with me young man! For'mya snapped playfully. Just do as I say. For'mya could feel Iama's humor within Mindvoice and then her urging him to comply.

Very well mother. Fedor said. But this is very strange. Even for you.

For'mya smiled and nodded her head. Don't I know it. She said. We'll see you shortly. She looked at Mani and Corsa. “They are coming.” She said.

“You spoke to them? In... within your mind?” Corsa asked amazed.

For'mya nodded. “Yes.” She said. “It should only be a few moments. One of the first things Fedor was so proud of when he was grown was that he had memorized the entire ship's layout.”

Nedoli stepped up to his mother's opposite side now and took her other hand. “It has been... it has been so long.” He said.

Iama and Fedor really didn't know what For'mya wanted, and they were being playful as they entered the briefing room, with Iama chewing lightly on his ear as he carried her in his arms effortlessly. When her eyes turned and she saw them she came to an abrupt halt and the memories of that day came rushing forward like a tidal wave.

She was barely eleven years old when they came for her. She remembered trying to fight them, screaming for her father. Her mother being slapped down by a particularly vicious Puma Bane soldier as she tried to wrench Iama free from the grip of the larger man. She remembered Nedoli leaping from the stairway of their home with a vicious snarl of anger and landing upon the large Puma Bane troop at only seventeen years of age. He would have won that contest one on one as large as he was, but the others pounced on him and began beating him into the ground as he tried to protect his sister. Her mother's screams filled her ears for weeks after that day, the images of her tears and the pain in her face as she wiped the blood from Nedoli's cheeks while they dragged her away into a life she had not wanted. Iama felt it all returning at once and her soft green eyes were wide in answer to a pray she had whispered for years afterwards. That one day she would see her mama again. She had lost all hope of that when she ended up in the brothels of Nefoa, but standing before her now was the gods answer to all those nights of crying and wishing.

“Ma... mama?” She gasped in disbelief.

Mani could not contain the tears in her eyes as she moved away from Nedoli and Corsa, her strength and happiness showing. She opened her arms wide, her tail quivering in happiness. “It... it is me child.” Mani spoke with a hoarse voice. “Iama... my... my little girl! The gods preserve me child... my baby girl!”

There was no hesitation in the least about what she would do. How could there be. Iama broke into a wail of tears as she practically ran to her mother and felt her mother's arms crush her lithe body to hers with staggering power. The moment Iama was folded into her embrace, twelve long years of sorrow and horror left Mani in a rush. She cried out in happiness and joy as Iama's hair filled her hands and Mani crushed her youngest child to her breast. Iama felt a huge wave of emotions flood her at once as she felt those arms embrace her. Arms she had resigned herself to never feeling again. She breathed deeply of her mother's unique smell and the rush of memories filled her head. Standing with her in their kitchen as her mother taught her to cook so many different kinds of food. Her laughter at Iama's antics and attempts to make up recipes for food. The tears were flowing so quickly, Iama could barely see. The warmth and comfort of her mother's arms were like a soothing balm to her scarred soul. What Fedor's love had repaired... her mother's embrace washed away forever. Her soft green eyes turned and she saw her smiling brother, his own eyes moist with tears.

"Nedoli!" Iama gasped as she moved from her mother's embrace into his.

Nedoli didn't hesitate for a moment and like his mother, he crushed his lost sister in his arms tightly. His tail whipped around to curl around her waist as he lifted her off the deck and spun her around in happiness. Iama couldn't help but cry out in joy as the memories of how he had done this when she was small filled her. These small actions were not typical of a Kavalian family, at least not those she had known, and that is why those first years away had been so emotionally horrific for her. Iama had experienced all the terrible things that Kavalian females went through. It was so very new to her because her family was nothing like this. Nedoli finally put her down and Mani gathered her into her arms once more, taking her head in her hands and looking at her daughter with tear clouded eyes.

"You... you are so beautiful child." Mani stammered as she looked at her. "My beautiful child. We have searched for so long."

Iama shook her head. "How... how did... how did you get here? How... tell me this is not a dream mother." She cried out as tears filled her eyes once more. "Tell me this is all real."

Mani laughed as she pulled Iama close to her once more. "It is no dream my beautiful Iama." She declared. "Bless the gods it is no dream!"

Iama squeezed her mother with all of her strength, and when she could no longer hold that embrace and her mother was still there, Iama began to believe. Her heart slammed into her chest in delight as her mother pushed her back once more and looked into her eyes. Iama shook her head. "How?" She gasped again. "How can this be?"

"This can be because he never gave up hope." Mani stammered. "He never stopped looking. He kept that hope within us alive. He never let us give in to despair."

Iama shook her head in confusion. "Mataen?" She asked believing her mother was speaking of her older brother. "Mataen has done this? Where is he? Is he with you?"

Mani held her face in her hands. "Not Mataen Little One." She said. "And yes... your brother is with us. Mani took Corsa's hand. "This is Corsa... your brother's wife."

Corsa's eyes were tear filled and she smiled at Iama with delight. "It is so very good to finally meet you Iama' Juturi." She spoke.

Iama looked at her mother. "If not Mataen... mother... who could have done this? How... where is Mataen?"

Mani looked at Nedoli who nodded his head. "Tell her mother." He said. "She has to know that what she has believed all of these years is wrong."

Iama glanced at her brother and then back to her mother. "What... what do you mean?" She stammered. "What I have believed?"

"Mataen is here with us." Mani said. "He is waiting in another room with... he is waiting with your father."

Iama's eyes grew wide and she instantly backed away from her mother, instinctively looking for and finding Fedor's protective body. Her tail curled around his waist as she backed up against him, his arm slipping around her waist and drawing her close to him. "Father!" Iama hissed with angry venom in her words. "You... father is the reason I have lived a nightmare for so long!" She almost screamed. "You know this! You know this and you bring him here!"

Mani moved closer to Iama, wary of the way Fedor's eyes had changed to his wolf nature and how he appeared ready to protect Iama with violence if needed. "No!" Mani exclaimed. "They lied to you Iama! Your father did not do this! He has... he has been the one searching for you since he returned from war almost seven years ago.”

“Father did this!” Iama screamed. “Only father could have given me to the Puma Bane! They made me into a whore mama! They made me...”

“NO!” Mani barked silencing her words. She stepped closer even more.

“That’s close enough!” Fedor growled the warning as he pulled Iama half behind him in a shielding manner. Iama’s arms wrapped around his waist and she pressed tightly to him.

“Back away from my sister boy!” Nedoli snapped moving forward towards him.

He was able to take two steps before Fedor’s right arm came up and filled with the lethal looking knife in a small silver white flash of light. Nedoli’s eyes went wide as he realized that knife had appeared from Flatspace.

“Take one more step boy...” Fedor snarled as his fangs became fully extended. “And you will be dead half a second after. I will protect my wife and mate from all comers.”

“Fedor!” For'mya shouted as she moved forward from the doorway where she had been standing with him. “Stand down!”

“No mother!” Fedor barked out in reply. “I will protect my wife and mate! Why have you brought them here?”

Mani held up her hands in front of her. “Iama... please child... your father did not do this.” She pleaded. “This was Golag’s doing.”

Iama stared at her. “Grandfather?” She gasped.

Mani nodded her head quickly. “He did it to gain prestige among the senior Prides. He did it in your father’s name. He never consulted your father Iama. He knew your father would never agree to this. This action never received his voice of approval. Your father would have never done this! You... you were...”

“You were his favorite sister.” Nedoli said softly his eyes still on Fedor and the blade in his hand even though For'mya was now beside him. “Mataen and I knew that.” He said with a smile. “Father was the one who beat us when we were harsh to you sister. Don’t you remember the time Mataen called you...?”

“He told me I was nothing.” Iama said quickly as she stepped back in front of Fedor, her hands holding tightly to his arm which was around her waist.

Nedoli nodded. “Father turned Mataen’s hide red with the whipping he received.” He told her.

“When your father and Mataen returned from the war and discovered what Golag had done he... he flew into a rage.” Mani said. “Never have I seen your father so out of his mind with frenzy. He killed...”

“He killed grandfather Iama.” Nedoli said seeing Iama’s green eyes go wide. “He killed grandfather because of what he had done. Mataen and I were with him that day. He made sure that... he made sure grandfather suffered too. We watched grandfather die in agony. Father told us it was for all the horror and agony he had allowed to happen to you. That would continue to happen every day you were not back among your family. He swore to us that day that we would find you. That we would find you and bring you home. He has never wavered from that. Six years we have searched sister. Six years he has driven us to never give up. Even in the bleakest times, he never lost his will. It is the only thing that has kept him going. We have lived a double life since he returned. Good little Kavalian officers in public... all the while using our positions and assets to find you. Father leads our pride now... many are with us. Cousins and uncles and others who have joined us. We...” Nedoli stepped closer and while the knife never wavered in Fedor’s hand, Iama’s hands came up and wrapped around Fedor’s forearm, pulling his arm down slowly. Her tail still remained curled around his waist and she did not step away from him, but it was a start.

“After what that pig Pusintin did we heard rumors of a planet that the Lycavorian King had struck in his search for his elven Queen. A remote outpost. Everyone there had been butchered. The reports also spoke of several females from Nefoa who had been there. One was not among the bodies according to the reports. The description was of you sister. It was said that King Leonidas took you with him. When father discovered this, he has many friends among the military; he immediately volunteered our ship to accompany Pusintin in his chase of the Lycavorian King.”

Mani moved closer. “He... your father refuses to even think of having more children. His only thoughts were of finding you and returning you to our family child. It is all either of us have been able to think of these past years. Your father promised me we would never give up.”

“Why... why is he not...” Iama began to ask shaking her head. She stepped fully away from Fedor, his arm slowly coming all the way down as Mani stepped up next to her. Her mother took her hands.

“He thought it best.” Mani said. “He feared... he feared you would think it had been him all this time. The King... he suggested that Nedoli and I speak to you first. You were his light Iama my child.” Mani told her. “Your father would never... could never do anything that brought harm to you. I saw that in his eyes the moment I brought you into this world.”

Iama looked at her. “All these years... all this time they told me... they told me it had been father.” She said.

Mani nodded. “Of course they would tell you that.” She stated. “It was a way to make you think you were nothing. So that you did not have any hope. It is what they do. Go to him Iama my child. See for yourself. You will see the light come on in his eyes once more when he sees you. That same light he had when he held you as a baby and small girl.”

Iama looked at her. “Mama... you...”

“Do you doubt my love for you daughter?” Mani asked her.

Iama shook her head. “No. Never.”

“Then go and see for yourself.” Mani told her. “We will come with you... but when you see him you will know.”

“Where... where is he?” Iama asked softly.

“... what... what if she does not believe Mataen?” Koguth asked softly as he rubbed his large hands together in anxiousness while sitting on the small couch. “What if they have twisted my little girl so much that she can no longer believe in my love for her?”

Mataen looked at his father. “She will believe father.” He said. “She has to believe. We never stopped looking for her. We never gave up because of you.”

Mataen watched as his father stood up and moved to the glass partition and he looked out over the dozens of dragons in the landing bay that he could see. “I remember... I remember the smell of her hair Mataen. I can still see the splinters I pulled from her hands when you and Nedoli brought her home from trying to climb that Bakolaian Oak Tree. I remember removing each one while she cried in pain and then...”

Mataen gripped his father’s shoulder. “Father don’t.” He said. “You have believed all of these years. You never let us give up. Do not give up now when she is only in the next room.”

Neither of them heard the door slide open behind them and Mani led Iama into the room with Nedoli right behind her. Iama felt a myriad of emotions as she saw her father’s back. He was just as tall and wide as she remembered. His tail moved in time with his mood as it always did. His fur was a little grayer than she remembered, but she would never forget that voice. And as she heard the next words, Iama nearly lost it.

“I could not... I could not go on knowing she hated me Mataen.” Koguth said softly. “I butchered my own father for his vile actions. I curse the memory of him every morning that I wake for what he did to my baby. If she hates me, my heart will be broken, because he will have won.”

“Father... you must have faith.” Mataen said.

Koguth laughed softly now. “The faith I have carried all these years deserts me now at the end.” He said. “I am terrified I will lose her forever Mataen. And in losing your sister I will have lost you and your brother as well.”

“That is not true!” Mataen spat.

“You and your brother have followed me in my quest without question.” Koguth said. “I have forsaken the father that I am to you and Nedoli in my quest to return your sister to us.”

“You have forsaken nothing!” Mataen snapped loudly. “Least of all Nedoli and I. Do you think we would be here if we did not feel the same thing father? Do you think that we have not wanted Iama back among us more than anything? We could no more forsake our sister than you could. Do you think I could love Corsa as I do without your influence? That Nedoli could love Ceale so completely? You taught us these things! You taught us that this is our future! Not the old ways! Our entire Pride believes deeply now. Because of what you have taught us and how you have led us.”

“And it will all mean nothing if I can never hold my daughter in my arms again.” Koguth said softly.

“Papa!” The voice was spoken in a raspy whisper and Koguth and Mataen spun around at the sound.

Koguth’ Juturi had held it in for so long.

He had returned from a war he did not believe in only to find that his beloved daughter had been given away like a piece of garbage. Koguth had killed his own father for doing such a thing, killed him in a way that guaranteed he would feel pain for a long time before his life left him. He had spent the last seven years with one central goal foremost in his mind. He would find his daughter if it was the last thing he ever did. Through it all he had bottled up his many emotions, pushed them to the side like a good Kavalian, only his beautiful Mani knowing what went through his mind and providing him the strength to continue. Seeing her now was almost too much. Her white blond fur was gone... leaving only smooth, tanned skin and long hair from her head, but her soft green feline eyes had not changed. They were the same eyes that had looked at him with love and devotion as a small child. The same eyes that had expected him to protect her as her father. A job he had failed miserably at, through no fault of his own. She was even more beautiful than he imagined she would be at this age. Koguth’s eyes were wide as he took a tentative step towards her, those emotions he had held in on the verge of spilling forth, and he spoke the words of love he had not spoken in nearly twelve years.

“My... my Little Flower!” He gasped.

And for the second time in so many minutes, Iama’s life altered drastically for the better. The knowledge that her father had not deserted her, that he had spent all of this time with one focused goal of finding her, it was almost too much to bear. All of this time she had thought it had been him who had so callously tossed her aside when in fact the truth brought her so much more joy and happiness. With a rush of emotion more powerful than when she had embraced her mother and brother, Iama ran the five steps to where her father stood and nearly threw herself into his arms.

“Papa!” Iama wailed in wondrous glee.

Koguth’ Juturi could no longer hold it in. He no longer wanted to. As his arms crushed his beloved daughter to him, he lifted her off the floor and screamed out in utter happiness, the tears he had been holding in for so long spilling forth like the floodgates of a dam had been opened. He buried his face into her hair and spun Iama around and around just as Nedoli had done, even as he bellowed out his total joy for all to hear. Koguth held nothing back now, all of his very un-Kavalian emotion pouring forth. The day he had seen his daughter enter this world was the day Koguth’ Juturi had changed and become the man he now was. That was the day he had embraced a new ideology, a day that had changed him forever. Koguth had thought that lost forever when he discovered Iama taken from him. As he crushed his daughter to him in love, Koguth felt that ideology return in full force and as he wrapped his arms tighter around his daughter, that ideology once more became part of the man he was.

For’mya gripped Fedor’s arm with one hand and pulled him out of the room as she wiped the tears from her eyes with the other hand. We must give them the time they need Fedor my son. She spoke to him.

Mother she is my wife. Fedor complained.

For’mya nodded her head. And now she needs to rediscover her family. A family she thought lost to her forever. When she needs your love and support she will call for you. Besides, your Medwan and I, we have something you and Eirene need to see as well.

Fedor looked at her now. What do you mean?

For’mya pulled him further into the corridor. There is someone you need to meet.

Who? Mother I want to stay here for Iama. Fedor complained further.

Join us please Fedor my son. Martin’s voice filled the connection now.

Father? Fedor questioned.

It’s important son. We’re nearby. Come with your mother. Martin told him.

Fedor looked at the closed door and then back to his mother. This had better be worth it mother. He said.

For’mya smiled. Your father and I think it is. She said as she led him down the empty corridor. Fedor knew right away they were heading for the Forward Port Briefing Room. It only took them four minutes to cover the distance and then they came around the corner and he saw Eirene standing with their MedwanGai. For’mya led him up to them and stopped.

“Fedor is here father.” Eirene said. “What is this all about? Miseso and I wanted to meet Iama’s family.”

Martin smiled at her. “And you will. But this is more important right now.”

“What could be more important than that?” Fedor asked.

Martin looked at him and then to Eirene. “We have always told you that the one rule our family lives by is to never fear the unknown. To embrace what we don’t understand or even what we don’t think possible.”

“Father... could you dispense with the rensibfla and just tell us what is going on?” Eirene spoke.

“Where did you go? How did you find Iama’s family? How did you know where to look?”

“The answer to your question is behind this door.” Martin said. “And he is very anxious to meet you both.”

Fedor and Eirene looked at each other and then back to Martin. “Now you have peaked our interest.” Eirene said with a smile.

“Just remember what we have taught you both. “For'mya said softly. “And know that I more than approve of what we have done here.”

Fedor looked at his mother. “Why would you need to tell us you approve mother?”

Martin smiled as he touched the door panel and it slid open to show Kalis and Serale standing with Ceale and Danim near the glass partition looking into the landing bay. Fedor and Eirene’s eyes looked into the briefing room and it happened very quickly. Though they had not yet been born, the awareness that Androcles had granted to them that fateful day allowed them to see and know all that he did. They knew instantly who Kalis was when they saw him and the reaction stemmed more from their love for their mother than anything else. Fedor let loose with a roar of anger that they had not heard from him before and two blinks later he was rushing into the room and launching three knives from Flatspace directly at Kalis. Eirene didn’t hesitate and was following her twin with murder in her eyes.

Martin looked at For'mya as his eyes changed and he began moving. Perhaps this wasn't the best way to introduce them For'mya! He barked as his Shi Viska leaped into existence and left his arm.

For'mya was using her combined elven and wolf speed to follow him. They are too much like you! She snarled as she followed him without hesitation.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

VEYERAI HIGH COVEN SPACE

“...are certain of your findings Nalavi?” Yuri asked from her chair.

Nalavi looked at her from his chair and nodded his head. He was joined at the table by Lidene, Pa'cour, Nameia and Onera. This had become their small brain trust so to speak, and while Nalavi had never been involved in something like this before, he found it very interesting. Of course, having so many lives depending on their decisions was not something that sat well with him and at times he did not see how Yuri and Pa'cour did it.

“As certain as I can be with the equipment we have.” He replied.

Pa'cour looked across the table at him. “With the equipment we have?” He asked clearly surprised. “Was the Hadarian computer that Androcles gave to us not front line Nalavi?”

Nalavi leaned back in his chair. “No...no... it’s state of the art.” He answered. “The very best that they have if I do say so myself. If they have better medical computers, then they are one of the best kept secrets within the Union.”

Lidene nodded in agreement. “I tend to lean towards the fact they have much better.” He said.

“Then what is the problem?” Pa'cour asked. “Why can you not be certain?”

“Hadarian Medical Computers are strictly limited Pa'cour.” Nalavi said. “Their medical systems are more advanced than anything we have. Than anyone has really.” Nalavi looked at Yuri. “Except perhaps those who we talked of before Yuri.”

Yuri nodded. “Yes.”

“All of their computer systems are tightly controlled.” Nalavi continued turning back to Pa'cour. “They are also broken into several different categories. The Medical Computer Main System Core that they gave to us is an absolute treasure trove of medical knowledge. Almost anything I could ever want to look up or research pertaining to general medical knowledge is within the Core's data banks. Every known vaccine, every known cure to every known disease. Even the research needed to produce many of the vaccines where none are available. It would also allow me to develop new treatments and extrapolate existing parameters to better improve any vaccine or serum. It really is amazing. I'm quite shocked Androcles Leonidas allowed us to have one."

"So if it does all this, why can't you be certain in your examination of the data?" Pa'cour asked once more.

"It's not a Genetics Main Computer Core." Nalavi answered. "As I said... the Hadarians break up their computer core systems into several different fields of study. Most of their senior researchers and medical personnel have access to the other systems on a very regular basis, but they are almost never combined into one single Medical Core Database System. I dare say that there are perhaps only five or six of these unique Combined Core Systems anywhere within Union space. Hadarians Healers who even have the access to such a Combined Core System would be miniscule. Queen Anja most certainly would, she is without question, the foremost medical mind within the Union and probably most of the known universe. She alone developed the formula for the cloned blood that we all use as well as countless treatments for diseases and afflictions that were incurable before she came to the Union. She is much like her father and mother. Since she has been Queen, the population of the Union has become healthier and more fit. She thinks in a very unorthodox manner and this has allowed her to cure and eradicate three diseases common to the Folcani and the Algolians as I said. Diseases that they have been trying to cure for centuries. She is like a Norbolian Bore Mite. When she sinks her wolf teeth into something she will not let go."

Yuri chuckled softly. "I would not refer to her as a Norbolian Bore Mite in her presence Nalavi." She said. "She might take offense."

"You know what I mean." He said with a smile. "As for others, most definitely her sister Sivana. From what I understand she is becoming the foremost expert on Mutagenic Compound Mixture. I would guess her daughter Eliani as well. Again... if my information is accurate and their Netnews Channels are to be believed, she has very quickly become the finest Trauma Care Healer within the Union ranks. The Hadarian Divine One certainly. Very few would have any access beyond that though I think. The Hadarians specifically and the Union as a whole frown heavily on genetic manipulation in a very dark way. If you are caught using any sort of genetic alterations in your research you are arrested and tried very quickly. You all know of course what happened to the three men who we had placed in Queen Isabella's company two decades ago."

Yuri nodded. "They were tried and executed within three days." She said.

Nalavi leaned forward at the table. "Justice is nothing if not swift in the Union."

"And final." Pa'cour said.

"Don't the Kavalians now have access to these same medical systems and computers Nalavi?" Lidene asked.

Nalavi shook his head. "Doubtful. All of the Combined Core Systems were under the strict control of the military and Hadarian Senior Science Division. The Union military removed however many they had on Hadaria when the Kavalians came, and the members of the Senior Hadarian Science Division were all staunch supporters of Anja and they destroyed the two they had on the planet before evacuating with almost their entire staff to Apo Prime and Earth."

"How do you know all this Nalavi?" Yuri asked him surprised at the information he was offering to them.

Nalavi chuckled. "I'm a doctor Yuri. Physicians the universe over, no matter their species or gender, will share information from time to time. I have a few contacts within the Hadarian establishment. I've only spoken to one since the Kavalians took over, she was able to make it to Earth with about two dozen others, but I did maintain contact with many of them through the years. Discretely of course. I didn't want to be executed as a traitor you know."

"Couldn't they build more of these combined systems Nalavi?" Pa'cour asked.

Nalavi shook his head. "The construction of those systems was limited to one company on Apo Prime. Unless that fanatical bitch Buonau has one hidden away somewhere, which I doubt, then the only remaining Combined Core Systems are in Union hands. As are all the MSGC Systems for obvious reasons. So I am limited in how accurate I am, or how detailed I can be after examining the data.”

“Isn’t what they... what you did for me the same thing grandfather?” Onera asked from her chair beside Nameia. “Genetic modification?”

Nalavi looked at her and shook his head. She had taken to calling him grandfather and while Nalavi had tried to discourage this at first, it rapidly grew on him and made him closer to Onera in many ways. Finally he determined that if he could not see his own grandchildren, then he could dote over Onera. Yuri and Pa'cour saw no issue with it and they even encouraged it.

“We did not alter your genetic structure child.” He replied. “All we did is accelerate your birth so that you arrived before your mother’s womb could no longer provide for you. Using her talents with this Etheric ability that everyone is now calling it, she was able to shield your mind and basically allow it to grow at the same rate as your body. She fed you hers and your father’s knowledge and wisdom through your link so that it corresponded to the age of your body at the time. There was no genetic tampering done.” He turned back to Pa'cour. “That is why I cannot be fully certain. I am also a general physician and not a genetic researcher as I said Pa'cour. Even if I had the right equipment I would still say what I do now. I am reasonably certain of my findings, but not one hundred percent.”

“I trust yours and Lidene’s guesses more than most people’s facts Nalavi.” Yuri stated. “I still don’t understand how she was able to hide this from me.”

“Something tells me she hid this from quite a few people.” Nalavi said. “Now, the better question is, what do we do about it?”

Yuri looked at Lidene. “Lidene... were you able to decrypt any other information from my mother’s files? Anything that could help us?”

Lidene shook his head. “Aside from several different locations used for research on the clone project... nothing so far Princess. There are still quite a few data files I have yet to try and access... but so far nothing. I can work around the decryption and eventually break it... but it will take time.”

“We can leave Lidene to his decrypting Yuri...” Pa'cour spoke. “But we need to decide what to do about what we already know.”

“We do not even know if these clones are living father.” Onera said. “And if they are... we have no way of knowing if they are actually in place. Do we?”

Pa'cour met his daughter’s eyes and shook his head slowly. “No we do not.” He replied. “Nalavi?”

“Everything I have seen points to the fact that these clones are as perfect as they come.” He told them. “And when I say perfect, I mean perfect. An exact duplicate in every way. For all intents and purposes, as I told you earlier, they are Lycavorian.”

“How?” Yuri said.

Nalavi leaned back in his chair. “From what I have been able to determine from the data, it seems all of the experiments on Leonidas’s mother paid off in a large way. She is a pureblood and by all accounts her blood is nearly as pure as her son. That also speaks to the overall purity of Leonidas’s blood as well as his children. Your father and mother must have known all this to go to the lengths that they did in order to have her captured and then keep that clone of her in place for so long so that they could conduct their experiments. It was no small feat to keep transferring scent glands from the real Gorgo to the clone so that no one caught on. If your mother knew at all what your father was doing that is.”

Yuri snorted in a very unladylike fashion. “My mother knew.” She hissed softly. “She knew exactly what my father was doing all of the time. She probably is the one who gave him most of his directives.”

“Yes... well, these clones were not fast grown Yuri. According to the data it took six years to fully grow them and another three to insure their mental capabilities were in accordance with what your mother wanted.” Nalavi said.

“And what did she want?” Yuri asked.

“For lack of a better description, these three clones are essentially identical twins to the real persons they were cloned from.” Nalavi said. “The memory engrams were painstakingly allowed to grow from the moment of conception according to the data. Depending on when the actual cells were taken from the host and then nurtured, these clones would have all of the same memories of the original host up until that point.”

“Like the clone of Anja on Hadaria?” Yuri asked.

Nalavi nodded his head. "I believe she was the last stage of successful early clones based on the information obtained from Leonidas's mother. Remember... the Kavalians had her for several years before actually using her on Hadaria. And the facility they took her from is listed as an active one among your mother's files. At least it was until it was completely destroyed by that volcano going active."

Yuri chortled in humor. "That was no volcano." She said. "I would bet you anything that it was Martin Leonidas's people. It would explain in part how they were able to successfully play that he was dead. I would hazard a guess and say they had a failed clone of him that my mother tried to make and kept for some vile reason. More than likely that is how it was so believable in the beginning."

"Well... after looking at the data we have unlocked, I think the clone of Anja was the final link if you will. The final successful piece in the link anyway. Once she was complete they moved on to the final stage. That was the three we see in the report." Nalavi said. "I understand that this clone of Anja is now considered a sister by the Queen and her twin Sivana?"

Yuri nodded her head. "Yes." She said. "That was all over their Netnews for a few days. It's not surprising, the Lycavorians as a whole are far more accepting of unorthodox situations. And no matter her temper and harsh nature at times, Anja is very compassionate." Yuri looked around the table. "If the data is accurate... my mother would have had to place them within the last three years."

Lidene nodded. "If she was able to place them at all." He said. "Princess... these names... I realize I have no real knowledge in such things, but these are not men and women that are unknown. Even I know that."

Yuri nodded her head. "And while this may not be your area of expertise Lidene, you bring a different perspective to all of this. Just as Nalavi does. One not tainted by the knowledge that Pa'cour and I have used to make such decisions in the past. We must think and act quite differently now."

"So you believe she was able to place them Yuri?" Nalavi asked.

Yuri shook her head. "I don't know." She answered softly. "It appears there are many things that my mother was involved in and did not include me. She and Moran wanted to be sure Xaxon could brain fuck me and not be disturbed."

"Mother!" Onera gasped out but with a huge smile on her face. She rarely heard her mother swear and it was incredibly humorous to listen to.

Yuri smiled at her and sat forward in her chair. That she could now joke about it in a sense told Yuri she had come full circle. It told her that this new life she was leading had given her Pa'cour and their daughter and all the healing she would need. She glanced at Pa'cour who only gazed at her with loving eyes while remaining silent. "My apologies." She told them.

"Don't apologize!" Nalavi spoke. "I thought it was funny as all hell."

This broke the ice among them and even Nameia found she was laughing softly. The last few days had been very interesting indeed to say the least. She had certainly never expected to be so drawn to Yuri. They had hardly been apart when she was not with Pa'cour or her daughter, and they talked of many things that Nameia had been surprised about Yuri being willing to share with her. She found Yuri to be extremely intelligent and very passionate about helping her sister from behind the scenes. She was dedicated to trying to make amends for all the sins she had committed through the years while under Xaxon's influence. Some of those same decisions Nameia knew, they were decisions that Yuri would have made regardless, but there were many decisions that went against her nature completely and this is what made her very unpredictable in the eyes of those who followed her. Unpredictable and very dangerous. Now however, now Yuri was committed to her daughter, to her husband and to seeing that the High Coven climbed out of the darkness her parents had driven it to. She loved her younger sister Nameia knew, and she would insure that her sister succeeded. Yuri also longed for the day that she could try to make amends with her daughters. Lucia and Carisia no doubt hated her to the extreme, but even this knowledge did not deter her from one day trying to show them that she had indeed altered the path of her life.

Yuri shook her head with a slight smile. "The bottom line is that we don't know for sure." She said. "And that is something that we need to discover. Before I take this information to Martin Leonidas."

"Whoa!" Nalavi declared as he leaned forward. "Take it to Martin Leonidas? Yuri my girl... have you lost all your wits? Martin Leonidas would just as soon skin you as meet with you. What are you thinking?"

"Given the names that are on this list what do you suggest I do?" Yuri said. "If I give this information to Androcles what do you think will happen after what he has done for the High Coven? He takes after his mother in that he is as equally unforgiving as he is compassionate. This would be a betrayal of the highest order in his eyes, even though Narice knows nothing of it.”

Nalavi and Pa'cour nodded in agreement after a long moment. “On that we tend to agree.” Nalavi said grudgingly. “You think Martin Leonidas will react any different?”

Yuri nodded. “Yes.” She answered. “Especially if it comes directly from me. He is much more methodic in his thinking. Less prone to emotional outbursts and reactions.”

“Seems like what he did on Enurrua was quite emotional.” Nalavi said.

“That the King is not as connected to the High Coven as Androcles is would be a better way to explain it Nalavi.” Pa'cour said calmly. “His son has intertwined our fates. He has done so because he has faith in what our people want and desire. Martin Leonidas has no such belief or faith.”

“And that is good?” Lidene asked.

Yuri nodded. “Yes... because he will look at what I show him objectively and not feel like we have betrayed him. Not to mention...” Yuri paused for a moment and looked at Lidene. “I believe only Martin will have the fortitude to do what might be needed.”

“You mean kill them?” Nalavi said.

Yuri nodded. “Yes.” She answered softly.

“Is he capable of this Yuri?” Nalavi asked. “I mean... he...?”

Yuri nodded her head. “Yes.” She said confidently. “He will not tolerate any perceived threat to the Union Nalavi. From within or without. He may weep while giving the order, but make no mistake, he would not hesitate to give that order. That is what has separated him from my mother and father as a leader. He will regret his decision, he will agonize over his decision, but he will make that decision in the end. And he will do what they failed to do so many times in the past. He will learn from that decision and such a threat would no longer be a viable option for his enemies to use going into the future.”

“You speak as if you admire him mother.” Onera spoke.

Yuri nodded. “Not admire... not in the sense that you suspect. I respect him daughter.” She answered. “Something that I can freely admit now. I respect him for who he is and what he has done against all the odds. He continues what his grandfather and father began, and he does so in a way that leaves no doubt as to his goals or intent. He does not mince words and he will treat you with the same respect or the same contempt as you treat him. He does not wish to force his will on others, but if you try to force your son him he will hit back. Harder and faster than you think he can. Do not in any way let the outward appearance of an overbearing brute that he projects fool you Onera. That is the furthest thing from the truth and many have felt the pain of their misconceptions through the years. Martin is perhaps the single most cunning and vicious man I have ever known. As well as the finest military tactician that lives today... anywhere. And his son ranks right behind him.”

Pa'cour nodded his head. “Your mother speaks wisely Onera.” He said. “It has already been shown by his son that the High Coven and the Lycavorian Union were never meant to be enemies. You have seen the reports of the High Coven News channels about the events of those days.” He spoke to her. “Androcles Leonidas showed the people of the High Coven and those of Akruxian blood what could have been thousands of years ago had not Veldruk and Aikiro been in command. This world would be very different now had the course of events been allowed to proceed naturally.”

Yuri looked at her Immortal husband and smiled at his grasp of history and his keen intelligence on the situation. She felt a flush of desire course through her because of this and she quickly pushed it down. She would surrender to those feelings later.

“All of that is very nice.” Nalavi said. “It still does not explain why it needs to be you that presents this to him Yuri. The man simply does not like you.”

Yuri nodded. “And that is precisely why it needs to be me.” She stated. “After all that has happened, if it is me that brings this to him, he will know that it is truthful and accurate.”

“He could very well just kill you Princess.” Lidene said.

Yuri shook her head this time. “No. That is not something he will do.” She told them. “All of you must understand, Androcles is the conduit to his father and he to Androcles. They think so much alike it is truly frightening at times. Martin will not infringe upon what his son has done. He may not have agreed with it, he may not have done it himself, but it is done. He will not do something that makes either of us weaker now.”

“Are you so sure that includes your well being?” Nalavi asked.

Yuri nodded her head once more. “Yes.”

“How can you be certain?” Lidene asked.

“Androcles trusts me.” Yuri said confidently. “I saw it in his eyes before we left his ship. He looked into my soul that day, beyond all the darkness that Xaxon had created in me. He looked and he saw me. Why do you think he has not moved against us here my friends? If he did not agree with us or he thought we were in any way hindering what Narice is doing, do you honestly believe he would allow us to exist?”

“He would stamp us from the universe in the amount of time it would take him to blink.” Pa'cour echoed. “Yuri is right. The father will not go against the son, and the son will not go against the father. They are too much alike. That is why Martin Leonidas will believe what Yuri shows him.”

Nalavi shook his head. “I’m not even going to try and debate your reasoning behind that.” He said. “I think it is totally insane... but insane has gotten us to this point I suppose.”

“Is that why you are sending me to them mother?” Onera asked.

Yuri looked at her. “Onera my child, I am not sending you to them. We talked of this. I cannot teach you what you need to learn Onera. I certainly do not want to send you away from me. From your father. I have... I have failed at being a mother before and I swore when I held you in my arms those first minutes that I would not do so again.”

“Yuri that...” Pa'cour began to speak.

“Is the truth my Blessed Husband.” Yuri said looking at him with love in her dark eyes. “I will not deny it... nor does it affect me now. I have moved past that my love.”

Onera couldn't meet her eyes and she looked down at the table shyly. “I’m sorry mother. I should not have said that.”

“Do not be sorry daughter.” Yuri said quickly. “You are so very beautiful Onera. And very different. The skills within you need to be harnessed and controlled or you could very well hurt yourself as well as others. That is not something I could ever overcome should it happen. Androcles and his father, his brothers and those like them, they can give you the balance and guidance to allow you to control and focus your skill. You do not have their expertise or their capabilities, but they are the only ones who have the knowledge that will help you to use your abilities. Once you have learned from them all that you can, I will no longer worry for you or what could happen.”

Onera met her eyes and smiled at her mother. “I will make you and father proud of me.” She said.

“We are already proud of you.” Yuri told her. “And we love you even more.”

“That we do.” Pa'cour said.

“You are contacting him in a few hours yes?” Nalavi asked.

Yuri nodded. “Yes.” She answered. “I will tell him then that I need to speak directly with his father.”

“And if he demands to know what about?” Lidene asked.

“He won't.” Yuri said. “In the meantime I need Lidene to keep his people working on our projects but I need you to focus on my mother's files Lidene. We need to discover if she was able to place these clones. And if not... then we need to know where they are hiding or being kept.”

Nalavi looked at her. “Why?” He asked.

Yuri met his gaze. “If they exist and have not been placed within the Union then I intend to find them and destroy them Nalavi. They cannot be allowed to continue to survive and turn into a potential bomb between the Union and High Coven.”

“Is that really necessary Yuri?” Nalavi asked.

Yuri nodded slowly. “Yes. I'm afraid so. There is really no other option that I can see.”

“This is something that we need to make Narice aware of.” Pa'cour stated. “Perhaps not all of the details... but she needs to know.”

Yuri nodded again. “I know. I do not think she will even entertain the thought of seeing me let alone believe me husband. Not yet.”

“I could go.” Pa'cour said.

Nalavi shook his head. “That is almost the same as Yuri herself going.” He stated. “You will not be believed and they will think we have done this and not Yuri's mother.”

“I can go.” Nameia said softly from her chair.

Yuri's eyes cut to her instantly. "Nameia?" She asked.

"I can go." Nameia said again. "I would be the last person they would suspect as bringing a message from you Yuri."

"Nameia... I cannot ask that of you." Yuri said shaking her head.

"I would like to help." She spoke quickly. "And this is something I can do."

"Why?" Yuri asked her.

Nameia smiled. "You saved my life. Helping you is the least I can do." She said.

"You don't owe us anything for doing that Nameia." Pa'cour stated.

"Perhaps not... but I feel I do." Nameia told him. She turned her eyes back to Yuri. "I have nothing to return to and I want to help. Assisting you in what you are trying to do is an honorable goal I believe."

Nalavi nodded her head. "She does have a point Yuri." He said.

"Admiral Riall's fleets will have begun rotating into and around Uzu Ozeib 7 space my wife." Pa'cour told her. "By now there would be hundreds of elves going to and from the planet. My people can put her in contact with Cha'talla's men guarding Narice. They can get her in safely to see her."

Yuri looked at Nameia. "Nameia are you certain?"

Nameia nodded her head quickly. "I have never seen your homeworld. And after being here among you I do not fear being among Immortals any longer."

Yuri looked at her husband. "How soon can you get her in husband?" She asked.

Pa'cour shrugged his shoulders. "I can set it up within two days. Narice is returning from Earth in three days. The day after she gets back it can be arranged."

Yuri nodded finally. She really did not want to put Nameia in harm's way, it felt wrong somehow, but then no Kavalian ship would ever penetrate the combined Coven and Union defensive ring of her homeworld now. Riall and Pontal had secured Uzu Ozeib 7 nearly as well as Apo Prime and slowly but surely they were doing the same to all the systems they had secured in the initial counterattack several weeks ago. Yuri looked at Nameia and saw her light blue eyes watching her carefully. She shuddered inwardly at the gaze of those eyes and nodded her head slowly. "Thank you Nameia." She said softly.

"I owe my life and my sanity to you." Nameia said softly, her eyes never leaving Yuri's dark orbs. "It is the least I can do."

Yuri looked at her husband. "We must find body armor that fits her from the stores here on the station husband. It must fit perfectly. And a sidearm that our Weapon's Master can adjust and balance for her."

Pa'cour nodded. "I will see to it."

"Nalavi... I will need you to put together a detailed report that will explain to Narice what is happening and what we are doing. Leaving out the names of the clones of course. She and Androcles are close now thanks to her marriage to Arrarn Leonidas and she would not keep that information from him if she knew."

Nalavi nodded. "I can have it ready in a day. Very watered down so to speak."

Yuri looked at Lidene. "Lidene... you will continue with my mother's files and once I speak to Androcles I will come to your lab and assist you as much as I can. We must decrypt as many of those files as we are able and do so quickly. We can not allow this to spiral out of our control." She looked lastly at her daughter. "Onera... you must prepare yourself to leave."

"You seem so sure that he will accept me mother." Onera said.

Yuri nodded. "However it came to be, I have passed this Pralor gene to you Onera. It is in a dormant state within us, but even dormant it apparently allows us to do what we can. If he will allow it I will be tested when we meet with him just to be sure. It is the reason that Xaxon tried to control me, and why my mother allowed him to do it. It has to be." She said. "When it is then combined with the dominant traits in your father's blood child, you are far more than you know. The only way to insure you can master what this gene can allow you to do, even in its dormant state, is to learn how to master it from those who have it in an active state. If you have this gene as I believe, he will not turn you away. And you must go into this with an open mind Onera. No arrogance in what skills you already have daughter."

"Your mother is correct again daughter. Androcles Leonidas is well known among his people for having an even fouler disposition towards those who think they are more than they are." Pa'cour echoed Yuri's words. "You are as deadly as any I have ever trained daughter, but you are still young and among Androcles and those like him, you will be but a child when it comes to skills. Take what they can teach you, master it, and always respect them. For they will respect you.”

Onera nodded her head. “As you and mother have taught me father.” She said softly. “I will not dishonor either of you.”

Yuri nodded. “Then let us get to work. There is much to do.”

ARC ROYAL PORT LANDING BAY

It happened far faster than Serale’s untrained eye could follow. One moment she was standing beside Kalis and the next he was half way across the room, lifting his arms to defend himself. She blinked several times wondering just how he had managed to do that, and then she saw the Shi Viska appear in front of him, stopping instantly and three metallic sounds echoed in the small room as three knives impacted the face of the silver shield and clattered to the floor. She heard the dual snarls of what could only be anger and hate and then two bodies moved past her in almost a blur of motion. She watched as the large young man and petite female fell upon Kalis with undisguised emotion and it was then that she realized that Kalis had seen the look in their eyes the moment they saw him and he intentionally moved away from Serale in order to protect her.

Fedor recognized instantly that his MedwanGai’s Shi Viska had imposed itself between Kalis and the three knives he had thrown. Those three knives, had they struck Kalis, would have been instantly fatal. All three had been unerringly aimed at his neck and face and would have done massive damage had they struck. Fedor didn’t pause as those knives clattered to the floor and he continued towards Kalis with rage filling his veins. He could feel his twin sister Eirene’s equally intense hate and anger flowing from her as they attacked. Using her small size Eirene went low, dropping into a crouch and spinning around while sweeping her leg out to take Kalis’s legs from under him. This would have allowed Fedor to hit him while he was falling and they would have had the upper hand immediately.

Two things happened.

Eirene’s foot connected with the back of Kalis’s leg right where she had aimed, but she had failed to take into account that Kalis had positioned his body in preparation for her attack the moment he detected her dropping low to the floor. In her rage Eirene did not hit him with an accurate strike and pain shot up her leg and foot as her strike connected with the solid muscle of Kalis’s calf and not the back of his knee as she had intended. Her forward momentum stopped instantly and she dropped to her ass on the floor as her strike only served to stagger Kalis slightly. He was much thicker and stronger than he appeared Eirene took note even as her eyes move up and she saw her brother about to land upon his upper body. It was the second thing that happen, or didn’t happen she took note.

Fedor’s body was caught in the shimmering light blue Etheric hold and Eirene’s head turned to see her MedwanGai holding out his right hand as his Shi Viska returned to his left arm. He was holding Fedor within the grips of his Etheric power and Eirene knew there was no way he would break that hold. She scrambled to her feet just as her mother descended upon her and grabbed her arms before she could close and attack.

“Enough!” Martin’s voice boomed in the confines of the small room.

“Let me go father!” Fedor barked twisting his head around to glare at Martin. “Let me go so I can tear out his eyes!”

Eirene was trying to break free of her mother’s grasp unsuccessfully as well, For’mya’s grip much to strong and far more experienced. “Mother... we... let me go! It is him! He is the one who...!”

“Eirene stop!” For’mya snapped.

“I SAID ENOUGH!” Martin’s voice was much more focused and powerful this time and within the limitations of the room it echoed like a gunshot.

Fedor and Eirene were immediately cowed as neither of them had heard the power of their MedwanGai’s voice directed at them before. Their eyes were wide as he moved further into the room, not releasing Fedor from within his Etheric grasp, his yellow/gold wolf eyes glaring angrily at them and his wolf fangs fully protruding. Not once since they had been born and in the weeks that followed had Martin or their mothers ever been seriously angry with them. Even For'mya, as mild mannered as she normally was, could not hide her anger now. Her dark brown eyes had changed to her wolf nature and her fangs were also fully extended as she gripped Eirene's arms tightly.

"Have the two of you fully lost control of your senses!" For'mya barked angrily. "This is not how we have raised you! And it is certainly not how your brother envisioned you would use what he taught you!"

"Mother he..." Eirene began to protest.

"Silence!" For'mya snarled snapping her fangs together with such ferocity they clicked loudly and caused Eirene's eyes to drop in shame.

Martin guided Fedor's still suspended body over beside his sister, his yellow/gold eyes glaring at him in anger. Fedor could not meet his gaze and gazed at the floor. Martin released him from with the grip of the Etheric hold and Fedor dropped to his feet beside his sister.

"This behavior is unacceptable!" For'mya barked at them.

"Mother that is...!" Fedor began to protest.

For'mya then did something she had only ever done twice since Martin had turned her. She allowed the female Alpha wolf and mother within her act out. She had done this once to Androcles and once to Arrarn as they were growing. She slapped Fedor hard across his cheek, holding nothing back in either strength or anger. She let the wolf within her respond and it was a stinging pop that served the purpose she intended it to. The wolf within Fedor was instantly shamed and he looked away as he held his cheek where his mother's hand had struck.

"I know exactly who he is!" For'mya snarled at them. "Tell me... at what point did your brother teach you through your bond with him to attack innocents! When did Androcles ever instruct you to dismiss innocent lives! I'll tell you when... never! It is not something he would ever teach you and it is something we would never teach you!"

"Innocents?" Eirene gasped. "Mother he..." Her eyes shifted to where Kalis stood and they grew ever wider when she saw Serale step up to him and press her body close to his. Her hands went to her mouth in horror. "Carians!" She gasped loudly.

Fedor was unable to speak because of the shame he felt. He had launched his knives without even considering the female that had been standing beside Kalis. All his anger could focus on was Kalis and had he not stepped away from Serale in that split second, one of those knives could very well have ended her life.

"Did either of you stop to consider why he would be standing in this room?" For'mya asked them her voice still filled with anger. "Why he would be on our ship? Why your father and I would bring you here! Did you even consider these things before you acted so stupidly?"

Martin stood silently behind For'mya, his yellow/gold eyes boring into Fedor and Eirene as he allowed her to take the lead on this. His arms were crossed over his chest and he could not help but feel pride at For'mya's actions. Everyone considered For'mya to be the picture of calm and serene peace. In most cases she was, but there were times when something or someone caused her to lose control of that serenity and the female wolf within her came roaring out. It was very frightening to see to be honest, and it made Martin's desire for her spike even more than it was normally. For'mya could instantly feel Aricia and Anja and then Dysea pulsing her with their love and support and agreement at her reaction. It was followed quickly by Cirith's Etheric outpouring of support and then Isabella's. Since Cirith could not pulse For'mya with her wolf aura as she was on the Kavalian ship with Muton and Isabella, she joined her Etheric power to Isabella's and that is how they responded to what she was doing. Martin could easily feel this outpouring of love and support for For'mya from his other Queens. He could not ever recall a time in the last twenty plus years where the five of them had disagreed on how they raised their children. When they spoke, it was with five voices, and everyone knew that. While Cirith had not joined them until last year, it appeared she was in complete agreement as well, and her voice was equally heard and acted upon.

"I know full well what your brother would have taught you!" For'mya continued. "It is the same thing that he has taught all of his siblings for he loves them so! I also know this is not something he would have thought appropriate in any way! This is not something you learned from your father or your Uncle Danny either! You let you anger override your mind! You saw within Andro's memories what Kalis did and you reacted without thinking! You did not stop to think about how or why he was here now! And I know this is something all of them would have taught you! Tell me I am wrong?" She growled. "One of you had better answer me or I will turn you both over my knee and tan your asses red no matter how old you are!"

"We... I did not think." Fedor hissed softly. "I... my emotion pulled Eirene along with me and..."

"No you didn't!" Eirene countered. "I felt the same thing Fedor! You don't have to take all of the blame. We acted together and..."

Kalis looked at Martin. "Uncle... perhaps I should leave." He said calmly. "Perhaps this was not the best... the best time to do this. No matter how much I wanted it."

Martin held up his hand. "No." He said.

For'mya turned and looked at Kalis. "This is not your fault Kalis." She said warmly. "You only wanted to see your brother and sister."

"I also do not wish to be the cause of more angry emotions Tenna." Kalis said gently. He saw both Fedor and Eirene's eyes go a little wider when he said that. "I know what my history and actions have wrought and I know those actions are not easily forgotten or forgiven. Serale and I will join her mother and Nedoli in the Med Bay and take our exams. If they... I have no intention of going anywhere uncle, and if at some point in the future my brother and sister wish to learn of me, I would be most happy to tell them of the path I now follow."

Martin nodded after a long moment and stepped out of the way as Kalis led Serale past him and into the corridor. [Mandri?] Martin spoke to his back.

Kalis stopped and turned to meet his eyes. [I knew this would not be easy when I first started down this road Uncle. Are you not the one who told Andro that the road to what you truly desire is never easy or painless?]

Martin smiled. [He told you that in your lessons did he?]

[He quoted you often Uncle.] Kalis answered. [I was fully committed the moment Serale came into my life Uncle. I have no intentions of faltering now.]

[Good.] Martin said. [They are young Kalis. They will come around. Just give them time.]

Kalis nodded. [Time is something I have a lot of now Uncle. Thanks to you.] He said.

Martin smiled as Kalis continued down the corridor holding Serale's hand and after a moment he turned and looked at Fedor and Eirene. For'mya was still staring at them and she shook her head slowly.

"I understand the need you both feel to protect me." For'mya spoke now, her voice more subdued but still upset. "However... it is not something you need to do. I have your father for that if I need protecting, and your other mothers. Kalis... Kalis has done something wonderful. He was shown a path different from the one he was walking and he willingly chose to walk that path. He left behind all he was when he embraced the blood within him."

"How do you know that mother?" Fedor spoke. "How do you know this is not all some game he is playing? He attacked Andro when..."

For'mya held up her hand silencing his words. "I know exactly what Kalis has done in the past." She hissed out the words. "I also know that Kalis died weeks ago. He is not the same young man anymore my son."

"A leopard may change the color of his spots mother... but he never loses them." Fedor snapped. "I don't trust him!"

For'mya sighed heavily and turned to look at Martin. "Martin?" She asked.

"They are grown and they are entitled to their opinion Kinsoaurgai." Martin said. "They have taken mates; they have developed their own lives now. If they chose to lose the unique opportunity to know their brother then that is their decision. A stupid decision, but their decision nonetheless."

"He is not our brother!" Fedor snapped more forcefully.

Martin stepped forward. "Yes... he is your brother." Martin spoke evenly. "The same pure blood that flows through him flows through you. It flows through me. It flows through your brother Andro and all of your siblings. Are they not your siblings?"

"MedwanGai... that is different!" Eirene protested.

"Why is it different Fenneenum?" Martin asked. "There are many things in this universe that we do not understand nor can we explain. Your mothers and I have lived for decades not fearing the unknown. You both know this. It is practically the motto for our family. The passion in your blood right now however, it is keeping you from living that rule. And it makes you less than who you are." Martin took For'mya's hand in his. "When you learn to control that passion in your blood, the passion that makes you blind right now, then you will see what I mean. I wouldn't wait too long though. He is your brother and part of the reason he started down this road was so that he could know the two of you. Learn of you and protect you and finally know what he has been denied all of his life. The feeling of family. When all is said and done, he is no different than the two of you. He was never a son to my brother... only a tool. Just as the two of you were meant to be. And while I now claim you with my heart and love as my children, Kalis never had that. What you and your sister, what many of us take for granted, he has never had the chance to experience. Don't wait too long or you just may lose the opportunity to know him at all. And that... that more than anything would be the crime."

Martin turned and began walking out of the room, For'mya holding tightly to his hand as they left. They left Fedor and Eirene standing in the briefing room feeling very alone and very confused for the first time in their short lives.

They had no idea what had just happened, nor how things had gotten out of hand so quickly. They also had never felt the full weight of their mother's anger directed at them and without a doubt, it frightened them.

EARTH SPARTA CRANAE ISLAND

"...pretty good idea who the leak is." Jomann spoke as he and Andro moved slowly along the corridor of the Command Wing of his villa. Durcunusaan men and women moved about this wing freely as it was their barracks and the Secondary Command Center for all Union forces within the hundreds of fleets and ground units. They were privy to everything that happened in these units, dozens of technicians monitoring it all and taking reports from the main Command Center under Sparta.

It was only in the last years since the end of the Evolli War that the Command Center under Sparta had been completed to Riall's precise specifications. While the Command Center on Apo Prime was still very active, all functions were routed through the main base under Sparta. He had known for some time of Martin's affinity for Sparta, as well as his Queens. As Andro grew and he began to spend more time here than on Apo Prime, Riall knew that Sparta would become the heart of their Union. With the blessing of the Senate and Defense Committee the construction of the main facility under Sparta had begun. When Andro had bought this villa Riall had seen the ability to insure cohesion was never lost and he developed the plans with Ben to establish a Secondary Command Center here on the island. Since the attacks on Andro and the others by the OSG, Riall had ordered that option instituted and now this entire wing of the villa was a heavily fortified and defended Command facility. With the added knowledge of what had transpired over the last weeks and months against the Royal family, getting close to Cranae Island was now next to impossible. Andro's insistence that whatever was done not impede on the beauty or natural landscape of the island actually made it that much harder to now breach the island's defenses. That was something that Riall and Vengal failed to tell Andro and it gave them much peace of mind.

"So soon?" Andro asked him as he took the pad.

Jomann nodded. "You know the General better than I Andro." He answered. "Vengal has all non-combat units within the Durcunusaan working on this. He is tenacious and once he determined that the leaks were coming from within the Durcunusaan he has not rested."

Andro read the name on the pad and came to a halt in the center of the corridor. He looked up at Jomann with stunned eyes. "This... this is accurate?" He asked.

Jomann nodded his head. "Yes. With Marci's help we were able to do a very fast and very thorough investigation into him. His career is solid but uneventful. He is very loyal Andro, a solid Durcunusaan Scout Leader."

"Then why would he leak such things?" Andro asked.

Jomann reached up and touched the pad, changing the screen. "This is why?"

Andro's azure eyes grew even wider and he looked up after reading the short passage. "You have got to be kidding me!"

Jomann nodded. “The General and I were skeptical at first as well but all the information we have gathered points to this. Up until now, nothing he has told them was discovered in a way that could be tied back to him. It was almost as if it happened by chance and he never became suspicious. Now however, now I think he will take notice, especially after Icho’s Netnews Briefing.”

“He is a Beta Wolf.” Andro said looking at the pad.

Jomann nodded his head. “Definitely not front line material, but his skills as a scout are a rare find according to the Drow instructors who taught him.”

“You spoke to them?” Andro asked.

Jomann nodded. “Vengal contacted General Lynwe the moment we discovered it. He spoke to three of them directly and the fourth by holo conference. All of them said basically the same thing. He is a superior tracker, better than many Alphas they have trained. His physical skills are speed and cunning and he uses them to perfection. Extreme endurance and superior conditioning. His career so far has been uneventful because of his posting to a training unit. He asked for a transfer to a combat unit during the war but was denied. His Commander needed him to train those they had. The man told Vengal he did not want to refuse him, but the scouts he was turning out were beyond well trained and he did not want to lose that asset. But in true Sparta fashion, he has never once complained.”

“And it’s unlikely she knew where the information was coming from.” Andro said.

Jomann nodded in agreement. “Doubtful.”

Andro was silent for a moment and then made his decision without hesitating. There might actually be a way to salvage all this. He looked at Jomann. “How many slots remain?” He asked.

“Two.” Jomann replied knowing he meant the positions on their command team. “I have not heard back from Ridor. I understand he is on some sort of extended leave and has been since they returned from the mission on Caliber.”

Andro nodded. “Have Vistr find him. Uncle Isra told me of his actions on that mission and he would be a perfect addition. He’s like us.”

Jomann chuckled. “You mean utterly insane and completely proud of that fact?”

Andro laughed. “Yep.” He said. “Give the last slot to this one.” He said giving the pad back to Jomann. “If his skills are what you say they will be welcome.”

“What about...”

Andro shook his head. “Everything you have found to date suggests he is not aware of the leaks being from him correct?”

Jomann nodded. “Yes.”

“And this other thing... his feelings for...?” Andro started.

“All true.” Jomann said.

“Then perhaps it is time we turned the tables on her.” Andro said. “This could very well be the way.”

Jomann looked at him and smiled. “You are a devious ronnus you know that?” He said with no malice.

Andro laughed. “You know it.”

APO PRIME WESTERN CONTINENT CITY OF MORALI

It was a modest looking but large apartment. A single story structure that overlooked the lake in the distance. It was the first thing his son had purchased when he had graduated from Durcunusaan Training. His way of showing that he could live and support himself. Vistr had been very proud of him and even helped his son to move into the apartment with his brothers. That is how he knew to come here.

“...must control your temper Vistr.” His mate of over seven thousand years told him.

General Vistr looked into his mate’s dark eyes as they came to the door of the large size apartment. “He is placed on administrative leave and does not tell us Melora?” Vistr barked. “Isra would not have done this without a reason! What could he have done to illicit such a reaction from him. And he would not tell us what he did!”

“Perhaps Isra did not feel it was our business.” Melora said in reply.

“He is my son! And a member of the Durcunusaan!” Vistr snapped. “I have every right to know what my son has done to be placed on administrative leave. And if he will not contact us and tell us... I will find out from him myself!” He turned and stabbed his finger down on the chime to the apartment.

“Are you sure this is wise?” Melora asked.

“Androcles’s Captain has been trying to reach him for three days and he does not respond to the calls.” Vistr spoke. “I want to know why!”

Freedom.

It tasted so wonderful.

Free to do what she wanted. To make her own choices. To live a life of her own making. In the last three months she had done just that. Cvea’Ortel was many things, but stupid was not one of them. The day he had rescued her, taken her from that foul life she had been cursed with, Cvea knew things would be so much different.

His apartment was beautiful and large, though somewhat sparsely decorated. That was something she had helped him to fix in the many days they had spent shopping in Morali. The city was smaller than most those on Apo Prime, but it was now her home. At first she feared to even walk the streets of the city for dread of what would be said about her and what would happen because of actions that were not hers. What would happen to her because the Kavalian leader had perpetrated his vile acts upon the Royal family? Cvea saw quickly just how beloved the Royal family was within the Union, and she was intelligent enough to know that loyalty and devotion such as that was not easily earned. It was a fear she discovered quickly that was totally unfounded. She didn’t realize it until later, but being with Ridor and his standing as a member of the Durcunusaan, it automatically gave her status as well. And this served to insure the people of Morali gave her a chance. Even before she had become comfortable enough to allow her tail to swing freely, Cvea had felt at home here. Lycavorians, Elves, even the few humans and Limians that called Morali home treated her no differently because she had a tail or she was Kavalian. She was quick to discover the true nature of the welcoming and adaptability of the men and women who called the Union home. She was accepted without question, greeted not with harsh words or dark looks, but smiles and even hugs from the older Lycavorian women within the city. They saw something in her right away and it was the way Ridor fawned over her. They could also smell the same desire for him wafting from her pores. Cvea was now unafraid to enter the city on her own, and had done so on many occasions since coming here. The freedom to walk the streets and peruse the shops and stores was unlike anything she had encountered in her lifetime. Ckhoa and Poysha had been to see her three times since she had decided to stay here. Poysha had questioned her decision to remain with Ridor, but after seeing how giddy she was during their visits, she quickly realized that Cvea was truly happy for the first time in her life. Cvea had latched onto the first true thing she had wanted in her life and now she was so happy she had. Ridor had given her a life unlike any she thought she would ever experience. A life of safety and devotion and above all else, love.

As Cvea sipped the large mug of coffee, her ears caught the sound of the shower in the bedroom as she stepped onto the balcony of the apartment. Her home. Their home. She wore only one of Ridor’s oversized shirts, her long tail flipping back and forth in a relaxed and confident manner. As her pale blue eyes looked out over the lake in the distance she felt the warmth flood her again as it did every morning for the life she now had. Never had any man treated her with such gallantry and respect. Though the desire for her was so very evident in his ice blue eyes, he had held it in check for so long in order to prove to her that his intentions were honorable in every way. He had not wanted to pressure her after so long enduring what she had suffered with. Little did he know that his desire and his attentions to her helped to speed that recovery even more quickly. To know that she was not looked at in any way as an object of sexual gratification meant more to Cvea than anything else. To know that every male who looked at her now, while they may have considered her attractive, even desired her, they still treated her with the utmost respect. Part of it she knew was because of who Ridor was, but the large part was because of the way their culture and society viewed females. As the days and weeks passed by in a blur, Cvea found it increasingly difficult to deny her supreme attraction to him. Yes he had rescued her, but that fact aside, he was so very handsome and he sometimes fumbled over himself to impress her. He could easily laugh at his own silly actions if they made him look foolish, and the fact he was comfortable enough with himself to do that made him all the more desirable to Cvea. Soon the fact that he had rescued her no longer mattered to her. What mattered was how he treated her and doted over her and pushed her to do whatever it was she wanted to do. He kept telling her that no matter what she decided he would always support and encourage her in the endeavors she chose, no matter what man she decided to spend her life with. When other men began to show interest in her, Cvea instantly began to compare them to him, and that is when she knew he was the one she wanted to spend the rest of her life with.

Their first night together had been awkward at first, Ridor not wanting to do something that caused bad memories to return. It was Cvea telling him that no matter what it was he did, the fact that he still found her attractive was enough. After that, and the many times after, he showed Cvea what it was like to be loved by a man in all the right ways. Oh she cried out in blissful delight for hours on end, gasping his name in rapturous joy as he made her feel things she had no idea she could feel. He had certainly proved to her that passion could be so very pleasant when done with the person you loved. Loving her as he had, it had burned away the timid and fearful young woman, and left in its place a confident and intelligent woman who adored her new husband and mate with all that she was.

Love. A word Cvea never thought she would use, but it was a word she used all of the time now. Ridor had shown her love in its highest form, and he continued to show it to her with every morning that she awoke and every evening when she went to sleep with his powerful arms wrapped around her. Cvea knew that his leaders had given him this time to be with her. They had seen it from the very first moment on that ship. Each time he spoke her name, each time he looked at her, Cvea could not help but feel wanted and loved and desired in the most splendid of ways. These were emotions that she returned a hundred fold. She could not help herself as she memorized every sculpted portion of his powerful body, exploring his flesh in a way she never thought she would do for many man. Yet she did it with passion and yearning, and every moan of delight that escaped his lips from her ministrations caused Cvea to love him even more intensely. Every kiss he gave to her stole her breath away, every caress could cause her to tremble in want, and she craved the way her lithe body conformed to his when she collapsed in his arms, his manhood still buried within her, and his arms pulled her even tighter to him and they fell asleep. Ridor was unafraid to walk the streets with her, holding tightly to her hand, stealing kisses from her even in public where everyone could see. She knew this type of thing to be acceptable in Lycavorian society and while she basked in the attention, she hadn't realized until just recently that he did it for two very important purposes. She had discovered them from the much older Lycavorian woman who owned the Lycavorian eatery that they went to frequently. The woman had told her Ridor was acting in this way because he was basically telling all the other males that Cvea was his and his alone. Cvea had been delighted at this, and delighted even more in what she had said next.

It is common among our people Cvea child. Legaina had told her. We crave physical interaction, especially with those we love and care for. Ridor does this with you now because you are mated yes, and he adores you child. I've known him for years and he dotes over you like no other I have seen. And believe me, there have been no females that have captured his heart as you have. He does it because it is his way of saying to all the other male who see that you belong to him and he to you. There is another reason he does it however.

What more reason could there be? Cvea had asked her with a smile. It fills me with even more desire for him knowing that alone.

He does it also to insure everyone knows you are one of us. That you are a free woman and capable of making your own decisions. Legaina had said. It is something of an honor thing among our males... I never really paid much attention to it. My own mate tried to explain it to me but I never understood. I simply basked in the attention he showed me in front of others. It means you are his life and his future now child. And he will honor and worship you for the rest of your life.

Anocahs.

Ridor's name for her meant even more after Cvea had heard that.

That evening Cvea had shown Ridor just how much she loved him and he had returned the emotion tenfold. What pain and shame she had arrived here with, Ridor had erased it all and restored to her all the dignity she had thought lost. She may have lost her purity to those vile Kavalians who had taken her, but Ridor had returned that purity to her and shown her that she was the most desirable woman in the universe to him. That is all that mattered to her anymore. Her life with Ridor and where it would take them. Her years of enslavement were a memory now. A memory she would keep locked away tightly and never revisit for it had no place in her future. A future she and Ridor would decide together.

The door chime sounding snapped Cvea out of her memories and she turned. Ckhoa and Poysha had come to the small ceremony to acknowledge their union, Ridor promising they would have a much larger celebration, one deserving of who she was, when she was ready to meet the rest of his family. Poysha had promised to return in a week or so and bring with her news of the others and how they were settling in. Cvea set the mug of coffee on the table as she darted inside, her tail twitching excitedly as she moved across the large main room and to the door. She swept her hand over the control panel and was talking even before it opened fully.

"Oh Poysha... I am so happy!" Cvea exclaimed. "Ridor is all I have ever..." Cvea's eyes flew open when she saw the older man and woman in the archway of their apartment. "Oh... I... forgive me. I... I was expecting someone else."

Vistr's eyes narrowed while Melora's eyes grew wide. She could smell her youngest son within this dazzling young woman's blood deeply. She was a stunning vision of beauty with pale, sky blue eyes and lush white blond hair. Her skin was perfection, her body fertile and very firm. And then her eyes saw the tail and they grew even wider.

"Obviously!" Vistr spoke rather gruffly. "Where is my son?" He demanded.

Cvea stared at them for a long moment not really knowing what to do. She knew who they were instantly for Ridor had many pictures of his family all over the apartment. She just never thought she would meet them in her current state of dress.

Melora stepped forward quickly when she saw the indecision and real fear in the young woman's eyes. "Vistr... you will mind your manners." She hissed at her gruff husband. She looked at Cvea. "We are looking for our son child." She told Cvea. "Is he here?"

Cvea nodded quickly at the older woman's polite question. "He is... he is in the..."

Ridor's voice interrupted her answer. "Anocahs... have you seen where I put..." Ridor looked up as he walked into the main room holding the towel around his waist. He came to an abrupt halt when he saw his parents standing in the doorway of his apartment and Cvea looking at him with despair in her eyes. "Mother! Father!" He gasped as he moved up to the door beside Cvea and slid his arm around her waist quickly. "What... what are you doing here?"

"What are we doing here?" Vistr barked at his son. "What are you doing? You are on administrative leave and did not inform me! The Crown Prince's Captain has been trying to reach you for two days and you have not responded! What have you done to cause Isra to act in such a way?"

"The Prince's Captain?" Ridor questioned confused. "Father... I... I have not checked my messages in days." Ridor answered his father.

"That is obvious!" Vistr snapped. "Would you care to tell us what is going on?"

Melora remained silent and watched as Ridor moved closer beside the young woman, his arm slipping around her waist protectively. She saw the young woman's tail curl tightly around his waist and her body almost fold into Ridor's protective embrace. Melora could smell her son deeply in this woman's blood, but she could also smell her deeply embedded in his. She looked quickly at Vistr. "Vistr... perhaps we should be more understanding and listen to them." She stated quickly knowing almost immediately what was going on.

"I will not be more understanding!" Vistr barked. "I wish to know why my son is hidden away in his home with some... some Kavalian female, and not on duty!"

"Vistr!" Melora hissed at him angrily for his words.

Ridor stepped away from Cvea and stared at his father, his eyes changing and his fangs growing to their full length. "I love you father... I love you but I will not allow you to refer to my wife and mate in such a manner!"

Vistr's eyes grew wide at his son's reaction and he glanced at the Kavalian female. He looked back to Ridor. "Your mate?" He gasped.

Cvea's newfound confidence quickly came to the forefront and she stepped forward away from Ridor quickly to grasp Melora's hands. "Please Milady... there is much... there is much that we have to tell you. Come in please."

Melora looked at Cvea her eyes wide. Cvea's hands were warm and inviting and Melora gripped them tightly as her eyes settled on this young Kavalian female. There was wisdom in her very young eyes that she should not have had, but also a new confidence Melora could tell.

"Vistr..." Melora spoke. "We should give our son a chance to explain what is going on." She spoke never taking her eyes from Cvea's face.

"I will..."

"We will listen to our son!" Melora snapped at her husband. Vistr looked at her now and saw the determination in her jaw and in her eyes.

Vistr turned back to Ridor and saw his son had not backed away or allowed his eyes or fangs to return to normal. "Fine." He snapped. "We will listen."

"... Knew the moment I picked her up into my arms." Ridor told his parents as they sat across from one another on the couches. "The mission was successful as you know... and those we rescued needed places to stay in order for them to be better able to acclimate themselves to their new freedom. Colonel Isra and Governor Tarifa were arranging for this before we even returned. I did not..."

Cvea had listened to Ridor retell the story, her eyes never leaving his face and her hands gripping his arm tightly. Melora noticed that her tail had once more wrapped around his waist, the tip resting on his thigh. Even Vistr, one of the two men who had long ago formed and now commanded the Durcunusaan, even he had not heard all of the details of the mission for it was extremely classified even now and he had not been part of it. In truth he had taken a secondary role in commanding the Durcunusaan in order to concentrate on his own Combined Forces Command. Vengal, his dear friend and co-commander of the Durcunusaan had been running the day to day operations for years now. When he realized that his son had taken part in a vital hostage rescue mission on the Kavalian homeworld the pride he felt caused his chest to swell. A covert deep strike into the heart of the enemy homeworld to rescue hostages, a mission that was supremely successful in every way. How could anyone find fault with a resume such as his son could now put forth. Vistr could feel nothing but satisfaction for what his son had done. And it was obvious even to a Lycavorian of his age that his son was deeply in love with the very petite Kavalian female. She was exceptionally beautiful Vistr thought to himself, a true vision of real beauty and his son's scent wafted from every pore on her body. Her pale blue eyes gazed at his son in the same fashion that Melora's eyes looked upon him. He felt horrible anger for what had been done to her, but she had shown incredible strength and fortitude in both her actions and her words. This was not a young woman who was simply infatuated with the man who had rescued her; Cvea was a young woman whose very essence spoke of love for his son. Vistr looked at his son as he finished speaking.

"...Not something I intended to keep from you and mother." Ridor told him finally. "I wanted to insure Cvea was comfortable enough in her new life. I did not... I did not intend for us to feel what we do for each other, it just happened as time passed. I could not deny what my instincts called for me to embrace. Meeting our family is not something small father... you know this. I wanted to protect her."

Vistr glanced sideways at Melora and saw her nod to him. He had always trusted in his mate's instincts and feelings and she had never led him astray. Melora then look at her youngest son and his stunning Kavalian mate and wife. "No... meeting our family is not a minor affair." She agreed.

"Now you see why I acted as I have." Ridor said. "I still have a week before I need to return to duty and I have not checked my messages in the entire time father. I devoted all that I was to Cvea."

Vistr could only nod his own head now. "As well you should have." He spoke. "I would expect no less from one of my sons."

Cvea looked at Vistr. "I have... I have never known emotion such as I do now sir." She spoke softly but with great feeling. "I have never... I have never known love like I do now. I never thought it would be possible."

"Do you love our son Cvea'Ortel?" Melora asked.

"Mother?" Ridor complained. "That..."

Cvea's smile was as bright as any sunny day Melora had ever seen. "More and more with each passing day Milady." She said turning to look at Ridor's face.

Melora got to her feet and nodded. "Good." She held out her hand to Cvea. "Come child, it is time for you to meet the rest of our family. My other sons and their mates should know the young woman who has taken the heart of their brother and holds it so close to her own. Even if it is by holocall. I doubt very much they will be disappointed."

"Mother you can't..." Ridor protested even as Cvea stood up and took her hand without fear.

"I think I would like that." Cvea said with a bright smile.

Melora looked at Ridor. "You need to worry why the Crown Prince's Captain has been calling you young man!" She spoke sternly. "I will let you and your father handle that while I get to know my newest daughter. We will be fine without you. I think we will contact your brothers and then we will go shopping in the city. What do you think Cvea?"

Cvea looked at Ridor and couldn't help but chuckle at his expression. This was not the way they had intended for her to meet his parents and then his family, but there was no denying the warmth in his mother's grip or her smile. And while his father was very gruff, Cvea could tell just from his expression that he was pleased. She turned back to his mother. "I think I would like that very much."

"So would I." Melora said. "Come... let's get you properly dressed before going out. While wearing your mate's clothes in your own home is quite acceptable... it would not due to be seen in his shirt by others." Melora looked at her and smiled. "They will begin to talk silly things."

Cvea laughed softly once more as Melora led her to the bedroom of the apartment. Vistr smiled at his mate's reaction and looked at his son. Ridor had a stunned expression on his face and his eyes finally fell to his father.

"Father..." Ridor began to ask.

Vistr smiled at him now knowing what his senses and instincts were telling him about her own emotions. "We have waited a long time for you to find a woman boy." He spoke kindly to his son. "Her devotion and love for you wafts from her scent son. That is what matters."

"You... you do not care that she is...?"

"Kavalian?" Vistr asked as he stood up. "Every species has their good and bad." He said. "The largest example of that is our own people my son. I never judge a person by the color of their skin or what their species is. We never have as a people and our King only reinforced that when he returned to us. She is a beautiful jewel Ridor my son... treasure her. Worship her. For if you do not... you will answer to me and to your brothers."

Ridor got to his feet. "That is my intent father."

Vistr nodded his head. He looked at his youngest son, a son that he and Melora had never thought to have until the King returned and brought back the instincts of their people to them. He was the youngest of his sons yes, but he was a true Spartan by any definition of the word. He had been born in Sparta, raised most of his life in the city of their King, and he had chosen to become a Durcunusaan from almost the moment he could speak. This is what life was all about. He had no doubts that any child of Ridor and Cvea's would insure that spirit and commitment going into the future.

"Good... now let us contact Jomann and discover why he has been calling you." Vistr said. "I am very interested in this as well."

“...Stand by.” The COM officer spoke before turning in her chair, her eyes searching for someone. They settled on the petite form of the blond Durcunusaan Officer who she knew to be Prince Dorian’s Captain. She was also rumored by many to be his Blessed Wife now for those who were wolf could smell her deeply within his blood and vice versa.

“Major Juconi?” She called out.

Sheva looked up and turned her head from the daily reports she had retrieved from the previous evening’s shift. She gripped the large mug of Nau'shindeal d'l'Vlos in her left hand, her second of the morning since Dorian had taken so much of her blood the previous evening during their lovemaking. Of course, Sheva had taken just as much if not more of his delicious blood in the process.

Sheva Juconi no longer doubted her feelings for Dorian Leonidas in any way. Her eyes had been opened so to speak and now she could not get enough of the young man who had so swept her up in his love and passion. She spent every moment of free time with him, whether it was here on the island or the few times they had gone into Gytheio to shop. She had not even returned to her apartment in days now except to retrieve several different outfits to wear when off duty. She was staying with him in his small suite like room on his brother’s villa and she no longer cared who knew of this. Sheva knew Dorian was looking for his own villa to purchase in the port city of Gytheio and they had looked at several new ones over the course of the last two days between his training with his brother and his new duties as second in command of the new unit Androcles had formed. Each Leonidas child had a huge trust Fund established for them the day they were born. Sheva had been stunned at the wealth Dorian had within the Fund but she realized that his father and mothers had decades to establish them all to that level. She knew for a fact that his mother Aricia had made a fortune off of her recipe of coffee. It was now the most sought after blend of coffee anywhere in the Union. While Sheva preferred black tea, Dorian drank his mother’s coffee constantly.

While Sheva was already considered a Tier Six Mindvoicer, she had to have been in order to be accepted into the Durcunusaan, she had never really advanced or used these abilities unless she needed too. After the first time she had taken his blood during their lovemaking, Sheva’s mind and power had exploded. She had naturally powerful Mindvoice shields and she had to focus in order to leave them up for she found herself reveling in the sensation of being able to swim within Dorian’s thoughts. He had the combined memories of his father and mother as well as his Bonded Brother Ryner, but in many ways he was still young and playful. This sense about him also served to bring out a playful side in Sheva that she had not known existed, and when she let this side of herself come out with him, she felt genuine warmth and happiness all of the time. She had seen what he was capable of, both with his physical skills and his new abilities within the Etheric realm, and once again Sheva had to admit he was far more powerful than any pureblood vampire she had ever met. Within his thoughts Sheva had seen what he and Ryner had done on Solmar, the precise and lethal actions he had taken, and part of her feared the power within him. That fear also served to draw her to him like a powerful magnet. He would never turn that power on her she knew, but he would use it in an instant to protect those he loved and cared for. And that was her.

Sheva also basked in the attention he showed her. Whenever they were together he was always touching her in some way, whether it be holding her hand or wrapping his arm around her waist in public and pulling her close. In their bed he was utterly attentive and never ceased to explore her body in ways that Sheva had never dreamed. He could leave her shivering in delight just by caressing her skin or letting his warm lips drag across the back of her neck. He was so very inventive in their bed and this caused Sheva to be just as inventive and they had discovered many new things about each other and the pleasure they could have. When she was on duty he treated her with the same respect he did the other Durcunusaan and while their affection for each other leaked out sometimes, he was always professional and did nothing to embarrass her. Sheva adored him for this because it told her that he respected her position and what she had done to achieve it. In many ways Sheva Juconi had let go of the past and began a life that she desired more than anything.

Sheva moved over to where the young female Lycavorian sat. “Something Chief?” She asked with respect.

The young woman nodded. “I am receiving a coded and encrypted transmission on the Prince’s private COM channel. Audio only right now.” She answered turning to her equipment. “They are asking for him by his official call sign of Spartan 11.”

Sheva perked up right away since very few men and women ever referenced the official call signs of the Royal Family and even fewer outside of the Durcunusaan and the military knew them. “Source?” She asked.

“Unknown Major. It’s being bounced through several different locations in The Wilds and using a very tight sub space transmission beam.” The woman answered. “I can tell you that it is not originating from within The Wilds though.”

“There are very few who have direct access to the Royal family’s private COM channels. Even fewer who have the King or Androcles’s private ones.” Sheva said.

The woman nodded. “I know.”

Sheva nodded to her as she picked up the extra ear receiver from the console. “Accept the transmission. Let’s find out what we can.”

The woman nodded and adjusted her controls. “Channel is open.”

“This is Major Juconi of the Durcunusaan.” Sheva spoke. “I don’t know how you got this COM channel but I will warn you we are tracing the transmission. State your identification and business immediately.”

“You will not be able to trace the transmission Major.” The woman’s voice answered calmly. “However... I am not a threat. I was given this COM channel by Androcles himself and I would like to confer with him please. It is rather important.”

“Who is this?” Sheva demanded next. “The Crown Prince does not just give out his private COM channel to anyone!”

“I would think not.” The woman answered. “My name is Yuri... and I’m quite sure I need not elaborate anymore than that with a member of the Durcunusaan.”

Sheva’s eyes were wide in shock. “No... you do not!” She snarled.

“Androcles gave me this COM channel to use if I needed to.” Yuri spoke. “If you were one of those present on his ship when we met several months ago you would know this. I need to speak with him now.”

“I was there!” Sheva snapped again. “Why do you need to speak with him? For what purpose?”

“I would prefer that remain between him and I.” Yuri answered. “Suffice to say, it is rather important.”

Many things flashed through Sheva’s mind, but her Durcunusaan training took over almost instinctively. “Route this to the secure COM disc in the conference room!” She told the woman. “Full Durcunusaan Security Protocols. Androcles just entered the Wing with Jomann. I will direct him there.”

The woman nodded. “Understood.”

Sheva turned quickly and headed out of the COM Center.

“...is unexpected.” Andro spoke as he looked at the full image of Yuri within the holo transmission.

“I assumed you gave me your private COM channel for a reason Androcles.” Yuri spoke as she moved around in front of the desk in the room where she was. “So that we could speak directly if it was needed?”

“So I did.” Androcles answered as he gazed at her. Her face was even more relaxed than when he saw her on his ship, and it was completely void of the darkness that had been there that day on Earth when he had torn open her throat. She looked extremely fit and even healthier than when he had seen her on his ship. “I assume then, that in order for you to contact me you need something.”

Yuri shook her head and smiled in the transmission and Andro noticed it made her even more beautiful. “You know where we are Androcles. You know what Pa’cour and I have been doing. As well as those who now follow us. It is not something that we expected, but it seems Pa’cour is like his brother, and he inspires others to his cause.”

Andro nodded. “No doubt... but do not discount yourself Yuri.”

Yuri looked at him in the transmission. “Me?” She said. “I know we would not be here if you did not approve.”

Andro glanced at where Jomann stood to the side and Dorian stood beside Sheva slightly to his left. He looked back to Yuri and smiled as well. “Xaxon did not control your actions and thoughts all of your life Yuri. You accomplished many things without his foul influence that do you credit.”

Yuri rolled her eyes. “Conquering and enslaving others.” She said. “Not exactly the type of history I would like on my resume.”

“Not what you did Yuri.” Andro said. “How you did it. No matter your intent or your methods you got things done. That has to be taken into account. And I do approve of what you are doing now.” He told her. “You can do far more good behind the scenes in support of Narice than I can publicly. You can do the things that Narice cannot.”

“You... you speak with far more wisdom and knowledge than someone your age is known to have Androcles. Much like your father did back then.” Yuri said.

Andro shrugged. “You now know why that is.”

“I do now... yes.” Yuri answered.

“And contrary to what you may think, I have not been watching you.” Androcles said.

Yuri tilted her head to the side. “And why is that?” She asked.

“Because I have faith. Faith that the woman I saw on my ship scratching and clawing and fighting to regain her life and live it the way she wants has fully taken hold.” Andro told her. “She has been... reborn... for lack of a better word at the moment.”

Yuri stepped closer to the transmission. “You... you took a huge risk Androcles.” She said softly. “Believing in me as you did. It is not something others would have done. It is not something your father would have done.”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “Perhaps I saw something others did not.” He said. “And I am...”

“Yes... I know.” Yuri interrupted him. “You are not your father.” Her eyes shifted for a moment and then returned to him. “How is Carisia? Lucia? Are they...?”

“They are happy.” Andro answered simply. “To say more is not my place.”

Yuri nodded her head. “Good.” She said. “They deserve... they deserve the happiness I denied them. Thank you for that.”

“There is no need to thank me. I have come to learn that destiny will find a way no matter how much we deny or run from it. I do not mean to be impatient or rude Yuri...” Andro said. “However I am very busy. Why have you contacted me?”

Yuri took a deep breath and nodded her head. “I have two requests.” She asked looking at him. “They are important to me and to Pa'cour.”

“I'm listening.” Andro said.

Yuri looked at him. “I'm quite sure you are aware of what your sister Eliani gave to Nalavi. Information from your mother Anja?” She said. “What she undoubtedly detected within me when we last saw each other?”

“Yes.” Andro said. “She has grown.”

Yuri looked at him oddly for a moment and then her dark brown eyes grew a little wider. “You can feel her can't you?” She gasped aloud. “You can sense her resonance within the Etheric realm can't you?”

Andro looked at Jomann and Dorian again and then back to Yuri. “Since the day she arrived.” He said. “All of us can if we concentrate.”

Yuri's eyes grew wider. “Your father?”

Andro shook his head quickly. “He is too far away at the moment. We can feel her. Shiria can feel her because she is a Pralor and she has naturally the skills most of us must cultivate and learn. Dormant the gene may be within her, but she is a bright point within that level of the Etheric realm. Just as you are. Just as my mother and Sadi and others are within that realm.”

“There... there is more than one realm then?” Yuri questioned.

“Let's just say that my father and I. My brothers and others are on a level above the one where Sadi, my mother and you and others reside. And now your daughter it seems.” Andro told her. “We are still coming to realize the many differences, but it is there.”

“Then what I... what I believe is true?” Yuri questioned. “That is why my mother...”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes. With excruciating detail and work my grandmother Gorgo and Shiria have been able to confirm the existence of at least two hundred Pralors on City Ship 19 who had the Praetorian gene. Possibly many more... but the records are very spotty after so long a time and the logs on SPARTA'S WRATH from that time are not fully complete.”

“The Praetorian gene. That is what you call it? Yuri asked.

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

“Then my father was a carrier.” Yuri said softly.

Andro nodded. "That is what Shiria believes. It would be the only real explanation to be honest. He passed the gene to you and..."

"Your mother Isabella." Yuri gasped. "That is why your brother..."

"Yes." Andro said.

Yuri looked at him. "Androcles... it is... it is manifesting itself within Onera. In the same manner that it has manifested itself within your mother Aricia and within Sadi. She is showing signs of being able to do the similar things. Nothing close to what you or your father and brothers can do, but after seeing what your Sadi did in the lounge on that base, it is very easily like that."

"Interesting... her name is Onera?" Andro said. "That is not a vampire name."

"It's an Akruxian Immortal name." Sheva spoke up now and they all turned to look at her. "From the ancient times. Before the High Coven." Sheva saw Dorian smile at her very impressed and she failed at hiding her smile back to him.

"Do I know you?" Yuri asked Sheva.

"No!" Sheva responded instantly turning back to Yuri.

"Well... your Durcumusaan officer is correct." Yuri said proudly. "It is the given name of Pa'cour's grandmother. Many of the Akruxian Immortals are reverting back to the old ways of their people. It is fitting I think."

"What is it you are asking Yuri?" Andro spoke.

"I need... Pa'cour and I... she will hurt herself or someone else if she does not learn to control these skills that are coming forth." Yuri told him. "Pa'cour and I cannot do it. We have already taught her all we can. I wish... you owe me nothing Androcles and I owe you my very existence I know this... but I would ask that you allow Onera to come to you and..."

"Yes." Andro told her without a moment's hesitation.

Yuri looked at him with wide eyes within the transmission and Andro could see the relief written all over her face at his answer. She gazed at him intently. "Just like that?" She asked finally.

"I have already showed my faith in you Yuri." Andro answered. "You have come even further since I saw you on my ship. I can sense no lingering resonance of Xaxon anywhere on you or within you. That tells me that your actions now come from here." Andro pointed at his heart.

Andro watched as she turned to the side and pulled the young woman into the holo transmission. Andro rose from where he was sitting on the edge of the table when he saw her. "This is... this is Onera Androcles. Pa'cour's daughter. My daughter. Our daughter."

Andro had to admit that she was a stunning young woman. She bore the genes of her father in the bone spurs that lined her jaw though they were much less pronounced, but she had her mother's exotic beauty as well. Andro nodded to her. "Onera." Andro spoke. "A pleasure to meet you."

"Thank... thank you." Onera said.

"Your Blessed Husband is in agreement with you Yuri?" Andro asked.

Yuri nodded quickly taking note that he referred to Pa'cour in such a manner and that it pleased her to no end to hear that. "It was... it was his idea actually." She answered. "He is... he is less attuned to the Etheric realm than his brother Cha'talla it seems... but he knows this and he is getting better. After what... after what you gave to him Androcles... he holds you in very high regard. It was... somehow he knew you would not refuse him. It seems I learn more and more of my Blessed Husband every moment. And it makes me love him with that much more fervor."

"I could and do say the same thing Yuri. After his actions towards the bodies of my grandparents, I could do nothing but accept. And Cha'talla is the only living Immortal Bonded to a dragon so that makes him an exception to the rule." Andro told her. "That may not be the case going into the future though. One never knows."

"Androcles... does Narice know that...?" Yuri began.

Andro shook her head. "You will reveal yourself to Narice when the time is right Yuri. She only knows that you and Pa'cour are alive and husband and wife. Not where. And it is not my place to tell her what you are doing to assist her behind the scenes. When the time is right you can tell her yourself."

Yuri nodded her head. "Is the gene active within her?" She asked.

Andro shook his head again. "She does not have it." He said. "It is very rare as you no doubt have already determined. Carisia does not have it, but as with Onera, it is actively dormant within Lucia. That is why she can manifest her Etheric whips."

Yuri looked at him, her face becoming slightly tense with anger. "And Dante?" She hissed.

Andro nodded his head. "More than likely actively dormant, though I can only reason that Xaxon will try to change that as time passes. That is my guess anyway." He stated knowing what her question was without elaborating. "It is probably one of the reasons that his essence jumped to him so quickly."

Yuri's dark eyes narrowed. "I will send with Onera everything we have on him and that back stabbing vithin bastard ex-husband of mine Androcles. If you find him... find them... make sure you finish it."

Andro nodded his head. "I intend to." He said. "You said you have two requests?"

Yuri's eyes returned to a relaxed posture and she gazed at him. "Androcles... I need to speak with your father. I need to meet with him."

Andro's brow furrowed and he became instantly alert. "My father?" He said. "For what purpose?"

"It is better if you do not know." Yuri told him. "It is something that I can talk only with him about."

"Yuri... he is not even within this quadrant. You know that or you would not be asking me." Andro said.

Yuri nodded. "I also know that you speak with him nearly every day." Yuri spoke. "You may not be your father Androcles; however the connection between the two of you is quite undeniable. You would not remain out of touch with each other for more than a few days unless the situation demanded it. Given the level of technology that you have gained from City Ship 41 I know you would remain within constant communication with him. If only to keep each other updated. I also know that you have several Pralor ships within your inventory now, given the data that was obtained from that warship you took from Kavalian space. You have the means to go back and forth to where he is in a matter of days and hours... not years."

Andro looked at her. "You are very well informed Yuri." He said.

Yuri nodded her head. "You forget Androcles... I may hate my mother for what she did to me... but I still have all of her files. She knew about City ship 41 before your father ever removed it from Lycavore. Though I doubt she knew about the Avatar. She also knew, at least in part, what was on that ship you took from Kavalian space."

"From her connection with Xaxon?" Andro asked.

Yuri nodded her head. "Yes probably. At least as much as he knew. I would not ask this if it was not very important Androcles." She said. "I can only assume that wherever your father went, it was in search of something related to that ship you found or something similar in nature based on the fact that this Shiria is a Pralor. If it was not, he would have returned by now and quickly proceeded to take out his anger on the Kavalian High Command for what they did to your mother. I do know a little about how your father thinks Androcles."

"So it seems." Andro said. "You are not exactly his favorite person Yuri. You must know that."

Yuri nodded. "Believe me... I am very well aware of that fact." She said. "This does not concern you Androcles..." She lied. "If it did I would tell you. This is something that... it is something that concerns your father from before you were ever born. Something I found in my mother's files."

"Yet you cannot tell me?" Androcles said.

Yuri shook her head. "I will only tell your father and it needs to come from me. It could well concern the future of the Union and the High Coven. As well as the past." She looked at him. "You know what I have embraced Androcles. You know I do not make this request lightly. For all my skills and bravado... your father could squash me like an insect. Believe me... I would rather not have to face him. Even by holotransmission. In this circumstance... in this case I must."

"I will speak with him... but I cannot say what his reaction will be." Andro said.

Yuri chuckled softly which surprised Andro to a small extent. "He will probably say... I will not speak to that vile, vampire bitch no matter what she has to say." She said almost trying to mimic Martin. "Or something along those lines I'm sure."

Andro nodded. "To be honest... that is probably exactly what he will say." Andro told her.

Yuri nodded. "In that case tell him Revan143." Yuri said.

Andro's eyebrows rose. "Revan143?"

Yuri nodded. “A code word from the time I was on Eden Station. He will know what it means. Try your best to convince him Androcles.”

“I make no promises.” Andro told her. “I am departing Earth in two days. I will send you rendezvous coordinates on this COM channel in a few hours. Pack lightly Onera... whatever you need we can provide to you.”

“I understand.” Onera spoke.

“You realize that I am going to the Beta Quadrant.” Andro told Yuri. “You wish your daughter to be that far away?”

“Do I have your word that she will be safe Androcles Leonidas?” Yuri asked. “Do I have your promise she will be protected?”

Andro nodded. “You do.” He said.

Yuri nodded. “Then I do not fear for my daughter or what she will learn. It will only improve who she already is. A young woman her father and I are so very proud of.”

“Very well.” Andro said. “I will contact you in a few hours with coordinates. Have someone monitor this channel during that time period.”

Yuri nodded. “Thank you Androcles.”

Andro chuckled now. “Don’t thank me Yuri.” He told her. “I do not know what my father will do.”

“No. Thank you for having faith and believing in it.” Yuri said.

Andro nodded. “I will get back to you in two hours.” He stated as he reached out and ended the transmission. He turned quickly and looked at Jomann, Dorian and Sheva. “Thoughts on this?”

“We may not be able to smell her fervon, but I didn’t detect any sort of lie or attempt to mislead us.” Dorian spoke first.

“Nor did I.” Jomann spoke leaning up against the table. “And we can feel her daughter just as you said. She’s unfocused and wild.”

Andro chuckled. “And we aren’t?” He said.

Jomann grinned. “But we at least can harness it.” He said. “Without training she very well could hurt someone or herself. Yuri is right in that regard.”

Andro looked at Sheva. “Sheva? Your thoughts?”

Sheva met his gaze surprised but her soft green eyes quickly recovered. “I do not have much experience or interaction with her Androcles.” She said thoughtfully.

“No... but you are a pureblood like her in a manner of speaking.” Andro said. “Your insight is welcome.”

“She sounds sincere in her words, but actions speak louder than words.” Sheva said looking at him.

Andro nodded. “Indeed they do.” He said. He looked at Dorian. “You need to spend more time with her fervon. You might learn something.”

Dorian smiled now. “I have learned from her.” He stated looking at Sheva with heated desire. “Quite a bit.”

Sheva slapped his arm while looking embarrassed. “Pig!” She hissed playfully. It was totally out of character for her, but Dorian’s good natured influence and youthful exuberance had indeed rubbed off on her. She was much more comfortable with herself and around others. Most especially Andro and Dorian’s other siblings. They would not expect her to hold back among them for they did not when she was around them. Sheva was rapidly beginning to enjoy her time spent with Dorian and his siblings. For lack of a better term... they were so normal. It was something Sheva had longed for deep inside her mind but something she had never experienced before. She had no intention of letting it go now.

Andro chuckled and looked at Jomann. “She may not be lying but she is also holding something back. Something she does not want to tell me. Something that is important enough for her to risk my father’s wrath.”

“Are you going to tell father?” Dorian asked.

Andro nodded. “Yes. We have too much on our plate right now to be concerned with this at the moment. Father will do what he will. You said Ridor checked in?”

Jomann nodded. “General Vistr was not aware of his status and needless to say he was very surprised. Andro... he has taken one of the young Kavalian females they rescued as his mate. He refuses to go anywhere without her.”

Andro nodded his head. “As well he should. General Vistr made sure he was born and raised here in Sparta. That is something ingrained in all of us.” He said. “SPARTA'S WRATH will be carrying other wives and mates and some children. Finalize the transfer orders and make arrangements for them. He can meet us as we transit to Dreamland.”

Jomann nodded. “That’s everyone then.” He said. “The entire team. All twelve of us. Not including Sadi, Ne'Veha, Kameka and Normya as our flight crews. I thought Normya was going to be assigned to Resumar?”

Andro shook his head. “With Arrarn in the High Coven helping Narice we have more need of her flying skills to support Sadi and Ne'Veha and fly our STRIKER. She will have the main seat of the STRIKER with Sadi or Ne'Veha backing her up. As for this new ship they are plotting with Ben about, that is strictly Sadi, Ne'Veha and Kameka. They won't tell me squat about it until we see it. Kameka is the definite third working the Engineer's console. According to KertaGai, she is a whiz at calculations and only one of them is actually needed to fly this new ship once it is complete.”

“Tir'ut and Cowen'Shan should supervise the heavy weapons role Androcles.” Sheva spoke up quickly. “They are best suited for it given their size and strength. And Cowen'Shan has extensive knowledge in Heavy Weapons.”

Andro nodded. “Agreed.” He said. “We are going to be an odd group you know.”

“As if we aren't already odd fervon.” Dorian chimed in.

Andro laughed. “Well... there is that to consider.” He said. “Very well... let's finish up the details and use these last two days to set our affairs right. I do not know when we will be returning. Knowing our father... it could be quite a while.”

Dorian chuckled. “I think grandmother and Tenna Deia are already preparing for that.” He said.

“Then we should too.” Jomann spoke

PRALOR DESIGNATED WORLD MANNE

It was a fertile world filled with mountains and oceans and forests spread across five continents. Extensive scans from the ARC ROYAL and several KADEN Transports that had gone in close revealed nothing but natural lifeforms. Animals of a wide assortment, the oceans full of life, and some of the animals massive in size. What the scans revealed was that there were no abnormal lifeform readings and the planet was clear of Svorag. They decided on the Western Continent since it provided the most open space and mountains for the adolescent dragons to hunt and learn. Even before Martin and the others returned they had established a Base Camp on the surface. A dozen portable buildings had been set up, though most of the crew chose to use portable tent cocoons to sleep. The atmosphere was nearly identical to Apo Prime and the weather was very temperate. A natural wall of towering trees and the side of a mountain were able to provide excellent defense from many of the larger indigenous animals on the planet and sonic emitters had been set up all around the perimeter to assist in that. Akemi had set up a rotating schedule for the crew to get down to the surface since Martin had told her they would be here at least a week or two. She thought that odd, for she knew the Kavalians were still trailing them, but she didn't question Martin's orders.

Murano had only come down to the surface last night, but he had a portable shelter already assigned to him he discovered. He had slept last night unlike any night in the previous thirty thousand plus years. At peace and calm. As he stepped from the shelter he let his eyes gaze around the massive camp. He could see dragons flying in the distance, easily spotting the enormous size of Martin's obsidian colored Bonded Brother and the flame red scales of who he now knew was the Dragon Elder Mother. They were flying among the many adolescents he saw swooping low over the trees probably instructing them. It was still early and he saw quite a few of the crew up and moving around already. He had to admit to himself... these men and women who followed Martin and his Queens were highly motivated and driven. The majority of them were Lycavorian, but even the many elves and Algolians he saw, as well as the Kavalians, all of them were driven and had purpose.

“Impressive isn’t it?” The voice said. Murano turned and saw Wayonn walk up beside him, Mari in tow with two mugs of steaming tea in her hands. Wayonn smiled. “I found her fidgeting in the Mess area. I figured I would drag her along with me.”

Mari chuckled as she held out the mug to her uncle with glittering blue eyes. “There was not much to do so early.” She said.

Murano chuckled and took the mug from her, leaning over to kiss her cheek. He sensed her Etheric shields were very high for some reason but he did not pry. He looked at Wayonn as he sipped his tea.

“They are... they are exceedingly well organized.” Murano stated as his eyes swept the camp again.

Wayonn nodded. “That they are.”

Murano looked back to him. “Is their entire military like this?” He asked.

Wayonn nodded. “Without question.” He said. “I saw only a small portion of it before we departed to come out here, but the training and dedication that was instilled in the Spartans commanded by Martin’s father so long ago on Earth has since bled into the very society and culture of the Lycavorian people as a whole. Even many of the other species. His father’s sacrifice so many millennia ago was the catalyst that drove them all together and become like one mind in their actions.”

“Yet they are not a militaristic society.” Mari spoke.

“Not at all.” Wayonn said. “I had the chance to speak in-depth with Martin’s mother before we left Earth and she described it in such a way that was so very easy to see if one looks very closely. She said no Spartan has ever started a war but anse if they haven’t finished more than their share. Each and every one of them trains and fights in the hope that their children do not have to fight. That is the purpose and drive behind all of them now. They train hard and they train brutally in some ways, but that training is why they have never lost a war. They are simply better at making war than most other people. That is what affords them the peace and freedom they have. Gorgo said she had met to meet a wolf who would rather fight than cuddle and nuzzle his wife and children.”

Mari giggled. “That is why so many of them are built like gods.” She said.

Murano looked at her with wide eyes. “Mari!” He gasped.

Mari looked at him with a brilliant smile. “What? There are many handsome men around Uncle. And I am single.”

“You will... I will meet any suitors that come forth in your father’s stead!” Murano hissed.

Mari chuckled again and leaned into her uncle. “Don’t worry Uncle... I have seen none among them that draw my interest.”

“Good.” Murano snapped softly.

Wayonn smiled. “How are you feeling old friend?”

Murano drew Mari close to him with one arm. “Like I have been reborn Wayonn.” He said honestly. “Not since Sumar have I felt such power in a Praetorian. It is almost as if he... as if he...”

“He lives within Martin?” Wayonn said.

Murano nodded. “Yes.”

Wayonn nodded in agreement. “It is no different than what I felt when I first met him. The power within him is uncharted... as it is within his son Androcles. I have not spent much time with Denali or Dorian, but I would imagine it is there too. Sumar’s blood runs deep within all of them.”

“He is not still sleeping is he?” Murano asked.

Wayonn laughed. “Martin? Not a chance. He is conferring with Daniel and others. They’ve been at it for over an hour now.”

“Conferring about what Wayonn?” Mari asked.

Wayonn took a deep breath. “We must understand... these men and women who carry the Praetorian gene are not Pralors. They are not like we were back then. In many ways... after living as a Lycavorian for so long... in many ways they are better than we were. They harness their emotion, for it is their greatest asset.”

“What are you saying Wayonn?” Murano asked.

“They also follow a code of honor my friend.” Wayonn said. “A code that has existed since the birth of the first Spartan.”

“I’m not following.” Murano said.

“You know that Martin’s brother follows us with his forces?” Wayonn said.

Murano nodded. "Yes. He commands many similar to Muton and those with him."

"They are not Muton." Wayonn said. "Muton and his people carry the blood of Pralors in them. Those Martin's brother commands are neither friendly or peaceful." Wayonn sighed deeply. "Pleistarchus... his brother violated one of the most sacred laws to Lycavorians. He raped For'mya while she was still wife and mate to Martin. In many cases, rape is considered even more vile than murder within Lycavorian society. For'mya is Martin's wife and mate, and their love, as well as the love he has for all his Queens, is legendary. Pleistarchus violated this law willingly. That cannot be allowed to stand."

"What do you mean Wayonn?" Mari asked.

"Martin will follow the instincts within him. He will not deny them and he will act on them." Wayonn said. "It... he must act on them. That is our way."

"Wayonn... you are a Pralor." Murano said.

Wayonn shook his head. "I have been turned for more years than I was a Pralor my friend." He answered. "I am more Lycavorian now than Pralor."

"What are you trying to say?" Murano asked.

Wayonn looked at him. "It's very simple really. Martin is going to use the Science facility they discovered on the way back here to lure his brother and those forces with him."

"And then?" Mari asked softly.

Wayonn looked at her. "Then he is going to obliterate them for what they did."

"And there is nothing we can do or say to change his mind?" Murano asked.

Wayonn shook his head. "Murano my friend... I have no intention of trying to change his mind. Justice must be done."

"And his other wives and mates support this?" Mari asked.

"Mari child, Martin's wives and mates speak with one voice. They think with one mind in many cases. They would expect this." Wayonn said. "I dare say that the only thing that has held Martin back from acting already is to insure they were in agreement. They worship him child... and he would do nothing against their wishes for he adores all of them. Aricia, Isabella and Anja are the more militant if you will, but Dysea, For'mya and Cirith balance that. They are all in agreement on this."

"Is that why he has sent for his sons?" Murano asked.

Wayonn laughed softly. "Ah! You have only spoken to Androcles on the COM Murano my friend, but had you already met him you would not ask that question. He is a duplicate of his father in nearly every way. Had Andro already been here, Martin's brother would be long dead and those who followed him nothing but a memory. No... he has sent for Andro and the others for something else. Some reason even I do not know. He and his son can see and feel things Murano. Much like Sumar could. Martin has sensed something and that is why he has sent for Androcles and the others. He knows we can not face it alone."

"Do you know what it is Wayonn?" Mari asked.

Wayonn shook his head. "No." He answered. "But I think it may be time for us to find out."

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

PRALOR DESIGNATED WORLD MANNE

Martin held the mug of coffee in his hands while his dark brown eyes scanned the very detailed holographic depiction that they had made of the deserted Pralor base on the chart table. Julie Collins was leaning over the table, her eyes focused on one portion of the station as she slowly turned the image in several directions, while Daniel and T'lolt stood on either side of Tony just behind her as they softly discussed approaches to the base. Pablo and Kenny leaned against the far wall holding large glasses of orange colored juice. Cody and Colin Walsh were next to them going over something on the data pad Colin held in his hand.

Kalis took all this in with a sense of utter awe. He now knew these men and women to be his uncle's personal team. Men and women who had fought with him since the very beginning of him discovering his past and his future. While the woman Julie and the man Colin used to be wolves like them, they had died at some point and High Coven experiments had brought them back to life as vampires using DNA and clones. They had regained the memories of the former lives they had lived and while they were now vampires, they were still an integral part of his Uncle's team. The Immortal appeared to have been accepted completely into their small group and they discussed tactics and many other things among each other that they would not discuss with others. They acted casually with each other, the vulgar barbs and comments almost always intended and succeeding in bringing forth laughter. Yet they were also the most dangerous and diverse group of men and women that Kalis had ever seen in his life. Even the few senior Puma Bane teams under his grandfather Keleru's direct command did not compare in any way to these men and women.

Kalis glanced at his uncle's face as he stood beside him silently, a mug of coffee in his hand as well. Kalis had not been much of a coffee drinker before joining his uncle, yet the rich, smooth flavor of his Tenna Aricia's blend of coffee almost seemed to energize him in many ways as it did so many of their people and he loved it.

Kalis knew from assorted Intelligence reports submitted by the few Kavalians who had actually fought against Martin Leonidas and lived that his Uncle was a masterful tactician and a man who was exceptionally accomplished in lethal ambushes and the art of warfare. Many of the Kavalian military leaders hated his Uncle, yet they also held a grudging respect for him and his unique ability to deal out death and destruction on a colossal scale should it be needed. Kalis also knew that many of them secretly feared his Uncle immensely even though they would not dare speak of this openly. Looking at the situation he found himself in now, knowing what he did about Pian and those that followed him, Kalis believed these were just the men who were loyal to his father and grandfather. He now believed that many more Kavalian leaders had no desire to meet his uncle on the field of battle.

Kalis was quickly becoming accustomed and skilled at using the new Etheric Mindvoice abilities that he had discovered buried within his blood and he felt his uncle throw up incredibly powerful shields but not look at him as he initiated the conversation.

[You don't have to be here Mandri.] His uncle's voice filled his head as clear as if he was speaking out loud.

Kalis didn't flinch at this anymore, amazed at how quickly he had been able to pick it up, and he turned back to look at the chart table. [Yes, I do Tenne.] He answered softly even though no words were spoken. He and Serale were practicing as much as possible at learning the old language and they knew it only helped to use it as often as they could. [All I have accomplished, everything you and Andro and my Aunts have opened my eyes too these last weeks, it will mean nothing if he is not ended once and for all. If his hate and foul presence is not removed from this life permanently.]

[That doesn't mean you have to take part in it.] Martin told him.

[It will be the only thing that will... that will cleanse my soul Tenne.] Kalis told him in a soft voice. [And allow me to begin the life I want to have. Does that make sense Tenne?]

[More than you know.] Martin told him.

[I will... I will always bear some shame for what he did to Tenna For'mya no matter that she does not see it that way. The only way to rid myself of that is to see that he pays for what he did. In some way... in some way his death will purge me of all the vile things I have ever done to innocents... just as Tenna For'mya suffered at his hand.] Kalis said.

[Never put yourself in the same category as him Mandri.] Martin told him firmly. [You acted in such a way because he failed to do what it was his duty as a father to do. To show you the correct path and the path of honor. He lost that a long time ago. He bears the blame... not you. You have found that now... and what is most important is that when you discovered it, you grasped onto it tightly.] Martin smiled at him and nudged him with his elbow gently. [You look worn out Kalis my boy. I assume you spent the night claiming Serale?]

Kalis smiled and felt the warmth course through him. [I made her mine Tenne. I made her see that there was nothing else in this universe that I wanted more than her love. I can not... I cannot describe it Tenne. Her scent, her skin, the color of her eyes, even her hair... I just want to...]

[Wrap yourself around her and bask in what she makes you feel? To lose yourself in her scent?] Martin said.

Kalis looked at him. [Is this... is this what you feel for my aunts Tenne? What Andro feels for Sadi and his other mates? To just lose yourself within their scent and their arms and hear them whisper love into your ears. To feel their body against yours? I can still feel the beating of her heart against my chest even though she is not here? Is this... is this what it means to love a woman?]

Martin nodded. [Feels pretty good doesn't it?]

[It cannot be described.] Kalis said. [She swirls all around me.]

[You bit her?] Martin asked.

[I could not... it wasn't deep Tenne. I could not help myself. She wanted me too.] Kalis answered.

Marti nodded his head. [Then that is why your aunts were up early. They wouldn't tell me, but now it makes sense. They will see to Serale. Help her to adjust quickly. You and Serale are now family and they will help her to adjust quickly as a new wolf.]

[Did I do something wrong?] Kalis asked.

[You followed your instincts... and I truly believe that is what Serale wanted.] Martin spoke. [That young woman worships you Mandri. It oozes from her pores and you can see it in her eyes. She won't be fully like us, but she will be able to shift and take on some of our traits. Your traits. Our blood... Leonidas blood... it is potent Mandri. The most potent of our kind according to Anja and many other medical scholars. Though you are half Kavalian, your wolf blood will always be dominant. Your aunts will teach her and help her to adjust. Then the two of you can learn together as you explore.]

[Tenne... you have been with my aunts for so long...] Kalis asked timidly.

Martin nodded his head as he sipped his coffee. [Over twenty years now. Best damn years of my life too. Every single one. And there are many more to come.]

[You never... I have heard whispers among the crew... all of you act as if you have just discovered each other. It never... it never gets old does it? I do not want this to end and...] Kalis said.

[Kalis... each and every time I have any of them in my arms it is brand new.] Martin told him. [Part of it is our culture and our blood... we crave the touch of those we call mate and that we love... but each of them is part of me inside. In my heart... in my mind. When you love her Kalis hold nothing back. Give her all that you are. Love her like it is the very first time all the time. Touch. Taste. Nuzzle. Do that Kalis and the desire and passion will never wane. It will always simmer and burn within you both. They are the bearers of our future my boy. Without them we are nothing. Never forget that.]

[I won't Tenne.] Kalis said softly.

[And to answer your question... no.] Martin told him. [Each of them holds a part of my soul Kalis. Aricia is my Anome yes... the one I will always reach for first... but all of them... I am not complete without each of them. Each of them is a part of me. They are my strength.]

[The crew speaks in whispers of who you favor most after Tenna Aricia.] Kalis said with a smile.

Martin chuckled softly. [That has been going on for many years now. Drives people malda. Don't know why.]

[You do not favor one or the other do you Tenne?] Kalis said. [If they are all part of you as you say... how could you?]

Martin looked at him and let his eyes smile for him. [That statement tells me just how far you have come in so short a time Mandri. That makes me very proud of you.] He said. [And you are correct. In the heat of passion, I will admit to you what everyone is so damn interested about. The only other people I have ever told this are Andro and Danny. In the heat of desire and passion your Tenna Anja's scent calls to me the strongest after Aricia, especially when she is in phase. I believe it is because I discovered her long before I ever found out who and what I truly was and I burned her scent into my brain without even understanding why. And she just smelled really good.] Martin grinned at that. [However... each of their scents are like drugs to me now. How each of them tastes, how their skin feels, these are things I could not live without now. Not after so long together. Remember it will always be that way. Love her like it is the first time Kalis. Hold nothing back as I said and always honor her... do that... do that and the desire and passion will never die.]

Kalis looked at the table once more. [After discovering what I have in these last weeks Tenne, I don't think that will ever be an issue going forward.]

[Good.] Martin said. [Many a pleasurable night will be had in the arms of your mate and it will always leave you craving more.]

Kalis looked at him. [Tenne... will Andro... what I did...?]

Martin shook his head. [There is nothing you need concern yourself when it comes to Andro Mandri.] He said. [My son and I share a special gift... because of this damn unique gene we carry. He knows what has happened with you and believe me Kalis he approves. As does Sadi. When you see them... well... you will know what I mean. He is saving a place for you on his team.]

[His team?] Kalis asked. [You mean like Uncle Daniel and the others are to you?]

Martin nodded. [I told him it was high time he formed his own team. And believe me when I tell you... Andro is who you want to be around. As he does with your brother Karun, he considers you a brother. Probably because he has more sisters and they drive him crazy.] Martin chuckled.

[And Fedor and Eirene?] Kalis asked.

[They are still young emotionally though they are fully grown.] Martin replied. [Both of them are gifted and they will come to see the man you have become. Give them time and always look out for them.]

Kalis nodded his head. [That is something I have not always done with my siblings.] He said. [I intend to make sure that never happens again.]

[It is a new world Kalis.] Martin told him. [Embrace it. Enjoy it. The rest will come in time.]

Kalis nodded his head. [But first... first I intend to help you destroy the last piece of my past that so shames me.] He said firmly. [The stain upon the honor you have showed me.]

Martin nodded slowly at him and turned his eyes to look up finally. “Kenny?” He asked.

Kalis turned and watched the man push off from the table behind Daniel. “I’ll have to confirm the dimensions with For’mya and Endith Skipper, but I am seeing only one place they could set down their transports within ten clicks of this place.” Kenny spoke as he moved up to the table. He reached out and adjusted a portion of the map they were looking at. “It’s the same clearing we landed in. Three clicks northeast of the station. You’re sure about their numbers Kalis?”

Kalis nodded his head. “Yes... a full ship board complement and Combat Unit of Puma Bane. Two hundred and fifty.”

“That means at least five... probably more like seven or eight transports.” Kenny said. “Given the size of Kavalian Troop Carriers... this is it Skipper.”

“And you’re sure he will bring them all Kalis?” Daniel asked.

Kalis nodded again. “Without question Uncle Daniel. And whoever else he may be able to draft into service that can hold a weapon. He will have learned from Enurrua. Even if he uses them as meat for the grinder, he will not care. He may split the Puma Bane unit somewhat... but the majority will remain under his direct control. The reasons we are giving him will make it so he has no choice.”

Julie pointed to the map. “The fastest and clearest path is the most obvious.” She spoke now tracing her index finger along the map. “Right down this lightly forested ridge, directly to the east side of the station. The same one we took.”

“Which is right where he will send his fodder.” Martin spoke. “The most obvious and exposed route to the station.”

T'lolt hissed. “Coward.”

Julie nodded her head in agreement and looked up at Martin. “There are two other routes Skipper, but the terrain isn’t as agreeable. Down along this riverbed, lots of rocks and marshy land, and then around this ridge here...” She traced her finger. “That would require a lot of climbing and some serious leg work but...”

Martin nodded his head. “It would also drop them right over the top of the entrance to the facility.” He spoke moving his hand and indicating with his finger where that path came out. He turned his head when the door to the portable building opened and Wayonn led Murano and Mari into the structure. He said nothing and moved around the table to stand between Daniel and Julie. “They’ll scan the planet once they are in range... and they’ll determine the same things we are seeing. He isn’t stupid.”

“But he ain’t half as mean and nasty as you Boss.” Pablo broke in from where he leaned against the wall.

Martin looked at Danny and grinned. “Me?” Martin said. “I hate violence.”

Julie snorted in disgust and shook her head as the others chuckled. “As if anyone with half a brain will ever believe that.”

Danny met Martin’s eyes and grinned now. “Honduras?” He asked.

Martin nodded. "Honduras." He said.

T'lolt looked between the two men as he saw Julie and the others smile in a predatory manner. "More information would be nice for those of us who are uninformed." He spoke finally with a grin. "What is this Honduras?"

Tony looked at him. "An Op we did a long time ago T'lolt." He spoke. "Little piss ant of a country back on Earth. A drug warlord thought he was the finest thing to hit the pages of Mercenary Magazine. Had this single battalion of butchers he called his Hunters. About nine hundred strong. Bunch of cutthroats and murderers is what they were. Gathered them from all over the world. He killed upwards of five thousand innocent civilians before someone had the balls to send us in."

"Ah... you ended him then?" T'lolt asked.

Tony nodded. "With extreme prejudice."

Julie looked at Martin. "We had a full team back them Marty." She said.

Martin nodded his head. "I know. Kalis has talked to Mata and General Koguth and both have already volunteered to go with us. Along with a dozen of his most experienced men. All of them with a grudge against Puma Bane troops and all of them seasoned fighters."

Julie turned back to the holimage and nodded. "Ok... we've seen what they can do. That will even the odds." She said.

Wayonn remained silent as he listened for he had seen Martin and his team in action on more than one occasion. Murano had only seen them in action against the Svorag, but Wayonn had witnessed firsthand what they had done to the Kavalian base on the planet where they had rescued Iama. He had seen them plotting the operation and planning every detail. Murano however stepped forward not believing they were actually going to fight a superior force such as it was.

"Martin... this is crazy." He said "You will be outnumbered four or five to one!"

Pablo chuckled again from the wall. "Hell... the odds will be in our favor." He said.

"Your favor?" Murano gasped.

Martin moved closer to the table and motioned to the map. "He'll send the troops he has no use for straight up the gut thinking we'll believe they are the main force and attack them. He'll split his Puma Bane force into two sections... each one moving quickly to these two locations." Martin said pointing to two different points on the map near the actual Pralor Science Base. "I said he wasn't stupid Murano... I never said he planned outside the box. He thinks one dimensional... he always has. He thinks brute force wins the day all the time."

"This is very true." Kalis spoke up. "Overwhelming force has always been his pattern. There is no reason he would change now."

"In this case it could succeed!" Murano spoke.

Martin shook his head. "No. Not this time." Martin shifted around the table. "When he splits his Puma Bane troops, I intend to channel them into the places I choose. Then I will roll them up and kill them." He stabbed down on one point. "The terrain limits from which direction he can come. One group he will send to this point here. To cover his approach. He will lead the second group to the entrance his sensors and his nose will direct him too."

"His nose?" Murano gasped. "How do you know this? What if he swings his forces in another direction? What if he does not act in the manner you predict? This is insane!"

"He'll act just how I know he will act." Martin said calmly. "He's obsessed Murano. He'll think he is outsmarting me... but he won't. He'll go right where I know he will go."

"How?" Murano demanded.

"Bait." Kalis spoke almost casually. "Something he can't resist."

"Bait?" Murano snapped. "What is this bait you will use? What will cause him to do exactly what you say he will? You cannot predict this. Not if he is as twisted as you say."

"Yes I can." Martin spoke confidently.

"How?" Murano barked.

"Because I'm going to use the two things he wants most of all as bait." Martin said. "Just as Kalis said."

"What could possibly make him do exactly as you want him to do?" Murano snapped. "What does he want so bad that he will do as you say?"

“Us.” The female voice spoke drawing all their attention. Everyone turned and watched as For'mya came up beside Kalis confidently. “He wants Kalis and I Murano. And we are going to give him what he wants.”

Murano looked stunned as he moved closer. “How do you propose to fight such odds?” He hissed. “Even a... even a Praetorian would not willingly fight such odds. You risk two of your family in this act! We cannot afford to lose you Martin... not in... in such a reckless act of vengeance! Not now!”

“Vengeance?” Martin asked as his brow furrowed. “You think this is about vengeance?”

“What else would you call it?” Murano spoke harshly.

“This isn't about vengeance Murano. And I am not a Pralor.” Martin snapped back at him quickly. “I am a Lycavorian and a Spartan first! A Praetorian second. This has nothing to do with vengeance.”

“Murano...?” Wayonn began.

“Then what is it about?” Murano demanded ignoring Wayonn. “You are plotting the deaths of perhaps hundreds of men!”

“Yes I am.” Martin said.

“Then explain to me what this is about?” Murano demanded again.

“This is about justice.” Kalis was the one who spoke now, his voice firm and filled with resolve and commitment. “This is about justice.”

For'mya slipped her arm around his waist and nodded her head as she pulled him close to her side. “Avoi.” She said softly.

“... Are his Praetorian Mage!” Murano spoke fifteen minutes later. “You must tell him this course of action is ill-advised and wrong!”

Helen looked up from where she sat on the ground slowly chewing the fresh fruit that Iama had given to her last night. It was bright pink in color and it tasted so very much like the sweet apples she used to eat on Earth. Arzoal rested on the ground near her, her flame colored eyes staring at Murano as her Bonded sister mulled over what he was telling her. Wayonn and Mari were silent as they stood nearby, Wayonn already knowing what his granddaughter would tell Murano. Mari, Helen sensed, was suddenly and quite surprisingly caught up in the sense of honor and duty that these men and women so easily projected outward from themselves. That was something she would have to discover the why for.

“Carians... why would I tell him such a thing Murano?” Helen asked softly turning her attention to Murano.

“You are his Mage! His moral guide!” Murano snapped. “This is what a Praetorian Mage would do! Advise him against such actions!”

“I am many things... but I am not now and have never been Martin Leonidas's moral guide. He does not need one.” Helen replied.

“What he is doing is wrong!” Murano hissed. “This is the very thing my people feared would happen if this power we command ever found its way into the hands of...”

“Of what?” Helen asked him as she climbed to her feet. “Of those species that you view as less than your vaunted Pralors?”

“I... I did not say that!” Murano snapped.

“That is what you were going to say!” Helen snapped right back. “Do not lie to me! That is what you were going to say isn't it?”

Murano looked at her taking a deep breath before speaking. “I am only... it is what my people would say.” He said more gently this time. “It is not a way of thinking that I follow Helen.”

“So far... the only lesser species I have seen on this misbegotten trip are Pralors!” Helen hissed at him. “The actions and words of your own people towards us have been nothing short of arrogant, deceitful and excessively violent! How dare you stand there now and profess to me how Martin Leonidas should act simply because it is how you would act!”

“That is not what I meant!” Murano spoke.

“Yes it is!” Helen barked at him. “Martin and his sons bear the blood of Sumar in their veins and by virtue of that, the many gifts that Sumar had. The Praetorian gene as you call it. They did not ask for this gene within them Murano. They did not ask for this power that they have and I can tell you there are many days when they wish they did not have it!”

Murano looked at her shocked. “What?” He gasped.

“You did not know this?” Helen rasped at him. She looked at Wayonn. “You did not tell him grandfather?” She asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “It is not my place to put words into Martin’s voice.” He told her.

“What are you talking about? Why... why would I even think this?” Murano asked. “This power we have is... it is a gift.”

“You have known since you were very young that you carried this gene Murano.” Helen told him. “You have adhered to a code of honor that your people with this gene followed. I tell you now, Martin... Androcles... Denali... Dorian... Jomann and all those who carry this gene within them now and are discovering what it allows them to do; they did not have the luxury of knowing what you knew so long ago. They only knew that they were different in a way they could not explain. And that did not sit well with them.”

“What does that have to do with anything?” Murano asked.

Helen looked at Wayonn. “Grandfather?” She asked softly.

Wayonn nodded his head. “I am more Lycavorian now than I am Pralor Helen. I have been for many thousands of years.” He said softly. “I have tried to determine how to explain it... perhaps it needs to come from you.”

“Explain what?” Murano snapped loudly. “Praetorians do not actively plan vengeful acts! It goes against everything we were taught! That is what Martin is doing!” Murano looked at Arzoal. “Arzoal... you were a Pralor once. You know what I am speaking of. You knew of the Praetorians back then. What we stood for.”

Yes I was. Arzoal answered. However... I have been gifted with the experience of being a member of two different species Murano. I have seen many events through two sets of eyes and two completely different worlds.

“You don’t think this is wrong?” Murano asked shocked. “Martin is planning to destroy hundreds of lives. He is going to lure them into an ambush and then destroy them! That is not wrong to you?”

If you had asked me that question before I became a dragon... I would have said yes. Arzoal answered him. However... I have spent the better part of the last forty millennia as a dragon Murano. It is who I am now. I have had to do things that many Pralors would be aghast at in order to save others of my kind. I would do it all again if need be. This is who I am now. Perhaps who I was always meant to be. No... I do not agree with you now my friend. I am sorry.

“This is insane!” Murano spat. “He risks the lives of one of his wives and his nephew! One of those he professes to care for more than anything! He needs to exercise restraint and control! And you will do nothing to stop him?” He looked at Wayonn. “None of you?”

Mari stepped forward now and placed her hand on Murano’s arm. “Uncle... perhaps... perhaps you are viewing things through your eyes and forgetting that they are different than us. They have lived different lives and different worlds. Their view and their culture is not ours and never will be.”

Helen smiled and looked at Mari. “And the child among us understands more than the elder at this point.” She stated softly. She turned back to Murano her face growing harder and tense as she did.

“Do not stand there and preach to me Praetorian Murano of the Pralor people! We are not Pralors! We are Lycavorian! That is the blood that flows proudly within our veins. We honor our Pralor heritage... revere it even... but that is not who we are. We have always been a very instinctive people; it is why you see us drawn to each other so much. We crave the closeness and warmth of family and friends. We need it. Yes... we were a barbaric species at one point, not one Lycavorian alive today would ever deny that. But the day Sumar joined with our people that all changed. He did not try to change who we were Murano... he embraced our ways! He became one of us! Through the centuries he was able, along with Wayonn and so many others, they were able to enlighten us to so many different ways of things because they now understood us! Because they understood us... then they were able to effect change that mattered. Why do you think Sumar’s first born son was revered among our people as King? Yes... he guided us through the Black Day... through the millennia of slavery to the High Coven... but he never forgot what he was. He stayed true to the instincts of our people while balancing those same instincts with the more benevolent nature of his Pralor blood. But he was always a Lycavorian first.

And when I found the Spartan people on Earth, I saw the same thing in them that Resumar saw in our people. That is why we blended their culture into ours and finally... completely... made it our own. That Spartan culture and way of life allowed us to remain true to our instincts and still become what Sumar and Resumar hoped we would become.”

“Our people lost that for a time Murano.” Wayonn spoke now. “It is why I kept those Lycavorians with me within the Beta Quadrant, away from those in the Alpha. They did not deny their instincts, they just suppressed them in a way Sumar and his son did not want us too. It wasn’t until Martin returned to claim the throne of our people that it changed.”

Helen nodded her head now. “When he returned to us on Earth he had no idea who or what he was Murano. I could feel the power within him... such staggering power...”

“You... you knew then?” Murano gasped.

Helen looked at him. “I suspected he was different. That we were different then. We were too closely tied together. Something drew him to me and I to him. Thanks to my grandfather, we discovered what that was. That power he commanded, it was simmering just beneath the surface, boiling to come out, but he had no knowledge of his history or his blood. Yet he had done without thinking what so many of our people had forgotten through the years; what first Sumar and then Resumar taught our people. He had balanced the instinctive and sometimes violent nature of our people and the Spartans with the compassion and thoughtfulness of the Pralor blood within him. He never wanted to be King! He never wished for the position that was thrust upon him when he discovered who he was. He denied it at first and because he denied it as you suggest he do now, it almost cost him the very core of his heart and soul.”

“Queen Aricia?” Mari whispered softly her hand coming up to touch her lips. “She is his Anome. I have heard whispers among your people of what happened then. They still speak of it. I read the book by the elven writer too. It is... the story is horrible, yet it is inspirational.”

Helen nodded her head. “Your niece is far more insightful than you or her father gives her credit for.” She said softly. “Three times since he has returned to lead us, to show all of us what we had forgotten, three times someone chose to target one of the pieces of his heart and soul. Twice he did not respond as a Lycavorian and Spartan would respond. He restrained himself from acting. And because of that it happened a third time. This time... this time Fedor and Eirene were the result! A glorious and blessed result in the end, but a result that should not have happened! Martin will love them as his own children now, never doubt that, for it is his essence they reached for and found while still in their mother’s womb. The shame he carries because he allowed it to happen in the first place is something that will never be erased however. Not until Pusintin lies dead!”

“He bears no shame for that. They used deception and coercion against For'mya. Even she does not blame him. I have heard her say this on several occasions.” Murano spoke.

Helen shook her head slowly. “Perhaps that is how you view it Murano.” She said. “That is not how our people... how Martin views it. And For'mya thought she had lost Martin’s love because of what happen. Because of what she suffered. She does not blame him because his love for her only grew stronger because of what she endured and when she knew that, all her shame and doubt was erased by his love for her. Had Martin done what his instincts told him to do, it would never have happened to begin with. No more will he deny the instincts that burn within him. Teach him restraint Murano? Martin Leonidas has been exercising restraint for the better part of two decades! I have never in all my hundreds of years witnessed a man exercise so much restraint!”

“It... it does not seem that way.” He said softly.

“That fool Lorendo struck one of his Queens!” Helen snarled and stepped closer to the much larger Murano, poking a finger into his broad chest to emphasize her words. “He struck the Queen the majority of our people consider to be the most beloved by him after Aricia! Anja Leonidas has known him far longer than all of the others together and she was the very first to be affected by his wolf aura. Hadarian she may be, but she acts as a Lycavorian and a Spartan woman almost as much as Aricia does. Of all of them turned by Martin, Anja has embraced and grasped the true meaning of what it means to be Lycavorian a tiny bit more than the others and made it her all her own! Perhaps it is because she saw into his mind so long ago; perhaps it is because she fought her feelings for him for so long that the burning of her blood became too much for her to deny and she almost lost him. It no longer matters to her or to anyone! Dysea and For'mya know this about her, as do Isabella and Cirith and they love her even more for it. Restraint you say? If Martin Leonidas had not exercised the restraint you say I need to teach him, that fat ronnus Lorendo would have died in the very spot he stood for striking Anja as he did! Martin would have ended his life in the most violent way he knew how! As would you and all of those with you have died for Lorendo's actions! Your people nearly killed one of his children! His children! You did not see what he did on Enurrua Murano, and I tell you now, he would have annihilated all of you and barely broke a sweat for what your people did had he not exercised restraint! Carians... why am I even having this discussion!"

Helen barked angrily before turning away quickly for she did not want to lose control of her own passions now. Arzoal lowered her head quickly and touched her cool snout to Helen's shoulder instantly and calming her. Helen nodded slowly and reached up to stroke her scales lovingly.

Helen turned back to face him. "Do not speak to me of restraint Murano!" She snarled at him. "Had Fedor died that day... all of you would have followed him into the abyss of whatever place you call hell! You have absolutely no idea how close to death all of you came that day! None! Had Martin not been there... had it been Androcles or one of his other sons or daughters instead of him... you would be dead!"

"So it is about vengeance!" Murano spat.

"Vengeance? You still think this is about vengeance?" Helen gasped and shook her head. "I have seen..." She stopped talking and looked at Wayonn, seeing her grandfather nod his head once more.

"Speak the words granddaughter." He told her. "Maybe then... maybe then he will finally understand."

Helen turned back to Murano. "I have seen men and women follow Martin Leonidas into some of the blackest, brutal and most hideous places any of them had ever seen before in their lives! The same places they had no idea if they would ever come back from! And they followed him into those places without pause or question. I have seen that man inspire mortally wounded men and women to fight and stand until the very last breath of life leaves their broken bodies! I have seen men and women lose limbs in savage battles and even though they scream in agony and pain, they shift their forms to stop the bleeding and then throw themselves back into the fray. To follow their King! No question! No hesitation! No doubt! That is what he inspires them too!"

"They do not follow him because of his name or the silly title that he carries and hates so much! They follow him without doubt because of what he represents to them! They follow his son Androcles not because of his name, but because of his own actions and deeds and what he represents to them! They follow Denali and Resumar and his daughters Eliani and Normya and Lisisa... all of his children! Not for the name they carry... not because they are royalty... but because they represent all we desire for our people! All we aspire to be! All we want for our future!" Helen shook her head slowly. "Restraint? You and the others have no idea how very lucky you are that it was Martin there that day and not one of his children. We would not be having this discussion if it was. His children adhere far more closely to the ideals that he and their mothers taught them. The ideals of our people and culture. More closely in many instances than Martin does himself. And still you question his motives."

Murano stared at her for a long moment. "Helen..." He finally spoke softly. "What he is planning... I... I see vengeance in his eyes. That is what I see."

"Vengeance to your way of thinking... to your instincts... perhaps." Helen said with a nod. "It is justice to our species and our instincts. The instincts that Sumar, your friend, instilled in our people all those millennia ago. Look deeper into those eyes Praetorian Murano... look beyond what you see outwardly... look beyond what you think you know and perhaps you will understand him."

"Sumar would not advocate what Martin is doing!" Murano spoke.

Wayonn moved closer. "The Sumar you once knew... that we once knew... it is not the Sumar who rose to lead these people Murano. Our eyes were opened my friend. To new things. New insights. An entirely new life. The Sumar I knew at the end..." Wayonn closed his eyes for a brief moment as he remembered. "The Sumar I knew and called friend at the end would have acted far sooner than Martin has waited. And with far less tolerance and patience than Martin has displayed. At least until now. As I would have acted."

"You think to change him?" Helen asked him softly. "You think to change his sons and daughters, who he views with nearly the same reverence as his wives and mates?" She shook her head slowly. "This will never happen Murano. They bear their father's blood within them and Martin bears within him the blood and memories of his father Leonidas; he bears within him the blood and memories of Resumar and Sumar. That is what guides him now. That is what guides his oldest son Androcles, who you have only spoken to in a silly holo transmission, but who is far more unforgiving than his siblings and even his own father. And Martin will now act as he should have long ago.”

I have seen Martin Leonidas weep at orders he has had to give Murano. Arzoal spoke now seeing Murano turn to look at her. Orders that he knew would no doubt cost the lives of innocents. I have witnessed his own son Androcles give the order that sent millions to their deaths in a single act. That order saved billions more innocents from hate and death. That decision weighs heavily on Andro’s soul even still, a darkness that will forever be his to carry alone though he was the only one with the strength to give such an order. Just as his father carries similar self-inflicted burdens of darkness within him. Their compassion knows no bounds for those who deserve it Murano... but their mercy to their enemies is non-existent.

“This man... he is Martin’s brother Helen. His family.” Murano spoke softly once more.

Helen shook her head quickly in denial. “No he is not. Is that what you think? That he... that Martin is conspiring to murder his own brother?”

“That is how it looks to me.” Murano said sedately. “How it would look to others if they knew what I knew.”

Helen shook her head slowly again, this time with a very small smile. “That is because you don’t know what you think you do Murano. You don’t know the truth of it. There is only one man alive who will ever hold the title of brother to Martin Leonidas. His Mard Fervon. His True Brother. The man who has been with him from the very beginning of it all. The same one who has experienced all of the very same horrors and the same brutal life that he did. The man who has shed the same blood with him on more occasions than I can imagine; experienced the same sense of happiness, love and loss that he did. They shared it all. You wish to know Martin Leonidas Murano... truly know him... then learn about him from the one person in existence who knows him better than his own wives and mates. The only other person outside of his son Androcles who knows who Martin Leonidas really is. Pusintin or whatever that fool wishes to call himself now... he is not that man. He never was. And soon he will not matter, for Martin will erase him from existence.”

Mari looked at her, blue eyes growing slightly wider in realization. “Daniel Simpson.” She said softly.

Helen looked at Murano now. “You have much to learn Murano.” She said. “So much to learn about us. Just as we have to learn about you. You will never change Martin Leonidas or his sons and children. Never. Justice will be done Murano. As Martin carried it out twenty-eight years ago, he must deal out justice once again. When that act is done then you will see the one remaining stain on the honor of his father forever extinguished and we can move forward into the future.” Helen turned away from him as Arzoal rose to her four legs. Murano and the others watched as she casually waved her hand and lifted herself into the saddle with her command of her Etheric power and look down upon them once she was settled.

“Learn quickly Murano. Watch him. Learn about him. But do so quickly.” Helen spoke. “The time for learning is rapidly leaving us and soon... sooner than you might think or know... soon his children will join us and then there will be no more time for learning. Only battle. And then you and the Pralor people will see just how Martin Leonidas, Androcles, his other sons and his daughters... those of us who follow them and their ideals... then you will see how we wage war to protect those we care for.”

“Those you care for? What do you mean?” Murano asked her moving closer.

“Sister! Go!” Helen barked.

Arzoal let loose with a short trumpet and propelled them into the sky with her powerful legs, her massive wings carrying them away rapidly. Murano staggered back slightly from the buffet of wind and turned quickly to Wayonn.

“What did she mean?” He asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “I do not know. It is not the Scourge... we would feel that as well... but whatever it is... you can rest assured that if Martin is concerned enough to send for Androcles and his other children... then it is a threat that only together can we face.”

“Why has he not told me about this?” Murano hissed.

Wayonn shrugged. “Perhaps for the same reasons that you do not understand what he does now.” He said. “As my granddaughter said... there is only one way to truly learn about him. If you desire this knowledge as much as I believe you do Murano... then you will take her advice and act on it.”

Murano watched as Wayonn turned and began to walk away, his hands going behind his back in a restful pose, his wolf senses drawing in the sweet smell of the nearby flowers and lake waters.

Murano, Praetorian and warrior, was at a loss for what to do for the first time in nearly thirty millennia. He did not like that feeling.

Fedor sat on the soft grass overlooking the huge lake and stared out across the glass like surface as the sun began its rise into the distance. He wore only a pair of work out pants, his toes flexing and un-flexing in the cool, greenish yellow grass. The morning breeze swept across his skin cooling him and bringing the myriad of scents to his wolf nose. He lifted the mug of coffee and took a long pull of the hot liquid, enjoying the flavor as he swallowed it down. His mother Anja had pronounced him fully recovered from his injuries yesterday and lifted all restrictions on him, though he had felt no different for days. He knew she had been playing it safe with him because he was her son and she was not only acting as Chief Medical Officer, but his mother as well. Fedor found it amusing that he and Eirene called six women mother, but it came so naturally to them, just as it did their other siblings even though they had never met them in person. It was part of their strength as a family to be able to do this and not think it odd in some manner. All six of them spoke with one voice and Fedor knew that voice rarely, if ever, disagreed.

Fedor detected her kiwi scent instantly and turned his head as Iama exited their portable shelter and made her way over to him. She wore one of his t-shirts that fell to just below her thighs and her tail swayed gently behind her as she walked. The upper portion of the t-shirt was stretched across her full breasts as she lifted the glass of juice she carried to her lips and Fedor felt a surge of desire for her.

Iama's sea green eyes found him instantly when she exited and she quickened her pace until she came up beside where he sat on the grass. As if it was the most natural thing in the world for her to do, she didn't hesitate and lowered herself into Fedor's lap sideways, her legs extending out to the side and her tail curling around his upper leg as he leaned forward and softly nuzzled her neck and shoulder. The joy at discovering that her father and her family still loved her and it had been her father all of these years who had never given up on finding her, it had kept Iama very occupied for the last two days as she rediscovered their love and presence. She knew it made Fedor very happy that the relationship she had with her father had not died during her years as a whore for the Kavalian troops on Nefoa, and that his love for her had only grown more intense in their time apart. Fedor had seen Koguth several times since they had established the camp, always holding her hand as they talked or walked among the encampment and Iama could feel his happiness for her within their Mindvoice connection and how it made him very happy.

Last night however, last night Iama Leonidas had surrendered to the new and wonderful feelings of a young woman who craved the touch and company of her new husband and mate. She excused herself from her family, only her mother and Corsa knowing what the sudden anxiousness within her was all about, and set about using her new skills in Mindvoice to find Fedor. Iama found him working with several engineers and Star Colonel Endith on some sort of electronic defensive field late yesterday afternoon. Fedor sensed her desire instantly as she knew he would and they had spent most of the early evening making sweet love to each other with measured and exquisite slowness. He may have only been a few months old technically, but Fedor was by no means a child. His touch could and did make her sing in delight. They had explored each other's bodies and desires further than ever before and Iama had cried out in bliss more times than she could remember through it all. She closed her eyes now in ardor as she felt a small portion of his male wolf aura surround her and embrace her tightly. Anja had told her she would begin to feel this from him and it would grow over time because his blood was now within her from his bite. It would not be as strong as his father could project, but Anja estimated it would certainly affect her in a very positive way and Iama could now feel what she meant. It was as if Fedor wrapped a warm, soothing blanket of love and respect around her and pulled her tight. She found this sensation could incite her passion to higher levels last night, the touch of his aura easily causing her body to respond in a very sexual nature. Now however, now that aura simply caressed her body lovingly and she closed her eyes in giddiness and rested her head against his shoulder as his arms circled her waist and pulled her close to him with his hand cupped around her firm breast. It was not a touch of a sexual nature, but a confident touch that told her and anyone who saw that Iama was his woman and his mate. It was Aricia who had told her that many Alpha wolves did this at odd times as a means to demonstrate to their mate that their love was absolute and they meant everything to them out of their beds as well as in them.

“I am sorry I have spent so much time with my family Fedor.” She said softly as Fedor’s hand dropped to rest in her lap now.

“That is not something you need to apologize for Iama.” Fedor told her. “They are your family.” Iama lifted her head and looked at him. “But you are my future.” She said softly.

“And you are mine as well.” Fedor said with a smile. “Discovering what you have since they returned has made you so very happy. Especially with your father.”

Iama nodded and looked at the glass of juice in her hands. “I have thought it was him all of these years. I had thought I did something wrong to make him do this to me. All of this time I have hated him and it was tearing me apart inside. To know that all of it was a lie, that he never gave me to those monsters, it is as if years of sadness and anger just washed away.”

Fedor brushed some of her golden hair from her face. “That he loves you greatly is very evident on his face and the way he holds you. You are his only daughter... and I understand that emotion.”

Iama met his dark eyes. “They are my family and I love them... but it... it was you who gave me my life back Fedor my love. It is you who my life moving forward will center upon. Our life together.”

Fedor kissed her softly, Iama shivering in delight at the touch of his lips on hers. “And you are my life as well.” He said.

Iama reached up and stroked his cheek as she gazed into his dark eyes. “You are not angry with him that he...?”

Fedor chuckled and shook his head. “He brought this man because he wanted to show you that he was different.” Fedor answered. “That those with him were different. I understand that.”

“He is nothing to me Fedor. I already made that very clear to my mother.” Iama said quickly.

Fedor smiled again as he looked at her. “I know that.” He said. “You think I am worried about that?”

Iama bit her lower lip and shook her head with a smile. “No... I just don’t want you to hurt him.”

Fedor laughed. “Why would I hurt him?”

Iama’s face became a little serious now. “I know what you are capable of Fedor my love. My father and the others do not. My mother senses it I believe... she has commented on how you carry yourself. Your father and Uncle have taught you and Eirene many things that others will never learn. Your brother Androcles taught you even more when he touched you.” She said evenly. “And your mothers all agree that you have not yet reached your full potential. My love, my heart is yours Fedor Leonidas. Nothing could ever change that.”

Fedor gazed at her and smiled warmly. “I will do nothing unless it is called for Iama. You know that. You have my word on that.”

“I know.” She said softly.

“Then trust in me.” He said. “And let me just hold you while the sun finishes its rise. You need to go to work soon and I just want to hold my treasure for a while longer.”

Iama smiled and lowered her head to his shoulder again, tucking her face against his neck and drawing in a deep breath. Since he had bitten her Iama had noticed her senses had become more acute than they had been and she loved the way he smelled to her. So wild and masculine. She was his treasure. Iama adored when he told her that and she knew within her heart and soul that she could love no one as she did this man. All that she had hoped for and believed she would never have was now hers. She would have the ceremony that she had dreamed of, Fedor and his mothers had promised he that. She would have the future she desired. And it would be with this man. Nothing would take that from her now, and Iama would defend that to her last breath if need be.

“I will make you a special dinner tonight.” She said with a smile. “And you can have me for desert.”

Fedor grinned widely. “Now I like the sound of that.” He said squeezing her even more tightly. “With or without cream?”

Iama laughed at his words. “The cream was kind of messy last time.” She said. “But it was very exciting.”

Fedor chuckled as he pulled her closer. “Cream it is.” He said.

Koguth lower his own mug of coffee as his eyes watched his daughter from across the camp at his own shelter. It was about a hundred and fifty meters from where Iama was by the lake, but his keen eyes allowed him to watch her easily. He sensed Mani come up beside him and he turned to look at his beautiful wife. Koguth was not afraid to tell his wife anything, unlike many Kavalian men, and he had never held anything back from her.

“Her face glows when she is with him.” He said softly.

Mani saw where he had been looking and saw her daughter sitting in Fedor’s lap across the distance. She nodded her head and took the coffee from his hands and sipped it. “She is very much in love with him.” Mani answered. “And he with her.”

“Has she talked of him with you and Corsa?” Koguth asked.

Mani looked at him. “Koguth...”

“I do not ask because I will do something Mani.” He said quickly.

“Jothor came with us expecting to be able to court her and find your favor as he took her as his wife.” Mani said.

Koguth nodded. “I know. I brought him to show her that we were not like those she has had to endure all these years Mani. You know that. I would never force Jothor upon her. It is not my place and I would never do that to her. Besides... it is the Kavalian mothers who assist in choosing a husband for our daughters. He is... he is of Pusintin’s loins though. I... the way he touches her, caresses her so intimately... I...”

Mani returned the coffee to him and stepped closer gripping his arm. “No my husband.” She said. “Iama explained to me what she herself only discovered a short time ago. Something we never knew about Lycavorians. They imprint their children within this Etheric realm they can use to speak with their minds. When they conceive a child in their wombs, that child then reaches for the imprint, the essence left on their mother by their father. Pusintin never did this with Queen For’mya. When Fedor and his twin reached for that essence, they found not one of Pusintin... but the King’s essence on For’mya. That is what they embraced and it helped to shape them even as they grew in her womb. He is no more Pusintin’s son than Nedoli is.”

Koguth looked back across the distance and settled his eyes on them again. He saw Iama lean back and laugh as Fedor snuggled against her neck. He watched her scramble to her feet and then Fedor after and he could hear her joyful laughter as Fedor began to chase her in front of their shelter.

“He looks nothing like Pusintin either.” He said finally.

“He almost died for her Koguth.” Mani said causing him to look at her. “He stepped in front of some kind of grenade during a recent battle with the creatures we saw on that moon. He shielded her from the explosion and was horribly wounded. He almost died. If not for him, our daughter would have fallen.”

“She told you this?” Koguth asked.

Mani nodded. “Corsa and I.” She said. “It... to listen to it was frightening... but also so very romantic.” She reached up and put a hand to his weathered face, her fingers reveling in the feel of his soft fur. “Fedor gave back to our daughter what those monsters took from her my husband. And he did it expecting nothing in return. Iama will not give him up. She told Corsa and I this. She is his wife and mate, and you know well how Lycavorians view their mates my husband.”

Koguth nodded. “Yes I do. The same manner in which I view you Mani.”

Mani smiled and squeezed his hand. “Talk with him before you go with the King to finish that fool Pusintin. Learn about him.”

Koguth nodded his head as he looked back to where Fedor had caught Iama and was holding her off the ground as they kissed deeply, the sounds of his precious daughter’s laughter echoing in the wind. “I intend to my wife. I intend to.”

“...entire Strike Group.” Andro spoke to the images of Denali, Dutkne and Coren Re Mydala in the transmission. The QCR rooms on the SCIMITAR and the ARCH DEMON were completely secure and they had no worries about someone discovering what they were talking about. “We have one stop to make before we form with SPARTA'S WRATH and then depart Dreamland. Once we leave, 341 tells me no more than thirty-six hours. He's plotted a course that will max our engine specs but get us there as quickly as possible.” Andro looked up from the table. “How are things on your end?”

Andro saw Denali look at Coren before turning back to him. He glanced quickly to where Jomann sat beside Dorian and then back to his brother. “Deni?”

“Ardan has the Board of Regents tied down in procedure.” Coren spoke now. “They are still reviewing the information Denali provided to them.”

“Still reviewing?” Andro asked. “It's been nearly two months.”

Coren nodded his head. “I know. I can only apply so much pressure given what we have discovered since returning Androcles. If I attempt to push more, Ardan and his cohorts will begin to suspect that we know more than we actually do. And things have become more precarious for Dyack as well.”

“In what way?” Andro asked.

“It appears those within his government that oppose him may have discovered that he has made contact with the OSG and the slavers.” Coren spoke. “That he is supposedly consorting with them.”

“The son?” Andro asked.

Denali nodded his head and leaned forward in his chair. “His son Anroth is working with the faction that opposes Dyack's rule.” He explained.

“Is that why he isn't with you?” Andro asked.

Deni looked quickly at Dutkne and Coren before turning back to his brother. “Not exactly no.”

“Deni?” Andro insisted.

“Praetor Dyack is upset with how events transpired with Sehri Andro.” Dutkne spoke now. “Upset is probably a gentle term. At the moment... you are not at the top of his list of people he wants to see.”

“Claiming Sehri as you did has caused some issues back here.” Deni told him. “We don't know exactly how he discovered it, but he seems to believe that you forced Sehri into agreeing to be your wife and mate by using your aura in a way that the Rothryn people have suppressed. Making it impossible for her to resist.”

“What?” Andro gasped.

“I tried to explain it to him.” Denali spoke quickly. “So did Dutkne. He wasn't really very open to listening to us.”

“Andro... he must have communicated with someone that came with Lady Aleatia.” Dutkne told him. “Someone that gave him false information.”

Andro looked at Jomann and shook his head. “Harira.” He said. “Or one of Sehri's sisters to be sure.”

“Who else could it be?” Jomann asked. “Lady Aleatia has spent every moment she has been here with your family. There is no way she would believe this or send this information back to him.”

Andro looked back to Denali. “Has he pulled his support?” He asked.

Coren shook his head quickly. “No. He is maintaining his façade, but it grows harder to keep those who wish to challenge him at bay.”

Andro looked at Coren. “Coren Re Mydala do you...”

“NO!” Coren snapped quickly. “By the Prophets no Androcles. I have seen the... I have seen the utter love in my daughter's eyes for you. Caliria aches for you. For all of you. I have seen the brightness of Arduri's face whenever she is with Denali. Whatever I may have thought in the past, the possibility of losing my children forever made me take off the blinders I was wearing for so many years. I have since spent many hours with Denali and Dutkne, with my daughters, learning of your people and your ways. The texts Wayonn left for us that I should have read long ago, they have become my constant companions.”

“We have had to pry him out of those books on more than one occasion.” Dutkne said with a grin.

“I have tried to speak with Dyack about this but he...” Coren began.

Andro shook his head. “Thank you sir... truly... but I will deal with that when we arrive in the Beta Quadrant. That is my place and my duty. Now fill me in on what you aren't telling me Deni. Dutkne?”

Dutkne looked at Deni and smiled shaking his head gently. “I told you it wouldn't work.” He said. “The bond we have as these Praetorians does not let us keep much from each other. He can sense it in my manner.”

“It was worth a shot.” Denali said with a smile. “Even if we had been able to fool him, Lisisa would have figured it out in an instant.”

“Would the two of you mind telling me what exactly is going on?” Andro spoke.

Denali looked at his older brother. “We are being tracked Andro. All of us.” He said simply.

Andro’s eyes grew wider and he leaned closer. “Inamarno?” He hissed.

Coren Re Mydala did an excellent job at hiding the smile he wanted to display. No matter that their entire plan could fall apart, the moment Denali told his brother that they were being followed Androcles’s only concern was for Caliria. The Lycavorian texts he had read were very true it seemed. Their wives and mates meant everything to them and they would not tolerate a threat to them.

Deni held up his hand. “She’s covered Andro. Paga goes where she goes and I have two Drow shadowing her always as back up. She is in school most of the day to finish her degree but Coren has eyes there as well.”

“I have a small detachment on standby within our embassy Andro.” Dutkne added. “If Paga or any of the others call they will act. Caliria, Arduri, Coren and whoever else we mark will be removed from the planet within minutes and taken into Protectorate space.”

Andro sat back after a moment trusting in his brother and his Praetorian Mage and friend. He nodded his head slowly. “Very well.” He said. “How bad is it?”

“The extent of Protectorate involvement is larger than I thought.” Dutkne said. “We have managed to identify all of those who are even remotely connected and when we decide to move they will be dealt with. Harshly.”

“Dutkne... once the merger is complete...” Andro looked at him. “It will be expected that punishment is dealt as it would be in the Union. You realize this?”

Dutkne nodded. “Indeed I do. And I would expect no less. This sort of thing is just as foul to us as it is to our brothers and sisters in the Union Andro.”

Andro nodded. “There is more I take it?”

“As with Dutkne... we have been able to identify most of the Vanari who are involved as well.” Coren spoke.

“Most?” Andro asked.

Coren nodded his head. “Unlike the Protectorate or the Union we are limited in how we go about things really. There are some very highly placed Vanari who know of the slavery ring and they are very good at covering their tracks.”

“Your leader?” Andro asked.

Coren shook his head. “No. I cannot believe Alrerin Sha Harael would ever support this in any way. His oldest daughter was taken by the OSG decades ago and he has held a hatred for them deep in his heart ever since Androcles. He would never actively allow this to continue if he knew of it. I don’t believe that.”

“You are sure Coren?” Andro asked him gently.

Coren Re Mydala met his eyes. “No.” He answered firmly. “But I know how I can find out without anyone becoming the wiser.”

“Do it.” Andro spoke. “And if it is as you believe then it has to be someone very close to him.” Andro asked.

Coren nodded in response. “Yes. I have suspected two of his senior aides since our return and beginning this operation. Both of whom deep have ties to Ardan. They would have all the authority and access to hide everything Ardan and others are doing and they could do it quite easily.”

“We have earned no favor by giving your people the counter agent to the OSG chemicals they used to control Vanari females?” Andro asked. “Surely that must count for something?”

Coren shook his head. “Ardan has many of them believing it is a complete falsehood. Our own doctors and scientists, many of them supporters of Ardan, are still conveniently going over the data provided by your mother and sister.”

“So he has it buried in what... procedure?” Andro asked.

Coren nodded again. “Unfortunately yes.” He leaned forward at the table. “However... I believe it would be immensely positive for us when the time comes Androcles if you can speak with and convince the young women who remained in the Union to return and show the Board of Regents just how effective this counter agent is. At the moment, their refusal to return only lends support to Ardan's argument that this is nothing more than a ruse. And they will not believe anything Caliria tells them because she broke our laws to begin with in beginning her research on this and they will believe what Ardan tells them. And he is nurturing the idea that your people will not allow them to return because the counter agent does not really work and they do not want us to discover this."

Andro sat back in his chair. "Have they tried to bring charges against Inamarno for that?" He asked.

Coren nodded his head. "They tried." He said with firmness in his voice. "I put a stop to that very quickly. As well as those filed against Arduri, Nirilo and Naesta."

Andro nodded his head. "I will ask them Coren... but I will not force them." He told him. "I know that Inamarno's friend... Yssyla I think her name was... she has entered into a serious relationship with a Durcunusaan officer. It would be wrong of me to force them to return."

Coren nodded in response. "I understand." He said. "Perhaps if Caliria talked to her... to them before you leave?"

"I will see to it that the COM codes are sent to Paga via the ARCH DEMON." He said. "We are leaving mid day tomorrow so tell her to contact them very soon."

Coren nodded. "I will."

"What else?" Androcles asked. "There has to be more."

"The OSG apparently has been putting pressure on the Eridiani government to cut ties with the Vanari and the Rothryn." Dutkne spoke now.

"Because of what I did?" Andro said.

Dutkne nodded his head. "We executed nearly a dozen Eridiani citizens." He said. "They do not care that all of them were involved with the slavery ring, only that we acted without their consent. They are beginning to stir up the other species here in the Beta Quadrant. Mainly the Enverr."

"I don't suppose they care that each of them was an OSG agent as well?" Andro said.

Dutkne shook his head. "No."

"Nubou them!" Andro spat. "They are not a threat to us militarily and I will deal with the OSG when I get there. The Eridiani can either pull their support for them or suffer their fate with them."

Dutkne nodded. "My sentiments as well."

"Androcles... you know of course that many of the senior government officials among the Eridiani owe their positions to the OSG." Coren said.

"Too bad." Andro hissed. "I will not dance with them over this sir! If they wish to remain in support of the OSG and their slavery and blackmarket deals then they can damn well suffer the same fate as the OSG!"

"What are you going to do?" Coren asked.

"I will fill you in on that when I arrive." Andro told him. "Coren... can you..."

Coren held up his hand knowing what Androcles was going to ask. "I have already been putting out the feelers to those among our people who I know are more forward thinking than others. Most of them were eager to speak with me because they worshiped Devra and her values. They were wary at first... because of my past views... but once they saw Arduri and Denali together they quickly came on board. We will have support among the masses... I just don't know how much."

"They don't care that I will end all trade with the Vanari if things do not change?" Andro asked.

Coren met his eyes. "They do not believe you will do such a thing." He stated simply. "I have let them cultivate this ideal... though I know you will do exactly as you say. The shock of it happening might be what we need to open eyes Androcles. We are a prideful people... I will admit that. The many hundreds of families all vying for power. If trade with the Protectorate came to a sudden and final end, many would be affected. This would alter their influence in many ways. It might be what we need in order to tip the scales in our favor."

Andro got to his feet slowly. "Sibfla... I hate these political games!" He spat.

"I can't help but agree now." Coren said softly "Even though I have been part of them for decades. In this instance however, we can make these games work in our favor."

"They know when we will arrive?" Andro asked turning back to look at him.

Coren nodded. "They are already prepared to keep the Board of Regents in the capital in order to greet you officially. No doubt this will be when Ardan makes his move."

"And the reaction from the other species that we have not met yet?" Andro asked.

“Unknown at this time.” Dutkne said. “Many of them are not as large in number as the Vanari and the Rothryn... but they covet what the Vanari have built as well as a way into the grand political scheme to make themselves relevant.”

“Like these Enverr?” Jomann asked.

Dutkne shook his head. “The Enverr are nothing more than a collection of clan based pirates, criminals and thugs. They control with fear. They are large but scattered across their space. And the infighting among the clans has always kept them divided and unable to be a major force.”

“Are they a concern Dutkne?” Dorian asked.

Dutkne shook his head slowly. “Not unless a miracle happens and they put aside their differences as clans and come together. I can’t see that happening... but then again... anything is possible.”

“Then we need to be at least wary of them?” Dorian said.

Dutkne nodded again. “I would not take them for granted no. They have been able to cause troubles in the past, just nothing that we or the Vanari could not handle.”

“There is another concern.” Coren spoke once more. “Since the OSG has reached into the Alpha Quadrant... there is no way to tell how far their influence has reached. Or what they have shared with their so called business partners in terms of technology.”

“Brendi is already working on that.” Jomann spoke up. “She has been monitoring several encrypted channels that she knows are used by the OSG. In order to detect any possible links that we may have missed.”

“She would betray her own people?” Coren asked surprised.

Jomann met his eyes but did not take offense at his question. “The OSG are no more her people than the sun is to darkness. She never wanted to be part of them. All she has done is to protect her parents and her sisters. She has seen many things while she has been here that has opened her eyes Regent Re Mydala.” He spoke. “Her own family has become deeply tied to a Lycavorian family here on Earth. Eliani and I are... we are helping her to see that all she has known is not nearly the truth of things. You might be surprised at how quickly she is embracing it.”

That was putting it mildly Jomann knew. He and Eliani were having to fight very hard to keep their feelings for Brendi from coming out. He did not bother to try and understand it or explain it. His closeness with Androcles now, their connection within the Etheric realm, it made him see that they might never be able to explain it. The fact remained that he and Eliani were Anomes and so much more. Andro and Shiria believed that Eliani was his Praetorian Mage for when they were together Jomann never felt more at peace. There were other pieces of evidence that made them think this, Eliani’s ability to draw from him almost without thought being the foremost reason, but as more time passed Jomann began to see that they were correct. The intense sexual draw to Brendi Faith was unmistakable; while the emotional pull was the thing that he and Eliani were beginning to have trouble fighting. They both wanted her in their lives, sharing everything with them. Jomann did not care that Eliani desired Brendi so in such a way, for it only added to Eliani’s own desire and passion for him when they were together. He had no doubt in his mind that when Brendi Faith realized that she wanted them as much as they wanted her, nothing would keep them apart.

Coren took Jomann’s words in stride and nodded his head. “I have changed so I believe that anyone is capable of the same change when they are open enough to see the entire picture.” He told him. “Whatever information she gathers, if you can forward it to us, we can try and see if there is anything we can do on this end.”

Jomann nodded. “Of course.”

Dutkne leaned forward. “Jomann... the way you speak of Eli... it is different than when I was there.” He said.

Jomann nodded his head. Like Andro he would keep nothing from one he considered a Praetorian like himself. They were just beginning to discover each other and they needed to be united in what they did. “Shiria and Androcles share the belief, as I now do, that Eliani serves as my Praetorian Mage as well as my wife and mate.”

“Truly Jomann?” Dutkne spoke. “That would explain a great deal.”

Andro nodded his head. “Shiria also believes that Sheva has become that balance for Dorian.” He added. “And our sister Nara for our brother Deion because they are twins and know each other so well. And Lisisa for you Deni.”

Denali nodded. "That would fit with what she and I feel for each other when we are together." He said.

Dutkne sat back. "Grandfather Wayonn told me once that when Praetorian Warrior and Mage came together it would be almost seamless. Like it was for you and I. It was one of the few things he was very serious about in my instruction. There has to be a reason for this Andro. Why we are discovering each other so quickly."

Androcles nodded. "I believe we will discover that reason when we are able to sit with and talk with Murano and Wayonn together." He said. "For now we must cultivate it and insure that it grows stronger."

"Agreed." Dutkne said. "I can pass to them much of what grandfather taught me through the years when you arrive here."

Andro nodded. "Jomann and I will continue our lessons with Dorian and then with Deion when he joins us tomorrow. For now Deni... maintain what you and Coren are doing. Do not take any unnecessary risks fervon. The endgame with the Vanari is approaching."

Deni nodded. "We won't." He replied. "Give Lisi our love fervon. Tell her we will see her soon and..."

Andro smiled. "I will tell her Deni." He said. "May the spirit of our grandfathers watch over you and those with you until we are together again fervon."

"And you Andro." Denali told him. "And you."

Andro turned from the table and went to the counter and poured himself a mug of coffee and then turned back as everyone mulled over what they had just heard.

"Something tells me that our trip to the Beta Quadrant is not going to be as calm as we had hoped fervon." Dorian finally spoke up.

Andro nodded. "I'm beginning to sense that as well." He agreed as he moved back to the table and sat down. "It is no matter... I will do exactly as I said I will. I will not tolerate a race of people who consider us beneath them. Nor would father."

"That works for me." Jomann spoke. "Arrogant people have never appealed to me in the least. And they appeal even less to Eli."

Andro chuckled. "Yes... our sister got that from our mother." He said with a nod. "They have the dispositions of a Semtoli Pit Viper when confronted with arrogance of any kind."

Jomann reached for his belt when the COM Receiver he wore beeped twice. He glanced at the small readout and then turned to Andro. "Sadi and Eliani are here with the others." He said.

Andro lifted his eyes just as the door to the conference room opened and Sadi led the parade of men and women into the room. Sadi, Ne'Veha, Carisia, Lu'ria and Sehri all came directly over to him and he shared a warm kiss and firm nuzzle with all of them, leaving their eyes closed in bliss for the briefest of moments as they basked in his aura. They quickly took seats in front of where he stood and Andro watched as the others continued to file in. Sheva Juconi immediately moved across the room and sat beside Dorian. While she was still coming to terms of what being Dorian's wife and mate meant, she was growing more accustomed to it as Andro watched her lace her hands around Dorian's upper arm. Eliani went straight to where Jomann sat when she and Brendi entered and they shared a sizzling kiss, her fingers dragging across his face as she held Brendi Faith's hand with the other. They quickly took seats on either side of Jomann at the table. Andro saw Tir'ut enter the room next, he and Cowen'Shan speaking about something as they entered, both of them huge in physical stature. Amazingly, Cowen and Tir'ut hit it off almost from the first moment they had been introduced. Cowen was discovering just how friendly and open other cultures were as he went and Tir'ut had been the first to reach across the divide caused by so much war and it was paying off. Just behind them came Normya and Kameka, both of them holding data pads in their hands and discussing one thing or another, most assuredly about flying. Zarah and Lucia walked in next with the female Lycavorian elf between them.

This was Thr'won's daughter Sherisa. She was the one helping Cowen'Shan to discover his new skills in Mindvoice and doing quite a good job it seemed. Sherisa was Thr'won's oldest daughter with her mate and while her elf ears were only half the size of her mother's because of her dual blood, she had her mother's surreal beauty with white blond hair and pale blue eyes. She had the lush figure of most of the elves born on Earth and not Elear, but easily noticeable as well as the muscular definition of her body. She was a very capable Spartan soldier, having gone through her own Agoge many years ago. It was also well known that while she loved her elven mother, she worshiped her Spartan father. All of the Leonidas children knew her very well because she had often sat with them as children, looking out for them. Thr'won thought her to be the perfect choice for the mission of helping Cowen realize his new talent.

Daio came into the room next with the younger wolf who looked quite nervous and this one Andro watched him intently.

Torian Cedaria was the third son of a Beta Wolf and his wife and mate. His father was well known within the ranks of the Union Fleet for his exploits against the High Coven as well as the Evolli. His father was a Senior Admiral now and though he was not an Alpha wolf, he was extremely well liked and trusted by Riall. They had fought together many times in one battle or another against the High Coven and Riall trusted him completely. He commanded a Border Interdiction Sector Division, the one that now guarded the border near Gellen Station and the closest Kavalian border to the Union. He had been one of the first wolves to take a second name when this became popular shortly after Martin returned as King, and that name was now very recognizable. Torian had two brother and two sisters, all of them older than him, and all of them serving proudly within the Union military just as their father and mother did. Defending the Union was in the blood of their family.

Torian was of medium height, perhaps five foot ten at the most, but Andro saw instantly that there was not an ounce of fat on his body anywhere. He had a powerful physique, and while not as thick or defined as himself or Jomann for example; he was in superior physical condition. His was more of a lean and explosive physical build, which suited his skills as a scout. Andro had spoken to his instructors personally, and his commanding officer was very upset to see him transferred. He was two years older than Andro, with almost boyish good looks, and he was known as turning out some of the most lethal scouts within the ranks of the Union. He had been born within weeks of Earth becoming part of the Union, and his early training had come at the hands of Lycavorians who had lived in Sparta all of their lives and many Drow trainers that had begun to pass on their superior skills at the King's request. Two of his Drow instructors, now commanding full fledged Recon Units within the Union Fleet, could not praise him enough. His respect for their methods and their culture had earned him much admiration with the Drow and this was something that carried over wherever he went. Torian was a senior instructor now himself, until Andro had pulled him from this assignment.

Daio was trying to put Torian at ease, but the young man had never been among so many of the Royal family at once. He had never even been this close to one of them let alone almost a dozen.

Jomann looked over his shoulder at Andro. [It will work out Andro.] He said. [He truly has no idea what is going on. Daio agrees.]

Andro looked at him. [The young woman who has been giving the information to Ulana and the others?]

[A friend of their family for many decades. She helped to raise him and he considers her a valued friend.] Jomann answered. [They do not know of her support for Ulana and Icho however. She has kept that very well hidden.]

[Makes you wonder why doesn't it?] Andro asked.

[I'd say we have our answer.] Jomann spoke. [When he became Durcunusaan, her long friendship with the family made her stock to Icho's people go way up. I'm sure Ulana knows all about him... or at least some of it. I don't know how deeply involved she is though. That may take some doing to discover.]

[Ulana is not as smart as she likes to think.] Andro said. [I wouldn't be surprised if she had no idea where her information is coming from.]

[Very true.] Jomann agreed.

[I am beginning to severely dislike that man Jomann. And the way he manipulates other people.] Andro told him.

Jomann smiled. [I won't tell you what Eli thinks of him then. Or what she thinks we should do to him.]

Andro chuckled. [I think I can imagine.] Andro saw Daio and Torian finally take seats at the table and he took a deep breath. [Let's get this party going.] He said.

He turned back to those at the table. "Ok... everyone... we are all here with the exception of Ridor and his mate Cvea, and Denali and Arduri. Ridor and Cvea will join us enroute to Dreamland as will my sister Carina and Moneus. Carina will remain on the SCIMITAR and become our operational liaison while Moneus has been promoted and will handle all security for the Strike Group. Carina is a skilled fighter but nowhere near as much as Zarah and Lucia or Carisia and Lu'ria. Her skills reside in operations and thinking outside the box. That is what she will handle. I have gathered us here so that we can begin to know one another.” Andro settled into the chair between Sadi and Lu'ria. “For lack of a better term, we will make up the command team. All of you in this room and Ridor and Cvea when they join us, all of you will have direct and unlimited access to me or to my father and mothers. To begin with... from this moment on... none of you will refer to me as Prince or sire or any of that other sibfla. I am simply Andro. I believe I can speak for Dorian, Denali and my sisters as well when I say we hate the titles.”

“Avoi.” Eliani spoke.

“Damn straight.” Dorian said.

Andro chuckled softly and nodded his head. “I have broken us into two smaller teams for simple ease of coordination. I have been known to get into my share of trouble so there will not be a lack of action I can assure you. I have a habit of upsetting a certain type of people... go figure.”

“I’m sure it has nothing to do with your wise and tactful way of speaking to those certain types of individuals Andro.” Tir'ut was the one to comment and they all laughed softly. Normya leaned into her husband with a beaming face at his words.

“Of course not.” Eliani commented sarcastically. “That’s why I am always patching his mida up.”

Andro smiled and nodded his head. “I will admit... I have a rather abrasive nature when dealing with...”

“Almost everyone?” Jomann offered.

Andro looked at him. “This is not gang up on Andro day.” He stated.

“But it is so much fun fervon!” Zarah commented with a small laugh.

“I seem to recall many moments as you were growing up that warned of this behavior Androcles.”

Sherisa spoke for the first time.

“You do not need to review them now Sherisa.” Andro protested.

Sadi leaned forward and looked at him with adoring eyes. “Listening about your antics when you were younger might be fun Saradasaar.” She said while batting her jungle green eyes at him.

“I would like to hear them as well.” Sehri spoke quickly with a bright smile.

“So would I.” Lu'ria commented.

Andro shook his head and sat back. “Very well... Sherisa... feel free to enrapture us with my deeds as a boy. Most of which I can’t even remember.”

“Rensibfla!” Sherisa spat playfully. “What about the time you tried to pluck the feathers from the Acamarian Ambassador? You planned that right down to the last detail if I recall. It’s when your mothers knew you were going to be trouble.”

“Saradasaar... we have not seen this memory.” Sadi declared.

Sherisa laughed. “I’m not surprised. It’s not one of his more glorious moments.”

“I succeeded!” Andro hissed.

Sherisa laughed. “But you plucked a quarter of his wing!” She spoke.

Ne'Veha couldn’t help but lean forward with a huge smile on her face. “Tell us.” She said.

Andro shook his head slowly. “I’m never going to live this down.” He said.

PRALOR DESIGNATED WORLD MANNE

“...better?” Aricia asked Serale as she lowered her hands from the sides of her head.

Serale was holding Aricia’s forearms and she nodded quickly, her dark green eyes wide in wonder.

“The... the echoes are gone!” She gasped.

Aricia smiled and stepped back slightly from the examining table Serale sat on. “We have discovered many different ways to help those who are recently changed.” She said. “It was the Feravomir who discovered that it was an easier conversion when the individual was assisted by someone more experienced.”

Ceale stood beside the table, both of her hands resting on Serale's leg as she gazed at her daughter. "What... what does that mean Milady?" She asked Aricia.

Aricia looked at her. "We are now family Lady Ceale. Please... we expect our family to drop the pretense of royalty when it is just us."

"Yes we do." Dysea spoke stepping up to the table and holding out the glass of strong red juice. "Drink this Serale Leonidas ... it is filled with nutrients and vitamins and will quickly help to energize your system."

Serale took the glass without question and sipped the sweet, berry tasting fluid. "The... the throbbing is almost gone." She said looking at Aricia.

Aricia nodded. "And it will fade completely in a short time." She looked at Ceale. "I have reinforced your daughter's new Etheric shields Ceale."

"Etheric shields?" Ceale asked.

Anja stepped up next to her and held out the data pad for Ceale. "This might better help you to understand Ceale." She said with a smile. "Essentially... Serale has become one quarter wolf. We sensed this last night when Kalis bit her. It is why we brought both of you here this morning."

"Do not let Melyanna fool you Ceale." Dysea spoke again as she reached up and pushed a strand of Serale's hair from her cheek. "Aricia detected Serale the moment she became like us and Anja shortly thereafter. For'mya, Cirith and I did not feel her until this morning. Both of them are far stronger with their Etheric abilities than the rest of us. Ours tend to be more latent in activity."

Ceale looked up from the pad and gazed at Anja. "She is... Serale is now like you my Queen?" Ceale gasped.

"Mother... it is wondrous!" Serale exclaimed. "You smell... you smell like Roltulian orchids mother!"

"Kalis may only be half Lycavorian..." Anja explained. "But that Lycavorian half is far more potent than most people realize. His father may be a colossal shit head, and his remaining days of life are very numbered, but the blood that flows in his foul veins is some of the purest Lycavorian blood ever recorded in history. With that kind of purity, it will always dominant whatever other blood Kalis may have in his body. In this case his Kavalian blood."

Ceale looked at the data pad again. "So she will become... she will be like you?"

Anja nodded. "In a manner of speaking yes. She will be able to shift her form, take on some of Kalis's traits, and have the Lycavorian senses and rapid healing. It won't be as potent as me for example, because Kalis is only half Lycavorian."

Ceale tapped on the pad. "And her Mutative processing of the nebula radiation around our world will remain unchanged?"

Anja nodded her head. "The Absorption Rating and Coefficient will actually increase somewhat because once the Lycavorian cells have finished bonding with her Hadarian cells they will form a shield of sorts. It will allow her to go longer periods without having to Ascend and she will have the healing power of someone decades older than she is."

"Mother I am still me!" Serale declared.

Anja took Ceale's hand in hers. "Ceale... do you trust me?" She asked. "Do you trust us?"

"Milady... Anja... you..." Ceale looked quickly at Aricia and Dysea and then back to Anja. "You are my queens. How could I not?"

"Trust us now." Anja said. "Believe me when I tell you that if Kalis was not different than his fool father Martin would have sensed it immediately."

"His scent permeates your daughter deeply Ceale." Aricia said. "No Lycavorian... no matter how powerful he is... no Lycavorian male could fake the scent of his devotion to one he has chosen as his wife and mate. Kalis has completely embraced the wolf blood within him, the blood of his family, and it comes out in Serale. We as female wolves can smell it easily, for it is the same thing that flows from within our blood and it comes from Martin. Kalis worships your daughter Ceale. That is not a scent you can hide or duplicate."

Ceale looked at her daughter and saw the brightness of her face and her beautiful eyes. She felt tears well up in her eyes. "Then she will have something that I never did." Ceale said softly.

Serale nearly burst out in tears and reached for her. "Oh mother." She gasped.

Aricia looked at Anja. [Do we tell her?] She asked.

[Melda Min?] Anja asked looking at Dysea.

Dysea met their gazes. [If she fights it... denies it... then she may never recover from what that ronnus did. Do either of you question what you see when he looks at her?]

[Not a chance.] Anja answered quickly. [His desire for her is intense and it isn't just a casual thing. Before Athani... before everything we have learned up until now about the Kavalian people... I would have said no. Not anymore. Have you seen the way Koguth treats Mani, or how his other son treats his wife? You cannot fake that.]

[No... you cannot.] Aricia said. She nodded. [You two stay with Serale... Kalis will be coming for her soon. Their meeting is finished as you all know. I will take Ceale and we will talk. I am best suited to show her what the inner hatred she has for herself will do if she does not let it leave her.]

[Aricia...] Anja said stepping closer to her.

Aricia settled her azure eyes on Anja with a smile of warmth and love. She turned and looked at Dysea as she stepped closer to them until their bodies were touching. [I had you and Dysea and For'mya and Bella to help me rid myself of any lingering doubts after the man we so love reclaimed me. Ceale needs that now. She needs to understand that the one who can help her to purge all of the demons she feels is right in front of her.]

[Take her and walk with her then. Make her see.] Dysea said.

[Just don't be late.] Anja said with a grin. [Remember... he has carefully planned six hours of worship and I want to see what he has invented. He promised us we wouldn't be disappointed.]

Aricia grinned. [Worship I intend to partake of greatly.]

[I love it when you talk dirty.] Anja said.

The three of them brought their heads together until they were touching and their arms squeezed each other around their waists.

[We are so blessed.] Dysea spoke softly. [To have Nauta Melme and each other.]

[Avoi.] Anja whispered. [Even if we have to hit him in the head every now and then.]

They all laughed within their connection. [But what pleasures we have after we hit him.] Aricia spoke.

[So true.] Dysea agreed. [So true.]

[I will see you all this afternoon.] Aricia said as she leaned forward and kissed first Anja and then Dysea.

Serale gazed into his blue eyes and she could feel the warmth of his aura surrounding her as he stood in front of her on the table their foreheads touching. It was like a warm breeze in the air chasing away all the chills. His fingers traced her cheeks and neck and sent tiny shivers of happiness coursing all across her skin. Kalis for his part could not tear his eyes from her beauty, the silkiness of her skin and her staggering cinnamon and cheery scent which was maddening to him now.

“Hey!” Anja’s voice broke into their reverie. “Enough of that!”

Kalis blinked several times and suddenly his face became red under his tan and he turned his head to look at Anja as she came up to the table. Serale couldn’t help but giggle at his lost expression and she gripped his arm tightly pulling him closer to her on the table.

“Forgive... forgive me Tenna Anja.” Kalis stammered.

Anja smiled brilliantly at him and shook her head. She and For'mya had seen it within him first. Aricia had been a harder sell because of the pureness of her blood, but after a few weeks even she could not deny what Martin had sensed in Kalis from the very beginning. The brightness of new life and discovery was very evident on his handsome face. What he had finally been exposed to when Martin had given him the P1 had lifted the veil of oppression and hate his father had covered him in. Kalis had indeed embraced completely the wolf blood within him, relishing in the new emotions and sensations that he could now feel. The first and strongest reason for that was Serale and Anja and the others had seen that immediately the first time they had seen them together. No man who was wolf could fake the spike in Kalis’s scent whenever Serale was near him or he held her in his arms. It was a scent of devotion and love and it was very similar to what they all felt when they were near Martin.

Anja gripped his arm and squeezed tightly. “Don’t apologize.” She said quickly. Anja held up two data pads. “I have two pads for you.” She stated. “The first is what I want Serale to do over the course of the next few days. What to eat and drink to facilitate a more complete and cohesive change within her. The change is different for everyone, but this is a general guideline that seems to work across the board. Aricia added some exercises for the both of you to do with each other to make your Etheric connection stronger.”

Serale took the pad. “Will I need to change my diet drastically?” She asked.

Anja shook her head. “No. Perhaps add a little more meat based on what you told me, but you are very healthy Serale.” She answered. “Iama can work wonders with any kind of food so go to her. You should talk to her about different items foods you like and see what she can do. Remember, your sense of taste is going to increase dramatically, so foods you are used to might taste differently. They might even not taste good anymore at all. Experiment.”

“When will I be able to shift?” Serale asked excitedly.

“Don’t rush that. Kalis will tell you the first few times can drain you of strength until you get used to it.” Anja said. “I wouldn’t try for at least a week. And definitely no sex.”

Serale’s green eyes went wide at this. Kalis had been the first man she had ever slept with and to say it had been a glorious experience beyond anything she could have ever imagined was an understatement. “You... you are not serious?” She gasped.

Anja couldn’t help but laugh at the expression on Kalis’s face as well as Serale’s. He looked embarrassed while Serale actually looked disappointed. Anja shook her head finally. “No.” She said. “Just wait for a day. Let the change begin to assert itself before you two tire each other out.”

Serale looked at Kalis with bright green eyes and Anja saw smoldering passion and desire in them. She smiled inwardly at this. Serale had described some of what they had done to Anja, Aricia and Dysea, until they had to stop her before they went looking for Martin. It seemed that Kalis, while not very experienced himself, had taken much time simply exploring and learning of the young woman who now ruled his heart. It had caused Serale to scream out in delight for several hours at least. When the moment had finally come, Serale told them she had slipped into a realm of otherworldly pleasure and had not returned until this very morning. Seeing the look on her face as she talked, Anja, Aricia and Dysea concluded then that there were no more doubts to hold on to when it concerned Kalis.

“A whole day? That long?” Serale complained softly.

“Serale!” Kalis gasped turning an even brighter shade of red under his dark tan.

“I’m not ashamed of what you make me feel!” Serale stated. “I want to scream it out to everyone!”

“Nor am I ashamed of what you make me feel.” Kalis answered taking her hands within his. “We do not need to broadcast it to the universe however.”

Anja chuckled again. “Don’t worry. Everyone will see it and smell it right away.” She said holding out the second pad. “This is for you Kalis. A message.”

Kalis took the pad. “Message?” He asked puzzled. “From who?”

“Andro.” Anja told him. “He requested that you watch it in private. Just you. Must be a male thing.” She said with a smile.

Kalis tucked the pad into his fatigue pants quickly. “Thank you Tenna.” He said softly.

“Ok...” Anja told them. “I want to see you again in two days and...” They all turned when the door to the portable building opened and they saw the Pralor Daron enter. His eyes searched for and found Anja quickly and his smile grew wider. He held up the bundle of bright yellow flowers in his hand.

Kalis took an immediate dislike to the man based on his scent alone, and while he was not as strong within Mindvoice as some others, he could easily feel the resonance of what this man was generating. His fists clenched almost instantly and he felt Serale grip his arm even tighter.

[It is alright Mandri.] Anja reached for him easily. [Calm yourself.]

[Tenna Anja he...] Kalis snarled within the connection, easily including Serale as Anja had erected shields around all three of them. [He radiates... lustful thoughts about you! Even I can sense that! He brazenly attempts to court you knowing that you are mated! He dishonors you with...]

[He fancies himself superior to all of us mandri.] Anja told him. [He thinks his pitiful attempts at influencing my actions have gone unnoticed. He is trying to seduce me so that he can add another notch in his stick and show others we are nothing more than the primitives they believe us to be.]

[Uncle Martin is allowing this?] Kalis gasped.

Anja looked at him. [Martin doesn't know. And he must not find out. We want to teach him a lesson not have your uncle butcher the fool.]

[You and my other aunts...] Kalis's eyes grew a little wider with the realization of what Anja was saying. [You are baiting him?]

Anja nodded her head. [Yes we are. He seems to have focused on me for some reason and...]

[Well... you are very beautiful my Queen.] Serale said softly. [And many in the past have mistaken your petite size for weakness.]

[Yes... well... I can be a real upaee when I want to be. Daron here will learn the hard way how we Spartans view what he is trying to do. When the time is right we will slap him down like the fool he is.] Anja said. [We are simply letting him hang himself.]

Kalis nodded his head in approval. [I see.] He said. [I must remember to never make you or my other Aunts angry with me.] He said.

[Us?] Anja declared. [We never get angry. We hate violence or any kind of disagreement that makes others unhappy.]

Even Serale could not contain the soft chortle that escaped her throat when Anja said that. She knew well that Anja had perhaps the most explosive temper of all the Queens when pushed past her limit of patience and tolerance. That was well known across the Lycavorian Union by everyone. Serale remembered one of her instructors on Hadaria, he was a senior Healer who had served in the fleet for decades and who adored the Queen, he likened making Queen Anja angry to willingly allowing an Algolian Telaxian Panther to bite you countless times. It was a very severe pain that would remain with you for a very long time.

[We are not supposed to believe that are we?] Serale asked.

Anja chuckled. [Hell no.] She said. [Go on. Both of you get out of here. And remember what I told you.]

Kalis glared at Daron for a moment longer as Serale got off the table and then she took his arm and pulled him towards the other exit. Anja turned to Daron and made a show of glancing around the interior before moving over to where he stood.

“What... what are you doing here?” Anja asked innocently.

Daron held up the bundle of flowers. “I brought these for you.” He answered.

“Daron... are you crazy!” Anja exclaimed. “Bringing these to me here? If someone saw you come in...?”

“I'm not afraid of anyone.” Daron stated proudly. “I wanted to bring you flowers to try and brighten your day. You have been in here almost all morning working.”

Anja met his eyes. “You have been watching me?” She asked.

“I prefer the term looking out for you.” He stated as he stepped closer to her, looking down into her face. “Someone of your beauty should not be kept inside.”

Anja allowed a soft smile to cross her face as she took the flowers from him and he drew his fingers along the back of her hand and then down her arm. His touch made Anja's skin crawl but she was playing a part and given his ego she knew he would think her reaction was something else entirely. “Thank you... but you shouldn't have risked that.”

“Anja... you are not happy in your current life.” Daron said softly as he reached up to touch her cheek. “That is obvious in your expressions and the way you carry yourself.”

Anja looked down shyly. “It shows that much?” She said softly.

“To someone who cares about you... yes.” Daron answered.

[Melyanna... this fool is going to make me vomit.] Dysea's voice burst into Anja's head and she had to fight to keep from laughing. She was not keeping this conversation from her fellow Queens and lovers.

“Caring about me is probably not a very healthy thing.” Anja said looking at Daron.

“I am not afraid of Leonidas.” Daron boasted. “And he cannot deny that he neglects you and the others for the dark haired one you call Aricia. Neglecting you is nothing short of a huge crime.”

[I have changed my mind.] Isabella's voice echoed. [I want to cut his nor off now.]

[Bella... mind your temper.] Aricia's voice chimed in.

[He thinks he is so smooth.] For'mya's voice commented.

[He will be real smooth when I finish with him!] Isabella retorted. [He will have nothing dangling between his puny legs smooth!]

Anja could hear her lovers and fellow queens laughing within their private connection and Daron mistook her smile as a sign that she liked his comment to her.

“Are you alright Anja?” He asked finally.

Anja took the flowers and smiled. “No one... no one has given me flowers in many years that’s all.” She said sweetly. “Thank you Daron.”

Daron smiled at her and silently couldn’t believe how easy this was going to be. He did not even have to manipulate her surface thoughts in order for her to be agreeable to him. This idiot Leonidas must have truly been ignoring his so called Queens for one to be so open to another man coming on to her as he was. Taking her answer as a sign he was doing something right he lifted his hand and stroked her cheek with his fingers even more brazenly. She really was an exquisitely beautiful woman and he was going to thoroughly enjoy using her delicious body as much as he was able. It was a shame he could not get one of the others to join them. All of them had perfect bodies, the type he could use for days on end.

“What can I do for you Anja?” He asked. “Name it and I will do it.”

[Carians... why doesn't he just come out and say he wants to nubou you senseless!] Cirith snarled now. [Are men so obvious as this igord?]

Anja looked at him making her face display an expression of hopefulness. “Meet me.” She said softly.

“Where and when?” Daron asked instantly.

“Tomorrow night.” Anja told him. “He will be gone by then. The others will be sleeping. Meet me here.”

“Done.” Daron said. He leaned over quickly to kiss her but Anja was faster and she pushed her hand against his chest stopping him.

“He will smell you.” Anja said. “I am in Phase. My most fertile time. If... if we wait until tomorrow then it won’t matter because you will have... you will have claimed me.”

Daron’s eyes grew wider at this knowledge. “He will not be... he will not be able to do anything?” He asked.

Anja shook her head. “Not according to our laws. If you... if you take me when I am in Phase before he does then I will be yours. He cannot go against our laws. You... you do want me don’t you?” She asked him softly, her jade green eyes bright and filled with the promise of pleasures Daron could have with her.

“Never doubt that.” He answered her.

“Tomorrow night then? Here?” Anja asked.

Daron smiled. “I will be here.” He said.

“I will... I will make you feel things you have never felt before.” Anja spoke in the most seductive voice she could muster while still keeping a straight face.

[Anja Leonidas you slut!] For'mya declared while barely maintaining control of her own laughter.

“I can and will say the same thing.” Daron commented. “Until tomorrow night then.”

Anja leaned up on her tip toes and pressed her lips to his cheek. His scent was almost repulsive to her but she forced herself to continue. “Do not be late.” She whispered before drawing back and looking at him.

“I won’t be.” Daron said with a smile.

Anja watched him turn, his ego swelling beyond measure as he walked out of the small building. The moment the door closed behind him Anja snorted in a rather unladylike fashion forcing herself to keep from spitting on the floor. “Carians... he smells like week old dog shit under that hideous perfume he wears!” She declared. “Which one of you is closest? I need to kiss one of you!”

[I will be there in moments.] Cirith spoke.

Anja turned and tossed the flowers into the waste compactor forcefully. “What is the plan now?” She asked to the open air. “Sibfla... I felt like puking all over him.”

[Plan?] Isabella spoke. [Simple. We cut off his tiny cock... you heal him and then let him watch us as we pleasure each other in front of him. You know he would like nothing better than to have more than one of us and prove he is a better man than our Blessed Husband.]

[Ohhh... I like that plan.] Dysea commented.

[Better than Martin?] For'mya spoke. [Is that even possible?]

[Never!] Anja and Aricia’s voices chimed in simultaneously with the rest of them in reply. She turned as the door opened and she saw the flash of black hair as Cirith blurred into the room. She stepped into Cirith’s embrace without hesitation and their lips came together in a blistering kiss of passion. Anja inhaled deeply of Cirith's brownsugar scent, her hands gripping Cirith's tight ass while their tongues danced a sweet tango. After a moment they pulled apart and Anja smiled up at her. "Yummy." She said softly. "I needed that."

Cirith grinned. "It was my pleasure." She said.

"We can't hurt him." Anja said. "Even as much as I would like too."

[Spoilsport.] Bella echoed in their heads.

"We can scare him however." Cirith said holding Anja's hand as they moved to the small table.

[Scare him so badly that his cock shrivels up and falls off on its own?] For'mya asked. [I like that idea.]

[So do I.] Aricia said.

[How do we do that?] Anja asked them now. [He won't scare easily considering he even began to start hitting on me so openly.]

[We do what comes naturally.] Aricia said. [We allow our possessiveness of Martin to rule our actions.]

For'mya laughed now. [Aricia my love... that might cause him to abstain from trying to bed any woman altogether.]

[And that is a bad thing how?] Dysea asked. [If we can save another woman from his putrid attempts to bed them, it will be worth it.]

[Agreed.] Isabella said. [I still like my plan better though.]

[Have we stopped to consider that Martin might already be aware of what this igord is trying to do?]

Cirith asked softly.

There was a long pause as Anja looked at her and the others contemplated what Cirith had said. [Daron is no fool.] Anja said. [He has done nothing in front of Martin.]

[After everything that has happened with Aricia and For'mya and Dysea, do we believe that Martin does not sense what Daron is doing?] Isabella asked softly. [As powerful as he has become...]

[If he suspects...] Aricia interjected. [If he suspects and he has done nothing it is because he trusts in us to resolve the problem.]

[Atropos told me once... a long time ago...] Anja spoke. [He told me that there are many men who have... tried to face him through the years. Tried to force him to give one of us up. They all failed miserably. He also knows that we have dealt with many fool men ourselves over that same time. As well as the occasional stupid upae that has tried to entice Martin into her bed through the years.]

[Nauta Melme knows.] Dysea finally spoke. [His love for each of us is absolute. As ours is for him. There is no middle ground. He also knows that we are all strong individually, but even more powerful united as we are. Would any of us... how could any of us ever wish for something other than Nauta Melme? What he makes us feel... each of us... no man could ever make us feel that.]

[Impossible.] For'mya said.

[I can't even calculate the odds of that ever happening.] Isabella echoed.

[He knows what Daron is doing.] Dysea continued. [And he undoubtedly senses we have it well in hand. Had Daron acted more brazenly or used his Etheric powers in a different way than Martin would have dealt with him in the manner of our people.]

[You know... sometimes it is downright frustrating not to be able to predict what the man we all love will do. Even after all this time together.] For'mya stated.

[We will discuss that later.] Anja spoke with a laugh. [Cirith and I will meet you all in ten minutes for breakfast. Or lunch.]

[We will be there.] For'mya said.

[I will be a little late. I am still with Ceale.] Aricia said. [Save me a seat.]

[Always.] Isabella chimed in. [See you soon.]

Anja looked at Cirith. "Shall we? I need to smell some of Iama's steak dumplings in order to get his foul stench out of my nose."

Cirith smiled. "Follow me."

CRANAE ISLAND

The moon was three quarters full and he would not see another full one for some time. It was high in the night sky casting a breathtaking glow across the calm waters of the Laconian Gulf. Andro held the mug of coffee in his hand as he stood on the edge of his villa's patio. His bare feet relished in the feel of the cool sand and the soft scent of the ocean breeze caressed his exposed upper body as he wore only his normal loose fitting work out pants and nothing else. He lifted his eyes skyward as he heard Elynth's soft laughter in his mind as she darted among the stars with her beloved dragon mate Anthar. He could feel the calm resonance of Sadi and the others as they slept soundly in each other's arms in their Master Bedroom. Twice they had to enlarge the bed in their room, until finally Andro had commissioned one that could fit them all with extra space. The size meant they had to rearrange their bedroom, expanding its size, but the work was already done and knowing they could all sleep comfortably either entwined within each other's embrace or singly meant more to them. Andro had never been able to sleep before a large operation kicked off and with so much going on at once here on Earth and so far away, sleep had not even entered his mind for this night.

Andro turned when he smelled her unique scent and he watched as she left the inside of the villa and moved towards him. She held a tall glass in her own hand and the thin, almost transparent robe did nothing to hide her lush figure. Her black hair was longer than he thought he remembered it to be, but it suited her.

"Narice." He spoke softly.

"Couldn't sleep?" She asked as she came up beside him.

Narice Leonidas met Andro's azure colored eyes with confidence. A year ago she would have trembled at the piercing look those eyes could take and she would never have seen herself like this. It was amazing what the love of a man and a new found purpose could do for a person. A year ago Narice most certainly would not have been so open about how she was dressed at this moment. She wore only a pair of white, thong panties and no bra under the robe, her large breasts proudly on display under the thin fabric, but she knew without even thinking that this would not matter to Andro. Narice knew that Sadi and the others hardly wore undergarments at all under their robes anymore. While the only man who would ever see hers and Toria's most secret treasures was their beloved husband Arrarn, neither of them were shy any longer about wearing clothes that accented both their ample chests. She and Toria had long ago done away with the more oppressive way of dressing, especially in the company of their half elf and half wolf husband, and she took great pleasure in knowing this caused many of the older purebloods to have fits or disgust.

Narice's shameless love of Arrarn and Toria had changed her over the course of the last year of time and she was no longer shy about showing who she was now. And among Arrarn Leonidas's family, her family now as well, Narice felt more at home and at peace than at any moment in her life before this time. The road had not been easy or without great cost, but it was a road she walked now with poise. She was Empress of the High Coven and also a Princess of the Lycavorian Union, but secretly she relished her role as Princess much more. She was a child of both worlds now and she savored that knowledge and basked in what it meant for her future.

Andro smiled at her. "I have never been able to sleep before a deployment." He spoke turning back to look out over the sand and water. "What about you? Why are you awake at this hour?"

Narice chuckled softly. "Your brother's snores chased from me our bed." She said with a smile.

Andro echoed her laugh. "He has been able to do that to all of us at some point through the years." He stated. "It doesn't wake Toria?"

Narice smiled again. "I think she has worked harder than all of us these last weeks and when she is tired... a Plasma torpedo going off next to her could not wake her."

"Good." Andro said looking at her. He held out his hand. "Walk with me sister... and let us speak with each other of the future." He said. Narice didn't hesitate and she slipped her hand into his as they moved out further onto the sand and began moving along the beach towards the water. "No Ventash'ma... no Spartan Senate members and without my Tenna Deia." Andro told her as he squeezed her hand gently and looked at her as they walked. "Tell me how are things going?"

Narice met his gaze as the sand tickled her feet while they walked. The ocean breeze was like delicate flowers being brushed across her skin. The young man before her was an enigma of the highest order to so many people. He was younger than her by three or four years, she didn't know exactly, yet in his eyes and in his heart he carried the knowledge and experiences of three lifetimes, just as his father did. It was a span of time that went back nearly forty thousand years if what she knew was accurate. She had heard others speak of Androcles Leonidas in whispers and hushed conversation; how he always seemed to know things. How he could seem to sense what others were thinking or feeling. It was very unnerving to be around at first, but Narice had grown far more relaxed and supremely happy since their first meeting, and it was because of his brother Arrarn. He had spoken of his brother many times as the three of them laid in their bed and just talked of different things. Arrarn adored his older brother, loved him and trusted him more than anyone except his two vampire wives. And after his actions with Queen For'mya, Arrarn would never doubt or not believe in what Androcles held in his heart. Narice knew she could not lie to Androcles, he would see right through it, and she really had no reason to lie to him anyway. Without his help the High Coven would be nothing but a memory now.

“Better than I had hoped Andro.” Narice said finally. “Those Ventash'ma who doubted in the beginning have seen the truth. All of them are fully behind what we are doing. I didn't think it could happen at first, but it has.”

“There is no dissent?” Andro asked.

“We disagree on many things... I won't lie.” She answered with a small smile. “But now we sit until we have reached a compromise. And always with the future foremost in our minds and deeds.”

Andro sipped his coffee before looking at her as they walked. The moon lit up the beach easily but neither of them needed the moonlight to see. They could also see the Durcunusaan soldiers moving discretely in the distance with them. Mixed in among the Durcunusaan were half a dozen of Narice's own security detachment of three Immortals and three Pureblood vampire commandos chosen by Pontal himself. While these last days on the island had been the first time they had been able to fully lower their alertness when watching Narice, none of them had been idle. They had spent hours with the Durcunusaan learning new ways to secure their new Empress, while the Immortals among her detachment enjoyed immensely the respect and honor they were shown by the Lycavorians. A respect and honor earned in combat by Cha'talla, his brother T'lolt and his sons Tir'ut and Lynom. A respect and honor that they returned to the Lycavorians without question.

“And what of the Pureblood families?” Andro asked her softly seeing her head turn and her eyes lift to meet his.

“You... you know about them?” She asked surprised. Narice instantly smiled and shook her head. “Of course you know about them.” She said. “Arrarn?”

Andro shook his head with a smile. “My brother loves you far too much Narice. He trusts you completely. He would never go behind your back to report to me. I would not let him. He is somewhat naïve however, to the way politics works.” Andro answered.

“Cha'talla then.” Narice said softly. “I should have known. He worries so.”

“What you are doing means just as much to the Akruvian people as it does yours.” Andro told her. “You are tied together for all time. More so now. Success for you and what you are doing means success for the Immortals as well. He knows it. They all know it.”

“And that means a great deal to me.” Narice said. She took a deep breath. “There are... there are some who cling to the old ways Andro. There will always be those who will fight to keep change from taking place no matter how much it benefits our people as a whole. All they care for is their own status among the others. You know this better than most.”

“Yes I do.” He said. “Is that why they are pressuring you to take a Pureblood vampire as your husband? To have a child with this Pureblood in order to maintain the purity of the High Coven and its leadership.” Andro asked.

Narice nodded her head. “It is almost... it is almost shameful.” She said.

“You have nothing to be ashamed for Narice.” Andro told her.

“It is shameful for them.” Narice countered. “To still cling to an outdated ideal in order to assure their own power. They say he is too young for me. That he is a half breed. That he is not even a Pureblood wolf.”

Andro nodded his head. “Something I know well.” He said. “And believe me when I tell you, our father's blood will always be dominant within us. No matter what.”

“They say I can keep Arrarn as my consort.” Narice said with some distaste in her voice. “That I can keep him as a plaything. But that I must marry a pureblood in order to keep our history intact.”

“So I understand.” Andro spoke softly. “It is always about history and keeping the old ways going. Even though they have no place in the present or the future.”

Narice looked at him quickly. “Andro you don’t think I would actually consider such a thing do you?”

“My tenna Deia has told me there are many things that we have to do... that we do not want to do... in order to accomplish our ultimate goals. I have always hated that particular thing about politics.” Andro stated. “But to answer your question, no, that thought never crossed my mind Narice.” He assured her confidently. “I have seen the way you look at my brother... the way he looks at you. You both may love Toria deeply... and she loves you... and she is meant to share in your lives... but it is the two of you who are destined to be together Narice. Just as Sadi and I were destined to be together with Carisia and Ne’Veha and Lu’ria and Inamarno and Sehri. Just as Zarah and Lucia were destined, as Jomann and Eliani were so destined. It is not something you can deny or run from in the end. Believe me... I tried for a long time. As did my father. Neither of us succeeded.”

“When... when did you know?” She asked him softly.

Androcles smiled gently as he met her eyes and reached up to stroke her cheek as they stopped walking. “That first day on my patio.” He answered.

“Phraktos... even after the way I treated him?” Narice gasped as she faced him.

Andro chuckled softly. “The way you treated him is exactly why I was certain that day.” He told her.

“I could never endure another man’s touch upon me in that way.” Narice spoke softly. “What Arrarn makes me feel when I am in his arms is beyond words? What he makes Toria feel? That will never... could never... be duplicated by another. And I know well what Arrarn would do to the fool who confronted him about it.”

“If you are able... try to insure he does not discover this.” Andro said lowering his hand and squeezing her arm gently as they began to walk again. “My brother may be a pilot by nature and training... but he has a vicious temper when arisen. He received some of the finest training within the Union by elven and vampire commandos. He will allow no one to disrespect you or Toria. No one. Regardless of how pure their blood is. And he will make this known violently if he has too.”

Narice nodded her head. “I know. I have seen flashes of this in his eyes at times.” She said softly. “He has earned untold respect among the Ventash’ma and many of our military officers. Even the very old ones. Young he may be... but he seems to have inherited from your father’s and your the ability to win people over with his out of the box thinking.”

“I have never doubted his ability.” Andro said. “Nor do I doubt for an instant his love for you. Just keep that in mind when dealing with these Purebloods who wish to make this an issue that they wish to press.”

Narice nodded. “I will.” She stated. Narice stopped walking and Andro turned to look at her.

“Androcles... what about... what is Yuri doing?” She asked softly.

“What do you mean?” Andro asked.

“I know you’ve had contact with her.” Narice said.

Andro nodded. “Yes.” He answered.

“Is she going to be a problem?” Narice asked.

“For you... no.” Andro stated flatly. “For those opposed to you... probably.”

Narice’s eyes grew a little wider. “What?”

“Your sister is not the same person you knew her to be Narice.” Andro told her. “Xaxon’s essence had more control of her than even my father and I thought. Well... more than I thought. My father does not care for her in the least as you know, but I think he suspected in some way what was happening within her. Just as I believe he knows what is within her now. Why he has agreed to meet her.”

“Meet with her?” Narice gasped. “I didn’t... I don’t question your actions Andro...” Narice said. “I just... I want to understand why though. Is it true that... that she became the wife to an Immortal?”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes.” He answered her. “The Immortal is Cha’talla’s brother Pa’cour.”

“Cha’talla’s brother!” Narice exclaimed.

“There is a history behind that. One that Cha’talla would be better suited explaining to you.” Andro said. He looked at Narice. “I will make the information available to you before I leave in the morning. All of it. I was very skeptical at first... but not anymore. Your sister is a changed individual Narice. I am not asking you to trust in her again, that is not my place. I am asking that you let her be. She has no desire now except to see you succeed. She knows that only you can bring the future the High Coven is to have into reality. And she will protect you from the shadows.”

“How... how can you be so sure?” Narice asked.

“I can be sure because she and Pa'cour are entrusting their daughter into my care.” Andro said.

“Daughter?” Narice asked with wide eyes.

“She is exhibiting signs of the dormant Praetorian gene and Yuri and Pa'cour asked that I take her with me. Train her to harness and use this power before she hurts herself or someone else.” Andro answered. “She is meeting us on the way to Dreamland.”

“Yuri... Yuri had this gene?” Narice asked.

Andro nodded. “It is why your mother used her in the fashion she did. Why she allowed Xaxon’s essence to overwhelm that of the sister you knew. It is why your mother waited so long to kill your father. He was the gene carrier... not her. The last years since my father chased the Coven from Earth have not been your sister Narice. Xaxon had far more control over her than even your mother knew. After our confrontation she was on the edge of death. Xaxon left her body and moved to the only one within range who was close to her.”

Narice met his eyes. “Dante?”

Andro nodded. “Pa'cour saved her life that day. He snatched her from the abyss of death and your sister was reborn. Her eyes were opened for the very first time in her life and believe me she did not like what she had become.”

“You defend her?” Narice asked.

Andro shook his head. “I defend who she has become.” He stated. “One day... one day you will see for yourself.”

“I remember... there were times when I was growing when we were away from my mother and I had such love for her. She and I used to... we would laugh and...” Narice whispered.

Andro took her hand again. “Do you trust me Narice?” He asked.

Narice met his eyes. “Yes.” She answered without hesitation.

“Then trust me now.” He told her. “Yuri is behind what you are doing within the Coven. As I said... she knows only you can help them... lead them from their history into the future.”

Narice looked at him. “Carisia? Lucia?”

Andro nodded. “I do not keep things from Enylarcopri. She knows all that I do.” Andro told her. “And Lucia is more... more open to the idea that I thought. Even after what happen with Zarah.”

“What does Carisia say?” Narice asked.

“She is wary.” He stated honestly. “She suffered much at the hands of her mother... and that is not easily forgotten or forgiven. However... seeing what she has seen since being with me and my family has opened her eyes to the possibility that there is more out there then we understand.” Andro chuckled. “She is not jumping at the possibility to see her... but she has not dismissed the chance that Yuri has truly changed. She and Lucia have reserved judgment until they meet Onera.”

“Onera?” Narice said softly. “That is an Immortal name.”

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

Narice was silent as she processed this information and then looked up at Andro. “I will trust you on this.” She said. “You have a gift that I will never have Andro. I will trust in that gift. For Moran and Dante however... I will not show mercy or respite.”

Andro smiled gently. “They better hope it is you who finds them first.” He stated. “I have seen what your sister has in mind for them if she discovers them first. It is not pleasant or painless to say the least.”

“Their fate will not be any kinder should I find them.” Narice stated firmly.

Andro nodded his head. “Cyn forn.” He said softly. “When you return to High Coven space after we leave my grandfather Riall will have something for you.” He said. “A data pad with some information on it. Pontal is aware of it as well and now you should be.”

“What is it?” She asked.

“You will see.” He said. “An insurance policy as my father would call it.”

“An insurance policy?” Narice asked. “I don’t...” She didn’t finish her question as she heard Arrarn’s heartbeat at the same moment that Andro smelled his younger brother coming up behind them.

“Trying to steal my wife fervon?” Arrarn’s voice carried to them from the darkness and then he was beside them.

Andro laughed at this as Arrarn came up and gently shoved him aside with his shoulder as his arm encircled Narice’s waist. Narice melted into his embrace as he caught her lips for a sizzling kiss and she groaned softly. Arrarn pulled away and looked at Andro beside him. He wrapped his other arm around Andro’s shoulders and pulled his brother close, leaning over to plant a kiss on his cheek. Arrarn felt Andro’s arm come up over his own shoulders and the same feelings of happiness and camaraderie that he had felt for years from his brother washed over him once more. Narice couldn’t help but laugh at Arrarn’s expression as Andro tightened his grip on Arrarn’s shoulders and gave him a kiss on his cheek as well. She kept her arms wrapped around Arrarn’s waist even as they teetered on falling over.

“No one will steal her from you fervon.” Andro said with a smile. “You have tainted her with your ways now.”

Arrarn laughed and looked at Narice with loving dark eyes. “I have haven’t I?” He said. He looked back to Andro. “Race you to the point!” He barked just before the silver/white flash of light and he shifted to wolf form and took off at a sprint.

“Hey!” Andro barked as he tossed his mug down and Narice watched another flash of soft light and Andro was sprinting after his brother into the darkness.

Narice still had her smile on her face when she felt the second presence behind her and she turned slowly and saw Ventash'ma Datarik move silently up beside her. His eyes were following Andro and Arrarn in the distance as they ran and the deep yelps of male wolves could be heard.

“Ventash'ma Datarik.” Narice said. “You are up very early.”

“I never imagined myself coming to this planet.” He said softly with a nod. “The true seat of power within the Lycavorian Union. How could I sleep? It is nothing like I expected. It is so...”

“Peaceful?” Narice said.

“Peaceful.” Datarik echoed. “A perfect word to describe it.”

“Our future... the Coven’s future... it will be entwined deeply with these people Datarik. You know that don’t you?” Narice asked.

Datarik nodded. “Indeed I do. Especially after what I have seen in only a few days here.” He answered. He looked at her. “But it will start with you Empress. And with Arrarn Leonidas.”

Narice nodded her head as she heard Arrarn and Andro yelping in the distance again. She heard a third yelp and then a fourth and she knew their brothers had joined them by some inbred instinct. “Yes it will.” She said softly. “Yes it will.”

MANNE

Murano found him easily enough. His size alone allowed for picking him out of a crowd, but it was his Etheric power that guided Murano. He was nowhere near as powerful as Martin or himself, but his connection to Martin had left an indelible mark on him that any Praetorian would pick out easily enough. He was sitting on the grass outside the portable structure between the legs of the red haired female, while the dark skinned Drow female rested between his legs and they fed one another bits of fruit. Murano knew them to be his wives and mates. Murano sensed his wariness the moment he approached, but Daniel impressed him with his calm control and the aura of confidence he projected. Murano’s desire to know Martin, to understand him drove him forward and he had settled to the ground beside Daniel and begun to question him. The wariness Daniel projected quickly dissipated and was replaced with humor as he gave Murano the answers he wanted. He spoke of Martin in an almost reverent tone of voice, Anuk squeezing her arms around his chest while Nayeca snuggled closer to his midsection. They knew much of what their husband and Martin had done together through the decades together, Daniel never denied them his thoughts and they swam within his mind always. Even they were entranced however, as Daniel spoke with great intelligence and meticulous detail, for they had never seen him show such emotion and love for Martin in such a way. As the time passed, Mari and Kesyla had joined their uncle on the ground beside them, then half a dozen members of the ARC ROYAL’S crew, and then an equal number of Kavalians. Soon the group around them had grown to almost fifty as Daniel Simpson gave them a look and insight into the King they all so adored and respected. A view into their king's mind that none of them had ever heard or seen from him.

Murano did not see Helen and Arzoal standing beside Wayonn across the camp in the distance and watching the group that had gathered to listen to Danny. Helen absently stroked the warm scales under Arzoal's neck, her dark eyes focused on Murano even from this distance.

Now. Now he will learn. Arzoal spoke softly.

And understand. Helen said.

Even in the short time I have been among you I have learned that Daniel is central to Martin's life. He would not be the same man without him. Wayonn spoke. They are entwined in a way not unlike what he shares with his wives and mates.

They have been through more horrors and nightmares together than most will ever know to exist let alone experience. Helen said. How many times have they faced the Grim Reaper side and by side and spit in his face. Before kicking his mida.

Wayonn chuckled softly. The two of them together is a rather imposing sight. Even for the Reaper.

Helen looked at her grandfather and grinned. Grandfather... will Murano... will he...

Wayonn nodded his head. Yes. Murano is many things Helen, but he is not foolish. He feels Sumar left him behind for a greater purpose. Behind Sumar and several others he was the most powerful of us. He will see that purpose now. And he will understand.

Good. We will need to be united. Arzoal spoke.

Wayonn looked at her flame colored head before turning to Helen. What is happening Helen? He asked. You and Arzoal must have some idea. You are Martin's Praetorian Oracle. He would keep nothing from you.

Helen met his eyes. Come. Martin was going to tell you both soon anyway. We have... Yuriko has discovered something.

Yuriko? I take it then... this does not have to do with that igord Pusintin? Wayonn asked.

Helen chuckled. Martin Leonidas does not need Andro or his other children to deal with that. Pusintin is a walking around dead man and does not even know it. He has been for many years. No... this is something else.

Something that prompted him to bring Andro and the others away from what is going on within the Union? Wayonn asked. That does not bode well for us I am thinking.

Helen reached out and took his hand. Come. Avi can update us. Martin had planned to brief everyone tomorrow morning anyway. Before he departs to end Pusintin.

They had slipped away from the group as the discussions continued, Danny shifting to the form of the imposing dark brown wolf while Murano ran easily beside him. They moved for an hour through the timber and mountains, two ghosts through the shadows. Manne was thick with small animal life and plant life but nothing larger than a medium sized dog that they had been able to discover after extensive scans. Akemi had been very thorough in her examining of this planet before allowing even one person to the surface. She had no intention of allowing what happen before to happen again.

Danny finally shifted back to his human form and they slowed their movement as they approached the top of the massive mountain ridge. The timber had become thinner and the ground more rocky as they moved closer to the top. Murano stayed beside him as they came to the edge and even squatted down when Daniel did. The view was breathtaking to say the least as they came to the rocky outcropping and were able to see the valley stretched for kilometers beyond. Towering mountains of green, a wide river that stretched far into the distance and the single sun beating down upon them. Murano looked at Daniel as he lifted his eyes slightly, turning his head from side to side and catching the wind on his face and inhaling deeply.

"Daniel... why are we here?" Murano asked softly. He almost did not want to disturb the pristine view with his voice.

Danny looked at him and smiled. "You wanted to know who my brother is Murano." He said. "Who my brother truly is deep within that shell of muscle and bone?"

Murano looked at him and slowly nodded his head. "Yes."

"We are here because this is the only place he won't smell us." Daniel said. "His sense of smell is far keener than many people know or realize. Andro's too. We are downwind of him and up high enough where the wind will carry our scents away from him. He won't smell us up here."

"Martin... he is out here?" Murano asked stunned at this revelation.

Daniel settled to one knee, close to the edge and looked down into the valley below. "He promised them six hours of worship." He said softly. "Six hours of nothing but him taking care of them as they have taken care of him and his children through the years. It was something that they all needed." Daniel looked at Murano and pointed down. "My brother always keeps his promise to those he loves. That is my brother Murano."

Murano moved closer to the edge and his eyes followed where Daniel was motioning with his head. Daniel's wolf eyes could see easily but Murano needed to pull out the pair of macrobinos from his belt. He heard the definite sounds of female laughter on the wind as he brought the binos to his eyes.

The small clearing was far below them, perhaps eight hundred feet, at the base of the tall waterfall that on their west. Murano saw a small fire, several light globes and seven figures. He focused the binos slightly and his eyes grew a little wider at what he saw but he was unable to look away. Small candle pits had been set up along the edges of the clearing and disappeared down a path that went into the timber towards what Murano suspected was a landing area somewhere nearby. Bright red and yellow flowers were between the candle pits leading up to the small open area. It was right along the edges of the calm stream perhaps a hundred and fifty meters from the base of the waterfall where it emptied into the large stream. The short grass was incredibly green, the trees and other foliage bright and vibrant with life. They were all naked he saw, their clothes folded neatly among the half dozen crates that circled the small clearing. The only thing that marred the beauty of the small clearing was the fire, but it was tightly controlled and once out the land would claim the area quickly once more. Martin sat on the ground near the fire, Anja and For'mya on their backs stretched out in front of him with their small feet against his broad chest. Their skin glistened in the sunlight even from up here and Martin was massaging their feet with his hands and Murano realized it had been For'mya who let the small laughter out as it obviously tickled her at first. Murano did not take notice of their nakedness, not even registering the fact that all of them had bodies and figures and surreal beauty that even Pralor men would fight over. Isabella and Dysea sat to Martin's left, their legs entwined and feeding each other fruit. Aricia and Cirith sat to his immediate right, both of them lying on their stomachs, their heads almost touching as they studied something on a data pad they were both reading. All of their bodies glistened with what could only be some sort of oil and Murano realized that Martin must have already given the others massages.

Murano felt it then and he lowered the binos slowly, careful to keep his own shields very high. It was easy enough for him to detect within the Etheric realm as powerful as those below him were. Martin was not shielding at all and this allowed Murano a window into a part of him that he had not seen until this day. He burned with power Murano hadn't felt since standing beside Sumar, a power held in check by his will alone. Among that burning power was what he felt for those women who were with him. Murano could see it so easily now. Things he had not felt from Martin Leonidas in their time together until now. The absolute devotion and shameless love. The almost exquisite sense of peace and harmony within him. Martin was utterly relaxed and attentive to his wives and mates and nothing else entered his thoughts or clouded his mind. It was so unlike what he had felt from Martin these last days, the anger, the distrust, emotions that were wide ranging. Now there was nothing but focus and peace. Though he could not feel the wolf aura Martin was projecting outward to them, given the emotions and sense of complete love, happiness and dedication he sensed coming from them, he could only guess at the power of the aura Martin was radiating. Mari had tried to explain to him about the Lycavorian ability to use this aura as a way to communicate, especially between a male and female wolf, but he had not understood it until this very moment. He lowered the binos slowly and his head turned to look at Daniel.

Danny's dark eyes were bright and filled with wisdom. "That is my mard fervon down there Murano. The real Martin Leonidas. No vid cams, no reporters, no politicians, no others around that he needs to be all king shit or some holy warrior like in front of. He hates that! Hates it with every fiber of his being! Do not believe what you hear Murano... my mard fervon hates to fight. If he has to fight it means he has failed... and Martin hates to fail. There was a time... about a year before the Evolli War broke out. We hadn't fought in so long and many of us hoped that it was finally over. That the many years of fighting one enemy or another was finally behind us. We thought we could sit back and love our wives and mates; play with our children and finally grow old in peace. We thought the only thing left we had to fight was a bad cold.” Danny chuckled sadly.

“We should have known better. When the day finally comes that he can toss it all aside Murano... man... all we will see is his asshole and elbows as he beats feet away from it all. And I will be right behind him. Those six women and the children they have given him are his meaning to live. And if doing what he is doing now insures that everyone who looks to him for leadership and guidance can have what he has, then by god he will do what needs to be done. His love of them is what drives him to lead our people. He wants everyone to have what he has, or as close as they can get. That is the blood that runs in his veins.” Danny watched Murano turn back and look down into the valley again.

“He looks up to you Murano. We all do.” Danny said and watching him turn to look at him with disbelief in his eyes. “You think I’m joking with you? You knew Sumar. Walked beside him. Fought beside him. To Marty... that is one thing he will never be able to do... but he can relive it through you. Experience it through you.” Danny looked down into the valley. “We came out here hoping to find a piece of our history Murano. To find those that Wayonn’s son Canth told him we needed to find. We thought we had done that already but we were wrong about that. And so we came out here looking for you. For the Pralor part of our history.” Danny looked at him. “You have witnessed what we found.”

Murano nodded his head slowly. “The same arrogance and distrust that brought my people down so long ago.” He said softly.

“He needs what you can teach him. What you can teach Andro and Dorian and Denali and all those who are showing signs of this gene that they carry. We all need you. But you will never change him or them from what is in here...” Danny touched his head. “And in here.” He dropped his hand to poke himself in his heart. “We will be Lycavorian and Spartan first and always.”

“I am beginning to see that.” Murano said softly.

“Then don’t try Murano.” Danny said with a smile. “Many have tried and none have succeeded in doing that. Marty is the most compassionate man I have ever known Murano. I’ve seen him spare those he should have killed. That I would have killed. I’ve seen him bitch slap a person with one hand and with the other hand he helped lift that person up once more and he pushed them to heights they never thought they could reach. The one place however, the one place you do not want to be is on his bad side. Pusintin... well... he got on Martin’s bad side the day he tried to kill their mother almost thirty years ago.”

Murano’s eyes went wide as he looked at Danny. “I did not... I did not know that.” He gasped.

“Not many people do. Hell... there’s still a lot of people who don’t know Deia is his Aunt.” Danny reached down and picked up a small rock. “After what Pusintin did to For'mya... well...” Danny shook his head slowly. “Let’s just say that we had the perfect opportunity and the means to obliterate the Kavalian Federation in one grand and final stroke and we didn’t take it. As much as he hates his brother, Martin will not hold an entire species accountable for the actions of one or two men. That alone should tell you who Martin Leonidas is.” Danny said as he looked at him. “Let him show you who he is. All you need do is watch and you will see for yourself Murano.”

They heard the deep, booming laughter followed quickly by softer feminine laughter and both of them looked down into the valley as a female squealed happily, Murano lifting the binos to view. They saw Martin get to his feet and begin chasing the Persian red hair of Anja around the small clearing as Aricia and the others began laughing in delight. Martin caught her quickly, Murano suspected Anja did not try very hard to escape his embrace, and he watched as Martin pulled her naked form to his and embraced her. Her arms wrapped around his waist tightly and then all of them were moving to join that embrace.

“That is my brother Murano.” Danny said softly. “You could learn as much from him as I know he wants to learn from you.”

Murano took a deep breath and turned to look back at him. “Thank you Daniel.” He said. “Thank you for this.”

“Come on... before he senses we are here.” Danny said as he began to move back down the ridge. Murano took one last look and then began to follow.

Martin lifted his head as his arms closed around Bella and Cirith and pulled them even tighter. Anja was pressed against his chest with Aricia and For'mya on his sides. Dysea, Bella and Cirith were pressed tightly behind them and his arms held all of them. Martin's face creased into a small smile as his eyes focused on the ridge far above where he stood and he allowed his wolf aura and Etheric resonance to envelope the woman who so held his heart and soul. He lowered his cheek to brush first For'mya's golden blond hair and then Aricia's raven locks and his smile grew wider.

[Thank you fervon.] He reached out. [Thank you.]

"Beloved?" Aricia's sweet voice broke into his thoughts. "You are smiling."

Martin blinked and looked at her, seeing all of their stunning eyes focus on him. "Why wouldn't I be smiling?" He asked with a larger smile. "I have the six most beautiful women in the entire universe all to myself."

"And we have the most delicious man in the entire universe all to ourselves." Cirith spoke. "At least we think so anyway."

"Yes we do." Anja stated happily.

Martin grinned. "Well... the worshipping is not done ladies." He said. "I still have three hours to go."

"Nauta Melme... what you have done is beyond beautiful." Dysea said softly. "What... what more is there?"

Martin met her emerald colored eyes and smiled. "Lots." He said in reply. "Because all of you deserve it and so much more."

"Then get to worshipping!" Anja stated with a laugh.

EARTH SPARTAN AMPHITHEATER NORTHERN OLD DISTRICT

Hundreds were gathered, among them many of the Union's most prominent politicians and dozens of senior military officers. Every Netnews Channel was represented with at least one reporter and vid cam crew and this event was being beamed throughout the Union as well as High Coven space. Using pirated channels, it was also going out to rebel receivers within the Kavalian Federation as well, and driving Kavalian engineers frantic because they could not stop it. The outdoor Amphitheater was filled to overflowing with men, women and even children as word of the Prime Minister's unexpected address spread like wildfire across Earth and then the Union from the moment it was announced the evening before. The stage was full of men and women, their chairs comfortable though tightly packed together. Pian and Jalersi were the most nervous as they sat before hundreds, if not thousands of people that Keleru would happily butcher to reach his goals. Dilios and Panos sat on either side of them with Tarifa, Aihola and Isra sitting with Selene and Lynwe. Narice sat with Arram and Toria beside her, Cha'talla standing off to the side beside Vengal. The ambassadors from nearly every world in the Union occupied the first row of benches facing the stage, and there were dozens that were present via secure holo transmissions, their images easily seen along the side of the stage sitting in chairs or behind desks from whatever planet they were transmitting from. Most of the Netnews crews had already noticed that Androcles was absent. Hundreds of sets of eyes watched as Resumar led Athani onto the stage and took their seats beside Pian and Jalersi, the sisters sharing a brief kiss and Pian looking relieved that he knew someone as Resumar settled beside him into the chair.

Far above them everyone could see the dozens of dragons that circled the city as well as many who had landed atop buildings nearby and were watching the gathering. As heads turned skyward they saw the dark red scales break away and begin to slowly curve to the ground towards them. It was quickly evident that there was a rider on the back of this dragon and soon it was evident that it was a woman.

Syrilth settled to the open space near the stage as lightly as a feather, murmurs sweeping the crowd as men and women began to take notice that it was Deia sitting proudly in the saddle she wore. This in itself was newsworthy as it was well known that the Dragon Elder who oversaw those dragons who lived here on Earth had not allowed a rider onto her back for nearly thirty years. Syrilth had sworn to never carry another on her back after Maraud had forced her to do the things she had done. Something had obviously changed since then as hundreds could only watch in awe as Syrilth lifted her front foreleg as a step for Deia to slowly lower herself from the saddle. They saw the tall, grizzled Lycavorian move forward from the ranks and soon realized this was Deia's mate of countless millennia. He assisted her even more to step onto the ground beneath her. They watched as Deia reached up to run her hand over Syrilth's thick neck scales. Her massive head lowered slightly to touch Deia's head and then she was turning to her mate. Deia's mate had remained out of the spotlight for centuries, more by her doing than anything else. He was a senior officer within the Union military and she did not want her position to compromise his ability to lead men. Eldaos had been by her side since the bombing of the senate building as had most of their nine children. Deia had purposely kept them out of her political life for all these centuries but that had all changed when she had nearly died.

Deia's face beamed as she held her husband and mate's arm and turned for the stage. She wore a simple tan pair of pants and boots, with a white shirt and a long, flowing robe like jacket over that. The floor length jacket was Earth tone in color with patches of vibrant green and brown. Eldaos escorted her slowly onto the stage where everyone stood in respect. Deia waved them back to their seats quickly and moved directly for the single podium that had been set up on the stage. She nodded her head to her mate and hundreds of thousands of men and women across the Union saw him unashamedly lean over and nuzzle her cheek and neck. Deia's eyes closed in delightful bliss when he did this and her smile was obvious even from those standing twenty rows back in the theater. Eldaos moved to the lone empty chair and sat down as Deia's face returned to normal and she adjusted the items on the podium. Finally she looked up and out over the gathered citizens.

"I wish a very good morning to all of you here and to our brothers and sisters who are watching from across the breadth of our Union." Her voiced carried easily to the men, women and children standing in the back of the amphitheater as well as hundreds more that lined the grass and streets around the outdoor facility. "A very special good morning and thank you to the men and women here in Sparta and those on Apo Prime who I got out of bed last night to make sure this event happened." Deia shuffled the three data pads in front of her and then gripped both sides of the podium. "I suppose all of you are wondering what event was so large as to get me to come out and make this unannounced speech? I don't think I can remember the last time I spoke to every citizen of the Union like this... but I can tell you now... it will be far more often going forward the gods willing."

This statement caused many men and women to look back and forth between each other and take even more interest in this event now.

"We have been through so much these last months as a people and a Union." Deia began again. "I cannot begin to put into words the immense pride I feel at every citizen of the Union for how they have handled everything that has happened. We Lycavorians are known for our ability to adapt to ever changing events, and it seems that this trait has been embraced by every species that calls the Union home. As your Prime Minister... I thank each and every one of you no matter how small or large the role you played. Whether it be commanding a ship within our fleet, or raising the young ones that are our future, each of you should feel proud at what you have done, not only in these trying last few months, but for what you have done in the past as well. I know I am. The resilience and effort the citizens of the Union have displayed is... it is inspiring."

Deia stopped for a moment and took a deep breath. "Ah... where to begin." She said. "So much has taken place these last months. It could have torn our Union apart but it brought us closer together. So many rumors abound... some of them entirely without truth... and that is why I felt it was time to not only address the Union Senate, but also the Union people as a whole. There was a time when it was a simple thing to address the citizens of the Union. In the beginning there were only a few of us. Now we are so many... but the technology we have today makes it just as simple... and I intend for this address and others like it to be a common thing going into the future. The citizens of the Union have trusted myself and others to lead them for so long, and now we will trust in you to know what is going on. In truth..." Deia turned and looked directly at where Narice sat in the row of chairs behind her. "... how many of us would have ever believed that the new Empress of the High Coven would also be a proud Princess of the Lycavorian Union?" She turned back to the gathered crowd as Narice blushed in embarrassment and squeezed Arrarn's hand. "An old enemy that we have fought for millennia is now our friend and ally. An old enemy that we have just recently learned was never an enemy at their heart to begin with. How long have vampires been within the Union? How long have we called them friend and family? We saw in those who lived among us that oppression and power was not the goal of the people of the High Coven. We saw this but never did anything about it. It took a leap of faith, not by me or any of us who should have known better given our many years of experience, it took a leap of faith by this generation our of children now to accomplish this. If not for Narice and my mandri Androcles and so many like them, we would not have put the past behind us where it belongs and moved into the future. They saw what so many of us did not and they made it happen.”

While her statement drew notice and the applause had already begun, it became silent instantly when she spoke that word and did so with pride. Deia smiled at the reaction for it was what she knew would happen.

“No... I did not misspeak.” She stated. “I have hidden from so many I call friend, from all of you, the one thing I should have embraced from the very beginning.” Deia looked directly into the many vid cameras that were rolling. “I am the youngest sister of Queen Eliani. I was there the day they died defending our right to be free, as so many of us were. Very few knew who I was even then, I stayed in the shadows and watched as Resumar and Eliani and Canth led our people through the blackest of times. I swore... I swore the day that they died I would not let their dream die. I buried who I was in the chaos that followed those first days after we had achieved our freedom and I began to work towards everything they had begun. I cannot... I will not hide who I am any longer. Some of you may have begun to suspect after the events with Chetak and Jorak took place. Seeing that beast of a man attempt to destroy my family a second time was almost too much for me. I am now going to do something that Martin has been after me for years to do. I am going to throw off this veil of secrecy and take the name that fills me with such pride and love. Martin Leonidas, our Union’s King, is my nephew by blood. I will not go another day forward and hide this fact any longer. Some of you may have suspected that there was something between us... and now you know what it is. I have spoken to my husband and mate Eldaos and we have agreed that we will now take the name of Leonidas as our own. The name of our blood and our history. The name Martin has wanted me to take since the day he discovered who I really was.”

Deia Leonidas felt the weight of secrecy lift from her shoulders and what she had felt for years since Martin’s return now burned even brighter within her. The light of truth about who she was. Her face and eyes beamed with happiness and Arrarn and Resumar quickly rose from their chairs and approached her much to her genuine surprise. They both embraced her tightly, and were followed quickly by Narice, Toria and Athani. Vampire and Kavalian wives and mates of Arrarn and Resumar Leonidas that Narice, Toria and Athani may have been, but they knew well the customs of the men that had claimed them and stolen their hearts. The nuzzles that adorned Deia from all three of them were quickly and brazenly caught on every vid cam and beamed across the stars to trillions of those viewing the transmission inside the High Coven and the Kavalian Federation. Deia basked in this loving attention as Tarifa and Aihola joined their nephews in embracing and nuzzling Deia. There were none within the Union who did not know that their King considered Tarifa and Aihola his sisters though they did not bear the name Leonidas. Deia basked in the attention for a few moments before she wiped away the tears and ushered them back to their chairs. She took a few moments to compose herself before turning back to the podium. It was obvious to even the densest of fools the happiness and peace that coursed through Deia now and the brightness of her eyes and face now made her appear so much younger and vibrant and this caught the attention of everyone present.

“Now... before I make the announcement that will undoubtedly send some of you into fits of glee, I wish to brief the Lycavorian Union and High Coven citizens watching of what is happening now. This transmission is also being beamed into the Kavalian Federation Imperium on commandeered channels in control of the rightful government.” Deia spoke. She motioned with her hand to where Pian sat in his chair. “Behind me sits General Pian’Nruarani, leader of Pride Nruarani and the freely elected Interim Leader of the Kavalian Free Republic as they have chosen to be called. Beside him sits his wife and mate, Jalersi’Nruarani, the freely elected Vice Interim Leader. In the crowd among us here in Sparta sit thirty Kavalian Pride Leaders who have willingly traveled here under the threat of death in order to support and make known their wishes for the future of their people.” Deia waved her hand to the Kavalian Pride Leaders who sat in the front row facing the stage, all of them with stunned expressions that she had pointed them out. “I would call them all by their names but I do not wish to mispronounce their given Pride names and disrespect them. Forgive me gentlemen... I will learn them all in the future.”

It was Aleou’Hkan who rose from his chair and bowed his head to her in respect for all of his fellow Pride leaders. This was not something any of them had expected and as each day passed by all of them grew more and more confident. It would not be easy or without loss, but all of them now believed that they could win the battle they were going to enter.

Deia turned back to the crowd. “Let me be very clear as I go forward now, a state of war does now exist between the Lycavorian Union and the Kavalian Federation Imperium because of their vicious and unprovoked attacks against our Union and their vile actions and treatment of one of our beloved Queens. I say unprovoked for a reason, and the many facts that we have in our possession now will only support that claim and are being made available to all of you right now via open transmission.” Deia saw hundreds of men and women begin to reach for their ever present personal data pads. “That state of war however, it does not extend to the many Kavalian men and women and even children who, as we speak here, fight to be free. We as a government did not know the extent of this desire among the Kavalian people and we should have been the first to see it given our own history!” Deia looked first at Pian and then turned to meet the eyes of the Kavalian Pride Leaders. “I tell you now, in front of the billions who are watching, just as my nephew told you directly, the Lycavorian Union pledges all support to the Kavalian Free Republic. Our founding Chronicles of Law do not allow for active participation in internal conflicts, but it does state we can support those we believe in. Our King’s directives are simple. Even now, the entirety of the Union logistical arm is being directed in support of the Kavalian Free Republic. Every single resource we can provide to them will be given. We will not openly move against Kavalian Federation forces unless we are attacked directly. At that juncture, the full weight of the Lycavorian Union will be brought to bear against the Kavalian Federation Imperium and we will join our brothers and sisters in active combat. I urge those Kavalian leaders, military and political, who may be watching to give up and join your people in opposing a regime who actively supports the massacre of children and innocents; who actively support the activities of rape and murder. I ask you directly, are these the men you want leading you into the future?”

Deia took a breath and continued. “Union Logistical Forces are already moving to assist the forces of the Kavalian Free Republic. We do this openly in support of those who resist the mantle of oppression because we know well that history. I will not discuss numbers or what types of forces we are sending so do not ask. Those who need this information are already well aware of what is taking place. It is my understanding that the new government of the Vampire High Coven, their Ruling Ventash'ma and their Empress have also committed logistical support to the Kavalian Free Republic. This is done as a show of their support and commitment to the Kavalian people and that the High Coven does not hold all Kavalian people responsible for the maniac workings of a few who rule with absolute brutality.” Deia’s face hardened somewhat now and she lifted one of the datapads slightly.

“Now I will speak directly to the leaders of that putrid regime. I have in my hand here an Royal Executive Order. It is signed by the only two individuals in our Union who can issue such an edict without support of the Union Senate; King Martin Leonidas and his heir Crown Prince Androcles Leonidas. Talon Guardians of Dragonkind and Praetorians of the Lycavorian Union. This Royal Executive Order states explicably that no Union military action will be taken directly against the Kavalian regime currently in power. It also states the two reasons that this order will become null and void and then unleash Union forces to fight beside their Kavalian brothers and sisters in full force. Reason one... any military attack, no matter how insignificant it may seem, against Lycavorian Union assets, planets, colonies or military units by Kavalian Federation Imperium forces will result in the immediate and total commencement of hostilities involving Union forces. Reason two... any attack against Vampire High Coven assets, planets, colonies or military units by Kavalian Federation Imperium forces will result in the immediate and total commencement of hostilities involving Union forces.” Deia looked up. Her dark eyes changed and her wolf fangs extended in that split second, shocking many who had never seen this part of her before. “To those of you watching from your seats of oppressive power, the Lycavorian Union has the means to end you in one fell swoop. You have tasted part of this power and ability already and should you disregard the warning I give you now, you will suffer the fate of the damned.”

Deia then did something she hadn’t done in more years than she cared to remember. She went with her instincts.

“For those of you who might be watching and are too ignorant or dense to understand what this order means I will put it into simpler words and terms that you will understand. Words my many nieces and nephews would use to get their point across. Don't fuck with us or we will bitch slap you and obliterate you from existence!"

Deia was easily able to hear the sudden and deafening roar of approval from within the confines of the city of Sparta where nearly everyone was in front of a monitor watching the speech. The cascade of cheering shook the very ground around her with its rumblings. Arrarn and Resumar could not contain their laughter at Deia's words, and others saw Tarifa and Dilios and Panos simply shaking their heads with smiles. Deia however, did not hear the same reaction that exploded from millions of homes, businesses and gathering places across the entire Union and stretching into High Coven space. Deia then watched with wide eyes as hundreds of Union Senators rose to their feet clapping madly in approval at her statement, joined by the thirteen Ventash'ma members who had come with Narice. She had not expected such a reaction and this told her that there were many who had come to the limits of their tolerance and would no longer be pushed about. It was ten minutes at least before the roar lessened and men and women began to take their seats again. Deia waited patiently, sipping from a water bottle given to her by Eldaos, before she was able to continue.

"I will now touch on recent reports into what some would have you believe as deceitful and oppressive actions made by my nephew Androcles. Abuse of his position as Crown Prince they call it. I will not go into great detail because an investigation has been opened already by members of the Union Senate without the support of my office or the office of the Lycavorian Union Adjutant. I will not attempt to defend anything he has done. His actions do not need to be defended. To those of you who will challenge him on this, I wish you luck. He will have the full support of his family and far more friends and allies than you might wish to go against." Deia stated. She looked up and her eyes touched the gathered men and women.

"Some would try to have you believe that Andro acted inappropriately in taking Ne'Veha Leonidas as his wife and mate. That he used his status as Crown Prince to ignore the fact that Ne'Veha had been claimed by another Alpha wolf. That Androcles even went so far as to have this wolf taken into custody in order to make things easier for himself to accomplish this. An official inquiry by certain individuals has already been opened into this as I said. They would also like you to believe that Androcles has somehow used his position as Crown Prince and the wealth he has gained through the years inappropriately to obtain certain things." Deia shook her head. "I have seen many things in my life and in this political position I hold now, however, resorting to tactics such as this in order to call into question the honor and the integrity of my nephew is far beyond the pale." Deia held up a second data pad. "I have here in my hand the financial records of Androcles Leonidas, given to me by Andro himself. They are even now being distributed to the Inquiry Board. Those of you who wish to press this issue... I wish you luck. You will need it." Deia barely took notice of the quiet laughter among many of the men and women seated in the crowd.

"Now... as to actions and missions currently being undertaken by Androcles and his father..." Deia took a deep breath. "In recent months we have discovered so much about our history as a people. A history that many of us never knew existed. In order to explain events in a way that all of us will understand I must first give a small history lesson. It begins nearly thirty-five thousand years ago and while the history goes back further than that... this is when it began to directly affect the Lycavorian people. Thirty-five thousand years ago is when the decision by two men altered the course of our history and our lives. I will now tell you about those two men. One is called Wayonn and he is still among us, working closely beside our King out there in the unknown. The second man... well... his name was Sumar." Deia watched as many eyes grew wider and men and women leaned forward in their seats. "Sumar... Sumar was the father to King Resumar, and he is the great grandfather to Martin Leonidas. Sumar and Wayonn are... were what are called Pralors. These Pralors were a species of..."

SCIMITAR
ORBITING EARTH
PORT LANDING BAY

Andro stared at them with bright azure eyes and a smile on his face.

They stared back with equally wide smiles and one pair of dark brown eyes and one pair of azure eyes just as bright as his own.

“Look at the two of you.” Andro finally said. “You have... you have grown.”

“Did you expect us to remain children forever fervon?” Nara Leonidas asked with a good deal of humor in her voice.

“What? No!” Andro stammered. “I just did not expect...”

“That Nara would have goldur as big as our mother?” Deion Leonidas asked with a large smirk. “They have been a constant distraction to the alphas in our class too!”

Nara Leonidas reared back and slapped her twin brother in his face. A blow which he barely felt. “Midaeus!” She spat loudly.

Andro could not contain his laughter and he stepped forward to embrace his younger twin brother and sister. There was no hesitation on their part either as they both melted into his embrace and hugged him back with the same intensity that he embraced them.

Deion Leonidas was the spitting image of his pureblood brothers and father. His black hair was cut short like Andro and Denali’s and he wore the scruff of a three day old growth of facial hair. His dark eyes were mirrors of his father and Denali, so deep and expressive while Nara shared the eyes of her mother just as Andro did. Azure blue in color and so very bright and alive.

They were barely seventeen years of age, but both of them appeared as if they were well into their twenties. Andro knew this was because of their bonds to their dragons, it happened with many who bonded at a young age with dragons. Nara’s long raven black locks, identical to Andro’s and their mother Aricia in color, was shining with health and cascaded well past her shoulders to the middle of her back. She did not wear her hair as long as their mother did, but it was very close. She had the same exotic beauty as their mother, with deeply tanned skin and high cheekbones and soft full lips. Her five foot five height encompassed a tightly packed and muscular one hundred and eighteen pounds. Like their mother she had long legs and a small waist, but there was no mistaking she had the same firm and very full breasts as their mother.

Deion was equal to Andro in height and already possessed the Leonidas muscular build and Spartan definition of his father and brothers that caused so many young female wolves to swoon. His skin was also deeply tanned and his two hundred pounds was encased in civilian clothes as well. Deion held tightly to his brother’s shoulder while Nara had her hand on the back of Andro’s neck as they nuzzled each other happily. It had been almost a year since they had seen each other and they basked in the feeling and emotions of siblings again. Andro pulled his head back and gazed at them.

“Jeru and Mayla?” He asked.

Nara chuckled softly. “They are already on deck ten.” She answered.

Deion grinned now as well. “Already staking claim to the many bones that they know you keep on board.”

Andro laughed. “They will have to fight their brothers and sisters for them.” He said. “Or did they forget Jeth is among us.”

“They didn’t forget.” Deion answered. “They have a plan though.”

Andro pulled them tighter. “That will be fun to see.” He said. “It is... it is so very good to see both of you. We have missed you.” He said.

Nara leaned forward and kissed his lips. “And we have missed you fervon.” She said softly. “All of you.”

“Andro we know our training will continue here but...” Deion began.

Andro shook his head quickly. “No.” He stated firmly. “Your training will continue yes. Jomann and I have already put together a regiment for both of you. You will adhere to this at all times. We will also begin to train with Dorian in using these powers that we seem to possess. But you are among family now. When the training is over for the day you will be free to do and go where you wish. I insist.”

“Thank you.” Nara said.

“Don’t thank me arande.” Andro spoke. “Jomann and I will give you no quarter during your sessions. We will be even more unforgiving.”

Nara nodded. “We know.” She answered. “And we...”

“...Are ready for that.” Deion finished.

Andro nodded his head. “Good. That will not start until tomorrow however. Now... come with me up to the lounge. Everyone is watching tenna Deia’s speech.”

Nara kissed his lips once more. "It is so good to feel you again fervon. It is..."

"Wonderful." Deion finished her statement once again. It was a habit they had developed over the years and at times it drove other people insane. Andro smiled knowing that their power within the Etheric realm made their connection as twins all the more pronounced and powerful.

Andro gripped them tightly. "Come on. The others will lash out at me if they don't see you soon."

SPARTA

"...This is where the abilities you have seen Androcles and his father display recently have come from." Deia finished explaining. "What I have just explained to you is the very abridged version of a much more complicated set of variables. Anja could probably describe it best and I am using terms that Shiria told me to use. This gene is now confirmed to exist in Martin Leonidas and all of his pureblood children with Aricia. Andro's Durcunusaan Captain Jomann also has this gene and we are identifying others as we discover them. This is not some horrible secret we are keeping from the people of the Union as others would try to make you believe... this is a gift from our ancestors that we are only now just discovering and learning what it can allow us to do." Deia took a deep breath. "As many of you have already heard the rumors, Androcles is departing this morning for the Beta Quadrant of known space. We once thought the Beta Quadrant unreachable, but thanks in part to the Pralor technology that Martin discovered, we now have engines that will allow us to make this trip. He is going there to finish the merger of our people. The Protectorate is a branch of the Lycavorian people that left our homeworld Lycavore long before the Black Day. They were only part way back when they discovered what had taken place while they were gone. They chose to remain undetected in the Beta Quadrant in the hopes that one day they could reunite with us. That day has come. Andro will lead a delegation of our people and others that represent the Union and complete a merger that has been millennia in the waiting.

"These men and women of the Protectorate are Lycavorian just like many of us. They have the same values and ideals that we do. They are not the enemy and will not be treated as such. Since recent incidents have caused Andro to already make first contact with two other species within the Beta Quadrant known as the Vanari and the Rothryn people, he will also be taking the lead in opening discussions with them as well. He will never be far away thanks to the wonderful technology that we have discovered in recent years and neither him nor his father is ever out of touch with me or their family back here." Deia let her eyes wander across the men and women gathered. "Everything Martin has done since returning to claim the throne of his grandfather has been for the good of our people as a whole. We all mourned the day we lost his father not so far away from this very spot where we are gathered. And then we all rejoiced when we discovered Martin still lived. Since he has been our King have we all not prospered and grown better for it? Do not let innuendos and rumors rule your thoughts. Demand facts before you decide anything." Deia leaned back and took a deep breath. "I am beginning to ramble now it seems. Something I told myself I would not do. All of the information I have told you this day will be made available in Netnews broadcasts over the next few hours by designated channels. Now... as my niece Eliani is so fond of saying... now I will drop the bomb."

"As of this day, April 14th, in the year of the gods 2575, I am officially announcing I am resigning my position as Prime Minister for the immediate future." Deia spoke. She paused as the uproar she knew was coming exploded outward. Hundreds of men and women came to their feet in shock and Deia quickly raised her hands to bring order. "Please everyone!" She shouted into the podium microphone. "Let me finish!"

It took several moments before everyone began to calm and return to their seats and Deia shook her head with a smile finally. She moved back in front of the podium and waited for relative silence to sweep the crowd once more.

"Perhaps I should have told all of you to let me finish first." She stated with a smile. "Allow me to amend my earlier statement. I will remain as acting Prime Minister for the period of five months. Exactly five months from today, the citizens of the Lycavorian Union are going to vote. I cannot allow my relationship to the King impact the duties of this office. I want the citizens of the Union to decide if they wish me to remain as their Prime Minister, a role I have come to honor and appreciate every single day, even though I may be his Tenna. I will not have those who disagree with Martin or I use this new knowledge in a campaign against him.

Five months from now the Union will decide how they wish to proceed into the future. For the next month, anyone wishing to assume the role of Prime Minister and meets all of the establish criteria, will be granted the right to announce their candidacy for the position. Anyone not involved after that month will be left out. The next four months will then be used to put forth different ideals for the course our Union will take. Then our people will decide.” Deia’s face beamed and she stepped back from the podium. “I thank all of you for coming today and it is my sincere hope to continue to serve on your behalf.”

With that, Deia Leonidas exited the stage the way she had come. Sylrith landed beside the stairs and Deia didn’t hesitate to move to her side and Eldaos assisted as she climbed into the saddle. She smiled at her beloved husband and mate, shared a deep kiss with him when she leaned over, and then Sylrith leaped into the blue sky.

For the first time in nearly thirty millennia, Deia felt truly free. It was a freedom she would enjoy immensely for a short time. Just before she got down to the business of making sure her role as Prime Minister continued for many centuries more.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

SCIMITAR

ENROUTE TO DREAMLAND

“...Not what father wanted Tenna Deia!” Andro hissed softly at the image of his Aunt in the transmission. She was in her office within Sparta and she looked utterly relaxed as she sat in her high backed chair and sipped from the glass of Spartan Wine. “What are you... what are you hoping to accomplish by doing this? I have to tell him Tenna Deia! He will go malda that you have done this!”

The image of Deia was perfectly clear, as if she was sitting right in front of him and Andro saw the smile split her face which infuriated him even more.

“You and your father have far too much to worry about going forward.” Deia spoke with calm resolve. “This is the perfect way for me to deflect what you will be doing and keep all of the attention focused on me.”

“But why?” Sadi asked from her seat just behind Andro. All of the Leonidas children and their wives and mates were seated at the large table behind Andro and none of them were happy to say the least.

“This is crazy Tenna.” Eliani spoke up now.

“Andro and Eli are right.” Lisisa said. “Father is going to have fits! He will demand that you recant your statement. You are making yourself a target!”

They didn’t feel the rush of warmth course through their Aunt at the overwhelming show of love and concern Deia felt from them but they did notice the smile on her face never left as she leaned forward in her chair.

“Listen to me, all of you.” Deia spoke to them. “This is not something I have done on a whim. I have consulted L’tian, Dilios and Panos as well as several others in the last few days. By doing this I have just redirected all of Icho’s efforts away from you and your father. With Ulana now accompanying you and her reports being censored, he will have no new information unless you deem he get it and he will focus on taking this job. It is all he has ever wanted to begin with.”

“You don’t know that for sure Tenna.” Zarah spoke up. Of all of the Leonidas children, Zarah and Normya had spent the most time around their mothers Dysea and Isabella as well as Deia while they negotiated any number of treaties or agreements and they had learned much about how politics worked. “He has to have a very extensive network that is working for him to have accomplished what he has so far.”

“And he will undoubtedly seek help from his Kavalian allies.” Normya spoke from her seat beside Zarah. Even though she and Tir’ut were now married and Zarah and Lucia were very much a couple, the sisters had still managed to spend every moment they could together. Lucia and Tir’ut had become fast friends and it was a common sight to see the four of them together now. Lucia’s intense love and Normya’s sisterly concern had been magical for Zarah and she was rapidly becoming who she once was.

Andro turned back to the image with a nod. "My sisters speak the truth Tenna. They have more experience with this type of thing because of their time spent with you and our mothers."

Deia nodded her head. "And both of you know this is the best course. He will direct all of his resources to gaining this chair. He won't be able to help himself. He is an arrogant Alpha wolf who thinks he knows what is best for everyone. That his way is the only way. He seeks only power and control, that is obvious. How do you defeat someone like that Zarah? What did your mothers and I tell you and Normya during the negotiations with the Tuplian Premier? Do you remember?"

Normya leaned forward and looked at her sister. "Give him what he wants..."

"But only make it seem like he is getting what he wants." Zarah finished.

Deia nodded her head. "Exactly." Deia told them. "Icho will bring all of his resources to bear on me, on doing his level best to getting me expelled from this office so that he can claim it for himself. That is what he wants mandri. He will focus very little on you now... or your father."

"He will attempt to drag you and our family through the mud Tenna." Andro spoke. "He will bring into question every decision you have ever made. Even those from long before our father returned to our people."

Deia nodded her head again. "Yes he will." She spoke with a smile. "It will be exciting!"

"This is not a joking matter!" Andro snapped.

Deia chuckled. "Mandri... do you truly believe I will allow that man to defeat me? Do you have so little faith in our people?"

"Faith in our people and their decisions is not something I question. Faith in you I do not question." Andro spoke. "However, Icho and his ilk will do everything within their power, legal and otherwise, to oust you and take your chair. You know this."

"Indeed I do." Deia said with a smile. "I am counting on that fact. You forget though that Armetus is my friend Andro. He is loyal to me and to your father, who he adores. He is already plotting what he will do. Icho can do whatever he wishes; when he reveals his true nature and his true allegiances; then Armetus and Vengal will bring the Krypteria and Durcunusaan to bear on them and they will squash them like the insects they are. Believe me mandri... I have faced far more dangerous opponents in the political arena. When all is said and done, Icho and his cronies will be nothing more than a brief footnote in history."

"Tenna..." Andro began.

"Listen to me!" Deia retorted. "You need to be focused on what your tasks are! In all the years since your father returned to us I have never known him to question me or my tactics. He understands what must be done. What he does not understand, your mothers Dysea and Isabella, they will explain it to him. They will know almost immediately what I am doing when you tell them."

"I don't like it!" Andro stated. "We will not be there to support you!"

Deia laughed at this and sat back in her chair. "Support me?" She spoke. "Mandri... I have Armetus already spinning the wheels in that wonderful head of his. And no doubt Vengal is already preparing the Durcunusaan here on Earth. What they cannot take care of... well... I will unleash your aunts Tarifa and Aihola upon. And then Selene and Lynwe. I also have Diliios and Panos. I have Charles Taylor. Any one of them could chew Icho up and spit him out. If he wishes to step into the arena against all of us... I welcome it. We welcome it."

"She does have a point Saradasaar." Lu'ria spoke now from her chair. "Queen Aihola is sure to turn my mother and the other Drow Senators loose on this fool if he steps beyond his station or attempts anything nefarious."

"Icho is not stupid... nor is he without support of his own tenna." Andro protested still. "He has lasted this long and we have still not been able to discover his connections to Laustinos or Keleru in that time. That fact alone indicates he is very careful and whatever ties he has to our enemies are very deep and very entrenched. Given the ultimatum you hit them with; they will undoubtedly direct all of their efforts and whatever assets they have within the Union to helping him. They can not face us militarily because of the unrest Pian is sowing, but this is different."

Deia nodded. "I'm sure they will. And they will expose themselves eventually. I do not believe the Kavalians pose so much of a direct threat as you. Pian and Jalersi tell me that many of their military leaders have wavered for years over Keleru's oppressive rule. Their open call for rebellion might be all that is needed to tip the scales. If that is the case... then their only avenue will be to support Icho covertly in the hopes of unseating me.”

“I still don’t like it!” Andro snapped.

Deia came to her feet in the transmission. “Androcles Leonidas there is only one reason that your father would call for you and your siblings.” She said softly. “Your father never calls for help unless he knows he will need it. He knows you and your brothers and sisters will not hesitate to descend upon his and your mother’s location like the wrath of the gods, which from what I understand, you intend to do with the make up of the forces you are bringing with you.”

“Tenna...” Andro began again.

“Androcles do you trust me?” Deia asked.

“Why do you ask me that?” Andro hissed. “You already know the answer! Of course I trust you! That is never in question!”

Deia nodded her head. “Yes I do know the answer.” She said. “So focus on what your mission is and leave the rest to me. I have the Authorization Writ signed by you and Sadi and your wives and mates. I also have one signed by Eliani and Jomann. By Lisisa and Deni and Zarah and Lucia. By Normya and Tir’ut. Everyone who Icho might think to try and come after and smear, even remotely, while you are gone. He will discover that he has chosen the wrong family to nubou with Androcles. I will not sit idly by any longer Mandri. It is why Eldaos and I chose to announce to all who I was. We will proudly wear our name now and we will defend it as any Lycavorian Spartan would. The good Senator Icho will soon discover he has stepped into a very large pile of sibfla and no matter what he does, it will be his undoing in every respect.”

Andro stared at the image of his aunt for a long moment and then a small smile split his lips. “I have not known you to use such colorful metaphors on so regular a basis Tenna.” He said finally. This brought soft chuckles from his brothers and sisters behind him.

Deia laughed softly as well and nodded her head. “Yes... well... it must be the influence of your father and your mother Anja through the years. They do have such unique ways of getting their points across to others.”

“Tenna... you realize your speech will have gone out across the galaxy.” Lisisa asked. “More than likely they saw it even within the Beta Quadrant.”

Deia nodded again. “I’m counting on it.” She stated evenly. “My next speech will be even more informative. And hopefully it will make things with the Vanari go better than you expect they will. At least that is what I am hoping. Ceuma and Naesta are coming to see me in the morning so that I may ask some questions. We will see.”

“You will contact me if anything comes up that you are not prepared for?” Andro spoke. “I insist!”

Deia nodded. “I promised your father many years ago I would not go off on my own and do something like this without support. When you see him, tell him I am fully covered. He will know what I mean.”

“See him?” Andro spoke. “As soon as he finds out about this he will be contacting you I am sure!”

Deia laughed again. “No doubt.” She said. “I am meeting with Tarifa and Panos in a few minutes so I must go. I will keep you fully informed Androcles... have no worries about that. Cuia fas vada carians aur mandras for mandris. Cuia fas vada carians.”

“For forn tenna.” They all answered her simultaneously.

Andro waited until the image of his aunt had fully disappeared and then he turned to look at his brothers and sisters. He moved slowly back to his chair and settled himself between Sadi and Sehri. Both of them gripped his arms tightly and leaned over to nuzzle his cheeks as he settled into the chair sensing he still did not like that they were leaving her after what she had done. Andro’s eyes closed for a moment as he relished in their scents and female auras and then he opened his eyes and looked at his siblings.

“Thoughts?” He said.

“I would not want to face her in battle fervon.” Dorian spoke up. “Even if it is only in the political arena.”

Deion and Nara had chosen to sit next to Dorian and Sheva and they both grinned at his words. Physically he was older than they were, but Nara and Deion felt a special connection to him just as they did to Andro because of the gene within their bodies, and because of the way he was brought into this world, he would always be their younger brother in their eyes. It was also quite obvious to anyone that Nara and Sheva had hit it off instantly no matter the difference in their ages.

“Nor would I.” Sadi echoed.

“That does not mean we should not do something.” Eliani stated.

“Eli is right.” Lisisa said now.

“Armetus will allow nothing to happen to her Andro.” Zarah said. “You know that.”

Andro nodded. “I know... but these are not normal times arande. Now that Deion and Nara have joined us, she has no means of unconventional defense. No one who could perhaps sense things others cannot.”

“We could return.” Deion spoke up.

“Would she even allow us to return Deion?” Nara questioned turning to look at Deion. “She would know why we have come back and she would insist that we return to the training grounds and...”

“...That we finish our Agoge.” Deion finished.

“You two need to stop doing that! Finishing each others statements.” Eliani snapped at them playfully. “It’s unnerving! It gives me the creeps!”

They all chuckled at this and Nara leaned into Deion affectionately. “We will endeavor to...”

“...Accommodate your request arande.” Deion finished.

“Midaeus!” Eliani launched a data pad at her sister and Nara caught it easily as they all laughed.

“Contact Dantio.” Jomann spoke now all eyes turning to him as he canted his head and looked at Andro.

“Who is Dantio?” Deion asked.

Dorian leaned forward. “That is an excellent idea. Vari and Emios will have fully healed by now fervon.” He said evenly. “And Haridl would have made sure Robaran did nothing these last weeks but heal.”

“Tenna Deia will sibfla if she discovers we did that Andro. An Omega Team providing security for our Tenna?” Eliani said.

Ne'Veha nodded her head. “Better to be safe than sorry Eli.” She added.

“Very true Veba. Very true.” Eliani agreed calling her by the nickname Andro’s siblings had given to her.

“I can send a secure burst to Ambassador L'tian and insure that only he knows what they are doing.” Ne'Veha continued. “Deia will never suspect that he will be in control of a Omega Team charged with her protection. They could report directly to your grandfather. He has been the point of contact in the past for similar situations Saradasaar.” Ne'Veha told Andro as she turned her dark brown eyes on him.

“SirsanGai is right.” Carisia spoke now as she leaned forward from her seat next to Sehri. “I can also have Narice make up an excuse for her to leave a detachment of Immortals on Earth. Arrarn could convince Deia easily. Some joint training scheme with the Durcunusaan perhaps.”

Andro nodded as he sat back. “Dantio’s Omega Team and the Immortals Enylarcopri.” He said quickly. “No more than that or she will suspect something. Contact Narice before we go dark and have her make the arrangements. Jomann... you and Dorian round up Dantio and his team wherever they are on Earth and brief them before we go dark.”

“Done.” Jomann said.

“She will scream if she discovers we have done this.” Zarah said with a smile.

“Louder than we have ever heard her scream no doubt.” Normya echoed. “We’ll be able to hear it from the Beta Quadrant!”

“Let her scream if she discovers them.” Andro said. “Father would take a switch to all of us if he discovers we let her do this and then left her without any type of Shadow Security in place.”

“Carians... the last time mother took a switch to my backside I was only six.” Normya declared. “I was scarred for weeks. That was not a pleasant experience.”

Tir'ut leaned over beside her head with a sly grin. “Your backside is perfect my Du'ased 'ranndi. No scars at all that I have seen.”

Normya blushed under her tan and elbowed her Immortal husband in the chest as she rolled her eyes. “Pervert!” She exclaimed while looking at him with adoring emerald colored eyes.

“Too much information!” Eliani stated. “Way too much!”

Andro and the others joined in the soft laughter among siblings. His eyes settled on Brendi Faith who had remained silent for the entire duration. That she was even present was quite a surprise to her. Eliani and Jomann already considered her part of their lives and they both hoped that soon it would become much more intimate and serious. Andro knew that his other brothers and sisters also now considered Brendi part of their family for none of them batted an eye that she was here and sitting next to their sister. He rose to his feet and looked at them.

“We go dark in five hours for the remainder of the trip to pick up Onera and then on to Dreamland.” Andro told them. “Let’s get this set up before that happens. I don’t want to have to worry about it when we are gone. I need to speak with Sa’sur so I will meet all of you for dinner later.”

They watched him turn and exit the conference room quickly and it was Dorian who shook his head and chuckled. “Meet with Sa’sur my mida!” He said.

Sadi met his eyes and grinned as well. “He was not very convincing was he?” She said with a soft laugh. Sehri looked at Sadi quickly. “What do... what do you mean?” She asked.

Sadi met her questioning eyes with a beaming smile. “Only that our beautiful husband and mate is going to arrange for some very unpleasant things to happen to the good Senator Icho and his followers should anything bad befall Deia.”

Eliani and the others laughed at Sadi’s very diplomatic answer and Carisia leaned closer to Sehri. “What KertaGai is trying to say in agreeable words Sehri our love, is that Andro will now contact several people that he undoubtedly knows, and on top of what we will do, he will insure that Deia and all those connected to our family are very well protected.”

Sehri met her eyes. “And they will not know this?” She asked.

Carisia shook her head. “Not unless someone does something incredibly stupid and tries to hurt Deia or the others.”

“And this Armetus that Deia spoke of?” Sehri asked. “He will not know?”

Sadi shook her head with a grin. “Not when the person Andro will most likely call is Marci... Armetus’s second in command. Marci is our age DuanGai ... and she knows well how Andro works and what he will expect.”

All of them present saw Sehri’s eyes grow slightly moist when she heard the word Sadi had called her. It was not a very common practice to give a nickname in the ancient language to those you loved and called husband, wife and mate. While many of the more traditional of their people did it now, and it was becoming more and more popular, there were still far more who did not. The ancient Lycavorian language was not easy to learn and while it was making a very strong comeback, it was still many years from being spoken freely among all their people. Tradition dating back millennia said that when blessed with a name in the ancient language by those who loved you, it forever sealed the bond between you. Sehri knew this part of the custom after being able to swim within Andro’s mind as freely as she now did with Sadi and the others. Andro had given all of them names, though Lu’ria’s name was spoken in the Drow language, and it was one of the ways he showed his love and devotion to them.

Andro’s siblings also took note of the name Sadi used and within a few hours it would be filtering throughout the fleet in reference to Sehri. And it would be the name they all used in private with their family to show their love for her as well.

Jomann got to his feet. “We all have work to do before dinner. I suggest we get to it.” He stated.

Acting as Andro’s Captain as he was, no one argued with that directive and all of them began to rise and do what they needed to do.

Sheva Juconi-Leonidas stood in the center of the quarters Dorian had claimed as his own and let her eyes sweep the medium sized apartment like abode. She had to admit the view from the roof bubble was absolutely breathtaking and behind the nights they had spent under the stars on Cranae Island, the most fantastic love making they had experienced had come in these very quarters. And there had been many hours of passionate and intense love making Sheva thought with a large degree of ardor.

The quarters lacked a certain normality however.

Sheva Juconi felt a warm flush course through her as the memories of those times flashed through her mind and the undeniable fact that they would continue long into her future. Never in all the years since her parents had been killed had she felt such a blissful peace and sense of belonging. Dorian Leonidas had claimed her as his beloved wife and mate in the fashion of the Lycavorian people, but he had also claimed her as his Blessed Wife in the fashion of his and Sheva's vampire blood. She looked down at the glittering silver and titanium band on the ring finger of her left hand and couldn't help but smile and bite her bottom lip when the memories of the day Dorian had given it to her came rushing back. They were walking along the white sands of Cranae Island and he had just popped it out of his pocket. He told her it was an old Earth and human custom that had begun centuries ago. Part of him wanted to honor that fact because he was born on Earth. The ring had fit perfectly and Sheva had spent many minutes just making sure it was all real over the next few days. Every time she saw the ring she had no doubt in the least.

Sheva Juconi-Leonidas.

"Gods I love hearing that." Sheva muttered softly to herself.

Dorian's family treated her very differently now. She was a member of their family. The Royal Leonidas family. She was a Princess now. The Blessed Wife to a man over three hundred years her junior, but a young man who had given back to her all she had thought lost. A young man who was far wiser and knowledgeable than anyone gave him credit for except his family. Dorian treated her like she was the most important thing in his life, which Dorian now was to her. Sheva had grasped for a future she never thought she would have and she had hung on tight as Dorian swept her away with his infectious smile and wit. When they had shared blood during their passionate lovemaking, Dorian's natural Etheric skills had formed a permanent connection with her. Sheva had never imagined being able to sense his presence within her would bring her such joy. She could explore his mind as much as she wanted and she had eagerly begun to learn as much about this new power as she could from him. She had no intention of losing what she had discovered now, and she would kill to safeguard that.

Sheva shook her head slowly with another smile as she looked around. The quarters here on the ship were somewhat barren and Sheva knew she would have to improve them. At least for the time before they transferred to SPARTA'S WRATH. The quarters lacked a certain warmth and normality. She moved across the room to where they had dropped their bags upon arriving and squatted down in front of the duffle. She began digging in the large canvas bag to find the data pad she had brought with a list of items she intended to purchase, placing several stacks of their clothes on the couch. Sheva saw the blinking green light from the side of the bag and her hand closed around the data pad, pulling it out. The green light indicated she had a message and her brow furrowed in puzzlement since she had given this frequency only to Dorian and Jomann she was sure. She tapped the pad quickly and entered her pass code watching as the face of the older man appeared on the small screen. Sheva's eyes grew wide in horror and she tossed the data pad away from her as if she had been horribly bitten.

"NO!!" She screamed. "NO!!"

She didn't realize that her reaction would echo outward to the man she had come to love so completely and he would instantly drop what he was doing and head to where she was.

Sheva stared at Dorian's sleeping face on the bed. She hadn't realized how her reaction to the data pad would affect him and he had come storming into their quarters ready to kill in order to protect her. He found her huddled in a ball against the wall near the couch and immediately had fallen to the floor beside her and gathered her into his arms. The warmth of his body had an immediate effect on her and she had wrapped her arms around his waist, burying her face into his chest as his resonance within the Etheric realm poured outward to her in a soothing way as she inhaled deeply of his manly aroma. Sheva knew she had to tell him. She had to tell him of her past and how she had come to be here.

And why.

It came spilling out within an hour and as he held her on their bed she didn't stop talking for what seemed like years. Fear gripped Sheva as she talked; fear of losing him and what she had found. Fear that he would hate her for what her initial orders had been. They had watched the message together and his handsome face remained impassive throughout; as he listened to her tell him everything after the message was over. A message that had revealed something even she had no idea it would. A new fear and wonderful discovery that had changed almost everything. She held nothing back from him any longer. Sheva knew in order to have the life she wanted with him that she needed his love and trust. She knew that in order to discover if the message was accurate she needed his trust and love. She did not know if she would be able to go on without the emotion and feelings he had brought out in her and after seeing the message she needed those emotions even more. The more she spoke to him the more her trepidation grew as his face remained completely void of emotion or reaction. She was very nearly on the edge of losing it at the end for he had said nothing and only gazed at her with those beautiful multi-colored eyes. Just when she thought he would rise and leave her forever, Dorian leaned forward and kissed her ever so softly. His strong hands had come up and gripped her face and Sheva's heart had rejoiced as he deepened the kiss and his Etheric resonance enveloped her mind. He opened his mind to her without question and she saw the absolute love and devotion to her and how that love for her made him part of who he was.

Dorian had lifted her shuddering frame into his arms and carried them to the bathroom where he had striped them both and then lovingly held her under the hot spray of water. There was nothing sexual in his actions in the least. He stroked her naked flesh, washed her skin and hair and planted small kisses of desire all over her shoulders and neck. He whispered his love of her into her ears over and over in so many different ways, assuring her that it would be fine. That they would get through this. He was not going to lose her and she had not lost him.

The emotional outburst, more severe than anything she had ever experienced had taken its toll on her. Once dried and wearing one of his oversized shirts, Dorian had gathered her into his arms on their bed and Sheva had fallen asleep within moments.

She had awoken only a few moments before, still wrapped within his arms. What had occurred came rushing back and she had slowly removed herself from his embrace and knelt now on the bed staring at him. There was no hate for her coming from him. She thought for sure he would be savagely angry and want nothing to do with her as he turned her over to Jomann and those who despised traitors of any kind. She knew what Androcles thought of traitors and she worried now for him as well as herself if Androcles discovered her past. She knew Dorian loved his brother dearly, and they were far closer than most people outside of their family knew, because of the way both of them were born with complete awareness. The fear she felt earlier had returned now as these thoughts filled her head. The message had revealed something she had not known all of these years and she had to discover if it was true. She had been lied to for so long and now along with that fear came anger. Anger over a life that had been stolen away from her.

The sheet covered only his lower body and Dorian's chest and shoulders were exposed for her to see. The definition of his body was such a delight for her, and once more she feared she would lose him forever if his brother discovered what she once was. She reached out slowly to run her fingers across his abdomen and his eyes opened almost instantly at her touch. He saw her kneeling on the bed and he sat up quickly, his eyes darting around their room looking for threats, and finally returning to her.

"Sheva?" He asked softly.

Sheva met his gaze and lifted her hands to cup his face. "I... I am terrified Dori." She stammered as her eyes became moist. "I don't... I don't know what to do! What to believe! What if... I thought they were dead! What if they are alive? After all these years... what if they are alive?"

"Then we will find them and you will be reunited." Dorian answered.

"How?" Sheva spoke. "Dori... I don't... I have never been this confused!"

"We will figure it out Sheva." Dorian answered.

"How?" She asked again. "When your brother discovers what I am... you know as well as I that he hates traitors even more than your father. And your father despises them! He will see to it that I am interrogated and then executed."

"That will not happen!" Dorian hissed. "You are no traitor Sheva!"

"I... we must leave!" She exclaimed suddenly. "When he discovers my past; why I came here to begin with; he will have no mercy for me Dori! I have seen how he treats traitors and spies. He will..."

Dorian reached up and grabbed her face gently in his hands. "Sheva stop!" He exclaimed. "Nothing like that will ever happen!"

"How can you be so sure?" She gasped as small tears rolled down her cheeks.

“I won’t allow it.” Dorian said firmly. “No one in my family would allow it. Least of all Andro. You are my wife Sheva!”

Sheva looked at him. “I am a spy sent here to infiltrate the Durcunusaan and eventually kill your mother Dorian. How can any of them forgive that? How can... how can you?” She hissed.

“No!” Dorian barked loudly.

Dorian knew she was going to question everything until he proved to her that she was in no danger. She would never be the same unless she saw that her fears were unfounded. There was only one way to make her see that. He tossed back the sheet, revealing that he wore only a loose pair of black pants, and he got to his feet. He moved quickly into the living area of their quarters and snatched up the data pad and then returned to the bedroom. Sheva looked at him as he held out his hand to her. She glanced at the data pad in his hand and rose to her knees on the bed.

“Dorian?” She questioned.

Dorian held out his hand for her. “Do you love me Sheva?” He asked her.

“What? How can you ask me that? You know I do Dori! More than anything in the universe!” She exclaimed.

“Do you love me enough to trust me completely?” Dorian questioned her again.

“Dori...?” She stammered.

Dorian thrust out his hand again. “Do you?” He demanded.

Sheva looked at the set of his jaw and the determination in his eyes. She looked at his outstretched hand waiting for her to take it. Waiting for her to finally and completely make the leap from her old life and into her new. Sheva didn’t hesitate and grabbed his hand tightly.

“Come on.” Dorian told her as he turned and began to pull her along.

“Where are we going?” She asked.

“To see the one person besides my father who can find out the information we need and then act on it.” Dorian said.

The crew of the SCIMITAR had long ago enlarged Andro’s quarters and Sadi had been the first to begin to decorate it. This would be their home away from home and though most of it was now boxed and crated waiting to be transferred to SPARTA’S WRATH, the thick bear skin rugs still covered the floor in front of the two couches. Andro sat on the floor, his back against the couch. His legs were stretched out in front of him encased in his usual white pants with crimson trim, Carisia leaning up against his left side wearing a simple white panty and bra set. Andro’s arm was wrapped around her waist and his fingers alternating between caressing her muscular and tanned abdomen and Lu’ria’s lower back. Lu’ria wore an identical bra and panty set to Carisia and sat between her legs while Carisia brushed out her shimmering white hair preparing to braid it in the Drow fashion. Sadi laid on her back on his right, her head resting up against his thigh. Sehri was laying between her legs, her naked chest pressed across Sadi’s abdomen, her chin resting on her arms which were folded across Sadi’s chest. Ne’Veha sat on the couch above all of them, one of her naked legs draped over Andro’s right shoulder.

“Wouldn’t be surprised if it was one of my sisters.” Sehri spoke. “They came on this trip with the sole intent of trying to win you over Andro.”

Andro chuckled. “That didn’t work.” He said.

“It is something that they would do though.” Sehri said.

“We do not know for sure if it was one of them DuanGai.” Carisia stated turning to look at her.

“Who else could it have been?” Sehri asked.

“We were leaning more towards Harira.” Sadi answered her question.

Sehri looked at her. “You truly believe that Sadi?” She asked. She lifted her eyes back to Andro. “Andro?”

Andro lowered the data pad he had been reading and met her eyes. “Harira has a different agenda than your father DuanGai.” He said. “Something about her does not sit right with any of us. You included.”

Sehri nodded slowly in agreement. “But what?” She asked. “I have never... I have never seen her do anything against the Circle.”

“Perhaps that is not her purpose.” Ne'Veha commented.

Sehri looked at her. “You think she is a spy of some sort SirsanGai?” She asked.

“You said yourself that the Rothryn Science Academy does not look fondly upon those who can use their Etheric powers like you and us.” Ne'Veha said. “Harira is not who she wants everyone to believe. She is something else...”

Sehri gazed at Andro now. “Andro? You feel this way as well?”

“Her reaction to our union was not something I entirely expected.” Andro replied.

“Nor I.” Sehri said.

Andro nodded his head. “She wasn't just angry that it happened DuanGai ... but also frightened. That tells me she would have gone to great lengths to prevent you from being with us if she could have.”

“I would not have allowed that!” Sehri said.

“We know that DuanGai.” Sadi spoke again reaching out to caress her cheek. “But she did reveal part of her true nature in acting as she did.”

Sehri's eyes grew a little wider. “She is a spy inside the Circle for the Rothryn Science Academy! It has to be!”

“That is what we believe.” Andro said softly. “Which means that everyone you knew could very well be in danger. We won't know the full extent of all this until we see your people but there is another possible reason she was allowed to come with you however...” He said letting his words trail off.

Sadi lifted her eyes up and gazed at Andro. “Harira was sent with Sehri to get her out of the way?” She questioned.

Andro nodded his head. “From what you have told me of your Cleric Mother Ilossa, she does not strike me as one who would be fooled so easily. Allowing Harira to accompany your mother and you here could very well have been done on purpose in order to protect others while she acted.”

“Wouldn't she believe sending DuanGai alone with Harira to be a risk Andro?” Lu'ria asked.

Andro looked at Sehri with those azure blue eyes and Sehri shuddered in delight. But she also understood then. “She knew!” She gasped. “The Cleric Mother knew how I felt. How all of us felt. She knew it that day!”

Andro nodded once more in agreement. “She also knew that you are more than capable of defending yourself with your abilities and that you were even before you came to be with us Sehri.”

Sadi nodded her head. “Now that makes much more sense. She knew that we would never allow anyone or anything to take you from us once we discovered you. That is not how Lycavorians act. She also knew that you would never allow it. She knows far more about Lycavorian culture and tradition than she lets on.”

Andro nodded his head. “Which leads me to believe she has other information that...” Andro stopped talking and canted his head slightly. Sadi and the others knew what this was instantly.

“Andro?” Sadi asked.

“Dorian and Sheva are outside.” Andro said. “Dori says they have something important to discuss with me.”

Lu'ria came to her feet first and reached for her robe. “I will let them in while the rest of you clothe yourselves properly.” She stated with an alluring smile.

“What's wrong with how we are dressed Mistress?” Carisia asked innocently.

Lu'ria leaned over and kissed her passionately. “While I do so enjoy the views of my slaves...” She answered after pulling away from the kiss. “I do not wish to share that with others thank you.”

Andro chuckled while Lu'ria made for the door and Sadi and Sehri reached for their robes which were nearby. He set aside the data pad he was reading and leaned over to nibble softly on the inside of Ne'Veha's thigh which was still draped over his shoulder since she already wore her robe over her luscious elven figure.

All of his wives and mates had accepted that Androcles was seen by his siblings in a very different light. He was second to their father and mothers as a person any of them could come to at any time and talk to about anything. Even his sisters would share with him intimate questions or concerns because they knew their brother would not judge. It was part of who Androcles was to all of them. They also knew that none of his siblings would intrude upon their time together unless it was important. Ne'Veha handed him the mug she had been sipping from and Andro took a pull of the cinnamon tasting tea as he looked up and saw Lu'ria lead Dorian and Sheva into their main living area. He knew something was wrong right away by the look on Sheva's face and the pungent smell of fear wafting from her pores. He gently lifted Ne'Veha's leg from his shoulder and handed the mug back to her as he got to his feet and faced his brother.

"Dorian? What's wrong?" Andro asked.

Sheva gripped Dorian's hand tightly as she watched Androcles rise to his feet. She had never been this close to him while dressed as he was and her fear grew disproportionately as she gazed at him. While no man could elicit the same reaction from her that Dorian now could, she now knew where he got his muscular definition and Sheva determined that it must run in the family. Andro was every bit as ripped physically as Dori, and while Dorian had no scars as of yet, Sheva could not help but take in the three bullet scars that dotted Androcles's upper chest, or the unique Talon Guardian brand that seemed to pulse and glow with a life of its own. Not to mention the myriad of smaller scars that dotted his skin. He was much more thickly muscled in some respects but Sheva understood now where Dorian's delicious body came from and she knew it came from their father.

Dorian stepped up to his brother without fear and held out the data pad to him. "You should probably see this." He said.

Andro took the pad, his eyes never leaving Dorian's face. "Fervon?"

"You'll understand when you see it." Dorian answered his unspoken question.

Andro's azure eyes cut to Sheva quickly and then turned to Sadi. He held out the pad to her.

"KertaGai... could you plug this in?"

Sadi grabbed it and leaned over to the small knee high table next to the couch. She inserted it in to the viewer and the holodisc in the corner of the main living area flared to life with the image of a middle aged man none of them knew.

"Agent Sheva Juconi... you have not reported in to me in over four months." The man spoke calmly. "Your task and mission was simple Agent Juconi and we can only assume that your refusal to report in indicates you have been compromised or you have changed your allegiances to the Lycavorian animals you have been living among for so long. You would not be the first one this has happened to, nor will you be the last I think. However... our masters have planned for such an eventuality." The man shifted on his feet slightly.

"You were recruited into this unit because of events that happened with your parents Sheva Juconi. You believed them dead at the hands of the Lycavorian scum that you now live among, and this was the driving force we used to motivate you. Revenge. Such a base emotion, but so very useful at times. Since it seems you will not be fulfilling the orders you were sent to conduct, you have forced us to use other means in order to motivate you."

An image appeared next to the man on the desk of an older man and woman walking outside at what appeared to be some sort of market.

"I believe you know your parents Agent Juconi. They did not perish in the attack on the colony it seems. Your father is more resilient than we first thought and he was able to save himself and your mother as well as several dozen others." The man continued. "They are alive and well. They believe you to be dead however, killed heroically in battle with the Lycavorian scum avenging what you thought was their death. They are in a location known only to a small few, among other family members of other Agents for just this instance. You have a choice to make now Agent Juconi. Contact me in order to receive new orders. Plans have changed and your original mission has been abandoned. We have other orders for you. Do not contact me and your mother and father, who you thought dead, will meet a rather inglorious ending to their pathetic lives. I will give you three days to respond Agent. On the fourth day, we will execute your parents and their blood will be on your hands. Those are Admiral Moran's orders and they will be followed. Three days Agent Juconi."

The transmission ended abruptly, leaving the room in complete silence. Sheva moved closer to Dorian, gripping his hand and arm even tighter, as if that could alter the eruption of anger she expected from his brother. Androcles Leonidas was well known throughout the Union and especially within the Durcunusaan as having a particular nasty distaste and hatred for traitors of any kind. Much more so than his father the King. No one knows where the powerful emotion came from; some have said it was inbred in him because of what happened to his mother, but no matter the how of it, he had no mercy or pity for traitors of any kind. And he had shown that on several occasions in the past.

“Vithin fa'la zatoast!” Carisia snarled savagely from where she sat.

“Siyo... Usstan qua'l.” Andro spoke softly.

Sehri was the only one who did not know what was truly happening but she knew enough to know that this Juconi woman was supposedly an agent of their enemy. Or was she? She cut her eyes to Andro and saw him simply standing there. She knew Sheva had recently become the wife and mate to Dorian and Sehri did not know what was going to happen.

“Sadi... play it again.” Andro asked as he settled to the edge of the couch.

Sheva glanced at Dorian quickly her eyes wide and then she looked back to Androcles. “Androcles I...” She began to stammer out the words in the hopes of escaping her own death.

“Sheva... when did you get this?” Andro asked.

“What?” She gasped.

Andro turned to look at her. “When did you receive this?” He asked again.

“When did I...?” Sheva stammered aloud. “I am... I was... I was an agent for the High Coven! I was... I was sent here to kill... to assassinate your mother Isabella!” She gasped out finally.

Andro grinned at her. “Sheva Juconi... you haven’t been an agent for the High Coven for nearly a year.” He told her as she watched Carisia move up next to Andro and lean her petite frame against his powerful body. “That is when you stopped filing your reports isn’t it? Not the four months this fool says. And my guess is that you began to question your orders many years ago or we would not be standing here having this discussion. Am I wrong?”

Dorian smiled slightly. “She thinks... Andro... Sheva thinks you will have her executed. Or worse.”

Andro came fully to his feet instantly. “What?” He rasped aloud as his face changed and became concerned.

Sheva looked at him, her green eyes now filled with tears. “You... you hate traitors!” She gasped. “Everyone knows that! You...”

Andro moved across the room faster than her eyes could follow and she gasped in fear when he was suddenly in front of her. She tried to back up but pressed against Dorian’s broad, unmoving body. Sheva watched Andro lift his hands and she closed her eyes believing her life was going to end right there. She gasped loudly and jumped when she felt his hands take her face in his grip ever so gently. Her eyes popped open and she found his face so close to hers, his azure eyes nearly glowing in the light of the room, her hands slowly coming up to rest on his forearms.

“You are no traitor Sheva Juconi-Leonidas.” Andro spoke slowly and confidently. “You are my brother’s Blessed wife and beloved mate. You are a Leonidas now. A Princess of the Union. My family. I could no more hurt you than I could hurt one of my other family members. You give far more credit to my reputation than most Sheva.”

Sheva shook her head. “I... please believe me... I...”

“Do you love my brother Sheva?” Andro asked.

Sheva stopped babbling and met his eyes without the slightest hint of hesitation. “More than I have ever loved anything in my entire life.” She answered.

Andro nodded his head. “A scent which wafts from your pores more than anything.” He told her. “Many vampires do not believe that they have a unique scent, but as Carisia and Narice and Toria discovered, as I am telling you now, all of you do. And your scent has told me for months that you are head over heels in love with my brother. You have been since the first moment you saw him when he was just a child. Scents don’t lie Sheva.”

Sheva looked at him with wide eyes. “How... you... you have known all of this time?” She gasped.

Andro nodded. “Jomann and I have suspected there was more to you than you let others see, especially after how you were treating him initially. There were a few inconsistencies in your history that didn’t add up. All of which did not matter by the time we discovered them since you had already made the decision to not go through with your orders some years ago and you were struggling with what your heart was telling you when you looked at my brother. What opened your eyes Sheva? What made you see that what you had been told was a lie?"

"After... after what I saw in the Evolli War. How... how so many of your people laid down their lives for the vampires within our ranks without hesitation or thought." She spoke softly.

Andro nodded his head in acknowledgement. "Yes... the Evolli War forced many of us to alter our perceptions on many things. It also awakened many things within some of us that we neither knew about or wished for." Andro lifted his right hand and drew his fingers across her cheek, wiping away the tears that rolled down her flawless skin. "You need never fear me Sheva Leonidas." He told her in a soft voice. "Ever."

Sheva allowed him to pulled her tightly to him and she found her arms encircling his waist as he hugged her tightly. The fear and discord she had felt moments before simply left her body in that moment. She felt him reach out and pull Dorian to him and then he was hugging both of them, his hand going up behind Dorian's head and holding his younger brother with deep affection.

It was Sadi who broke the moment moving up to where he held Sheva and reaching out to place a reassuring hand on her arm. "This may change our plans somewhat Andro our love." She stated as she squeezed Sheva's arm and looked at him. "We need to find out who this worm is and what he knows. We need to take care of this before we go to the Beta Quadrant."

Carisia also moved up to where Andro held Sheva and when he stepped back she quickly embraced her with Sadi, her arms pulling her close with the affection and concern of family. It was something that Sheva accepted without question, the relief she felt making her suddenly very weak and confused. Carisia looked at Andro as she did this, her maya blue eyes alert and quite determined. "And we need to find out if her parents are truly alive and where they are." She stated.

"How do we do that?" Dorian asked from behind Sheva. "This idiot in the transmission is obviously just a messenger boy. And if Moran is involved and he is as big a midaeus as you say fervon, this fool won't know anything that could help us."

Andro nodded. "No... probably not." He said. "But I have an idea who might know." He said. "And she won't have any love for Moran at this point in her life."

Carisia met his gaze as he said that and she nodded her head. "My mother." She said softly.

"Enylarcopri I don't..." Andro began to speak but Carisia shook her head.

"No!" She spoke firmly. "It is the only way. Sadi is right. We need to take care of this before we depart for the Beta Quadrant." Carisia stepped away from Sheva and up to Andro. She pressed her petite five foot two frame against his once more and looked up into his face. "I know what you believe about her Andro. You have shared this with all of us." She told him reaching up to stroke his cheek. "If what you... if what you believe is true then she will not hesitate to help us. If Xaxon had as much influence over her as you believe, if many of her actions through the years were not her choice but his vile influence over her, then she will jump at this chance to help us."

Andro leaned over and kissed her deeply. His fingers caressed her cheek sending shivers down her spine and Carisia relished in the sensations. He pulled away slowly and gazed at her. "Then we will get it done." He said softly.

Ne'Veha came up to them now. "You and Dorian grab some coffee Saradasaar. Let us take care of Sheva." She said softly as Sehri and Lu'ria joined with Sadi and Carisia and drew Sheva further into their quarters.

Andro glanced quickly at his wives and saw them all nod. He took a deep breath and looked at his brother. "Dorian... let's do that." He said.

"I want to..." Dorian began but Andro grabbed his arm.

"Let's go get some coffee fervon." He stated as he began to pull him towards the door.

Dorian moved with him reluctantly and Andro felt Sadi and the others pulse him with their love and warmth. Then he felt Sadi reaching out within the Etheric realm for his sisters. Andro knew then this was to be a female thing as he felt first Eliani and then Zarah and Lisisa respond, which was very quickly followed by Normya and Nara. All of them responded almost immediately to Sadi's resonance and call within Mindvoice. He expected no less from them as Sadi was his Anome and in some respects they would listen to her over him. His sisters and his mates would take care of Sheva now. After tonight she would not question herself or her role going into the future ever again. He squeezed Dorian's arm as they entered the near empty corridor outside his quarters.

"Let them do this fervon. It's a female thing." He told him. "You and I... let's go make a call."

MANNE UNION BASE CAMP

"...think she can help Andro?" Martin asked as he stared at the image of his oldest and his youngest sons in the transmission. His chest had swollen with pride when he saw Dorian beside his brother and how much they looked alike. He already knew they were very close as brothers, due in large part because of how they were both born fully aware of everything around them.

"If she has fully altered the path she was on father she will jump at the chance." Andro spoke. He and Dorian were in his office on the SCIMITAR, that much Martin could tell, and they both had mugs of coffee in their hands. "If you did not believe this as well you would not have agreed to meet her."

Martin turned from the transmission and added more coffee to his mug from the pot on the table of the COM shed. He looked back to his sons. "Yeah... well I may still regret that decision." He said casually.

"Father..." Dorian started.

"Don't go there!" Martin hissed. "She is your wife and mate and you damn well better love her until she can't stand it anymore!"

Dorian smiled. "I will have no problem doing that father." He stated.

"I'll let your mothers slap you silly for not telling us sooner though." Martin said. "They were really peeved."

"I will prepare myself for that." Dorian answered.

"Anja and Bella sensed something different about Sheva when she first came to Dragon Mountain. They couldn't put their finger on it but they sensed something was unusual about her demeanor. Isabella is real good at reading people too." Martin told them as he turned in the holo transmission and moved around the room he was in. "It makes sense though. Moran is many things but he's no fool. It stands to reason he would have done something like this after the I initiated the Purge." Their father looked at them. "No questioning her Andro. She is part of our family now and I don't want her to think for an instant that we are using her. If she offers, fine, but no one questions hers about anything. She has left that life behind and that is where it will stay."

Andro nodded. "Sadi and our sisters will see to that father." He said.

Martin nodded. "Good. Good. Put Vengal on this Andro. Once you ring everything from that scum in the transmission, I want Vengal and the Durcunusaan to clean house. Armetus and the Krypteria are going to be stretched thin as it is. Use Marci and her assets if you need to, but don't pull Armetus's people from their work with Deia. Let Vengal and the Durcunusaan deal with this. They blend better with the general population and you can damn well bet Moran has more people in place."

"Understood." Andro said. "Did Tenna give you a tongue lashing too?" He asked with a grin.

Martin chuckled and looked at his sons. "Her exact words were... I am a Leonidas! I have always been a Leonidas and I will fucking deal with it Mandri! With extreme prejudice!" Martin answered. "I stopped bugging her about it when she started to cuss."

Andro laughed. "I did as well." He said.

"You covered her?" Martin asked.

"As you did no doubt." Andro answered.

"Let's hope she doesn't trip over all the hidden security she will have." Martin said with a smile. "If she discovers it... the cussing we will get will make our ears ring for a month."

"Father... this will delay our expected time to join with you." Andro said. "If we are to deal with this then..."

"It has to be dealt with Andro." Martin told him. "We can't have that kind of opposition or threat working in our backyard. Deia can be ruthless when she wants to be... but it takes her awhile to get wound up. She has enough on her hands with Icho as it is and it will take her too long to actually get to the point of acting on this information. I left some contingency plans with Selene and your tennas Tarifa and Aihola should the need arise. Lynwe and Tareif have been briefed by now as well. If it comes to it... they'll know what to do. And they won't play footsie with anyone."

"And the timetable you had?" Andro asked. "How does this alter things if we are late by several days father... if not more?"

"It doesn't alter anything in regards to Pusintin." Martin snarled. "I need to lance that open sore once and for all. And I will soon enough. As for the other thing... Avi estimates at least seven to eight weeks. You have time... but you will need to move quickly. Don't jerk around with the Vanari son. Naesta has told me they can belabor things until it drives you mad... you can't let them."

"I won't father... but our uncle has you outnumbered and outgunned in men and ships father." Andro said.

Martin nodded his head. "Yep... but he won't change his tactics Andro. They've worked for him for so long he thinks they are unbeatable. He thinks he can bull rush everything and anyone and just overwhelm them. I'm going to use that weakness. And his feelings for your mother are going to make him sloppy."

"You still believe that?" Andro asked.

Martin nodded. "More so now after talking with Kalis at length. He's in love with your mother for sure son. He's too stupid to process it though. And if For'mya gets a crack at him she's not going to be nice about it."

"I don't doubt that." Andro said.

"Your uncle is history regardless." Martin said. "He's not the main concern at the moment."

Andro nodded knowing that his father was perhaps the finest tactician living. He was a master of deceit and deception and he didn't doubt that the plan his father had for Pusintin was not going to be very pleasant. "The planets you discovered?" He asked finally.

"We may not get to all three of the planets that had our people on them before our guests arrive, but I can get to the two closest ones. I have a feeling we'll understand a lot more when we do." Martin answered.

"Father... you are going to cut it close." Dorian said.

Martin nodded his head in agreement. "It can't be helped Dorian." He answered his son. "Delnash and the Pralors out here are going to have their hands full." He looked at them. "Most of them are not soldiers. They have been running for so long, that little skill it has fallen to the wayside in favor of finding ways to keep them hidden and early warning systems. Garan and the few he has with him are top notch and he says there are a few thousand more like him, but for the most part they believed their technological superiority has been enough to sustain them. He is discovering that is not the case any longer."

"Is he still going through with elections?" Andro asked.

Martin nodded once more. "He's not a bad man Andro. Teniri is helping him. He's got backbone... he just forgot how to use it over the years. He's relearning quickly but this Lorendo scum is an unknown Andro. He's dirty. Real dirty. We just don't know how much. And if your mother Anja ever gets a hold of him again, she'll skin him alive before we find out." He looked at Andro. "It was a good call sending Akor'dris and Bae'diraz here son."

"They are adjusting I take it?" Andro asked.

Martin nodded. "Took them a few days... but they have begun to assist in training Miseo and some of the other Kavalians with Pralor blood in Drow scout techniques. Garen and his men with us as well. Akor'dris seems to be very dedicated to it. She has come to me twice with different ideas on how to alter training regimes and such to blend with their natural skills. Solid ideas and I told her to have at it. Miseo, Garen and their people have already fully accepted her and Bae'diraz. Muton and Ben have been head to head on improving the power output of their ship since he got here as well." Martin looked up. "You are bringing the Dragon Brigade?"

Andro nodded. "Durago has them on Elear right now being fitted with armor upgrades but they will depart in three days to meet us at Dreamland."

Martin nodded again. "Good. I want supplies now Andro." He said. "Armor, weapons, ammo, tactical turrets, rations, medical supplies... the whole shebang. Enough for six million adults and children. Load a dozen LEONIDAS IIs with the equipment and every fighter they can carry. Give the order and have Admiral Ceneu get them underway within two days. Also, send as many troops as we can spare and not make too many waves so the Netnews figures out something is up. What is going on out here needs to stay out here son. At least for now. If you can squeeze a full Battalion that should be good until you get here in force. Make sure all of the ships have the new Hyper Matter Fusion engines and then get them rolling to my location. I'll burst you data on where we will make our stand, study it, and then have Carina wash it through her wonderful head and send me her ideas and whatever else you can think up."

"You are concerned father." Andro spoke.

"Their current course puts them on a direct intercept trajectory for the Pralor world of Honelze." Martin told them. "Population of about three million. All of them living in a large city built at the base of a mountain. It's a colony world really. Nothing but civilians and a small militia."

"Importance?" Dorian asked.

"Largest source of this Quadranium Ore that Avi says is the mainstay of their Quantum Fusion Drives." Martin answered. "It's why they settled in this area of space instead of running further."

"Defensible?" Andro asked.

Martin met his eyes. "That depends on us. There's a large wall surrounding the colony with several smaller outposts nearby. We'll see." He answered.

Andro looked at Dorian in the transmission and then back to his father. "Understood."

"I'm going to send Murano with one of the corvettes to collect a copy of the Tomes son." Martin told him. "Let me know when you have SPARTA'S WRATH ready to depart. Make sure a copy remains with you, Dorian, Jomann and Deion and leave one copy at Dreamland with the usual safeties. Send the originals to Radalana."

Dorian looked at his father and then at Andro. He turned back to his father. "What is this Radalana father?" He asked.

Martin met his son's eyes. "It's something that only Andro, Yuriko, your uncle Daniel and your mothers know about at the moment son." He answered. "A handful of others who are very close to our family know as well. Less than twenty right now. Aside from those already involved. And it has existed for fourteen years. So that ought to tell you how closely guarded this little secret is."

"Fourteen years?" Dorian gasped. "And no one has...?"

Martin shook his head and looked at Andro. "Andro... it's time to share it with Dorian. I have a feeling he will play a part."

Andro nodded in agreement. "I'll take care of it father." He said.

Martin nodded his head to them affectionately. "The others will be here shortly so I can brief them." He said with a smile. "Keep me advised of what is going on my sons. And if you find that backstabbing, shit sorry motherfucker Moran and his sick son Dante... you give them a big wet kiss for me."

Andro smiled baring the tips of his wolf fangs. "Right before I send them and Xaxon into the pits of jorbhe father." He said.

"Avoi." Martin whispered. "We'll take again soon. Dorian...?"

Dorian looked at the image of his father. A man he had seen only briefly in his short life, but a man he was anxious to see once more. "Father?"

"I am so very proud of you son." Martin said softly. "I wish that... you have missed the things I shared with your brothers as they grew Dorian. I will make that up to you son. I give you my word I will make that up to you."

"Seeing you once more will be all the reward I need father." Dorian said. "You know that."

Martin nodded his head. "Maybe." He said. "Sometimes... sometimes this life, all this King shit royal family stuff... it really fucking sucks donkey balls you know."

Dorian laughed heartily. "That is a new one father." He said wiping his eyes. He stepped closer to the image of his father. "We will have that time father." He said.

Martin met his eyes. "Yes we will." He stated firmly. "Hang with your brothers once Denali joins you. Just don't let them corrupt you. I will talk to you both again in a few days."

Dorian laughed softly again and nodded. "Always father."

They stood and watched the image of their father fade from view and then Dorian looked at Andro as he poured a fresh mug of coffee for himself and reached out to refill Dorian's. He looked at his brother.

"Secret time fervon." Andro said softly. "The most guarded and sacred secret of our people. Now you must know."

"Why don't I like the way you say that fervon?" Dorian asked as he took the mug from his brother.

Andro grinned at him. "It's not all that bad." He said. "C'mon... I want to show you something. What you are about to see fewer than thirty know about outside of the project itself as father said. Now you will know the what and the why."

MANNE

"...sucks donkey balls?" Danny said as he stepped from the side of the room looking at Martin. "That's original."

Martin looked at him and chuckled as Danny lifted the glass of juice and took a sip from it. "I thought it was pretty good." He stated.

"Old Fervon." Danny said shaking his head. "Very old."

Martin took a deep breath and shrugged his broad shoulders. "I so just want to take them and disappear Danny." He said softly. "Just leave all this shit behind."

Dan nodded his head and reached up to squeeze his shoulder. "I'd be there with you. Anuk and Nayeca too."

Martin looked at him. "Do you ever think what things would be like if the comet never came?" He asked.

Danny nodded. "Sometimes... but what does it matter now? We would have eventually found out what we know now and we would be doing exactly the same thing as we are now. We are just doing it a few years earlier because of the comet."

"True enough." Martin said.

"Think of it this way..." Dan said. "You are experiencing the pleasure of their minds and bodies long before you would have without the comet kicking our asses into the future. All those legs and tits and lips and firm asses. I know I would be a basket case if I knew I had to wait another four hundred plus years to delve within Anuk and Nayeca's delights. And you would be one cranky bastard if you had to wait another four hundred plus years!"

Martin laughed now. "Now that is a very true statement." He said.

"See... I told ya." Danny spoke with a smile. "You worried Marty?" Danny asked him seriously a moment later.

Martin met his eyes. He had never lied to Danny in all their years together and he knew he would never be able to pull it off anyway. "A little." He said honestly. "There are too many unknowns that we can't piece together just yet. It makes me nervous."

"We'll get through it Marty." Danny said. "We always do."

Martin looked at him. "When did you become all prophetic on me?" He asked.

Dan grinned. "Anuk and Nayeca say I need to expand my horizons. Get in touch with my spiritual side. I'm trying. Not working is it?"

Martin shook his head. "Not by a long shot." He answered.

"Ah fuck it." Danny spat. "I gave it my best."

Martin saw the look on Danny's face and burst out laughing. Danny soon joined him and when the door opened into the COM building and Wayonn and Murano walked in slowly, the two of them were leaning against each other still sharing the laughter.

Murano looked at them oddly as he and Wayonn settled into chairs, while Wayonn could only smile. "An inside joke between brothers?" He asked.

Martin and Danny looked at him. "Something like that." Martin answered as he turned and saw the room filling with everyone now.

Martin watched as Anuk and Nayeca practically skipped up to where Danny stood, both of their faces beaming in happiness. He watched as Delnash's daughter Kesyla moved along behind them, maintaining a respectful distance, but her eyes and her scent all but telling Martin that she was very interested in Danny. And not just Danny it seemed as he saw her eyes wander over Anuk and Nayeca with similar interest. He turned quickly when first Aricia and then Anja and Dysea appeared in front of him. Aricia pressed right up to the front of his body, Anja and Dysea each claiming a side as For'mya, Bella and Cirith pressed up behind them. Aricia reached up and stoked his cheek gently and all of them saw the look in his eyes.

"You have been wandering Beloved." Aricia said softly.

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders with a smile. "Just wondering about the what ifs." He answered. "Nothing important. Really."

"Nauta Melme?" Dysea questioned him.

Martin smiled and leaned over to nuzzle her elven ear. "It's nothing Melda Min." He said. "I have all of you here and now." He told her as he looked at Anja. "I have all of you and that is what matters most to me." He finished as his eyes settled on For'mya.

"You are what matters most to us Beloved." Aricia told him in a soft whisper.

"Damn straight." Anja echoed as she squeezed her arm around his waist.

Martin smiled as he gazed into all of their eyes for a long moment, his Etheric resonance reaching out for each of them individually and collectively. He saw the looks of delight on their faces and Martin had to agree with Danny's assessment. He would have gone crazy having to wait another four hundred plus years waiting for each of them to come into his life. He leaned over to Aricia and firmly nuzzled her cheek drawing a sigh of bliss from her. He did this with each of them in turn, each caress of his lips and nose on their cheeks bringing forth contented sighs of happiness. Though Isabella was not wolf, the connection she shared with Dysea and the others as the dearest of lovers and friends allowed her to feel what they were feeling and then return that feeling in the Etheric pulse Martin gave to her. Since she could not feel his aura, his Etheric pulse was his way of making her feel his emotion and love for her. Martin leaned back after a moment and looked at them.

"You ready for this?" He asked.

"Let's get it over with so we can get down to business." Anja said quickly.

Martin grinned and reached down behind her body to slap her firm ass lightly. Anja yelped softly and slapped his hand away as they moved to the table and began to take their seats.

Martin turned his head and sipped his coffee and watched as Mari settled into the chair next to her uncle, while Kalis and General Koguth sat beside one another. Serale's face was glowing with new found love and happiness, matching a similar look on Kalis's face. She clung to his hand tightly, listening intently as Kalis and Koguth whispered back and forth. Fedor entered the room with Iama at his side, Eirene and Miseo right behind them. Akor'dris and Bae'diraz just behind them with Garen between them. The two Drow had been surprised to be included in this gathering, but Martin told them he wanted his primary instructors informed as best as possible. If they knew what they faced, they could train their people to adapt to different scenarios at any given time. They took up spots near the door, Garen and Bae'diraz conversing in soft whispers as Akor'dris looked at a data pad.

Martin turned as Avi's hulking form appeared silently beside him. "Avi... we all set?" He asked.

-Live upload from OMEN THREE is ready and Yuriko is standing by Martin- Avi answered.

Martin nodded as he watched the rest of his team enter and spread out along the back wall. "Then let's get started." He said. Martin turned to look at everyone sitting at the table and along the back wall. "Ok... shall we begin." His voice carried outward.

The volume of his voice told everyone this briefing was beginning and their attention focused on Martin completely.

"I told everyone when we started this little trip that I would keep all of you in the loop as best as possible." Martin told them. "It sucks not knowing what is going on... believe me I know. So... Avi and I are going to fill you in on what is happening and why. Wayonn... I believe Helen covered most of it with you yesterday?"

Wayonn nodded. "She hit the high points." He said. "It was... it was not what I expected Martin."
"It came as a surprise to us too." Martin said.

"Why do I get the feeling that I am the only one who does not know what you are talking about Martin?" Murano spoke now.

Martin met his gaze. "That was not done on purpose Murano. I do not like to act or make decisions without hard intelligence. When that happens, men usually die. I have put off this briefing until I knew for sure what is going on." Martin looked at Avi and nodded. They all watched as Avi turned to the side and activated the portable holodisc. The image of Yuriko Leonidas appeared in the transmission clearly and she bowed her head to her father.

"Good morning father." She said with a smile.

"Yuriko." Martin said.

Yuriko turned and looked at the six women she called mother and smiled affectionately. "Mothers."

"Yuriko." Aricia spoke warmly for all of them as she normally did.

Yuriko turned back to her father. "Astrometrics reports they are standing by father."

Martin nodded. "Avi... roll it." He spoke.

Everyone watched as the image of Yuriko faded and the image changed to one of the stars and a small white spec among those stars.

-As you are all aware, the sensor platforms on OMEN THREE are based on Pralor technology derived from City Ship 41's own sensors. They have a much longer range and a more advanced Spectral Variance range than the ARC ROYAL's own sensor grid. They are able to detect anomalies at much larger range differentials- Avi explained as he touched the control panel at the base of the holodisc and the image changed. -Two days after the ARC ROYAL entered this Quadrant of space OMEN THREE's long range TNL array detected something. Since it did not conform to any known ships or anomalies in our own computer data files, the Senior Sensor Chief correctly assigned it a lower priority until it could be determined what exactly it was. It was continually tracked regardless of OMEN THREE's location. The Senior Chief informed Yuriko at the time, who then in turn, informed Martin Leonidas. The object, as I have stated, has since been under constant track by OMEN THREE's Tactical Sensor Array and three days ago, we were able to determine what it was. Shrouded probes were launched and then recovered by OMEN THREE at different intervals and they have confirmed it.-

"What... what have you discovered Avatar 41?" Murano asked.

Avi turned to look at him. -My name is Avi... Praetorian Murano. I would appreciate in the future if you used my proper name-

Murano looked taken aback as Mari sat beside him and could barely contain the laughter that wanted to explode from her chest. Murano looked at her quickly and then back to Avi. "My apologies." He stated recovering quickly from his surprise. He glanced at Martin.

Martin grinned and shrugged. "Don't look at me." He said. "Blame Endy for this one." He said. "She's the one who named him."

"Damn right!" Endith barked from where she stood beside Tina and Ben.

Everyone turned to see them leaning against Ben by the wall looking happier than they had in months. It had been a long time since they had seen their husband of over two decades and they had made up for their separation quite enthusiastically over the last few days.

Martin shook his head with a smile. "Avi... give them the details please." He said ending the soft chuckles and grins that were apparent on all their faces.

-Very well Martin- Avi answered as he went back to configuring his console. -Three days ago one of OMEN THREE's Tactical Shroud Probes was able to approach within ten thousand meters of the object in question without detection. These are the external images it obtained-

The hololive changed to show a darkened object that looked metallic in nature and appeared to be immense. The view was not exceptional quality but there was no mistaking the massive gun turrets that dotted the outer portion of the object.

“It’s not a very clear image.” Mari commented. “Can you adjust the spectral variance Avi?” She asked.

-The Probe’s distance from the object would not allow for variance adjustment Miss Mari- Avi answered her. -The external hull was emitting some sort of polarized Thorium radiation that was interfering with clear sensor images-

“Thorium radiation?” Mari asked confused. “Avi... that would indicate a power source of some kind.” She stated.

Avi nodded his head and shifted his massive seven foot tall body to the main star chart table around which many of them sat and he activated the chart. -You are correct Miss Mari. At first it was thought to be a meteor of some kind due to its size, however, when the Tactical Shroud Probe got to within optimum transmitting range of its onboard internal video equipment, its sensors detected the radiation- He spoke as the star chart activated. -The images we are seeing are as clear as we can make them for this distance-

“Distance?” Koguth spoke up now. He was a ship officer by definition and perhaps the most knowledgeable of ship tactics and abilities among those gathered. “You said the distance was ten thousand meters. We are only seeing a small section from the images you are showing us here.”

-That is correct General Koguth- Avi said.

Koguth met Avi’s eyes. “Exactly how large is this object?”

Yuriko’s image shifted in the holotransmission from OMEN THREE. Her eyes went to her father. “Father?” She asked.

Martin looked at her and nodded. “Tell them Yuriko. We need to lay all our information on the table now.”

Yuriko nodded and turned back to look at Koguth. “Preliminary information from three days of scans have given us an approximate size and mass. They indicate that the object is oval shaped and in excess of forty five thousand meters in length.”

“Forty-five thousand...” Ben sputtered aloud from where he stood. “Jumping Christ Marty... that’s like thirty miles long!”

-Twenty-nine point five five to be exact Admiral O’Connor- Avi spoke again. -With a beam of five point two miles-

“What is it?” Kesyla asked from her chair next to Anuk. “A meteor of some kind? An Asteroid?”

“No.” Martin said shaking his head slowly. “It’s a ship.”

“A ship?” Murano gasped in disbelief.

“A collection of ships actually.” Yuriko added from the transmission. “Avi?”

-The STPs from OMEN THREE identified nineteen different class ships. All of them have been, for lack of a more defining description, they have been welded together to form one large vessel- Avi answered. -Interior scans show that where bulkheads should be, corridors now exist. It appears as if all the engines from these ships have been centrally located to the aft third of the vessel itself.-

“Wait... how many ships are we talking about father?” Fedor asked. “Something that large would mean that...”

“...there would have to be hundreds.” Kalis finished his brother’s statement without even realizing it.

-You and your brother would be quite accurate Fedor Leonidas- Avi answered. -I have reviewed the sensor scans and have determined that there are at least four hundred and nineteen different ships of varying size making up the whole-

“Four hundred and nineteen?” Koguth rasped. “How... how is that even possible? Who could create such a thing? The technological skill needed to incorporate that many ships into one is...”

“It’s not a technology we possess.” Martin spoke softly.

“Hell no!” Ben spat. “Who would want to. It has to be a nightmare to keep running!”

“Then who Skipper?” Kenny demanded from where he stood with T'lolt.

“It is... it is Pralor technology.” Murano’s voice was soft but clear when he answered. It was almost as if he was embarrassed to admit it.

Mari looked at him stunned. “Uncle... that cannot be!” She stated. “I have never seen this type of technology in all my years of schooling.”

“Nor I.” Kesyla echoed her sister.

“Your Uncle is correct Mari.” The new voice spoke now and they all turned to the side to see Delnash’s face appear in another holodisc image beside Yuriko’s.

“Father?” Kesyla and Mari gasped coming to their feet.

“Welcome Chief Elder.” Martin spoke casually.

Delnash nodded his head from within the transmission. “Thank you Martin.” He spoke with a nod. “It is Pralor technology Mari.” He continued. “A very old Pralor technology that was never actually taken past the testing stage. It was thought to be a way to combat the Scourge in the very beginning. Something that Sumar came up with long ago. The ability to merge our ships together. Damaged vessels could be incorporated into others and...”

“Making them stronger and tougher.” Ben spoke as he stepped forward. “That is... man that is fascinating.”

Delnash nodded his head. “Yes but the power calculations and variances were too much to factor over different periods of time and therefore Sumar correctly deemed the technology was too risky and essentially useless in the end.”

Kesyla looked between her father and Martin several times. “Father... you have been in contact with King Leonidas all this time?” She asked.

Delnash nodded again. “We have established a permanent Etheric connection so to speak at both Murano and Teniri’s recommendation. He has kept me up to date about everything that has happened and will happen in the future.”

Radra looked at Anja first and then Dueva from where she sat. She turned back to Anja. “You have known this Anja?” She asked.

Anja shrugged her shoulders. “There is very little that Martin keeps from us Radra. I’ve told you that.” She stated. She looked at the man she so adored and loved. “You have another shoe to drop Lover.” She said. “Something you have been keeping even from us. What is it?”

“Anja is right Martin... you should tell them the rest.” Delnash spoke. “Everyone should know now.”

All eyes turned back to Martin and he shifted on his booted feet. “It ain’t pretty folks.” He stated. “In fact... it’s down right scary.”

“Jesus Skipper... just spit it out will ya!” Julie declared.

“The sensors on OMEN THREE have also picked up lifeforms on this ship.” Martin told them. “Our scaly friends to be exact.”

“Svorag!” Kasdan and Garan rasped as one.

Martin nodded slowly. “Not just any Svorag either. Yuriko?” He said.

“All data we have gathered so far indicates that these Svorag are a mix of Lycavorian and Pralor DNA mother.” She stated looking at Anja. “More of our people than Pralor... but it is there in number.”

Anja looked at Martin with wide jade green eyes. “The Lycavorian colonies!” She gasped aloud.

Martin nodded his head again. “Yes.”

“Carians no Martin!” Aricia stammered.

“Delnash that would mean that...” Radra began to speak but stopped when she saw him nodding his head within the transmission.

“Yes... that would indicate, at least in part, that what Anja believes about Lorendo is true. He has already admitted to basically creating the Svorag in the hopes of controlling them to fight the Scourge. His goals did not work out as he had hoped.” Delnash explained. “Now I believe he is trying to cover up whatever other actions he took. Among those actions, somehow giving the location of the Lycavorian colonies to the Svorag.”

“He tried to cover it up!” Radra exclaimed. “By murdering those of our people that he put in harms way and were infected because he started this work! Is there nothing we can do?”

Delnash shook his head. “He has not admitted to anything other than what we know now Radra, but I’m quite sure there is much more. To include whatever took place with the colonies of Martin’s people. Unfortunately... there is no proof to back up this belief.”

“Has he made his intentions known father?” Kesyla asked.

Delnash met her eyes. “Since I have announced there will be elections held he has been focused on turning the people to his side. To his way of thinking.” Delnash looked at Martin. “I suspect just as this man will move against your Aunt Martin?”

Martin nodded. “Scum bags are all the same no matter the species.” He stated.

Delnash nodded. “It seems you are correct in that Martin. I can only assume this term you use... scumbag... it is not a term of endearment.”

Martin smiled. “Not by a long shot.” He said.

“Father you must allow me to return!” Kesyla spoke now. “You need me to help you and...”

“No!” Delnash popped. “Your skills are now needed with Martin and his people.” He told her. “You are safer with them anyway. I do not trust Lorendo and I have no doubts he will do anything he needs to in order to win this election. Including targeting those I love.”

“Mother?” Kesyla gasped.

Delnash shook his head. “I already had her moved to one of our two colony worlds.” He said softly. “Unfortunately... I may have done more harm than good in that action.”

“What do you mean brother?” Murano asked now leaning forward in his chair. “What is going on? What are you not telling us?”

Martin took a deep breath. “Arande?” He spoke looking at Yuriko.

“This ship has been on the same course since we first detected it.” She stated calmly. “It’s size does not permit faster than light travel apparently, but it has dozens of sublight engines that have been working at full power since we picked it up and began scanning.”

“What course?” Radra demanded.

“It’s on a direct intercept course for the Pralor colony world on Honelze.” Martin told them.

“No!” Garan exclaimed.

-We estimate that it will arrive in orbit of Honelze in seven to eight weeks. Ten weeks at the latest-Avi spoke again now. -Along with the forty odd ships that it is moving in formation with. Everything from frigate class to heavy cruiser. All of the ships of older Pralor design-

“That’s not the bad news.” Martin said gently.

“What?” Kasdan almost shouted. He was very excitable everyone knew. “That is horrible news! The colony on Honelze is over three million strong! The majority of them are civilian workers and engineers!”

Murano looked at Martin intently, sensing that the news was going to be far worse than even he could imagine. “Martin? Tell us everything.” He stated.

Martin took another deep breath and pushed away from the table. “From what Yuriko’s scans have been able to pick up, this big ship, this mother ship if you will, it’s loaded with Svorag.”

“How many Martin?” Murano asked softly.

Martin met his eyes evenly. “I had her and Avi stop counting when it didn’t really matter anymore.” He stated plainly.

“By the Elders! NO!” Radra exclaimed with a horrified expression.

“How many Martin?” Murano asked again a cold feeling seeping into his chest and heart.
“They stopped counting at seven million.” Martin stated.

SCIMITAR
EDGE OF UNION BORDER
GELLEN ASTEROID BELT

Sadi moved down one of the ship’s flight corridors with Ne’Veha on her right side and Kameka on the left. All of them were wearing standard flight suits and holding near identical data pads and discussing the specs on the ship that was being built at Dreamland, though all three of them kept referring back to the pad in Sadi’s hand. Kameka’Caleo had fully embraced this new life within the Union as Daio’s wife and mate. In just the last few weeks alone she had opened up so much emotionally. Daio had helped her to throw her demons into the abyss and now she was almost never without a smile on her face. Her mother had been so overwhelmed at everything that had occurred since being spirited out of Kavalian territory but she simply adored Daio and how he treated her daughter. Her mother was thrilled that their family had escaped the death sentence put on their heads by the Kavalian High Command and she had also become one of the strongest Kavalian females to speak out with the other wives in regards to their support and determination to see that their husbands succeeded in freeing their people. She very openly campaigned for her husband Byka and General Azlenr and General Pian, trying to pull more and more Kavalians to their way of thinking even if it was done through pirated transmissions into Kavalian space.

Though Kavalian by birth, Kameka’Caleo had been offered a provisional promotion into the Union Fleet by unanimous consensus of the Fleet Board. Many believed that Kameka would herald a new day in Lycavorian and Kavalian relations and she had jumped at the position with no hesitation. She now proudly held the rank of Commander in the Union Fleet. She knew part of this was because of Daio and his role on Andro’s personal team, but she had every intention of making sure everyone knew she was as fine a pilot as any within the Union. A position that Daio fully supported her on in every way.

To say that her Lycavorian husband was a gift from the gods would not be enough in Kameka’s eyes. Daio was far more than she had ever dreamed she would have in her lifetime. Not only did he curl her toes in their bed, he considered her more intelligent than him in many ways and did not hesitate to ask her opinion of something. He treated her as something more than a precious gem and Meka walked around now with a perpetual smile of bliss on her tanned face. She had been studying the many cultures and traditions of Lycavorians so that she could honor her husband’s customs and she communicated with Daio’s mother nearly every other day to facilitate this. Her father saw how she had embraced this new life given to her by fate and Byka could do nothing but approve.

“...have to run some simulations in recovering the STRIKER.” Sadi spoke as she tapped on the pad. “You’ll be in command when SirsanGai and I take the STRIKER Meka. We’ll need to practice several times to make sure we have the recovering maneuvers down.”

Kameka looked at her with wide eyes. “Me?” She gasped.

Sadi nodded. “Of course. You think we are going to leave our ship in someone else’s hands?” She spoke with a smile. “Brendi is studying the engineering specs faithfully so she can fill in while we are gone, but only the three of us will be able to pilot her. That means you are in command when we are gone.”

Kameka blinked several times. “But you will not always... Princess Eliani and others will not always be with you. They will remain on the ship at times. They should be in command Sadi. Not me.”

Sadi shook her head. “No. None of Andro’s siblings will go against him or us on this.” Sadi said. “Even Normya agreed. If we are gone then you are in command of the ship. Period. They will back you up on this all the way Meka.”

“I am... I am Kavalian.” Kameka said still stunned.

“You are a Commander in the Union Fleet now.” Ne’Veha told her. “And we will be the only three who will know what this ship can do. We will be the only ones who can fly her. At least in the beginning.”

Kameka let this sink in for a moment and met their eyes. “I will not fail.” She said.

Sadi laughed and bumped into her with her hip as they walked. "I hope not... we are going to be counting on you to come bail our collective asses out of the fire whenever Andro starts trouble."

Ne'Veha smiled. "And trouble does follow him." She said.

Kameka couldn't help but laugh now, the new part of her accepting with pride what her role was to be. She would be in command of perhaps the most advanced warship in the Union Fleet when Andro, Sadi and Ne'Veha were gone. It was a task she would embrace and relish.

The roar of laughter drew all of their attention and they stopped to look through the clear glass into one of the pilot's briefing rooms. Roughly sixteen Lycavorian and Elf pilots were in the briefing room and watching a security feed on the main monitor.

What was on the monitor however, this caused Sadi's eyes to grow wide and fill with anger. Ne'Veha glanced at Sadi quickly when she felt her emotions spike.

"Sadi?" She asked softly.

Sadi's jungle green eyes didn't blink. "Wait here SirsanGai." She said evenly. "I will only be a moment."

Sadi moved for the entrance into the Briefing Room smartly, with no hesitation in her steps or her demeanor. The comparisons to Gorgo had been growing stronger through the year, the vast majority of the men and women who called Sparta home speaking of her in the same breath as their beloved former Queen. Her love for Androcles was absolute and stirred images and memories of Gorgo's devotion to King Leonidas so long ago. She was compassionate and confident, not a woman who would cower in the face of danger or fear. She drew people to her almost as strongly as her beloved mate and husband. She inspired men and women both because of what she had done through her life and what she had accomplished. Sadi went out of her way to avoid having to use her official title, influence and authority as Crown Princess, which was very substantial to say the least, in order to get what she wanted. While she didn't know it, Sadi and her fellow Crown Princess were nearly as revered as the Queens when it came to respect and devotion.

It was this knowledge that made Sadi Leonidas walk right into the Briefing Room and push her way past several pilots as they cheered and right up to the monitor. The Security log had just shown Sadi slapping Ulana viciously across the face.

"Answer me woman or I will beat you until you are wailing like an infant being pulled from the womb!"

This brought an even louder round of cheering and clapping and her hand flashed forward and Sadi deactivated the security log.

"Hey what do you...?" The Lycavorian pilot in the front began to protest until Sadi spun around quickly and they saw who it was.

"Princess Sadi!" The same man gasped.

"What is the meaning of this?" Sadi demanded. "Where did you get this?"

"Princess... we were just admiring your... ability to get your point across." The pilot told her with a grin. He was Lycavorian and obviously the one that was the leader of this group of pilots.

Sadi glared at him. "This... this is funny to you?" She spat.

The Lycavorian looked around and saw the smiles from his fellow pilots and then turned back to her. "You have to admit Princess... it is very entertaining." He stated smugly.

Sadi moved closer to him. "What is your name?" She asked.

"Senior Lieutenant Zethor Princess." He answered proudly as he puffed out his chest. "I am second in command of the 16th Fighter Regiment here on the SCIMITAR."

"Tell me Senior Lieutenant..." Sadi spoke calmly. "Where did you acquire this Security Log?"

The man grinned. "Rumors have been spreading through the ship of your... encounter... with Senator Ulana Princess. I know the Senior Bridge Tech who monitors all Security Logs. I asked him for a copy."

Sadi looked at him. "Why would you sit here and laugh about this?" She asked.

"Princess... we all have seen what she has done. What she has accused you and the Prince of. How she has treated you publicly. Seeing her put her in place is most amusing. None of us... many of us from the 16th Regiment are from the area of Apo Prime that her father and now her represent. We don't care for her and we certainly did not vote for her to succeed her igord father." Zethor spoke.

"But she did succeed her father Lieutenant." Sadi stated.

"She is a upae who..." Zethor snapped. He never got to finish his sentence as Sadi's hand flashed out and she slapped him across his face. The blow echoed in the Briefing Room and caused the other pilots to become suddenly silent.

"She is a Senator of the Lycavorian Union and an Alpha female!" Sadi barked at him. Zethor held his face with one hand and glared at Sadi with angry eyes as he drew himself to his full height. If he thought his physical stature would make Sadi pause, he was sorely mistaken as Sadi stepped closer to him. "And you will treat her with the respect and honor that position gives her!" Sadi barked as she looked at him. "Who and where is your Commanding Officer?"

"I am here Milady." The deep voice spoke from the side and Sadi turned to see the older elf pilot move into the Briefing Room from another door. "Commander Alno."

"Commander... were you aware of this?" Sadi demanded.

The elf glared at Zethor as he answered. "No... I was not Milady." He growled.

Sadi turned back to Zethor. "This is something that happened between two Alpha females Senior Lieutenant Zethor. It has been going on for as long as our people have been in existence! It did not happen in an open area of the ship for all to see for obvious reasons. Who are you to take it upon yourself to take a copy of a Secure Log and use it to entertain all of your friends and fellow pilots?"

Sadi moved closer until she was standing only inches from him and her face was looking up to his. Her eyes shifted and her fangs extended openly, exposing the wicked looking dual set of incisor fangs known only to exist in the Leonidas bloodline and those of the females they chose as wives and mates. "You may not care for the Senator or her ideals, but she is a Senator of this Union and whatever took place between her and I is our business Lieutenant! No one else's! Certainly not yours! I will not allow an egotistical male to besmirch her name or her status among our people because he does not like her! Am I making myself clear enough for you Senior Lieutenant?"

Zethor stood there glaring at Sadi in silence and she moved closer.

"You will answer me Lieutenant... or I will beat you until you are wailing like a baby being pulled from the womb!" Sadi spat at him angrily. "And do not think for a moment that I am unable or unwilling to do that, or have you forgotten who has trained me for the last year to defend myself."

Zethor's fellow pilots began to shift back slowly from behind him, moving away slowly to distance themselves from him. All of them knew what Princess Sadi meant with her words. Androcles Leonidas was now widely recognized as the single, foremost hand to hand combatant within the entire Union military, even more so than his father, who was deadly lethal himself. His grueling training had taken place nearly from his birth at the hands of the most gifted and deadly Lycavorian scouts and Drow warriors within the Union and no one could now match his abilities. His unique and lethal style of fighting combined elements from many different styles and no one had yet been able to master it. It was also very broadly known that he viewed his wives and mates in much the same manner as how his father viewed his mothers the Queens and that meant to go against any one of them was to go against him. That was not something anyone did willingly.

"You will respond Lieutenant!" Alno barked angrily from the side.

"I... I understand Princess." Zethor hissed softly.

Sadi's eyes and fangs disappeared instantly and she paused a moment before she reached up to place her palm on Zethor's cheek gently. "Listen to me... all of you." She spoke. "These are the things that make us better than those who want to take from us everything we have. We are above such petty things. We defend this Union no matter who holds the positions of power within her government. That is what drives us. That is all that should drive us. That is the oath that we took when we put the uniform on, is it not?"

Zethor didn't pause for an instant in his answer and he nodded. "It is Milady." He spoke.

Sadi turned and ejected the tiny Security Disc from the computer monitor and then turned back to Zethor. "Ulana is a beautiful young woman and an Alpha female. She follows the ideals she was raised with, as do we all. We may not agree with them, we may even think most of them are stupidly ignorant," Sadi held up the disc to him. "But this is not the way to change their minds about anything."

Alno stepped forward. "Forgive me Princess." He spoke. "I will discipline..."

“No.” Sadi spoke firmly. She looked at Zethor. “The only way to make Ulana see that perhaps her ideals are wrong is to show her. She is not...” Sadi paused. “She is not the woman she projects to everyone. There is something inside her... something that is buried deep within her that is trying to claw its way out. That is what I believe. She is a Senator of this Union and we will honor and respect that position and title as our training dictates. This...” Sadi held up the disc and then put it in Zethor’s hand. “This only hinders that task.” Sadi looked at Alno. “This incident never took place Commander.” She stated. “Am I clear?”

Alno bowed his head. “As you order Princess.”

Sadi turned back to Zethor. “She is a beautiful Alpha wolf Zethor, as I said. Use your senses and look beyond what she projects outwardly to others. You might just see what I have seen.” She looked at the disc in his hand. “Destroy that.” She stated. “And whatever copies you may have made. If this Security log finds its way to other parts of this ship and her reputation and honor is damaged in any way because of it... I will hold you responsible and you will never fly in defense of this ship or the Union ever again.”

Zethor nodded quickly, the threat very clear. To be disgraced in such a manner would be devastating in anyone’s eyes. “Yes Princess.”

Sadi turned back to Alno. “I am done here Commander. No other action is necessary. I believe I have gotten my point across. No other reprimands, no verbal lashing, no other punitive punishment.”

“As you say Princess.” He spoke. “In your words... this incident never took place.”

Sadi nodded. “Good. Now if you will excuse me... I have some work to take care of.”

The pilots parted like an ocean as Sadi made for the door. She stepped into the corridor, took a deep breath and saw Ne’Veha’s wide, brown eyes gazing at her. Her brow furrowed.

SirsanGai? She asked within Mindvoice.

Look to your right Sadi. Ne’Veha answered.

Sadi turned and her eyes grew a little wider when she saw Ulana standing there with the young Folcani, Elven and Lycavorian Senators that Deia had chosen to accompany them on this trip. She blinked her eyes several times, seeing Ulana’s wide eyes focused on her and then she took another deep breath.

“Senators.” She spoke evenly bowing her head slightly. “Is there... is there something I can do for you?”

The Elven Senator that Deia had chosen to be the leader of this delegation was tall for an elf, reaching nearly six foot in height, and very well built. He was a former member of the very powerful Lower Elven Parliament, one of the youngest elves to be elected to that body, and for lack of a better explanation Deia had described him as more militant than most elves she had met. He believed deeply in the Union and what it stood for and was a staunch supporter of both Andro’s parents and Deia and all they had done. Together with the Lycavorian and Folcani Senators, all of them young and upcoming, they were part of a new youth movement within the Union. Young men and women from across the spectrum of worlds and species of the Union that had chosen to enter politics and see to it that their way of life continued forward. All of them raised in deeply traditional and culturally forward thinking families.

“Ah... a moment of your time Princess?” The Elven Senator spoke. “I am Ya’sur and...”

Sadi smiled a brilliant smile. “Senator Ya’sur... please. I know who all of you are. What can I do for you?”

“I was told by Admiral Sa’sur that Prince Androcles is not onboard and we are... we seem to be lost for lack of a better word.” Ya’sur said with an embarrassed grin.

The Lycavorian Senator smiled as well. “I was on a LEONIDAS II before... but only for a few weeks. I apparently did not memorize the ship as well as I thought.”

Sadi chuckled softly. “The SCIMITAR is a little different Senator Pyath is it?”

The young man laughed softly. “Senator igord is more like it.” He stated with a nod. “But my given name is Pyath... yes.”

Ya’sur and the Folcani Senator echoed the soft laughter, Ulana remaining silent but not looking arrogant in any way. “We were all exploring this wonderful ship and got lost together.” He said finally.

“The SCIMITAR is laid out slightly different because she has the ability to carry multiple dragons.” Sadi told him. “It’s not surprising you got lost.”

“I don’t suppose you would be willing to direct us.” Ya’sur asked.

“I can do better than that... I can give you the basic tour if you like?” Sadi offered to them. “Our Saradasaar was supposed to meet with you this morning I know, but he left earlier with his brothers Dorian and Deion to pick up someone who will be accompanying us on our trip to the Beta Quadrant. They will be back later this evening.” Sadi told him.

“A problem?” Pyath asked.

Sadi shook her head quickly. “No... we are just picking up this passenger a few days before we had intended. Carisia and Lu'ria are with him and Sehri is acquainting herself with the ship as well.”

“Ah yes... your new Rothryn mate and...” Ya'sur stumbled over his words and Sadi smiled at his awkwardness.

“Our wife, mate and lover.” She spoke proudly. “Yes... and we are very happy about that.” She said.

Ya'sur nodded. “As well you should be.” He said quickly. “Now it is I who looks like an igord.”

“Not at all.” Sadi said. She turned to Ne'Veha. “SirsanGai why don't you and Meka take care of the calibrations and we'll do the simulations later this afternoon.”

Ulana stepped forward now. “She is... she is a Kavalian.” She spoke softly but with a very neutral tone to her voice.

Sadi nodded her head in agreement. “Yes she is Senator Ulana. Kameka'Calao is also now a Commander in the Union Fleet and the wife and mate to a Durcunusaan officer who is part of Andro's personal team. She is a trusted friend and a fellow pilot who is also part of Ne'Veha's and my flight crew.”

Kameka laughed gently. “Well... I try to be at times. A pilot anyway.” She spoke in a flippant reply as her tail danced around behind her happily. Her comment had the desired affect and Kameka was very pleased with herself as Ya'sur and Pyath laughed.

Sadi smiled brightly at her. “Meka is also one of only three individuals who knows how to fly the ship we will be picking up soon.” She said turning back to them. “Please... come with me and I'll fill you in on the changes to our itinerary and the mission. Andro can brief you more fully when he returns.”

LYCAVORIAN DEFENSIVE BORDER

.05 LY OUTSIDE THE GELLEN ASTEROID FIELD

Normya adjusted her controls and the TYPE II settled into a holding pattern using just it's secondary thrusters. Tir'ut's eyes remained on the three large control panels that encircled him in the co-pilot's seat. Not surprisingly, being husband and wife had made the two of them a perfect blend as pilot and co-pilot.

“We are holding station fervon.” Normya said calmly turning her head to look at Andro.

Andro nodded. “Now we wait.” He said.

“Are you sure they got the message Andro?” Zarah asked from her seat at the engineer's station.

Andro nodded. “They got it.” He said. “They will come in Shrouded arande, just as we are. To avoid unnecessary eyes from seeing them. Once they arrive we will move back across the border.”

Normya nodded. “Already have the corridor plotted and we deactivated the defensive minefields and turrets.” She tapped her jaw implant. “Lucia... did that coupling give you any trouble?”

Lucia's voice came through loud and clear in reply. “Not after I hit it a few times.” She answered.

Normya laughed softly. “I like your style arande.” She said in reply. Lucia was Zarah's lover and most considered them mated, so as far as Normya or any in her family were concern she was their sister as well.

Andro nodded. “Good. I'll be in back.” He said as he turned. He stopped and looked at Zarah who met his azure colored eyes with her dark brown eyes.

[Zarah...] He began to speak in the private link he shared with her.

Zarah shook her head. [No.] She said quickly. [I am here because I want to be. I do not fear anymore Andro.] Zarah smiled shyly. [Well... not as much anyway. I trust in you though. Lucia trusts in you. If what... if what you believe is true about what Xaxon did to her... then maybe there is a chance that Lucia and Carisia can have their mother back. One who loves them as our mothers love us... right? As it should have been before... before she was twisted by Xaxon.]

[Is that what you want?] He asked her.

[I love Lucia Andro. I love her with all that I am. And she loves me. I know that is what she wishes for.] Zarah smiled brightly. [A half breed and a pureblood. Who would have thought that? We will always have each other no matter... no matter what the future brings. And we can always adopt right?]

[You saved each other arande.] Andro told her. [But do not discount what the future might bring to you both.]

Zarah chuckled. [We are not worried about that. We joke about it. Who would want us together? There is not one of us without the other now. We know that. We embrace it.]

[Good.] Andro said as he moved up beside her and looked into her eyes. [Just do not dismiss what the future could bring to you both. Hold onto each other tightly... but be open to what could be.]

Zarah looked at him oddly. He was not telling her something she knew. Their unique bond was not as profound as the one he shared with Elynth or his wives and mates, but it was stronger than most.

[What are you not telling me?] She asked him.

Andro smiled. [Me. Not tell you something?]

[Yes you!] Zarah snapped.

Andro smiled and leaned over to kiss her forehead and then he nuzzled her cheek in a brotherly fashion. Zarah smiled as she felt his affection course through her. [Just keep in mind what I said.] He told her. [Do not discount what the future could bring or where it could come from. Either of you.]

Andro moved through the doorway into the rear of the TYPE II before Zarah could question him more and he saw Lucia move up the small set of steps. She brushed against him affectionately with a knowing look in her eyes and disappeared into the cockpit. Andro turned and saw the rest of them sitting at the table in the upper portion of the TYPE II's deck. He saw Carisia turn to look at him and rise to her feet. She sauntered over to him with a small smile on her beautiful face and stepped right up to him, folding herself into his arms. He pulled her tightly to him and looked down into her maya blue eyes while reaching up to brush some of her raven colored hair from her cheek. She had taken to wearing the edges of her hair braided into three long strands just as Lu'ria did, with soft purple beads throughout the length, the bead color being the major color of Lu'ria's Drow family.

Andro leaned over and kissed her soft lips gently, brushing their noses together as he pulsed her with his Etheric resonance. Carisia sighed in delight and squeezed him tighter around the waist.

Enylarcopri. He whispered softly to her in their MV connection. He did not need to shield their conversation for no one on the ship besides Lu'ria would be able to detect it. The link he shared with all of his wives and mates was so far above normal MV powers that only his father or mothers would be able to discern what they were saying.

I am fine my love. She answered him, knowing what was going through his mind almost without having to guess.

You did not have to come. He told her drawing back and looking into her eyes.

Carisia nodded her head. Yes I did. She told him. I need to see for myself what it is you believe. I need to see her.

And then? He asked.

I don't know Andro. She answered honestly. If I see her however, see that it wasn't truly her who was doing these things to me all of these years, that somehow Xaxon was behind it all, it would...

It would be that much easier to forgive? Andro said.

Carisia nodded. I would not be able to hate her Andro. I... your mothers have been there for me my love... but they are your mothers. If what you believe is true, then I have a chance, Lucia has a chance, we can have our mother back.

And Onera? He asked.

Carisia shook her head quickly. She is my sister... it does not matter to me that she is half Immortal. Lucia and I have different fathers, but we have grown so close since she revealed her true self. Lisisa and I are as close as sisters can be and the three of us have talked often. I can learn so much from her Andro, Lucia and I can learn so much from her and we... Lucia and I hope to be able to teach her what we have learned as well.

She may be hesitant at first Enylarcopri. He told her. If what Tir'ut has told me is close to how it is, being the child of an Immortal is not the easiest thing. And the child of a brother of Cha'talla must be even harder.

Carisia nodded in agreement. She will be with us though. She spoke. We can learn about her just as she learns about us. I want... Carisia reached up and took his face in her hands. I want to be able to reach out to my mother Andro. The woman who bore me. I want to... Lucia and I both... we want to be able to tell her things. Share things with her. We are clinging to the hope that what you believe has truly happened. We will know when we see her. Then perhaps... then the healing can begin. And we can put the past that Xaxon forced upon her behind us.

True enough. Andro said.

Normya's voice interrupted their conversation from the internal COM. "Andro... I think they are here." She spoke.

Andro looked up at the air. "You think? What does 'you think' mean Normya?" He asked with a grin.

"Wise ass!" Normya hissed softly.

"It appears as if they have improved their Shrouds Andro." Tir'ut spoke now, his voice filled with humor. "We're detecting intermittent phased spatial distortions at the coordinates you gave to Yuri."

Andro looked at Carisia and saw her nod confidently. "Very well. Send the signal arande."

"Signal away!" Normya announced.

HIGH COVEN ORIC CLASS HEAVY CRUISER RETRIBUTION

"...On our sensors for over fifteen minutes now." The senior vampire tactical officer spoke moving up to Norev's chair. "Shouldn't we contact them? Let them know we are here?"

Norev chuckled softly as he heard the doors to the bridge slid open and Yuri strode onto the bridge with Pa'cour and Onera beside her on either side. Nameia walked confidently beside Pa'cour and no one questioned her presence. Over the last few days the crew of the ship and many on the base had noticed that the elven female had become almost as much of a fixture in Yuri's life as Pa'cour and Onera. They were almost never apart it seemed it appeared as if Onera and Pa'cour did not question her closeness with the Princess. He turned back to his young First Officer. He had broken up most of the senior officers of his frigate in order to staff and train the fledgling fleet that Princess Yuri now had. She had made him Captain of this ORIC II-Class Heavy Cruiser. It was the latest model of refit for the older ORIC Class and was every bit as modern as any new ship within the High Coven Fleet.

"Trust me Jakeel." Norev told him. "They know we are here." He turned as Yuri and Pa'cour came up next to his chair. He began to rise but Yuri's hand on his arm stopped him.

"They are here I take it?" Yuri said.

Norev nodded as he settled back into his chair. "They arrived seventeen minutes ago Princess." He told her. "Just as the young Prince said he would."

Yuri nodded her head with a smile. "Have they sent the signal?" She asked.

Norev shook his head. "Not as of yet. More than likely they are conducting scans of the surrounding area to insure no other ships are in range."

Yuri looked at him. "Have they detected us?" She asked.

Norev shrugged. "That I can not answer, but given the information we have on their sensor capability I would bet yes."

"Even with our improved Shrouds Norev?" Pa'cour asked.

"While Professor Lidene has improved our Shroud's efficiency Pa'cour..." Norev told him in reply. "He can only tweak them so much without putting into a ship dock for a complete overhaul. That is something we are not able to do just yet."

Pa'cour nodded. "Point taken." He said looking at his wife. "Do you sense him Yuri?"

Yuri turned her dark brown eyes on him and shook her head slightly before glancing over to where Onera was standing by the engineer's station. "I can not. He must be heavily shielded. Onera?"

Onera nodded her head slowly. "They are here mother." She said softly.

Yuri nodded her head. “Then we wait. Androcles will send the signal when he feels it is appropriate. It is only sound tactics to insure the area is clear of anything that could be viewed as a threat to either of our ships.” She looked at Norev. “Speaking of that... are there any unknown ships in the area?”

Norev shook his head. “The normal traffic to and from Gellen Station. Nothing outside of the ordinary.”

“Be alert Norev.” Yuri told him. “Gellen Station is full of scum and the moment we lower our Shrouds the station’s sensors will be able to detect us. Those with coherent and active brain cells that have not been destroyed by drugs of some kind will take notice.”

Nameia chuckled softly at Yuri’s comment. “They could not be any worse than those in Haglos.” She spoke referring to the capital city and largest trading port on Nebonese. “Some of those fools couldn’t fill a wine glass with the intelligence they carried in their misshapen brain cavities.”

“I agree with Nameia.” Onera spoke up. “There were some misshapen heads that I saw. How do you fit intelligence into those skulls.”

Yuri met Nameia’s eyes and grinned as well. “We should still be cautious.” She spoke.

Norev nodded in agreement. “Keep one Port Array trained on that area of space.” He told his bridge crew. “We will...”

“Captain! We are detecting the signal!” The excited voice of the female COM officer exclaimed.

Yuri looked at Norev and he met her eyes with a sheepish grin now. “They are very eager.” He said.

“So it would seem.” She spoke in reply.

“Confirm that Lieutenant.” Norev barked as he got to his feet and turned to face her.

The young woman looked down at her COM station, adjusted her controls and nodded as she looked back up to face him. “It’s the proper frequency and channel Captain. All variables match.”

“Very well.” Norev said. He turned to Yuri. “Princess?”

Yuri nodded. “Open the channel Norev. I’m quite sure Androcles does not wish to be here any longer than we do. Pa'cour and he share a particular distaste for the scum that fill this sector of space.” Yuri spoke looking at her husband.

Pa'cour growled softly. “That we do.”

“Channel open.” The COM officer echoed from her station.

“We are here Androcles.” Yuri spoke openly as she moved closer to the main view window which gave her a picture of the massive asteroid belt. She knew Androcles would be listening.

“It is probably better if we come to you.” Andro’s voice filled the bridge. “The wretches of this sector have already seen us Yuri... let’s give them something to think about when we disappear from their sensors. They will assume we have gone inside the Shroud cone of a Union ship and not a High Coven Heavy Cruiser. That might draw more attention than we want. At least right now.”

“Agreed.” Yuri said. “Norev?”

Norev nodded and turned to another officer. “Tactical... direct a low power guidance beam at the Union ship so they can lock on. And insure the landing bay is advised our guests are arriving.”

“Yes sir!”

“I have it!” Normya’s voice filled their ears seconds later. “Engaging engines. We’ll see you in six minutes.”

“We shall meet you in the Landing Bay Androcles.” Yuri spoke again. “Perhaps then you will tell us why you requested we come in an ORIC II-Class Cruiser.”

They heard Andro laugh. “Yes I will.” He said. “We’ll see you soon.”

The landing bay of the ORIC II Class ships were meant to hold seven squadrons of High Coven fighters as opposed to the five of the earlier classes. The RETRIBUTION carried only four squadrons of fighters at the moment and the one hundred and fifty-one meter long TYPE II fit easily within the bay. Though the crew of the ship was not yet fully complete, most of the fighter pilots and their ground crews were already settled and now many of them waited in the bay watching as the TYPE II Dragon Transport settled to the deck with barely a pause. For many, this was their first look at a Union Dragon Transport up close, their first look at any Union ship up close and they were very attentive. All of them saw their Princess waiting off to the side with her Immortal husband and daughter. Most of those who had now come to serve Yuri believed deeply in what they were doing. They were loyal to the High Coven in every way, and while some were still coming to grips with the changes in their culture and traditions, they did not dismiss how these new changes only strengthened their people as a whole. Their Princess was now the Blessed Wife of an Immortal and this was something that they had come to accept and embrace as being part of this new future. Yuri was very different than they had remembered or heard about and seeing her walking around the station and being so open with her emotions was something that was rubbing off on all of them. They all knew that change was the only way to insure that they survived into the future and while it was not easy, they were coming to accept many new things. Many of them also knew that they could not return to High Coven space, at least not now. Most of them had been labeled as traitors or collaborators by Aikiro or Moran and none of them wanted to risk being assassinated before they had an opportunity to recover their honor and their homes.

Like their Princess Yuri, they were now totally committed to helping from the shadows and destroying all threats that impeded the advancement of the High Coven and the many things Empress Narice was implementing.

Pa'cour glanced at Yuri as they stood there and saw her fidgeting on her feet nervously. He took her hand in his gently. "Yuri?" He questioned.

Yuri glanced at him and smiled. "This is a first." She told him. "A Union warship landing in a High Coven landing bay."

Pa'cour smiled as well. "It is happening across Coven space now." He told her. "Admiral Pontal and the Union Admiral Riall are working closely with one another."

Yuri nodded. "I know... but this is a first for me." She told him.

Onera stepped closer to them. "He has... he has others with him mother." She whispered.

Yuri nodded. "I don't doubt it."

"No..." Onera said shaking her head. "I mean... they feel familiar to me somehow. Like I should know them."

Yuri looked at her oddly. "Are you sure?" She asked.

Onera nodded. "Yes."

They all turned as they heard the ramp coming down and Yuri took her hand. "We will see daughter." She said as they began walking. "We..." Yuri's head turned and her words died in her throat as she saw them walking down the ramp behind Androcles. She froze in her spot and her grip tightened almost painfully on both Pa'cour and Onera's hands. "Phraktos!" she gasped aloud.

Pa'cour knew immediately what she meant when his eyes focused on Lucia and Carisia. Lucia walked hand in hand with Zarah Leonidas, Carisia beside the Drow female and the pureblood vampire female just behind Androcles and two younger versions of himself. Young men who could only be his brothers.

"Yuri..." Pa'cour spoke softly to her.

"I did... I did not know he was bringing them husband!" Yuri hissed softly. "What... what do I do? What do... what do I say? I... I am not ready for this!"

"Mother it is alright." Onera spoke moving close to her and gripping her arm.

Yuri shook her head. "No... you don't understand... the things they forced me to do to them. I... I could not fight it even though I knew it was vile inside me. I..."

Pa'cour reached up and drew her face to his, her eyes coming to meet his without hesitation. "You are not that person anymore." He stated firmly. "You never were that person and they will see that."

"Pa'cour my love I..." Yuri stammered.

"Do you trust me my Blessed Wife?" He asked. "Do you trust our daughter?"

"More than anything." Yuri answered instantly.

"Then draw on our strength as a family and show them who you are." Pa'cour spoke. "This day had to come... better it come now rather than later when it could very well never happen."

Yuri stared at him for a long moment in silence, Onera pressed close to them as well and she turned to look at her daughter with Pa'cour. Such beauty and passion shined in Onera's face, just as it did in Carisia and Lucia, and Yuri knew Pa'cour was right. She took a deep breath and squeezed his hands.

"You are... you are right." She told him. "I will not let this chance slip by."

"None of us will." Onera said softly.

Yuri nodded and turned as two of Norev's officers led Andro and his group up to them. She took a deep breath but did not release Pa'cour's or Onera's hand as she faced them. "It is... welcome Androcles." She stammered slightly. "It is good... it is good to see you again." Yuri couldn't help feeling the truth behind those words and how it made her believe even more in the path she now walked.

Andro stood in front of her and knew without a doubt just by her scent that he had made the right decision. It was a decision that many still questioned him on, even his own father, but it was a decision that he knew was right. And seeing Yuri in front of him now, the brightness of her eyes and the calm demeanor was all he needed to see to know that this was the true Yuri. This was the woman who had been buried under millennia of learned hate and archaic traditions and manipulations. She was free of all that now and this was the Yuri that was always meant to be.

Andro bowed his head slightly. "I never imagined I would be saying this... however I can not help but agree." He said with a smile. "You are looking well Yuri. You are looking very well indeed."

Carisia and Lucia stood beside one another, their eyes wide as they gazed at Yuri from behind Andro.

[Carisia!] Lucia exclaimed.

[I know!] Carisia echoed. [It's... sister it is amazing!]

Lucia looked at Zarah then and saw her dark brown eyes were also gazing at Yuri intently. [Zarah my love... what...?]

[It is not her.] Zarah gasped within Mindvoice.

Carisia turned and looked at her now. [Zar?] She asked.

[Andro was right! That is not the woman from earth. From SODRAG.] Zarah spoke evenly. [This is not the same woman we saw there. The darkness that surrounded her is... it is gone. Her resonance is pure and unfettered. That woman was not... she was not your mother. This woman... this woman is your mother.]

And it was Zarah Leonidas who would forever be known as the one who brought a mother and her daughters back together.

Zarah moved forward without hesitating, pushing past Dorian and Deion and then past Andro to stand in front of Yuri. All conversation stopped even as Andro reached for Zarah.

"Arande this is not..." Andro began as he gripped her arm gently.

Zarah looked at him suddenly and hissed viciously, her fangs suddenly bursting forth and her eyes shifting as she pulled her arm free. This was something that she had never done to him and Andro looked at her in shock even as Zarah turned back and reached up instantly to place her palm against Yuri's cheek. To her credit, Yuri flinched only slightly, her hands squeezing even harder to the hands of her husband and daughter. A sign for them to do nothing, but also a sign that she was not afraid. This day would have come eventually and Pa'cour was right. Better to face it now and perhaps try to fix what she had been party to. It may not have been her fault, but ultimately she was still responsible in some way.

Yuri stared into her Zarah's changed wolf eyes calmly. The woman who had agreed with the order to assault this beautiful young woman was not her. That woman was under the control of a vile and heartless beast and she was now long dead. The woman who stood here this day would never have allowed such a thing against any other female. This Yuri could be cruel and calculating; she could be ruthless and kill without blinking, but this Yuri would have never allowed such a depraved attack as the one against Zarah. She would never have sanctioned such a thing even if it meant gaining valuable information no matter the cost. It was an act that was beneath her, for she had experienced the same such thing herself and knew what it could do to a woman. She knew the horrors that came with such an attack and she would not wish them upon her most dire enemy. Yuri knew this about herself now the moment she sprang to free Nameia regardless of the risk. She knew she was different and the things she had been party to or had allowed in the past were not events which she would have supported had her mind been her own.

"I... I can not... there are no words I could speak to you Zarah Leonidas." Yuri spoke softly her voice faltering somewhat. "No statements of sorrow I could utter to describe to you how... how shamed I feel at this very moment."

"Mother you..." Onera began.

"Daughter!" Pa'cour hissed softly silencing her words. This was to be his Blessed Wife's cleansing and nothing would alter her path now. "Be silent!"

Yuri let the tears come then, her dark eyes becoming moist as the tears glistened and flowed freely down her cheeks. "I was not... I was not strong enough to fight it. I knew... I knew it was wrong. So very wrong and despicable and... and evil... but I was not strong enough to fight it. I did... I did things to so many. Horrible things to those I should have loved. To those I do love, but I was not strong enough when it mattered the most." Yuri's eyes turned to where Carisia and Lucia stood. "I was not strong enough to protect them as I should have. I hurt them. I hurt them in so many ways. I can never be forgiven for that Zarah. I can not ask forgiveness for that. That is the shame and curse of not being strong enough to resist that I will bear. It will... I can only hope that one day... that one day you will see that this is who I am truly am. And perhaps then you... you will be able to..."

Zarah Leonidas stared at her for a long moment as Yuri's words filtered into her mind. Words that Zarah was not even listening to anymore. The Etheric resonance emanating from this woman was one of remorse and shame, but burning inside her was also pride and a strength that was not there before. Zarah stared at her and the hate she had felt burning in her chest for this woman was rapidly turning to grief and... and to shame.

Zarah blinked when that word resounded in her in mind and her eyes grew wider. Shame. She looked at Yuri and saw it then. Yuri had been used just as Zarah had. She had been beaten and raped just as she had and for far longer than Zarah had suffered. Yuri's wounds were not physical but they were just as deep. They were wounds of the mind. The decades of darkness and manipulation forced upon her by those she thought cared for her was no different than the rape and agony she had endured in those few hours. This woman had endured decades of hate and darkness and oppression that had nearly succeeded in forever destroying the woman who stood in front of her now. Yuri would forever carry the scars inside her just as Zarah would. They would become part of Yuri and shape her future. And they would shape Zarah's future as well. Zarah Leonidas took that last step that would finally lead her onto the road of healing and into the future. She blinked only once and then Yuri was within her embrace and she was crying as well. Yuri's arm wrapped around her instantly and the emotion came pouring forth as she squeezed Zarah as tightly as she was able. Yuri was shaking horribly as she held Zarah, and the grief and shame came cascading out of them and both of them collapsed to the deck clinging to one another tightly, both of them with one hand holding each other's heads.

Onera moved to comfort her mother, her own eyes filled with tears but Pa'cour's hands stopped her. He shook his head as he held her back and did not see Zarah's hand reach up and grasp Onera's.

"Mother!" Onera gasped as she fell to her knees beside Yuri and hugged her tightly even as Zarah leaned back and turned to look at Lucia and Carisia who were openly weeping.

Zarah's dark eyes were bright as she looked at them. "The woman... the woman who you knew was not your mother Lucia my love!" She spoke confidently. "She was not your mother Enylarcopri! This is your mother! This is the woman who is your true mother!"

Lucia did not hesitate for an instant and with a wail of happiness she flung herself to the deck and into Yuri's arms.

[You have wish for this day for many years Enylarcopri.] Andro's voice filled Carisia's mind and she turned her tear filled eyes to him. [The day where you discover your true mother. The mother you never had as you grew. She is before you now my beautiful Blessed Wife. You need not ask those questions anymore.]

With those words ringing in her head Carisia moved forward with a cry of happiness and Yuri's bellow of joy quickly followed as her arms enveloped all of them and her weeping became even more pronounced. She buried her face in Carisia's hair, her hands clutching both her and Lucia just as tightly to her as they were holding Onera. Her body shook and shuddered with happiness matched only by the day Pa'cour took her as his wife and then when Onera came into this world.

This was the day that Yuri would forever say was the day she was born again.

SCIMITAR

"So?" Sehri asked excitedly staring at Eliani who stood in front of the examining bed she sat on.

Eliani met her eyes. "What is the information worth to you?" She asked with a smile.

"Eli!" Sehri exclaimed. "Don't tease me!"

“Don’t be evil arande.” Nara told her standing beside the bed.

Aleatia stood on the other side of the bed looking very confused. Sehri had called her to be with her when Eliani gave her some information. Aleatia thought for sure it was to be in regards to a child, but now she wasn't so sure. She did not detect any of the normal signs that Rothryn woman exhibited when pregnant.

“Sehri... I don’t understand what is going on here.” She said.

Sehri reached out and snatched Eliani’s hands. “Please tell me.” She said.

Eliani smiled. “Yes.” She said.

Sehri nearly leaped from the examining bed with a cry of delight as she hugged Eliani and almost knocked her over. Aleatia took all this in not understanding what was going on. She watched Sehri hug Eliani tightly, and then she was hugging Nara as well. She turned back to Eliani quickly. “When?” She gasped.

Eliani shrugged her shoulders. “That depends on you.” She said.

“What do you mean?” Sehri asked.

“Will someone explain to me why I am here watching my daughter bounce around as if she had just won a lottery of some sort?” Aleatia demanded now.

Sehri turned to her and grab her hands. “Mother... I can change.” She told her with youthful exuberance.

Aleatia looked at her. “Sehri what... what do you mean change?”

“I can shift!” Sehri exclaimed. “I can become like Andro and Sadi! Like Eliani and Nara! I can become a wolf!”

Aleatia shook her head quickly. “Sehri that is not... it is not possible. Our scientists have all concluded that...”

“Your scientists are wrong.” Eliani stated confidently seeing Aleatia’s eyes rise to meet hers. Eliani turned and pulled the flexible monitor away from the wall and tapped on the screen several times. The images flashed before Aleatia and settled on three different ones. “These are Sehri’s cells... the left one is before Andro bit her...”

Aleatia’s eyes grew wide. “Sehri... he bit you?” She gasped in shock.

Sehri rolled her eyes. “Mother please... I have been with Andro, Sadi, Ne'Veha and the others many times since my fever.” She said proudly.

Nara stepped forward quickly. “It is a very old Lycavorian custom Lady Aleatia.” Nara said. “It is revered in our culture. A Lycavorian man only bits a woman during their lovemaking when he knows they will be together for eternity. The virus in his blood then courses through hers and every Lycavorian who smells her after that will know that she is the wife and mate of another. It has become much more common since my father returned to the throne of the Union, but it has been a tradition since the birth of our people.”

Aleatia turned from Nara to Eliani. “Eliani... this is... this is true?” She gasped.

Eliani nodded her head. “Whatever was done to the Rothryn people to alter their genetic makeup is not permanent Lady Aleatia. To put it in non-medical terms, and believe me, the medical review and terminology explanation will bore you to tears.” She spoke with a large grin. “Anyway... the Rothryn people are missing two strands of active DNA base code that all unaltered Lycavorians have. These are the two strands that allow us to change. When Andro bit Sehri, the virus in his blood flooded Sehri’s blood with these two strands. Whoever altered the Rothryn people, the Pralors or your ancients as they are called; they only removed the active DNA strands in your people, they didn’t remove the actual DNA base code. The base cellular code is still there. When the active strands within Andro’s blood flooded into Sehri, for lack of a better description, they reactivated the dormant DNA Base code within her. They merged with and bonded with her own. Her body is now producing the DNA source strands again all on her own.” Eliani waved her hand. “My mother or Aunt Sivana could explain it far better than me. I’m not a researcher like them. I concentrated my skills on healing and in the medicinal field due to Andro’s propensity for getting into trouble.”

Nara chuckled in a knowing manner. “So true arande.” She said.

“Sehri will be... she will be able to shift like you and your sister?” Aleatia gasped.

Eliani nodded. “Since the Rothryn people are essentially Lycavorian without the ability to shift, now that the DNA Base code is active again within her body, yes.”

“Mother isn’t it wonderful!” Sehri exclaimed. “I will be able run like a wolf. Like Andro and Sadi and...”

Aleatia squeezed her hands. “You must not!” She hissed softly.

Sehri's face changed instantly and her eyes narrowed. "What?" She demanded.

"You must not!" Aleatia spoke. "And no one must know this information. Not yet!"

"Mother I..." Sehri began. "You told me you approved of Andro and..."

Aleatia jerked her hands gently bringing Sehri closer to her. "This is not about the love you share with Andro and the others Sehri." She said quickly. "And I do approve of that. So very much. And I am so very happy for you."

"Then what?" Sehri demanded.

"If it is discovered that you can shift your form... thousands and thousands of years of teaching from the Rothryn Science Academy will be rendered obsolete." Aleatia spoke to her. "They will know the moment we return to the Beta Quadrant and their spies see you with Andro and the others that your Etheric powers have evolved far beyond what they have ever allowed outside of their control. I do not believe they will attempt anything even knowing that given what Androcles is capable of..."

"Taking Sehri from Andro, Sadi and the others would be a singularly insane thing to do Lady Aleatia." Eliani said quickly.

Aleatia nodded. "I agree... and knowing what your brother is capable of will keep them from acting..." She turned back to Sehri. "But if they also discover that you can now shift your form as well, they will do everything within their power to insure our people do not witness this Sehri. They will take you and..."

"And what?" Nara asked.

Aleatia looked at her. "They will take her and she will never be seen again." Aleatia answered. "They will perform experiments on her, vile tests, all in the name of science and to better control our people."

Eliani moved closer. "Does Andro know about this Lady Aleatia?" She asked. "That this is going on?"

Aleatia met her eyes. "I believe he may suspect." She answered. "I have discovered that your brother is intuitive beyond anything I have ever seen in my lifetime. Beyond anything any of my people have seen. This power within him, it grants him that ability..." Aleatia looked at Nara. "To you and your other brothers who also have this power within you Nara. But not on the same level as Androcles."

"You do know what would happen if Sehri were taken from him Lady Aleatia?" Nara asked her softly. "My brother... Andro would... carians I shudder to think about what he would do."

Aleatia nodded her head. "Yes... I do have an idea. And believe me... I in no way agree or support what the Rothryn Science Academy does. Nor does my husband Dyack. We despise them! But I also do not wish to see your brother lay waste to our cities and people in his task to retrieve Sehri. And I have no doubt no one and nothing would be able to stand against him if this were to take place." She turned back to Sehri and pulled her closer. "That is why we must keep this secret between us child. Your sisters must not know... they love you, but they are jealous of you now Sehri and they can not control their tongues." She squeezed Sehri's hand. "And Harira must not find out!"

"Then you believe that she is more than what she wants us to see? Just as Andro does." Sehri asked.

Aleatia nodded. "Yes... and she is not our friend no matter how much she wants us to believe that."

Aleatia turned to Eliani. "Will it be easily discernible Eliani? Now that Sehri has this ability, will it be easy to detect within her?"

Eliani shook her head. "Her scent will be altered slightly..." She replied. "Now that she can shift, it will be more pronounced, at least to those of us who use scent as a means to identify and communicate. They will know right away. Aside from that... no."

Aleatia nodded. "Good... Rothryns do not use this ability as freely as our Lycavorian brothers and sisters. They will not know how to tell the difference if it is not openly easy to detect."

"Your fangs DuanGai." Nara said stepping forward. "You will need to keep your fangs in."

Aleatia looked between Nara and Sehri. "Your fangs?" She asked turning back to Sehri. "What does Nara mean?"

Sehri nodded shyly and extended her fangs with a single blink of her eyes. Aleatia was stunned at how quickly and easily her daughter did this, it was not something Rothryn could do without concentrating rather hard. Aleatia saw right away what Nara meant however, as she was able to gaze upon the dual incisor fangs that Sehri now possessed. They were very prominent, much more savage looking and appeared to have grown in right beside her normal incisor fangs. To say they were frightening was an understatement.

"Oh my." Aleatia said.

Eliani and Nara also extended their fangs and Aleatia looked between them. "It is... it is something that only our family bloodline carries." Eliani explained to her quickly. "Those who are born with the blood of our grandfathers in their veins. It also affects those who are bitten by one of us. Mine are not as pronounced as Nara's because she is a pureblood, but Sehri was bitten by Andro. Along with our father and our mother Aricia, Andro's blood is the purest of all of us. Of all our people really. The virus in his blood will be just as pure and far more powerful. It will show in Sehri's fangs now as it does with Sadi, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria."

Aleatia looked back at Sehri. "But you can control this yes?" She said.

Sehri nodded her head. "Yes." She answered. "Mother... I do not want to hide who I have become now." She said.

Aleatia nodded. "I do not want you to hide it either. I bless the day you discovered this love you have with Andro and the others Sehri but..."

"Father does not!" She snapped softly.

Aleatia squeezed her hands. "Leave your father to me. He has been fed a pack of lies and with no one who knows the truth of it; he will not know what to believe." She told her. "What he believes now will not be what he believes after I have spoken with him." She met Sehri's eyes. "But right now... right now we need to hide this daughter."

Nara stepped forward. "The Dragon Den on deck ten DuanGai." She said. "We can practice there and no one is allowed there who is not bonded to a dragon or a member of the Durcunusaan."

"She needs to learn to control it Lady Aleatia." Eliani said. "For those of us like Nara and I... those of us born like this... it is second nature to us. To those who are changed it needs to be controlled until it becomes like second nature to them."

Aleatia nodded. "She will be safe there?"

Eliani nodded again. "Nara is right. No one goes near the Dragon Den unless they ride a dragon or are a Durcunusaan. And trust me... once Elynth and Anthar discover this, Sehri will be hidden and safer than anywhere on the ship."

Aleatia smiled and nodded. "Yes... I forget sometimes that your dragons speak with your voices as well." She said. "I will need to speak with Androcles when he returns. I must tell him everything I believe. That your father and I believe. He will know what to do."

"We have already designated a similar place on SPARTA'S WRATH DuanGai." Eliani told her. "Even when we switch ships you will be able to practice in safety."

"You shielded from Sadi and the others DuanGai?" Nara asked coming forward and taking her hand.

Sehri nodded quickly. "Yes. I don't need them rushing to me in worry every time my emotions spike." She answered.

Nara moved closer to her, Aleatia watching as she pressed up against Sehri's side and nuzzled her cheek. Aleatia saw the look of happiness and peace on her daughter's face when Nara did this.

"It is not something to worry about." Nara spoke. "You are a Leonidas now. We look after our family."

Eliani stepped closer as well. "Listen... why don't all of us go to the mess lounge and get something to eat. I will speak to Jomann and have him meet us there. By then he will have arranged for everything."

Aleatia looked at her. "He knows?" She asked. "How could..."

Eliani touched her head with a smile. "He is my Anome Lady Aleatia." She said in reply. "He knows everything I do. Well... almost everything."

Sehri nodded quickly. "Yes... I am hungry." She said. "And I want to begin to learn as soon as I can. Will you come with me mother?"

Aleatia smiled and nodded her head. "Of course Sehri. It will... it will be amazing to see." She answered. "And I look forward to it."

Eliani tossed her data pad onto the bed after touching the screen and activating her unique security codes to lock out the information. "Then lets go!" She stated. "I'm famished."

Nara looked at her. "Perhaps if you did not let your husband and mate rut above you all of the time you would not be so hungry and tired arande." She said.

Eliani grinned seductively. "Where would the fun in that be? He is so very attentive to me. And who says he is always above me?" She spoke causing both Sehri and Aleatia to laugh softly as they began to exit the Med Bay.

RETRIBUTION

She had over three thousand years of life and never in that entire time had Yuri ever felt so alive and free. She could not keep her hands off Lucia, Carisia and Onera, always touching their faces or running her fingers through their hair. The tears had not stopped from any of them for nearly an hour as they remained apart from the others, even when Pa'cour had ushered them to the nearby conference room. It was elation for both Lucia and Carisia as the mother they both had wished so long for had finally arrived. They both could feel Yuri's Etheric resonance and how very different it now was. With Zarah Leonidas between them, and Carisia drawing off of the strength of Andro's and Lu'ria's love for her, the path to discovery came so much easier for all of them. And it was a discovery that each of the women intended to relish and hold dear. At some point Nameia had come into the conference room and without a moment's hesitation Yuri had drawn her into the small group. Andro and the others saw the look that passed between the two women and how close Nameia sat beside Yuri. It was not something one could miss if you had half a brain. The sense of renewal and happiness permeated the entire room.

"I did not expect such a meeting to... to be like this." Pa'cour's voice spoke beside Andro and he turned to look at him. "In all my years as her Captain and since we became married I have never seen her face so glowing and happy."

"The woman that was Yuri Moran is long dead Pa'cour." Andro told him. "This Yuri... she may look like her, sound like her, but this Yuri is not her. This is the Yuri that was meant to be. It was time. In order for the healing to finally be complete and allow their lives to move forward, this had to happen. For all of them. My sister included."

"Will... will your father see her as you do young Androcles?" Pa'cour asked.

"My father may be many things Pa'cour." Andro told him. "He is not a fool however. And he is just as sensitive to the resonance of Etheric power as I am. Whatever he may feel for the old Yuri, he will not be able to carry it over to this one simply because they look the same."

"But they... they are the same woman." Pa'cour said.

Andro nodded. "Outwardly yes. But inwardly they could not be more different. That is what my father and mothers will see. Trust me."

Pa'cour nodded his head slowly. "I will trust your words in that regard." He shook his head. "Let me nudge them along so that we can conduct the business that you came her for."

Andro grinned and nodded. "That probably would be best." He watched Pa'cour move over to them and whisper to Yuri. Zarah's head turned first and she rose to her feet and covered the distance to Andro in a single blur. Zarah's arms wrapped around his waist and she buried her face into his chest as he pulled her tightly to him.

[You knew.] Zarah gasped within their private link. [You knew this would happen. What I would sense?]

Andro drew her face back and kissed her softly on the lips. [You needed to know. You needed to see for yourself. You and Lucia both. I do not make excuses for her arande... but this is not the woman who...]

Zarah nodded her head quickly. [I know. That is the first thing I sensed.] She looked up and met her brother's azure blue eyes. [Andro I saw things. I saw horrible things that were done to her. That she was forced to do. She... she has endured this for so long. The darkness.]

Andro nodded slowly. [For far longer than even she believes I think. I need to speak with father and Wayonn to confirm that but I think Xaxon had a much deeper grip on Aikiro and others than even we believe. For a very long time.]

[The Black Day?] Zarah gasped.

Andro nodded his head again. [Yes.]

[Carians Andro.] Zarah turned her head back to where Yuri was holding Lucia, Onera and Carisia as they came towards the table. She turned back to him. [No one but father must know what we think. No one!]

[Arande I...] Andro began.

Zarah shook her head. [No one fervern! You know what would happen.]

[Our people do not hold grudges Zar.] Andro said.

[Most of them don't. But imagine if Icho or his sick cronies got this information and were able to incite our people. All Narice and Arrarn are trying to do would be for nothing!] Zarah told him.

Andro looked up and gazed at Yuri for a moment. [Yes... I see your point.] He spoke. [And what about you sister?]

[Lucia wants to stay. So do I.] Zarah spoke. [This is the mother she has been denied for so long fervon. She deserves to have a chance to discover her again. I don't want to leave her fervon. I love her too much. And I can... I can learn from Yuri as well. We can go with her to the meeting with father and then remain with him until you arrive.]

[You are certain about that?] Andro asked.

Zarah nodded. [Yes.] She answered.

Andro nodded as Yuri came up to the table wiping the tears from her cheeks and meeting his gaze. [Very well.] He said watching as Yuri moved up in front of him and looked up at his face.

Yuri took a deep breath and reached out to touch his cheek. [I do not know how to... how to thank you for this Androcles.] Yuri spoke as she erected powerful shields around their private connection.

Andro shook his head. [As I told Pa'cour... this day needed to come. In many ways you are just as much a victim as anyone else. Maybe more so.]

[That does not excuse my actions Androcles.] Yuri said softly.

[Perhaps not. But now you have the chance to atone for whatever others think you have done. You have started that already. This is how it needs to continue.] He said.

[And you?] Yuri asked. [What do you think?]

[I have found that no matter what we do, what we say, what our past holds, or what our future will be, destiny will always find a way to right the wrongs.] Andro told her. [I do not agree with decisions my father and mothers have made in the past, but at that particular time they were needed. Eventually it worked out as it was intended. Whatever else you have become Yuri, Xaxon, your mother and father, even Moran; they took choice away from you. They forced you to become something that destiny did not have in mind for you. Now you are free of that and destiny will have its say and you will do what you were intended to do.]

[And if it is the wrong thing? The wrong decision?] Yuri asked.

Andro shook his head. [Was choosing to fall in love with Pa'cour wrong? To allow your feelings to see past what you believed and embrace what you felt for him?]

[Phraktos no!] Yuri exclaimed turning quickly to look at Pa'cour and see his eyes gaze back at her confused. She turned back to Androcles.

Andro nodded. [If the decision comes from the heart Yuri, then it is never wrong.] He said.

[Having the combined memories of three lifetimes within you has given you an insight that few people ten times your age would have Androcles Leonidas.] Yuri spoke.

Andro shrugged. [Gives me a damned headache most of the time.]

Yuri couldn't help herself and burst out in soft laughter as she took his hand in hers and brought it to her lips. She kissed his fingers gently. "I can not thank you for this. It is a gift that I will..."

"Your thanks is not needed." Andro said. "You and Pa'cour accomplished that when you returned the remains of my ancestors to us. I do however, need your help."

Yuri nodded. "Anything." She said. "Sit please." She spoke motioning to the table. "I assume it has something to do with why you asked if we had this ship and why we needed to come to the meeting in it."

Andro nodded as he moved to the table with her and settled between Dorian and Carisia. "It does." He said.

He watched as Yuri moved to her chair and sat down. Pa'cour was on one side of her, the elf female on the other. He saw Nameia reach out under the table and grip Yuri's hand. Her dark eyes gazed quickly at Nameia with something akin to deep affection. This was another sign to Andro that he had made the right decision. Onera chose to sit beside Lucia and the new bond of sisterly love was very evident.

"Something important has come up that I need to take care of before we depart for the Beta Quadrant." Andro said. He took the data pad that Dorian held out for him. "I need to know everything you can tell me about this man."

Andro plugged the data pad into the slot on the table and the message to Sheva came into focus and played once more. Andro watched Yuri's face and he saw the light of recognition in her eyes as the message played. Her eyes narrowed when it came to the part about Sheva's parents and he saw a flash of anger when she heard Moran's name mentioned. Andro glanced at Sheva quickly and saw her clutching Dorian's arm tightly, her face impassive. He ignored the message for he had seen it three times already. When it finally ended he looked back to Yuri.

Yuri looked up at him when the message ended. "His name is Lerkim Banak." Yuri said before he could ask. "He was... or still is it seems... the Senior Control Officer for a very secret program my mother started twenty years ago. Shortly after the first Kavalian invasion."

"Program?" Andro asked.

Yuri nodded. "It was called Xukuth Zotreth. Two hundred men and women were chosen. Most of them very young. All of them had lost family to the Lycavorians during our conflict with them." She explained.

"Heart Strike." Andro said softly.

Yuri nodded. "Given that so many vampires had come to call the Union home she wanted to put people in place who could replace those your father had eliminated during The Purge." She told him. "They were trained to blend in. Become part of the natural background of life within the Union. Even to infiltrate high risk positions over time. To gather intelligence and even to conduct covert operations if needed."

"To assassinate?" Carisia asked but with no malice in her voice at all.

Yuri nodded affirmatively. "If need be yes." Yuri answered. She looked at Andro now. "I can only assume this has something to do with the young woman sitting beside your brother Dorian?"

Andro nodded his head. "This is Sheva Juconi-Leonidas." He answered. "She and Dorian recently became Du'ased 'ranndi and m'ranndii. She has told us everything you just did." He said.

Yuri looked at Sheva. "Congratulations to the both of you. I see you choose to follow your heart and mind rather than the dogma of my mother." She said. "Good for you."

Sheva bowed her head slightly in recognition of Yuri's words. "Thank you."

Yuri looked back to Andro. "Once she made Robert head of the Coven military she gave him total control of this program. It was all very quiet and under the surface."

"Why him?" Andro asked.

"For all his faults... he is just as ruthless as my mother was." Yuri spoke. "Now I would imagine he is even worse given that Pa'cour and I escaped." Yuri grinned slightly. "I may have made some very truthful comments the day that Pa'cour and I escaped that reflected on his... his manhood. Or lack thereof."

Pa'cour snorted loudly and laughed. "He was not happy about that." He said.

Yuri looked at Andro. "Have you made contact with Banak?" She asked.

Andro nodded his head. "Sheva returned the message. She was given instructions to meet this Banak fellow on Apo Prime in two days. There she will receive new mission orders that she has been told she must follow through with or her parents will die."

"What were your original orders?" Yuri asked Sheva.

"I was instructed to assassinate Queen Isabella." Sheva answered. "I came into the Union and worked my way up within the Durcunusaan. I thought my parents were killed in an attack on a Coven colony world by the Lycavorians. At least that is what they told me. Part of the false background they made for me was information that was obtained before The Purge."

Yuri nodded again. "Names. Background covers. Yes."

Sheva looked at Andro. "My background was that my parents came to the Union and were subsequently killed in a High Coven retaliation attack."

"That fits." Yuri said. "Such a background would keep the less inquisitive minds from digging any further." She stated. "What colony world was your family on?" Yuri asked.

"The mining colony of Nereo." Sheva answered.

"Nereo?" Yuri said. "Nereo wasn't destroyed by the Union. It was destroyed when the improper safety measures installed in the mine there failed and the mine exploded. It would not surprise me if my mother or Robert were the ones who ordered that."

"What do you mean?" Dorian asked leaning forward.

“I was not privy to most of the workings of the Program itself, neither my mother or Robert shared it with me, but I do remember Robert and my mother talking about it one day. How they would get an influx of volunteers for the program after some event they had a hand in... while blaming the Union. It seems this is what they were talking about.”

“The colony on Nereo had over twenty thousand men, women and children on it!” Sheva declared angrily. “Over three quarters of the adults were massacred and it left their children orphans!”

Dorian reached out and covered her hand with his. “Sheva... she did not order it.” He spoke. He looked at Yuri quickly. “Did you?”

Yuri shook her head. “No. As I said... it is not something I was privy too. I had already advised my mother to forgo any attempt to replace the agents lost in The Purge. I told her with Armetus and your father working on the same wavelength as they were; any agent would be found and executed in a matter of months. She did not take my advice and therefore they left me out of that plan. A few years after Nereo was destroyed I heard them talking like I told you. This is what they obviously had planned.”

“What did she hope to gain?” Andro asked.

Yuri shook her head. “I don’t know. Intelligence. Revenge. Looking back now I can say that my mother was... she was quite insane.” She looked at Andro. “Xaxon’s influence over her perhaps?”

Andro nodded his head. “Quite possibly.” He said.

Yuri sat back in her chair and looked at Sheva. “Hmmm... given my mother’s hatred of my half sister, it does not surprise me that Isabella would be a target.” She said. “She must have known that Isabella was a carrier of this Paladin gene. She feared any children that she would have with your father for this reason. Her actions make sense now.”

Andro sat back. “Xaxon feared.” He corrected her. “And by virtue of that... your mother. What do you mean her actions?”

“If Xaxon had as much influence over my mother as we both now suspect he did, and he sensed who and what your father was, then he would have done everything within his power to insure your father had no children. That includes having some influence over what my father did when your mother Aricia was taken by that fool Chetak and his fat bastard of a son.” Yuri said thoughtfully.

Andro leaned forward his eyes growing a little wider. “He... he had a hand in that?” He rasped out.

“If what you believe is accurate then I would have to say yes.” Yuri answered him. “My father had dealings with Chetak already and they began planning for that the moment that it was discovered your father lived. It was already in play when I finally returned to Coven space. I told him it would not work... that it was a mistake... but it had already happened by then. He discovered just how much of a mistake when your father did the one thing he never suspected. He smashed Ukwav into oblivion.”

“But he had no blood connection to your mother or grandfather.” He said. “His essence was trapped in the ship you had, not his body.”

Yuri nodded in agreement. “True... but based on what happened with my mother and even me, we are certain he can influence those around him. At least to some degree and he has a much more powerful hold on those with the gene.”

“We are under the impression it was your father who carried the gene.” Dorian spoke now.

Yuri nodded. “But you are now relatively sure that there were some of these Pralor Praetorians on the City Ship that crashed on Nuwaroa are you not?”

Andro nodded his head. “My grandfather Sumar had seeded those with this gene among all the City Ships to replenish their numbers.”

“And because of what you can now Dorian we agree that my father was a carrier. But we do not know if my mother was a carrier. And we never will.” Yuri said. “I can only assume that your grandfather seeded these ships for a reason which I do not know right now but would probably not like very much.” Yuri said canting her head to the side inquisitively as she looked at Andro. “Why would he need to replenish their number Androcles? Why couldn’t he train them wherever they came from? Why come out here? And why did my mother want what was on that ship you found on Ritaah so bad?”

“Yuri I can not...” Andro began.

“You told me not so long ago that something was coming Androcles Leonidas.” Yuri said to him across the table. “If it has to do with what Narice is doing, or if it will somehow impede what she is trying to rebuild... I can’t protect her or what she is trying to accomplish if I do not know who...”

“It’s quite a bit more complicated than that.” Andro said. “It... it has to do with the gene that we carry yes. The gene that you carry. That Onera carries. And it is not a threat to Narice or what she is doing... at least not right now.”

“Androcles I need...” Yuri began.

“Does Moran know that you ordered Professor Lidene to remove all data from the logs your team obtained from the ship we found on Ritaah?” Andro asked her bluntly. “That you ordered him to destroy every copy that was being made by Moran’s order except for the one you kept?”

Yuri didn’t flinch when he spoke and she looked quickly to Pa'cour and then back to him. “No... he does not. At least not yet to my knowledge. He will assume it was all directed to a secure facility that he still controls. I convinced Lidene otherwise.” She stated. “When he does find out I’m quite sure he will have a fit. One that will make his heart explode if I am lucky.”

“He would not have found out yet mother?” Carisia asked.

Yuri shook her head. “Everything we have been able to obtain so far indicates he is still trying to consolidate his control over what he does have. Once he does... he will move for the facility and then he will discover what he seeks is gone.”

Andro nodded his head and reached to the small of his back where he drew out his P1. He set it on the table and saw Yuri’s eyes grow a little wider at the new piece of equipment. It was far more advanced than anything she had ever seen. Andro tapped on the P1 several times and then the small cone of a miniature holotransmitter activated. “341?” Andro spoke.

The small figure of the immense Avatar appeared as clear as if he was there with them.

-Prince Andro. Have you encountered difficulties on your mission?-

“No 341... but I need something.” Andro said. “I want you to download copies of the contents of File Numbers 651 and 769 to my P1.”

341 blinked from his location at Dreamland.

-Prince Andro... these files contain...-

“I know 341.” Andro stated. “Right now... right now someone else needs to know what we know.” He said.

-Understood. Processing. Downloading files now- Andro waited for second seconds as everyone watched and then the P1 beeped. -Download is complete-

“Thank you 341.” Andro said. “How goes the conversion?”

-We will be finished in another twenty-seven hours- 341 answered. -The information I sent to you in regards to the High Coven ORIC Class Cruiser was helpful?-

“Very much so.” Andro answered. “Keep me informed of any changes 341.”

-Understood-

Andro tapped the P1 and 341’s image disappeared. He motioned to where Carisia sat. “Enylarcopri?”

Carisia reached across and took the data pad from in front of Pa'cour and then slid it across to him. It took Andro only a few more seconds to connect the two pads and download the files to the new pad. He disconnected them and returned his P1 to the small of his back. He held up the data pad and looked at Yuri.

“You are right Yuri.” He told her. Andro used his Etheric power to slowly levitate the pad across the table to where Yuri sat and she took it from thin air.

“That was the Avatar that has become so attached to you?” Yuri asked.

Andro nodded his head. “Your mother had no idea what she was part of. No idea of what she was doing. That will give you a detailed history and the different reasons behind what my grandfather Sumar was doing and what my father and mothers are doing now.”

“I do not need this in order to help you Androcles.” Yuri told him.

“Yes... yes you do.” Andro spoke slowly. “Now more than ever. I have six Pralor Work Drones on our TYPE II. I consulted with 341 in order to find out which of your ships would be easiest to refit for our version of the Pralor Quantum Fusion Matter Drives. The Work Drones will need nineteen hours to make the different modifications to your engine systems and your shield generators. I brought the materials they will need with us. The events taking place where my father and my mothers are dictate that he meet with you about whatever you have to tell him within the next two days. I will give you the exact coordinates where you will meet him and the course you must follow to get there and then return with ease. Once you have returned I suggest putting the drones to work on refitting all of the ships you have with you. When that is complete give them to Professor Lidene to assist him in building the weapons systems he has discovered from the data you have.”

Yuri’s eyes grew a little wider and she glanced quickly at Pa'cour before turning back to him. “How?” She asked.

It was Pa'cour who chuckled now. “Of course.” He stated as he sat back. “It is no wonder the Kavalians would never have stood a chance against you or the Union. Lidene’s labs have hidden surveillance in them.”

Andro withdrew another, smaller data pad from inside his body armor. He handed it to Dorian who then passed it to Zarah and then to Onera. She handed it to her mother. “Those are the codes to permanently deactivate every piece of surveillance equipment on the base. It will also give you the location of each piece. The entire base was not watched, just the parts where important work could have been done.”

“How do we know that this is true?” Onera asked now the anger in her voice evident. “You have been spying on us all this time?”

Andro looked at Yuri. “I give you my word.” He said.

“Mother he...” Onera began.

Yuri held up her hand cutting Onera’s words off. “And Androcles Leonidas is very much like his father in that he has never gone back on his word.” Yuri said. “You trusted that I was... that I was not doing something else?”

Andro shook his head. “No... I had faith in you. And who you have become.” He stated.

Yuri looked at him and then at the data pad. She took a deep breath and with an almost casual thought she crushed the pad in her hand, destroying it completely. She looked at Andro across the table as she let the pieces of the pad drop from her hand. “What do you need from me?” She asked.

“I need the name and location of the planet that this fool Banak mentions in his message to Sheva. Whatever information you can tell me about it. Layout. Garrison strength.” Andro answered. “I am going to meet this man on Apo Prime with Lu'ria and a few others in Sheva’s place. When we do, Dorian and Sheva are going to be leading a Strike Team to retrieve her parents and whoever else wants to leave.”

“And?” Yuri asked.

“And with any luck...” Andro replied. “I am going to gut this program your mother and Moran started before he has an opportunity to use it again.” He said.

Yuri smiled at that. “Oh that would be divine.” She said in genuine happiness.

“Can you help us?” Andro asked.

Yuri got to her feet with confidence. “Androcles Leonidas, not only will I tell you where this planet is and everything about it, but I will offer you any support, direct or otherwise, that you may need. It’s deep in High Coven space and questions would be asked if Union ships were that far into our space no matter our new alliance. Most of them are along the border with Admiral Pontal’s forces.”

Andro got to his feet and nodded. “Thank you.” He said. He looked at Deion. “Deion... will you see to getting the drones to the proper engineers.”

Deion stood up. “I’m on it.” He said.

Andro looked back to Yuri. “I’d like a moment with you Yuri.” He said. “Alone.”

Yuri saw the confusion this request caused with his siblings and Carisia and she nodded her head intrigued. "Clear the room please." She said.

"Andro?" Lu'ria asked as she got to her feet.

Andro looked at her and smiled. "It's fine Lu'ria." He said. "I won't be long."

They waited until the conference room had emptied of people and then Yuri moved down the side of the table slowly. "Something tells me that this is not something everyone already knows?" Yuri said.

Andro looked at her. "No."

"What is it that you do not want to share with your wives and mates Androcles. Even I know that is not something you, or your father for that matter, it is not something you do." Yuri asked him.

"I need something from you." Andro said. "I need you to make me a promise."

Yuri looked confused. "I'm listening."

"We need to take care of this problem quickly Yuri." Andro told her. "Whatever is happening where my father is, they will need me and my brothers soon. I need to make this problem with Moran and Dante go away now. Then I need to handle the Vanari situation just as quickly."

"What sort of timetable are we looking at?" Yuri asked him.

"Eight weeks tops." Andro told her.

Yuri looked at him surprised. "That's not much of a window Androcles."

"I will not leave Moran and Dante behind to cause Narice grief." He said. "My Aunt Deia will have her hands full with our own fools in Union space and even with my grandfather Riall to help, the Coven is still vulnerable."

"The Kavalians?" Yuri asked.

Andro shook his head. "Pian and his people will begin their operations against the Kavalians soon enough. That will draw off the attention of most of their forces from the Coven borders."

"But not all." Yuri said.

"Enough of them where the remaining ones will pose no threat and free up your Admiral Pontal's forces." Andro said.

"To do what?" Yuri asked.

"We need to draw Moran out." Andro said. "We need to give him something that he can't resist. We need to remove him and Xaxon from the equation. Arrarn gave me a report when he was home. About certain factions within your former government."

Yuri nodded slowly. "Loyalists. To my mother." She said.

"They are already pressuring Narice in minor ways. Wanting her to take a Pureblood husband is just the beginning. And they are more powerful than anyone suspects." Androcles spoke.

"I was... I was afraid of that." Yuri said. "And if Robert can rally them to him... it would mean civil war."

Andro nodded. "That is not something we can allow." He said. "You need to be able to focus on finding these loyalists within your ranks and watch over Narice. I need to be able to leave and help my father. We need to be able to do these things without worry about being stabbed in the back by Moran or Xaxon."

"You have something in mind I take it?" Yuri asked.

"I do." He told her.

"I suspect that those close to you and to me would not agree with this plan since you have told no one about it?"

Andro tilted his head to the side. "That would be putting it mildly." He said.

Yuri smiled. "I like it already." She said. "What do you propose?"

"You are certain he has not discovered you have the Pralor data from the ship?" Andro asked.

Yuri nodded. "I would know within a matter of hours if he discovers this." She said. "I still have friends in The Wilds who..." She smiled. "They rather like who I have become and they have eyes everywhere."

"Then we need to do what my father is doing." Andro said.

"I'm not following." Yuri told him.

"We need to give Moran and Xaxon what they want." Andro said. "The data you have from SPARTA'S WRATH. And we need to sweeten that even more."

"With what?" Yuri asked.

Andro met her steady gaze. “Bait Yuri. We need to give them what they both want more than anything else besides the data.”

“And that is?”

Andro smiled. “You and me.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

ARC ROYAL

ORBITING MANNE

“...Make sure the defensive emplacements are finished when I get back.” Martin spoke as he heard the engines of the Pralor corvette begin to spool up.

“Marty... I got it.” Danny answered him with a smile. “You sure you want to go through with this? You hate that woman.”

Martin looked at him. “I trust Andro.” He said. “And she gave him the code word we used in The Teams to signify that something had gone to shit Dan.”

Danny nodded his head slowly. “I know... it’s just hard to believe that she could have changed so much. At least not like what Andro has said.” He looked at Danny. “Could Xaxon really have had that much control over her?”

Martin nodded. “Murano and Wayonn both say yes. I tend to agree with their assessment because of their previous experience with that asshole.” He replied without hesitation. “Given her upbringing Yuri had already been exposed to some seriously twisted sibfla by the time he infected her. Murano says he probably latched onto that and made it a hundred times worse. I ain’t making excuses for her... just that it is possible.” Martin smiled. “Besides, she knows how I feel about her, and that I won’t hesitate to slit her throat. But for her to use that code phrase just to get me somewhere where she could try and kill me is plain stupid. And Yuri may be many things, but stupid isn’t one of them.”

Dan nodded. “Agreed.” He said. “You still want the facility prepped as we talked about?”

Martin nodded. “We’ll have one chance to make this work. If it doesn’t... we are gonna be left scratching our balls and wondering what the hell happened.”

“I’ll take care of it.” He said.

“We may have to hold out longer than we expected fervon. Andro has to take care of that problem before he can leave.” Martin told him. “Since General Koguth and his people are really good at making defenses that blend in with the terrain, let them have at it. I want every square meter of the camp covered. I should be getting back about the time the ships start arriving from Ceneu. If not... have Akemi take command of the fleet under my order. I want her to disperse them however she deems prudent. And if anyone gives her any shit, bust them back to buck as nothing and let them rot in the brig. We don’t have the time to fuck around.”

Danny nodded. “I already sent Yuriko on ahead to do thorough scans of the first planet. She will be done when you get back and then we’ll deal with pus nuts and then go and check it out. Murano and his niece Mari left with Kasdan an hour ago on your STRIKER. He wasn’t real happy about it.”

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. “He thinks I sent him away so he didn’t have to take part in what we are going to do.”

“Did you?” Danny asked.

Martin shook his head. “Not entirely.” He replied. “I think seeing Andro and the others will be good for him. Wayonn agreed with me. Murano needs to know that we are not like the Praetorians of his time. We are different. And being with Andro even for a shirt time will allow him to see that. Besides... who better to help Andro deep six Xaxon than Murano?”

“True enough.” Danny said.

“Prepare our people for the worse Danny.” Martin told him. “Lorendo lied to us and I got a feeling we aren’t going to like what we find on those planets. Our people need to stay focused and remember that Lorendo is not indicative of the Pralor species.”

Danny grinned. "I'll take care of it. Besides... when have we ever really liked what we found somewhere new?" He asked.

"Avoi." Martin said. He looked at the only man he would ever call brother and knew he had something to say. "Spill it fervon. What's up?"

"Marty how do I... Delnash's daughter Kesyla." Danny began slowly. "She is getting really close to Anuk and Nubian. I don't know what to make of that."

Martin looked at him. "She has got the hots for you fervon." He said. "It pours from her scent."

Danny nodded his head. "I know and it seems like... it seems like Anuk and Nayeca are encouraging that."

"You find her attractive fervon?" Martin asked him.

Danny met his eyes. "Yes... very much so... but you know I would never..."

Martin shook his head. "That never crossed my mind Danny. Let it play out fervon." He said. "Believe me when I tell you if Anuk and Nayeca approve and they want her as part of your lives... then there isn't going to be much you can do."

"You think they do?" Danny asked.

Martin shrugged. "I gave up on trying to figure out women when Cirith came into our lives." He stated. "They sense things we don't. It's a female thing."

"What's a female thing?" Anja's voice carried to them and they turned to see her walk up with Dysea and Isabella in tow.

"Nothing." Martin said quickly.

"You don't lie very well you big lug." Anja snapped as she stepped up to him and wrapped her arms around his waist.

Dysea reached out and took Danny's hands in hers. They all knew what Martin and he had been talking about immediately for they had seen it in how Anuk and Nayeca were acting with Kesyla. "Do not listen to this one Daniel." She said with a smile. "If Kesyla is meant to be part of your lives, then it will be so. Anuk and Nayeca will sense this before you. Just follow your heart."

Danny smiled and leaned over to kiss her cheek. "Thanks Dy." He said softly, calling her by the nickname she had earned so long ago.

"And be yourself goof ball!" Anja popped from within Martin's embrace.

Danny grinned and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek in a family way. "Now where would the fun in that be Red?" He asked.

Anja laughed as Danny looked back to Martin and nodded. "Watch your six. And get back as soon as possible." He told him.

Martin nodded. "I will."

Danny turned and took Isabella's hand and leaned over to kiss her cheek. Isabella smiled and returned the kiss. "Watch his lard ass Bella." Danny said to her. "Make sure he doesn't do something entirely stupid."

"We shall see." Bella answered. "We shall see."

Martin watched as Danny moved off and began to bellow orders at several of their team that was loading another STRIKER. He turned to look at Anja, Dysea and Isabella as they closed in around him. "We'll be back in three days. Four tops." He said.

Dysea pressed up against Anja's back as his arm encircled her waist and then pulled Bella close with his other arm. "Just keep an open mind Nauta Melme." She said.

"I always do." Martin said with a smile.

Anja snorted and slapped his hard abdomen. "Yeah... tell that shit to everyone else. Not to us." She spat with a grin.

Martin smiled and looked down into her jade colored eyes. "Don't kill him Firecracker." He said. "He is Delnash's son... and no matter how much a fool he is... that would not be very good for our relations."

Anja looked at him with wide eyes. "You... you know about that?" She gasped.

Martin chuckled. "You don't actually believe I didn't see and smell his intent do you?" He said.

"Why... why didn't you..." Dysea began to ask.

“You are the six strongest willed women I have ever known.” Martin said. “Not including my mother. If I did not think my wives and mates could take care of one male who thinks with his dick more than his brain I would be a sorry individual.”

“I have already told her she can not kill him.” Isabella spoke with a small laugh. “Hurt him a little... but not kill.”

Martin laughed and leaned over to kiss Anja hard on the lips. Her hands grasped his face as his aura swept around her and delighted her senses. He then shared a similar kiss with Dysea, the feeling and emotion passing to all his wives and mates through their Etheric connection. Aricia was still on the surface of Manne helping to prep the base with Cirith, while For'mya was in the cockpit of the corvette with Endith and Tina. They all felt the emotion of the kiss as if they were the ones partaking of the physical delights of the act. They could not explain it, but it was one of the main reasons their love had persisted through the years and had only grown more intense.

“Maybe one of you could talk to Fedor and Eirene while I’m gone.” Martin said as he drew back. “About Kalis.”

Dysea shook her head. “That will happen of its own accord.” She spoke wisely. “They reached for and found your essence within For'mya Nauta Melme. Remember that.”

“And never has a more stubborn man existed than you.” Isabella chimed in. “They will see the type of man Kalis has become now that he has found his balance and purpose in Serale. Just as we all did. Give it time Martin. I think you will find that Kalis will win them over in the end.”

Martin nodded finally. “You’re right.” He said softly.

“Any ideas on what Yuri might want?” Anja asked him.

“Not a clue.” Martin answered.

“Whatever it is... she must deem it important enough to face you directly.” Isabella said thoughtfully. “And I can only assume it is something that our son would not react well to. That he is involved in.”

Martin met her eyes and nodded. “That’s what I was thinking too.” He said. “That by itself tells me it is not good.”

“I still don’t trust her no matter what Andro says. Just watch your back Lover.” Anja told him.

“I’d much rather watch yours.” Martin spoke with a grin as he stared at them lustfully.

Anja pushed away from him playfully. “God... you are such a pervert!” She exclaimed as they all laughed. Dysea grasped her hand tightly.

“Come Melyanna.” Dysea spoke as she pulled Anja back. “We will let Bella discipline him. We have work to do.”

[Be safe.] Martin pronounced to all of them.

[We love you big boy.] Anja answered for all of them. [Even if you are sexually perverted and always in rut.]

Martin chuckled as Isabella stepped close to him and he pulled her tight. They watched until Anja and Dysea had made their way out of the bay and then he looked at her. He caught her soft lips in a sizzling kiss, one hand coming up to caress her face. Isabella melted against him and felt the love they all shared swirl around them, delighting her senses. He pulled back after too short a moment and met her hazel green eyes.

“Shall we?” He asked.

Bella smiled and stroked his jaw. “I will follow you anywhere.” She said softly.

Martin grinned and waggled his eyebrows. “Really? That has promise written all over it you know.”

Isabella saw the look in his beautiful eyes and she leaned back as she slapped his face lightly.

“Melyanna is right!” She exclaimed. “You are a pervert!”

Martin laughed as they turned and headed up into the corvette hand in hand. He didn’t see Anja lean affectionately into Dysea as they turned the corner out of the bay and walk down the corridor nor did he hear her words.

“So... we have three hours before we meet Aricia and Cirith.” Anja told Dysea looking at her with glittering jade green eyes. “It’s been a long time since I have had you all to myself Dysea. Have anything in mind?”

Dysea smiled at her. “Melyanna... are you propositioning me?” She asked with a laugh.

Anja chuckled softly. “Call it what you will but I have three hours with you all to myself! I intend to make you scream like I did when we were in Eden City all those years ago.”

“Anja Leonidas... you are such a pomai.” Dysea told her playfully.

“Yep!” Anja admitted freely.

“What are we waiting for?” Dysea exclaimed.

HIGH COVEN ORIC CLASS HEAVY CRUISER RETRIBUTION

“... not be very large.” Yuri was speaking as they stood around the star chart in the ship’s main officer conference room. “They did not want to draw much attention to this colony so the numbers are low. However... they are some of them best trained troops my mother had. At least as far as I could remember. And totally loyal to her and now Robert no doubt.”

“Numbers?” Dorian asked.

“No more than two hundred.” Yuri answered. “It is set up as any other colony world... to give the men and women at least some semblance of order.”

“Will they be friendly to us?” Andro asked.

Yuri shook her head. “Doubtful. They would have been told that their child is involved in very covert operations and their silence and loyalty was needed in order to keep them safe. I can’t see them risking that. After all this time I don’t doubt that some have begun to question that... but you will not know who or how many. It would be too much of a risk to try and find out.”

“They could help us.” Sheva spoke. “Maybe...”

“Yuri is right Sheva.” Andro spoke now. “If they have not begun to question what is going on by now then they are not going to do anything to put their children at risk. Once you are on the ground avoid contact at all costs. Grab an officer, find out where your parents are and then extract them.”

Sheva nodded knowing he was right. “Very well.”

Yuri looked at her from across the table. “Do not worry Sheva Leonidas.” She spoke evenly. “What you are going to do will accomplish what you are seeking.”

Sheva looked at her. “I’m not seeking anything.” She said rather defensively.

Yuri smiled. “Yes you are. You want to expose this wretched program to everyone who may be involved for what it truly is. A means to control men and women and make them do the bidding of fools. Pulling your mother and father off this planet will accomplish that all by itself believe me.” Yuri said. “These men and women are all very prominent members of the High Coven... or they were at one point. No doubt they have been listed among the roles as killed in one attack or another. If they suddenly began to question what is going on and begin to make inquiries of their own, you will accomplish this goal. Robert will not be able to keep this secret for very long once these men and women begin to ask questions. And he will not risk killing any of them if their loved one is in place already.”

Andro nodded in agreement. “He’s committed to operating as he has been for decades.” He said.

“He can not change now.” Yuri said. “These men and women will have any number of means to get their messages off world if they needed to. He can not risk exposing this, nor can he kill these families outright.”

“What will he do mother?” Onera asked from between Carisia and Lucia.

“If I had to guess he will have his people say that your parents are traitors of some kind.” Yuri explained looking again at Sheva. “He keeps his control and the remaining families will tighten their circles. But it will also make them begin to question the way of things behind his back.”

“And that is just as good as exposing it.” Lu’ria said softly. “It will eventually destroy itself from within when the truth is slowly learned.”

Yuri nodded. “Yes it will.” She said. “Then... someone will contact my sister and we all Narice will never allow this to exist. And once she discovers it... the game will be up.”

“Narice will never order an attack against this colony mother. The families are innocent of wrong doing.” Carisia spoke up now.

Yuri shook her head now. “She won’t need to. I expect that once whispers of this certain program begin to filter about, those agents like Sheva will take notice. They too will begin to question their orders and then it will commence to fall apart from the inside.”

“If we haven’t already found Moran and Dante by then and killed them.” Andro spoke.

“Very true.” Yuri echoed.

That statement caused everyone to look at Andro and Yuri oddly but Deion coming into the conference room caused them all to turn.

Deion moved up next to Andro and nodded. “The refit is nearly done fervon. The Worker Drones made it go a lot quicker than we expected. Another three hours and they should be set.”

Andro nodded his head. “Good. We’ll return to the SCIMITAR and then Dorian and Sheva can put their team together.”

Yuri turned to look at Norev. “Norev?” She asked.

Norev moved up to the board. “I have already dispatched a BLOOD RUNNER-Class Heavy Frigate to the coordinates you gave us in The Wilds. They will rendezvous with your STRIKER and then proceed to the target. Travel time should be no more than thirteen hours.”

“You’re sure you can trust these men and women?” Dorian asked.

Norev nodded his head without taking offense at the question. “The Captain is my former XO. I was very careful when I first left the High Coven and the crew of my ship were all chosen very carefully. Most of them have families at our main base, including me. They know what is involved in what we are doing and what it means.”

“I did not mean to imply anything Captain Norev...” Dorian began.

Norev shook his head quickly. “No offense was taken young man. In your position I would be asking the same questions. Over the course of the last two decades we have become very good at hiding from the Kavalians and our own people. My people will get you where you need to go and they will bring you back. How many in your Strike Team?”

Dorian looked at Andro. “A dozen?” He offered.

Andro nodded in agreement. “Sounds good.” He stated. “You and Sheva... Normya and Tir’ut flying the STRIKER...”

“I wish to go as well.” Onera spoke up.

“Onera!” Pa’cour spoke for the first time as he pushed off the wall.

Onera looked at him. “Papa... I can do this.” She told him. “I want to do this!”

“There will be no Immortals on this world!” Pa’cour spoke. “If you are spotted...”

“I am very capable of remaining among the shadows.” Onera told him. “I can blur as well as any vampire and use the shadows as mother taught me.”

Pa’cour looked at Yuri as he came up beside her. “My wife?” He spoke.

Yuri looked between him and Onera for a few seconds and then back to Pa’cour. “She is far more capable than even we know my love.” Yuri told him. “Isn’t that why we have asked Androcles to train her?”

Pa’cour knew Yuri was right and he stayed silent for a moment before looking at Dorian. “I have your promise to insure she does nothing brash?” He asked.

Dorian smiled. “You do.” He said.

“Papa!” Onera exclaimed loudly. “I can take care of myself! I do not need a babysitter! Especially one who I can no doubt defeat easily!”

“Onera!” Yuri barked.

Dorian chuckled softly. “I do not fear my brother’s sword Onera.” He said looking at her. “When you feel you are ready... all you need do is challenge me.”

Onera looked at him with confused eyes. “Your brother’s sword?” She questioned.

Pa’cour looked at his daughter. “You asked me once where I got the swords that you and I use daughter.” He said as she turned to look at him. “He stands before you now.” Pa’cour motioned to where Andro stood.

Onera looked quickly at Androcles with wide eyes and he smiled warmly. “They are good blades aren’t they?” He asked.

Onera blinked several times and then lowered her eyes. “Yes.” She finally said softly. Andro turned and looked at Yuri. “Zarah, Lucia and Carisia have requested to remain here with you.” He said seeing Yuri’s eyes grow wide in astonishment. “They will remain with my father when you return.”

Yuri looked at Carisia and the Lucia. “But... why would you...”

“We wish to try and make up for the time that was lost to us.” Lucia spoke. “Xaxon may have taken away our past... but he will not touch our future. We want to know who our true mother is.”

Yuri’s eyes became moist and she took a deep breath, gripping the side of the table with one hand while wiping her eyes quickly. “I would... I would like that very much.” She said softly.

Zarah stepped close and Lucia drew her even closer in a very intimate manner, wrapping her arm around Zarah’s waist and kissing her warmly. “And I wish to stay because Lucia wants to stay.” Zarah spoke.

Yuri didn’t blink an eye and nodded. “You have become one.” She said in understanding. “I...” She looked at Pa'cour and then shyly looked over to where Nameia sat against the far wall and had remained silent up until now. “I am beginning to understand that myself.” Yuri said as she turned back.

Andro nodded his head. “I suggest you depart immediately when the Drones finish the refits. My father will have already departed for the rendezvous and he will not wait too long.” He told her. “The extraction of Sheva’s parents should be complete by the time you return and then we will meet again to go over whatever Intel we have gathered by then.”

Yuri met his eyes. “What are you going to do to the Control Agent?” She asked.

Lu'ria pressed up close to Andro with a dazzling smile and bright amber eyes. It was not a smile that Yuri thought to be very pleasant. “We are going to question him until he tells us everything we want to know.” She stated confidently.

“And then?” Pa'cour asked.

Andro met his eyes. “Then I am going to vent his carcass out of the nearest airlock I can find.” He spoke. “What happens after that well, we will decide that when we meet after you return from your trip.”

Yuri nodded. “Fair enough.”

“Onera... why don’t you get your things together and say your goodbyes to your parents. We will wait for you in the landing bay.” Andro said.

“I am ready now.” Onera announced.

It was Lucia who reached out and took her hand. “You will be away from them for some time sister.” She said softly. “Spend a few moments to remain with them a time longer. We would like to know you a little better as well. Take my advice...” Lucia looked at Yuri. “We should always cherish the time we have with our parents.”

Onera smiled brightly at Lucia. She had not known what to expect upon meeting her half sisters, and she still had yet to meet Lisisa, but so far the reunion had gone far better than even her largest hopes. She glanced at Andro.

Andro nodded again. “We’ll meet you in the bay when you are ready.” He said. He looked at Pa'cour. “I have some equipment for you Pa'cour... if you will accompany us back to the ship.”

Pa'cour nodded and squeezed Yuri’s arm as he kissed her cheek. “Do not be too long my wife. There is much we must do.”

Yuri smiled and brushed her lips across his cheek. “We will.” She said.

Pa'cour nodded and turned to Andro. “Follow me.” He said.

SLEKON CLUSTER

ARTAAYA

DRAGON HALL EXTERIOR

Delnash walked confidently along the stone and steel skyway that led to the main Dragon Hall on Artaaya. The massive domed structure filled the horizon in front of him and yet the sense of fear that had always gripped him on this walk was no longer there. This was the place where the members of Teniri's Dragon Council resided and met nearly every day. It was built for the dragons by his people for their part in saving the Pralor people in their flight from the Scourge so long ago. The stone and steel walkway was exactly three hundred feet above the colossal courtyard below where Delnash could easily see several hundred adolescent dragons being instructed by dozens of adult dragons. The trumpets of those hundreds of dragon voices as they talked in dragon speak could be deafening to anyone on the floor of the courtyard, but up here on the bridge it was a chorus of deep rumbles and deeper bellows that was strangely comforting to Delnash. As Delnash walked the stone and steel bridge he let those voices truly ripple through him for the first time in his life. He had made this same journey across the Dragon Bridge, as it was now called, hundreds of times in the past but this was the first time he had ever really heard the voices far below. The adolescent tenor and resonance was so very powerful and confident. Lately it had grown even more as word had begun filtering among the dragons here on Artaaya of the discovery of Arzoal and those they thought lost so very long ago. Though it was not common knowledge among the Pralor people, he saw no reason why Teniri could not share it with the dragons who called Artaaya home. Only a select few Pralors communicated with them on a regular basis and those men and women were chosen by Delnash himself and totally loyal to him.

These last days and weeks had been a turning point in his life and Delnash could not have been happier about that. The news of the Svorag advance Martin had told him the moment his people had determined what was going on. In the second breath Martin had told him he would see to the defense of Honelze and now Delnash knew that dozens of Martin's ships and his men and women were on their way to fortify that colony. Martin had asked for nothing in return and Delnash would not insult him by inquiring if there was something Martin wanted. Delnash knew what the answer would be for it was the same answer Sumar would have given to anyone who asked him that question. The Svorag advance on Honelze was known by only a handful of his most trusted advisors. He did not need Lorendo causing a panic among their people. He had also begun discretely shifting what few ships he could closer to Honelze in order to assist whatever Martin was able to send. He had been in contact with the leader of the Honelze colony and advised hi of what was happening, but also the need to insure calm. He also told him that soon they would be getting reinforcements from a very unlikely source and that he should not hesitate to accept and befriend them.

As far as Martin Leonidas was concerned, he had Pralor blood flowing within his veins, as did the vast majority of his people. That made them Pralor in his eyes, and that made their defense his duty. Delnash could only shake his head in awe at the complete and total acceptance of that fact by Martin, and how it seemed to resonate among his people. In the discussions they had had over these last days and weeks, Delnash had discovered just how intelligent and truly knowledgeable Martin Leonidas really was. His sometimes laconic attitude in many things was like a breath of cold mountain air in a stale room and Delnash had come to welcome it no matter his words. He could be a serious man when needed, but Delnash had also seen a part of Martin that he sincerely doubted very few people had seen. Martin Leonidas was a deeply spiritual man and while he doubted many knew that, Martin was a man who believed in what he was doing. He led his people with his heart first, and he had told Delnash on more than one occasion that when the day came where he could leave it all behind, he would. And he would never look back.

The Lycavorian people were unlike anything Pralor records, history and studies showed. Of course they were forty thousand years outdated, but not one had ever predicted they would rise to the level of prominence and culture that they had now. Like their King, they were all deeply spiritual, no matter what Gods they worshiped. They deeply believed and completely trusted in their King and their Queens for they knew not one of them would do anything that put the future of their people or their Union at risk. The love that Martin shared for each of his very beautiful Queens was written on his face every time he looked at any of them. Aricia was the most powerful in physical and Etheric terms as well as being his Anome. His soulmate. There was always a singular glint in Martin's eyes whenever he mentioned her in their conversations or looked at her, but that did not diminish the staggering love he had for all of them. Delnash knew Martin's five other Queens gravitated to Aricia as their combined voice, but the love they all shared for each other and for Martin was without question.

Delnash turned his head and looked at the seven foot figure of his constant shadow now. Avatar 27 now went with him almost everywhere he went. He had taken Martin's advice and ordered the avatars be allowed far more freedom in what they did. Avatar 27 had announced that he would be the Chief Elder's constant companion when they returned to Artaaya and that had not changed since. In truth, Delnash had grown accustom to the massive avatar, and to be very honest, he had begun to enjoy his company. Yes... Delnash was very happy about how things were working out so far. Things that he would have never discovered had a wild looking Praetorian not shown him the light. He lifted his head when he saw Teniri waiting for him on the opposite side of the walkway and he quickened his steps. He finished crossing the bridge and came to a halt in front of her as she lowered her massive head to gaze at him.

“Teniri.” Delnash spoke with a friendly tone. “It is good to see you.”

Teniri met his gaze and nodded her huge head. I am beginning to very much enjoy our talks Delnash. She spoke to him.

Delnash nodded. “As am I.” He told her. He glanced once more into the courtyard. “The adolescents are advancing rapidly I see.”

Teniri nodded. They are excited. They want to impress the Elder Mother when she does eventually arrive here. The Talon Guardians as well. Delnash laughed loudly, making a very obvious show of it, and Teniri knew immediately why. How many and where? She asked.

-Only one this time Elder Teniri- Avatar 27 answered. -On top of Cathedral Hall-

He is not being shy about it at all now. Teniri commented.

“No... he is not. He is scared.” Delnash answered in a more subdued voice.

Teniri nodded again. As well he should be. Since you made your speech and announced there would be elections, your people have openly begun to stand behind you. It is happening across the planet. Your words touched many of them deeply.

“They were words I should have spoken long ago.” Delnash said.

Perhaps. But you have spoken them and your people flock to support you. Teniri said. This is very good.

“The Council is gathered?” Delnash asked.

Teniri nodded and turned her massive body. Come... they wait for us inside. Let Lorendo guess at what we are discussing.

Delnash looked at Avatar 27. “Activate your internal COM scramblers when we enter the chamber 27.” He said as they began to follow Teniri. “I certainly have no intention of giving that fat... what does Martin call him 27...?”

-The Lycavorian term is Ronnus Chief Elder. Bastard in the common translation of their language- 27 answered.

“Yes... no sense in giving that fat ronnus a free intelligence coup.” Delnash spoke with a smile. “I have found the Lycavorian language to be quite colorful. I like it.”

DRAGON HALL ARTAAYA COUNCIL CHAMBERS

The interior size always daunted Delnash when he was here, but in his last dozen or so visits he had grown far more comfortable. The six dragons on Teniri’s Council sat in a half circle on top of a raised stone platform on the floor of the chamber. All around them were circular raised stone platforms that rose in height the further back they went. It was like a huge sports auditorium like they had back on their homeworld Delnash had once described it. Dragon Hall could hold upwards of twenty thousand dragons, and each of them had a voice he now knew.

Delnash had also taken Martin’s advice when it came to Teniri and the dragons. When they first returned and had a meeting here, Teniri had a large chair brought in for him to sit in. Delnash had dismissed this chair and sat on the edge of the raised stone platform so that he could be near them and show them that he considered them his equal in every way. They had been wearing the Voice Modulators that Kasdan had made for the dragons their first meeting, but Delnash insisted this was not necessary any longer. He would hold nothing back from them and he wanted them to trust him as well. Delnash set his P1 down on the platform and activated it. Images sent to him from Martin of the Svorag ship lifted from the pad and surrounded him.

“These are the latest Intelligence Images from Martin and his people.” He spoke. “The ship is maintaining its course and speed and my Chief Engineer agrees with their assessment that this ship has no Quantum Fusion Drive. Or any other drive system that could move it at faster than light speeds due to its massive size. We have time.”

Teniri nodded and looked at the dark brown dragon to her left. Elder Neyrn.

The pure Firespitter dragon nodded and looked at Delnash. We have begun moving small groups of our number from the outer family pods to the location you designated Delnash. Only the older and more experienced fighters. Those that fought the Scourge during our flight. They should begin arriving there today and tomorrow.

Delnash nodded. “We will begin moving them to Honelze discretely over the next week. They should become familiar with the terrain and wind patterns of the planet. You are sure you want to do this my friends?” He asked looking at them.

We will not sit idly by while the Svorag ravage another of your colonies. The brownish yellow female dragon spoke now. They will only come here next and then they threaten our children and eggs as well.

Elder Bricus is correct Delnash. Teniri said. Though in many ways we have become just as you and your people have. Complacent. We do not have as many warriors as we used to and they are not used to fighting in closed spaces.

Delnash nodded. “Send only what you can. Martin tells me his son is bringing what they call the Dragon Brigade.”

Dragon Brigade? Another Elder asked. What is this Delnash?

Delnash nodded again. “Apparently it is a complete unit of some three thousand dragons formed and trained by his son Androcles and several others. All of them wear this new Dragon Armor and are trained to fight in close quarters as well as at distance. They are led by a dragon named Durago. He is Arzoal’s mate.”

Yes... she told me briefly of her mate and that he was the leader of a dragon unit. Teniri spoke. I did not think it was so large however.

Three thousand dragons fighting as one unit? Neyrn asked. How is that possible?

Androcles is the other Lycavorian Talon Guardian. Teniri told them. He and his Bonded Sister Elynth form the second pair as Martin and Torma form the first. We must remember that Arzoal and our brethren have been fighting for their very existence for the last twenty millennia. All while we were here and allowing our own skills to recede and develop in other ways. Only in the last two decades have they found a place within Martin’s Union. An important place.

Three thousand armored dragons fighting together? Bricus spoke again. That will be a most impressive sight. If they can do what they say.

Arzoal shared with me some of what her mate showed her in regards to several battles they fought recently. Their bloodying so to speak. They will make believers out of all of you. Teniri said. Though it goes against our very nature, our brethren in the Alpha Quadrant have led very different lives and have adapted to survive. We must be accepting of that.

We need more confident and brash young male dragons. Neyrn spoke.

There are many female dragons among this unit Neyrn. Teniri spoke with some humor. Several of them command different sections.

Neyrn chuckled. All the better! He declared. They can only make Dragonkind stronger as we go forward.

Indeed. Bricus agreed.

“Martin’s advanced forces should begin arriving within the week.” Delnash told them. “His son has been delayed somewhat due to an unforeseen issue at their location. Martin assures me that he will deal with the problem and be here in time with their main force.”

Are you certain they can prevail Delnash? Another Elder asked. They will be fighting millions of Svorag.

Delnash looked at the dragon. "If I did not believe Elder Nekins, I would not be standing here now. You all know how our people once viewed Praetorians. With the exception of my brother Murano they were thought to be extinct. If what Murano and Wayonn tell me is true, there are five Praetorians heading here with his son Androcles. Five. All of them are Martin's children or married to his children. This will send... this knowledge will inject my people with pride once more. Pride and courage. In our war with the Scourge just one Praetorian on the field could turn the tide of any battle. I expect five would ignite a fire long dead in my people. And with the knowledge that there could be so many more among Martin's people... well... let's just say I cannot predict what that will do."

Will the Scourge take notice of this battle when it happens? Bricus asked. They have spies and collaborators everywhere.

Delnash took a deep breath. "I do not know. All of our covert sensor probes in the many different quadrants have seen no activity in recent years."

But Wayonn and the others have sensed them? Teniri asked.

Delnash nodded. "Faintly yes... but they don't know where or how many. Wayonn said they were moving until recently. As did Murano and Martin. Something has caused them to stop wherever they are however. We don't know why for certain but Wayonn believes it is due to something important that Martin's son has accomplished back in the Alpha Quadrant. An alliance between former hated enemies that many imagined could never be possible. We do not know for certain as I said, but they are not anywhere within a hundred thousand light years of us here. That much I do know with certainty."

Let us hope it stays that way. Neyrn said.

This son, Androcles. Nekins asked. There is something about your voice when you speak his name Delnash. Why?

Delnash met his dragon eyes evenly. "According to Wayonn, Androcles was... he was born fully aware of everything around him. Even while still in his mother's womb he was fully aware. With the memories of not only Sumar but Sumar's oldest son Resumar and that same son's only surviving child, Martin's father. The man whose name they all bear now. He also told me this Androcles was bonded with the dragon Elynth while still within his mother Aricia's womb. Several months before he was actually born actually. He used her as a conduit to the outside world. He is still somewhat of an enigma among his own people as both he and his dragon are obsessively private."

The eyes of all the council members grew a little larger now. Teniri... this is true? Bricus asked.

Teniri nodded her head. Arzoal told me a little of him, but not very much. She... even she seemed distant when speaking of him now that I think back. In awe of him.

He bonded with this Elynth while still in his mother's womb? And this dragon was still an infant herself? Nekins asked. And they shared everything?

Delnash nodded his head. "That is what I understand yes." He said. "She was only a few months old herself when they bonded. They have not been apart for more than a few days at a time if what Wayonn told me is accurate. His dragon, Elynth is her name as I said; Wayonn tells me that she is considered among the most powerful of your kind even at her young age. I did not think that this was possible for your kind. I had always believed that dragons did not fully mature until they were several hundred years old."

Bricus nodded her huge head. That is normally the case yes. She answered.

Teniri looked at Nekins. Elder Nekins... what is it?

Nekins met her eyes. I have heard of this somewhere before. He replied.

Nekins are you certain? This has never happened among Dragonkind. It has never happened in our history ever to my knowledge. Not the depth of the bond that Delnash says he has been told exists. Not even the Ancient Knowledge Crystals saved by our ancestors in their flight from the Scourge mention this. Neyrn spoke. Nekins my friend you must be mistaken.

I am certain of it. Nekins spoke shaking his head. It was an obscure sentence from something I read. I will consult with the Ancient Elder when we are done here to be sure. You may be correct Neyrn.

"Will your Ancient Elder Father know?" Delnash asked.

He is the oldest of our kind known to still be living. Teniri said. He was the one who blessed Arzoal's rise to Elder Mother. None of us know exactly how old he is, but some have said he has over three hundred millennia behind him.

“Three hundred thousand years old?” Delnash gasped aloud. “I never knew that! That is amazing!”

He will not tell anyone his true age. Teniri told Delnash. Most of what we know is only rumor. He finds it humorous. Nekins is the only Elder who he will speak with. None of us have ever spoken with him. He remains alone in his cave.

“Perhaps one day I will be allowed to meet him.” Delnash spoke. Delnash leaned over and tapped his P1 once more. “I have discovered something else.” He stated. The images of a ship appeared and began to rotate.

Teniri’s eyes grew wide. Our ship! She exclaimed.

“Lorendo lied Teniri.” Delnash spoke evenly. “Not that it is surprising given what we have learned in the last weeks, but this is something I felt you should know. He lied about not finding your ship. He found it... and he is the one that delayed it from returning. What he did with it for those nine thousand years I am still trying to figure out, but he has covered his tracks well.”

Then he is responsible for crimes against Dragonkind! Neyrn hissed. He condemned many to death when he did not allow that ship to return to Elder Mother Arzoal. Thousands of our kind died in the war that Teniri told us they fought.

Delnash nodded his head. “Yes he did. His actions directly influenced what Arzoal had to do. Many of your kind died as a result of the decisions she was forced to make. I ask that you allow me to discover exactly what it was he was doing before anything is done. He will answer for his crimes against Dragonkind and against his own people, but I ask for patience so that we can discover all his sins. No matter how terrible they may be.”

He has already admitted to being the one to create the Svorag. Bricus spoke. Is that not enough Delnash? They have killed thousands of your people through the years. Does he not bear the blame for that?

“It is enough... and yes he does.” Delnash agreed. “However, I want to discover all of it. No matter how bad it may be. It is the only way to be sure that something he has done in the past does not rear its foul head in the future.”

Neyrn nodded. A wise approach.

He will face justice Delnash? Teniri asked.

Delnash nodded his head. “Oh he will face justice Teniri. I swear to all of you that he will. And he will not be happy in the least when he discovers what that justice will be, or who will hold his fate in their hands.”

Teniri looked at each of the elders and saw them nod to her. Then we will leave it your hands Delnash. She told him.

Delnash bowed his head in recognition of their decision and then turned to Avatar 27. “27... pull up the reports Martin sent individually so that we can review them one at a time.”

-At once Chief Elder. Report 345. Governmental Structure of Union and Alpha Quadrant-

BETA QUADRANT

AUSTROVA

CAPITAL CITY OF MYDALA

CALIRIA LEONIDAS’S APARTMENT

Caliria stood on the balcony of her apartment and let the sun warm her near naked figure. The thin robe she wore did little to hide the high firmness of her breasts or the elegant curve of her hips. The robe clung to her taut ass cheeks and the outsides of her thighs like a second skin, leaving very little to the imagination. It was definitely not something she would wear outside of the privacy of her own home, but it was one of the gifts that Sadi and Ne’Veha had sent with her when she had departed Earth. Wearing the robe brought back such delicious memories of their time together. Memories that Caliria was not ashamed of in the least anymore and memories she never wanted to forget. That day seemed like a lifetime ago and now, every day that went by, her desire for Andro’s arms around her grew that much more powerful. She wanted to melt into his embrace, into their embrace and once more lose herself within that heavenly tangle of limbs and lips and tongues that she remembered vividly from their night together.

Caliria had changed so much from that day. Far more than anyone would ever believe. Far more than even she believed.

She tilted her head slightly and allowed the soft breeze to caress her face and body, very much delighting in the smells that rushed to her. The pungent smell of Vanari Orchid Blossoms from twenty stories below on the tenant's balcony made her sigh in happiness. Hundreds of years of Vanari research on the OSG chemical substance that had been used to control Vanari females had been rendered obsolete because of her work. Though this knowledge had not yet been made public, Caliria knew her father was pushing as hard as he could and insuring that she was the one who was recognized as being the catalyst for saving their people from such shame. Now Caliria had taken it even further by discovering and embracing what that one night with Androcles Leonidas had done to her. All of the many studies done over the decades by dozens of Vanari scientists, though no actual testing had ever occurred she knew, all of this said the Vanari people could not be affected by the Lycavorian virus that ran in their blood.

Caliria was living proof that it was all another lie. She and her sisters and their mother made it all a lie.

Caliria had wondered why Andro had not bitten her that night. He had more than enough opportunities for they had coupled countless times and he had spilled his essence into her at least four times that she could recall. Never had she met a man, and Caliria was no stranger to men, never had she met one who was built like Andro. He was the largest man she had ever laid with by far, yet he did things to her that left her gasping for more. He took her passionately and he took her with divine slowness that robbed her of her senses. His stamina was beyond any man she had bedded, and it seemed to extend to Sadi and Carisia and the others. That night was still very much a blur of pleasure and body parts, but now she understood why he had not bitten her as he had done with the others. He was not fully accustomed to the Vanari customs and he had not wanted to do something she might find unnatural. He had known however, he had known that their times together would begin to change her. Paga had more than confirmed this with her when Caliria had practically run to her after discovering the small fangs that had burst from her gums during one of her more pleasant fantasies about them together. Paga had told her then, behind only his father, Androcles Leonidas had perhaps the very purest blood of any living Lycavorian. This meant that the wondrous virus that ran within his blood would be so much more potent. Andro hadn't needed to bite her to change her; their time together would see to that, at least in the beginning.

Caliria Leonidas now looked at the world around her in a much sharper way than most others around her. Her eyes could change like Andro and Sadi and the others and her vision had become far more acute, allowing her to see things at far greater distances and with so much clarity. Her hearing had become so sensitive she could detect and count the beating of a bird's wings as it hovered near a tree. Her sense of smell had grown far more than even she had been prepared for. Her father, Arduri, Denali, everyone had a distinct scent and it was nearly overwhelming until Paga had taught her how to quickly file each scent away into a computer like file system in her brain. It happened now almost effortlessly, but she remembered the difficult struggles the first few days Paga instructed her. She had inherited a portion of the Lycavorian healing and regenerative systems, infusing her body with energy she had not had before. She was stronger and faster and her reflexes far superior to any Cadre Commando she had ever seen.

And it was absolutely blissful for Caliria.

She would never be able to change her form like Andro and the others, and any children born from their union would look like her, but they would be Lycavorian within. The Hadarian doctor on the ARCH DEMON had confirmed all of this for her, but Caliria did not care about that. She embraced these changes within her, relished in them, and now she wanted nothing more than to ravish Andro with attention in order to thank him for this wonderful gift. She loved Androcles, of that she no longer had any doubts. She loved them all. They had become part of who she was, no matter that she was older than all of them by at least a hundred and fifty years. As with Sadi and the others, Andro had become her center, her purpose. She wanted to taste Carisia and Lu'ria again and again, for she found herself drawn to them more that night. Carisia's eyes and the color of Lu'ria's skin were maddening to her, but more than anything she wanted Andro's arms around her, holding her tightly. Caliria would have that. She remembered vividly the look on his face when he discovered Franklin in her bed, and that look had cut her soul deeply. With Paga's help though she had found her inner self and with that came peace with the knowledge of who she was and what she wanted. And Caliria would show Andro that she loved no one but him; wanted no one but him. She would show Sadi and Ne'Veha and Carisia and Lu'ria and now Sehri that they were what she desired.

Caliria was sure of all this for she now had the father that she had never had before. Her father had become a different man now, so caring and concerned for her and Arduri and Naesta and Nirilo and all that they were. He was a father who respected and was so very proud of what she had accomplished in her life. He may have had many hundreds of years of experience over her, but now her father listened to her intently and allowed her words to reflect in the decisions he was making. He no longer saw her differently because of her black hair. Now she was like a precious gem and he went out of his way to insure that she saw him trying to make up for all the years he had dismissed her.

Having her sister nearby was a godsend as well. Arduri had taken to the changes within her much more quickly because of Denali's presence and his easy going manner in teaching her how to use them. Like Caliria worshiped Androcles and the others, Arduri adored Denali and Lisisa to the extreme. Her newfound abilities made Arduri's already lethal talents as a Vanari Cadre Commando even more deadly. After the few transmissions she had been able to have with Naesta, Caliria was certain her youngest sister was experiencing the same thing since allowing the massive ebony skinned Lycavorian Joci and the stunning twin sister of Andro's mother to take her as their beloved wife and mate.

Yes... she would have Andro's arms around her once more. She would bask in the feel of his powerful arms holding her, the feel of his warm lips against hers, and most of all she would relish in the love she had for him. She had hurt him she knew, but she would make up for that a hundred fold. And if what Paga said was really true, that he would hold himself responsible for what happen and not her, than Caliria would soon have what she had only dreamed of.

She detected Paga's light lemon scent but didn't turn. As the tall Durcunusaan soldier came out onto the balcony with her, Paga smiled. She wore simple shorts and t-shirt over her muscular female form and held a large mug of the Queen's coffee in her hand. She knew Caliria was becoming more and more comfortable in her new abilities for she didn't flinch any longer when detecting her scent. The only thing that belied the fact Caliria knew she was coming up behind her was the almost miniscule shifting of her feet in case Caliria needed to turn suddenly and escape. It was a natural instinct in their people and it had taken hold in Caliria as well.

"You have grown stronger Caliria." Paga said as she came up beside her.

Caliria turned and looked at her. "It is becoming so much easier Paga." She said with a smile. "I must still concentrate, but it is not hard anymore and everything is so much more vivid and clear."

Paga nodded. "Even that will become second nature to you in time." She stated.

Caliria looked at her. "I have... I have never had a friend like you Paga." She said softly. "One I could tell everything to."

Paga met her eyes evenly. "Nor have I." She stated honestly. "Being a member of the Durcunusaan does not leave much time for developing friendships that are truly honored and last. I have found that with you and I cherish it."

Caliria smiled brightly. She had shared everything with Paga these last weeks, holding nothing back from her. It was uncomfortable for Paga at first, hearing Caliria speak about the Crown Prince and Princess in so intimate a manner, but Paga had also been caught up in the emotion of having someone she could share everything with. She began to open up to Caliria in return and the Vanari female had quickly become the sister that Paga had never had.

"I don't have any classes today." Caliria spoke. "Shall we go to the Promenade and shop?"

Paga laughed softly. "I don't shop." She said.

Caliria leaned into her gently. "Well... we will have to change that won't we?"

Paga rolled her eyes in an almost embarrassed expression just as the chime from the door rang. Caliria's eyes lit up and she squeezed her arm. "Arduri was coming over this morning so we will make it a threesome." She said as she began moving into the apartment.

Caliria padded barefoot over the floor of the apartment to the door and touched the panel. She opened her mouth say something excitedly to her sister but the words died in her throat as she saw Franklin standing in the hallway. Her green eyes narrowed considerably and she pulled the thin robe tighter around her lush body almost instinctively.

"What are you doing here?" She snarled at him.

“Caliria... we need to talk.” Franklin told her.

“We don’t need to do anything. I do not want to talk to you!” Caliria snapped back at him harshly. “And I certainly have absolutely no interest in anything you have to say Franklin.”

“Caliria we...”

Caliria waved her hand over the panel. “Goodbye Franklin.” She stated as the door began to close.

Franklin reached into the apartment with cat like speed and slammed his hand down on the panel, stopping the door from closing. As it began to reopen he moved into the doorway itself. “Caliria I have some things I need to tell you.”

Caliria held out her hand quickly and stuck it into his chest bringing him to an abrupt halt. Franklin looked at her with surprise in his eyes at this display of strength. “How dare you! Who do you think you are coming into my home?” She snapped.

Franklin looked at her. “I thought I meant something to you.” He stated.

“Please!” Caliria quipped sarcastically. “You took advantage of me Franklin. You took advantage of my confusion.” Caliria did not speak the words she wanted to say in regards to her being sure it was him who had facilitated that she was taken by the OSG to begin with.

“I took advantage of you!” Franklin exclaimed in shock. “I did no such thing and you know it! You practically threw yourself into my arms Caliria. What exactly was I supposed to do?”

“If you truly cared about me and not what I could do for you then you would have tried to help me. Not get me into your bed.” Caliria hissed.

“I love you Caliria!” He announced.

Caliria rolled her eyes. “Do you honestly expect me to believe that?” She popped. “After all you have done?”

“What have I done?” Franklin demanded. “I have always treated you with respect Caliria. I thought we had some good times together.”

“No... you had the good times Franklin.” Caliria told him. “You took advantage of my mental state to appease your ego and your nefarious motives. Why were you the last person I saw before the OSG captured me Franklin? Why were you the first person I saw when I came back here after I was rescued?”

“You think I was involved in that?” He spoke aghast.

“I don’t need to think about it.” Caliria said as her nose twitched ever so slightly and she smelled the adrenalin dump into his bloodstream indicating that he was lying to her. “I know all I need to know about you and your lies!”

“Caliria I love you and I am trying to help you!” Franklin hissed softly.

“Help me?” She spat. “By making sure I was taken by the OSG to spend the rest of my days as a whore! That is you loving me? I told you what I was working on and you passed that on to your handlers! You don’t love me Franklin... you never loved me. Please do not insult my intelligence by spouting such lies.”

“I didn’t know about that!” He almost yelled. “I told you my father is well connected! He knew I was interested in you and... and he did not approve. When I told him I would not break it off with you he must have... he must have sent others to watch you. Discover what you were doing? I told him nothing!”

Caliria shook her head. “I am supposed to believe that?” She said. “Do you think I am such a fool?”

“It’s the truth!” He exclaimed.

“That you are still clinging to such a story and you expect me to believe it is beyond me.” Caliria said shaking her head. “Do you consider all women to be fools Franklin?”

Franklin reached out with his hands but stopped just short of touching her. “Caliria you are treading in very dangerous waters.” He told her. “Your... your relationship with that animal Lycavorian Prince is dangerous. He is a loose cannon and he has made enemies everywhere. Your own Board of Regents are going to reject whatever he has to say when he gets here!”

Caliria glared at him. “Do not call my husband an animal in my presence again Franklin. Not if you wish to continue talking!”

“He is not your husband! Caliria he does not care for you!” Franklin snapped. “Only what you can do for him! He will use you to get what he can out of the Board of Regents and that is all! You don’t actually think he considers you his wife do you? He is using you!”

“Did your OSG friends tell you that Franklin?” She asked with a small smile. “You do not know as much as you think you do about the Lycavorian people Franklin.”

“I’m trying to protect you damn it!” He barked. “He and his people have been working with members of your own government for decades! They are the ones responsible for taking Vanari females and...”

“Enough lies!” Caliria spat. “Get out!”

“Caliria if you continue to work on...” Franklin began.

“I don’t need to work on it anymore!” Caliria shouted at him angrily and forgetting to mind her words. “It has already been done! I have finished a working counteragent for the OSG chemical weapon against my people with help from Andro’s mother and sister! It has already been discovered and implemented Franklin! I’ve seen it work on those captured with me! My father knows and so do the members of the SBR! You can’t hide it anymore Franklin! The OSG will not control my people any longer!”

Franklin reached out and grabbed her arms gently. “Caliria are you crazy! You can’t say things like that! I can not protect you from my father or his contacts if you go around making these wild accusations!”

“They are not accusations! They are truth!” Caliria growled. “Now take your hands from me!”

Franklin shifted his tactics quickly and gently rubbed his hands up and down her arms. Caliria’s eyes narrowed even more and she tilted her head to the side. “I seem to recall that you liked it when my hands are on you Caliria Re Mydala.” He said with a smile.

“Please Franklin.” She told him calmly stepping back from him. “You can not compare to Androcles in any way and most especially not in the sexual department. He is far longer and thicker than your puny manhood and he knows how to use it in a way that makes you a drooling child in comparison.” Caliria met his eyes with her final words as she took the intentional dig at his manhood. She saw his eyes grow a little wider and she smiled.

“Mocking me Caliria Re Mydala is not the way...” He began.

Caliria yanked her arms completely from his grasp and totally lost control of her anger at that moment. She had heard enough. Her green eyes changed then, the black ring surrounding the bright green pupil and her small, but no less lethal dual fangs bursting from her gums to be displayed very prominently. Franklin stared at her in shock. “My name is Caliria Leonidas and I am a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union!” Caliria barked at him viciously. “And if you ever touch me again I will insure you no longer have hands to use in such a way!”

Franklin stared at her in stunned silence. He blinked several times. “Your... your eyes!” He exclaimed. “You have... how is that...?” He stopped talking when Paga appeared from the side with her KM14 leveled at his head.

“To lay your filthy hands upon any Princess of the Union in such a way is cause for an immediate firing squad within Lycavorian space.” Paga growled. “To lay your hands upon a wife and mate to Androcles Leonidas in such a way is sure to incur his vengeful wrath. Trust me Eridiani... the wrath of Androcles Leonidas is far worse than you have heard in any stories and reports from your OSG partners.”

Franklin’s eyes shifted between Caliria and Paga. “Caliria you...”

“Paga...” Caliria began speaking confidently, not bothering to change her features back to normal. “...if he does not leave my home in the next five seconds, shoot him in his disgusting face.”

Paga stepped closer, charging her KM14. “With pleasure.” She stared at Franklin. “Your choice fool!” She spat.

Franklin looked at Caliria. “I can not help you now Calira.” He spoke as he began to back out into the corridor. “Now it is too late.”

Caliria met his eyes. “Too late for you.” She stated. “I do not need your help Franklin. I never have.” She spoke as she waved her hand over the panel and the door closed in his face. She made sure it was locked and turned to Paga.

Paga looked at her as she lowered her KM14 slowly. “I do believe we may have altered the current landscape of things.” She said. “No doubt he will run back and tell his handlers of your new... of the new you.”

Caliria couldn’t help but smile as she reached up and ran her fingers slowly over her very sharp fangs. “Oops!” She spoke softly.

Paga laughed softly at her expression. "Come Caliria my friend... get dressed and pack some of your things. Your father and Denali will need to know of this quickly and I suspect it would be safer for us both if we remained at his estate during the evenings now."

Caliria nodded her head. "I agree." She said. "I'm sorry Paga. I... my temper got the better of me."

Paga grinned. "Do not be sorry my friend." She told her. "Today... today you have shown that you have truly embraced the Lycavorian blood that now flows within you. How does it feel?"

Caliria's eyes were bright and alert. "Glorious!"

Franklin made his way out of Caliria's apartment building and moved directly to the hover car that was waiting for him. He sat back in the rear seat, saying nothing to the driver, as the car rose into the traffic lanes of Mydala and then he triggered the COM unit.

"Well?" The voice of the man asked as the image of the middle aged man with graying hair came into view.

"We may have a problem father." Franklin spoke. "She confirmed what we suspected. A counteragent to G76 does indeed exist and she has seen it work successfully on those taken with her. She was able to finish it with the assistance of the Hadarians."

The man nodded his head slowly. "Given the way many of our contacts within the Board of Regents have been acting it does not surprise me."

"What now?" Franklin asked.

"I will direct our people to begin work on a mutative agent that will render their cure useless." The man said in reply.

"That could take weeks or months father." Franklin said quickly. "Caliria was close to finding a counteragent before she was taken. Now that she has been exposed to the Lycavorian Union and their Hadarian Healers, she will no doubt have access to medical equipment and personnel that we do not have. The Hadarians are far superior to our own doctors and scientists because of the mutative nature of the nebula around their world. Nearly all of them are born with an affinity for healing. They also have access to computers and equipment we could only dream to have. Computers and medical equipment that will no doubt have a base knowledge of G76 now. The Vanari scientists on our payrolls will not be able to hide it for centuries this time and if the Hadarians are involved as Caliria said then they will have active programs on file to counter any variant of G76 that we come up with. If we try to develop another compound it will be discovered for certain before testing is even done."

"The Hadarian Healers are that good son?" The man asked.

Franklin nodded. "Better." He said. "I made several recon trips to their homeworld before we expanded into the Alpha quadrant father. Their security measures for travelers is not very good. At least it wasn't then. I was not able to see much, but just from what I saw, anything our people come up with they will negate within days."

"Can we not just take several of their Healers and learn what they know? How they do things?" The man asked.

Franklin shook his head tentatively. "We could ask our Kavalian contacts father. They now have control of the Hadarian homeworld, but none of the active healers within Lycavorian ranks returned to their planet when the new government ordered them home. They are who we would need to examine to learn anything from the radiation in the nebula and its effects on them. And the Kavalians are becoming a liability with the growing discord within their own ranks. Now... trying to take even one Hadarian from within the Lycavorian military itself will be impossible given that most of them are assigned to ships or military units. Any attempt that we make could possibly cause us to become targets if we are discovered. That is not something we want father. We would also make the Eridiani government targets as well and the fools in power would turn on us instantly to protect themselves."

"I concur." The man said. "You agree with Colonel Faith's assessment then?"

Franklin nodded his head. "I do father. I would also go further and say that we do not know enough about the Lycavorian culture from within this Union. They are different in many ways from the Protectorate."

Certainly more prone to violence but also far more dedicated to their values and morals. We might be able to bribe some within their government, that has been proven by the Kavalians, but I do not believe it would be possible to turn any within their core military. If we begin to try and kidnap Hadarians from within their very ranks, they will respond father. Viciously. And unfortunately for us, they are far more skilled at war than we are.”

“You don’t have faith in our people son?” The man asked.

“That is not it and you know that father.” He answered. “The Lycavorian Prince is a loose cannon. In many ways he is worse than his father. And he seems to be the one in charge at the moment. At least with his father, we could predict in some fashion what he would do based on his past decisions. The sons, especially this Androcles, our intelligence agents have never been able to put together a workable file on them father. None of them. We do not know what they would do and trying to predict how they would respond is too precarious. And while we train and push our people hard, the Lycavorians train and push their people even harder. They have been at war for the better part of their existence. And they do not show mercy or take prisoners father. Any direct conflict with them and we would lose far more than we gain.”

“You sound as if you admire them son.” His father spoke.

Franklin nodded. “In some ways I do.” He answered honestly. “But only to a point that benefits us father.”

“Do you believe others not working with us know what Caliria Re Mydala knows?” The man asked after a long moment.

Franklin nodded. “Without a doubt. The Leonidas brother for sure, her father and sister most likely, perhaps more.”

“Then they will need to be eliminated Franklin.” The man said. “Can you facilitate this?”

Franklin nodded. “Yes father. I know where Coren Re Mydala lives. I have blueprints of his estate there.”

“Does this bother you son?” The man asked.

Franklin shook his head quickly. “No. She was a tool. A pleasurable tool no doubt, but still only a tool. I will take care of it. However... there is something else you need to know.”

“Go on.”

“Father... I believe Caliria has been changed.” Franklin said.

“Changed? Changed how?”

“I believe the virus within the pureblood Lycavorian Prince is far more powerful than we first thought.” Franklin said. “She got angry with me and her... her eyes changed like those Lycavorians of the Protectorate that we have experimented on. She grew rather nasty looking fangs as well.”

This caused the man to sit forward in his chair. “You are certain son?”

Franklin nodded. “I would not have believed it if I did not see it myself.”

“I was under the impression the Vanari Scientists said this could not happen.” The man spoke.

“I think it would be a surprise to them as well.” Franklin added.

“Interesting.” The man said thoughtfully. “This is not something we can simply pass by. Take the brother alive. And the Vanari sisters. Kill the rest. We have Lycavorian assets already in place throughout the city. Use them and make this happen quickly. The dynamics will change dramatically when the older brother arrives if we have them.”

“I’ll see to it father.” Franklin spoke. “Timetable?”

“Quickly... as I said. Lead them yourself.” He replied calmly. “Make it appear to be an accident and leave no survivors.”

Franklin nodded. “Understood. What about the threats from the older brother?”

The older man shook his head. “Those of us in power do not believe he has the ability or the fortitude to follow through with his veiled threats. It is not something you need concern yourself with. However, I will make your observations known to the others. This is a critical time and we can not make mistakes. Make this happen Franklin. And be safe.”

Franklin nodded. “Consider it done father.”

“Contact me when it is complete.” The man spoke.

COREN RE MYDALA ESTATE

“...Are certain Caliria?” Coren asked looking at his oldest daughter across the knee high table in front of them.

Paga stood behind them while Caliria sat on the couch beside Arduri. Denali paced the floor near the large double doors onto the patio holding the mug of coffee in his hand not saying anything as he listened.

Caliria nodded. “He made me angry with his arrogance and continued lying. I allowed it to slip without thinking.”

Coren looked up. “I want to crush this man’s throat in my own hands!” He growled. “I have never wanted to hurt a living being but this man, this man I will make an exception for.”

“I’m sorry father.” Caliria spoke.

“Bah!” Coren hissed waving his hand dismissively. “You have nothing to be sorry for Caliria. You did nothing wrong! We already assumed the OSG knew of the counteragent. If this Franklin is one of their agents then it only confirms it for them.”

“I am also... I am also reasonably sure that he is the one who facilitated me being taken by the OSG.” Caliria said. “I was not certain at first, but it all makes more and more sense to me as I think back on those days. He is the only one it could be. I know it. I can see it in his eyes whenever I bring it up. He was lying. I know that without question.”

This announcement caused Denali to stop pacing the floor and he turned to look at her intently.

“Inamarno... you are sure?” He asked her. “Forn culibhe allon arbet tye?”

“Jainn.” Caliria answered meeting his eyes.

“You must be certain arande.” Denali told her moving closer. “There can be no doubt in your mind. No question. This is the man who gave you to the OSG? You smelled the adrenalin dump in his blood when he lied?”

Caliria met his eyes. “Jainn.” She answered without hesitation.

“Smelled?” Coren asked. “Caliria... what does Denali mean you smelled.”

Arduri looked at Denali. “Denali my love... why does this matter? I believe my sister.”

“As do I Duri.” He spoke.

“Then what does it matter?” Arduri questioned again.

Denali moved back to the couch and sat down between Arduri and Caliria. Arduri’s hand slipped over to rest on his thigh and his larger hand covered hers without thought. He reached out with his other hand and took Caliria’s in his. “My brothers and I made a pact with each other many years ago Duri.” He spoke softly and looked at Caliria. “Inamarno.”

“A pact?” Caliria questioned.

Denali nodded his head. “It was a pact of blood between brothers. We swore to act in each other’s stead if the need ever arose. That we would act for each other. That our voices would be one when it came to this one subject. It’s roots come from the knowledge of what happen to our mother Aricia before any of us were born. No one... not even our father knows of this. Andro, Resumar, Arrarn... all of us. We reaffirmed this oath recently with Dorian and Deion since they are now of age and Dorian has taken a wife and mate.”

“What pact Deni?” Caliria asked again.

“If one of our wives and mates was ever assaulted as you were Inamarno, as our mother Aricia was, as our elven mothers recently have been, we swore that our combined vengeance in reply to this act would be like our father’s. It would be swift, complete and united no matter who it happened to.” Denali told them. “That we would act as if it was our own wife and mate.”

“What... what does that mean Denali?” Caliria asked softly.

“It means that I intend to honor that pact.” He told her. “Just as any of my brothers would honor it if it were them. You have given me the knowledge I needed to act for my brother. I will do exactly as Androcles would do if he was here.”

“Act how?” Arduri asked tentatively.

Denali rose to his feet. “Coren... you will want to inform Dyack that he needs to sever all ties with the OSG effective immediately. He will not speak to me because of what he perceives Andro did with Sehri. Until Andro is here and can speak with Dyack himself you must be our conduit to him.”

“Denali... he has just gotten to a position that could very well help us.” Coren told him.

“It will not matter any longer.” Denali said. “Tell him to save whatever information he has obtained and pull out of any communications with them. This will actually help him as well given that his own people are becoming suspicious of his dealings with the Eridiani.”

“What? Why?” Coren spoke coming to his feet now. “What is going on?”

“Once you have contacted him... call into your office and tell them you are departing for a short working tour of the Protectorate’s homeworld.” Denali told him. “Tell them Dutkne is giving the tour and invited you.”

Arduri jumped up. “We are going to Lorent?” She exclaimed with excitement.

“Denali!” Coren snapped. “Could you please explain to me what is going on?” He rasped out. “What did Caliria smell? What do you intend because of it?”

Denali looked at Arduri and Caliria. “Perhaps now might be a good time to inform your father Duri.” He said.

Coren’s eyes narrowed. “Inform me of what?”

Caliria knew what Denali intended. She could almost see it within his mind because of the closeness he had with Andro as his brother and a Praetorian. And despite her upbringing, Caliria found she approved of the intent. She stepped around him and moved up to her father taking one of his hands.

“Papa... there is something Arduri and I need to tell you.” She stated turning to see Arduri come up beside her.

“Why... why do I not like the way you said that.” Coren spoke.

“Perhaps you should sit down papa.” Arduri told him as Denali turned to Paga and moved closer to her.

“There is nothing at her apartment?” He asked softly.

Paga shook her head quickly. “She has moved anything of importance to her to the ARCH DEMON already Milord.” She answered. “We only stay at her apartment when she has classes the next day.”

“And he conveniently showed up this morning knowing she had classes today.” Denali said.

Paga nodded. “Almost as if he knew she would be there.”

“She does not return to her apartment anymore Paga.” Denali told her. “Make whatever preparations you need for her to have extra security while she is going to class at the University but her apartment is out of the question. It is too exposed and open. Both of you stay her on the estate now.”

“I could say the same about the University Milord.” Paga said. “To cover her properly on the University grounds I would need another six Durcunusaan or Drow scouts. Especially if you do what I think you are going to do.”

Deni nodded his head. “Then you will have them.” He stated. “Give me a list and I will make sure it happens. She is Andro’s wife and mate and I intend to make sure nothing happens to her before he arrives.”

Paga drew herself up. “She has become... she has become like a sister to me Milord. I swear to you nothing will harm her while I live.”

Deni nodded to her. “Good. Then between you and I we will have it covered. Whatever you brought with you have moved to my STRIKER. When they finish telling their father we will depart.”

“What do you think he will do Milord?” Paga asked looking at Coren. “When they tell him?”

Deni shrugged his broad shoulders. “To be honest... I don’t really know. But he is a different man now. We will see.”

“And the OSG?” Paga asked.

Denali met her eyes calmly and Paga shuddered inwardly at the evil intent she saw in his dark orbs. “The OSG will cease to exist when I am done.” Deni stated calmly.

Daron moved along the many portable buildings with measured confidence. He did not want to make it seem like he was too excited as he made his way towards the medical facility. He was looking forward to bedding Anja Leonidas. She was quite beautiful and if he was any judge of character, she would be fairly inventive in their bed. He never thought Martin was going to leave and he waited impatiently for her to return from the ship in orbit. He had been watching the medical building since her return waiting for the signal she would send to him and only minutes ago the lights flickered only for a moment. That had been her signal that she was ready for him and he had begun to make his way across the compound. Daron could picture her tight body beneath him, urging him on as he pummeled her into the bed. He was going to make her beg for more, beg him to take her over and over, and he was going to record it all. Then he would show it to Lorendo and his father and prove to them just how savage and inferior they were to his people. If he could get one of the vaunted Lycavorian King's women to surrender to him in a sexual manner it would show just how easy it would be to control them. And because of her beauty, he would enjoy having Anja Leonidas in every way possible, as many times as possible. Maybe he would even impregnate her just to prove how superior he was. Perhaps he would even keep her as a pet to relieve himself whenever he felt the need.

It took him several minutes to casually move across the large compound until he was in front of the medical facility. He looked around the immediate area, and unable to detect anyone nearby he quickly touched the door control panel. It slid open without pause and he moved into the facility.

Daron didn't see the three shadows step from behind a nearby building as the door closed behind him. Three lethal shadows that had been following him since he left his personal shelter. Danny felt Atropos and Fedor move up next to him as the door closed to the facility.

"Explain to me again why we are allowing this man to even get close to mother Uncle Daniel?" Fedor asked softly as his wolf eyes and fangs were very prominent in the growing moonlight. "His intent is anything but honorable."

Danny grinned in the moonlight, his gleaming white fangs exposed and savage looking. "Sibfla!" Dan said. "I doubt he could even spell that word."

Atropos chuckled softly. "He thinks with other things besides his brain." He stated calmly.

"You mean he thinks with his cock Atropos?" The female voice said softly as Anuk and Nayeca appeared from the shadows of another building and moved up beside them.

Fedor watched as his red haired and white haired Aunts moved up beside Danny and pressed close to him. He took note that both of them were in their altered wolf state, their eyes changed and their fangs exposed.

Atropos grinned. "I will not use such language with you and Nayeca present." He said.

Anuk and Nayeca chuckled. "Thank you Atropos." Nayeca said. "He is alone Daniel." Nayeca spoke softly. "Just as you suspected. We swept around the back of the facility as well. If he has anything with him it is in his bag."

Daniel nodded as his arms curled around his wives. "He's too stupid to try anything. Besides... he won't get the chance to do whatever it is he intends. Red will see to that."

"Then I ask again Uncle... why are we allowing him to do this?" Fedor asked almost impatiently. "He intends to dishonor mother and..."

Atropos chuckled again and looked at Fedor. Anja had tasked him with helping to train the Kavalian warriors under Muton and Miseo these last weeks and he had done so knowing that Anja was with the King. She could not be better protected than when she was with her mate and fellow Queens.

"That worm... dishonor Anja Leonidas? Hah!" Atropos spoke with a smile, his fangs clearly exposed. "The smallest of your mothers in stature she may be Fedor my boy, but I dare say she rivals my sister in her ferocity. Many people have made the mistake through the years of misjudging Anja Leonidas because of her size. It is a mistake that none of them ever made twice. If they survived the encounter to begin with."

"She is alone." Fedor protested.

Danny looked at him. "Alone?" He rasped softly. "Your mother is not alone Fedor. None of your mothers will ever be alone again. That is something that they vowed after what happen to For'mya. No... the day your mother For'mya came back to them was the day that they swore none of them would ever be alone again."

"What do you mean Uncle?" Fedor asked him.

Danny looked at him. "Have you seen your other mothers lately?" He asked.

Fedor was silent for a moment. "No." He said finally.

Danny motioned with his head at the medical building. "Like I said... they will never be alone again."

Fedor's eyes grew a little wider at his Uncle's meaning and realization flowed over him. "They are together." He gasped.

Danny released Anuk with his arm and reached up to grab the back of Fedor's neck. "Why don't you get back to your hooch and spend some time with that beautiful young wife you have." He said. "Your mother's are more than capable of taking care of each other. They do not need us."

"I agree." Atropos spoke. "I have not enjoyed my Lilika enough since she arrived and I intend to do just that."

Fedor looked at Daniel. "Uncle... you are sure?" He asked.

Danny grinned. "Trust me Fedor. When your mothers are done with him, Daron will never attempt this again. At least not to any female who is a citizen of the Union. Your mothers, they can be pretty feral when they want to be."

Fedor glanced at the door to the medical building one last time before nodding his head. His uncle spoke true in that they could take care of themselves and if they were all together now then he need not worry about them. He tilted his head up into the wind and searched for Iama's kiwi scent and found it easily. He smiled.

"Then I will let my mothers take care of him." He stated.

Danny nodded. "Good boy." He stated. "That fool doesn't has no idea what he just walked into." He squeezed Anuk and Nayeca. "Now if you will excuse me... I have other things that need my attention."

"Yes you do." Nayeca spoke with a smile.

"In a big way." Anuk agreed.

Atropos snorted as he turned and began to head across the compound. "The shameless nature of youth." He spoke softly reaching for Lilika within Mindvoice.

[And who is shameless Old Man?] His wife reached back for him.

Atropos grinned. [I will show you shameless when I reach you my wife.]

[I do so love when you talk dirty to me my love.] Lilika responded with a laugh.

Daron entered the Medical Facility quietly, his eyes adjusting to the dimmer lighting. He turned quickly and locked the entrance behind him and then stepped further into the facility. His eyes swept across the main area with the examination beds and he saw her step quickly from the doorway into her office. Daron fought down the intake of breath that threatened to escape his throat as he saw her. Her hair was much longer than he had thought, cascading well past her shoulders and framing her stunning face. She wore a simple outfit that clung to her lush body like a second skin. Her large breasts strained against the fabric of the material. He had not seen her wearing anything but the Lycavorian body armor up until now and he could see the outline of her nipples against the shirt. He gazed at her hungrily as she stepped further into the main room and saw him.

"Daron?" She spoke softly, looking at him.

Daron moved with a measured pace. He did not want to seem too eager, but now he desperately wanted to strip her out of her clothes and take her in every way he could think of. She was far more enticing than he had first thought.

"Anja." He spoke as he came up to her.

Her face beamed and she smiled at him. "I didn't... I didn't think you would come." She said.

Daron let his bag drop to the floor and he reached up to stroke her cheek. "I told you I would." He stated.

Anja smiled as he stepped even closer. "I'm glad." She whispered.

Daron gazed down into her face, truly stunned at her surreal beauty. How an animal like Leonidas could claim such a beauty was beyond him. He might just keep her around after he was done with her. She could prove very pleasurable to have at his whim. If all he had to do was get her pregnant to take her away from Leonidas, it would be too easy. He had taken an injection of hormones to make himself more virile and if she was in this Phase as she said, then she would be with child before he left her this night.

“You look absolutely stunning.” He said to her softly.

Anja looked at him shyly, glancing at his bag on the floor. “What did you bring with you?” She asked.

Daron smiled at her. “Some wine and fruit for us to share.”

Anja met his eyes. “You don’t want me right now?” She asked in an almost hurt voice.

Daron took her chin between his fingers. “That goes without saying.” He told her. “But I am not a beast like that man Leonidas. I want you to be relaxed and most of all I want you to enjoy yourself when I make you feel things you never have felt.”

Anja smiled brightly. “Will you kiss me?” She asked.

Daron’s heart raced as he stepped closer to her, pressing against the front of her supple body and feeling her breasts push against his chest. “I would be delighted.” He said as he lowered his face closer.

“You are going to make me feel things I have never felt?” She asked just before his lips touched hers.

Daron smiled as he gazed into her eyes. “You have no idea.” He stated confidently.

Anja smiled back at him and he saw her eyes shift, the black ring encircling the jade green pupil and the sharp looking dual fangs extending from her gums.

“I could say the same thing to you.” Anja spoke just before she lifted her hand. Daron saw the metallic flash in her fingers but was far too slow to react. He felt the prick in the side of his neck and his eyes went wide as he lost all control of his limbs. He glanced up at Anja as blackness swept over his eyes and saw her smile once more as she lifted the small injector in front of his vision. “Nighty night.” Anja spoke just as his eyes clouded over and the blackness enveloped him.

Anja stepped back as he slumped to the floor. “Saoi sibfla!” She spat loudly as Aricia, Dysea and Cirith walked out of her office. “His perfume is going to make me vomit!”

Aricia stepped up to her and kissed her, pulling her body tight. Anja melted into her arms without pause as Dysea and Cirith moved to stand over Daron. Cirith bent over to pick up his bag as Aricia and Anja parted.

“Better?” Aricia asked.

Anja smiled lustfully. “Much! Thank you!”

“Melyanna... you truly are a pomai!” Dysea spoke with a large smile. “The reek of his desire for you was overwhelming. He would have done whatever you asked of him.”

Anja smiled as she and Aricia came over. “Like that would ever happen.” She said.

Cirith opened the bag and pulled out several items, one small metallic object she lifted up for all of them to see. “He was going to record it all.” She said.

Aricia moved up beside her and took the recording device. “No doubt to send back to Lorendo and show how manly he is.” She said.

“And how easy he thought we were.” Anja stated.

Dysea’s emerald eyes narrowed slightly and she reached down to grab the front of his shirt. “Yes... let us show him just how easy we are my loves.”

“I don’t suppose you guys would look the other way while I did a quick amputation huh?” Anja asked.

They all laughed as Aricia bent over to help Dysea. “We promised Martin we would not hurt him.” She said as they lifted his limp form between them.

“It won’t hurt!” Anja declared. “I swear! He won’t feel a thing! Really!”

SCIMITAR

ENROUTE TO APO PRIME

The ship was quiet; as quiet as any warship could be. The majority of the SCIMITAR’s Third Rotation worked on the other end of the landing bay during these hours, allowing Andro relative peace as he walked among the fighters and transports with Elynth beside him. Andro did not know what had awakened him, only that it had done so several times before, and he did not know what it was. Whispers and echoes in his dreams really, words he could barely make out or understand. Reluctantly he pulled himself from the warmth and twist of limbs he had been tangled in with Sadi and the others. Whatever it had been had woke Elynth as well, it always did for she had the same dreams in these instances and as she reached for him, he was grabbing a mug of coffee from the Mess Lounge. In another few minutes he was beside her in the landing bay and they were silent as they walked. This was the fourth time since Dorian had joined them that the dreams had come back. That did not include the times they had awoken feeling the same way, before the nightmares of Alba Tau had overridden everything else and allowed them no peace.

That same feeling from before had returned and it was much stronger now that Dorian was here. It had something to do with him and Ryner they were certain, but what they did not know.

Upon returning to the SCIMITAR, Andro had received quite an earful from Eliani about leaving Zarah on Yuri's ship, but she had relented quickly when she had seen Onera. Eliani Leonidas was not as trusting as her brother, but seeing Yuri's young daughter with Pa'cour among them and recognizing how Yuri had trusted them with her, she had begun to relax more. Once Lisisa had arrived they had taken Onera under their wing without hesitation and led her away to get acquainted with the ship. She may not have been as trusting as her brother but Eliani had complete and utter faith in Andro. If he believed in something as strongly as he did Yuri's change, then Eliani would trust in his instincts and feelings. They had never been wrong before.

Andro and Elynth did not need to speak as they walked the deck, the click of her talons echoing softly in the air. One of them would start to talk after they had looked at everything from all directions. The voice they heard as they neared the almost silent end of the bay caused both of them to turn toward the Dragon pens nearby. They realized Dorian and Ryner were in the unoccupied Pens and they moved across the bay to see him using a Scale Brush on Ryner's muscular side. The Scale Brush removed any lingering dirt or dried scale roots from his fresh scales, giving any dragon an almost luster like appearance to their scaled skin. Andro did this at least once a week with Elynth and she relished it each time. This morning however, something told them that they were not the only ones who had been awakened as they were by the echoes.

Dorian turned when he felt his brother's presence. "Andro." He said.

"You are departing on the mission in a few hours fervon." He spoke. "You should be getting some sleep."

Dorian nodded. "I know." He answered. "Something woke us up."

Andro's azure colored eyes looked at Elynth quickly and then back to Dorian. "Woke you up?" He asked.

Dorian nodded as he tossed the brush to the floor. "Woke me out of a sound sleep." He said with a smile. "I was having a really good dream too."

"What woke you Dorian?" Andro asked again moving closer as Elynth settled to the deck and crossed her foreclaws over each other.

Dorian shrugged his shoulders. "I don't know." He answered. "Something. Like a... it was like a whisper of words in the back of my mind. Even in the dream I could hear them."

I as well. Ryner spoke now. An echo of something that I could not see. But it was... it was there. We could almost feel it within us.

"Was it a presence of some kind?" Andro asked causing Dorian and Ryner to look at him.

"You... you had the same thing?" Dorian asked quickly looking at him with wide eyes.

Andro looked at Elynth and then back to Dorian and nodded his head. "Yes."

It is not the first time for us. Elynth spoke softly. It has happened before through the years... but it was much stronger this time. Now we could almost...

"We could almost understand the words." Andro finished for her.

Dorian looked at his brother and settled between Ryner's front legs. He stroked his thick talons and waited as Andro settled between Elynth's foreclaws across from them. When he was seated Andro held out the coffee and Dorian took it. He drew a long pull from their mother's blend, relishing in the taste and texture. He lowered the mug and looked at him.

"Andro... what are we?" He asked.

Andro met his eyes. "What do you mean?" He asked.

"You know what I mean fervon. You have asked yourself this same question through the years. Both you and Elynth. What are we?"

"We are Lycavorian Spartans." Andro answered immediately. "We both have the blood of our parents in us. Blood which is among the purest of both our species. And we are brothers above all else."

"Is that the answer you give to the shrinks?" Dorian asked with a smile.

Andro grinned. "You have been talking to Eli I see." He said.

"It doesn't answer my question." Dorian said.

"We are what we are fervon." Andro finally stated.

"But what are we?" Dorian asked him. "Never in the history of either of our species, of Dragonkind, never has what happened to the four of us ever taken place. I checked fervon. In all of our history texts, in all of the vampire scrolls, nothing like this has ever occurred. I asked the Elder Mother before she left Dragon Mountain. She told me that you and I, Elynth and Ryner, we are the only ones she has ever heard of it happening to. And how many years does she have. Certainly as far back as grandfather Sumar."

Andro nodded slowly. "I did the same thing." He said. "The answer... the answer was the same."

"Then what are we?" Dorian asked.

We are who we are Dorian, just as Andro has said. Elynth spoke. Do you wish to be more?

Dorian shook his head quickly. "That isn't it Elynth. You know that."

We question why we are what we are. Ryner spoke now. You have asked this question before haven't you? Why you and Androcles bonded while he was still within Queen Aricia's womb? Why you hatched only a few weeks before this happened? Long before you normally would have Elynth. Andro... have you never asked why this happened. Why you and Elynth can do what you do. What we can now do?

Elynth blinked several times and looked at Andro. We have... yes. She answered turning back to Ryner.

"Did you come up with an answer?" Dorian asked.

"No." Andro replied softly. "Do you question the Praetorian gene we carry fervon?"

Dorian shook his head quickly. "It's not that Andro. You know it isn't. That is in our blood and I know why we have that and what it allows us to do. I know the reasons for it and why it exists within us. What I question is why I was able to speak with Ryner before I was ever born? Why you were able to speak with Elynth before you were born? There has to be purpose behind that. A reason for it."

"We have asked these same questions Dorian." Andro told him. "There are times when we still do. Like tonight. I think we have just come to accept that perhaps there are no answers. At least none that we can see or feel."

"Father says there is purpose to everything in the universe." Dorian said softly. "That everything happens for a reason. That every event has an effect and every effect has a cause. And every cause has a purpose."

We believe this as well. Elynth said.

"Then we are this way for a reason." Dorian spoke meeting Andro's eyes. "There is a reason I am like I am. That you are like you are fervon. In just the few months since I joined this life, I have grown beyond what anyone expected. Our mothers. The Elder Mother, even father. Everyone except you Andro." He stated pointedly. "Why is that? You knew once you touched us didn't you. You knew then."

Andro gazed at him for a long moment. He took a pull from his coffee and then reached out to stroke the scales under Elynth's jaw. "The disease that afflicted mother I did not expect." He said finally. "But yes... I knew you would be like me. We knew what happened to Elynth and I would happen to you and Ryner."

And you never told anyone? Ryner asked.

Elynth chuckled softly. What would we have told them? In some ways even our own family considers us enigmas they will never understand. That they do not want to understand. It...

"It frightens them." Andro said finally. "In some ways... in many ways we frighten our own family fervon. They love us without question yes... as we love them. But they do not fully understand us. They cannot explain it. Hell... we cannot explain it. We did not want to expose you to this before you were born. We had hoped... Elynth and I had wanted to bring all of this to you and Ryner as you grew together. As we grew together. As I said the disease that afflicted mother we did not anticipate. And now you are here asking the same questions that drove us insane for so many years."

"So you do believe there is a purpose to us being what we are? That there is a reason we were born aware?" Dorian asked.

"Yes. How can we not?" Andro said. "Father and Torma, mother and Isheeni, their bonds are powerful. Every Bonded Pair has a powerful bond. But none of them truly come close to experiencing what I do with Elynth or you with Ryner. They cannot see through their eyes as we do."

Their hearts do not beat as one as ours do Dorian. Elynth said. What we experience is...

Like we are one soul. Ryner spoke.

Elynth looked at Andro and it was almost as if she smiled the way her mouth opened slightly and she exposed her fangs. They understand far more than we gave them credit for my brother. She spoke.

Andro nodded. "Yes they do." He said. He looked at Dorian. "How do you try to explain to your mothers and fathers, to anyone really, that you feel the same dry scales as Ryner or Elynth would feel if they were without moisture for too long? That our skin may not be dry but we feel it within our skin. Like it is happening to us. She can see with my eyes as I can see with hers. She can smell with my senses as I can with hers. It is like we are... like Ryner said. Like we are the same person." Andro grinned. "Our mother Anja would spend the next decades trying to understand and figure out why we felt this way."

"This is why you have never told anyone?" Dorian asked.

Andro nodded his head. "I have not shared this with anyone... even Sadi. Though of anyone, KertaGai would more than likely understand."

"And this has happened to you before. Waking up for no reason hearing the echoes and whispers?" Dorian asked.

It went... it went away for a time. Elynth said. When what we experienced on Alba Tau chased away everything else. But it returned recently.

"When I was born?" Dorian said.

Andro nodded his head. "This is the fourth time since you were born that this exact thing has happened. They returned the first night we returned to Earth."

And now it is starting to happen to us. Ryner said.

It isn't a sickness of the mind! Elynth hissed. That is why we can tell no one. We do not want others to think us crazy.

"So it has... these dreams have never affected you in any other way?" Dorian asked.

Andro shook his head. "No. We have them... we feel things... hear echoes just like you and Ryner and then they are gone. It is like someone or something is trying to communicate with us... but then the whispers or echoes fade."

"And you never tried to figure out what they meant?" Dorian asked.

Oh we did. Elynth said. But they were just as jumbled and confusing to us as they are now to you. We were never able to determine what they meant. After years of trying we decided that they would either one day make sense or they would not.

"It has to mean something though Andro." Dorian said. "You and Elynth stopped having them for a time only to start having them again when I bonded with Ryner before I was born. And now we are having them. That is no coincidence fervon."

Andro nodded. "Perhaps not." He said. "However... with everything going on right now, trying to decipher what it all may or may not mean is distracting. We have to focus on what we are doing here and now. Too many depend on us fervon."

Dorian sighed heavily and nodded. "You are right." He said.

Andro leaned forward. "Listen to me. Whatever it is... whatever it means... when the time is right we will know. We have had years to contemplate this exact thing Dorian. Why are we so different from our brothers and sisters? Why do we see and feel things that others, even our father, can't see. They have come to the conclusion that it is because of the emotional state our parents were in at the time that we were conceived. That is what they want to believe but we know it is not true. If it was... how do they explain you and Ryner? Our mother Isabella and our father were calm and happy and at peace when you were conceived." Andro shook his head. "No... there is something else at work. Elynth and I believe this and now so do you. But we also have responsibilities to undertake. As much as I would like to delve into this just like you, we can't."

"I know." Dorian spoke. "What do we do?"

We do our duty. Elynth spoke again. And when we have these dreams and hear these echoes and whispers, we now have two more minds to perhaps interpret them. To reach for and try to understand what they mean.

Dorian looked at him. "You know... this being born fully aware sibfla is not all it's cracked up to be by everyone else."

Andro chuckled. “Fervon... we have been trying to tell people that for years.” He said. “No one ever listens.”

We can reach for you? Ryner asked.

Always. Elynth spoke. Without question. No matter the time. It is the only way that we will one day discover what it means.

“Sheva will never understand.” Dorian said with a grin.

“Then do not tell her.” Andro spoke. “I have not told Sadi as I said. Elynth has not told Anthar. How do you explain something that you don’t understand? Our wives and mates would probably understand and support us, but why give them the burden of knowing how this affects us when it is not needed.”

We will discover what it means one day Dorian. Have no doubt of that. Elynth said.

“And if we don’t like what it means?” Dorian asked.

“Well... in that case... then we will decide what our course of action will be.” Andro said. “Not before.”

MANNE

LYCAVORIAN ADHOC COMPOUND

Daron heard the voices through the fog within his mind. Female voices. Relaxed and happy. As he struggled to get his eyes open, he realized he could not move his arms or legs. They were secured to something and he was laying at a sixty degree angle on some sort of table. He blinked several times and the memories of what had happened came flooding back. He was about to kiss the Queen Anja and then she stabbed him with something in his neck. It wasn’t painful really, just a very sudden prick in his skin before his limbs seized up and blackness took him. His vision began to clear and he noticed dim lights around him from consoles nearby. He realized he was still in the Medical facility and from what he could determine he was secure to one of the examining beds. He blinked several more times and his vision cleared completely. His anger surged when he realized his predicament. She had tricked him! She had been leading him on the whole time! Flaunting her body and acting all innocent towards him. He cut his eyes and turned his head slightly not wanting to reveal he was awake and he saw them sitting off to the side on the floor of the facility. The remaining four Queens who had not departed with that animal Leonidas. They were sitting very intimately against one another, all of them dressed in very causal, if not revealing clothes. Anja was feeding small pieces of fruit to the raven haired Queen who Daron knew to be who they called Leonidas’s Anome. She placed a piece of fruit in Aricia’s teeth and then brought her own lips against Aricia’s as they both bit into it and tore it in half to chew. The elven Queen Dysea was sitting with her long legs thrown over the legs of the half breed Queen Cirith, their foreheads touching as they looked at something on the data pad that Cirith held. Some juice from the fruit squirted from between Anja’s sensual, full lips and rolled down her chin. Anja giggled contently as Aricia leaned forward quickly and used her tongue to lick it off Anja’s skin.

He saw the blond elf Queen turn to him quickly and he snapped his head back around hoping she had not seen he was awake.

“Our guest is awake.” Dysea spoke turning back to Cirith and ignoring Daron.

He heard Anja sigh. “Yes... he’s been awake for several minutes now.” She said. “I was trying to ignore him.” Anja rolled to her feet quickly and brushed off her pants. “Oh well.” She said.

Daron turned his head and glared at her as she began to walk towards him. His eyes once more couldn’t help but take in the way her clothes clung to her lush body, or now how he could even see that her womanly mound was very clearly outlined between her thighs even through the pants she wore. He lifted his eyes back to her as she came up to him.

“Sleep well?” Anja asked him.

“What did you do to me bitch?” He snarled.

“Sensitive isn’t he Anja?” Aricia asked as she came up next to Anja. She was dressed in a similar manner, the style and cut of her clothes also showing off her supple body and the outline of high, firm breasts and taut thighs.

“I demand you release me!” Daron barked.

Anja chuckled. "He is rather excitable." She said as she looked back to Daron with a smile. "No wonder it didn't take much for him to think he was going to dip his wick into my honey pot."

Dysea and Cirith laughed as they got to their feet and walked over. "Anja... dip his wick? What is this?" Cirith asked with a smile.

Anja grinned. "It's a saying from long ago on Earth." She said. "When a man thought he was going to get lucky with a lady. Sort of how Daron here thought he was going to score with me. Isn't it Daron?"

"What did you stab me with?" He demanded to know.

Anja moved closer and lifted a tiny hypoinjector from the table beside the bed holding it up for him to see. "It's called Cituxen. A rather nasty little toxin. One drop of this on the tip of a needle will turn anyone into a limp noodle in five seconds. My daughter Eliani designed it for a mission she went on with her brother Andro. It worked so well we kept it as part of the standard inventory for our Special Operations people. I tweaked it just a little bit with Anuk's help. You remember her right? Danny's elven Anome... the one that you had some rather descriptive and disgusting thoughts on when you saw her the first time?" Anja smiled at the expression on Daron's face when she said that. "Bet you thought I didn't detect that either huh?"

"You lie!" Daron hissed.

"It seems he is not as smart as he likes to think." Aricia said.

"Tell me about it." Anja agreed. "Anuk and I adjusted the different compounds of the Cituxen toxin so that it hindered the normal motor and function skill commands from getting to the brain and then on to those particular parts of your body. I didn't want you running away from me so soon before we had our "special time" together." Anja continued as she set the syringe back on the small table. "Don't worry big boy, it's not permanent, and you will still be able to feels. I wouldn't want to deprive you of that."

"You... you lie! You could not have detected my thoughts! I am Pralor! You are... you are not even..." Daron gasped.

Anja smiled at him. "Your little trick with Etheric resonances didn't work too well on me you know." Anja said. "And you most certainly were not able to make yourself more appealing to me than Martin Leonidas. You wouldn't be able to do that on your best day sport. Or on my worst day."

"How?" Daron gasped before thinking to deny everything.

"Did you think that as the wives and mates to a Praetorian that we would not be granted some of our Nauta Melme's Etheric gifts?" Dysea spoke now. "The virus that flows within his blood now flows within ours fool. In Aricia and Anja and I most of all, but it swarms within the blood of us all."

"I bet... I bet you thought that you would record yourself having sex with me..." Anja said as she moved closer to the table. "That you would show me whimpering in orgasmic joy while you pounded your pathetic dick into me and you could tell that fat fucker Lorendo how easy we are. That because it was so easy to get me into the sack it proves just how inferior we are as a people. Then you and your pal Lorendo would use that to prove to the other Elders that your father is wrong about us."

"I have... I have no idea what you are talking about!" Daron stammered. "You... I only assumed because he had six wives that you... that all of you could not possibly be satisfied with that. I... I found you attractive and pursued you. That is all!"

"You pursued me even knowing that I was the wife and mate to Martin Leonidas?" Anja asked. "You think rather highly of yourself Daron. And you are a liar."

"I am not a primitive like you!" Daron barked. "I do not lie!"

Cirith held up his bag. "Would you care to recant that answer? It is really weak if you ask me." She spoke with a smile. "Or do you carry this equipment around with you all the time to record your disgusting conquests?"

"We hate liars Daron." Aricia said. "Really we do."

"You may have been able to get away with this devious and disgusting practice among your own people... but it will not succeed here." Dysea hissed.

Daron looked at Anja. "It almost worked with you." He snapped. "Or do you expect me to believe that you were not in the least bit affected by me?"

"Only in the level of how violently I wanted to vomit." Anja told him. "The perfume you wear makes me ill."

“You are lying!” Daron spat at her. “You are just too afraid to admit it in... in front of your fellow Queens! You wanted me! I could see it in your eyes!”

“Wow!” Anja said shaking her head. “You really are impossibly stupid and hopelessly arrogant!” She spat back at him. “Want you? Daron you are five...”

“Six.” Aricia corrected her.

Anja looked at her. “You think?” she asked.

Aricia nodded. “Oh at least.” Aricia replied.

Dysea chuckled. “Remember how he swells when we are all in phase Melyanna.” She echoed. “It is at least six.”

Anja looked back at Daron. She reached out quickly and to his horror she yanked down the pants he wore exposing his lower body to their eyes. “You’re right.” She said with a smile. “Daron... you are six inches too short and two inches too thin. That little thing you got between your legs could not come close to what I have. What we have... every day of our lives.”

Daron’s eyes glared at her as his skin flushed in embarrassment and anger. “I am over seven thousand years old and one of the most respected scientists among my people!” Daron barked loudly. “How dare you treat me in this manner?”

“And you are as dumb as a nubous post!” Aricia snapped at him. “Anja wants to cut your puny cock from your body you know!”

Daron’s eyes grew wide in sudden fear when Anja’s hand came up with the R4 High Elf Razor Hybrid in her hand. The doubled bladed weapon was fearsome looking by itself and the way Anja spun it gracefully in her hand told him she knew how to use it very well. It was a gift from Tarifa and Aihola many years ago and Anja had not been without the blade since. She normally wore it in a hidden sheath at the small of her back under her utility belt. Completely hidden and unseen.

“And you wouldn’t feel a thing.” Anja told him with a savage grin. “It would be very appropriate punishment for laying your hands upon me in the first place.”

“You are crazy!” Daron almost yelled.

Anja smiled her sweetest smile. “You have no idea igord.” She said.

“You seriously do not understand do you?” Dysea spoke now. “You can not affect any Lycavorian female, or any female turned by a Lycavorian, in the vile manner that you affect the Pralor women who you prey upon. And you most certainly can not affect any of us. You do not compare to our Nauta Melme in any way, shape or form. He is in our blood! Even if we wanted too, and none of us have any desire to change the way we feel, we could not be attracted to you. Martin is all that fills our minds and hearts. His scent permeates our bodies and calls to us even when he is away. We bask in how he makes us all feel. You could not possibly come close to matching that. You are not Lycavorian and...” Dysea looked at his limp cock. “And you are woefully inadequate in other departments as well.”

“She means your cock is way too small!” Anja quipped playfully.

“And when Martin is not here... we can find pleasure the likes you could never provide in the arms of each other.” Cirith stated quickly.

“So very true.” Aricia stated with a smile.

“Come on guys.” Anja pleaded. “Just one little cut!”

“Get away!” Daron screamed trying to yank free of the bindings but still unable to feel any portion of his arms or legs. The commands from his mind were not reaching his limbs and he was stuck where he was at the mercy of these crazy primitive bitches.

They all laughed at him causing his shame to increase to higher degrees.

“Not so high and mighty now are we?” Anja asked him.

“You are insane!” He screamed. “All of you!”

“Be thankful you tried this stunt with one of us and not one of our daughters or the mates to one of our sons.” Dysea told him. “They would have carved out your eyes long before now.”

“That goes without saying.” Cirith agreed. “Especially Sadi or Eliani.”

“We give you a warning now Daron of the Pralor people.” Aricia began. “You are not dead now but for the grace of one man. After the way you have acted towards Anja we would have happily joined her in carving you into tiny pieces. Only our love for Martin stops us. Only his request that we do not hurt you stays our hand. And we would have been well within our rights according to the laws of our people.”

“That just shows how savage you are!” Daron barked.

“No... it shows how deeply we hold to our vows of love and commitment.” Anja said. “When a Lycavorian claims a woman as Martin claimed all of us, his blood flows within us. We neither want nor need the attention from other men. And while Martin lives we could never desire the touch of another. All of us are tied together within the Etheric realm Daron. We are intertwined so deeply that when one of us speaks, all of us speak. No woman claimed by a Lycavorian will ever fall prey to your deception. And in most cases, once she discovered what you were doing she would tell her husband and mate. Then your father would be short one fool son. And since your sister told us you target only women who are married...” Anja saw the look on his face. “What? You didn’t think that your sisters knew about your perversions Daron? How do you think we confirmed you target only married females, aside from your obvious gestures towards me?” Anja reached over and took another hypoinjector from the table and held it up.

Daron’s eyes grew wide. “What is that? What are you going to do?” He shouted.

“This?” Anja asked innocently looking at the hypoinjector. “This is Tanem. It’s an older drug but still very effective. It increases your heart rate like you are exercising so that other medications will speed their way through your blood stream.”

“Wait!” Daron screamed. “You can not...”

“Yes I can.” Anja spoke just before stabbing it down into his leg.

Daron felt the small pin prick like before and he glared at Anja. “You bitch!” He shouted. “All of you! My father will hear about this!”

“What will you tell him Daron?” Aricia asked him. “Are you going to tell him that you actively tried to seduce Anja even knowing that she is the wife and mate to Martin Leonidas and one of six Queens of the Lycavorian Union? Are you going to tell him that you tried to use your pathetic Etheric abilities to alter her perception of you and make you more appealing to her? That you tried to control her actions? As you have done to so many of your own women? We call that rape. And that is punishable by death within the Union.”

“He would never believe you!” Daron shouted. “I am his son!”

“Perhaps not.” Cirith spoke as she handed Anja a small tubular device which Anja slid into the body of the injector. “But he would and did believe your sisters when they told him what you have been doing all of these years.”

Daron’s eyes were wide now. “They... they told him?” He gasped.

“Your sisters are not as unintelligent as you think they are Daron.” Dysea told him with a smile. “They figured out what you were doing long ago and they jumped at the chance to assist us now. Especially Kesyla. Did you know that your sister is falling in love with Daniel, Anuk and Nayeca?”

“What?” Daron hissed. “Kesyla? She would never lower herself to such a level!”

Anja chuckled softly. “That statement shows just how much you really know.” She said. “Which is pretty much nothing. If things will work out how we believe then they will then your sister and she will become wife and mate to Daniel, Anuk and Nayeca Simpson. They will love her until she is breathless. And believe me when I tell you... any fool who tries to take her from Daniel if that occurs...? Let’s just say Danny has a temper that he rarely lets out. Sort of like our Martin. They would not survive the encounter.” Anja held up the hypoinjector. “Now... where would you like me to stick you?”

“No!” Daron barked. “What is that?”

“This is not technically a medicine.” Anja said with a smile. “It’s a chemical. Rinolac. Pretty harmless really... but once it works its way through your bloodstream... well let’s just say that any Lycavorian female will find you absolutely heinous in the way you smell. You would have to outright force them to even want to be around you. It won’t affect anyone who can’t smell it, but most of the females within the Union will take notice right away and figure something is not right with you.”

“You can not do this!” Daron screamed. “It isn’t right! You have no right!”

“To protect our people... we have every right.” Aricia snarled.

“Bitch!” Daron screamed. “All of you are bitches! Do you hear me! You are nothing more than primitive bitches!”

Anja's eyes narrowed. "And just for that... I'm going to inject it right into one of your tiny little testicles and not be gentle about it!"

"No!" Daron screamed.

Anja reached out and shoved the hypoinjector forward stabbing it into Daron's left testicle. He screamed in horrible pain as Anja depressed the trigger and then dropped the injector onto the small table.

"Chew on that you asshole." Anja snarled.

Aricia took her arm with a smile. "Come... let us return to our camp before we have to smell the result." She said.

Anja smiled at that. "Now that's an excellent idea." She said. She turned back to Daron. "We'll hang onto your little bag of goodies Daron. Including your P1. I'm sure Avi will have a good time removing whatever information there is on it. You should be able to move in a couple of hours. Just enough time for the Rinolac to fully work its magic in you. It should last about three or four weeks. Just enough time to get the message out about you." Anja reached forward and slapped his face gently. "Next time you target a woman... make sure she is not smarter than you big boy. And definitely make sure her husband doesn't have a cock that even when not hard, makes yours look like a newborn child's."

Cirith, Aricia and Dysea couldn't help but burst out laughing as Cirith threw his bag over her shoulder. Anja could be so colorful in her description of some things. Daron could do nothing but watch as they departed the Medical Facility arm in arm laughing to themselves leaving him in silence and alone. He let out a scream of rage as the doors closed. A scream that no one heard and no one would care about.

ICARAVA DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD DARASTRIXETHE (DRAGONBLOOD) SPACE SPACEWARD OF FORMER PRALOR TERRITORY EDGE OF SCOURGE CONTROLLED SPACE

It was a massive planet, easily five times the size of Apo Prime, with nearly double the amount of water covering the surface. From orbit it appeared to be a greenish orange color due to the glare from the three nearby suns, but it was not a desolate planet by any means as first glance would indicate. In fact, it was the only planet not touched by the Scourge corruption or desolation within a thousand light years. It still had massive cities across the surface, glittering areas of beauty scattered among the plains, river valleys and mountain ranges that spread across the planet and its terrain. Three colossal space stations occupied orbit around the planet, a dozen massive pod shaped warships spaced around them and mixed in with dozens of smaller pod like ships. There appeared to be only three continents when looking down upon the planet from orbit and none of them were connected. The larger cities appeared to reside mostly on the two bigger continents with the third having only a few scattered across its expanse. The enormous oceans appeared to be gray/blue from orbit, and as one grew closer you could discern the lush green of forests and mountains.

This was Icarava. Homeworld to the Darastrixi. The Darastrixethe. Those of the Ancient Dragonblood.

It was from this planet that all dragons within the known universe were descended from. This planet was the core of their entire species no matter what breed they were. And no matter if they walked on four legs or two. Dragon Society, or MakiaVi, was broken into many different areas but all were Darastrixethe. There was no distinction drawn between those that were two legged, or Jiilhoiipa and those that were Vrrarhoiipa, four legged. Evolution had dictated that some of the Darastrixethe would eventually walk on two legs, and now they did. Evolution also dictated that the two types of species would never be apart. They were all Darastrixethe, and their voice was equally heard.

MakiaVi was very tolerant as a society, but also very rigid and harsh in many ways. Each Darastrixi had their purpose and their role and that is the role they were expected to fill. Those Arytissi or Warrior Dragons were made up mainly of the Vrrarhoiipa, for they were the most sturdy and powerful. They were commanded by specially trained Jiilhoiipa that rode their fellow dragons into battle. They were a devastating force to behold on any battlefield and since the dawn of their species they had never been defeated in open combat by any enemy. Nothing could stand against their combined power. Even when the Scourge had been ravaging the Pralor people and worlds during their long war, killing billions, they had not dared to come here even knowing the Darastrixi worked closely with the Pralor people through the millennia. The Scourge Queen knew to face the Darastrixi would be far more costly to her forces than to the dragons. The Darastrixi were immune to any kind of physical Scourge assimilation and their equal in strength and cunning. While the Scourge had them outnumbered by millions, the cost to the Scourge would be more than she was willing to accept. The Darastrixi were also able to speak within the Etheric Realm where the Scourge could not. An unlikely pact was struck then; the Darastrixi would remain out of the Scourge war with the Pralor people and not help them in any way. Any Pralor people on Icarava were to be given to the Scourge as a means for the Darastrixi to show that they were serious. That day was now a stain upon the honor of every Darastrixi that many would never forget. While the Darastrixi considered the Pralor people equals in everything many Darastrixi did not regard them well because of their arrogance and how they seemed to think they knew what was best for all. There were many exceptions to this general rule and many Darastrixi had friends among the Pralor people as well. And they would never forgive their leaders for executing such a plan. In return for this rule the Scourge would not force the Darastrixi into submission and they could remain free.

With Scourge supervision of course.

This Pact did not sit well with many of the Darastrixi people for it severed their ties with thousands upon thousands of Darastrixethe that they had allowed the Pralor people to seed upon other worlds with the Darastrixi blessing. The Scourge took those Pralors from Icarava and demanded no one dare acknowledge them afterwards. The Darastrixi agreed, but even so, when the Pralor homeworld fell to the Scourge, billions of the Darastrixi across Icarava mourned the loss of so many of their friends and colleagues among the Pralor people. Now they would never know the fate of those Darastrixi that had been seeded in other parts of the galaxy. The Scourge lay waste to everything on the Pralor homeworld and destroyed wantonly without realizing or caring about what they were doing. So many priceless artifacts and countless millennia of knowledge was mindlessly destroyed, and among that information, any of the locations where fellow Darastrixi had been seeded.

While they had powerful warships and equally advanced engines like the Pralor people, the Darastrixi almost never left their claimed territory. No doubt the Scourge would never allow them to transit their space, though the random research vessel out exploring had passed through scourge space more than once. These vessels were the exception to the rule. No ships with the exclusion of Scourge vessels were allowed to enter former Pralor space. And still the Darastrixi leaders did nothing. Even with the Pralor war long over, the Scourge Queen still kept her forces along the borders to monitor and control. While they did not actively stop and board Darastrixi ships that tried to leave, they had full authority to do so.

MakiaVi was a deeply faithful society with even strangers from different cities across their massive planet willing to stop and talk of whatever on the streets of their enormous cities. The pace was measured and calm befitting the benevolent nature of all Darastrixi. The Urlkrisir Mamiss or Governing Body was led by a Commission of Twenty or Sulevfu di Woiewwr that was elected for life. Ten Vrrarhoinpa and ten Jiilhoinpa resided on this Sulevfu and made the decisions that had guided their kind since the beginning. They were broken into four Sulevfu and a Svitraniv or Svitran, Priest or Priestess, was elected from within their four groups to be their leader. The ruling Urlkrisir had been in power for well over three hundred thousand years now, the Svitran a well respected Jiilhoinpa.

The Elbakiw Sulevfu, or Science Commission, was tasked with the same things as any species. New discoveries, research and medicines, technologies, all meant to improve upon the life of the Darastrixethe as a whole.

The Angrimich Sulevfu, the Military Commission, was obvious in its duties as it was tasked with the defense of the people as a whole.

The Ymmute Sulevfu, or Law Commission, made and enforced the few laws among the Darastrixi while the Urlkrisa Mamiss actually did the governing.

Then there was the Livaiji Sulevfu, or the History Commission. These were the many Knowledge Scholars and the Religious Scholars that made up the many aspects of Darastrixi society. They were men and women who studied the histories of their culture as well as many other cultures spread across the universe. The Myths and Legends and histories and many of the traditions of countless species resided in their Vaults of Knowledge and while they were the smallest of the Sulevfu in actual number, the vast majority of Darastrixi considered them to be the most honorable and revered of their people. The Livaiji was the only Commission to vote against the pact with the Scourge. They knew to do so would only mean that eventually the Scourge would come for them.

The Darastrixi were not without their faults however. In many ways they were very much like the Pralor people and considered themselves superior to other lesser species. That they did not see it this way was without question. There was however, still corruption and greed within the Commissions. Those who desired more and worked for the sole purpose of gaining as much power and wealth as they could.

One of the UrIkrisir Mamiss of the Science Commission exited the hovercar on the roof of the enormous stone and steel structure that rose above the capital city of Charis. It was situated on the colossal mountain peak to the north of the city and was home to the main central facility of the Livaiji Sulevfu. He was tall, just over two meters in height, and very well muscled even under the silk like robes he wore. The dark green color of the robes blended well with the light green scales across his face. The Jiilhoinsa sect of the Darastrixi walked on two legs yes, but their bodies were covered in a much lighter and softer kind of scale than the Vrrarhoinsa brethren. Their scales were smooth to the touch and were more prominent as they extended back from the middle of their faces. The facial area around their eyes and mouth was tanned skin like that of a Pralor or other humanoid species and always deeply tanned. Though they had no ears to speak of, each Jiilhoinsa had small pointed bumps on the sides of their heads that could be mistaken for ears. They actually were able to hear through the two tiny ridge holes that were in place on either side of their temples at a level of their eyes. The brow ridge was very prominent in the males while much less so in the females. The male's eyes were slightly oversized but not excessively so and fit in proportion to the size of their faces.

The man mumbled something to the driver of his hovercar and then turned to greet the Jiilhoinsa male and female standing to the side of the pad with the medium sized Vrrarhoinsa towering over them. As his hovercar lifted away they moved forward to greet him.

"Aviel my friend." The second male spoke as he came right up to him.

"Chalith... it has been far too long." He answered as they brought their hands up and placed them over the heart of the other while bringing their foreheads together briefly in the common form of greeting among the Darastrixi.

"You are looking well Aviel." The female spoke as she came forward and they conducted the same greeting. Though she was obviously female, the Darastrixi greeting was the same for all of their people. They were a very sexually open society and the greeting, though a man would put his hand over the female's breasts, was considered just that.

Aviel smiled as he drew his hand back from her heart and nodded to her. "You are just as beautiful as the last time I saw you Shalu. What has it been? Ten years?"

The woman smiled. "More like fifteen now. She answered.

Aviel turned to the large dragon who waited patiently. "And you Ch'teven." He spoke. "Are you keeping our mutual friends in line?"

The dragon rumbled deeply in his broad chest and extended his wings slightly to the side. Darastrixi had long ago acquired the ability and vocal cords to speak outwardly as well as within the Etheric realm.

"They do not need me to look after them Aviel." He answered. "Most of the time I am running to keep up with them."

Aviel nodded and looked at his friends, still holding the hand of Shalu. "Yes... of that I have no doubt." He said.

"How is your mate Aviel?" Chalith asked. "Your children?"

Aviel nodded his head. "She keeps me grounded and my children drive me endlessly lodeg." He replied. "What else is there to live for?"

"Indeed." Shalu spoke.

"So tell me my friends... why have you requested I come here after so long?" He asked. "It has been many decades since I walked the halls of the Livaiji Sulevfu. I doubt they still remember my days here."

"Oh... you would be surprised what these walls remember Aviel." Chalith spoke as he moved up beside him.

Aviel chuckled. "Of that I have no doubt." He said. "It is truly good to see all of you again."

"As it is to see you." Ch'teven told him warmly. "We should go inside before we speak however."

Aviel looked at him oddly when he said that and he felt Shalu take his other arm. "You will understand soon enough." She stated softly.

With Ch'teven bringing up the rear they entered the through the huge golden doors on the side of the tower and were silent as they made their way down the corridor. Aviel saw many different students moving the facility, all of them deep in study or quickly moving between classes. Both Jiilhoipa and Vrrarhoipa came here to study and they took it very seriously. To be granted the right to attend the Livajji Sulevfu's main Academy on their planet was indeed an honor.

Aviel moved with them easily, the Darastrixi were never rushed, and they entered the huge elevator. He watched as Chalith inserted a card key and then touched the panel indicating they were headed to the Vaults Of Knowledge. Aviel had only been there once before as access to them was strictly controlled and very limited. He glanced at Chalith.

"Am I cleared for entrance into the Vaults after all these years Chalith?" He asked calmly and evenly.

"You are now my friend." Chalith answered. "This is too important."

"You have peaked my interest." Aviel said with a smile.

"Hopefully we will peak much more when you discover what it is we have found." Shalu told him.

"Interesting." Aviel said.

The ride down was very fast and Aviel noted that they had gone even lower than he had ever been before. Down into the actual Vault levels. Nearly two kilometers beneath the surface of the Academy above and heavily fortified to prevent destruction in case of orbital attack from an enemy. As the elevator doors opened Aviel felt a sense of honor and pride sweep through him. Very few were granted the privileged of actually being in the Vault levels of the Academy. The assorted Vaults held vast quantities of knowledge and lore dating back to the beginning of their species. The very first Darastrixi stored their knowledge and power within these same Vaults. Some of them were over five million years old.

They exited the elevator onto a chasm spanning walkway that reached across the open space like a bridge. The Kailiabdred ar Irthir. The Bridge of Knowledge. Below them several hundred meters Aviel could see Acolytes of the Sulevfu deep in study or arranging one thing or the other.

Aviel shook his head in awe. "I have heard of this place." He said softly. "Never did I imagine I would see it in all its grandeur."

"Come..." Ch'teven spoke as he deftly moved around them and began to make his way across the bridge. "We have something you need to see."

Aviel followed with Chalith and Shalu beside him, taking in the walls of historic scrolls that told of their history and the history of so many thousands of people and species. Aviel knew they had been able to secure and hide away reams of knowledge given to them by the Pralor people in the hopes that one day it would help to restore their people. The Darastrixi had guarded and secured this knowledge viciously through the years, always improving upon the security of these Vaults to defend against Scourge attack. It took them another few minutes before they entered a huge cathedral like room with high ceilings and intricate carvings on the walls. In the center of the room was a smoothly ground granite table polished to an intense shine. Chalith ushered him to one of the large chairs while Ch'teven moved to a large spread of soft skin blankets on the floor. Aviel waited while Chalith and Shalu took seats across from him at the table and then he sat forward in the chair.

"Now I know that there are very few among our people who even know these chambers exist." Aviel stated calmly. "Even I did not know until this very day. They are rumors and myth that date back millennia."

Chalith nodded. "They are. As you can see however, they do exist." He replied. "And you are correct... only seven of our people know these rooms actually exist. Through the years we have expanded the Vaults to include these rooms. It allows for the ease of study and to gather information. There are five of these rooms spread across fifteen kilometers and from each of them we can access the entire database of the Vaults. This is the one built specifically for the Academy."

"Impressive indeed." He said. He looked at Chalith. "Now... why am I here my friends?" He asked. "And why did you request I tell no one?"

"Aviel... what do you know of the Lorsvek ar Sepas?" Shalu asked.

Aviel sat back. "The Prophecy of Souls? Not much I'm afraid. I know that it is among the oldest of our myths and that it is said to have only happened once before in our history. Three different souls, chosen by Wer Geou ar wer Zezuanth. The will of the Ancient. The very first of our kind."

“That is correct.” Chalith said with a smile. “I see that you have remembered some of your studies at least.”

Aviel smiled. “I do try.”

“What else do you remember Aviel?” Ch’teven asked.

Aviel shook his head. “Aside from that... not much as I said. Why?”

Chalith reached out and touched a small computer pad on the table in front of him and a small holographic image appeared with the image of a scroll and writings. “Lorsvek ar Sepas. Scroll Three.” He said. “A short translation if you will allow me. I will choose six from among the life within the stars. To each I will bestow a piece of my eternal soul. They will be aware of all around them when birthed with the sacred gift of life. They will be drawn towards each other from across the expanse of time and space like gravity to the suns. Each with the blood of the Dahakoan in their veins. Each with the Sepas of a Darastrix no matter their nature. Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir.”

Aviel nodded his head. “I can see why it is the cornerstone of our religion.” He said. “It is very profound. Why bring me here to show me this however?”

“Because it is happening right now Aviel.” Ch’teven spoke softly. “At this very moment it is happening.”

Aviel turned to look at him. “I don’t understand. What is happening?”

“The Lorsvek ar Sepas.” Shalu answered.

Aviel turned back to look at her. “You’re joking of course.” He said.

Shalu shook her head slowly. “No my friend... I am not.”

Aviel leaned forward once more. “Shalu... this Prophecy... it is millennia old. It dates back to the very beginning of our people. Millions of years. It is only a myth and legend.”

Chalith nodded. “And until twenty-seven years ago I would have agreed with you my friend.” He said.

Aviel smiled. “Ok... I will go along with you. What happen twenty-seven years ago?”

Chalith raised his hand and pressed the computer pad again. “Two things actually. They happened on the same day. One discovery in the morning and then only six hours later another, even more profound discovery.” The image in the holographic projector switched to that of an archeology dig site from what Aviel could determine.

“What is this?” He asked.

“A hidden archeology site on the planet Haradur.” Chalith answered.

Aviel’s eyes flew open and he looked at him. “Haradur!” He hissed. “That is within Scourge space Chalith!”

“It is within Scourge space now.” Shalu corrected. “It is also the ancestral home of our people Aviel. You know this. The Scourge only refused us access to the planet after we agreed to their vile pact.”

“Shalu... you must not speak like that.” Aviel said.

“Why?” She snapped at him. “It is only us here Aviel. Or has your time with the Urlkrisir Mamiss dulled the senses and intelligence you once showed.”

“Shalu...” Ch’teven spoke gently.

Shalu took a deep breath and nodded her head. “Forgive me Aviel. I had many friends among the Pralor people. And we just handed them over to the Scourge like they were items for trade.”

“It was done to save our people!” Aviel stated. “I did not agree with it... but the majority of the others did.”

“The Scourge threaten all of existence Aviel.” Ch’teven said. “Their numbers increase almost daily and they push to control everything. How long do you think it will be before they come for us?”

“The Scourge fear us!” Aviel spoke. “They can not hope to stand against us.”

Chalith nodded. “Right now.” He said. “But what if they discovered this?”

“A myth?” Aviel demanded. “A legend that dates back to the founding of our people! What would they care for this?”

Chalith touched the computer again. “The Lorsvek ar Sepas Scroll Six. This is what we found on Haradur Aviel. The missing Scroll of Zezhuanth.” He stood up. “Now this is just a rough translation mind you.” He said before beginning to read from the scroll. “To each of these Dahakoan I will bestow a small part of my essence and knowledge and power so that it may live on in them. Each part safely hidden away within them until the day when it is needed. Until the day when they must rise up and save not only my kind, the Darastrixi, but all life within the stars. Save it from the blackness of the abyss.”

Aviel took a deep breath and rose to his feet. “I have always honored the Scrolls of the Ancient and I have believed deeply.” He spoke. “Many of our people do.”

“Then why has the Urkrisir Mamiss begun to dismiss much of what the scrolls say?” Shalu asked more gently.

Aviel shook his head. “I have counseled against it Shalu, you know this.” Aviel said quickly. “I have tried to tell them that they lead us from the path our kind was founded from. But I am only one voice.”

“The influence of the Scourge is far reaching Aviel.” Ch'teven said softly. “They have begun to infect even our people.”

“The Scourge?” Aviel said. “What do you mean?”

“Do you think we do not know of the Pact made with the Scourge.” Chalith said.

“Everyone knows of this pact.” Aviel said. “It is part of our history now.”

“Not that pact Aviel.” Chalith said. “The secret one signed only five hundred years ago. The pact that gives the Scourge their pick of our Maiden females every ten years. The pact that allows them to take the maidens of every generation. And not just randomly mind you. These maidens are chosen very carefully Aviel.”

“What?” Aviel demanded. “What are you talking about?”

Chalith touched the panel again and the image changed to one of a spaceport cargo bay. Aviel’s eyes grew wider when he saw half a dozen Scourge Elites and what appeared to be a Holy Elite. An emissary of the Scourge Queen herself. Their insectoid figures were easy to discern in the transmission and he saw almost a dozen of the Scourge warrior drones scurrying about moving what were life support pods of some sort into the belly of their ship.

“Where did you... where did you get this?” Aviel demanded.

“It does not matter.” Ch'teven spoke.

“What... are those life pods?” Aviel asked.

Chalith nodded his head. “Yes. And they contain the living bodies of twenty of our own maiden females. Young female Darastrixi that were selected by what the information contained in these lost scrolls.”

Aviel looked at him quickly. “You stole them?” He gasped.

Chalith nodded his head. “The team we sent there stole them yes. The Scourge were already there Aviel. They were excavating the site when our team arrived.”

“Excavating it for what?” Aviel asked.

“The Scrolls.” Shalu said in reply. “In the scrolls is the map to which of our people would be chosen by the will of Zezhuanth.” Only a female... and only a maiden female. Only a female maiden who has been born differently.”

Aviel looked at her. “What do you mean differently?” He asked.

Chalith got to his feet and moved to the wall closest to Ch'teven. He touched the wall and it disappeared to reveal another room separated by glass. Aviel’s eyes grew even wider when he saw the young Jiilhoinsa female in the room. She was sitting at a table wearing the robes of a member of the History Sulevfu, but from atop her head flowed something Aviel had never seen before. Shimmering black hair where there should be none. It was very long, cascading well past her shoulders to the top of her buttocks and it shone with health. Aviel moved closer to the partition with wide eyes.

“Ithquenti.” He muttered loudly. (Gods)

Chalith nodded. “That is what we said as well when her parents brought her to us twenty-seven years ago.” He said softly.

Aviel looked at him. “Brought her to you?” He asked.

Chalith nodded. “They are loyal members of the Livaiji Sulevfu and have served our Order for nearly a hundred thousand years. Most of their children are all grown, all sons, but twenty-eight years ago they decided to have one more child. They both wanted a maiden. This child is the result of that union.”

“She has... she has hair.” Aviel stammered.

Shalu nodded. “That is not all she is.” She stated with some humor. “Aviel... she was birthed fully aware. And she, for lack of a better explanation, she bonded with a Vrrarhoinsa while still within the womb of her mother. Before she hatched.”

Aviel looked at her quickly. "Before?" He gasped. "How is that... how is that possible?" He watched as the young female turned her head, her black hair flowing around her shoulders as she rose to her feet. She was of medium height, but her female figure was far more enhanced in many areas as normal Darastrixi. He watched as she walked up to the second door into the room and his eyes grew larger when he saw the muscular Vrrarhoinpa enter the room with a casual gait. He immediately lowered his head and he watched as she reached up to place her hands on either side of his immense snout and press her forehead to his skin.

"There is no medical explanation for it." Shalu spoke. "We are limited in what we can explore with her because we have been hiding her all of these years, but she..."

"Hiding her?" Aviel asked. "Why?"

"Look at her Aviel!" Ch'teven spoke. "She is twenty-seven years of age and has already reached maturity! Her Vrrarhoinpa is only weeks older than her and he is already fully mature. And they are viciously protective of each other. What would normally take five hundred years to happen has happened in less than three decades? How do you explain that? Never in all of our history has this occurred."

"She is what the Scourge are looking for." Chalith spoke softly.

Aviel turned to look at him. "What do you mean?"

"Why do you think they have been taking our young Maidens Aviel?" Shalu said. "They are looking for her."

"Why would they be looking for her?" Aviel asked.

"Another section of the Scrolls that our people stole speak of her. And others." Chalith said softly.

Aviel looked at him. "Others?" He asked.

Chalith nodded. "The six that Zezhuanth chose to carry his soul." He said. "To them I will bestow my Geou. My will. The force of my Tobor Jedark and Vers. My life force and power. Together they will cleanse the galaxy and bring light once more."

"Are you saying there are more like her?" Aviel gasped.

"Not here. Not among our people." Chalith said.

"What?" Aviel asked.

"What force in the known universe was able to face down the Scourge and not be cowed Aviel?" Ch'teven asked him. "What group stood against them and defeated them at every turn until they were betrayed."

Aviel looked at Ch'teven. "The Praetorians." He answered instantly.

Ch'teven nodded. "For only the Praetorians were born with the power to project their Etheric abilities into physical weapons. Even we can not do that. Only the Praetorians of the Pralor people."

"But there are no more Praetorians Ch'teven." Aviel said. "They were all killed by the Scourge at the end of the last war. Betrayed by someone from within their own government just as you said. And their leader was lost some where among the stars before that. He was never found. Once the Praetorians fell, the Pralor people fell soon after."

"I will forgo reading to the scrolls to you verbatim Aviel..." Chalith said. "It is written that these six individuals will have this ability. This Praetorian power. It also states that each of them will bear the distinction of the others race and species who are their equals."

"You have lost me my friend." Aviel spoke.

"Zezhuanth did not specify who he would grant each piece of his soul to." Chalith said. "Only that they would be incorruptible and each of them would be birthed fully aware of everything around them. As well as the existence of their counterparts so to speak."

"I still do not understand." Aviel said.

"Her name is Laren Ti'shara Aviel." Shalu spoke. "Ladur is her Vrrarhoinpa. She sees with his eyes Aviel. He sees with her eyes. And she has begun to..."

Aviel looked at her. "To what?"

"For the last ten years they both have begun to physically manifest the ability to project their Etheric power into the physical realm." Shalu told him. "They can use it as a weapon. An extremely lethal weapon. And their power has increased substantially through the years."

"A weapon?" Aviel gasped. "You are certain?"

"We have seen it Aviel." Ch'teven spoke now. "Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir. In some manner Laren and Ladur have acquired this power. And it continues to grow."

“Do you realize how insane this all sounds?” Aviel asked looking at them.

Chalith held out the data scroll. “You may read it for yourself.” He said. “All of the tests that they have allowed us to perform.”

“Allowed?” Aviel asked.

Shalu smiled. “They are rather... stubborn.” She stated.

“She has regenerative abilities Aviel!” Chalith said. “Injuries and wounds that would take weeks for us to normally heal take her only hours. Ladur is showing this as well but not on as large a scale. She has knowledge that she should not have at so young an age. Knowledge of places and events and people that she has never seen.”

“How do you know this?” Aviel asked.

“Aviel... she has not left our care since her parents brought her to us.” Shalu said. “She has never even been offworld. Yet she can recite and complete the charts of dozens of star systems as if she has been there. Systems that we have never been to as a people. Ladur can recite the wind patterns of planets he has never been to. The intricacies of flying in thick or thin atmosphere. These our things that the Vrrarhoimpa do not learn until they are well past five hundred years of age. Yet they know it now!”

“That does not include the more... physical aspects.” Ch'teven said.

“What?” Aviel asked looking at him.

“She is... she is skilled in a physical form of combat I have never seen.” Ch'teven said. “An acolyte made the mistake of approaching her when she was among the young males in the courtyard several years ago. He touched her in our usual manner of greeting and she... she put him in the infirmary for several weeks.”

“She was incensed and screamed at him to never touch her again.” Shalu spoke. “I was able to explain to her that is our form of greeting. She already knew this but apparently she felt the acolyte’s touch was too intimate.”

“She injured a male?” Aviel asked in shock.

“That would be putting it mildly.” Ch'teven answered.

Aviel held up his hands. “Wait! What does she have to do with the Scourge?” He asked. “What does any of this have to do with the Scourge?”

“What do you think the Scourge would do if they discovered she existed?” Chalith spat. “She wields the power of a Praetorian within her Aviel. A power known only to exist with the Pralor people up until now. The Scourge have been reading our scrolls! They are searching for a way to be able to conquer us!”

“And you are telling me this child holds that key?” Aviel barked.

“She holds one of the keys.” Chalith said shaking his head. “According to the Scrolls of Zezhuanth each of the six will hold a key. They will feel each other from across the stars. They will be drawn to one another. What do you think would happen if the Scourge were able to discover the power of the gene that the Praetorians possess? Do you think they would honor their vile pact with us then Aviel?”

“I knew nothing of this secret pact you spoke of!” Aviel barked. “I would never give our Maidens to the Scourge! Never!”

Chalith nodded. “And that is why we asked you to come here.” He said. “For power or wealth or whatever other reason, there are members of the Urkrisir Mamiss that have chosen to align themselves with the Scourge and allow this. The one chosen from among our kind would be a Maiden. That is written in the scrolls.”

Aviel looked at him. “And these others?” He asked.

Chalith shook his head. “We do not know. She will not tell us. All we know is they...”

“What?” Aviel asked.

“All she will tell us is that the last of her Isthasyi are now among the living.” Shalu told him. “And that one is...”

“What?” Aviel demanded.

“She says that she has three brothers and a sister among the stars and that one of her isthasyi and her myvishi are Vrelvel Sargti.” Shalu said softly.

Aviel looked at her with wide eyes. “Vrelvel Sargti?” He gasped. “You are certain of this?”

Chalith looked at him as did Ch'teven. “Why do you not seem surprised of that Aviel?” Ch'teven asked.

Aviel turned to look at him. “We have heard rumors among the Scourge Elite that come to use our stations. Some of them were recently overheard speaking in whispers of some new Praetorian Guards. Those descended from the first Praetorian.”

“Sumar?” Shalu asked with wide eyes.

Aviel nodded quickly. “Yes.”

“I thought... where?” Shalu asked.

Aviel shook his head. “I don’t think they knew. But they were also overheard saying that one or two of these new Praetorians were Vrelvel Sargti, or whatever they called them in their own vile tongue.”

“Then it is true!” Ch'teven gasped aloud. “The Lorsvek ar Sepas. It is coming true.”

Aviel turned to look at Chalith. “I want to speak with her. With them.” He spoke quickly.

“Aviel... they are... they are rather introverted.” Chalith spoke. “They do not open up well to...”

“Damn you Chalith!” Aviel barked. “I believe you my friend! I believe all of you! This is too much to be any coincidence. Something is happening... and I want to find out what it is! My duty is to our people... not to the Governing Commission!”

Chalith looked at Ch'teven and saw him nod his massive head. He turned to Shalu and she nodded as well. He moved closer to the wall and touched a hidden panel. Aviel watched as a small section slid aside to reveal a control panel. Chalith touched it gently.

“Laren my child.” He spoke.

Aviel saw her head turn to gaze at them, almost as if she could see them even through the wall.

“We are here Tilabil Chalith.” She spoke and Aviel was stunned at the almost musical tone to her words.

“Laren... we are right now with Koppentotz Aviel of the Elbakiw Sulevfu.” Chalith said. “He would like to speak with you and Ladur personally.”

“To what end Tilabil Chalith?” She asked causing Aviel’s eyes to grow wide.

Shalu chuckled softly. “I told you... she is headstrong. As is Ladur. We do not know where they get it.”

“Laren... speaking with him could possibly allow us to reunite you and Ladur with your Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir.” Chalith told her.

Aviel saw her eyes then as she lifted her head and he choked down his intake of breath at the exquisite color of her eyes. One was a remarkable azure color, while the other was a deep cobalt blue. He glanced quickly at Ladur and saw that his eyes were different colors as well. One a golden orb and the other a piercing emerald one.

“Very well Tilabil Chalith. But please inform him that we must waste no time now. My Isthasyi and Myvishi are aware of me now. They can feel Ladur and myself within them. Soon they will be able to discern the messages I have sent to them and they will come for me.” Laren said calmly. “Trust me when I tell you, they will not take kindly to those who wish to stop us from reuniting. My Isthasyi and Myvishi will not be very forgiving to those who would do me or Ladur harm. Androcles and Elynth especially as they are Vrelvel Sargti. Though Dorian and Ryner are just coming into their own as are Ladur and I.”

Aviel looked at Chalith. “Andro... Androcles and Dorian?” He asked.

Chalith nodded. “She knows their names Aviel.” He said. “She will tell us nothing else about them but she knows their names. And probably more than she is sharing I’m sure.”

“Where is she?” Aviel asked urgently. “I must speak with her.”

“We can take the underground tram to avoid prying eyes.” Shalu said. “They are at our facility on the northern continent.”

“Then let us go now!” Aviel spoke with a gasp.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

APO PRIME

CAFÉ DISTRICT OF TUYA

Andro let his azure eyes gaze upon the crowd below him, sweeping across the expanse of the huge Café District slowly as he took things in. He hadn't been back to Apo Prime in some time, yet it looked no different than it had before. The dozens of small eateries and shops made up this section of Tuya and there were hundreds of men and women outside sitting at the many tables and benches as they went about their lives unknowing of the larger picture and what was happening outside of their small portion of the universe. Andro did not hold this against them in any way for all of them knew that a state of war now existed between the Lycavorian Union and the Kavalian Federation, but it did not affect them directly and the citizens of the Union had far more faith in their military and leaders than the Kavalian people did. Indeed many of them had been at war in some fashion for the better part of their lives and they adapted now easily. The Lycavorian Union had prospered more since his father had returned to take the throne than in the two millennia before and he knew that the vast majority of the citizens of the Union adored his father and all of his mothers. The many species and citizens of the Union knew that their King and Queens would not hesitate to get down in the dirt with the rest of them for a good cause. He distinctly remembered several occasions as he was growing where he had gone with his father to help in building a community center or medical clinic. He had learned his lessons well from both his father and his mothers and they were lessons he would never forget. They were lessons he would one day pass on to his own children.

Andro also now realized why he so much preferred Sparta and Earth over Apo Prime. It was a much slower pace of life within Sparta and everyone was not rushing around trying to accomplish whatever it was they were trying to do. He missed his villa on Gytheio, the smell of the Laconia Gulf and the scent of his wives and mates filling his head all of the time. Events were not going to allow him to return there anytime soon, but he vowed that when they did, he would spend an entire week doing nothing but worshiping their bodies and enjoying the feel of their auras all around him. Like his mother Aricia was to his father, Sadi would always be the one to command his soul, but there were times when even Andro did not believe how much he loved and adored all of his wives and mates. He had given up trying to understand it all, only that it was, and that was all he cared about now.

As he let his eyes scan the area below, no matter much how he concentrated, Andro could not pick out the members of Marci's personal team. As Assistant Director of the Krypteria, she was authorized to have her own team of highly trained men and women who looked after her and protected her. Marci had instead chosen men and women who could do Ops and assist her in wherever they were needed no matter the job. Marci was part of the younger generation of pureblood vampire within the Union. A generation that had all been born within the Union itself after their parents had fled the High Coven with Andro's mother Isabella. Their loyalty and love for the Union and its ideals was as absolute as any pureblood wolf. Marci was also among the millions of pureblood vampires within this generation that had taken pureblood Lycavorian husbands and wives. She worshiped her husband just as he adored her, and they did not care who knew or saw this. It was not a uncommon sight at all now to see a mixed couple walking the streets holding hands and showing their affection and in many cases their children.

Andro realized that Marci had regained her focus with Armetus back at work and she had become even more wise to the way things were done with her mentor able to guide her once more. Armetus and Marci made a devastating pair Andro knew. To see them working together was enlightening to say the least as they went at a problem or issue from so many different angles and directions it sometimes made Andro's head spin. Marci waded through the many intricacies of Intelligence problems and issues just as Armetus had taught her. Like a ghost among the shadows. Since he had returned Armetus had broken the Krypteria into two different sections to counter the many threats they now faced from all sides. He had appointed Marci as overall Assistant Director of the Krypteria but also the Director of Krypteria Internal Security. With the blessing of the Union Senate Oversight Committee chaired by For'mya's father L'tian, the KIS was born. They would be the ones to keep the Union safe from the inside, with full authority to act within the Union borders. Ever since he had officially formed the Krypteria, Armetus had always followed one rule to the letter. It was a rule he had stuck to no matter what if he was able and it was a rule he had passed on to Marci.

"We are the eyes and ears of the King's body. It is our sworn duty to insure the Union remains safe from all threats." Armetus said. "We tell the King where they are, how many there are and what they are doing. We let him know if they are a threat to the Union we all serve. And if needed we let him take our people and go kill them if that is what is called for.”

Armetus had never failed to do just that. And in his passionate speech before the Senate he made it very clear that the KIS was not a secret police. He knew that the King despised such things and Martin Leonidas would insure the KIS never became such an organization. He also made sure that they knew that with the myriad of threats to the Union now, the normal police and security apparatus would not work. L'tian was respected by every member of the Senate and well known to be openly defiant when he believed it was the wrong course of action. Even after the events with his daughter For'mya, he was the first to come forward in support of the new Kavalian government under Pian. If he advocated the need for such an organization to exist then none of them could dispute it. Of course Icho and his cronies screamed out against it, but the KIS was finally born on an interim basis with overwhelming Senate support.

As he gazed at the scene below Andro didn't want to think of how many among the hundreds below him in the cafés were part of Armetus and Marci's organization, but he had a guess there were probably far more than he thought he could discover. Like his father, Andro preferred the direct approach, but also like his father Andro knew the direct approach did not always work so well. That is where Marci and Armetus and their people came in.

Andro dropped his eyes when he felt Lu'ria's arms slid around his waist and she stepped under his arm to press her supple Drow body against his as she came around in front of him. He looked down into her stunning amber colored eyes and simply gazed at one of the six women who held his core being in their grasp. Her dark caramel colored ebony skin was flawless, her soft violet lips moist and inviting as always. Her long, shimmering white hair was pulled over one shoulder and fell to just above her waist. All of his wives and mates knew that Andro loved long hair and Lu'ria had spent the last weeks and months letting it grow. He was always running his strong hands through their hair in moments of relaxation and it was something all of them had come to adore. Her hair flowed around her facial features and was tied at the end with silk portions of cloth that matched the color of her Drow family's symbolic history. The dark gray jumpsuit she wore clung to her muscular but very tantalizing curves in all the right places. As with all Drow across the Union, Lu'ria Leonidas was not afraid to display her ample physical assets, and the valley between her large breasts looked very appetizing, as she always unzipped the jumpsuit just enough to show a small amount of cleavage. Andro had spent many, many hours exploring the dark, lush curves and valleys of Lu'ria's body and he knew each bend and twist by memory just as he did with all his wives and mates. While Sadi could always incite him in ways none of them could and Ne'Veha's delicious amaretto scent and taste of her skin was irresistibly intoxicating to him, Lu'ria's delicious ebony skin color and her aggressive and dominant nature always served to stimulate him. Each of his wives had a hold on him Andro knew. Lu'ria's dark skin and violet lips would never cease exciting him, and now that she was wolf, her honey melon scent was even sweeter to his nose. Carisia was a petite powerhouse of lust and desire and was not afraid to take what she wanted. Sehri projected innocence, but in reality she was nearly as adventurous as Sadi within their bed, and she would only grow far stronger as the years passed. And even without her Alkay seeping from her pores when aroused, causing all of them to have an increased desire for each other, Caliria was sweet and delicious and uninhibited.

Lu'ria looked up into Andro's face and smiled lustfully as she saw the look in his eyes.

Lu'ria knew that each of his wives and mates had a unique draw on Andro, and while Sadi would always attract him more because she was his Anome, each of them had begun to utilize their own very unique pull on him just as Sadi had taught them. Lu'ria smiled up at him as she pulsed him with just a very small amount of her newfound female aura. She knew this would send a tiny spike into her scent that only he would detect and when Lu'ria saw the sudden glint in his beautiful azure eyes she knew that he had detected it easily. She and Ne'Veha were becoming very good at using their female wolf skills thanks to Sadi's expert tutelage. Their KertaGai never denied them anything and she was constantly showing them how to manipulate their new wolf senses and abilities and part of that was in how they interacted and teased their beloved husband and mate. Sadi had made it very clear to all of them that while she may have been Andro's Anome, they were all of one mind and voice. They spoke with one voice just as Andro's mothers did. There was no need to fight or compete for Andro's affection because he loved them all with every ounce of himself, and there was quite a bit of their beloved Spartan husband to go around Lu'ria thought with a lustful smile.

Much like Andro's father had done for his mothers, the power of the virus in Andro's blood and the strength of his Etheric abilities caused certain changes in all of them, and it was these things that now tied all of his wives and mates together deeply. They shared a very special bond between themselves that even Andro would never intrude upon, and all of them were nurturing this connection deeply. Whether he was making Sadi cry out in bliss, or any one of them for that matter, they shared it with each other within their own womanly connection. When Andro made love to any of them he poured his very soul into it and this they shared with each other without question. As his Anome, Sadi was their voice, but they were all his wives and mates.

Lu'ria had embraced her new life as a wolf and Crown Princess completely. Her position had brought her much fame among the Drow people as well as much jealousy from many other young Drow females who now envied Lu'ria her standing. The utter devotion of the Leonidas men to their women was famous throughout the Union and among the Lycavorian people. She knew that any number of Drow females could line up naked before him and Andro would walk past all of them to take her and Sadi and Ne'Veha and Carisia, and now Sehri and soon Caliria once more. Some Drow females laughed at her in soft whispers saying he could not love her as much as Sadi, but Lu'ria knew the truth of it. Andro loved the contrast of their skin color when she was in his arms and he was always nuzzling her soft lips. He had spent many hours just exploring her lush body, with Lu'ria crying out in bliss the entire time. Andro had been her first lover and he would forever be her only male lover. Lu'ria also deeply embraced the unique and special Etheric bond she shared with Sadi and the others. It was this Etheric bond that wound them all so tightly together as not only intense and very willing lovers, but also the very deepest of friends and Crown Princesses as well. They referred to her as their Drow Mistress, and Lu'ria knew it would never be the same without all of them in her life.

Lu'ria knew that she and Carisia were the closest in skill to Andro when it came to hand to hand combat. Her scrumptious Maya eyed slaved was even better than her Lu'ria knew, but if Carisia was gone as she was now, Andro would always bring her if physical combat was a very distinct possibility. Sadi and Ne'Veha were not far behind them in fighting abilities, but their skills made them incredible pilots first and their Etheric abilities allowed them to do things that Lu'ria and Carisia couldn't. Sehri was showing an amazing aptitude to use her growing Etheric abilities in a defensive manner none of them could match. The youngest of them she may have been, but she was nearly Sadi's equal within the realm of her Etheric powers and Lu'ria didn't doubt that she would soon come to her and Carisia to put these skills to more practical use in terms of physical combat. Their Inamarno was a doctor Lu'ria knew, and when she was back among them, Lu'ria had no doubts she would find the niche she was meant to take.

As Lu'ria gazed into his beautiful eyes she reached up and traced his strong jaw with her finger. "You are far away my love." She spoke softly.

Andro smiled at her and Lu'ria felt her heart do little flips as he leaned over and nuzzled the outer ridge of her four inch high elven ear. "I see KertaGai is teaching all of you to be very perceptive of my mannerisms." He said in a whisper.

Lu'ria grinned and leaned into his nuzzle as she shivered in delight and her new wolf blood began to sizzle at his touch and his scent. "We are one." She stammered finally.

Lu'ria felt that unique tingle in her head and then Sadi's voice filled her mind in their private connection. [Lu'ria Leonidas... don't you dare make me scold you our Drow Mistress.] Sadi's voice spoke to her from the SCIMITAR in orbit. [You are wolf now and you are our wife and mate. If you desire your husband then we expect you to act on it. You will never need my permission to have our mate tickle your senses or make you scream his name to the moon.]

[I did not...] Lu'ria began.

[No. If you desire your husband and mate... if your blood burns for him... then you let him know. I would expect any of us to have our husband when he makes our senses burn for him. I certainly would not turn down the opportunity and I would not expect any of you to. As long as you share with us when you return of course.] Sadi told her with some humor in her voice.

[I will always share.] Lu'ria spoke in reply.

[Then if the opportunity presents itself... you let your husband and mate know that you want him and that he needs to sate the burning of your blood.] Sadi replied. [When has our beautiful Alpha wolf ever let us down Mistress?]

[Never.] Lu'ria answered.

[Then you do what you must as an Alpha female. And share with us when you return.] Sadi told her.
[Details our Drow Mistress. Details.]

Lu'ria suppressed the chuckle she wanted to release at Sadi's words and she stared into Andro's eyes. "You are our core Androcles Leonidas. Of course she would teach these things to us." She told him finally. "We wonder where our beloved goes when his mind takes him to places we can not see? We wonder what he thinks of? What he views when he is there?" She looked up into his face again. "We wonder what is so strong within him that it takes him from the warmth of our embrace and our bed and why only his brother Dorian, Ryner and his Bonded Sister can sooth him?"

"I tried not to wake you." He said with a gentle smile.

Lu'ria pressed tighter against him. "What was it Andro?" She asked. "A dream?"

Andro shook his head slowly and was silent for a long, quiet moment. Lu'ria knew that he would never lie to any of them and she remained patient as he tried to find the words to explain and his arm dropped to curl around her waist and draw her closer. She reveled in the feel of his powerful body against hers as she waited. He looked at her finally. "Not a dream really... but what was in the dream. Elynth and I have had them since we were very young. They went away for a time when the nightmares of Alba Tau were all we could see, but ever since... ever since Dorian was born they have returned. Stronger and much more focused now."

"What do you see?" Lu'ria asked.

"It's not so much what I see my Ilythiiri Tessai, it's what I hear. What we all hear within the dream." Andro said softly.

"Dorian, Ryner and Elynth hear this too?" Lu'ria asked.

Andro nodded his head. "It's a voice... like a whisper. It echoes in the background all around us, speaking to us, but so softly we can barely hear it. We only discovered last night that Dorian and Ryner have been having these same dreams for weeks now. It is why we spent the time with them after we woke."

"What... what does it say? This voice." Lu'ria asked.

"That's just it Lu'ria... it's so soft that we can hardly make out any words. Most of the time anyway. When it is quiet enough, the words are spoken in a language I have never heard spoken before. But part of me... part of me understand their meaning." Andro said. "It is a female voice, of that we are sure, but..."

"Female huh?" She asked with a grin.

Andro smiled at her. "Lu'ria you should..."

"We have found everyone who will share our lives Andro." Lu'ria said. "We know that what you feel for each of us you could never feel for any another. And trust me when I say, no female will ever have what we have now. We have you. And we will not share. I was trying to be humorous."

Andro shook his head and leaned over quickly to nibble on her pointed ear tip causing her to squirm in happiness and squeeze him even harder. He drew back and looked at her, his face becoming serious once more. "The voice is almost familiar to me. Like..."

"What?" Lu'ria urged him to continue.

"When we hear this voice it is like... it is like when I talk to one of my sisters." Andro said. "The familiarity with them. The love for them that I have. I feel all of that too. Like I, like we should know who this voice belongs to."

"And you are sure it is not Eliani or Zarah or..." Lu'ria began.

Andro shook his head quickly. "My sisters have never been shy about coming to me and talking about anything." He said. "Nor I with them. None of them approached me after these dreams so I know it is not an echo of one of them. Zarah I would know immediately because of the bond we share. Eli is like Dorian and I in a small way. She is far more perceptive than she lets on because of when she was conceived. Our father and mother Anja were still discovering everything they had. They were still deeply emotional times for them when Eli was conceived. I would have sensed it from her immediately as well. Carina and Normya would instantly share anything with their husbands, who would in turn tell me. And Lisi has never been shy about telling me anything." He shook his head again. "No... this is very different... and it feels like it comes from across a great distance."

Lu'ria looked into his eyes and saw confusion. "What? Speak to me Andro."

"It feels like it is part of me." Andro told her. "Part of us. Like it is inside us. Like it has always been inside us."

“Do you hear it now?” She asked. “When you are awake?”

Andro shook his head. “Not the voice. But the resonance remains clear and strong. We can still feel the presence. Like it is humming gently in the background. Waiting.”

“I am not... I am not very knowledgeable about this gene within you.” Lu'ria began to tell him. “I am not as strong as Sadi or Sehri or even Ne'Veha within the Etheric...”

Andro reached up and spread his palm across her cheek seeing her eyes lift up to meet his. “You are far stronger than you might think my Ilythiiri Tessai.” He said. “As with so many others, your Etheric abilities are channeled in a different direction.”

“My physical skills?” Lu'ria said.

Andro nodded. “You and Enylarcopri both. In a fashion similar to how Zarah's abilities are used.”

“Because you bit me?” Lu'ria asked. “Changed me?”

Andro lowered his eyes. “Not exactly the way I would have preferred to bring you fully into my life but...”

Lu'ria reached up and placed a finger on his lips. “You will never be sorry or ashamed for making me like I am now Androcles my love. I cherish that day every moment that goes by. It made me like you and Sadi and Ne'Veha. I embrace that.”

“As do I.” Andro told her, his arm pulling her tighter.

“Then share what you see and feel with us Andro.” Lu'ria told him. “When we are all together. Dorian too. Share it with us. We love you more than our own lives, and I know Sheva loves Dorian just as deeply. Perhaps with us... perhaps we could help you to understand. See something that you and Dorian and Elynth and Ryner cannot. We are stronger when we are all together, you know this.”

Andro stared at her for a long moment in silence. “I... I never thought of that.” He said finally. “We are stronger when we are together. Perhaps...”

The male voice in his ear implant broke into his train of thought and brought an end to their conversation.

“Target has arrived. Lerkim Banak has entered the zone.” The voice spoke simply.

Andro and Lu'ria both shifted to business mode now. Their mission required their full attention and that is what it would get.

“Direction?” Andro asked as he and Lu'ria grabbed macrobinos and began to search the crowd below.

“East courtyard.” The reply was crisp and instant. “Making his way to a table. Red shirt and brown pants.”

Andro's keen eyes found the man among the crowd and he grimaced. Lu'ria chuckled softly and shook her head as she found him as well. “Not exactly a pillar of fashion is he?” She stated.

“Downright disgusting if you ask me.” Another female voice echoed her words on the COM channel.

“Watchers?” Andro asked aloud. He wanted to know if there were others watching their target and if it would be noticed if he was taken.

“Three possible Milord.” Another male voice answered instantly. “Two at west entrance, one on balcony above the courtyard to the north.”

It was Marci's voice that cut in now. She was waiting at the building where they would take the vampire traitor. “Andro... we need to neutralize the Watchers.” She stated.

“Agreed.” Andro answered.

“Krypteria Two One to Teams Three and Five. Shift your positions and eliminate the Watchers.” Marci ordered on the secure COM channel. “Take them quietly into custody and move them to secure holding areas. We will confirm who they are later.”

“Confirmed. Three moving.”

“Five moving and confirms order.”

The replies were professional and instant.

Andro looked at Lu'ria. “Anything Ilythiiri Tessai?” He asked.

Lu'ria shook her head. “He seems calm and confident.” She answered instantly. She had been watching him intently through macrobinos since he had entered the courtyard. “He just ordered something from the menu but he does not appear anxious in the least. Could he suspect he is being watched Marci?” She asked.

“He has no reason to suspect that we are on to him Lu'ria.” Marci’s voice echoed in their implants. “If what Sheva told us is accurate he also has no reason to believe that she is no longer who he thinks she is. He is operating under old assumptions.”

“Sloppy.’ Lu'ria spoke.

“Very much so.” Marci agreed with her.

Andro nodded his head. “Sheva is very smart.” He said. “Smarter than this fool that is for sure. She kept her changing feelings to herself and did not make herself suspect. Especially after she discovered her feelings for Dorian.”

“Andro... could she be...?” Marci began to ask.

Andro looked at Lu'ria who met his eyes and he shook his head. “No Marci.” He replied to her unfinished question. He took no offense for it was a question he himself would have asked. “You did not see her when she came to us Marci. She reeked of fear. Fear of loss. She was terrified she would lose my brother. And I could also detect the tinge of hate. For this man as well as others.”

Andro could almost see Marci nod her head from where she was. “Well... if there is one thing I’m not going to question it’s your sense of smell and your uncanny ability to read people. You are certain he has no idea that she is Dorian’s wife now Andro?” Marci asked him over the COM. As close as they had worked in the past and now, Andro had made it very clear she was to call him by his given name. Marci was among the very few who were allowed such a thing.

“No. We kept that very quiet at her request. She did not want the Durcunusaan to treat her differently. Very few people know that Marci. Jomann and a few others on our personal detachments but no one else.” Lu'ria answered for him.

“Good.” Marci spoke.

“That will make this much easier.” Lu'ria said.

“Yes it will.” Marci agreed. “Contact team is in place. Stand by.”

Andro studied the area around where the traitor sat but could detect no sign of Marci’s people. He shook his head at their skill and ability to blend in perfectly.

“Three. Watchers neutralized.” The voice spoke after a moment.

“Team Five. Watcher neutralized. Moving to Eastern District Holding Area.”

“Krypteria Two One acknowledges. Andro?” Marci asked.

“Do it.” Andro ordered.

“Contact Team. Execute!” Marci’s order came with no hesitation or doubt.

It happened almost faster than Andro’s eyes could follow. Banak’s waitress brought him out a mug of something and as she was setting it on the table blocking his full view of the area, someone, a male was all Andro could determine based on his size, walked behind her and right beside Banak. His left hand seemingly brush Banak’s shoulder accidentally and Andro saw Banak stiffen slightly. As the man continued to walk past, the waitress set the mug on the table along with her tray and began to help Banak to his feet almost casually. It was like they were together from the way she acted and talked to him with an animated face. It appeared outwardly as if he was heavily intoxicated and the young woman laugh gently as she slipped her arms around his waist and made it seem as if he was doing the same as she guided his arm around her slim waist. They drew no attention aside from some knowing glances from other couples Andro saw as she led him across the courtyard and into the actual café where they disappeared from sight.

“Marci?” Andro cut in suddenly concerned.

“Standby Andro.” Marci’s voice responded calmly. “Let her do her job.”

Andro felt Lu'ria squeeze his arm and he glanced at her as she pressed against him. His eyes moved back to the courtyard below and he watched as the man who had brushed alongside Banak began to make his way back towards the café. He moved very casually and eventually he walked through the same doors the waitress had taken Banak only two minutes before.

“Target is secure.” The female voice spoke now on the COM. “Red One to all teams. The target is secure. Red Five arriving. Begin extraction to interrogation site.”

“Red Five is on site with Red One. I confirm her status.” The male voice echoed. “We are moving.”

“Krypteria Two One Confirms. All teams evac to predetermined locations. Red One and Red Five will deliver the package.” Marci ordered. “Excellent work people. Perfect.”

Andro turned as the door to the room he and Lu'ria were in opened and he saw Marci enter. She acknowledged something from her implant and looked at him. "They'll have him at the interrogation site in twenty-two minutes." She told him.

"The Watchers?" Andro asked.

"We'll find out who they are and if they are involved." Marci answered as she came up in front of him and Lu'ria. "I have a Lifter on the roof. We should go together. No sense in you or Lu'ria being spotted leaving the building. It will bring questions we do not want to answer right now. If the Netnews discovers you are here on Apo Prime, Icho will be all over it."

Andro nodded. "Superior work Marci." Andro said. "Tell your people for me. Absolutely brilliant."

Marci smiled. "They like to hear that." She said. "C'mon... we want to be there when this idiot wakes up."

ICARAVA
DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD
DARASTRIXETHE (DRAGONBLOOD) SPACE
NORTHERN CONTINENT
LIVAIJI SULEVFU FACILITY

Aviel moved between Chalith and Shalu as they walked down the corridor and Ch'teven moved along behind them. When Chalith had first opened the wall in the chamber he thought that the young woman was in the same facility as they were. He should have known better considering how Shalu and Chalith took their security. Ch'teven remained silent, keeping his thoughts to himself.

Aviel looked at Chalith as they walked. "Why not keep her at the main facility Chalith?" He asked.

Chalith shook his head quickly. "And risk exposing them to the general population?" He spoke. "We do not know who we can trust my friend. That is not wise. They are very intuitive and always seeking knowledge. At least here they can wander and do what they want. Most days they simply read to each other. They love to read."

"We did not know who or where the UrIkrisa Mamiss may have had eyes and ears Aviel my friend." Shalu added.

Aviel looked at her. "Yet you called me." He said.

"Ch'teven is the one who convinced us we needed to reach out. Recent events have forced our hand really. We do not believe we can protect her and Ladur any longer." Chalith replied. "Given our history together... we hoped you would... we hoped you still believed in the same things that you believed in when you were here."

"And if you determined I did not?" Aviel asked.

"Then you would have met an unfortunate accident on your return and we would have mourned your loss." Ch'teven answered from behind them causing Aviel to stop walking and look at them.

"You would have... you would have had me killed?" He gasped.

"Protecting them is now our main concern Aviel." Ch'teven replied honestly. "You only needed to see her and hear what we told you to believe and come this far Aviel my friend. You have not met them yet. When you do, you will believe what we have believed since the day they arrived here. None of us ever believed you would have agreed to the decision to give our Maiden females to the Scourge, but we did not know who we could trust."

Aviel looked at them for a long moment before Chalith took his arm and ushered him forward once more. "How many know she is here?" Aviel asked finally.

"After the incident in the courtyard of the main facility we decided to move her here as I told you." Chalith told him. "The acolyte she injured was given a glowing recommendation and a position of some importance on one of our colony worlds. He is quite happy and very loyal. He would never betray us. Aside from her parents, only six others know what you now know, all of them her brothers. When we moved her here, we reassigned the hundred or so acolytes that were assigned here. This facility is now empty except for Laren and Ladur and those who care for and teach them.”

Shalu chuckled softly. “When they allow us that is.” She stated.

Chalith nodded his head with a smile of his own. “Her brothers have visited her often. She may be very different from them, but they love her no less because of it. Both her parents now live here as well. They are very protective of her and since all of her brothers are members of the Angrimich, they understand security better than we do. Several of them actually helped to design and install the updated security measures here in the facility in order to better protect her and Ladur.”

“What do you mean Shalu... when they allow?” Aviel asked.

“We told you they are viciously protective of each other.” Shalu answered him. “They are also extremely intelligent and very introverted. They do not trust easily. Many of those we have employed to teach them we have had to reassign because they cannot tolerate...”

“Tolerate what?” Aviel asked.

“Do not treat them as if they are children Aviel.” Shalu told him. “They hate being treated as if they are children.”

“But they are children.” Aviel spoke.

Chalith shook his head. “No... they are not. You will understand soon enough. Please... they wait for us here in the main greeting hall.”

Aviel followed as they walked through the massive entrance doors and he saw them standing off to the side. A man and woman stood with them, Laren speaking in soft whispers with the woman while the Jiilhoimpa male spoke with Ladur. All four of them turned to look at him as they moved closer and Aviel’s eyes grew wider as he approached.

Seeing her in a holoimage in no way did her justice.

Laren Ti'shara was perhaps five foot three, shorter than the average Darastrixi female, but not odd by any means and if his keen eye was correct she weighed no more than a hundred and fifteen pounds. Her raven black hair was even more vibrant in color now that he stood in front of her, almost blue in some of the light that reflected off her head from above. The light green scales of her outer face and along her arms, shoulders and up her neck matched the exact color of her Vrrarhoimpa Ladur’s body, but they were much softer in appearance than any female he had ever seen of the Darastrixi. Her scales ended further back along the outer edge of her face than normal, closer to where her hairline started and that is where the deeply tanned skin began. This was something he had never seen on a Darastrixi female. Her lips were full and a soft pink color and they glistened with moisture in the sunlight. Aviel noticed that her chest was larger than any of the Darastrixi female he had ever seen before and her legs were also very long for her height. She wore a simple pair of brown pants and boots, the soft white top clinging to her chest while the cloak he had seen earlier was still draped across her shoulders. He could tell with just a glance that she was in superb physical condition and her body was taut and muscular in nature. Her hair was also much longer than he first thought, reaching down to the top of her buttocks easily, but now pulled over her left shoulder into the front. There were two lengths of her black hair that were oddly braided in some fashion and extended down along the sides of her surreal face. It was her eyes that caught and held Aviel however. As he had noticed before, the right eye was Azure blue in color and the left Cobalt blue. They were so very vibrant and alive in their brightness and clarity. And they held wisdom and knowledge within them that he had never seen from a female so young in years.

Chalith and Shalu moved up on either side of Aviel as he stared at her in wonder. “Laren Ti’shara... Ladur... I would like to introduce Koppentotz Aviel.” Chalith spoke.

Aviel instinctively lifted his hand and stepped forward for a greeting but stopped himself in mid motion when he remembered Chalith’s words about the young acolyte. He watched as the young woman turned her head and looked at the older woman to the side. Aviel saw her nod her head slowly and then Laren stepped forward as she lifted her hand. Aviel watched as her hand came to rest over his heart and she moved close enough so that his hand came to rest on her chest. His eyes grew slightly wide when he realized that her chest area was not hard muscle and covered in softly scaled skin as with normal Darastrixi females, but instead was firm and extremely supple and warm. He also took notice that she had two separate mounds of supple flesh on her chest that strained against the shirt she wore, each one topped by a nipple encircled with light green color.

Aviel watched as she brought her head forward and he slowly lowered his forehead to hers, their skin touching in the common Darastrixi greeting.

“It is an honor Koppentotz Aviel. I am Laren Ti'shara, Hianag to Yokra and Robati of the Svihelen Ti'shara.” She spoke as she drew her head back and Aviel was amazed at how her voice was so musical in its resonance. (Daughter)(Family)

It was Shalu who took notice of the dark look that passed quickly in Laren's eyes when Aviel did not remove his hand quickly enough and she stepped forward to take Aviel's arm and draw his hand away before Laren took offense at his touch. He looked at Shalu quickly and then back to Laren.

“Forgive me child.” He said quickly. “You... you are not what I expected you to be in person.”

Laren canted her head to the side as Ladur stepped up behind her. His massive and quite muscular light green scaled body was not something Aviel was used to seeing on such a young Vrrarhoinpa. They were not supposed to mature and grow as Ladur had done until they were at least five centuries old. Normally it would take a Vrrarhoinpa nearly a thousand years before reaching the size and musculature that Ladur now possessed.

“And what did you expect Koppentotz Aviel?” Ladur asked aloud and in a tone of voice that did not suggest friendliness.

“Ladur!” Yokra Ti'shara hissed from the side and Aviel watched as Ladur turned to look at him. Laren's father had vowed to fill the role his own father could not. His father was bound to and always with his Jiilhoinpa as they trained, yet when his parents were here they could not hide the immense pride they felt for their youngest hatchling. Ladur's parents had snuck away on several occasions to see their youngest son and it was on one of these trips that Yokra had sworn to his father to look after Ladur as he would his own sons. “Sanipkur.” (Patience)

Ladur nodded his head slowly. “Opsola di sia kornari.” He spoke with respect. (Father of my heart) Ladur turned back to Aviel. “Forgive me my tone of voice Koppentotz Aviel.”

Aviel stared at them in wonder, his eyes wide. “Fascinating.” He gasped after a long moment. He reached out with his hand to touch her face but stopped short. “Nomag si?” He asked softly. (May I?)

Laren turned and looked at Ladur who nodded his massive head. She turned back to him. “Ar ekmiv.” Laren answered. (Of course)

Aviel reached out and let his fingers touch her skin. The warmth was incredible as was the soft texture of her scales and then the silky nature of the tanned skin. It was something he had never seen before in all his nearly hundred thousand years of life. After a few moments he drew his hand back and simply stared at her. “Truly astounding.” He spoke softly. “And you... you were hatched child?”

The woman stepped forward from the side. “I assure you Koppentotz Aviel; I carried her egg within me.”

Aviel looked at the older but still very attractive Darastrixi woman. “I meant no offense Usjalil Robati. Forgive me if it seemed that way.” He told her quickly. (Lady) He looked back to Chalith and Shalu. “I will listen to whatever you have to tell me.” He told them.

“Aviel we...” Ch'teven began.

“In order to listen... you must be willing to hear Koppentotz Aviel.” Laren spoke softly. “Are you willing to hear?”

“Laren!” Her mother gasped.

Laren didn't hesitate and she stepped closer, reaching out and placing her hand on the side of Aviel's face. Aviel's eyes grew wide suddenly and his hand came up to cover Laren's as she closed her eyes and Ladur lowered his massive head beside hers. Her other hand came up and reached around his huge snout as best as she could, her fingers spreading across his warm scales and a soft blue Etheric shield unlike anything Aviel had ever seen erected around them.

“Laren no!” Robati exclaimed beginning to move forward.

“No!” Chalith spoke holding up his hand. “Let her show him.” He rasped softly. “Just as she showed us.”

Aviel's found he could not move his body and his eyes grew even wider as the images and words began to flash through his mind. Writings in a language he did not understand, places he had never seen before, green and lush lands with sparkling bodies of crystal clear blue water. A large structure along the white sands of a beach. An island. A home. Images of a tall young man with glowing azure eyes. A female Vrrarhoinpa, obsidian in color with golden eyes that glowed just as brightly. Emotions of intense trust and devotion to one another. He saw flashes of red, blasts of fire tinged breath, horrible screaming, sounds of explosions, and then blood flowing all around like the waves of an ocean. Another tall figure, so similar to the first, another Vrrarhoinpa with emerald like eyes. All of them so commanding in their presence. He saw the second figure move with speed unlike anything he had ever witnessed in his life. Almost a blur of motion that he could barely follow. He saw flashes of different species that he had never seen before. All of them united in a single cause. To grow and prosper. But also to battle those who would do harm to what they loved. He saw battles among the stars. The flashes of Pralor ships battling Scourge ships. A single figure among the masses rallying Pralor troops. A Praetorian. The very first Praetorian. Sumar. Aviel blinked quickly. How could he know that?

Then he saw another figure standing tall, a male of a species that looked very similar to the Pralor people, but he was definitely no Pralor. He saw vicious dual fangs, shoulder length black hair and dark brown eyes that were alive with purpose. He looked so much like the two younger men he had seen in the flashes of images. He too stood rallying troops of several different species. He commanded attention and stood without fear. Aviel could sense the awe others felt around him.

There was so much. So many sights. So many sounds. So many voices. Yet four rose calmly above all the chaos, pillars of will and determination, echoing loudly and with love. They were calling for her; for Ladur. Calling their names among the stars. Three male voices and a female voice speaking as one.

“Enough sister.” Ladur spoke suddenly and Laren pulled her hand away instantly.

Aviel staggered back quickly, his hand reaching for support and finding Chalith and Ch'teven's front foreleg to steady him. He looked up with wide eyes and stared at Laren and Ladur as her mother rushed forward and took Laren in her arms. “Ini wer ithquenti!” He stammered. (By the Gods)

Robati moved closer to her daughter and reached out to take her arm. “You should not have...”

Aviel shook his head quickly. “Yes!” He gasped loudly causing them to look at him. “She... she should have.” He took several deep breaths and gripped Chalith's arm to steady himself once more. He turned and let his hand rest on Ch'teven's scaled chest before he looked back at Laren. “I wish to speak to Laren and Ladur alone.” He said firmly.

“Aviel?” Shalu asked moving closer.

Aviel looked at her. “Alone!” He said with more of his command voice. He was not used to others denying him what he wanted because of his position so he did not use his full voice, but he needed to be sure of what he felt within him. These men and women were his friends and he would not treat them as underlings. He looked at Shalu. “Please my friend.”

Ch'teven rumbled deep in his chest. “Let us leave them.” He spoke.

He was the oldest among them and none would debate his wisdom. Yokra took his wife's arm gently. “Come my memamosal.” He said.

Robati's eyes remained on her daughter until Laren smiled and nodded her head. Only then did Robati let her husband pull her away. Laren watched as Chalith drew Shalu away and then Ch'teven bowed his head to her and turned to follow. She let her eyes fall back on Aviel who moved closer to her.

“Can you hear now Koppentotz Aviel?” Laren asked him softly.

Aviel looked between her and Ladur for a long moment and then held out his hand to her. “Will you and Ladur walk with me child?” He asked. “Let us move into the open air and let the sun warm us while it is still high in the sky. I wish to hear what you and Ladur can teach me. I wish to know what it is you both feel so deeply. I wish to know about what it is you showed me.”

Laren smiled warmly and brushed aside his hand, moving closer and to his surprise she took his arm within her small hands as she guided him towards the open air courtyard a short ways down the corridor. This physical action, this physical touching was new to him as it was not common among their people but it felt right and he covered her hands with one of his as they walked.

Ladur fell in beside them on Aviel's opposite side. “There is so much.” Laren spoke softly.

Aviel nodded his head as they walked feeling invigorated as never before. “I... I do not doubt this. Not if the brief glimpses you showed me are an indication. You and Ladur give me the high points and tell me what we need to do child. If you and Ladur are indeed the Heralds of the Lorsvek ar Sepas, then... then there is so much we have to do. But first... I wish... I wish to know of the other Heralds... your isthasyi and myvishi. This Androcles and Dorian. And this Elynth and Ryner. They are... they are the other Heralds are they not? They are who I saw in... in the visions... yes?"

Ladur nodded. "They are." He answered. "Our sepas isthasyi and myvishi."

Aviel nodded. "I wish to know of them Laren. How long have you and Ladur been... how long have you felt them within you?"

"Since the day we were blessed with life and awareness." Ladur answered as they walked down the corridor.

"Androcles and Elynth... they are the oldest of so many. The Vraktor of our Sepas Opsola." Laren spoke again her face animated.

"Children of your Soul Father?" Aviel asked.

Laren nodded her head. "Their father. Well... Androcles and Dorian's father." She told him with a dazzling smile. "Vrrarhoinpa Torma is Elynth's father. Our Sepas Opsola... he is the first of them. The first of the descendants of Sumar. And so very powerful he is."

"Then... then it is true what I have heard only in rumors. The Praetorians have returned?" Aviel asked.

"They are not the Praetorians that you remember Koppentotz Aviel." Ladur told him. "They wield the Praetorian power within them yes... but they embrace their emotions and actions as the Praetorians of old did not. It makes them so much more powerful. Our Sepas Opsola passed this gift to his vraktor and when combined with the Geou of Zezhuanth, his Tobor Jedark and Vers, they are even stronger than us. But we are one with them."

"And this Androcles and Dorian are Praetorians as well?" Aviel asked.

Laren nodded her head. "We have felt Andro and Elynth within us for many years. Since shortly after we joined this life. We have only just begun to feel Dorian and Ryner recently. It is odd how quickly he grew but..."

Aviel listened intently, enraptured by their words and the fact that the oldest and perhaps most sacred legend of their species was beginning to play out right in front of him. And he had been blessed in such a way as to see it happen.

Robati squeezed Yokra's hand tightly as they watched Laren and Ladur sitting with Aviel on one of the courtyard's huge benches. They had been talking for nearly three hours and the sun had gone down twenty minutes ago. Robati and Yokra Ti'shara loved their daughter no matter what she looked like. Their six older sons were obsessively protective of her and Ladur, all of them seeing that their sister and her Vrrarhoinpa were something so very special. They had perhaps overdone it with some of the security measures they had installed in order to protect their sister, but no one complained. They visited as often as they could and Robati would often find Laren speaking to one of her brothers within their Etheric connection when they were free. Any of them could make her laugh and lift her spirits, but Robati knew that only the brothers and sister of her soul would ever be able to complete her.

"It has... it has been so long." Robati finally spoke to her husband.

Yokra looked at where Ch'teven rested on the ground nearby speaking with Chalith and Shalu. "You trust this man Ch'teven?" He asked.

Chalith and Shalu turned to look at him as Ch'teven lifted his head and eyes. "We do Yokra." Ch'teven answered. "He has no love for the Scourge scum... and now that Laren and Ladur have opened his eyes, he will have even less."

"You are certain?" Robati asked.

"You did not see the look on his face when we told him of what the Scourge are doing." Shalu said. "That our own government is allowing them to do this? Aviel may have served for centuries, but he has not forgotten his history or what he believes in."

"No I have not." Aviel's voice spoke causing all of them to turn.

He stood with Laren beside him holding his arm as she had for the entire time they had been talking. Ladur settled his bulk beside him as well. Robati moved up to her daughter and Laren released Aviel's arm to embrace her tightly.

“Aviel?” Ch'teven asked.

“There is much we must do. And we must do it quickly but with care.” Aviel spoke as he moved up to them. “I have asked Laren and Ladur to allow a physician I trust to examine them. They have agreed.”

Robati looked at her daughter. “Hianag?” She asked taking her hands. “Laren?”

Laren smiled. “It is alright mother.” She said. “Ladur and I did agree to this.”

“You will be present Usjalil Robati.” Aviel told her. “I insisted upon this. Should this physician begin to ask questions we do not want to answer then you have my authority to end it right there. I will make this very clear to the physician.”

“Why?” Yokra asked.

“Your daughter and Ladur are very different.” Aviel spoke to him. “I need not tell you that Yokra Ti'shara. The more we know of what they are capable of, what makes them who they are, the better we will be able to protect them.”

“You trust this physician Aviel?” Chalith asked.

Aviel looked at him. “I should.” He answered. “It is my memamosal.”

Shalu smiled. “Of course.” She said sheepishly. “I had forgotten Nahko was a doctor. An excellent one if I do recall.”

“Chalith... I want all of the information you have obtained through the years in regards to the Lorsvek ar Sepas.” Aviel said moving to stand beside Ch'teven. “Include the notes and scans from whatever it is your people found on Haradur. And I want you to move all of them here my friend. From what I can see, Laren's brothers did an excellent job with the security measures here, but anyone involved in this I want protected. Out of reach of whoever may be involved and most certainly out of reach of the Scourge.”

“You think they have agents here?” Shalu asked shocked.

“After what you told me, it is something we must consider.” Aviel spoke. “I also want all of the recordings you have obtained about these secret transfers out of Maiden females. When they take place and if possible when the next one is to occur. I will not allow this to continue any longer.”

Chalith nodded his head. “I will see to it.” He spoke. “But I can tell you when the next one will occur now. It has happened to every generation in the last half century Aviel. Laren's generation is here now and at the correct age. She matches all of the exact requisites that the Scourge have been using. And her birth is among the register. We could not hide that she exists even if we wanted to now. It will take place within the next few weeks I'm sure of it. They will begin searching for her and others soon, if they have not already.”

Aviel nodded. “Then we must move quickly but carefully. Send it all to me. My personal data stream. The same way you requested I visit you. I must return before I am missed and others begin to question where I have gone.” Aviel told them. “I will have Nahko make the trip here tomorrow. Get the other members of your archeology team here soon Chalith. Try to keep them apart from Laren and Ladur as best you are able. The fewer that know she exists the better we will be. Once I begin to ask questions, however discrete I am, the Scourge will take notice and they will want to find and silence them.”

“Aviel... you must not risk yourself.” Shalu said quickly.

Aviel looked at Laren and Ladur before turning back to Shalu. “If what Laren and Ladur tell me is true, and I do not doubt what they have told me, then the only place they will be safe now is with their Isthasyi and Myvishi. Out of reach of the Scourge. At least for a time. Once the knowledge that Laren and Ladur exist becomes known, once it reaches the highest levels of our government, the Scourge will discover them regardless of what we do. It is not something we can stop from happening. If what you believe about the Urkrisa Mamiss is accurate then those who are involved with the Scourge will discover her. That is why we must stay one or two steps ahead of them. And after what they have told me of their Isthasyi and Myvishi, I would much rather Laren and Ladur go to them then they come here after them.”

“What do you mean Koppentotz Aviel?” Yokra asked.

“Let us just say that a confrontation between Scourge Elites and their warrior puppets and two of these new Praetorians and their Vrrarhoinpa, those ruled by their passions and intent on retrieving their brother and sister, well it would not be a pleasant experience for anyone.” Aviel said. “And it would certainly awaken our people as well.”

“Is that not what we want?” Robati asked now. “To stop this from happening.”

Aviel nodded his head in agreement. "It is... but first we must insure Laren and Ladur are alive and able to make this happen. The Lorsvek ar Sepas must be allowed to play out now. It has begun... I no longer have any doubts about that. Now we must insure that it continues and only then will any of us be truly free of the Scourge."

Ch'teven rose to his feet. "I will escort you back Aviel my friend." He spoke.

Aviel nodded and turned back to Laren and Ladur. He stepped up to Laren who still held her mother's hands but did not attempt to touch her. He bowed his head to her but it was Laren who reached up and placed her hand on his cheek. He covered her hand with his. "Trust in me child. You will be reunited with your Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir. I swear to you." He said softly.

Laren nodded after looking at Ladur. "We do." She answered softly. "As you now trust in us."

Aviel nodded his head with a smile. "I will see you both again soon." He told them. He turned to Ch'teven. "We should go my friend."

Ch'teven nodded. "This way." He spoke.

Robati waited until Ch'teven had led Aviel far enough away and then she looked at her daughter. "What... what did you talk about Laren?" she asked.

Laren and Ladur turned to look at her. "We told him the truth mother." She said. "Ladur and I believe we can trust him."

"Laren you are certain?" Chalith asked her as he moved closer.

Laren looked at him. "I think so." She said. "I could detect no lie coming from his scent Tilabil Chalith."

"You did not tell him you can... that you and Ladur have these other skills... did you?" Shalu asked her.

Laren shook her head quickly. "No. But he will discover some of it when his memamosal comes to examine us tomorrow. We will not be able to hide what we are any longer. It will be known after tomorrow. At least a small portion of what we can do." She answered.

"Nor do we want to hide ourselves any longer." Ladur echoed her words. "They are part of us... and we are part of them. Their blood flows within us powerfully... just as ours courses through their veins. It is what was intended to be. Even we do not understand it completely."

"Then why did you agree to that?" Chalith asked.

Laren Ti'shara drew in a deep breath and placed her hand on Ladur's massive head, her hand absently stroking his scales. "Only Koppentotz Aviel can help us reach our Isthasyi and Myvishi. We must allow him to see into us, even if only a little, so that when he believes, he does so with his heart and mind. And he is correct in that we do not want Andro and Dorian and Elynth and Ryner to come here. The confrontation would not be friendly and Ladur and I do not want our people placed in the middle. At least not yet. The time will come when they need to make a choice, but it is not in the immediate future. They will consider us outcasts and they will fear us because they don't understand. That is something we need to avoid until the time is right."

"Wise words my daughter." Yokra said as he moved up beside her and lowered his head to touch hers.

Chalith nodded. "Indeed." He said seeing the look of happiness on her face as her father's skin touched hers.

Her mother, father and brothers were the only ones who Laren allowed to touch her or Ladur in so familiar a way. Sometimes even at all. Even after all these years she did not allow him or Shalu to do this. Chalith did not take offense and nor did Shalu. There was something within them; some unseen code of honor that they followed religiously that made them this way. And after the injuries she had inflicted on the acolyte no one wanted to test her or Ladur in any way. She had only hit the man three times and even though he was twice her size and weight she had nearly killed him. "Come... why don't we get something to eat before we begin to fulfill Aviel's requests."

Ladur snorted loudly then. "Now that is the best idea I have heard all day!" He declared happily.

This caused Laren to burst out in musical laughter which was quickly followed from her parents and the others as they began to move out of the courtyard area and deeper into the facility.

KIS INTERROGATION ROOMS

His head throbbed terribly and he had trouble opening his eyes. He tried to flex his fingers but something kept him from moving his hands. His arms were stretched behind him in an unnatural manner around an object and he could feel the bindings. He moved his head slowly not wanting to draw attention to himself but surprised at how difficult this action was and he groaned softly.

“The grogginess will wear off shortly. The discomfort of your position I’m afraid will remain.” The female voice spoke from the darkness. “Open your eyes please.”

He once more willed his eyes to open and he was able to blink several times now, the harshness of the light almost painful. He could see shadows around him and in front of him. He was sitting in a chair of some sort, a table directly in front of him. He shook his head several times ignoring the painful throbbing this caused.

“What... what is going on?” He stammered. “Where am I? Who...”

Marci leaned forward across the table and slapped Lerkim Banak viciously across his face. The stinging pop echoed in the room as she sat back down, but it served its purpose as his head rocked back and his eyes sprang open wide in reaction to the blow and fresh pain.

“Do I have your attention now?” Marci asked him calmly. “You may cease with the false impression of still being drugged Lerkim Banak... the toxin we used on you does not leave after effects like you are trying to simulate.”

Banak lifted his head fully; his eyes open and clear now. “What is the meaning of this?” He barked. “Who are you? What is this all about! I demand you release me!” His vampiric hearing could detect four heartbeats within the room, and his eyes moved to the sides. He saw the second female standing just to the side of the one sitting at the table and he saw the shadow of a tall male and shorter female against the wall. He could not make out any features of the male or female, blending into the shadows as they did and his head turned back to Marci. “I demand to know...”

Marci nodded her head and Red One, the waitress from the café, blurred in motion and the next slap once more echoed in the room. Banak’s head rocked back from the force of the blow, this time his vampiric fangs extending in anger and cutting his bottom lip. She was a powerful female and Banak berated himself for not realizing she was an enemy. Her beauty and red hair had clouded his keen mind.

“That’s for touching me you pig!” The young woman spat at him as she assumed her position by Marci once more.

“What is this?” Lerkim barked. “Why am I here? Who are you?”

Marci looked at him from across the table. “My name is Marci Naius.” She told him seeing the recognition in his eyes. “Wife to Durcunusaan Colonel Regri Naius. I am also the Director of Krypteria Internal Security. But you already know all that don’t you?” Marci looked at him. “Do I have your attention now?”

“I have done nothing wrong!” Banak snapped. “I have rights! You cannot do this to me. I demand you release me.”

Marci chuckled. “Oh... I don’t think so.” She stated as she set the holomager on the table and activated it.

Banak’s eyes grew wide when his message to Sheva Juconi began to play. His heart began to race and sweat began to roll down his brow before the message had gotten halfway. Marci reached out and turned it off before the halfway point and she looked across the table at him.

“Are you beginning to see your predicament Lerkim Banak?” Marci asked.

“I am an Intelligence Officer of the High Coven!” He hissed. “I demand representation by officials of my government! I...”

“You are a spy.” Marci spoke calmly. “Working for Robert Moran, a former Admiral of the High Coven. You are not a member of Empress Narice’s forces in any way shape or form. In fact you work for an enemy of the High Coven in Robert Moran. A renegade who hides and plots against the rightful government of the High Coven. That makes you a terrorist. Do you know what the Union does to terrorists Mister Banak?”

“You can not do this!” Banak shouted. “I know the laws of the Union! I must be held for trial! I have a right to an Advocate! I...”

Banak’s eyes went wide when Marci ripped the table from in front of her and sent it flying across the room to smash against the wall. She was upon him in an instant, her face a mask of genuine anger and hate.

“You have a right to nothing!” She screamed at him. “You are a terrorist pig! A scum! Working for a piece of filth of a man in Robert Moran! You come into my Union! Among my people and friends and you plot to kill them!”

“I... I have done no such thing!” Banak barked. “And you are a bitch traitor to your own species!”

“A bitch traitor?” Marci laughed at him. “Can you come up with nothing more original than that?” She turned and moved to where the table was, righting it and dragging it back in front of him where she moved her chair back and sat down. “I was born in the Union you piece of sibfla. My parents left the High Coven because men and women like you were destroying it from within and they wanted a better life. I blessed the gods the day my Lycavorian husband claimed me and made me his and I blessed the day that Empress Narice claimed her title and took control of the High Coven. That stupid wench Aikiro was watching it crumble around her and doing nothing.” Marci looked at him. “If that makes me a traitor then I will gladly wear that title Mister Banak. Unlike you... my life has purpose. And that purpose is to protect what I love and cherish. Now tell me... how many agents do you control?”

“I will tell you nothing!” Banak shouted. “You can not do this! It is against Union law! I know the law! I have a right to an Advocate!”

Marci smiled. “Apparently not as much as you like to think you do.” She stated. “You are a terrorist Lerkim Banak. You act on the behalf of a known criminal and wanted man. You have no rights here.” Marci looked at him intently. “You have two choices. You can tell me what I want to know willingly...” Marci held out her hand and Red One placed the hypo syringe into her palm. Marci then placed the needle on the table in full view of Banak. “Or I will take the information and all that will be left of you will be a babbling fool with drool leaking from between your foul lips.”

Banak stared at her in horror. “I know nothing!” He shouted. “Why don’t you ask her? Sheva Juconi is the one you want! She is the traitor! She...”

Marci shook her head and pursed her lips. “Now that is something you should not have said.” She stated as she turned her head.

Banak followed her gaze and his eyes grew even wider when the shadows along the wall stepped into the light and he was looking at Androcles Leonidas and his Drow mate Lu'ria. He knew full well who the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union was and he had no time to react or prepare as Andro charged across the small space between them and his hand clamped across Banak’s throat. He tore him from the chair, shattering both his shoulders as his arms bent at an impossible angle and the bindings snapped. Banak screamed as Andro carried him by the throat several meters to the wall where he slammed him viciously against the unforgiving steel and concrete. He looked through pain filled eyes at the snarling, savage face of the Crown Prince of the Union, his dual wolf fangs fully extended and his azure colored eyes fully changed.

“Sheva Juconi is my brother’s wife and mate you vile piece of shit!” Andro screamed at him. “She is a Princess of the Union! And it is she who gave us you!” Banak looked at Andro in shock and he saw him smile a savage smile. “You did not know that did you fool! You did not know that Sheva fell in love with my brother Dorian the moment he joined us in this life. She has not reported to you in months because she ceased to believe your lies to her long ago. She saw them for what they were when her eyes were opened.” Andro leaned close to Banak’s face, his skin beginning to turn red as he could not fight for the air Andro was squeezing from his lungs, both his arms hanging useless at his sides.

“Know this little man.” Andro snarled. “My brothers and I made a vow to one another. It is a vow I intend to keep. You have threatened his beloved wife and mate with your actions and your vile comments. I will take from your feeble mind all I want to know. I will find Moran and Dante and I will end them. And no one will ever know you existed.”

Andro dropped Banak gagging onto the floor, his arms useless and unable to break his fall. He stepped back as Marci moved up next to him. “Stick him Marci.” He ordered. “Dredge every iota of information from his perverted mind that you can. Everything.”

Marci nodded and motioned with her hand to Red One. “And then?” She asked though she already knew the answer.

“Then give his remains to the animals that roam the southern forests.” Andro spat. “He does not deserve anything else.”

Marci nodded. “Consider it done.” She spoke.

Andro looked at her. “The Watchers?”

Marci shook her head. “An older couple that owns a small eatery in the Dkhov district to the north. They were here trying to get ideas on how to better expand their business. The other is a student from the University.” She replied. “They are not involved.”

“I wish to apologize to them myself.” Andro said.

“I figured as much.” She said. “I have them in the waiting area of the terminal.”

“Everything Marci my friend.” Andro told her. “I want names. Places. Anyone involved with this piece of filth I want picked up and questioned. This needs to end now Marci. Moran and Dante need to pay for their crimes against my sister and our Union. They need to be found before they can do damage to Narice and what she is trying to do. Before they could cause harm to Arrarn and her. I want them found so that I can take my father’s vengeance on them and bury their remains on the wasted plains of Ukwav.”

Marci reached up and took his arm and squeezed it. “I will get it done Andro.” She told him softly.

Andro nodded his head and leaned over to kiss her cheek softly. “Lu'ria and I will be on the estate once I pay my respects to those we offended. Contact me as soon as you have something.”

Marci nodded her head. “Expect something by mid morning. The drug will take a few hours to really work but I will wring him for everything.”

Andro nodded and turned, holding out his hand for Lu'ria who came up to him without question. “Then I will be waiting.”

Marci watched as he exited the room and then she turned back to look at Banak on the floor. He was conscious and looking up at her. She squatted down in front of him and shook her head. “The one man in the entire universe that could have made your death quick and painless and you had to go and piss him off.” She said with a smile. “It sucks to be you.” She got back to her feet and looked at Red One. “Tell them we are coming. And stick this fool before I vomit from his smell.”

SLEKON CLUSTER

ARTAAYA

DRAGON HALL LIBRARY

Nekins deftly moved his body through the corridor, his eyes gazing upon volume after volume of history in the thousands of scrolls and data pads that were filed in perfect order. Of all the Elders on the Artaaya Council he was the only one allowed into this sacred place as the recognized Keeper of Knowledge. Not even Teniri, as the Elder Mother, was allowed to pass the three dragon Guardians at the entrance. She could if she truly wanted too, but she honored their traditions and culture above all else. Of them all, only Nekins knew that what was in here needed to be protected at all cost. He had been among those of his kind that had come to Artaaya with the Pralor people and after discovering the information within these walls, he knew what could very well happen if it was discovered before others were ready. If the secret knowledge within these walls, some of it millions of years old, was ever to get out it could very well change the face of relations with the Pralor people as well as the dragons they now called friend. In all the time since their flight from the Scourge only his predecessor, a few dozen well chosen Pralors and himself had ever set foot within these halls. Only they knew the source of the vast wisdom and knowledge that occupied these rooms and these shelves and how it had arrived with Teniri and the others.

Yet now, after what Delnash had spoken of, a large part of Nekins felt that was going to change. The Pralor men and women who worked in the Library were all volunteers and most of them had many millennia of life behind them and were devoted scholars of some kind. It took only one visit to the Ancient One in order for them to agree to work among these scrolls and files and never reveal their contents. Nekins watched as one of the senior Pralors approached him as he entered and he lowered his body to the floor and bowed his head to the man as he did the same.

“Elder Nekins... a pleasure as always.” The man spoke with genuine warmth.

“Greetings Conlar my friend.” Nekins spoke evenly his deep voice carried outward with strength and confidence. “Is the Ancient One available?”

It had taken Nekins nearly three hundred years to learn to use the muscles in his neck to manipulate the vocal cords that all of his kind had but did not yet realize it. Kasdan's wondrous invention had granted the ability to speak openly to many of Dragonkind, albeit with a rather mechanical sounding tone. He however had begun to learn the moment he became Keeper and this was one of the secrets that had not yet been discovered by Dragonkind as a whole.

Conlar nodded his head. "She is in the West Study." He answered. "She seems distracted today Nekins. Do you know why?"

Nekins nodded his massive head. "I believe I may have an idea Conlar. Walk with me and we will speak with her together. It is something that you should know in any regard."

Conlar smiled as Nekins lifted off the floor and he fell in beside the Pralor as they walked. "Why do I feel like what you have to say is going to make things far more exciting around here?"

Nekins chuckled softly. "It just might my friend. It just might."

It did not take them long to circumvent the spacious corridors and halls and soon they passed through the massive wooden double doors into the West Study. Nekins spotted her petite form immediately, silhouetted against the sunlight streaming in from the window above. She was no more than five feet tall and barely one hundred pounds but she trembled with the power of wisdom and knowledge. She had spent the better portion of the last forty thousand years transcribing the wisdom within her mind onto the scrolls and data pads all around them, ever since she had arrived with Teniri and the others. She had never set foot outside of these walls, content to wander the many hallways and corridors passing on her knowledge to the dozens of Interns who now cared for the knowledge. She turned slowly as they approached and her hands came up to pull back the cowl that was draped over her head.

Nekins settled to the floor in front of her as her features were revealed to him once more. Vibrant, soft and healthy Vermillion red scales lined her features, blending with the yellowish hue of normal skin in the center of her face around her lips and eyes. Her soft scales covered the backs of her hands and extended up her arms, while the palms of her hands were a combination of the soft yellowish color of her face with a hint of red to them. Her bright emerald green eyes contrasted amazingly with her skin, and in those eyes he saw wisdom far beyond anything he would ever achieve.

Nekins bowed his huge head to her in reverence. "Ancient One." He spoke softly.

"Nekins... after all these years you still will not address me by my given name when you greet me." She spoke. "Why is that?"

Nekins lifted his eyes and looked at her. "I do not feel it is appropriate... Sarlana." He answered.

He watched as she moved her tiny form gracefully to stand in front of him. She reached up and placed her hand to his snout with a gentle smile. "It is always appropriate Nekins my friend. Always."

"You honor me." Nekins told her.

"Bah!" She said with a dismissive wave of her hand. "Over thirty thousand years we have worked together Nekins. Since even before you became Keeper. There should be no formality between us." She told him. "Now tell me... why have you come here today?"

"We finished our meeting with Delnash just recently Sarlana." Nekins explained. "He said some things that I swear I have read before. From the scrolls within these walls."

"Truly?" Sarlana asked with the hint of a smile. "Perhaps I have been sending him secret messages?"

Conlar chuckled now and shook his head. "Somehow I cannot picture you sending secret messages to Delnash Sarlana."

Sarlana laughed and shook her head. "No I suppose not." She stated. "He is a good man and he is returning to the roots that made him a good man. Your people see that more and more every day Conlar and they embrace him because of it." She said as she turned and moved to the small bench where she settled her petite frame.

"Then you do not believe Lorendo can defeat him?" Conlar asked.

"Lorendo is a fool in a man's body." She stated. "And a fat fool at that. Without deceit or treachery he has no hope of winning an open and fair election against Delnash. And that is what you must guard against."

"Teniri has told him the same thing." Nekins said. "We believe he has taken this advice to heart. He is a different man since returning. Like his eyes were opened."

Sarlana nodded. "How could they not be open?" She exclaimed animatedly. "What he never believed could happen almost killed him. Meeting this Martin Leonidas in the manner he did, I imagine it was quite the shock."

Nekins nodded his huge head. "Teniri did say he made quite the impression."

Sarlana laughed now. "Swatting our Vrrarhoinpa warriors from the sky as he did and then nearly turning that fat Lorendo to goo. If only I could have seen the looks on their faces. To realize that the one thing they feared most of all had come true and the power and abilities of the vaunted Praetorians had been passed to a species they considered beneath them. And from what I understand, the power and abilities without the arrogance." Sarlana smiled. "And all of this done by the very first of the Praetorians. Sumar... the most powerful of them all."

"Murano was very happy I understand." Conlar said looking at Nekins.

Nekins nodded his head. "To think for so long that you are the last of your kind and then to discover that you are not... yes... Teniri said he was quite giddy."

Sarlana nodded. "Good. That man has suffered enough." She said softly. "Believing he was the last, that he had somehow failed his comrades and his people. To dismiss the one true love of his life in order to go into seclusion for crimes he never committed. It is good to see him come finally out of his shell. He carried too much blame on his shoulders. Blame that was not his to carry. Now perhaps he will finally be able to see the results of his love."

Nekins looked at her. "That is in part what I wished to discuss with you." He told her. "Delnash spoke of these Lycavorian Praetorians. Two in particular. Martin Leonidas' sons. His oldest Androcles, and now the youngest, Dorian I believe his name is. All of them descended from Sumar."

"What is it that you found odd?" Conlar asked.

"This Androcles and his Vrrarhoinpa Elynth, they are Vrelvel Sargti. Just as his father Martin and his Vrrarhoinpa Torma are." Nekins told her. "They were given this honor by the Elder Mother Arzoal for something that they did years ago in defense of all Darastrixi."

Sarlana nodded. "I have heard the whispers among the Vrrarhoinpa about this since their return. Some of it not very complimentary." She said.

Nekins chuckled now and nodded. "Yes... no doubt from those that Martin Leonidas and Torma swatted from the sky with ease." He told her. "Some of our Vrrarhoinpa warriors are arrogant and brash. Not a bad thing as a whole, but egos were bruised... no question."

Sarlana looked at him. "What does this have to do with what Delnash told the Council?" She asked.

"Teniri does not know the full story or the why of it and she said Arzoal was very vague when Teniri asked her about it. Almost as if Arzoal was frightened in some manner of them." Nekins told her.

Sarlana tilted her head slightly. "Arzoal frightened?" She said thoughtfully. "I remember that day on Elear when I blessed her becoming Elder Mother. Pralor she may have been, but she embraced the Darastrixi from the moment she awoke as one of us. She has done far more than I ever believed she could, holding them together amidst so much chaos and death, in many ways by force of her will alone. Frightened is not a word I would use to describe her Nekins."

Nekins bowed his head slightly recognition of her words. "I did not have the opportunity as you and Teniri to know her Sarlana. I am only conveying to you what Teniri told me."

Sarlana lifted her head and looked out of the skylight above. "Sometimes I forget that we come from two different Seed Missions my friend." She said softly. "Those Darastrixi on Elear are from a different mission than you and those who arrived here on Artaaya with Delnash and his people. I was among those on Elear and returned with Teniri in the first wave that Arzoal sent from Elear. I knew of her for many years before she sent us away."

"She would not remember you?" Conlar asked.

Sarlana shook her head slowly. "My blessing on the day she became Elder Mother came from afar. Those with us on Elear had adhered to the ancient Darastrixi ways of keeping the Doraanar away from the common Darastrixi. The Urkrisa Mamiss, in all their infinite and often times ridiculous wisdom, wanted the Doraanar to be viewed as something special when we were not. Having knowledge is not a bad thing and only when this knowledge is passed on to others do we succeed."

"You changed this when you came here though." Nekins said.

Sarlana nodded her head. “Not as much as I would have liked mind you, but yes. Your Seed Mission had no Doraanar and I made the decision to not be shut away as I was before. I chose your predecessor Nekins, as well as Conlar and the others, so that I could then pass the wisdom I carry to others. It has not turned out as well as I would have liked, but the Scourge threat has made me see things differently.”

“We offer wisdom whenever it is asked for, but the fewer of us that know Sarlana exists the better.” Conlar spoke. “At least for the immediate future.”

Sarlana laughed softly. “I understand they all believe I am a male.” She said with some humor. “Imagine their surprise when they discover the truth one day. Conlar is correct however and for now I must remain aloof. Though it irks me so.”

“Then why remain hidden even now?” Nekins asked.

“Just before the end of the Second War with the Scourge...” Sarlana told Nekins. “The Darastrixi Urlkrisa Mamiss entered into a pact with the Scourge in order to protect us. Or so they thought. There were millions of Pralors who were on our homeworld of Icarava, studying and working side by side with us. We had forged deep friendships with the Pralor people. We were then forced to turn them over to the Scourge in order to keep the Darastrixi out of the war. This did not sit well with a good portion of our kind, but we had never challenged the will of the Urlkrisa Mamiss before. And we did not then. Another part of the agreement was that all Doraanar were to be turned over to the Scourge as well.”

“Why?” Nekins asked.

“Knowledge is power Nekins my friend.” Sarlana told him. “The Doraanar possessed knowledge that the Scourge wanted. Or that they feared. No one really knows what those vile creatures think from day to day. Who would want to? Most of the Doraanar surrendered to their fate willingly because the Urlkrisa Mamiss bid them too. Some did not. Those that did not died horrible deaths. And we did nothing.”

“But... you are here Sarlana.” Nekins said.

Sarlana nodded with a gentle smile. “I was the only Doraanar to ever accompany a Seed Mission.” She answered. “The first and the last. There were reasons behind this of course. I did not adhere strictly to the path that Doraanar were supposed to follow. This made me enemies among those in power. By removing me from our homeworld I would not be there to influence others and cause the Urlkrisa Mamiss difficulty they did not want. Or begin to make others see that the status quo is not always correct.” She smiled brightly. “I did not mind really. To be able to see new places and be out among the stars had always been a desire of mine. So I went with the Seed Mission to Elear. You know my story after that Nekins. Everything that occurred that brought us here together with the Darastrixi that had come with Delnash and his people.”

Nekins nodded his huge head. “A story that is now spoken among the hatchlings with awe.” He said.

“But then how do you know what took place after you left?” Conlar asked. “If dates from the Science Institute are correct, Teniri’s...” Conlar tilted his head slightly. “The Seed Mission that Arzoal became part of left your homeworld many thousands of years before the war ended and we were chased from our territory.”

Sarlana nodded. “Just because I was on a Seed Mission did not mean I lacked the ability to communicate with the Elbakiw Sulevfu. I sent them reports when it suited me. Several friends told me in one of their last transmissions what took place.”

Conlar was thoughtful for a long time and then he looked at her. “You... you remained silent Sarlana and you... you may have saved my people from themselves.”

“Bah! I did nothing. If not for what Arzoal did on Elear, after she became Darastrixi, I might not be here. She and Teniri deserve the credit for us being here. They are the ones who held everything together when it appeared it was so close to falling apart.” Sarlana exclaimed again as she got to her feet now and moved to one of the large potted tree plants that occupied the corners of the room. “So tell me... what is it about these Vrelvel Sargti that Arzoal honored. You know... no non-Darastrixi has ever held the title of Vrelvel Sargti. They must be very special if Arzoal blessed them with such an honor. What is it that makes Teniri think Arzoal is holding something back?”

“It has more to do Martin Leonidas’ sons Sarlana.” Nekins told her. “Androcles... and now the youngest Dorian as I said. Delnash told us that when he spoke with Wayonn, it was he who told him that Androcles was one of the Vrelvel Sargti, but also that he was born fully aware. That he was fully conscious even when inside his mother’s womb and he used his Vrrarhoinpa Elynth, who was only weeks old at the time herself, he bonded with and used her as his conduit to the outside world.”

Sarlana was reaching for one branch of the small potted tree when Nekins began to talk and her hands froze in mid motion as he spoke. Her eyes came up and she looked at the sunlight pulsing in from the skylight as Nekins continued.

“It is my understanding that the youngest son Dorian, this is also how he was recently born.” Nekins continued. “His mother was afflicted with some sort of medical condition limited to her species but the Hadarian Queen Anja, she discovered a way to save them both. It involved him being given an accelerated growth hormone while in her womb in order to help him survive, but before he was born he had bonded with his Vrrarhoinpa as well. He too had full consciousness before leaving his mother’s womb.”

“We have always known that the Hadarian people were almost magical when it came to their capacity for the healing arts and the knowledge held within them.” Conlar offered up. “In many ways they surpass even Pralor doctors and physicians. The mutative nature of the nebula around their world seems to only work on them however. I understand that the Hadarian Queen discovered a working cure to the Svorag virus?”

Nekins nodded. “Queen Anja and another Hadarian that she is close friends with. One that they and Radra could have used to save many of your people.” He said. “Instead Lorendo initiated security protocols that ended up killing them.”

“Fascinating.” Conlar said with a shake of his head. “And so very sad.”

Nekins lifted his head and looked at Sarlana’s back. She had remained silent during his and Conlar’s exchange. “I am almost positive that I have read something about this within these very walls Sarlana, but I cannot remember exactly where or even if I am imagining I did. It just... it all sounds so familiar to me.”

“The Lorsvek ar Sepas.” Sarlana gasped softly, her voice barely carrying to Nekins and Conlar.

Conlar stepped forward. “Sarlana... we did not hear you. Is everything alright?”

Sarlana turned slowly and looked at Nekins. “What... what else did Delnash say Nekins.” She asked softly.

“I questioned him briefly before we parted ways but according to Delnash he did not have much time with Wayonn. Wayonn did tell him that this Androcles is perhaps even more powerful than his father in some ways within the Etheric realm, even though they are both Vrelvel Sargti and unmatched in ability. And his Vrrarhoinpa Elynth has already fully matured and is considered one of the most powerful of our kind among those that followed Arzoal. She is in fact Arzoal’s own autniral. She is barely thirty years old Sarlana and she is more than a match for any dragon twenty times her age. I did not think that was possible. Teniri showed us what Martin Leonidas did on that planet Sarlana and it was terrifying to behold. As Vrelvel Sargti he and his Vrrarhoinpa Torma tossed our warriors from the sky like they were children. If it is true that his son and his Vrrarhoinpa Elynth are even more powerful...” (Granddaughter)

Sarlana looked at him. “And the other son?” She asked. “This Dorian...?”

Nekins shook his head. “Delnash did not know much, only that he was maturing much faster than they thought and he and his brother Androcles were tied very closely together. He wields the Praetorian power within him, and under his brother’s tutelage he is fast becoming just as strong as him. There is not much else I can relay to you as Delnash did not have much time with Wayonn and he did not know much about this Dorian. I in turn did not have much time with Delnash and did not want to press him for fear of raising his suspicions.”

“Delnash was certain of what he was told?” Sarlana asked.

Nekins nodded. “You know Delnash as well as I Sarlana. He would not speak of or tell us something like this unless he thought it meant something. He is very intuitive and he has a keen mind.”

Conlar stepped closer. “What is it Sarlana?” He asked her. “You whispered words just now that we could not understand. And you look as if you have seen a ghost of some sort. What has Nekins told you that causes you to react in such a way?”

Sarlana looked at Nekins. “Where... where is Arzoal now Nekins?” She asked.

“She... she still travels with the Lycavorian King. She is bonded to the King’s Praetorian Mage.” Nekins answered. “They discovered some two hundred eggs in their recent travels and she and her bonded sister are helping to guide and teach them.”

“Do we know where they are?” Sarlana asked.

Nekins nodded once more. “They have established a Base Camp of sorts on the planet Manne from what I understand. Delnash did not go into great detail about what they were doing there.” He answered. “Why?”

Sarlana looked at Conlar. “Conlar... how soon before you can secure a ship for our use?” She asked.

Conlar looked at her with wide eyes. “A ship?” He gasped. “I don’t... Sarlana you have not left Artaaya in nearly forty thousand years! What... what is this all about?”

“I... we need to speak directly to Arzoal.” Sarlana told them. “Teniri must be present as well. We must discover all we can about this Androcles and Dorian Leonidas. And their bonded Vrrarhoinpa.”

“Why?” Nekins asked her. “Sarlana... you risk exposing yourself to...”

Sarlana shook her head. “It does not matter any longer!” She spoke quickly. “If... if this Androcles and Dorian Leonidas are what I think they are then there could only be one thing happening.”

“What thing?” Conlar asked. “What do you speak of?”

Sarlana looked at them. “The oldest and single most revered legend among the Darastrixi people.” She spoke gently.

Conlar moved closer. “I don’t understand.” He said softly. “What does a Darastrixi legend have to do with two Lycavorians with Praetorian blood?”

Sarlana met his eyes. “Wer Geou ar wer Zezhuanth. The Will of the Ancient.” She told him. “His name has long been forgotten and he is referred to as simply Wer Zezhuanth now. I remember seeing images of his likeness in the Livaiji Sulevfu. He was very imposing. So very powerful. It is he who is the main cornerstone of our people. Our culture and laws! Of our entire species! Many of the stories have been lost through the ages, but it is written in many scrolls that he could do wondrous things. Amazing things. That his Etheric power was unmatched.”

“Like the Praetorians?” Conlar asked.

Sarlana nodded her head. “In many ways yes.” She answered. “So much has been lost in the ages since he walked among us. Even then the Scourge were the bane of existence across the stars. Many scrolls speak of great battles where Wer Zezhuanth defeated them at every turn through the centuries. He even predicted the coming of the Praetorians among the Pralor people Conlar.” Sarlana took a deep breath and sat back down on the bench.

“Among the countless within the stars there will be but a small few who will stand and be victorious against the darkness. They will stand unafraid and be victorious for many centuries. They will wield the power of righteousness and in them the light of justice and peace will shine through until, eventually, they too are overwhelmed.”

Sarlana looked at him. “I don’t remember the exact lines, but it was very similar to that.” She told him. “When he finally passed on into the next life he left our people Eight Scrolls. The prediction about your Praetorians was within Scroll Five of the Eight Scrolls detailing his life and his history. And explaining exactly what he intended.”

Conlar looked confused and glanced at Nekins who he saw was just as puzzled. “I’m not following. What he intended?”

Sarlana nodded her head slowly. “Just as your people believe those who pass on merge with the Rift of Time, the Darastrixi believe that our souls can be given to another. Passed on to live forever within them through the generations. Our knowledge and in some cases even our power.” She explained to him carefully and calmly. “It sounds silly I know but the Third Scroll; the Lorsvek ar Sepas begins in the Third Scroll. Wer Zezhuanth details how he will choose six souls from among all the infinite life in the universe. To each of these six he will bestow a piece of his eternal soul. Each of the six will be aware of everything around them when granted the divine gift of life. They will be drawn across the stars to each other no matter the distance. Able to feel each other within themselves. Each of them will carry the blood of a Dahakoan within them. A Dragonkin. The Ancient Warriors that Wer Zezhuanth led into battle. Each of them with a piece of Wer Zezhuanth’s sepas... the sepas of a Darastrixi no matter their kind. They will be Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir. And they will stand against the darkness once more.” Sarlana looked at Conlar.

“That is a very rough translation mind you. I do not remember the exact words.” She looked at Nekins. “What you remember seeing Nekins are the bits and pieces of the Scrolls of Wer Zezhuanth that have been transcribed into other Scrolls and history files within these walls. Many of our cultural values stem from his Scrolls.”

“That still does not explain why we need to leave?” Conlar said. “And why you would be willing to risk yourself after all these millennia now. Over a legend that is millions of years old. A myth really.”

Sarlana looked at him and rose to her feet once more. “It is not a myth!” She hissed at him softly. “Don’t you see?” She spoke with passion in her voice. “I am over four hundred thousand years old Conlar and never once in all that time... not once have I ever heard of a child being born among any of the species that populate our universe, who was fully aware of everything around them before they left their mother’s womb. One such child, if they existed, that could be an anomaly... but two? And born within three generations of each other.” She moved to the wall and gazed at the rows of data scrolls shaking her head. “There is something else...” She said softly. “If the Lorsvek ar Sepas... if it is truly happening now... then these brothers and their Vrrarhoipna are only four of the six. If this is true then there will be two others out there among the stars... and they will feel them. They will be drawn to them from across the vastness of space.” She turned to look at Conlar and Nekins. “And if... if the Lorsvek ar Sepas is coming true it could only mean one thing.”

Nekins eyes grew a little wider and he rose to his legs. “They will stand against the darkness once more.” He rasped out the words.

Sarlana nodded her head. “A legend or myth it may be Conlar, but if it is truly happening right now, then it can only mean that the Scourge are up to something. And none of what that vile species does is ever good. They are the epitome of darkness and evil. The personification of all that is malevolent. They have only grown more cunning and vicious after what that fool Praetorian Xaxon did.”

“But why Arzoal?” Conlar asked.

“As Elder Mother she will have knowledge of this Androcles and Dorian that others do not.” Sarlana answered. “She will sense things within them which will help me to answer my questions.”

“Teniri said she would not reveal much to her.” Nekins spoke.

Sarlana nodded. “Arzoal will tell me.” She said. “And if she tells me what I believe she will, then I must go to them. I need to see them for myself.”

“Why?” Conlar asked.

Sarlana looked at him. “All I will need is one look into their kornari to know what they are. If they are part of the Lorsvek ar Sepas then they will feel the last two within them as I said. I will be able to see it within them.”

“And if they are this... part of this Lorsvek ar Sepas?” Conlar asked.

“Then we will need to begin to make plans.” Sarlana spoke. “If the Lorsvek ar Sepas is truly happening... then we must do everything within our power to facilitate it happening. No matter the cost.”

HIGH COVEN SPACE

RIKVOS COLONY

XUKUTH ZOTRETH (HEART STRIKE) FACILITY

The covert insertion had gone off without a single hitch and now Normya and Tir'ut were standing by in their STRIKER only three clicks away. Dorian rested on the soft ground, the cool morning dew just beginning to form on the grass. Sheva lay beside him as they scanned the northeast portion of the Xukuth Zotreth colony. It looked as any colony world would he guessed easily, with homes and a central shopping and gathering area. Most of the homes were along the outer portion of the facility and looked to be in excellent condition. Given the status many of these people held within the High Coven at one point, Dorian figured they would be living in style. He lowered his macrobinos and turned his head to gaze at Sheva.

Her scent of berries and apples, so sweet to him, wafted to his nostrils and he inhaled deeply. She looked very hot in her combat Mark V Body Armor as he had told her on the ship, using a word he had picked up from Eliani, while they were approaching the planet. That had earned him a playful punch in the gut from his Blessed Wife and then a very enticing kiss. Sheva was coming out of her shell more and more each day now. With the knowledge that she was his wife, a Leonidas, many of the fears she had once held were slowly drifting away. She had not known just how deeply Androcles cared for his siblings until that night in his quarters. He trusted them without question and he would do anything for them Dorian knew. Or those they called wife and mate.

Just as he himself now would for any of his brothers and sisters. Whatever or whoever it was that was speaking to him and Andro within their dreams, they would discover it together he knew.

Dorian Leonidas did not question the how or the why he had entered this life as he had. He possessed the knowledge and skills that had been learned across millennia and they were now his. As a Praetorian, within himself, he could feel his father and Andro. He could feel Jomann and Deion and Nara and even Denali and Dutkne as far away as they were. Dorian was attuned to his Etheric abilities just as they were. He did not question why he and Ryner had bonded while he was within his mother's womb. How could he question something that felt so natural and right. Even before he and Ryner began to learn from Andro and Elynth they could do things no one else could. The weeks and months learning from Andro all he could had made him ready to challenge almost anything. Dorian had faced this very thing on Solmar and had emerged unscathed. He was proud of how he conducted himself on Solmar, but he did not let this grow into arrogance. Andro had told him arrogance was death, and Dorian wanted to spend many more years discovering his new wife before death claimed him.

Three hundred plus years his senior and in his arms Sheva was a giddy schoolgirl. The moment she had surrendered to her growing feelings for him and taken his blood during their love making Dorian knew she was his forever. In his eyes she was the personification of beauty. She was strong and fast and while very petite, her body was chiseled and muscular. He was also discovering just how uninhibited she was in their bed and this had led to many nights of intense and sleepless hours. She could be playful or serious, but she loved him without question. Every time he took her blood, she clutched at his head tightly, whispering professions of undying love into his ears. Like his father loved all his mothers, Dorian would love his Blessed Wife with all that he was. He watched as she lowered her own macrobinos.

"I don't see any security walking the perimeter or..." Sheva began talking as she turned to face him. She saw the look in his gorgeous multicolored eyes and tried her very best to look disinterested. She failed miserably she knew, for looking into his beautiful eyes always excited her. "Are you undressing me with your eyes Dorian Leonidas?" She finally asked him.

Dorian smiled. "Now that would be very unprofessional of me Sheva Leonidas." He said in reply. "Especially given our current situation."

Sheva couldn't help but smile and shake her head at his laconic nature. He did not seem fazed in the least that they were on a hostile planet and if they were caught they most certainly would be killed. Her smile faded slowly as she thought of everything she had gained since she allowed her feelings for him to come to the surface. She leaned over quickly and kissed him softly.

"Thank you Dorian my love." She whispered to him. "For everything. But especially for my future."

Dorian smiled. "Our future." He said softly.

They both turned their heads when Onera unwrapped the shadows from around her body and settled to the ground between them, squeezing herself into the spot that was not really there. Neither Dorian or Sheva seemed to mind and made room for her without thought. Though they didn't know it at the moment, they would recognize it in the future for what it was. Her coconut scent was very appealing to Dorian's wolf nose and to both of them her sweet blood smelled delicious. They didn't know it now, but they it would come to them, and then the circle of three families would be complete and unbreakable.

As destiny had always intended.

"There are two guards on the second floor of the adjoining building." She spoke softly. "We spotted them as they crossed in front of a lit window. It appears to be some sort of shop. Your brother Deion signaled that he saw two others on the bottom floor. He and your sister Nara are on the west corner of the building. Why did he not use Mindvoice?"

Sheva looked at Dorian and then at Onera. "Operational protocol." She answered. "There may be someone among the people here, however unlikely, who is strong enough to at least detect the tremors created by Dorian or Deion if they use Mindvoice."

"Regardless of our skills we do not want our presence known." Dorian told her. "At least not until after we have moved."

Onera looked between them, finding both Sheva's green eyes and Dorian's different colored eyes to be quite enthralling to look at. "The rest of our team is in place." She said finally turning back to look forward.

Dorian looked skyward and sniffed the air. "Another ninety minutes until sunrise." He said detecting the scent of the blossoming flowers beginning to spread as the plants began to react to the growing temperature of the coming dawn.

Onera couldn't help but look at him. "You... you can tell that by the smell?" She asked in disbelief.

Dorian met her eyes. "No. I checked the weather before we left your ship." He told her. "Sunrise is at zero six twenty-two. That is ninety minutes from now. Be right back." He hissed as he rolled to his side and allowed the shadows to claim him.

Sheva saw the supple skin around the bones spurs that lined her jaw tense and with a smile she nudged Onera in the shoulder. Onera's dark eyes turned quickly to look at her and Sheva saw the anger in them. "He is not mocking you Onera." She said knowing that is what Onera was thinking. Her dark eyes were bright and alive and exceptionally beautiful framed in her face as they were, especially when they softened as she spoke to her. "He would not do that. He was trying to put you at ease. Me as well. It was a small joke to help us relax."

Onera met her gaze. "He is not anxious? Worried that something could go wrong? We are within enemy territory after all." Onera asked in surprise.

Sheva looked up and saw Dorian unwrap the shadows from around him when he was beside the senior Durcunusaan troop who had accompanied them. The man, a grizzled older vet Sheva knew, did not flinch when his Prince materialized in front of him.

"Anxious perhaps." Sheva answered. "Worried?" Sheva shook her head. "No. He is not worried. He trusts us. All of us. And he trusts in his own abilities."

Onera gazed at her. "You are... you are easily over three hundred years older than him." She said. "What... forgive me for asking... but this is not common among vampires. I know that. What..."

Sheva saw Dorian wrap the shadows around himself again. "Ask me when we are gone from here." She said looking at her. Sheva smiled at her and actually surprised herself when she said the next words. "You can ask me anything you like."

Onera opened her mouth to respond, her own eyes wide, but Dorian reappeared beside her on the ground. Onera and Sheva both turned to look at him. "Artel concurs with me." He said.

"About what?" Sheva asked.

"Two guards would be natural. Not four." Dorian answered. "They know something is up. It might just be from everything going on within the High Coven, but it also might be because they know we are coming. Either way... we go now."

"Dori..." Sheva began to ask.

"We'll be fine." Dorian told her quickly sensing her sudden trepidation. "Deion and Nara will take out the two on the second floor if needed. Artel will handle the two on the bottom floor of the building." He explained to them. "We blur to the house and enter through the back door there. You keep your parents calm and quiet while Onera and I secure the house and then Normya and Tir'ut bring the STRIKER in for extraction. Simple."

"That is..." Onera began to speak.

"Ready?" Dorian asked just before wrapping the shadows around him once again.

"Shit!" Sheva exclaimed as she wrapped the shadows around herself and followed her beloved husband.

"Papa would never approve." Onera muttered to herself just before she did the same thing and followed them.

Saba Juconi made her way down the stairs of their home heading for the kitchen. She and Cazar her Blessed husband enjoyed having tea together in the morning before both of them went to their perspective places of work. Nearly four thousand years old and Saba looked no more than forty odd years of age. Her blond hair was still long and shiny, her green eyes bright. And even after two thousand and nineteen years together Cazar was still the only man she ever desired. Her Blessed husband, though two thousand years older than her, was incredibly fit and capable. He was a former fleet officer who had been taken off active fleet status when their only child Sheva had joined this Xukuth Zotreth program. It was for their protection and the vigilant protection of their daughter, so they were told. Over the last years Saba and Cazar both had begun to doubt that was the case. Neither of them were stupid, and though they were free to travel anywhere on the planet they wanted, any travel off world had to be approved by the Xukuth Zotreth program officer. Major Lielian was a bastard in reality, and Saba did not care for the way he looked at her or other married woman who lived in the colony. There had been rumors for many years that he was forcing several of the married women to share his bed for the opportunity to go off world. This had never been proven, and to protect their children, none of the other families had ever said anything.

“The tea should be done by now!” Her husband called down to her from their bedroom. “I set it up before we went to sleep last night!”

Saba chuckled as she made her way across the living room towards the kitchen. Once a military man, always a military man. He was so very organized, while she was not, and he had once told her that was part of the appeal of being married to her. Saba’s pureblood vampire eyes needed no light to move into the kitchen area to the counter, and she had lifted a mug and was already pouring when she lifted her head at the scents of three distinctly different blood sources. She lowered the mug slowly, her eyes narrowing somewhat. Being married to a former fleet officer had its advantages; one being that Cazar had taught her how to defend herself quite well. Knowing what their daughter was involved in, Cazar had placed sidearms all across their home in case they were needed. Most of them were Union issue sidearms since they were smaller and far more powerful than High Coven sidearms. One of the blood scents seemed so very familiar to her Saba thought as she lowered her hand slowly and silently opened the draw by her hip. As her fist closed around the hand grip of the Union K14 Magnum she took a deep breath.

“Whoever you are... you will not live to see another sunrise.” She spoke calmly though her heart was racing.

The voice that spoke to her from across the darkness caused her heart to nearly explode from her chest.

“Do you not recognize the scent of your own daughter’s blood Ilhar?”

Saba Juconi whirled around just as the lights in the kitchen came on. She instinctively shielded her eyes quickly, her fist still gripping the K14, but not lifting the weapon as the words echoed in her ears like a thunderclap. Her eyes came up and focused on Sheva standing in the center of the kitchen, hands at her side.

“Sheva!” She exclaimed in disbelief.

Sheva was shaking badly as she looked upon the mother she hadn’t seen in nearly fifty years. She looked no different than she remembered and this made her heart race with total happiness.

“Don’t move!” The male voice barked in the room and Sheva turned to see her father in the doorway of the kitchen holding the second K14 in his hands.

“Cazar no!” Saba hissed aloud.

Sheva had tears in her eyes now as she looked at her father. “It is me Ilharn.” She said softly. “You do not need your weapon.”

“I will decide that!” Cazar barked out even though his hands were shaking badly. He could smell his only daughter’s blood easily, but it was also different somehow. There was no way he could mistake those stunning green eyes however. Sheva had been born with her mother’s eyes, and he had doted on her for years.

“Actually... no you won’t.” The female voice sounded softly as Cazar saw the shadows unwrap from around a body and he felt the barrel of a sidearm press against the side of his head. “I have no wish to shoot you... you are Sheva’s Ilharn, and the reason we are here.” Onera told him softly. “Please... lower your weapon.”

Cazar looked out the corner of his eye unbelieving that someone had snuck up on him as this female had. His eyes grew wider when he saw the unmistakable white bone spurs along the graceful curve of the jaw indicating this person was an Immortal. How could that be? His eyes grew even wider when he realized this female was not fully Akruian Immortal.

Onera reached out slowly with her opposite hand and closed her hand around the K14’s slide action while keeping her own weapon against his head. Cazar did not fight her as she did this and his eyes went back to where Sheva stood.

“It is me Papa.” Sheva spoke again, her voice wavering. “I am here.”

“Sheva!” Saba needed no further urging and she dropped the K14 and rushed forward to embrace her daughter. The tears flowed then and Sheva relished in her mother’s arms once more as they closed around her.

Cazar could only stare in disbelief at his only child and daughter. Her hair was shorter than he remembered, and she looked in far superior physical condition, but this was indeed his baby daughter. The matte black body armor she wore conformed to her petite body like a second skin, providing protection in all the vital areas he saw, while leaving her with the most freedom of movement. It was definitely Union issue, and from what his knowledge told him, issued to only the very elite of their forces. He watched as Sheva clutched Saba's hand and looked at him, tears rolling down her cheeks.

"Ilharn... don't you wish to greet your daughter?" Sheva asked. "I have... I have missed you and mother so very much."

Cazar Juconi could no longer contain himself and with a heave of effort he propelled himself across the room quickly and scooped his daughter into his arms, crushing her to his powerful body in happiness. "My lotha uss!" He cried out as he spun her around.

Sheva laughed and cried at the same time in delight. Finally her father set her down and then both her parents were squeezing her tightly. Her father drew his head back and gazed at her, lifting his hand to stroke her cheek.

"Sheva... how... what are you doing here?" He gasped. "How... how did you get here?" He turned around and looked at where Onera stood. "How did you get past the security at the spaceport? You..."

Sheva reached up and pressed her hand over the top of his, her eyes tear filled and wide. "It is... it is a long story papa." She stated honestly. "I came... I came for you and mother. To take you away from here."

"Away from here?" Saba exclaimed.

Sheva nodded. "Yes."

"Your mission?" Cazar rasped the words as the military officer in him came forth. "We... I thought that..."

Sheva met his eyes. "Papa... it has been a lie." She said. "Everything they have told you. Told me. It was all a lie! This is... this is a prison for you!"

"What do you mean?" Cazar gasped.

"Sheva?" The male voice spoke causing both of them to turn around.

Saba Juconi gasped as the shadows unwrapped easily from around Dorian beside Onera and Cazar's eyes went wide. They had never detected this one either. Saba moved closer to her husband almost instinctively for this young man was very large and powerful and he looked exceptionally dangerous and somewhat wild. He also looked somehow familiar to her. Cazar also acted as any father would and he intentionally placed himself in front of the Lycavorian before him intent on defending his wife and daughter to the last if need be.

"We don't have much time Du'ased 'ranndi." Dorian spoke.

Saba gasped even louder and Cazar's eyes turned to look at Sheva. Sheva was nodding and she wiped the tears from her eyes as she moved quickly away from her parents to stand in front of Dorian. She was tiny compared to Dorian's tall, muscular body, but Saba took note of how easily Sheva slid into his embrace. Sheva turned back to look at her parents as her arm slid around his waist. "Mother... father... this is my Blessed Husband Dorian. Dorian Leonidas."

"Leonidas!" Cazar gasped. "That is..."

Dorian smiled at them brilliantly. "Yes... he is my father." He told Cazar proudly.

Cazar pulled his wife closer to him and looked at Sheva. "Dalharil!" He questioned. "Why... why are you here with a Prince of the Lycavorian Union? And why does he call you his Blessed Wife?"

Sheva stepped away from Dorian and closer to her father. She looked up to his face and met his questioning eyes. "It is a long story papa." She said quickly. "Do you trust me Ilharn?"

"Always!" Cazar gasped.

"Then trust me now." Sheva told him as she took his hand. "We do not have much time but I will tell you as much as I can."

Dorian looked at Onera. "Why don't you and I secure the house?" He said.

Onera nodded without question and they both turned and headed out of the kitchen. Sheva took her parent's hands in hers and directed them to the small table. "Please... sit down. I must be quick now but I can tell you everything once we are free of this place."

“Dead!?” Cazar exclaimed after listening to his daughter for ten minutes.

Sheva nodded her head. “They told me you had died in the attack on the colony. They told me it was a Lycavorian attack. This is the premise I have... this is what I have believed for over two decades! My anger is what drove me forward for so long. It was only a few days ago when I discovered otherwise. When I discovered the truth.”

“A Lycavorian attack!” Cazar barked. “The Lycavorian Union does not target civilian colonies! Everyone knows that! Even at the worst of our war with them, they never targeted civilian targets no matter how simple it was. The fools in charge did not maintain proper safety protocols in the mine and that is what caused the explosions!”

Sheva shook her head. “Regardless.” She told him. “That is what they told me. What they used to get me to join this foul program. They recruited me with that knowledge all the while telling you something else. They trained me. Outfitted me. Then they somehow got me a new life within the Union. I was to be one of their many agents.”

“Why?” Saba asked.

Sheva sighed heavily. “It was a way to try and destabilize the Union after Dorian’s father conducted the Intelligence Purge. I was assigned to kill Queen Isabella.” She answered honestly looking at them. “Dorian’s mother. I was... I am a member of the Durcunusaan.” She corrected herself.

“The Durcunusaan?” Cazar gasped in disbelief. “That is their... their Royal Guard! The very elite of their forces!”

Sheva nodded. “I am a Captain of the Durcunusaan.” She told him. Sheva’s head turned as she saw Dorian come into the doorway. “I can answer all your questions Papa... but now you and mother must gather a few things. We are leaving.” She told them as she got to her feet.

“Leaving?” Saba gasped.

Cazar got to his feet. “Sheva they have men all over the spaceport.” He said. “No ship gets on or off this planet without their permission.”

Dorian chuckled from the doorway. “We didn’t exactly ask permission to be here.” He said to him. “We’re not really here.”

Sheva grinned as she looked from her husband to her father. “Papa... many things have happened through the years.” He told him. “For me. The Evolli War changed so much. It is then that I began to see what they were telling me was a lie. Now the Empress is dead. Admiral Moran is on the run from not only Narice but also Dorian’s brother Androcles. I do not know what you have heard while here, but I tell you now most of it is not true.”

“They... they do not know you are here?” Saba asked.

Sheva shook her head. “Hardly.” She said. “If they knew I was here they would be trying to kill me. Did you know there are guards across the street in the building? On both the first and second floors.”

“Security has been increased since...” Cazar looked at Dorian and then back to Sheva. “It was raised when Aikiro went to Earth and did what she did. They raised it in case of retaliation by the Union.”

Sheva looked at Dorian and he nodded. “Then we at least know we’re not compromised.” She said.

“Sheva... what is going on?” Cazar asked.

Sheva looked at him. “I received new orders a few days ago papa.” She told him. “After all this time... apparently Moran decided to take at least part of his vengeance on the Union. Or try to anyway. I stopped believing in the lies after the Evolli War opened my eyes. I have not kept in touch with the man who was my Control Officer. His last message was a threat. If I did not contact him then he would have you and mother killed. I did not even know you were alive! I thought you were dead! When I discovered this I... I turned to the man I have come to love with all of my heart and soul. It just so happens his brother happens to be Crown Prince of the Union.”

“A title my fervon hates I might add.” Dorian chimed in trying to keep the mood light.

“He... Androcles Leonidas knows you are here?” Cazar asked.

“His first thought was to get you and mother off this world and safe.” Sheva answered with a nod.

“We look after our family sir.” Dorian said moving up behind Sheva.

Saba was the one to see her daughter's face when she felt Dorian come up behind her. She leaned almost imperceptibly back against him and drew from the obvious strength of the young man who was three hundred years her junior.

Sheva looked at her father. "My loyalties are to my Blessed Husband now papa. To the Union. Not to the High Coven of old. Nor to the new Coven under Empress Narice. I have... I have chosen my life freely and I will live it. Once word reaches Moran of that choice he would have had you and mother killed. I could not allow that. I'm taking you off this planet."

Cazar was silent for a moment. "I do not like being lied to." He said finally as his eyes came to rest on Dorian.

"No sir... I don't imagine you do." He stated.

"You... you can do this?" Cazar asked. "Get us off the planet?"

Dorian nodded. "That's what we are here for." He said.

Cazar Juconi made a decision from his heart then.

He had known for many years that the High Coven would one day collapse. He was not surprised when it finally did and word reached them here that Empress Aikiro was dead. He didn't blink when they discovered that Narice had assumed that position and not Yuri. He did not agree with some of her ideas for a new Coven, but she had forged an alliance with enemies that should have been allies centuries ago, and her only concern was for the good of the Coven and its people. He had long ago felt out of place. He and Saba had only one child while others had more. He cared deeply for his wife and daughter, unlike many of the men who resided on this planet with them. Many of them had come from very different backgrounds and were arrogant to the extreme. They believed what Aikiro was doing was right and just and that the High Coven deserved to be dominant in everything. They could not believe that they were not better than everyone else. There were exceptions to this rule and it was with these men and women that he and Saba maintain relations. They were also the same men and women who had begun to seriously question what role their children were playing in the future.

"Saba my wife, pack only what we can carry in the small packs I have set in the closet." He told her. "And insure that we bring all of the datapads and other items I have gathered while here."

Saba grabbed Sheva's hand. "Come Sheva. Help me." She spoke pulling her out of the kitchen.

Cazar looked at Dorian. "There are others." He spoke. "Others like us who have begun to doubt what this place is for. We must..."

"We came only for you." Onera spoke now moving into the kitchen.

"We cannot leave them!" Cazar insisted. "They are good people."

"To you perhaps..." Onera told him.

"I will not have the loyalty of my friends questioned by..." Cazar snapped.

"By what?" Onera challenged him. "By a half breed!" She growled. "I could snap you in half old man."

"Your parents should have taught you to respect your elders child!" Cazar snapped right back.

Onera's eyes flared. "My father is Pa'cour, Colonel of the Immortals and my mother is Yuri! And they taught me all they know! You..."

"Yuri?" Cazar gasped now. "You... you are the child of Princess Yuri and her Immortal Colonel?"

"Do not dare to besmirch the name of my..." Onera began to speak moving closer to Cazar in a menacing manner.

Dorian reached out and took her arm gently. "Onera... it is not time for this." He stated calmly.

"You mistake my words for something they are not young lady." Cazar spoke. "Word was able to reach us here of what happened between your mother and Moran. How she fell in love with an Immortal and deserted the High Coven in order to be with him. It was only... it was only rumor and many still do not believe it." He met Onera's eyes. "You are truly their daughter? How?"

"It's another of those long stories." Dorian interjected. "One we do not have time for. You said there were others. How many?"

Cazar looked at him now. "Four families. Two of them have their youngest children with them, though I dare say they are not as young as they were when they came here. Twelve total."

"Sibfla!" Dorian swore silently.

"I will not leave them to the mercies of the guards here!" Cazar hissed gently. "Once it is discovered that we are gone they will bear the brunt of Moran's anger because they were our friends. They will be tortured and probably killed for everything they know. And like me they have been gathering information for years on whatever they could.”

Dorian reached behind his back as he looked at Cazar. “You have weapons hidden I assume?” He asked as he pulled out his P1.

“Yes.” Cazar replied.

Dorian held out his P1 to Onera. He had given her a short but very useful class in how to operate the P1 in case it was needed. “Contact my brother Onera. He will be on Apo Prime and it is probably early morning there as well.”

Onera took the pad as she looked at him. “He would not leave them would he?” She asked.

Dorian shook his head. “No. Not after he hears this. And neither will we.”

APO PRIME ROYAL ESTATE ISLAND

On this morning it was Lu'ria who had risen before Androcles, but certainly not of her own accord.

She had been wrapped within Andro's powerful arms and sleeping the sleep of happiness and fulfillment. They had paid their respects to those who Andro felt had been inconvenienced because of their actions and then returned here to the Royal Island Estate, or the RIE as the Durcunusaan called it. They had shared a delightful dinner ordered from the eatery owned by the very older couple who had been held up earlier in the day by their operation. When they had eaten their fill, Lu'ria was more than ready and she insured her husband and mate knew it. As Sadi had told her, Androcles Leonidas would never deny any of his wives and mates. What had followed were the most intense and passionate five hours they had yet shared together. Andro had made her feel things unlike anything she had felt so far, and she lost count of her eruptions after number two. His aura could and did drive her insane with passion, so wild and pure as it was. Lu'ria had been demanding at times and submissive at others, yet he had never failed to give her what she wanted. She would be sore for a few days considering the number of times and positions they had coupled but she would trade it for nothing. Looking at his powerful body on the bed, the lone sheet just covering his lower body, Lu'ria felt fresh desire swirl through her. She had fallen asleep in his arms, splayed across his body, only to be awoken thirty minutes ago by Sadi's gentle prodding within their Etheric connection. The fact that he did not awaken when Lu'ria extracted herself from his arms told her that he was exhausted. He had not slept for more than four hours any day in the last two weeks, and wolf though he may have been, it was bound to catch up with him. After the passionate night of sex they shared last night, it finally had.

Lu'ria had pulled on Andro's shirt as she slipped naked from the bed and moved into the main area of his apartment to find Sadi sitting with Sehri and Ne'Veha. The delicious scent of his mother's coffee was in the air and it woke her quickly. After a brief but divine welcome to all of her 'slaves' Lu'ria had grabbed a mug of coffee and joined Sadi and the others on the balcony of his apartment to watch the sun begin to rise. At Sehri's urging they shifted into wolf form and had taken Sehri on a run through the towering trees that dotted the island, laughing and yelping in happiness as Lu'ria shared the entire torrid evening with all of them. They could only laugh playfully as Sehri, still very new to her wolf form and running, stumbled and rolled down a small hill into a stream. When she shifted back sitting in the stream soaked the rest of them had happily joined her. The two dozen Durcunusaan who now guarded the island paid the echoes of their laughter no mind. Most of them had heard it many times in the past with the Queens and it was a normal thing for them.

They had returned to Andro's apartment just as the sun was beginning its rise above the trees and Andro was still sleeping soundly. They shared a warm shower together and Lu'ria had draped the robe over her body again and simply leaned against the doorframe as she let her amber eyes gaze upon Andro in the bed. He had flipped over onto his back and she let her eyes take in the scars and the Talon Guardian brand on his chest, not to mention the deliciously ripped abdomen he sported.

Mistress? Sadi's voice echoed softly.

Lu'ria turned and moved back into the main living area to see all of them looking at her from the lone couch.

“Is everything alright Lu'ria?” Ne'Veha questioned.

Lu'ria nodded as she moved over to them and squeezed in between Ne'Veha and Sehri on the couch. Sehri immediately began to use the brush she held on her shimmering white hair. “I was just thinking how lucky we all are.” She spoke softly. “All of us.”

“Yes we are.” Sadi echoed softly.

“Or how jealous so many others must be of us.” Ne'Veha offered with a grin.

Lu'ria chuckled. “There is that to consider as well.” She said softly. “We must promise each other, all of us, once our Inamarno and Carisia are back with us, we must always make time for each other as we did this morning. I know the Queens do it now and we must as well. I never want to lose what we have found with each other.”

“I would like that very much.” Ne'Veha said softly.

“As would I.” Sadi agreed. “Very much so.”

Sehri drew her lips across Lu'ria's shoulder and kissed her neck softly before resting her chin on her shoulder. “Mistress... what Andro did last night? He is so... he is not exactly average in size. I don't think he is... for I have known only him.”

“He is all I have known as well Sehri.” Lu'ria told her.

“I don't think it is his size more than... more than it is what he makes us all feel when he loves us so.” Ne'Veha spoke aloud.

“We were all meant for Andro. And he for us.” Sadi said softly. “By fate, or destiny or the will of the gods. It does not matter. We have him and he has us.”

“Avoi.” Lu'ria whispered softly.

They all contemplated that for a moment and then Sehri turned back to Lu'ria. “Did it hurt Mistress?” Sehri asked her. “When he took you like...”

Lu'ria smiled and rolled her eyes. “For all of two seconds, before I started to explode and scream out his name and demand he take me harder.” She answered Sehri's question with a wistful sigh. “I will not be...”

The beeping sound drew their attention and Sadi quickly rose from the couch as she recognized the source of the sound. She moved to Andro's desk and snatched his P1 from the top, her eyes going wide when she saw who the incoming call was from.

“Sehri... go quickly and tell Andro Dorian is calling.” Sadi told her. “Something must have gone wrong.”

HIGH COVEN SPACE

RIKVOS COLONY

XUKUTH ZOTRETH (HEART STRIKE) FACILITY

“...gone wrong fervon.” Dorian told Andro in the transmission with the others standing around him. The image of his brother was crystal clear, like he was in the very room with them. Dorian could tell he had just woken up, as he wore only his loose fitting pants and was choking down a mug of their mother's coffee. “I do need some advice however.”

“Will they not be able to trace this communications?” Cazar asked from Dorian's left.

Nara laughed softly from the side where she stood with Deion. The other members of their team had also closed ranks on the Juconi home and now occupied different areas within the two story structure. “They could certainly try.” She said gently.

Deion nodded. “And fail.” He echoed his twin.

Cazar looked at the two of them standing beside one another. That they were twins was quite obvious to any who looked at them. That they were also related to Dorian was without question.

Dorian smiled at his brother and sister's comment and looked at Cazar and then back to his Andro. “Andro... allow me to introduce Saba and Cazar Juconi. Sheva's parents.” He stated motioning to them.

Andro had been sitting on the couch, Sadi, Lu'ria, Ne'Veha and Sehri all sitting around him. Now he came to his feet and as he rose Saba let out an involuntary gasp. Even in the holo transmission he was just as large and imposing as his younger brother Dorian. Even more so for he still wore no shirt and every scar and corded muscle on his body was evident. Andro bowed his head slightly to Cazar in recognition but turned back to Dorian.

“You are still on the planet fervon?” He asked. “Why? You should have been gone from there twenty-eight minutes ago.”

“Something has come up.” Dorian explained.

“Something important enough to put you all in far more danger?” Andro asked.

“I pulled everyone inside Andro.” Dorian told him. “Sheva’s parents are not expected at work today so no one will question where they are. Normya and Tir’ut have the STRIKER well hidden. We’re secure for now.”

“For now.” Andro told him. “Your mission was to get in, extract Sheva’s parents and leave. What could possibly have happened to alter that?”

“Andro... Sheva’s parents have... they have friends here. Friends that will be in danger if they suddenly turn up missing.” Dorian said.

“I am sorry about that but...” Andro began before Dorian cut him off.

“Andro... they all have intelligence.” He said. “About this program... how far it extends. We could learn...”

Andro shook his head quickly. “Marci and her people reamed every iota of information from Banak’s mind fervon. Her initial report last night was that much of it was invaluable to us. Whatever they have is not worth the risk to you and Sheva and the others.”

Sheva stepped forward now. “Andro... what did... where is Banak now?” She asked.

“I would imagine his corpse is being fed on by some of the largest predators on Apo Prime in the southern hemisphere right now.” Andro told her. “He will no longer be a threat to you Sheva.”

Cazar stepped forward quickly now. He had heard that the Crown Prince of the Union was unforgiving to his enemies. “We have intimate knowledge of the workings of this program! And others like it! I cannot just leave them here! Moran’s people are ruthless and they will take them and their children and...”

Sheva looked at him wide eyed. “Others papa?” She exclaimed.

Cazar nodded his head. “You did not think this was the only program like this did you?” He asked in disbelief. “From the information I have been able to gather through the years with the others we have concluded there are three other colonies just like this one. All of them populated with the family members of Moran’s and Aikiro’s agents. They are spread far and wide across the High Coven and The Wilds as well as within the Union. Some of them within the new Empress’s own supporters!”

“You have proof of this papa?” Sheva asked.

Cazar nodded his head quickly and then he turned back to Andro in the transmission. “It is divided between the five of us. So if one of us were taken they would not learn everything.”

Andro nodded. “Standard Intelligence protocol.” He said.

Cazar shifted on his feet. “But if we leave all of the rest will be taken into custody for certain.” He said. “They will discover what you have found far quicker and be able to make their agents disappear. And the truth will never get out.”

“How close to Narice are they?” Andro asked instantly. “Can they threaten her directly?”

Cazar shook his head quickly. “I am not an Intelligence Operative Prince Leonidas. And some of the names we have gathered I have never heard before. In truth I cannot answer that question.”

“So it could all be a bluff?” Onera asked from the side.

Sheva whirled around. “Onera!” She snarled.

Onera shook her head quickly. “I believe your father Sheva... I am only speaking what it sounds like to others.”

Dorian looked at his brother. “Andro... if we do not take them with us we could be...”

Cazar Juconi had also heard that Androcles Leonidas and his father did not mince words and were decisive in their actions. Cazar watched as those traits he had only heard rumors off came rushing forth.

“Can you pull it off?” Andro interrupted his brother’s comments. “Give me a no shit assessment fervon. Can you do it without getting all of you killed.”

Dorian nodded his head. “With some quick action and improvisation... yes.” He told him without hesitation. He did not see the look in Cazar Juconi’s eyes. Dorian’s standing just shot through the ceiling as far as Sheva's father was concerned. "I've already gone through some of it with Artel. We can do this Andro... and be offworld within eighteen hours."

Andro's answer was what Dorian expected now that he knew the risks and the gains. They were tied together far more tightly than many people knew because of what they were experiencing with Elynth and Ryner and Dorian could almost predict what Andro would do in any situation now.

"Do it!" Andro barked softly. "Sheva's parents remain the priority but do whatever it takes to get the others offworld as well. Will they go?" He asked looking up.

"Hah!" Cazar exclaimed. "You will see them move faster than any vampire before for a way to escape this planet knowing what we know now."

Andro nodded. "Then make it happen fervon." He said.

"And if they try to stop us?" Dorian asked. "Just in case."

Andro met his brother's eyes in the transmission. "Don't let them." He replied. "Marci will be giving me a full report later this morning. Once I have that we will be leaving Apo Prime and moving to take command of our new ship. Yuri will be back from her meeting with father by then and we will rendezvous with you and sit down and discuss all this then."

"Understood." Dorian said.

"And fervon..." Andro met his eyes. "If any of you get killed I will haunt your every waking hour as ghosts."

Dorian laughed softly and shook his head. "Now that is plenty incentive enough to not get killed." He spoke laconically.

Andro turned to look at Deion and Nara. "Learn and listen both of you. The time will come when you will be doing this as well."

Deion and Nara nodded to their brother, their faces serious. "We will." They spoke simultaneously.

"Two days Dorian." He said turning back to him. "You have Narice and Arram's direct channel. And grandfather Riall. If you run into trouble you contact them immediately."

Dorian nodded. "We'll get it done." He spoke.

"When you return... we need to talk." Andro stated softly. "We... we will try something Lu'ria suggested to me in regards to the dreams."

Dorian nodded. "I was hoping you would think of something." He said.

Andro shook his head. "Secure Sheva's parents and the others and I will meet you soon." He said.

They watched as he reached out on his end and terminated the transmission. Everyone was silent for a moment and then Dorian looked at Cazar first. "You are certain they will want to leave sir?" He asked.

Cazar nodded. "Yes."

Dorian nodded. "Then lets make this happen."

JUNCRO UNCHARTED PLANET UNKNOWN SPACE

It was certainly not something he had ever expected, but Martin Leonidas should have known better. His children had been throwing him for loops for years. It was no different now as he crushed Zarah within his arms and allowed the tears to moisten his eyes as her scent and aura swirled around him. He spun her around several times Zarah openly weeping in happiness as her father's arms squeezed her just as tightly as he had when she was a child. His wonderful mint scent and fatherly aura wrapped around her and the very last remnants of the horrors she had endured drifted away into the abyss. Now she would move forward into the future with Lucia at her side and discover everything together. Zarah felt her other press against her from behind and soon she was being crushed between her parents and loving every moment. Isabella was openly crying as well, her hands shaking as she stroked Zarah's hair and face. Finally her father put her down and held her away from him but did not release her.

He stared at her in the middle of the small clearing, towering brown trees blowing lightly in the wind and the smell of salt water in the air.

“Zarah.” Martin stammered. “How? What...”

Zarah shook her head quickly and reached up to squeeze his hands on her shoulders. “I am fine medwan.” She stammered. “Better than fine now. I have missed you so much.”

Martin crushed her to him again, burying his face in her dark hair and inhaling deeply of her scent. “I should have... I should have been there for you. I...”

Zarah shook her head as she held his head to her neck. “You were there medwan.” She told him softly. “You were always there with me. I knew that.”

Martin pulled his face away and looked at her beautiful smile and bright dark eyes. “What are you doing here?” He asked finally.

“Lucia and Carisia came with me.” Zarah spoke stepping back. Martin looked up and saw them and he opened his arms without question, pulling each of them into a bear hug. His heart was filled with happiness at this very moment and he watched as Isabella embraced Carisia and Lucia hard. They were the wives and lovers to their children and they were family.

Martin turned back to his daughter and took her hands. “You... you came with Yuri?” He asked shocked.

Zarah nodded and took his hands in hers. “Many things have changed medwan.” She said softly as Lucia and Carisia moved up beside her. “You must keep an open mind, just as you taught all of us to do. You...”

“Martin!” Bella gasped loudly.

Martin’s head snapped around to look at her and saw that she was gazing behind them. He turned quickly expecting some sort of attack and his own dark brown eyes flew open in stunned shock.

“Nubou lae!” Martin hissed in disbelief as he saw Yuri moving across the small distance between them hesitantly.

This was not Yuri Martin decided instantly. Yet it was. Her skin glowed in health and her own dark eyes were bright and filled with new purpose and happiness. Martin had never seen happiness in her eyes and it made her entire face beam with a new light. She looked in far better shape physically than he had ever seen her. He watched as her eyes saw the two members of his team that had come with them begin to bring their weapons up and he held up his hand.

“Kenny! Cody! Stand down!” He barked. He saw For'mya come rushing down the ramp and then Zarah was in her arms and they were embracing tightly as Bella looked on holding both Carisia’s hand and Lucia’s.

Martin waited until they had lowered their weapons and then he turned back to face Yuri. To her credit she had not stopped moving forward, and within a few strides she was in front of him just as she had been decades ago. Yet once more Andro’s words echoed in his head.

She is not the same woman father. Yet she is. Let your instincts and skills tell you that and guide you in your actions with her. She is not our enemy however. Not any longer, if she truly ever was.

Androcles had the uncanny ability to scare even him at times with what he could see and sense in people and this time was definitely no different. This was not the Yuri Moran he had known once. This was someone else entirely. Martin could detect the very faint scars across her face, almost imperceptible now, but for the first time he saw the damage Andro had done to her in their fight. This Yuri exuded confidence and power, but there was not a shred of Xaxon’s essence on her. The darkness that had nearly consumed her the last time he had seen her was gone and in its place remained the woman that she was always meant to be. Just as his son had told him.

Martin drew himself up and looked at her. “Yuri.” He said calmly.

Yuri had wanted to meet them alone. Without Pa'cour beside her protecting her as he always tried to do. She loved her Immortal husband more than her own life now, but this was something she needed to face alone. The trip here had been enlightening to say the least. Yuri had been granted a window into Zarah Leonidas’s life. The shame Yuri felt over what had happen weighed heavily on her, but Zarah would have none of it. The four of them had spent many hours together in the ship’s lounge just talking for hours. About the history that had taken place and the history they now hoped to write. Yuri could not stop touching Lucia and Carisia the entire time, for the first time in her life seeing the beautiful women that they had grown in to. Yuri decided she had much to atone for, and she vowed to herself that her actions going forward would be focused on insuring redemption was hers, no matter how many centuries it took.

“Martin.” Yuri spoke evenly though she was shaking inwardly. Yuri feared Androcles Leonidas. She feared him with every fiber of her being. She doubted even her mother, with all her years under Xaxon's control would have been able to stand against him. Martin Leonidas however, Martin Leonidas terrified her. His long hair and beard made him very imposing to say the least no matter that it was meticulously well groomed, his six foot two; two hundred and thirty-eight pound body still in superb condition and looking even more defined. It had taken him longer Yuri knew, but he had now embraced what he was in its entirety. Yuri could feel that within him just as easily as she felt it within Androcles. While Androcles kept his emotions tightly in check, allowing them out only when needed, Martin Leonidas wore his emotions on his sleeve and that is what made him very nearly impossible to predict and so very terrifying to behold. “I see you found the stowaways.”

Martin glanced back at where Zarah and the others were still embracing and hugging and then back to Yuri. “How did...”

“Your son seems to have a rather mysterious sense of things.” Yuri said softly. “It is quite unnerving at times.”

Martin chuckled. “Tell me about it.” He said.

“They were... they were with him when we last met.” Yuri said. “They wanted to come.” Yuri shrugged her shoulders. “I could not refuse them.”

Yuri's eyes lifted as Isabella came up beside him on one side and For'mya on the other. “Isabella. For'mya.” She said gently. “Both of you are looking well.”

“The woman before me is not the Yuri Moran I once knew.” Isabella said after a long moment.

Yuri chuckled softly. “I would say that is the understatement of the century sister.” She commented.

Isabella's eyes grew wider. “Sister?” She gasped.

Yuri looked at her. “Our father was a back stabbing, manipulative monster, and a coward to boot. But that does not change the fact that we share the same father and are sisters. I'm only just beginning to realize how much I missed while that creature Xaxon held sway over my mind and body.” She looked at Isabella. “Someday I would like to regain all that I lost or missed. No matter what it was.”

Isabella glanced down and saw the Tears of Heaven secure at Yuri's waist. She had told Vonis that Yuri would throw them away. That apparently was not the case. “Our daughter speaks your name almost fondly.” For'mya stated from beside Martin.

Yuri looked at her and then to Martin. “I am not here to ask for forgiveness.” She spoke. “What happened to Zarah is unforgiveable. Given everything you know about me, I would hope you one day see that I would not have sanctioned such a thing. This me. The real me. I never would have allowed that to happen. No matter who I was, I still bear blame for what took place. She is stronger than I was you know. I let it break me and I had no one to turn to as she has. Knowing what I know now, I would have happily traded all of my years to insure that it never took place. Unfortunately...”

“Enough of this!” Martin hissed softly. The anger was evident in his voice but he held it in control. “What your son did... what your husband and mother did to my daughter... I will never...”

“I'm not asking you too Martin.” Yuri interrupted him. “And given the opportunity, I will serve their heads to you and Androcles happily after what they have done. Not only to Zarah but to me and everyone.”

“Then why are you here?” Isabella asked her. “Why come all this way? You could have just as easily told Androcles whatever it is you need to tell us and...”

“No I couldn't.” Yuri stated flatly.

“The Code Word you used was from back in the Teams Yuri.” Martin told her. “From back before all of this ever began. Why use it?”

Yuri nodded. “Because I knew you would take it seriously.”

“Then answer Bella's question. What do you need to tell me so badly that you could not tell my son?” Martin asked.

“Is there someplace we can talk? Just you and I Martin?” Yuri asked him.

“I do not keep secrets from my wives and mates!” Martin snapped softly.

Yuri nodded. “No... but Zarah and Carisia should not hear this either I’m afraid. I know how tightly tied together Zarah is with him and Carisia is now his wife and mate.” She said. “At least with Isabella and For'mya here they will be occupied.”

For'mya squeezed his arm and he turned to look into her dark eyes. [I sense no deception from her Martin.] She said gently. [None at all.]

[Nor do I.] Bella agreed. [And she may be many things, but a fool is not one of them, just as you said Martin.]

[That is what bothers me.] Martin said. [I want to believe what Andro tells us but... it's so hard to comprehend how he could have controlled her so completely.]

[He was able to do this with you my love, if only for a short time.] For'mya said. [And Yuri is not you. Wayonn and Murano also told you that it is extremely likely as well. Xaxon was more than capable.]

[Listen to her Martin.] Isabella told him. [Whatever it is, it cannot be good if she felt it was not for Andro's ears. And it must be something serious if she does not want Zarah or Carisia knowing. For they would tell Androcles anything.]

Martin nodded slowly and looked at Yuri. “There is a small office area on my ship.” He said.

Yuri smiled. “Your Pralor Corvette.” She said.

Martin met her eyes. “Pretty neat huh? You can't have it!”

Yuri chuckled softly as he turned and she began to follow him.

“...something to drink?” Martin asked as he looked through several cabinets. “I know Bella has some cloned blood here somewhere.”

Yuri smiled gently from behind him and shook her head. “Martin... please do not try and make me feel at home.” She said. “You can't stand the sight of me... I know that and so do you. I accept that.” She watched as he turned to face her. “You hold me responsible for every bad thing that has ever happened to your family in the last three thousand plus years. Beginning with your father's death.”

“Yuri...” He started.

Yuri shook her head slowly. “No... do not try and deny it. In some respect you would be right Martin.” She told him evenly. “They were my mother's sins, my father's sins, that monster Xerxes who was my brother, but they are also my sins as well... at least in some manner.” She said. “I cannot blame you for how you feel. The only thing I can do is ask that you give me a chance... just as your son has done... give me a chance to show you that this is who I was meant to be. This is who I am.”

“That's asking quite a bit Yuri.” He told her honestly.

“Yes I know.” She told him. “My atonement... my redemption began the day Pa'cour's child was conceived in my womb and I felt such joy and happiness at this news. It continued the day I gave birth to her and has every day since. It is going to be a long road I know and not everyone will believe me... I only ask for the chance.” She reached behind her back and took out the datapad. “Unfortunately... I am going to have to deal with items like this as I go. Sins that are not mine, but ones I now bear the burden of.” She held out the datapad to him.

“What's this?” Martin asked.

Yuri moved to the chair and sat down. “The moment my mother died at Helen's hand, a chip in her brain activated and transferred all of her command codes and secret files to my own authorization.” She explained. “The files were stored on a secret data storage computer on her temple world of Nuwaroa that only I would be able to access. I'm quite sure she did not dream of how things would work out and that I would fall in love with Pa'cour. When I finally escaped Robert's ship with Pa'cour I gave the remote order to have all those files transferred to a data storage computer of my choosing. I had the old data storage computer on Nuwaroa wipe itself and then self destruct. A few weeks ago I had my lead Scientist... Professor Lidene... I'm sure Armetus has briefed you on him?”

Martin nodded his head. “Brilliant is the word Armetus used to describe him.” He said as he fingered the datapad.

“I had him begin to decrypt the files.” Yuri told him as she watched him settle into the chair across from her.

“What does this have to do with me?” Martin asked her. “And why couldn’t you tell Andro this?”

“Part of what was on those files are her personal notes and information on many of the programs she was in control of or allowing my father to control in her stead.” Yuri told him. “One of them was the Clone project.”

“Yes... so.” Martin said.

“My father had your mother Gorgo on Lycavore for a very specific reason Martin.” Yuri told him calmly. “The experiments they were conducting on her were the last phase in the clone program my mother was in charge of. They were not simply removing her scent glands to cover for the clone of her on Apo Prime.” Yuri shook her head and leaned forward. “I was not privy to much of what she was doing; I did not know until the end that it was your mother on Lycavore. I am only now beginning to learn just what a vicious, sadistic and power mad bitch she really was.” She said softly. She looked at him and saw his eyes go a little wider at her comment. Yuri grinned. “You will find I have called my mother and father some very choice names in these last weeks. Even Pa'cour has shuddered at the name I have used.”

Martin couldn’t help but smile as well as he sat back in the chair. “I’ll take your word for it. But again I ask... what does this have to do with me. And why couldn’t you tell Andro all this?”

Yuri reached over and activated the datapad in his hand. “As I said, the experiments on your mother Gorgo were the last phase in the clone program before moving into the final and operational stage.” She took a deep breath and prepared for the explosion. “Read the names at the bottom of page nineteen Martin.”

Martin’s dark brown eyes moved to the pad and he paged down to the bottom. Yuri saw a myriad of emotions flash across those eyes at what he read, none of them very good to say the least. However he surprised her and did not completely lose control and try to kill her. She saw his knuckles turn white as he gripped the pad and his jaw became set in granite. Slowly his eyes lifted to her.

“Be very careful how you answer this next question Yuri. It will decide if you leave this planet alive. Did you know about this?” Martin asked her.

Yuri expected such a question and she did not fear the result for what she was going to speak was the complete truth.

“No. I give you my word Martin, however little it may mean to you, no I did not.” She stated flatly and with complete confidence. “I only discovered it after Lidene began to try and make some sense of my mother’s files.”

Martin rose from the chair slowly and set the pad on the table. Yuri could see that he wanted to explode but his control had advanced so much and so completely in the years since she had last seen him that she was very surprised to say the least. He turned back to her. “Who else knows about this?” He asked.

“Pa'cour, Lidene and my personal physician Nalavi.” She replied instantly. “And now you.”

“She lied to me.” Martin said softly.

Yuri chortled softly. “Yes... she did that very well.”

“Fuck me!” Martin snarled viciously, though the emotion was not directed at Yuri. “No matter where I turn, no matter how much I think I have left that behind me, your mother’s sick perversions keep coming back to haunt me! And right along with her is that perverted fuck head Moran!”

Yuri remained silent though she was very thankful he did not include her in that very true statement.

Marti moved to the COM panel on the wall. “Endy?”

“Here Skipper.” She replied instantly.

“I need you to initiate a Secure COM QCR transmission back...”

Yuri came to her feet now. “Martin wait!” She announced.

Martin looked at her, his eyes angry. “Stand by Endy.” He stated and then took his finger off the panel. “You should probably get on your ship and leave now Yuri.” He growled.

Yuri wasn’t deterred and she moved forward. “There is another way.” She told him.

“Haven’t you done enough already?” He snapped at her.

“Whether you believe me or not... I had nothing to do with this.” Yuri stated. “And you would be able to tell if I was lying to you. Before you... before you react to this information hear me out.”

“Why?” Martin demanded.

“Lidene and Nalavi almost never agree on anything.” She told him. “But after reviewing all of the data, they are reasonably convinced that none of these agents are in place. Given the gestation period of the clones and the estimated time of their DNA being copied, they agree that it is more likely they are still in a holding pattern waiting for Robert to activate them.”

“I thought you said these were your mother’s files.” Martin hissed.

“They are... but in some things she trusted Robert more than she trusted me.” Yuri told him. “Because she knew Xaxon was exerting his control over me. The Clone Program is one of those things. He may have the activation code word for these clones, but he does not know we possess my mother’s files yet. He does not know that we know about them. And right now he is more than likely trying to establish a hold over the forces still loyal to him before beginning any operation against you and Narice.”

“Bullshit!” Martin snapped.

“All of their data and thoughts is there Martin!” Yuri pressed him.

Martin looked at the pad hesitatingly once more. His eyes found what she was referring to and part of him began to calm down as he read. They were not the rants of crazed men and women. These were the thoughts of men with superior intellect and wisdom. Those were Armetus’s words to him. They were concluding exactly what Yuri was trying to tell him. He looked at her after a long moment.

“Why should I believe them?” He asked.

“Think about it for a moment!” Yuri snapped now. Martin Leonidas was a tactical genius in every sense of the word. He was also extremely intelligent and knowledgeable in ways most people would never guess. Yuri knew this. She also knew that he was stubborn and pig headed and prone to react from emotion. It is one of the things that made him so very dangerous to his enemies. “Look at the names again! Look at who they are! In all the years that you have known them... have they suddenly begun to act differently? In the last five years have they done things or said things that would make you question them. Think about it Martin. My mother knew how close they were to you. How much you relied on them. She would not put them in place until she was absolutely sure they could be of use to her.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed and Yuri saw the light of recognition go off in his eyes. “When she tried to take the City Ship?” He said. “The attempt to take the Pralor Cruiser. She knew I would go to war over that. She knew I would come tearing across the border with every Spartan at my command to get those things back.”

Yuri nodded. “And in the chaos that ensued she would have been able to place them.” Yuri said. “Things did not work out as she wanted them too. She did not count on Androcles being so powerful and you having him train the Coven Riders. And she certainly had no idea that Helen was more powerful than she would ever be.”

“She never had the chance to give the activation code.” Martin said. “It all happened too fast before she was killed.”

Yuri nodded once more. “That is what Lidene and Nalavi believe. It is what I believe.” She said. “That is why I believe we can find them before Robert decides he wants to use them. He would not be able to place them on a whim. He would need to plan it out very carefully. That kind of time he has not had recently.”

“Yuri you...” Martin began.

“Phraktos!” Yuri exclaimed. “Put aside your hatred of me for once in your life! Even for five minutes and listen to what I am telling you! I have no desire to ever see that man again! I love Pa'cour with every breath I now take. If I ever do see him again I will spill his entrails on the ground before him and watch him bleed out like the vile creature he is! I have no desire to control the High Coven! None! Only Narice can pull the Coven from the abyss that my mother and father were leading it down! Only she has the strength to do that now. All I want to do now is insure she does not fail. I do not want credit or recognition! My reward will be that I can have more of Pa'cour’s children and this time I can enjoy my children as they grow. This time I can be the mother I never was to Carisia and Lucia! Damn you Martin Leonidas... I will not let your hatred of me take that opportunity from me!”

Martin stood there staring at her with surprise in his eyes. Her scent told him without question that everything she has just spouted was the truth. When people were excited they lost control of their glands and could not guard against the adrenalin dump into their blood signifying they were lying. In Yuri’s case... not one thing she had just said was a lie. He crossed his arms over his chest slowly and looked at her as she took deep breaths.

“Are you done preaching?” He asked with a sarcastic grin.

Yuri took a deep breath and look away. “Bastard.” She muttered but with no malice in her voice.

Martin held up the pad. “So what do you propose?” He asked.

Yuri looked at him. “Lidene is still working on decrypting my mother’s files. But he is only one man. I can trust no one from the old Intelligence arm of my mother. Nor can I turn to Narice. I need... I need your people to assist Lidene. I don’t care what they see. I am not trying to hide anything. But I want to stop this before it destroys everything your son and my sister started.”

Martin looked at the pad once more. He paged down slowly looking at the three names that jumped out at him and then back up to Yuri. “I take it this is why you did not want Andro to know?”

Yuri’s laugh was humorless. “Your son and my sister took a leap of faith that paid off.” She told him. “I may be many things Martin Leonidas... but I am not stupid. If he knew what was on that pad, then everything he and Narice began would come to a very abrupt and brutal end. He would feel betrayed and used. As would Narice. Do you want the two of them burning half the Alpha Quadrant?”

“He is not as immovable as you think Yuri.” Martin said. “He believed in you.”

Yuri shook her head. “You are not going to talk me into it. I like what I have discovered since my rebirth. I like who I am now. Why would I want to lose that?”

“He trusts you.” Martin said. “If he didn’t he would not have done what he has done knowing how I feel.”

Yuri chuckled softly. “It will not work Martin Leonidas. I will not be the one to tell your son Androcles that there is an utterly perfect clone and exact replica of the woman he has loved since he was eight months old somewhere out there. His Anome.” Yuri shook her head again. “No. I am not a utter fool.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

UNCHARTED SPACE EDGE OF PRALOR SYSTEM FOUR DAYS FROM MANNE

Pusintin studied the star chart intently, ignoring all else going on around him. He was in a foul mood and had been ever since Kalis had escaped and taken the Hadarian witches with him. It wasn’t so much that he had escaped, it was the fact that Kalis had fooled him so easily, and had been fooling him for some time it seemed. He had taken Pusintin’s own personal transport and fled from right under his nose. A ship that held many Kavalian secret COM channels and different orders on its main computer. All of which were undoubtedly now in the hands of his brother. He held a begrudging respect for his middle son that he had not held before, but he still wanted to string the boy up on a pole and watch him die a slow death. Kalis had never seemed that smart, he was always so brutish in his actions and Pusintin had never believed he had the fortitude to go against him as he had. Something must have happened to him in the last months and before he died, Pusintin was going to get that very information out of him.

His brother had made a mistake and Pusintin vowed to make him pay for it.

The Kavalian fleet was moving steadily forward, searching planets that they discovered were very similar to what his brother had mistakenly described to them over the COM channel. They were not rushing forward for fear of encountering more mines as they had before. Martin could be very devious and Pusintin did not want to walk into a trap. It also did not appear to be needed, as his brother’s ships had stopped. He knew this because the Borellum Acoustic Pulse was steady and not moving. Thinking about his younger brother made Pusintin churn with hate and a deep seated anger. Seeing him in that transmission gloating with Kalis standing beside him still caused his wolf blood to burn. To then see For'mya press her lush, elven figure against him so very intimately, her dark brown eyes full of life and love and emotion, this caused nearly uncontrollable rage to boil within him. Even when For'mya was naked beneath him, unwillingly responding to his full and unshielded wolf aura as it attacked her female wolf senses; even when she was whimpering for him to fuck her harder; he could never get her to say she loved him. Or that she even cared for him. Pusintin knew better though. He knew For'mya wanted him and only him. How could she want something else after the fucking he gave to her?

Hate seethed through him at the thought of his brother touching her, bedding her, and that hate is what drove him forward. Martin had taken two of his three sons from him. His clear and favorite son Leruk had been brutally murdered by his younger brother's oldest son Androcles. Hate and rage is what propelled him forward now. He would find his brother and he would kill Kalis and the Hadarian witches and he would take For'mya back. She belonged to him now. His brother's other wives he would happily give to his men for playthings. After a few months as sex toys for Kavalian troops being gang raped every day they would be quite insane, if they still lived.

Pusintin did not consider that they were thousands of light years from any help. He did not consider that they could not communicate with Keleru back in the Alpha Quadrant. Kalis had succeeded in permanently destroying their only long range communications array capable of reaching Kavalian space and now there was no hope of repairing it unless they were in space dock. All of his focus was now on killing his son and brother and reclaiming For'mya for his own. The elf bitch would squirm under him once more and he would inhale deeply of her sweet Orchid scent while he pummeled her tight body into the bed and listened to her cry out to him for more. Not even Jalersi had affected him like For'mya had and now all he wanted was to feel her warm tightness wrapped around his cock again.

Pusintin blinked as Popal appeared next to him and he looked up at his executive officer.

"Popal?" He questioned.

"I have the latest reports from the outlying frigates Marshall." He spoke as he held out the datapad.

"Nothing I assume?" Pusintin asked as he took the pad.

"No sir. All three planets were scanned intensively but there were no signs of life or any kind of activity aside from the indigenous lifeforms." Popal answered.

"We are still picking up the secondary signal correct?" Pusintin asked.

Popal nodded. "Yes Marshall." He replied. "We have to keep two complete sensor arrays locked onto it, but it is still broadcasting. And it remains stationary."

Pusintin nodded. "He thought he was smarter than me." He said. "He thought that when he found the Borellum Acoustic Pulse I wouldn't be able to track her anymore. Shows what a fool he really is. I had three of them implanted into her, all of them in different parts of her body and on different frequencies. He would never find all three. It will lead us right to them."

"Then why are we stopping to search these planets as we go Marshall?" Popal asked. "If we go to full power we could be upon them in less than two days."

Pusintin shook his head. "My brother is stupid but he isn't a fool." He stated. "For'mya may be where the signal is originating from, but Kalis and my ship he would not keep together with her. Most of his people and his three ships are probably orbiting this planet he accidentally described in the COM transmission. They have to be low on supplies by now."

"We are becoming low on fresh supplies as well Marshall." Popal reminded him.

Pusintin nodded. "We find them... we kill the men and keep the women and take their ships and whatever supplies they have and then we can use them as leverage. My brother is weak and he wouldn't put his females in danger."

Popal nodded his head slowly. "As you say Marshall." He spoke.

Pusintin looked at him oddly for a long moment and then stood up straighter. "What is it Popal?" He asked. "Speak what is on your mind."

Popal looked at him. "It is not I Marshall..." He said. "Other... some of the officers and different ship Captains have come to me with concerns."

"Concerns such as?" Pusintin asked.

"They question why we are out here Marshall." Popal told him. "They question what we are doing so far from home, in territory we have never been too before. We have no star charts to navigate by and we have to make it up as we go. We are following this signal from the elf female For'mya yes, but it has been leading us deeper and deeper into uncharted space. The men are becoming nervous. They are... they are speaking among themselves."

"Are they?" Pusintin spoke softly. "What are they saying?"

“Marshall I...” Popal began.

“Relax Popal...” Pusintin told him evenly. “You have nothing to fear from me. I trust your words and your judgment. Now tell me what they are saying.”

“They believe the Lycavorian King knows exactly what he is doing.” Popal said. “They believe he is out here searching for something and now that they have stopped, they believe he has found what he is looking for.”

“Looking for something?” Pusintin questioned him. “There is nothing out here Popal. What could he possibly be looking for out here? No one has ever been this far spaceward of the core.”

“He has not veered more than a few degrees from his base course since the beginning Marshall Pusintin.” Popal told him. “If he was simply out here to draw us away from Kavalian space, why not alter course more often? Why follow an almost straight line? Why not have his Ghost ship drop more mines in our path? He could have been picking away at us for weeks now and he has chosen not to. Unless he knows exactly where he is going... or at least has some idea and does not want to be deterred.”

Pusintin shook his head. “Martin is not that smart.” Pusintin answered. “There is nothing out here. All of the long range probes we have sent out and nothing ever came back.”

“None of them ever came out this far from the core Marshall. And none of those we have sent out from our ship have spotted anything.” Popal said. “It makes the men uneasy.”

“They will get by.” Pusintin said.

“First the shrouded mines from his ghost ship...” Popal continued. “Then Kalis’s action in taking the transport and the Hadarian females and knowing exactly where to go to meet him. How did he know this? He must have had a means to communicate with him. Then the Juturi Pride abandoning us to go with them. A senior Pride we thought to be loyal to us for decades and they do this. And now our only means of communicating with Kavalian High Command is gone. Disabled permanently by Kalis.”

“You do not have to remind me Popal.” Pusintin hissed softly.

“The men are beginning to believe this is more of a personal vendetta than anything else Marshall.” Popal told him. “They believe we should go back. Return and help our brothers fight the Lycavorians in the war we know is going on.”

“With For'mya and the twins we can return and take control of the Union by political means!” Pusintin snapped.

Popal shook his head. “Most of them no longer believe that can happen.” He said. “They do not believe the Elf Queen or your son with her will help stop anything. Not with his oldest son back there and leading the fight against us.”

“For'mya is my woman! She wants to be with me! My brother is keeping her against her will!” Pusintin snapped more angrily. “She will do as I say! My son will do as I say! And I will make my brother pay for taking her from me!”

Popal nodded his head. “As you order Marshall.” He said. “I do not question your actions or your orders.”

“They want to see the fruit of their labor and time... fine.” Pusintin spoke. He stabbed down on the star chart forcefully. “Have two of our fastest Frigates conduct combat jumps that will put them within extreme sensor range of his ships. Here... at this point.” He said pointing at one spot on the chart. “They will scan his ships and area around them and find out what they are doing... and then they jump away before they are seen. Our Frigates can spot them easily from extreme range with their lateral sensor arrays, and even if they are spotted they can jump away long before anyone comes to investigate.”

“And what of the Ghost Ship Marshall?” Popal asked him. “That ship... if it is one of the ships that our Intelligence says your brother possesses... it will most certainly pick up our fast frigates. They will know that we are coming.”

Pusintin nodded. “Yes they will. Once our ships return we will plan our attack and move. If we have not found the planet by then we will simply take the information from his computers or his women. Then they will see. And they can have the pick of the women that are left alive! Tell them that Popal!”

Popal nodded quickly. “This will please them Marshall. You know that.”

“Good.” Pusintin declared. “Now leave me alone so I can devise a strategy to crush the life from my brother’s forces and his body.”

Popal nodded his head and turned away from the star chart leaving Pusintin alone. He made his way calmly across the bridge and onto the elevator lift. He was silent running so many things through his head as he descended to deck eleven and then exited the lift. He paid no mind to the crew he passed in the corridor until he reached the entrance of the Officer's Lounge. He looked around casually and then touched the panel opening the door where he stepped through quickly.

He watched as the five other Kavalians rose to their feet from the table they had been sitting at and turned to face him. Five ship captains that represented seventeen others within their task Force.

"Popal?" The senior Kavalian asked as he turned.

Popal shook his head slowly. "He has ordered that two of our Fast Frigates jump to within extreme range of Leonidas's ships, scan the area, and then return." Popal told them. "When they return with this information we will attack."

"If they return." One of the men spoke shaking his head.

"Popal... surely you see... you must see that this is all wrong." Another spoke moving closer to him. "He is... he is not right anymore."

Popal looked at him. "Mind your words Captain Kunti."

"I will not mind them!" The man hissed. "This is madness! We are chasing ghosts and shadows! You know that now just as we all do!"

"Popal... you must see what we are saying." Another man spoke as he moved closer. "The Marshall has not been right since... since his brother almost killed him."

"Killed him." Kunti hissed. "The Lycavorian King nearly beat him to death and did not break a sweat in doing so!"

"Kunti!" The man hissed looking at him.

"What?" Kunti demanded harshly. "For weeks we have followed without question while King Leonidas has drawn us further into uncharted territory. His Ghost Ship leaves mines in our path and now we are forced to move at a crawl. The Marshall's own son, who has been trained by the finest Puma Bane Commandos within the Federation, he deserts us to go to Leonidas. And he takes the Hadarian wench out from under our very noses! And then the Juturi Pride joined him!"

"We know all this Kunti." The second officer said.

"And still we follow blindly Weoerr!" Kunti hissed. "This is madness."

"He says that the elf female and his son with her can facilitate us gaining control of the Union." Popal spoke now grasping at something to defend the man he had served for so long. "That the Lycavorian King holds her against her will."

Weoerr, older and more experienced than Kunti, simply shook his head. "Popal, you of all of us know that is not true." He stated plainly. "The Elf Queen would just as soon cut off Pusintin's cock and feed it to him before she let him put it in her again. She has no feelings for him! None! He forced her to respond to him in any way that she may have. She believed that Leonidas was dead and not being able to sense him with her wolf senses or within the realm of their Mindvoice ability made her act in the manner she did. You know that is how pureblood Lycavorian females and those females turned by Lycavorians act. We all know this. We were trained in this knowledge at the Academy. Once the inhibitor that Pusintin implanted into her was removed and she could sense and feel Leonidas once more, well... you saw for yourself how she acted." He moved closer to Popal.

"His children by her hate him just as intensely as she now does. She has been the wife and Queen of Leonidas for over two decades Popal and she only acted as she did because she thought he was dead and the wolf blood in her reacted to that false information. Leonidas... he slaughtered over a hundred of our men to get her back Popal! And he did it without even breathing heavy! He is not dead Popal and you saw how she acted with him in the transmission. You cannot honestly believe for an instant that she will side with Pusintin over Leonidas do you? You saw the same open transmission we did."

"We cannot communicate with High Command because Kalis disabled the Long Range COM array." Kunti spoke more calmly now. "We do not even know what is happening back home. And the Marshall is leading us into a trap."

Popal looked at him. "What do you mean?"

Weoerr met his eyes. “Martin Leonidas is the foremost tactician in the Union military. Perhaps anywhere in the galaxy. He could fight circles around Marshall Pusintin every day Popal. You know this. The mines... the transmission when Kalis escaped... he is baiting us. Drawing us further away from home.”

“He has three ships Weoerr!” Popal snapped. “Three!”

Weoerr nodded his head. “That we know of.” He stated calmly. “All Union ships have Shrouds. How do we know there is not an entire fleet out there following us? We had a hard enough time recognizing High Coven Shrouded ships during the war. We have never been able to detect a Shrouded Union ship Popal. Never. And the King of the Lycavorian Union would never travel with so few ships.”

“He is baiting us!” Kunti said again. “This is not about drawing us away so we cannot fight anymore... this is about Marshall Pusintin.”

“What?” Popal asked.

“This has become personal Popal.” Weoerr told him. “Kunti is right. In Leonidas’s eyes Marshall Pusintin raped his woman. He raped a sitting Queen of the Lycavorian Union. You know how they view such an act within the Union. That she is Queen makes it even worse. You know what he did the last time this very thing happened. He obliterated an entire government and empire. He smashed it under his boot without so much as a second thought and everyone who had a part in that act died gruesome deaths. This is not about drawing Pusintin away so we cannot fight against his son; this is all about killing the Marshall.”

“What are you saying?” Popal asked.

“Leonidas is drawing Marshall Pusintin... drawing us... to a time and place of his very own choosing.” Weoerr said. “When he has us where he wants us, he will strike. When he does strike, many of us, perhaps all of us will not survive. You know this Popal, we know this and our men know this. Marshall Pusintin is bent on revenge for some perceived crimes committed against him by his brother, when it is the Marshall himself who is guilty of those very crimes. King Leonidas would never act in such a manner Popal, no Spartan would. It goes against their code of honor. Pusintin has twisted the facts to suit him. King Leonidas simply took back what belonged to him. And the Elf Queen is his Popal, make no mistake about that. The Marshal is... he is... he is no longer right in his mind.” Weoerr said calmly. “And we are going to be caught in the middle and we will bear the brunt of King Leonidas’s vengeance. And it will be absolute vengeance Popal. He will not offer us mercy or redemption. Not after what Pusintin did to his Queen.”

Popal was silent as he let his eyes move between the men gathered in the room. None of them were in disagreement with what Weoerr had just said that he could see. He moved to the view window in the lounge and looked out at the many stars. “You... you suggest going...” He turned. “You suggest turning against the Marshall of all Kavalian forces!”

“We suggest surviving as opposed to death.” Kunti spoke now.

“The Puma Bane will... they will not follow you.” Popal said.

“The Puma Bane are fanatical fools.” Weoerr spat. “Nothing more than secret police for Keleru. If they wish to follow Pusintin to their deaths so be it. We do not. Do you? You have a woman and three sons... do you not wish to see them again?”

Popal shook his head. “I must... I must think about this.” He said softly.

“Do not think long my friend.” Weoerr spoke. “More and more of us are beginning to feel the same way. It is spreading and there is nothing we can do to stop it. We must decide soon what to do... or it will not matter.”

Popal looked at him. “Give me until the frigates return.” He said. “Let me see what they discover before making a decision.”

“If that is your wish.” Weoerr told him. “Know that if you go to Pusintin with what you now know, it won’t matter. There are too many who feel as we do. He won’t be able to stop the coming storm no matter how many he has the Puma Bane kill.”

“Two days!” Popal hissed. “Give me two days.”

Weoerr nodded. “Two days.” He said. “Then we will decide what is to be in our future and not some madman who is already dead and does not even know it.”

JUNCRO
UNCHARTED PLANET UNKNOWN SPACE

T'lolt hadn't really thought about what seeing him would make him feel. He knew every event that had happened that day on Lycavore. He had given the order originally, yet something had made him reverse himself, and attempt to rescind that same order. When he was told that it was too late and the order had been carried out, he had killed the lone vampire officer who had arrogantly reported this to him. As well as the Immortals who had carried out the order. Given all that was happening on the planet then, hiding their bodies among the many hundreds of High Coven vampire and Immortal dead that day was easy. T'lolt wanted so much to believe that at the end, no matter the distance they had allowed to come between them as family, T'lolt wanted to believe that his brother could not do it. That he had done everything within his power to stop it. As he fingered the small data disc in his hand he knew the truth. So many years of questions and all it took was this one little data disc to show him that what he believed was very much true. Given to him by a Lycavorian officer he did not know at the bidding of Martin Leonidas.

He had talked at length with Cha'talla in the first few weeks after settling on Kranek, each of them finally coming to the belief that indeed their brother had tried to stop it. That no matter the differences between them, he could not bring himself to have his own family killed. The data disc he now held only confirmed what they had believed for over two decades now. He had failed in that task and both of them knew that the shame he must have felt at that must have been overwhelming. Shame he had carried all of these years, increasing the distance between them as family and brothers. He and Cha'talla had decided that if the day ever came where they could make it all go away, they would not hesitate. T'lolt had spoken very briefly with Cha'talla before leaving with Martin and he had agreed with what T'lolt intended. All of them had begun new lives now and the past held no place in the present for the three brothers. They were all that was left of their family and they belonged together. And if not together in body, then at least they all needed to know that they had their brother's backs. It is what Cha'talla wanted, and it was now what T'lolt wanted as well.

T'lolt had a new wife now and the much younger Ir'qua had given him two new sons and one very beautiful daughter in just the last ten years, with plans to have more. Since taking the serum that had returned the Akruvian people to their natural appearance, T'lolt had spent quite a bit of pleasurable time rediscovering his new wife. Ir'qua had arrived with Daniel's wives, as had so many others, and her long flowing black hair and bright eyes had filled T'lolt with desire for her that had taken two full days to quench. Ir'qua remained on Manne now, helping with building the defenses there, not wanting to leave him. Their three children were with her parents back on Kranek and safer than they could be anywhere else but within Union territory. Ir'qua had urged him to go with Martin for this meeting, knowing what he desired deep down in his heart, and as T'lolt stared at his brother's broad back he knew he had made the right decision.

He was reading from a datapad and as T'lolt moved further into the G9 LRR, the two other Immortals who were with him looked up. They recognized him instantly for like Cha'talla there were not many Immortals who did not know who T'lolt was.

"General!" One hissed softly as he rose quickly to his feet.

Pa'cour did not look up or spring to his feet T'lolt saw. He saw his chest and back heave upwards in an almost defeated sigh and he lifted his head to look at the two Immortals. They were obviously security for him and Yuri and very well trained for they imposed themselves between him and Pa'cour.

"Leave us." Pa'cour spoke calmly.

"General... it is..." The younger soldier began.

"I know who it is In'tan." Pa'cour spoke as he rose now. "Leave us. Both of you."

T'lolt noticed that his brother spoke with a command tone in his voice. Very confident and firm. He had been Yuri's Immortal Captain for so long that he had finally learned what this role meant and how he was looked up to by so many other young Immortals. The two younger Immortals looked between each other briefly before moving in his direction. They looked at T'lolt with something akin to awe in their eyes before they moved past him and down the ramp of the G9. T'lolt looked back to his brother.

"Have you come to take your vengeance brother?" Pa'cour asked softly without turning around.

There were only seven years in age between the three brothers and they had often played and explored together as boys. T'lolt's mind flashed back many millennia to those days and he remembered them fondly. He and Cha'talla had spoke of them often as they sat under Kranek's moon and discussed their future and how they wanted Pa'cour to be part of it.

T'lolt moved forward into the G9 until he was standing behind his younger brother. They were the same height and equally massive in size. Pa'cour turned slowly now, intent on facing his brother with the honor he had thought lost so long ago. The honor his love for Yuri and the birth of his daughter had returned to him.

"There is no vengeance to take brother." T'lolt spoke softly.

Pa'cour met his eyes now. That they were brothers and kin to Cha'talla was without doubt or question. Their facial features and eye color were identical. Their bone spurs were a healthy white and placed in almost the exact location on both their faces. Just as they were with their older brother.

"You expect me to believe that?" Pa'cour asked him but with no malice in his voice.

T'lolt held up his hand and held out the data disc. "Martin Leonidas gave me two things my brother." He said. "The first he gave to me the day he saved my life on Lycavore. He gave me blood to heal in order that I might bury my sons. Then he gave me a means to exact my vengeance. Against the true enemies of our people."

"It was I... it was I who gave the order." Pa'cour spoke softly.

T'lolt looked at him. "The second thing he gave to me was not so very long ago when I rejoined him. It is part of why I travel with him now. Follow him as I do."

"What... what was this second thing?" Pa'cour asked.

T'lolt held out the disc further to him. "He gave me hope." He replied. "Hope for the... hope for the future. That one day... that one day our family would be reunited once more. He gave me this. It seems rescuing his mother was not the only thing Martin Leonidas did on that planet that day. He downloaded the entire High Coven database by remote from his ship. Or his people did." T'lolt activated the data disc and a small holographic transmission shimmered into view.

"Order was already given." The High Coven officer spoke dismissively. "You don't think you are truly in command here do you Colonel Pa'cour. You are an Immortal!"

In that transmission Pa'cour snatched up the officer like a doll and he slammed the High Coven Colonel against the wall, tearing out his throat with barely any effort. The memories of that day came rushing back to him.

"They were my family you High Coven piece of filth!" Pa'cour's voice screamed out in the transmission. "My blood!"

T'lolt looked at Pa'cour as he deactivated the disc. "You did not kill my sons brother." He said.

"I gave the order!" Pa'cour insisted.

T'lolt shook his head once more. "The order had already been given by Veldruk. The moment Cha'talla went against him and the High Lord tried to kill our brother the order went out. You tried to stop it."

"But I..." Pa'cour stammered feeling the shame fill him once more. Shame he had buried deep for so long. Shame at his actions. "I should never have done it to begin with!" He hissed.

T'lolt stepped closer to him, his own emotions threatening to break through. "I hated you Pa'cour." He said softly. "For years after that day I hated you. It was our brother Cha'talla who finally convinced me that no matter what had happened between us so long ago... none of that would have made you do such a thing. He made me see that you would never betray your blood. And you did not!"

"But I did T'lolt!" Pa'cour almost shouted. "I..."

T'lolt lifted the data disc slightly higher. "This tells me that you remembered your blood." He said evenly. "This tells me what Cha'talla and then I believed once the pain of their passing was gone. You would have disobeyed your orders to save me and my sons. You were doing that very thing until you discovered that you were not the one who was truly in charge on Lycavore. You did not kill my sons brother... Veldruk did that. All these years... all of this time you have carried a shame that is not yours. We knew this is why you did not come forward. Cha'talla is... our brother is bonded to a dragon now you know."

Pa'cour looked at him with wide eyes. "What?" He gasped.

T'lolt nodded. "He is a very different Cha'talla now. Esther opened his eyes to so many things. She is the Matriarch of our people now... who would have ever thought that?" T'lolt shook his head and chuckled softly. "A pureblood vampire as Matriarch of the Akruxian people. You would like her Pa'cour. She is stubborn and pig headed and smarter than anyone I have ever known. She and our brother... you should see the fights they have had through the years! He has chased her through our village on Kranek many times! He never catches her. Yet she loves him more furiously than anything I have ever seen. And he loves her just as deeply." T'lolt moved even closer. "Just as I now love Ir'qua."

"Ir'qua?" Pa'cour asked.

T'lolt smiled and nodded. "Three thousand years my junior and the most beautiful flower I have ever known. She had to beat me in my head with a tree branch to see my feelings for her. When I surrendered to those feelings I knew I was truly healed. We have two strong sons and a stunning daughter. I understand... I understand that you and Yuri have a child as well. A young daughter."

Pa'cour lifted his eyes and gazed at his brother. "Onera." He said with a nod.

T'lolt tilted his head slightly. "You named her for our grandmother?" He asked.

Pa'cour nodded his head. "Yes. She is... she is like a shining ray of light to both Yuri and I." He said proudly. "She... she was born with some of the skills that the Leonidas children possess. We... we asked Androcles to train her. She departed with him before we left to come here."

T'lolt nodded his head in approval. "Then she will return to you far deadlier and much wiser than when she left." He said. "There are few like Androcles Leonidas anywhere in the Union. When he is finished, she will be more lethal than you or I. And she will know the honor of family and blood."

Pa'cour felt a momentary pang of shame return and he shook his head quickly. "T'lolt I... I must bear the..."

That is when T'lolt did what he had waited to do for many years now. He reached up with his large hands and grabbed his brother's face. He pulled him tight to him and stared into his dark eyes. Pa'cour did not back away or fight him. If this was how it was to end, then better it be at the hands of his brother. His family.

"Leave the past behind you Pa'cour my brother!" T'lolt hissed. "Just as Cha'talla and I have done! It has no place in our future! We have begun anew! The moment Cha'talla went against Veldruk he set our people on a new path! A better path. And look what it has brought us?"

"I... I do not know if I..." Pa'cour stammered the words.

T'lolt pulled him closer. "You already have brother! Your feelings for Yuri! What you are doing now! You let go of the past already and now it is time for you to fully embrace the future! We want our brother back! Cha'talla and I... you are our family Pa'cour! Our brother! There is nothing stronger than blood! For that will carry us through the millennia to come! Throw this shame you carry aside! It is not yours any longer. It never was!" T'lolt then surrendered to the very un-Immortal like emotions that Ir'qua had brought out in him over the last two decades. He pulled Pa'cour into an embrace that would have cracked the ribs of a smaller man. "You have been... and always will be our brother! And we... we love you!"

Pa'cour closed his eyes at those words. He knew what love was now. He had discovered it with Yuri. He loved her with every breath he took and he knew she loved him just as deeply. Yet the love of family was always powerful and always present. He surrendered to the emotions just as T'lolt had and he embraced his older brother just as tightly as T'lolt held him. After a long moment T'lolt squeezed his shoulders and pushed him to arms length.

"Come to Kranek Pa'cour. See what we have built there. Our people flourish." He said.

Pa'cour shook his head quickly. "Yuri and I... we have... we have started something T'lolt." He said. "We have vowed to... our redemption lies in our deeds now. We must insure that Narice succeeds. No matter what it takes."

T'lolt nodded his head slowly. "I understand." He said softly. "Know that you are always welcome Pa'cour."

"Will my Blessed Wife be just as welcome brother?" He asked.

T'lolt nodded his head. "Always. We are all different now. I could see that this was not the same Yuri the moment she stepped off the ship. Others will see it too. And they will know."

"Perhaps... perhaps one day T'lolt." Pa'cour said softly.

T'lolt nodded his head slowly. "We all travel different paths now." He said. "No matter what we do or where we are... we are still brothers. Still blood. And we will always hold that above all else."

Pa'cour gripped his arms tightly, almost painfully. "I will honor this always T'lolt. On the soul of my daughter I will honor this. Just as I have taught her."

"The day will come soon when we will all be together." T'lolt said. "I know Cha'talla will want to embrace our brother once more. When that day comes, we will sit as we did when our father was still alive, around a fire and telling stories not of the past... but of the future to come. And what we will make of it."

Pa'cour nodded his head with a smile. "I... I would like that." He said.

T'lolt nodded. "As would I." He said. "As would I." T'lolt cut his eyes to the side when he sensed the figure on the ramp and he smiled. "You can come out of hiding Tony my friend." He said.

Tony stepped from the shadows of the ramp and moved forward sheepishly. "Sorry." He spoke. "The skipper wanted me to make sure that everything was kosher."

T'lolt looked at him and nodded and turned back to Pa'cour. "Yes my friend. Yes it is." He said. "I introduce my brother Pa'cour. Brother... this is Master Chief Tony Winfield. We are what Martin Leonidas calls his heavy hitters."

Tony moved up without hesitation and held out his hand. "Pleasure to meet T'lolt's brother." He said.

Pa'cour blinked several times and looked at the hand of the huge Lycavorian before grasping it. Tony's handshake was firm and confident without a hint of fear or hesitation. He looked at T'lolt. "What is this... kosher?" He asked.

T'lolt laughed gently. "One of Martin's colorful phrases." He answered. "His way of making sure that our reunion did not go badly."

Tony nodded his head embarrassed. "Marty likes to make sure his people are good to go Colonel Pa'cour." He said. "T'lolt is just as much a member of our team now as I am. We look after each other."

Pa'cour looked at his brother. "His team?" He asked.

T'lolt nodded. "I owed a debt to him after Lycavore and I repaid that debt in his eyes when we protected his daughter Normya. I wanted to travel with him... see what all the fuss was about." T'lolt grinned. "I swear to you brother, it has not been dull for a single moment."

Tony chuckled. "Now that is the truth. The Skipper doesn't do it on purpose... but he tends to attracts trouble. Lots of it."

"It is his charming personality!" T'lolt quipped with a laugh and Tony nodded his head. They all turned when they heard the shuffling of feet and they watched as Yuri moved up the ramp slowly.

Pa'cour moved without hesitation and reached out his hand for her. Yuri took it and he drew her close as T'lolt watched. Yuri folded into his arms, pressing up against his hard body without care who saw and T'lolt knew for sure then. "T'lolt... you..."

T'lolt stepped forward... his eyes upon Yuri. He knew what this woman was capable of. She had proven many times in the past that she was a decisive thinker. Even under the control of that vile Xaxon, she could still be dangerous. There were not many who did not fear Yuri Moran only a year ago, but looking at her now, T'lolt knew that she was different. In her eyes and face he could still see the capacity for decisive and cruel action if needed, but that was now tempered by knowledge and wisdom and love. If ever there was an example of love saving a person then Yuri standing before him now was it.

"You hold my brother's heart and soul within your grasp Yuri." T'lolt spoke softly to her watching as she turned her face upwards and she looked at Pa'cour with bright and adoring dark eyes. "Follow the path you now walk without fear or regret. Do not question or doubt who you have become. Embrace it. And know you are now a member of Cha'talla's clan and family. We will always have your back."

Yuri turned back to look at him. "There is much I need to atone for T'lolt." She said softly.

"We... Yuri." Pa'cour corrected her. "That we need to atone for."

T'lolt nodded his head. "Perhaps." He spoke. "But I believe that when the full story... the final truth reaches the eyes and ears of so many... you will be surprised at what you find."

Yuri nodded. "We shall see." She said softly. "We shall see."

T'lolt looked at Pa'cour and reached out to grasp the arm that was not around Yuri's waist. He squeezed it tightly. "Remember Pa'cour my brother." He said firmly. "From this day forward... we make our own future. And we do not reside in a past that has no place where we are going. From now on we make a new history."

Pa'cour gripped T'lolt's arm tightly and nodded. "To the new future T'lolt. And all it will bring to us."

T'lolt nodded and stepped back. "I will leave you now. There is much all of us have to do." He said.

Pa'cour looked at him. "T'lolt... when you..."

T'lolt shook his head and held out the disc to him. "You will find our brother's personal COM channel on that disc Pa'cour. You do not need me to contact him for you. He has waited over four thousand years to see and talk to you once more. When you are ready... he will be waiting."

Pa'cour squeezed the disc in his hand and nodded. "Go with the Gods brother." He spoke finally.

T'lolt chuckled softly. "I go with Martin Leonidas brother." He said proudly. "The Gods tend to lean in his favor quite often. I think they enjoy watching him react to what others do and hearing him use his colorful metaphors to describe them."

Even Yuri could not hold back the soft laugh that escaped her lips and she nodded her head in agreement. "He does have a way with words no doubt." She said.

"Be safe and proud brother." T'lolt told him. "Be safe and proud."

"And you T'lolt." Pa'cour answered. "And you."

T'lolt nodded and turned without another word and headed down the ramp with Tony falling in behind him. Yuri looked up into Pa'cour's face and placed her hand flat against his chest over his heart.

"Pa'cour my love?" She questioned.

Pa'cour looked down into her face and smiled. "All of these years I have run from a shame that was not mine." He said softly. "I no longer have to run my Blessed Wife."

Yuri's face beamed in happiness. "Neither of us have to run anymore." She stated.

Pa'cour took a deep breath. "We are finished here?" He asked.

Yuri nodded. "Carisia is returning with us. She is saying goodbye... but yes. We have a plan and Martin has agreed to support us."

"Plan?" Pa'cour asked.

Yuri nodded again. "He will have others sent to help Lidene crack my mother's files. When we have discovered what we need to know then it will be up to us."

"What do you mean?" Pa'cour asked her.

Yuri looked at him. "We will find these clones... and any others like them. I gave Martin my word that we would find them."

"And when we do?" Pa'cour asked.

"He has asked that I act in his stead... and remove them from the equation." Yuri replied. "Any equation."

"And what did he say to your request if we do this?" Pa'cour asked.

Yuri looked at him. "He said he would think about it." She answered. "He didn't reject it outright Pa'cour. As much as he likes others to believe he is just a brute, Martin Leonidas is far from it. He thinks outside the box. Sometimes decades into the future. I think he will speak to Androcles and his wives and he will ultimately agree." She said. "It could only tie us together even more than we are now and ultimately make all of us stronger for it."

Pa'cour nodded. "That it would."

Yuri looked at him with bright eyes and smiled. "Besides... that is in the future. We will need to work on making that happen on our end you know?"

Pa'cour grinned at her. "I can think of no more pleasurable a possibility."

"Neither can I." Yuri said as she reached up on her tiptoes and kissed him softly. "Neither can I."

"...can stay with us Carisia. Androcles and the others will be joining us in several weeks anyway." Isabella told her as she stood beside Martin and held Carisia's hands.

Carisia shook her head with a smile. "I need to return." She answered. "My place is with Andro, Sadi and the others."

Martin stepped closer and reached up to run his fingers down her cheek. Carisia basked in the attention for at one point she had not believed that Martin Leonidas would accept her. Now she had no doubts however.

“Remember that you are my son’s wife and mate.” Martin told her. “An extension of his will and purpose. Each of you are a part of him Carisia. And you carry a part of him within each of you. Never doubt your place among our family. Or the influence that you now wield.”

Carisia reached up and covered his large hand on her cheek with her own much smaller one. “I will not.” She stated.

“It would be understandable if you...” Isabella began but Carisia shook her head.

“Andro took a leap of faith when he did what he did.” She stated. “He said we needed to leave behind the past for it does not have a place in our future. We should learn from it, take wisdom from it, but not let it rule what the future will bring. She is my mother... and no matter what has happened before now... she is not the same person. That woman was controlled by Xaxon. My mother is not. Now... now she is the mother that I was meant to have. As Lucia was meant to have. And I wish to discover all I can about the person she was always meant to be.”

Martin leaned over and kissed her cheek. “Then go with the Gods daughter.” He said softly. “And keep my son out of trouble will you.”

Carisia laughed softly. “I will try.” She said.

Martin drew Isabella to him as Carisia turned and began to make her way up the ramp of the G9. Bella turned and looked up into his face.

“Are you going to tell us what is happening Martin?” She asked.

Martin met her eyes and nodded. “When we get back. All of you need to hear it at the same time.”

“And then?” Isabella asked.

“Then we will need to make some decisions.” Martin told her.

CABELIR
KAVALIAN HOMEWORLD
CAPITAL OF PASIRAN
KAVALIAN MILITARY COMMAND HEADQUARTERS

Keleru was silent as he stared out the large window of the conference room waiting for the remainder of his most senior military officers to file in and take their seats. The city was quiet now, the sun having set three hours ago and now the twin moons rising high into the sky. Keleru’Puut had watched Pasirran grow from practically nothing into the great city it now was. His hold over the Kavalian people had been absolute for more millennia than he could even recall now. It did not matter to him that only those loyal to him held any real influence or power with the city. It didn’t matter to him that only a select few held the true wealth, and the common people had simply an illusion. None of these things mattered to him, only maintaining his hold on power in whatever manner he could. With the Puma Bane Commandos under his direct command, no one and nothing had ever challenged his rule. They had removed any and all of the threats to his power and control through the years, and in some cases quite brutally and even in public. Keleru ruled by fear he knew, but fear was a great motivator and it instilled loyalty in even the most hardly of men. As the years passed he had made a show of bending to the will of his people in some instances, though none of the changes he had ever promised came to be.

Now Keleru’Puut felt something he had never felt before. He was concerned. He was very concerned that it was all coming apart.

Keleru looked up when he saw the shadow of his nephew appear next to him. “Mata?” He inquired.

“The senior officers are all present now Uncle.” Mata told him in a soft whisper.

Keleru nodded and turned in his chair to look at the men in this room with him. His senior and most loyal supporters. They commanded the largest Prides within the Kavalian Federation. They were the most wealthy and the most powerful. And like him, they had the most to lose.

“I thank you all for coming.” Keleru began as his eyes touched all of the men at the table. “These past weeks have been hard on all of us. I instructed several of you to concentrate your duties on providing information for this briefing. You are the most senior Pride Leaders and military officers within the whole of the Kavalian Federation. When all of the information has been presented we will need to make some hard choices.” Keleru told them. “Admiral Menot is also joining us via holotransmission from Hadaria. I will delay no longer and remember that this day we need hard facts and not glossy lies.”

The men in the room glanced among one another at the sternness of his voice, doing exactly what Keleru wanted them to do. He glanced at the man to his immediate left. “In the absence of Marshall Pusintin, I asked Admiral Skio to act as interim Marshall. I tasked him with gathering as much information and data that he could on Pian’Nruarani and the forces and support he has been able to obtain in recent weeks and correlating it all together.” Keleru looked at the man calmly and nodded. “Skio... please.”

The man returned the nod and rose to his feet. He took a deep breath and moved to the large star chart behind him.

“As you all know, the traitor Pian’Nruarani broadcast a pirated message from deep within Union territory and into Kavalian space. We do not know how they were able to supersede our secure COM channels and network. Nruarani declared that he was freely elected by the leaders of over forty Prides as the Interim Leader of the only true Kavalian government. They have now established a working government of Pride leaders as well as a rebel military force. The Union and the High Coven have officially recognized his rebel government, as well as half a dozen assorted free and independent alliances and governments throughout the quadrant. Most of them are small and insignificant, but it does give his rebel government some measure of political clout.” Skio told them all as he looked around the table. “This came as a complete surprise to our Intelligence Network, as we had assumed Nruarani and those who followed him were either dead or at the very least being held by the Lycavorians in prison and being interrogated. As you all saw from the transmission, this was not the case. Our few agents within Lycavorian space were equally unaware of his intentions or the support of the Union until after the fact. We still have several assets in place within the Lycavorian Union, however by the time we learned of what was happening from them, the Nruarani Pride and those that aligned with them were able to evacuate all of their Pride members and the vast majority of their major material assets out of Kavalian space. As it stands right now, with the information that we have been given or have discovered ourselves, it appears that Pride Shan and Pride Kazi are the largest of those that have openly aligned with Pride Nruarani.”

“Skio...” A man asked openly. “How solid is your information?”

“I won’t go into details... but we do still have several agents within Union space as well as on Earth itself. One or two of them highly placed.” Skio answered. “The information I will be presenting is as accurate as it can get.”

“Do we dare continue to trust those who have betrayed their own people? Who continue to betray their own people?” Another man asked. “What if they are discovered? The Union has the Krypteria, and they do not play games when it comes to traitors.”

“Allow me to worry about the reliability of the agents providing this information. And the continued precision of their reports.” Keleru spoke up. “For now, know that I have reviewed it all and I trust in its accuracy.”

Skio nodded to Keleru and then continued. “All told there are perhaps forty odd Prides that have openly joined with Nruarani in declaring themselves free and who are supporting this outlaw Kavalian government. We do not know as of yet how many Prides are secretly supporting him and the other outlaw rebels. I have instructed the Puma Bane officers, with Prefect Keleru’s authorization, to begin an immediate seizure of all remaining property and assets of all those Prides who have sided with Nruarani. As well as keeping tabs on those that we might suspect as being loyal to him. Unfortunately, it does appear as if they are much better organized than we envisioned. Pride Nruarani and Pride Shan have completely dismantled and stripped their entire ship building apparatus. Their bases and shipyards are abandoned and to be quite honest, they took nearly everything that was not secure in some manner. They even took some of the major buildings from their home planets.”

“Buildings?” Another officer asked. “How do you take an entire building?”

Skio shrugged his broad shoulders. “I do not know... but they managed this.” He replied. “This is not a great hindrance to us as a whole. Pride Nruarani had yet to begin supplying the Kavalian Fleet with their new HUNTRESS-Class Frigates, but we have obtained the plans and schematics from other sources and will be able to build them without their help. Operational re-tasking of three shipyards has already begun to begin building the ships. The first wave of these ships should begin hitting the front line fleets within eight months. We estimate that Nruarani's full complement of ships, to include those from the other Prides supporting him does not exceed six hundred ships. Among those, perhaps nineteen GREAT SOUL-Class Command ships." Skio spoke.

"Then we need to find them and crush them quickly." A senior ground General spoke up now.

Skio nodded. "I would tend to agree in most cases General Fersi..." He said. "However it is not the number of ships he has that is the main concern. It is the logistical support he now has that is worrisome."

"Logistical support?" Fersi asked. "What could he have? A few small portable shipyards and perhaps a main base on a moon somewhere?"

Skio shook his head. "If only that were the case." He said. "According to our asset within the Union, the following list of material support has been made available to Nruarani from both the Union and the High Coven. It is coming across to your pads now. They have seized Rizon Four on the outer edge of our border with the Limian fools as their base of operations within Kavalian space."

"Skio... we know where they are?" Another Admiral spoke up now. "Why have we not sent our fleets to crush them?"

One of the ground commanders gasped and looked up from the data pad where he had been reading the report. "Two PROMETHUS-Class Command Stations?" He nearly choked as he spoke.

Skio nodded his head somberly. "It appears Rizon Four is rich in the mineral Ostronium. It is something that the Union uses for their military. We never considered it worth anything so it was never mined. We do not yet know what the Union uses it for. Our researchers say it has no real practical value. Apparently, Nruarani agreed to several trade agreements with the Union already. The Union fronted him an enormous amount of riyal, a credit line they call it, and he made purchases."

"Purchases?" The General exclaimed. "He purchased two of the Union's front line Heavy Command Stations! Just one of them could have defended Rizon Four from everything short of a full fledged attack. Two of them will make it next to impossible without fully committing two thirds of our Fleet Groups to the attack!"

Skio nodded his head in agreement. "You are correct very General. However, the two Command stations are not all he purchased." Skio held up the pad. "The information we were able to obtain from our agents indicates that he negotiated for at least ten Lycavorian Union Resource and Supply Stations and half a dozen RENDER-Class Portable shipyards. These yards are capable of supporting and repairing his collection of medium and heavy cruisers easily. Also he has acquired the use of three Hadarian Orbital Field Hospitals. These will undoubtedly be staffed by Hadarian Healers since it is they who handle all of the Union's medical facilities."

"The Hadarians are helping him?" A voice asked.

Admiral Menot looked up from the pad he was reading in his office on Hadaria. The image was somewhat fuzzy since it was a military channel and Kavalian communications relays were not Union quality.

"If the hospitals are staffed by Hadarians it will be those who refused to return to Hadaria at Buonau's order." He spoke up.

"How many followed her order to return?" Another officer asked.

Menot shook his head. "None of those actively involved in the Union military responded to her directive. She has implemented an accelerated training program here on Hadaria for those who were already training. They can not actually take the field until they have finished their schooling and Ascended. The next Ascension Ceremony is scheduled for five months from now. When the Nebula is at its peak."

"Can they not make it happen sooner Menot?" Keleru asked now.

Menot shook his head. "My apologies Prefect... but no. I will admit that I did not have any idea on how the Hadarians were able to do what they do. I was skeptical at first about what she told me... but since being here Buonau has given me quite a bit of schooling on this. The nebula is at its peak twice a year. This is the time when it saturates one portion of their planet with intense metaphysical radiation. This is where they have built their Ascension temple. The ceremony is conducted here. I won't go into small details, but without ascending... it would be like sending partially trained field medics to perform battlefield tasks. It can not be rushed."

"And you are certain she is not just misleading you?" Keleru asked.

Again Menot shook his head. "No Prefect. She has been very forthcoming as I said. She truly hates Anja Leonidas and the path she perceived Anja Leonidas was taking their people down. She would like nothing better than to see her taken prisoner and used like a whore in the Brothels on Nefoa. As long as she has our support for her religious government she will give us what we want.”

Skio looked at the men. “The new High Coven Empress has also given freely of support. What little they can spare.” He told them. “An offer of several smaller portable shipyards was made and accepted. While these are not of Union capabilities... they will be able to move them around much easier and they can fully support the large number of frigates that Nruarani has under his command.”

“We should punish them for that!” Another officer barked out.

Keleru nodded. “I agree... however... the Union still has ten full Fleet Groups supporting the High Coven. With their Fleet Commander Riall in personal command of them. We thought they would withdraw back to Lycavorian Union space after the new vampire wench took power, but apparently the oldest son Androcles has an affinity for the vampire worms. And the new Empress is now the wife to his brother. He has offered them these ships and materials for as long as they are needed and there is no sign they plan to exit High Coven space any time soon.”

“We still have them outnumbered Prefect.” Another Admiral spoke. “By three to one odds easily.”

Skio nodded and continued after looking at Keleru and receiving the nod. “This is true... but these are not second class Union ships and personnel.” He spoke. “These are battle tested and proven ships and soldiers. You saw what they did to our fleets that attempted to punish the vampire scum before. We can not risk another loss such as that. Admiral Riall is their foremost Fleet Commander... and his tactics and actions during the Evolli War speak to the fact that he is not against unorthodox methods. He is also the overall leader of their military, and second to only the King. If he is present in the theater of operation then you can be assured the Union, and by association the High Coven, will not be caught off guard or do something stupid. That also goes to the remaining High Coven officers. Fleet Admiral Pontal is their most experienced and respected field commander. A man who gave us fits during our war with them. He and Riall have joined forces and mixed the different units so that their abilities complement each other.”

An older General leaned forward in his chair now. “We can not fight on three fronts.” He spoke wisely. “Not even we can sustain such operations. Skio... why has the Union not fought us directly? King Leonidas, the Crown Prince, even the Prime Minister has said a state of war now exists between us. Why have they not come after us directly as they did before?”

Skio nodded his head. “I wondered that myself for a time General Kacur.” He spoke. “The operations they conducted were quite successful.”

“Successful?” Another Admiral spoke. “They decimated over six hundred of our front line warships with this new battleship they have. A ship that they took from a planet within our own borders. A ship that is far more advanced and powerful than anything we can put in the field. A ship that has since disappeared and we have no idea where it may reappear. They then utterly destroyed our main cloning facility with another new class of ships that is again, far beyond anything we can field. The main Cloning facilities which, I might add, we thought were untouchable due to their location within Kavalian space. That does not include the deep strike mission they conducted here on our homeworld right under our very noses to secure the release of a few dozen whores used by our officers. I would say they were more than successful Skio. I would say they were toying with us.”

Keleru nodded his head in agreement much to the surprise of the gathered men and he did not go off on an angry and volatile rage. “All very true.” He said.

“Prefect... how is it that they knew this ship was there when we did not?” Another officer asked. “How did they even have the knowledge to operate such an advanced warship? It is most certainly not of Union design. How did we not know about these new ships that they did build? Just two of them wiped out a force three times their number with barely any losses. Shouldn't the assets we have within Union space known about this?”

Keleru looked at him taking no offense at the question. “These two instances were not within the abilities of our assets to acquire intelligence on.” He replied. “They were taken by surprise just as we were. We have known for some time that the Lycavorian Union is utterly ruthless on security. We wrongly assumed that because we could not obtain such information that nothing like this was happening. I should have known better.” Keleru rose to his feet and moved to the large window overlooking the city. “I will freely admit to making some major miscalculations in recent months. I believed information and assertions told to me that we could not confirm. I believed them because I felt they were a quicker way to making the Union fall apart from within. They were errors. Massive errors that I alone bear the responsibility for.” He spoke to the window as the men listened. “The plan to take Leonidas’s second Elf Queen was ill conceived and should never have been attempted. The information we had was accurate to a point but we did not know the more in depth details of how the Union government is set up. We also did not anticipate the response by the civilians within the Union when we thought we had killed Leonidas and his youngest Queen in Sparta. Several of our Puma Bane Strike teams and their members were butchered by armed civilians before they even had a chance to escape. We thought their deaths would send the government and people into a tailspin.” He turned back around to look at the men. “I did not anticipate such a smooth transition to the oldest son. I also did not expect how large a mistake that was. We acted without having any real Intelligence on the oldest son and we paid dearly for it. No one could have predicted he would do what he did. Blowing up the Jump Gates around Hadaria; planning the deep strike attacks as he did against our clone facilities. Destroying the moon to keep us from invading along the Limian border was also something I never thought he would do. I underestimated him by far. After seeing what he did to our Ambassador at that meeting I realized that he is different. His father is different. His younger pureblood brother Denali, I think his name is, he is different.” Keleru looked at the men at the table. “They have a power that I cannot explain. And until we learn how to deal with it... we need to avoid them.”

“What are you suggesting Prefect?” a General asked.

Keleru moved back to the table. “Skio?”

“As General Togark has said... we cannot sustain a war on three fronts.” Skio told them. “It is logistically impossible. Therefore... we will be pulling our forces from High Coven space and leaving only a token force in the area that we control.” Skio told them. “We will then direct that power into finding and killing Nruarani and his forces.”

“And the Union support he is getting?” A man asked. “Do we target Union facilities?”

Skio shook his head. “The Prefect believes, and after reviewing all the data I concur, that if we avoid direct confrontation with the Union, then they will not intercede as we wipe out Nruarani and his rebels.” He said.

“You actually believe this?” A General asked.

“We have discovered from our assets in Union space that such an order does exist. If the situation becomes untenable for Nruarani in any way, he has an open invitation to retreat back across the border with his rebel supporters where the Union will protect him.” Skio spoke.

Skio let a smile escape his lips as he looked at the gathered men. “We are going to make things untenable for him.”

AMANUCE PROTECTORATE HOMEWORLD CAPITAL CITY OF LORENT

Dutkne watched Denali’s face as they flew in the hovercar over the expanse of the city below. This trip had been unexpected, but not something they could not accommodate easily. The buzz was already about that he was here. It appeared that the Vanari news people got hold of the information that Denali was departing for the Protectorate homeworld with Coryn Re Mydala and others. That Coryn was accompanying him must have stuck in the ribs of other SBR members who Dutkne knew had wanted to visit Amanuce in the past but were denied. Once the Vanari news organizations got the information, it quickly found its way to the many News outlets here on Amanuce. Lorent was abuzz with the knowledge that he was here, to many this signaling that his brother the Crown Prince was not far off. Dutkne knew better, but Denali would tell him what was going on when the time was right. He was much like Andro and his face was unreadable at the moment.

Dutkne had been initially surprised at how easily he had fallen into the role he now held as Andro’s Praetorian Mage. He had always hated politics and soon he would not have to deal with it anymore aside from small bits. Discovering Androcles and the connection they shared was a brilliant light to him. Though five centuries older than Androcles, he discovered that they had more in common than anyone suspected. He did not know why it had worked out this way, but Dutkne did not avoid or turn away from what coursed through him now. He knew Andro nearly as well as his wives and mates, and what they could do together would only grow in power as they trained and the years passed. His grandfather had told him this when the Etheric connection between them was discovered, and for once in his life Dutkne did not dismiss what Wayonn told him. He accepted it fully. He was much calmer now, more patient, but also much more prone to fits of emotion just like Androcles. Especially concerning things he was passionate about.

The Lycavorian people on Amanuce were ecstatic about the coming merger; all the polls conducted indicating that it was viewed with a ninety-nine percent approval rating. Everyone knew this day would come one day, but Dutkne had not believed that the people would accept it so readily however. It was very nice to see that he was more than wrong.

Arduri sat beside Deni, gripping his hand tightly as she looked out the window of the car and viewed the surroundings below with excitement. She had never been to the Protectorate homeworld and this trip was going to be one of discovery no matter the real reason for it. At least for her. Dutkne could see that Caliria was also excited about being here, but she kept her emotions more in check. He knew without question that there was something different about both of the sisters, and he had an idea what that was, but it was not his place to bring it up. The blue of Caliria's skin was vibrant and healthy and no matter what had happened to her in the past months she had recovered fully. No doubt that Androcles's love had aided that more than anything else, but she was a strong willed woman to begin with Dutkne knew. Caliria was also now a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union and she would soon discover that she had far more influence here on Amanuce than even she believed. Coryn had changed as well over the last months, and it was a change that only meant good things for him and the Lycavorian people. Dutkne had an inkling of why Denali wanted to come here so quickly, but he would let Denali tell them, though he had already laid the groundwork. Being connected to Androcles in such a way granted him the insight and perception to know many things that others did not. It was something he was growing accustomed to quickly.

"I tried to keep our News organizations from finding out you were coming but it didn't work out too well." Dutkne spoke with a small smile. "It seems they have their own code of ethics and once the Vanari found out, the people here found out within an hour."

Denali turned to him with a smile. "I didn't think it was going to be a secret." He said.

"Care to fill me in?" Dutkne asked unable to keep his inquisitive mind at bay. "It's not everyday that a member of the Vanari Senior Board of Regents comes to Amanuce. If I am not mistaken, Devra was the last one."

Coryn looked at him with a sheepish grin. "There were quite a few who were not happy with this trip. Especially those who we have incriminating evidence against." He said with a relaxed voice. "Thankfully it happened out of the blue and they did not have the time to stop it."

Dutkne nodded his head. "Understandable I suppose." He commented. "But do they fear you coming here because you might discover something to use against them? Or is it because you are now out of their reach and can not be harmed?"

"I'm guessing it is a little bit of both." Coryn answered.

"Are we so sure father is out of their reach as you say Dutkne?" Caliria asked. "As high up as we believe this goes... perhaps they are not as fearful as we believe."

Dutkne nodded his head confidently. "Perhaps... but my people are not as limited as the Vanari in what they are able to accomplish without offending someone's sensibilities." He replied. "Everyone that we even remotely suspect of being involved in the slave ring is being monitored around the clock. They will not be able to make a move against him without us knowing about it within moments of the plan being hatched."

"They will not try anything now." Deni spoke now. "They will not try anything for fear of exposing themselves because they believe they are still hidden."

Dutkne nodded. "Very true." He said. "I will assume then that this visit has something to do with the fact that Caliria and Arduri both are now part wolf?"

Arduri and Caliria looked at him quickly and he smiled. "It's not something you can hide ladies. At least not from a Lycavorian." Dutkne answered. He glanced at Coren quickly. "I hope I did..."

Coren shook his head. "No." He stated. "I am aware of it." He answered. "Not sure if I understand it completely... but I know of it. I think part of me already knew."

“It’s not a bad thing sir.” Dutkne said.

“No. No... I don’t think it is either Dutkne.” Coren answered. “I’m just... I’m just trying to absorb everything as it comes to me. Much of what I have learned these last months has caught me completely and utterly by surprise. These revelations have made me stop and rethink my entire view of life. It’s a bit overwhelming.”

Dutkne nodded. “I imagine it is.” He said. He watched as Caliria reached out and took her father’s hand within hers. “Thankfully you have lots of support.” He told him.

Coren nodded as Arduri reached across the car and touched his knee. “Yes I do.” He said with a smile. “Yes I do.”

“Nirilo will meet us at the complex.” Dutkne said seeing Coren meet his eyes. “Tonight I will show all of you the best place to get food in the entire city. Of course... I am biased since it is my mother’s eatery. But she serves Vanari food as well as Lycavorian food.”

“Vanari food?” Coren asked. “That is strange isn’t it?”

Dutkne looked at him. “Not after what you will see Coren Re Mydala. Not after what you see.”

ICARAVA
DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD
DARASTRIXETHE (DRAGONBLOOD) SPACE
CAPITAL CITY OF ONELD

Aviel Em'mor sat quietly in his sprawling office overlooking the huge river that cut through the northern part of Icarava’s capital city Oneld. His status and rank as a Filkiati, or Justice of the UrIkrisir Mamiss, allowed him a private office of massive proportions and one with a staggering view of Oneld’s beauty to go with it. He was reviewing the files given to him by Chalith and Shalu and to say that he was aghast at what he had read and seen would be a very mild reaction. He had never believed the Darastrixi, his people, would be capable of such things, or allowing them to happen to their own people. The Darastrixi Maidens taken from Icarava by the Scourge were removed ostensibly under the guise of a diplomatic program to improve relations with the Scourge. This is what had been told to the many parents and families who accepted this arrangement. None of them knew the truth of it. None of them were even aware of the horrors their daughters had been enduring, were enduring, if they were even still alive.

It had all been a lie.

One of Shalu’s most promising students had been one of the twenty Maidens chosen a century ago. That young woman had the presence of mind to implant a hidden transmitter in her right eye. It had recorded hours upon hours of horrible experiments and savage rapes as each of the Maiden females were subjected to hideous treatment. Aviel now did not doubt Chalith’s word that the Scourge were obviously trying to discover the gene that Laren Ti'shara possessed. They also seemed to be trying to breed a combination of Scourge and Darastrixi offspring, yet so far none of these evil spawns had ever survived for very long. The offspring were vile and wicked creatures, yet the Scourge Elites had mocked and enjoyed raping the Darastrixi Maidens until they were impregnated. It had happened over and over again, each Maiden raped countless times until they conceived and then they were hooked to horrible machines to speed the births. When the offspring came to term and were discovered to be disgusting creatures, they were destroyed and the Maiden females were once more tossed into the breeding holds to have it happen all over again. The recordings Aviel had been watching had nearly brought him to tears and when Shalu’s student could no longer endure the agony after thirty years, she threw herself off a towering bridge they were crossing at the time. Aviel had wept then. Wept for the loss of such innocence and what his leaders had accepted in order to avoid conflict with the Scourge. Aviel had no doubts that if their people saw this transmission in its entirety, there would be a unified mass call for total and savage vengeance in its complete form.

Aviel quickly looked up and across the sprawling office area when the door to his inner sanctum slid open and his memamosal of nearly fifty thousand years strode into the large room. He reigned in his emotions and put on a happy face. His union with Nahko had been arranged by his parents and hers when they were still within the adolescent stages of their lives, but they had quickly grown to love each other through the many years together. Nahko Em'mor was now the Senior Assistant Director of the largest and most prestigious Medical Center on Icarava, and perhaps one of the top ten physicians anywhere on their planet. He could tell just from her body language that she was excited and he quickly pushed his emotions to the back and set aside the data scroll as she crossed the office area quickly and settled into the chair across from his huge desk. She had been here many times in the past and his guards always escorted her directly to his office without pause.

“Aviel... what... do you know... I...” Nahko couldn't help but stammer as she tried to gain control of her racing heart and thoughts.

Aviel rose to his feet with a smile and moved to the long counter to the right of his desk and quickly poured his memamosal a glass of her favorite juice. Nahko always seemed to have trouble focusing her words when she was excited about something. It was a trait he had adored about her from the very beginning of their life together. It was a life they had shared for nearly sixty thousand years now. After thirteen children Nahko could still stir the passion within him with just a look. He moved back to where she sat and held out the glass for her to take. She did so without question and he settled into the plush chair beside her.

“Breath Nahko.” He said with a smile. “I do not question that you are just as stunned as I was when I met them.”

Nahko glanced at him as she sipped the juice. “Stunned?” She gasped. “That is not... that is not a word I would use to describe what I have just seen and examined.”

Aviel nodded with a smile. “No doubt.” He said. “What have you discovered Nahko?” He asked her. “And hold nothing back my wife. I need to know it all so that I can do what needs to be done in order to protect them.”

Nahko breathed deeply and took another long pull of the juice before setting the glass on the table between them. “Where to begin?” She said softly.

“The medical part of it would be a good place.” Aviel spoke.

Nahko looked at him and her eyes narrowed as they always did just before she slugged him. This time was no different as her hand snapped out and she slapped his face gently. Their lives had never been dull and Nahko Em'mor would not trade her love for Aviel for anything in the galaxy. They had accomplished so much, not to mention they had raised thirteen beautiful children together. Nahko had seen something in his eyes all those millennia ago. Something that told her a life with this man would be filled with devotion and love. She had not been the least bit disappointed.

“Do not rush me!” She hissed almost playfully.

Aviel grinned and felt more and more refreshed as Nahko's unique presence filled him and chased away the horrors of what he had been viewing for the last two hours. She could instill such peace in him. No matter what had vexed him through the years, simply holding her in his arms could sooth his soul. “Of course not.” He said finally.

Nahko took a deep breath and held out one of the three data scrolls she carried. He took it from her but did not activate it. He wanted the word of his wife for she would include her own insight for him while the scroll would have just her professional medical observations. Aviel had learned long ago that Nahko surpassed him in not only intelligence but also insightfulness and many times through the years he had questioned if he deserved her love.

“Medically Aviel... I have never seen anything like it in my entire life.” Nahko told him. “Not even in written historical journals of medical anomalies. And those date back some three million years.” She reached out and took his hand in hers. “From a strictly medical review they are the picture of health. Beyond healthy in fact. Laren is in better physical condition than many of our finest athletes and warriors. Ladur is... well I dare say he is easily one of the most perfect specimens of a Vrrarhoinpa that I have ever seen. They are... they are very different however.”

“Different how?” Aviel asked.

“Aside from the quite obvious physical differences?” She asked him sarcastically. “Ladur is just a child in years yet he possesses the musculature and temperance of a dragon a thousand years his senior.” Nahko told him. “Laren... well she is the very first Darastrix to ever have hair Aviel! How much more different do you need?”

“Nahko...?” Aviel began.

His wife shook her head quickly and waved her other hand. "I know. I will keep from rambling." She stated.

"You are beautiful when you ramble." Aviel told her.

Nahko laughed softly. "Flatterer." She said. She met her husband's eyes seriously after a moment. "Aviel... she is not completely Darastrixi either."

Aviel leaned back in his chair. "Not Darastrixi?" He stammered. "What else could she be Nahko? Her mother said she hatched just as..."

Nahko nodded in agreement. "Yes. I saw the official records. That she was hatched is not in question."

"Then I do not understand. What do you mean?" Aviel spoke.

"Her bone density is twenty-nine percent higher than even the most robust Darastrixi ever recorded in our medical history." Nahko spoke. "Her regenerative systems are thirty-six percent higher than a normal Darastrixi's should be. Her reactive skills I cannot calculate because they exceed every medical chart we use to measure by. She is faster and stronger than normal and she would be able to endure injuries that would put a normal Darastrixi down for weeks. Even months. If they were able to survive at all. I did not bother to test Ladur in this way for I was too astonished at her results."

"Nahko... how is this possible?" Aviel asked.

"I asked her if she would allow me to draw blood from both her and Ladur for testing." Nahko said. "I brought my own equipment as you know. She was very positive about it. I could not hide my expression from her and when she saw it she even encouraged it."

"Encouraged?" Aviel asked.

"She is not as introverted as you told me." Nahko said. "Well... perhaps it was because her mother was there as well, but she was very friendly and open. I did not ask many unrelated questions like you told me, but she was very forthcoming Aviel."

"So you took blood samples?" Aviel asked.

Nahko nodded. "From both her and Ladur." She answered. "What I found was... it was astounding."

"I don't follow." Aviel told her.

Nahko got to her feet and moved back to the counter with her glass. She refilled the juice and turned back to face her husband. "How much do you know of the Elbakiw Sulevfu's Data Base of Intergalactic species my mrrandii?" (Husband)

Aviel shook his head. "Very little... why?"

"Nor do I. I had to check as I was returning here. There are two species in the known universe with a bone density that surpasses our own Aviel." Nahko said. "And does so by a very wide margin."

Aviel rose now as well and moved over in front of her. "Why does this matter?" Aviel asked.

"Because when I entered the sample parameters into my computer, that is the answer I was given." Nahko replied. "She saw my eyes and expression again and she simply smiled at me. I did two other tests to confirm my findings and the results were the same. Identical even. So I asked her if I could conduct another DNA test and she agreed." Nahko shook her head. "It was almost as if she knew I would ask these things Aviel."

"I found her to be incredibly insightful and far wiser than she seemed. She and Ladur, they seemed to be of one mind." Aviel said with a nod.

Nahko nodded quickly. "I felt this as well. Almost as if they knew things we did not. Not behavior I have seen from a joined pair even after centuries together."

Aviel nodded. "Nor I." He agreed. "What did your tests tell you?" Aviel asked.

"Aviel... she is not wholly Darastrixi as I said." Nahko said softly.

"What do you mean by that Nahko?" Aviel asked.

"I found two different core DNA strands within her blood Aviel. Aside from Darastrixi core DNA strands." Nahko told him with bright eyes. "Three distinctly different core strands, yet they blended together seamlessly."

"Nahko... you know my knowledge of medical terminology is useless." He told her. "What does this mean?"

“I found the core DNA strands of two entirely different species within her blood Aviel.” Nahko said seeing his face look at her in shock. “Merged with her Darastrixi blood but still entirely different. It is as if they have formed a very cohesive symbiosis within her blood.”

“How... how is that possible?” Aviel asked.

Nahko shook her head. “I do not know Aviel. It shouldn’t be. The only way this could have possibly happened is if she was the product of parents of this DNA, which we know she is not.” She told him. “Yet within her blood is the DNA of two entirely different species.”

“Which species?” Aviel asked.

“The species who she claims her isthasyi are from.” Nahko said seeing his face change to one of surprise. “Her sepa isthasyi.” Nahko set her glass down and then reached out and took his arm in her hands. “Aviel... who is this pair she speaks of? These soul brothers?” She asked him. “And be honest with me now husband. There is much more going on here than you first told me. Now I need to know.”

Aviel looked at her and nodded his head. “Nahko what do you know of the Lorsvek ar Sepas?” He asked her softly.

Nahko’s eyes grew slightly wider. “The Prophecy of Souls?” She gasped. “I know it is the most sacred of our legends. Zezhuanth will choose six among trillions to carry his tobor jedark and vers. The very essence of who he was. It is said they would stand at the head of a massive army to deliver the Darastrixi and trillions of others within the galaxy from the darkness.”

Aviel smiled at her. Nahko had always been more attuned to their religious nature than he was. “Then you know more than I did when this all began.” He stated gently.

“When what began?” Nahko asked. “Aviel are you saying...?”

Aviel nodded slowly again. “The Lorsvek ar Sepas is happening.” He said. “Right now. Right before our very eyes. Laren and Ladur are the Darastrixi part of the prophecy. It is what Chalith and Shalu have been hiding for so long. Protecting. She told me of her sepa isthasyi as well. The DNA you found within her blood. It was Lycavorian and Vampiric wasn’t it?”

Nahko looked at him with wide eyes as she stepped back from him. “How did you...?” She gasped.

“She told me.” Aviel spoke easily now. “She told me a bit about them. What she knew anyway. At least what she was willing to share with me. Which was not a lot mind you. I truly believe she does not fully trust anyone but Ladur. Her mother and father yes... but outside of them... no one else.” Aviel looked at her. “The species you spoke of... the blood you found within her... one of them is Lycavorian isn’t it?” He pressed her.

Nahko nodded her head slowly. “And the Vampiric DNA would account for her reflexes and speed. I was able... once I saw the results of my computer inquiry I did a search for their species as well.”

“You did not keep it on your computer did you?” He asked quickly.

Nahko shook her head just as quickly. “I never keep information on my portable... you know that. I transfer it to my main core at our home and delete it from my portable.”

Aviel turned away from her slowly and moved to the front of his desk where he took a deep breath. He looked out the large window at the scenery below him once more. “I did not truly believe it was happening until just now.” He said softly. “Until you told me what flows within her blood. What do you know of these Lycavorian?” He asked her turning back to face her.

Nahko shook her head quickly as she moved closer to him, looking up into his handsome face. “Nothing at all.” She answered. “Only that they are a minor species within some quadrant of space where we have only monitoring probes. The... the Pralor Science Division used them to seed different worlds if I am not mistaken.”

“The Alpha Quadrant yes.” Aviel pondered. “Not so minor a species anymore it seems. If they ever were. Not if two of the six Dahakoan come from within their species.” Aviel said.

Nahko came up behind him her eyes wide. “Dahakoan!” She gasped.

He turned to look at her and nodded. “Dragonkin.” He said softly. “Those who Zezhuanth said he would bestow his power and wisdom too. You spoke part of the prophecy yourself just moments ago. The Dahakoan would be born fully aware of all around them, bound to their Vrrarhoinpa before they ever took a breath of life. And they would be able to feel the existence of their fellow Dahakoan from across the time and distance of space. And that they would be able to wield the power of the Pralor Praetorians like it was part of them.”

“The Praetorians!” Nahko gasped aloud. “The last of the Praetorians was killed millennia ago Aviel!”

Aviel shook his head. "Not if what Chalith and Shalu have told me is true. Laren... Laren and Ladur both are manifesting their Etheric abilities into the physical realm. They have been for over ten years now."

"Ini wer geou ar Zezhuanth." Nahko muttered softly. (By the will of Zezhuanth.)

Aviel nodded his head. "Now you know what is at stake here." He said softly. "Can you even imagine three joined pairs able to wield the power of the Praetorians Nahko? Just... just the influence they would garner is staggering. Not just among our people but so many others as well. The Pralor people as a whole may have been considered arrogant and overbearing but the Praetorians were respected and held in awe by many."

Nahko looked at him. "But... but why Aviel? Why now?"

"Chalith, Shalu and Ch'teven believe it has something to do with the Scourge." Aviel told her.

Nahko's eyes grew wide and savage. "Those vile creatures!" She rasped the words. Like most Darastrixi, Nahko abhorred ever the mention of them in conversation.

"Do you trust me my wife?" He asked softly.

"Aviel... how can you ask me that question after so long?" Nahko answered as she gazed at him.

"This is why I did not tell you everything about them." He explained. "There is far more going on here than you know. Even I do not know all of it... but I intend to find out."

"What does this have to do with them?" Nahko asked. "With Laren and Ladur?"

"The Scourge will begin looking for her soon." Aviel told her. "I'm not certain when... but soon."

"Why?" Nahko asked. "What is she to them? What are they to those evil monsters?"

"The Praetorians are the only force in the known universe that the Scourge feared my Nahko." He said. "What do you think they would do if they discovered that two Darastrixi now hold that power?"

"They..." Nahko looked at him. "They would come for them." She gasped softly.

Aviel nodded his head. "Yes. There is much more going on here than I first told you as I said but now you need to know. You will... you will be horrified at what you will discover my beautiful Nahko. Just as I was."

"You are beginning to frighten me sia itov." She spoke. (My love)

"Then you will join me when I say I am terrified." He told her. "We must insure that we discover all we can before the Scourge determine she and Ladur exist and then we must make sure they are not here on Icarava to be found." Aviel told her.

"Why?" Nahko asked.

"You would not like the answer if I were to give it to you my wife." He said. "Just trust me on this."

"Why must we make sure they are not here?" Nahko persisted.

"Because I for one do not want our people subjected to the fury of four who can wield the power of a Praetorian because we handed their myvish and isthasy over to the Scourge." Aviel answered her.

"You speak of the other Dahakoan?" Nahko said.

Aviel nodded. "As I said... Laren shared a little of them with me." He told her. "They would not be happy in the least that we gave their sister and brother to the Scourge. According to Laren, the Lycavorian and Vampiric species are quite passionate to begin with."

"Handed them over to the... why in the name of Zezhuanth would we do that?" Nahko exclaimed.

"Trust me... you do not want to know." Aviel told her. "You will discover it in time now that I have involved you... but for now trust me when I say the why of it can wait."

"I know someone Aviel." She said softly after a long moment. "A Junior Scholar from the Elbakiv Sulevfu. He is... he is rather odd... but all he does is study different species. He was... he was attracted to me before you stole my heart." She said shyly. "If we wish to know more we should consult him."

Aviel looked at her. "Nahko... you now know what is going on here. You must be sure before you get involved further." He said. "This is not just some wild event that has happened by chance. There are other forces at work here... forces that, until now, I did not believe even existed. I do not... I do not want to put you in danger."

Nahko nodded her head and reached up to place her fingers to his cheek. "I am not afraid Aviel my husband."

Aviel smiled sheepishly at her. "That is good... for as I said... I am terrified." He told her. He placed his hand over hers and nodded his head. "Call this friend of yours. Have him bring whatever information he has on the Alpha Quadrant here now. I will order him given access to the building. Tell him it is in regards to some project one of our grandchildren is working on. Give him no reason to suspect otherwise.”

Nahko looked at him. “Aviel... there is one other thing.” She said softly. She waited until she knew she had his full attention. “Whatever... whatever Laren and Ladur may be... whatever is taking place within her body... it is... it is killing her.”

Aviel’s eyes went wide. “What?” He gasped.

Nahko nodded. “She knew this. I don’t believe anyone else but Ladur knows. She knew I would detect it. She does not seem frightened of this fact though. She says she knows who can save her.”

“Who?” Aviel asked.

“She says her sepa dask.” Nahko replied. “Her Soul Mother. She says only she will have the knowledge and skill to make her better. I know there is nothing that I can do. Nor any other physician among our people.”

Aviel shook his head. “I don’t suppose she gave you some idea as to who this might be?”

Nahko nodded her head. “Yes she did. And if what I know is accurate... then she is quite possibly very correct in her assessment.”

“Do I want to know?” Aviel asked. “Nahko... if the prophecy is happening we cannot lose her now!”

“I know.” Nahko told him. “We must see what we can discover about these sepa isthasyi. Then I will know for sure.”

Aviel nodded. “Make your call Nahko. We must act quickly and with care.”

He was seventy-eight thousand years old and still a Junior Scholar, but he was happy and loved his work. He was a student of history and exploration and discovery and the studying of other species was a passion for him and had been for more centuries than he could recall. Of course he had never been called to the office of an UrIkrisir Mamiss Filkiati in all that time either.

When Nahko Em'mor had contacted him he had been shocked to say the least. He had long ago lost her to the affections and hand of a much more influential male so many years ago. He did not know what her parents saw within the male when they made the arranged union with his parents. He still did not after all these years. They had remained in touch and if not friends then minor acquaintances over that time, but he had never forgotten the feelings he had for her. Nor had they really ever gone away. This is why he had jumped at the opportunity to see her once more. It was not uncommon for Darastrixi females to have urges later in their lives. Urges that only physical interaction with another male outside their mates could curb. This was called the Thirkuic. The Changing. Often times this led to the female leaving her current mate and beginning a new life with whoever she had found. It was not looked down upon by their culture and considered a natural evolution within the cycle of many females. It did not happen to all females, but he held out hope that perhaps Nahko was experiencing the Thirkuic now.

Now he wasn’t so sure as he was escorted through the corridors. He had forgotten for that instant that her mrrandii was a senior member of the UrIkrisir Mamiss and next in line to join the Sulevfu di Woiuewr when the time came.

His name was Dalis Sulryn. And he was not so sure agreeing to meet her had been a good idea.

He looked around nervously as the Sulevfu Shivi, the Commission Guard, led him down the corridor of the immense building. He had tried to remain as far away from any government buildings as he could over the years, not really caring for the often times arrogant and equally condescending way members of the History or Medical Sulevfu were viewed by the UrIkrisir Mamiss. Looking at the guard who escorted him, he took note of the exact and precise way the man moved and was dressed. Everything was perfect. The Sulevfu Shivi were exceptionally protective of their charges and this man was no different. He had been surprised when Dalis had arrived and told him why he was here. The request and access was in the computer however and he had begun to lead him to the proper office.

Dalis looked at the massive double doors as they slid open and he saw Nahko step out of the office. His breath caught in his throat for a moment for she was still just as beautiful as she always had been, even more so now. The Shivi bowed his head deeply to her as they stopped.

“Usjalil Nahko.” He spoke. (Lady) Nahko was well liked by many of the Shivi. She was respectful of them and their duties and was always inquiring of their families. For that matter, Aviel Em'mor was also very well liked. He did not treat those Shivi assigned to protect him as underlings as most of the other Filkiati did. Aviel conversed with them often, inquiring of their families; he joked with them at times and every year at the height of the Centennial Celebration, he insisted that they bring their families to his home to enjoy good food and wine and just be themselves. Many of the Shivi did just that through the many years and he was looked up to and honored among the Shivi across the planet.

“Thank you so much Kotai.” Nahko said as she looked at him. “I think perhaps Aviel and I may have backed ourselves into a corner and Dalis is an old friend who can help us.”

Kotai looked at her oddly. “Sia Usjalil?” He asked.

“We promised our youngest autnaril that we would assist her in a large Galactic History project for school. Aviel and I both forgot all about it until just this very day.” Nahko lied to him. “She has to do a report on lesser species and we told her we knew about all of them. She is expecting us to help her in three days when they come to visit.” (Granddaughter)

Kotai smiled then and nodded his head. He had done the same thing with his own family and had to scramble at the end. “I have put myself in a similar position with my autgabini.” He told her knowingly. (Grandsons)

“Then you know well that we cannot look like we forgot.” Nahko told him. “She would be horrified.”

“Indeed.” Kotai said.

Nahko looked at Dalis and held out her hand to his chest in the Darastrixi greeting. He was taken slightly aback as she touched her forehead to his. “Dalis... it is so good to see you again.” She spoke warmly.

Dalis returned the normal greeting without question as just being able to touch her was invigorating. “It has... it is agreeable to see you as well Usjalil Nahko.”

Nahko looked at Kotai once more. “I will insure Dalis is escorted out Kotai. Aviel and I will probably have him return to our home when we are finished here so that he can instruct us more. We just wanted to get a head start now.”

Kotai nodded and bowed his head once more. “As you wish Usjalil Nahko.”

Nahko curled her arm through Dalis's and led him into the huge office area. He turned and watched as the Shivi did an about face, watching as the huge doors slid shut behind them. He turned back to let his eyes take in the massive office, nearly as large as his small apartment on the edges of the city, and the stunning view of the city out the huge grand window nearly took his breath away. He felt Nahko remove her arm from within the crook of his elbow and he turned to look at her.

Nahko Em'mor knew that Dalis had been deeply affectionate towards her before she and Aviel were promised to each other by their parents. It may have been an arranged joining but Aviel Em'mor had won her over long before the official ceremony had been conducted. Nahko also knew just from Dalis's body language now that his feelings for her had not changed and were more than likely partly why he never had taken a wife. Nahko did not want to give him the wrong impression however, as she was not experiencing the Thirkuic and she loved Aviel far more now than she did when they were first joined. Their life together had always been full and exciting. They both went out of their way to insure this never died and so far they had more than succeeded.

“Thank you for coming so quickly Dalis.” Nahko said to him. “Aviel is just finishing up a VidCom and he will join us shortly. Can I get you something to drink?”

Dalis looked at her. “No... thank you.”

Nahko looked at him. “You are looking well.” She told him.

“And you are just as beautiful as I remember Nahko.” He said moving closer to her.

Nahko stepped back quickly from his obvious advance. “Aviel and I asked you here for professional reasons Dalis.” She said quickly. “Please do not infer something else.”

Dalis stopped his movement and gazed at her. “Why would a Filkiati of the Urkrisir Mamiss need my help?” He asked her almost harshly. “They can requisition anything they want it seems.”

Nahko's eyes narrowed at his comment and the obvious dig at Aviel and his status and their arranged joining. She stepped towards Aviel's desk now. “Do not allow your feelings to control your words Dalis.” She told him. She stopped at the corner of Aviel's desk and turned back to look at him. “I am sorry your affections for me were not returned, but my feelings were for another. You knew that.”

“How could they not be?” Dalis commented. “His family and status were so much more influential.”

Nahko shook her head sadly. “This has nothing to do with your feelings for me Dalis.” She told him. “I never once gave any indication to you that I returned your affection. Whatever you saw was of your own making. I suggested to Aviel that he call you here for very official reasons.”

Dalis stepped closer again. “Did he?” He asked softly. “Are you so sure Nahko? What would a member of the Urkrisir Mamiss need from me? I am a Junior Scholar. Why would you suggest he call me if...”

The single door across the room opened and Nahko turned quickly as Aviel exited his private Com room. She moved towards him rapidly, reaching for his hand as he crossed the room.

“Aviel... may I introduce Dalis Sulryn.” Nahko said as she moved close to him and squeezed his hand.

